The whole designation of Christ is a profound Christological saying, which neither refers alone to the human descent of the Saviour (Düsterdieck), nor to His Divine nature simply (Calov.). A reference to the hewn-down stem of the Davidic house, in accordance with Is. xi. 1, is applicable here only as a collateral thought. [Alford thus comments: "The root of David (comp. Rom. xv. 12 with Is. xi. 1, 10), i. e. the branch or sucker come up from the ancient root, and so representing it: not as Calov., al., the Divine root which brought forth David, to which Vitringa also approaches very near: for the evident design here is to set forth Christ as sprung from the tribe of Judah and lineage of David, and His victory as His exaltation through suffering."—E. R. C.].

Ver. 6. And I saw [Lange: And lo*] in the midst of the Throne.—[See SYNOPSIS VIEW, p. 149]. The vision of the Seer expands, and lo! Christ appears, in wondrous contrast to the ideas which a Judaistic conception of the Lion of Judah, the ideal David, might entertain. This contrast is strikingly brought out (after Bengel) by Ebrard: "Now comes this Lion, the Mighty One, Whom none is able to resist,—the Victor par excellence. How terrible must be His aspect! But lo! a Lamb (ἀρνίον) appears in the stead of the Lion, and that ὡς ἐφαγμένον. This is the battle whereby the Lion has overcome, viz.: that He has suffered Himself to be slain as a Lamb. It is only in the omnipotence of all-suffering love that the greatness of omnipotence could be proved."

Superfluous interpretations of the diminutive ἀρνίον see cited by Düsterdieck. ["The use of ἀρνίον, the diminutive, as applied to our Lord, is peculiar to the Apocalypse. It is difficult to say what precise idea is meant to be conveyed by this form. . . . Possibly, as De W., it may be to put forward more prominently the idea of meekness and innocence." ALFORD. As there was manifestly an intended contrast between the announced Lion and the appearing Lamb, may it not have been intended to bring out more vividly, not merely His meekness and innocence, but His extreme natural feebleness?—E. R. C.]

* [As in the SYNOPSIS VIEW, Lange here takes for granted that the Seer knew before the disclosure. He wept, not because of the woes that were to be (of these as yet he knew nothing), but because no one was found worthy to open the seals—to make the disclosure. See SYNOPSIS VIEW and foot note, p. 149.—E. R. C.]

† [What is the proof of this assertion? And if it be true in reference to men, how came the scroll to be sealed in reference to sinless angels? It should be remarked in continuance, however, that there can be no doubt that the right and power of the God-man to open the seals, which is but a mode of representing His supreme authority over all things, is the result of His victory over the power of darkness and sin and death.—E. R. C.]

* [See TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL NOTES.—E. R. C.]

The Lamb stands in the middle of the space enclosed, on the inner side, by the Throne and the four Life-forms [Living-beings], and on the outer side by the circle of Elders. Thus Düsterdieck, De Wette, Hengstenberg, whilst Ebrard, on the other hand, conceives of the Lamb as seated in the midst of the Throne, and also in the midst of the circle of Elders. "A truly monstrous idea," observes Düsterd., who justly cites the Hebrew יְהוָה בְּיָמֵינוּ.* This arrangement, moreover, distinctly proves that the four Life-forms are not four representatives of the creature, but that they can be only Four Ground-forms of the Divine governance which is embraced in the Lamb, as are also the Seven Spirits which, therefore, likewise stand between God and Christ.† ["The words (ἐν μίῳ) seem to indicate the middle point before the Throne; whether on the glassy sea (De Wette) or not does not appear; but certainly not on the Throne, from what follows in the next verse. 'Ἐν μίῳ' is repeated as ἀναίσιον in Levit. xxvii. 12, 14." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

[Standing.—"The Lamb is here represented as standing, as having been slain (comp. Isa. liii. 7; Jer. xii. 19). Although Christ was slain, yet He stands. He was not overthrown. On the contrary, by falling He stood." WORDSWORTH.—E. R. C.]

As it had been slain.—Düsterdieck, in accordance with many others: "As one whose still visible scars indicate its having once been slain." The completion of the Biblical delineation of the Lamb, see ch. i. 18.

Seven horns and seven eyes.—See the SYNOPTICAL VIEW [p. 149]. Comp. the Concordances. Seven world-historical manifestations of Christ in forms of power; seven world-historical manifestations in forms of spirit (the Lights). Against the combination made by Bede and others, according to whom the seven horns as well as the seven eyes are included in the explanation—which are the Seven Spirits, etc.—see Düsterd., p. 242. The Spirits here do, undoubtedly, seem to be manifestations of the spiritual life of Christ in the narrower sense of the term, and should, we think, be apprehended as Spirits of truth, knowledge. In accordance with their position in ch. i., however, they also represent the specific mighty governance of Christ;‡ Michael, among the Archangels, appears as the symbol of His mighty rule. The septenary denotes perfect holy working, as the number three is significant of holy being.

* [Düsterdieck's comment, in our opinion, has special reference to Ebrard's conception of the Lamb as sitting. It is thus that he quotes and italicizes Ebrard: "Das Lamm erscheint mitten im Thron, so dass es zu gleicher Zeit im Centrum der vier lebenden Wesen und im Centrum der ausser herumsitzenden, einen weiten concentrischen Kreis bildenden, 24 Aeltesten sitzt." He then gives utterance to the comment cited by Lange: "eine wahrhaft ungeheuerliche Vorstellung (with this addition—the italics are our own): das Lamm mitten im Thron sitzend." Lange, by his peculiar representation of Ebrard's view and his suppression of the italics in sitzend, and also by his immediate introduction of the Hebrew term, which Düsterdieck does not cite in direct connection with Ebrard, makes the latter commentator the author of an utter absurdity, viz., the assumption that the Lamb could sit in two places at once.—Ta.]

† [See Additional Note on the Living-Beings, p. 161 sq.—E. R. C.]

‡ [See comment and additional footnote under ch. i. 5, p. 91.—E. R. C.]

Sent forth.—See Zech. iv. 10.

[Seven horns.—"The horn is the well-known emblem of might; comp. 1 Sam. ii. 20; 1 Kings xxii. 11; Pss. cxii. 9; cxlviii. 14; Dan. vii. 7, 20 sqq., viii. 3 sqq.; ch. xvii. 8 sqq. The perfect number seven represents that all power is given unto Him in Heaven and earth, Matt. xxviii. 18. And seven eyes, etc., which eyes represent the watchful, active operation of God's Spirit poured forth through the death and by the victory of the Lamb, upon all flesh and all creation. The weight of the whole sentence lies in the predicative anarthrous participle, ἀποσταλμένα. As the seven burning lamps before the Throne represented the Spirit of God immanent in the Godhead, so the seven eyes of the Lamb represent the same Spirit in His sevenfold perfection, proficuous, so to speak, from the incarnate Redeemer; busied in His world-wide energy; the very word ἀποσταλμένα reminding us of the Apostolic work and Church." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 7. And He came.—Expressive of the calmest decision and certainty. Since the great action of the Lamb is in question, ἔλαβεν can not be reduced to a passive receiving. λαμβάνειν has in general in the New Testament a considerable ethical weight.

Ver. 8. When He had taken; ὅτε ἔλαβεν.—[See SYNOPTICAL VIEW, p. 149.]

In* place of the antiphony, ch. iv. [8, 11], sustained by the four Living-beings and the Elders, in praise of the Creator and the creation, we have here a three-fold choral song in glorification of the Redeemer, the Redemption, and that transfiguration of the obscure and gloomy history of the world issuing from the Redemption. The order of succession in this chorus is very significant. First resounds the song of praise of the four Life-forms [Living-beings] and the Elders; then the song of the Angels (Eph. iii. 10; 1 Pet. i. 12); after that the song of all creatures (Ps. cxlviii.; Rom. viii.). If the four Life-forms [Living-beings] were representatives of nature, nature would here twice strike up the song of praise, in one case in advance of the Angels. It may, indeed, be questioned: how can the four Life-forms [Living-beings] fall down before the Lamb if they denote Fundamental Forms of the Divine governance? But we might also query: how can Christ send forth the Seven Spirits that yet do stand between God and Him? All these manifestations, however, are, as individual forms of revelation, subordinated to the Lamb in His unity and in the unity of His highest decisive deed; and that with the expression of the freest homage. And the real beginning of every creaturely song of praise must proceed from Divine operations themselves.

[Fell down before the Lamb.—They render to Him Divine honor; comp. ch. iv. 10.—E. R. C.]

Having every one a harp [lute].—The playing upon the cither or harp is limited to the Elders; the Greek reads: ἐχόντες ἕκαστος. On the difference between the cither and the harp,

* [The proper place of this paragraph would seem to be under the following verse. As, however, there are allusions in it to this verse, the Am. Ed. has not felt at liberty to transpose it.—E. R. C.]

see Winer, MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS. See ch. xiv. 2; xv. 2. [Also Kitto's Cyclopædia, and Smith's Dict. of the Bible.—E. R. C.]

And golden vials* full of incense.—Each either, or lute, is proportioned to the individual who holds it, and belongs to him alone; the golden vials are alike; hence the plural in the case of the latter, though each might have his vial as well as his lute. These vials are full of incense, and the explanation reads: αἱ εἰσιν αἱ προσευχαὶ τῶν ἁγίων. Though αἱ may by attraction relate to θυμιάματα, it is more probable that its reference is to the vials, since these forms, these measures of precious metal (intrinsic value) are an essential part of the matter. ["Αἱ might well have θυμιάματα for its antecedent, being feminine to suit προσευχαὶ below; but it is perhaps more likely that φύλας is its antecedent—each vial being full of incense." ALFORD. So also Wordsworth. Far more natural does it seem to refer the αἱ, with Barnes, to θυμιάματα, thus bringing the passage into correspondence with Ps. cxli. 2, "Let my prayer be set before Thee as incense," and with the apparent meaning of the incense offered in the Temple.—E. R. C.]

Here, too, commentators violate common sense in the effort to grasp both items [the harp and the vial] at once. Ehrard: The κισθάρια is supported by the knees and operated upon by one hand (without its falling?), whilst the other presents the φύλας. Düsterdieck: "In the right hand the vial, whilst the left holds the either." How then could they play? The like arrangements of Biblical facts are of frequent occurrence; for instance, De Wette makes the Lamb stand on the sea of glass. Symbolism gives both attributes to the Elders without insisting upon the idea that each one manages both harp and vial at each and every instant. Hengstenberg remarks that the harps, in conjunction with the songs of praise, refer chiefly to praise, and the golden vials to supplicatory prayers.

On the ungrounded application of the passage to the establishment of the Catholic doctrine of the intercession of saints, or to the support of the practice of invoking their intercession, compare Düsterdieck, p. 244. Luther did not deny, he says, that the members of the Church Triumphant pray for those of the Church Militant. The text, however, does not exactly bear upon this point.† That which we gather from the words under examination, is that the prayers of the saints on earth are inclosed in the holy measure of the golden vials; that they are by the ideal Church divested of their earthly, unbounded, and immoderate affections. As God beholds all mankind in the most special sense in Christ, so, too, He views the earthly Church in the light of the ideal Church, which is its aim. It is justly remarked, in this connection, that the twenty-four Elders are symbolical forms.* On the other hand, the view of Hengstenberg and Bengel, who understand the saints already in Heaven to be included in our passage, is productive of confusion.

In reference to these prayers, the posture of the Elders is different from that of the Angel with the censer, ch. viii. 3. That Angel seems to gather the prayers of the saints together, and to supplement them precisely as the Holy Ghost is declared to do in Rom. viii. 26. The prayers are thus made perfectly acceptable, and hence the same exalted Angel takes charge of the granting of them, filling the emptied censer with fire from the altar, i. e., with flames of the Divine judgment of the Spirit, and pouring its contents upon the earth—a proceeding productive of voices, and thunders, and lightnings, and earthquake, stirring forces which promote the process of consummation going on in the earth.

Vers. 9-14. [See under ver. 8, p. 158.] Let us first compare this first choir with the second and third, and then examine the three anthems.

The second choir is composed of Angels, the heavenly host (1 Kings xxii. 19). And I beheld and heard, says the Seer. This does not mean: he saw, that is, he heard; but it probably indicates that the survey of the infinite array of spirits recedes behind the distinct perception of their song. The circular arrangement of this celestial army first demands our notice; all of the vast array are related to the little inner circle, that centre of the history of salvation. Observe next their infinite number: myriads consisting of myriads, and thousands consisting of thousands. According to Bengel, the addition of the smaller numeral denotes a limitation of the whole number; according to Hengstenberg, it indicates that distinctions vanish in the case of immense numbers. Düsterdieck, on the other hand, says: 'The anti-climax (comp. Ps. lxxviii. 17) signifies that the first and greater number is not sufficient.'

Ver. 18. And every creature.—"The chorus of assenting praise from creation itself." ALFORD.—E. R. C.] The third choir is formed of the sphere of creatures generally, in four divisions or regions (Bengel). The three-fold division in Phil. ii. 10 has reference exclusively to the spirit world; the four-fold division here, with its world-numeral, relates to creatures in general. As the spirit-world is already represented in the first two choirs, we cannot, with Alcasar, regard the term in Heaven as referring to Christians. As the song of praise of this choir is a matter-of-fact one, à-Lapide's explanation, to the effect that sun, moon and stars are meant (included), is not to be rejected. The heavenly

* ["The word vial, with us, denoting a small, slender bottle with a narrow neck, evidently does not express the idea here. The article here referred to was used for offering incense, and must have been a vessel with a large, open mouth. The word bowl or goblet would better express the idea, and it is so explained by Prof. Robinson, Lex., and by Prof. Stuart, loc. cit. Barnes. The criticism is undoubtedly correct. Since, however, the word vial is so inwrought into the religious literature and thought of the English speaking people, and as no material interest is affected by its retention in the text, it is deemed expedient to retain it. Similar remarks might be made in reference to the retention of the term harp.—E. R. C.]

† [From this passage Stuart derives the opinion that prayer is offered by the redeemed in Heaven. (See Barnes, loc. cit.) This doctrine cannot be regarded as established by this Scripture; it is, however, consistent with it, and seems naturally to flow from it. It may further be said that the doctrine referred to does not involve the utterly unscriptural idea that prayer may be offered to glorified saints, nor is it inconsistent with aught else where taught in the Word of God.—E. R. C.]

* [See foot-note on p. 152.—E. R. C.]

beings, as well as beatified saints (Düsterd.), are represented in the first and second choirs. In respect to the earth, Düsterdieck regards all other creatures as intended together with men. It is justly denied that demons (Vitringa) are here denoted by the creatures under the earth; reference is had to the realms of the dead [to Hades, where demons are not (see Excursus on Hades, p. 864 sqq.)].—E. R. C.]

Upon the sea.—On Patmos John had a lively view of creatures which live upon the sea rather than in it; we have reference particularly to sea-birds and flying fish.

The first choir [vers. 9, 10] represents the whole knowledge of the New Testament, and magnifies it in a new song. From the wording of the song it would seem that the four Life-forms joined in it. As, however, the anthem is sung to the music of the harps, and the harps are the property of the Elders, the above assumption becomes somewhat dubious. But then the question arises: how can the Elders sing of the redemption without including themselves if they too have a part in it? Be it observed that an Apocalyptic Heaven-picture always has reference to a subsequent earth-picture. Thus our song of praise relates to ch. vi., especially to the Martyrs amid the sufferings of the earthly time. They are ransomed to God with the blood of the Lamb by the redemption. And these very ones who in the earth-picture appear under the altar as souls of the slain, crying for recompense, appear in the Heaven-picture as the Kingdom of God, the Kingdom of true Christian kings who already (dynamically) reign upon earth—not merely shall reign (Богъ иже живи in accordance with Cod. A. etc.*). They reign on earth as God's Kingdom, but not as individual kings; yet their common rule on earth is mediated by their individual priesthood.† As a matter of course, the Elders do not exclude themselves from the redemption; their expression, however, is concrete in reference to the Church Militant on earth.‡ The worthiness of the Lamb to unseal the book [scroll] is deduced from His redemptive act; and justly so, for it alone solves the enigmas of the world's history. [Is not the reason rather, that, by His redemptive act, He has conquered to become "Head over all things" (comp. Phil. ii. 8, 9; Eph. i. 20-22)?—E. R. C.]

The Elders sing a new song§ (sing), for the

* [See TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.—E. R. C.]

† [The idea that the Saints are to reign as mere subjects (i. e. to be kings without authority over others) seems to be inconsistent with (1) the essential idea of reigning, which is to exercise authority over others; (2) the express intimations of the word of God; comp. Dan. vii. 22, 27; Luke xxii. 29, 30, etc. (see EXCURSUS ON THE BASILEIA II. 1, (4), (6), p. 98). The requirements of the first of these positions might apparently be satisfied by saying that the glorified saints, being freed from the dominion of Satan and sin, are to reign over themselves. The requirement of the second, however, cannot thus, even in appearance, be satisfied. If it be asked, Over whom are the Saints to reign? it may be answered, (1) Some, as superior Rulers, over their brethren (see Luke xxii. 29, 30, etc.); and (2) all, as kings, over the human races to be born after the establishment of the Basileia, and, perchance, over other races throughout the universe. Speculation as to this last point, however, not only as to answer, but as to question, should be restrained.—E. R. C.]

‡ [See foot-note to ver. 4, p. 152.—E. R. C.]

§ [Sing.—"Why present? Is it because the sound still lingered in his ears? Or, more probably, as describing their redemption is a matter of their enraptured experience. The Angels, on the other hand, are moved by adoration and sympathy; therefore they say with a loud voice, in a sort of recitative, as we understand it. The collective creatures of the universe, again, are simply described as saying. This saying is, of course, also doxological.

Again, the song of the Angels [ver. 12] is in harmony with their stand point. For them, the idea of the redemption recedes behind that of holy suffering. Because the Lamb was slain, i. e. humbled Himself to such a degree, He is worthy to receive majesty (i. e. glory and dominion) in the spiritual world such as is exalted far above that which is possessed by even them, the Angels (Eph. i.; Phil. ii.). This majesty unfolds itself in three predicates of inner essence and three of outward appearance. The exalted Christ is, in the first place, rich in life; secondly, He is the wise Governor of His great Kingdom; and, thirdly, He possesses all requisite power. Hence, in the first place, He is worthy of all infinite honor; secondly, His dominion is an apparent spiritual glory; and, thirdly, His praise is sung by the whole world of spirits.*

The song of the creature-world rightly refers to the Creator, Him who sitteth upon the Throne. But even the creature-world is acquainted with Christ's import to the creation. For it, however, the death of Christ recedes, giving place to the calm ground-tone of His Logos rule. He is magnified with the Enthroned One as the Lamb. And in harmony with the world-numeral four, the creatures utter four eulogies.

The sublimest doxology of all is the ascription of praise [blessing] in the region of conscious creatures. Next comes the ascription of honor from all living things. Next, the loveliness and magnificence of all beautiful creations in the Cosmos [glory]. The conclusion is formed by the glorification of God's power in the whole universe. And thus it is to be into the sons of the sons, say the creatures. They speak thus, first, because they are under the law of temporality, and have a sense of the greatness of eternity; and, secondly, because they are destined to an eternal development reaching into the sons.

Finally, it is exceedingly significant that the four Life-forms [Living-beings] utter an Amen to the whole heavenly cultus, while the twenty-special and glorious office generally, rather than the mere one particular case of its exercise?"] ALFORD.

New song.—"New, in the sense that it is a song consequent upon redemption, and distinguished therefore from the songs sung in Heaven before the work of redemption was consummated. We may suppose that songs of adoration have always been sung in Heaven; . . . but the song of redemption was a different song, and is one that would never have been sung there if man had not fallen, and if the Redeemer had not died." BARNES.—E. R. C.]

* [The above arrangement of the particulars of the ascription seems to the Am. Ed. not only to have no foundation in the text, but to be inconsistent therewith; for (1) the force of the single article placed before the first particular is to bind all together as one word (so Bengel and Alford); and (2) δοξα cannot be regarded as a generic term (meaning majesty), inclusive of those that follow as representatives of specific excellencies. The true idea seems to be that we have here a seven-fold (indicating completeness or perfection) ascription of glory.—E. R. C.]

this narrative, or any where else in the Scriptures, that they symbolized any thing.

The only satisfactory explanation of the variance is the one suggested above, viz.: that if the Zōa did take part in a doxology that ascribed their redemption to Christ, whatever be the apparent force of the implications of Scripture to the contrary, they must be symbols either of individual redeemed men, or of classes of redeemed men. And so, in effect, commentators must have argued in the days when the text of the Recepta was universally accepted. And thus the idea became established in the Church that the Cherubim, the Zōa, could not be heavenly persons—that they must be mere symbols.

But what do they symbolize? On this point there is not the slightest intimation given in the Word of God. The whole matter seems relegated to the imagination of commentators. The proof of these assertions is to be found, not only in the multitudinous and contradictory explanations given by able men, but in the entire lack of Scriptural evidence adduced as supporting any specific view. On the platform of the Recepta, the Zōa are the Sphinx of the Bible.

It should here be observed that the very necessity of adopting a conclusion in this important instance, in the face of the apparent implications of the language and scenic descriptions of the Scripture, together with the entire lack of Scriptural explanation of the (supposed) symbol, necessarily precludes any true scientific investigation of the subject of Symbolism. Such an investigation can be made only on the basis of those implications which the compelled conclusion virtually declares to be deceptive, and of those explanations which in the most important instance manifestly do not exist. The idea that the Zōa are mere Symbols plunges the whole subject of Symbolism into inextricable confusion—it involves the further idea that the entire symbolization of the Scripture is without order, at least without order discoverable by us.

It may, however, be remarked by some that our author is free from the alleged trammels of the Recepta; he accepts as genuine that form of the doxology which does not imply that those who united in it had any necessary connection with the redeemed race, and yet he regards the Living-beings as Symbols. In answer it may be said, that every observer of the course of human thought must have perceived that a generally established idea will often, in measure, linger, even in the mightiest minds, after the foundation on which it was reared has been swept away. To this, it is with the greatest deference suggested, may be due the position of Lange on this subject. He saw clearly (the fact is patent) that the correction of the doxology released him from the necessity of regarding the Zōa as symbols of human beings, and he took a forward step; but, reared under the influence of the universally accepted idea that the Living-beings must be mere symbols, and not perceiving the concealed truth, that the corrected doxology logically releases from this position also, he failed to take a second. The step he has taken is a mighty one in advance. It is preparatory, if not essential, to another, viz., that the Zōa are not Symbols at all—not Symbols of the Fundamental Forms of Divine Government, but personal Ministers thereof. This view, which subsidizes all of truth that our author has with so much power and beauty elaborated, is respectfully submitted for consideration. It is submitted in the belief that, upon reflection, it will be seen to be, not only more consistent with the apparent force of Scripture language and description than the one presented by Lange, but also absolutely essential to a consistent scientific scheme of the great subject of Scripture Symbolism.

The ideal forms of these glorious ministers of Jehovah, who stand nearest the Throne, are doubtless symbolic. So far as those forms are common to all, they are doubtless symbolic of their common attributes of knowledge, wisdom, and power; and so far as they are peculiar, they are representative of their peculiar characteristics and ministries. The question is suggested for consideration, whether the key to their respective ministries (ministries in accordance with their characteristics, as symbolized by their personal appearance) may not be found in the characteristics of the four seals, at the opening of which they respectively officiated. (See foot-note on p. 179).

In conclusion, it may be remarked, concerning the number four attributed to them, that two hypotheses are possible. The first, that it is natural, i. e., indicative of the actual number of these heavenly Ministers in the realms of Nature; the second, that it is ideal, drawn from the precedent symbolic number of nature (four), and thus symbolic of their relation to nature. The judgment of the writer inclines to the adoption of the former of these, both because of the relation of the Zōa to the first four seals, and because this view manifestly presents a reason why four should have been selected as the number of nature.—E. R. C.]

B.—EARTH-PICTURE. UNSEALING OF THE SEVEN SEALS. (THE OPENED SEVEN SEALS IN HEAVEN AND THE SEVEN FUNDAMENTAL FORMS OF THE WORLD'S COURSE ON EARTH.)

THE DARK EARTHLY WORLD IN THE LIGHT OF THE HEAVENLY WORLD.

CHAP. VI. 1-17.

1. Predominantly Human History of the World.

VERS. 1-8.

1 And I saw when the Lamb opened one of [from among] the seals, and I heard, as it were the noise of thunder [om., as it were the noise of thunder], one of the four beasts [living-beings] saying [ins. as a voice of thunder], Come and see [om. and see].<sup>1</sup> And I saw, and behold a white horse: and he that sat on him had [having] a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went [came] forth conquering, and to [om. to—ins. that he might] conquer.

3 And when he had [om. had] opened the second seal, I heard the second beast [living-being] say [saying], Come and see [om. and see]. And there went out [came forth] another horse that was red: and power was given [om. power was given] to him that sat thereon [upon him] [ins. it was given to him<sup>2</sup>] to take peace from the earth, and [ins. in order] that they should [shall<sup>3</sup>] kill [slay] one another: and there was given unto him a great sword [μάχαρα].

5 And when he had [om. had] opened the third seal, I heard the third beast [living-being] say [saying], Come and see [om. and see]. And I beheld [saw], and lo [behold] a black horse; and he that sat on him had [having] a pair of balances [balance] in his hand. And I heard [ins. as it were<sup>4</sup>] a voice in the midst of the four beasts [living-beings] say [saying], A measure [chœnix] of wheat for a penny [denarius], and three measures [chœnixes] of barley for a penny [denarius]; and see thou hurt not [om. see thou hurt not] the oil and the wine [ins. injure thou not].

7 And when he had [om. had] opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth beast [living-being] say [saying<sup>5</sup>], Come and see [om. and see]. And I looked [saw], and behold a pale horse: [,] and his name that sat on him was Death [and the one sitting upon him, his name Death], and Hell [Hades] followed [was following] with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword [βουβατα], and with hunger, and with death, and with the [ins. wild] beasts of the earth.

2. World-history in its Predominantly Spiritual Aspect, or the Martyr-history of the Kingdom of God as the core of World-history.

VERS. 9-11.

9 And when he had [om. had] opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were [have been] slain for [on account of] the word of God, and for

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 1. [Καὶ εἶδον] Omitted by A. C., etc. Possibly in consequence of exegetical conjecture. [Lange retains here, and also in vers. 3, 5 and 7. Lach., Words., Alf., Treg., Tisch. omit with A. C. P., Ob. and Sz., with N. B., give καὶ ἵδω. B<sup>2</sup> omits in ver. 3. The other Cod. are in vers. 3, 5 and 7 as in this place.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 4. Before λαβεῖν an αὐτῷ. [So Words., Alf., Treg., Tisch., with N<sup>2</sup>. B<sup>2</sup>. C. P.; omitted by N<sup>2</sup>. A.; Lach. brackets.—E. R. C.]

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 4. The reading σφάξουσιν in acc. with A. C., etc. [So Lach., Alf., Treg. and Tisch. Words., with N. B<sup>2</sup>. P., gives σφάξουσιν.—E. R. C.]

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 6. Before φωνὴν a ὡς according to A. C. [Also N. P. So also Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. It is omitted by Wordsworth.—E. R. C.]

<sup>5</sup> Ver. 7. Unimportant variations. [Cod. C. reads τὸ τετραπλῶν ζῶον; and the Rec. λέγουσαν instead of λέγοντος.—E. R. C.]

- 10 [on account of] the testimony which they held [had]: and they cried with a loud [great] voice, saying, How long [Until when] O Lord [Ruler], [ins. the] holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?
- 11 And white robes were [a white robe was]<sup>6</sup> given unto every one of [om. every one of] them [ins. to each]<sup>7</sup>; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for [om. for] a little<sup>8</sup> season [time], until their fellow servants also and their brethren, that should [who are about to] be killed as [ins. also] they were, should be fulfilled [fulfill it (the time);—or have been completed (as to number)]<sup>9</sup>.

3. The Sixth Seal. An Earthquake as a Presage of the End of the World.

VERS. 12-17.

- 12 And I beheld [saw] when he had [om. had] opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was [om. lo, there was] a great earthquake [ins. took place]; and the sun became
- 13 black as sackcloth of hair, and the [ins. whole<sup>10</sup>] moon became as blood. And the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even [om. even] as a fig tree casteth<sup>11</sup> her untimely figs, when she is [om. when she is—ins. being] shaken of [by] a mighty
- 14 [great] wind. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is [om. when it is] rolled together [up]; and every mountain and island were moved out of their
- 15 places. And the kings of the earth, [ins. and the chief captains,] and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains [om. and the chief captains], and the mighty [strong] men, and every bond man, [om. ,] and every [om. every<sup>12</sup>] free man,
- 16 [om. ,] hid themselves in the dens [caves] and in the rocks of the mountains; and said [they say] to the mountains and [ins. to the] rocks, Fall on [upon] us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the
- 17 Lamb: For the great day of his [or their<sup>13</sup>] wrath is come; and who shall be [is] able to stand?

<sup>6</sup> Ver. 11. [Critical editors generally, with *K. A. B.* C. P.*, give ἑκάστη and συνάλη.—E. R. C.]

<sup>7</sup> Ver. 11. [The reading αὐτοῖς ἑκάστη generally adopted in acc. with K. A. C. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>8</sup> Ver. 11. Μικρόν is to be retained in acc. with K. A. C. [P.].

<sup>9</sup> Ver. 11. [*All, Treg., Tisch., with K. B.* P.*, give πληρωσέναι; Gb., Lach., Words, with A. C., read πληρώσαναι.—E. R. C.]

<sup>10</sup> Ver. 12. [*Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch., with K. A. B.* C.*, insert ὅλην.—E. R. C.]

<sup>11</sup> Ver. 13. [Tisch. gives βλάουσα with K. Lach., Words., Alf., Treg., read βάλλει, with *A. B.* C. P.*—E. R. C.]

<sup>12</sup> Ver. 15. The second was not well founded; interpolated for the sake of clearness. [It is generally omitted in acc. with *A. B.* and C.*—E. R. C.]

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 17. [Treg. and Tisch. give αὐτῶν with K. and C.; Lach., Words., and Alf., αὐτοῦ with *A. B.* P.*—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.*

This second eschatologico-cyclical world-picture is as simple, clear, and intelligible in its fundamental features as the first, the world-picture of the Seven Churches. It seems to be the special prerogative of a chronological Church-historical exegesis to close it up again with seven seals and to involve it in the obscurity of night.

Through the Lamb's opening of the seals, the darkest book has become most clear—the book of the world's history, in its enigmatical, fearful and gloomy phenomena. The very fact that the book is sealed is a ray of light for us; the highest hand has shut it up, intending that it shall presently be opened. Another hopeful fact is that the Seals are seven, i. e., the riddle is a holy one, and when it reaches its final term it shall meet with a festal solution. The loosing of the very first seal sheds a joyful light over the whole dark history of the world. The Rider upon the white horse rides at the head of all the others. The mere fact that the train is one of horsemen calms our apprehensions; the horses denote the rapid movement of great phenomena of life or death; no one of these phenomena hangs stationary over the world. They all, in their riders, have their governors. Wild though the course of some may seem on earth, their management, their direction, their career, and their limit are fixed in Heaven. But at the head of all is the Rider on the white horse. He is the Prince, the rest are esquires. Thus, all apparently fatal events must serve His purposes, and those purposes are still redemption and its diffusion through the world—not yet judgment, as at His forthgoing in ch. xix. 11. The horse of the first Rider is white; holy and pure as heavenly light is the dynamical fundamental movement which governs all other and more conspicuous movements. The Rider is Christ [see p. 178]; to Him, therefore, to His power, His rule, all subsequent facts are subject; not only the three riders, His servants, but also the facts of the fifth, sixth, and seventh seals, the latter of which embraces all items subsequent to its opening. His bow is the bow with the sure arrows of the word; His wreath or crown is the diadem of His principal victory over all the power of the world and of darkness, and when He, notwithstanding, again goes forth to conquer, it is in order to the necessary development and consummation of His principal conflict and victory in a grand succession of world-historical conflicts and victories. He has no need of many attributes; a leading attribute is this: that the three other riders are not before, but behind Him.

* [The Am. Ed. deems it improper to break the continuity of the author's general statement by the presentation of the views of others, whether coincident or adverse; this presentant on he has reserved either for the EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL, or the ADDITIONAL NOTES, the one at the end of this section (p. 170), the other at the close of the chapter (p. 178). He has taken the liberty, however, of introducing notes of reference immediately after those matters of interpretation which, further on, he ventures to controvert.—E. R. C.]

The figures of the following three symbolical riders are, manifestly, so general in their conception, that it seems altogether arbitrary to limit War, Dearth, or the Power of Death, to particular times. Manifestly, we have here before us dark forms that traverse the whole stage of the world's history. From this running back into pre-Christian times, it results that Christ also, the Rider on the white horse, surmounted all historical bounds in the dynamical operation of His Coming, even in those pre-Christian times. A further sequence is that these powers [War, Dearth, Death] have been possessed of the eschatological bent from the very beginning, and have been gravitating toward the end—the judgment. And how could it be otherwise, when the final judgment must adjust the difference between the doing of wrong and the suffering of it in war; when, further, it must strike the balance between those who have revelled in wine and oil and those who have starved on the scanty measure of wheat and barley in dearth? Death is eschatological from the outset. Still, the complete appearance of Christ at the head of the horse proves that we are dealing pre-eminently with forms of the Christian time, and that, too, as the last time.

The second horse is of the color of blood. His rider is War; War as a totality, in its most fearful form—not merely the war of self-defence, of the vindication of rights, but rather that dark power to which it is granted to take peace from the earth, to set on foot a reciprocal slaughtering on countless battle-fields, and in pride and wantonness to flaunt the great sword, the symbol of all deadly instruments down to the present day. It does not say, to take away peace from time to time, for the intervening times of peace are so problematical, so penetrated with warlike commotions and apprehensions, that perfect peace is in reality taken away until the advent of eternal peace.

The black color of the third horse is that of mourning, here especially of hunger and anxiety; of that scarcity of bread which forms a part of the world's dark history in all times and places. Pauperism, moreover, is inclined to see and to paint all the circumstances of life black—far blacker, indeed, than they are in reality. Dearth, however, is scarcely half a direct dispensation of God, to be referred purely to the failure of crops; it is no more so to be regarded than war or death is to be classed under the head of purely natural phenomena. Dearth is at least half a result of the social exaggeration of the distinction between the rich and the poor. For the most indispensable necessities of life, wheat and barley, must pass through the scales of the rider and through a rigorous valuation. According to this valuation, a denarius, the entire day's wages of a man, suffices only for his own support, if he buy wheat (one chænix of wheat, the eighth part of a Scheffel or German bushel [nearly a quart, English measure.—E. R. C.], for a denarius; whilst even if he buy barley, there remains but a little, over and above his own allowance, for a very small family (three chænizes of barley for a denarius). This rigor is all the more noticeable since the means of enjoyment and adornment, oil and wine, principally used by the rich, remain untouched. Certainly then, this human exaggeration of a divinely appointed contrast is an act which will have to be accounted for equally with violent war, and only the subordination of the third horseman to the power of the first makes, primarily, an ideal compensation ("to the poor the gospel is preached"—it is not ordained that apostasy should be preached to them, however), which toward the end becomes real. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 7.

In connection with this dispensation of Dearth it is especially remarkable that it is announced by a voice out of the midst of the four beasts [Living-beings]. This, doubtless, denotes that all four beasts [Living-beings] are particularly concerned in it [see p. 179]. That which the lion, on the one hand, as the mighty power, institutes, is compensated by the ox, on the other hand—self-sacrificing and devoted love. And the eagle-like soarings of the spirit above earthly circumstances, are supplemented by the human figure of humanity.

The fourth horse is of a pale color, light yellow, and its rider, whose name is expressly declared, is Death. The whole kingdom of the dead, Hades itself, is in his train. As he himself is an esquire of Christ, so he also, in accordance with his mighty power, has himself an esquire, namely, Hades. This is expressive of the fact that the power of historical Death, as a consequence of sin, reaches down into the realm of the dead, in its dark compartment; and light is also thereby shed upon the Old Testament doctrine of Sheol. Whilst, in accordance with other passages, the gates of the Kingdom of the Dead open wide and covetously towards the actors upon this stage of life (Matt. xvi. 18), here their effect appears in the midst of the stage of the world itself. Thus much there is no difficulty in understanding, namely, that the human idea of the domain of the dead does preach repentance, on the one hand, but that it also is indirectly productive, on the other hand, of a fatal effect of great power and extent (1 Cor. xv. 32; Heb. ii. 15). If it be true that every epidemic draws countless victims into its whirlpool by the mere workings of sympathetic fear, the like is true of the power of Death as a totality. The exhalation of shadowy, terrific and spectral images rising from Sheol goes like the breath of sickness and death over the earth, carrying contagion with it; and this entirely irrespective of real retro-actions of the other world. The pale, yellow color of the horse (pallida mors) points to the element of fear as well as to the hue of a dead body.

And yet to the united action of Death and Hades, power is given over only the fourth part of the earth. Pure mortality in the abstract almost seems to be distinguished from this doom of death; at least there is also a euthanasia; a blessed dying with Christ and according to Christ.

Four is the number of the world; the fourth part, therefore, we believe to be the specifically worldly part, which is given over to the world [see p. 174], as, on the other hand, the third part (ch. viii. 7), as a part bearing the number of spirit, is indicative of spiritual circumstances, of events transpiring in the spirit-world.

The worldly powers of Death are also four in number: the sword, hunger, death, beasts. The import of the sword here manifestly passes beyond that of the great war-sword; it embraces all forms of violent death. Hunger, likewise, as a particular power of death, passes beyond Death. And no less does specific Death, in the shape of great pestilences desolating the world (ἀποκτίνω, Matt. xxiv. 7), exceed the ordinary forms of death. Whether rapacious animals, simply, are meant by the beasts of the earth, or whether there is at the same time a reference to those mysterious and hurtful animal powers which are being discovered in these modern times in the form of parasites of all kinds, we do not venture to decide. The point of departure for clearer glimpses was certainly already in existence; together with a knowledge of the noxious herb, men possessed a knowledge of the worm and its destructiveness (Hos. v. 12).

Another point which we wish clearly to bring out is this: that the four horsemen are successively announced by one of the four beasts [Living-beings]. The first beast [Living-being] is signalized by its announcement of the First Horseman, Christ, in a voice like thunder. This fact decides the whole sequence. Understanding, as we do, by the four beasts [Living-beings] the four Fundamental Forms of God's rule over the world, we claim that their task is completed with the presentation of the four more general fundamental forms of worldly history itself as comprised in the four horsemen [see p. 179]. We cannot, therefore, with Schleiermacher, conjecture that the Seer lacked beasts [Living-beings] for the following seals. Manifestly, a turning-point occurs just here; the forms of the cosmical course of the world are succeeded by the forms of cosmical spiritual history.

First comes the history of the Martyrs in its whole extent, though predominantly New Testamental and eschatological. The Seer beholds them as souls under the altar. The world would fain have sacrificed them as curse-offerings to Moloch, as Caiaphas desired to do with the Prince of Martyrs Himself (John xi. 50); they themselves, however, have with their faithful testimony sacrificed themselves to God. In this generalness, their sacrifice comes under the head of the burnt offering; the altar is the centre of the sacrificial system, as the altar of burnt sacrifices; here, in respect of its ideal import as appearing in the vision, the symbol of all voluntary sacrifice of life under the hand of hostile powers, in faithful testimony to, and confession of, the truth. They appear as souls, for the world has violently deprived them of bodily appearance; it must be evident from their appearance that they have been slain on account of their faithful confession. In their confession they have been faithful at once to the Logos of God and to the subjective witness in their own breasts. And thus they are united, a congregation of souls, belonging to the other world, yet far removed from Sheol,* which meanwhile is careering over the earth.

Now though the spirit of the Martyrs is shown in Stephen's prayer: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," the instinct of justice which lies unwrapped in the suffering of wrong, in shed blood (that of Abel, for instance, Heb. xii. 24), in the full perception of the terrible calumnies perpetrated on just men, of the darkenings of the truth, of the caricatures of the gospel of love and mercy on the part of persecutors, is not in the slightest degree done away with by this prayer. And in this sense, with the ghostly severity of truth, they cry with a loud voice, saying: Lord, the holy and true. As the Holy One, God owes it to Himself to repay; as the True One, having given them His word as the word of life, He has put Himself under obligations to them to repay. [See foot-note, p. 175 sq.—E.R.C.]

The terms employed have other and primary bearings, however. The Martyrs address God (not Christ; Grot. and others) by the unusual name of Δεσπότης, because they must needs bleed under the sword of earthly despots or tyrants, and in contradistinction to their unholty despotism, exercised under cover of lying and arrogant pretensions, they call Him the holy and true (genuine) Despot.

Thus a mighty pressure and urgency of grief, a cry for heavenly justice, rises ever stronger from the depths of worldly and psychical life up to the Throne of righteousness, though mitigated and pacified by the spirit of the Atonement, the blood that speaketh better things than that of Abel. How long dost Thou not judge? Though God's judgment goes on incessantly through the depths of life, the great wrong-suffering of the Martyrs requires a retributory final judgment before the whole world. And in hungering after this justice, the great interval may seem a right long one, a hard trial of patience (μακροθυμῶν, Luke xviii. 7) to all human perception. The fact that they anticipate the avenging of their blood as a consequence of the Divine judgment, and hence call upon God as the Avenger of blood, has nothing in common with a malignant and hateful animosity. The avenging of blood is the religious and moral popular fountain of criminal justice; criminal justice, therefore, in its true shape, is the form into which the avenging of blood has ever developed under the influence of civilization. Where criminal justice is so perverted into its opposite, as to appear as a system of judicial murder of the worst kind, in demonic hostility to Divine justice, in the sufferings and executions of the Martyrs, there the cry for God's avengement of blood as the Divine Fountain of Justice which men have utterly denied, follows almost as a logical consequence.

But why should vengeance for former blood-guiltiness be taken upon those "that dwell on the earth?" Those who now, as inhabitants of earth, belong to and are attached to earth, the old blood-stained tragical order of things, are, as accessories in guilt, placed under the consequences and further development of guilt (Matt. xxiii. 32 sqq.).

* [See the Excursus on HADES, p. 364 sqq.—E. R. C.]

This holy instinct of justice, however, is appeased in a two-fold manner. First, a white robe is given to each one. In the other world, therefore, they are clothed with the adornment of innocence and righteousness. And so bright are these white robes that even in the history of this world they constantly become more distinctly visible, more admired and more honored; think of the white robes of a Justin, a Polycarp, a Huss, a Savonarola, and many thousand other faithful witnesses. Again, the Martyrs are further comforted by the assurance that their period of waiting is nearing its end, while, as a period of waiting, it is itself under a holy decree, in accordance with which the Martyr-history must attain its completion, the number of Martyrs must be filled up. Herein is the indirect announcement that the season of martyrdom is not yet at an end; that martyr sufferings assume diverse forms throughout the ages, yet continue to be even to the end a fundamental condition of the healthful development of the world's history, as the history of the Kingdom. The great company of their fellow-servants and brethren, the necessity of suffering in this world and of patience in the other, the glorious aim of a suffering together with Christ (Rom. vi. 4; 2 Tim. ii. 12), elevate them to an exalted standpoint, from which the perspective of the great and glorious retributive judgment momentarily becomes clearer and more complete. So far as His perfect rehabilitation before the world is concerned, even Christ in His glory must wait until His great Epiphany.

In the grandest contrast, the history of the Martyrs is immediately confronted with the beginning catastrophe of the final judgment in the opening of the sixth seal [see p. 179]. It is as certain that a cosmical change is here indicated as it is that such is the case in the Eschatological Discourse of the Lord, Matt. xxiv. 29 sqq., though the figures may have their spiritual back-ground as well. With the great earthquake, the first final convulsion of terrestrial-cosmical things is announced. The sun, wrapped in obscurity as in a penitential garment, is the actual sun; the moon, red as blood, is the literal moon; for what we have here is not a predominantly spiritual history, like ch. viii. 7 sqq., but the—ghostly, it is true—finale of this world's history, and to the theatre of this history our sun belongs. As a matter of course, the occurrences in the sun and moon are to be understood phenomenally. Even now there is no man that dies, to whom the sun is not at the last clothed in the garb of mourning, whilst his senses sigh for "more light." The same remark applies to the falling of the stars from Heaven. Like every genuine catastrophe, this final catastrophe, above all, seems to make its appearance quite abruptly; hence the stars fall from Heaven as the unripe figs of a fig-tree, suddenly shaken by a storm, fall to the earth. The figure recalls that of "the thief in the night," the "days of Noah," and "the coming of the flood." The Holy Scriptures are thoroughly at home in the law of catastrophes. The fall of the stars also can primarily be understood only phenomenally, for there would not be found room on the earth for them all. But a cosmical change in the astral region belonging to the earth is, doubtless, also indicated. Nay, in reference to the condition of this earth, the metamorphosis is as total as if the old Heavens vanished like the contents of a scroll that is rolled together (Is. xxxiv. 4); and this on the basis of the earthquake,—in consequence of a crisis in which the entire old form of the solid land, with the mountains, and the entire old form of the sea, with the islands, pass away.

But the spiritual back-ground of the changes set forth in the picture of the convulsed earth and star-world also becomes manifest. This spiritual back-ground consists in a convulsion of the old order of things: in a darkening of the old sun, the time of grace of the economy of salvation; in a transformation of the ancient luminary of night, whose silver radiance filled the night with peace, into a bloody, fiery phenomenon, for a sign that slumber is at an end (Matt. xxvi. 45); in a perfect confusion of those earthly relations and spirit-constellations which have hitherto subsisted; and in the wreck of all views of the world conditioned upon the senses. All this is still more prominent in the effects of the great convulsion of things. A general terror at the presages of judgment seizes men of all ranks and conditions. Kings first; they have most to lose. Then princes [great men] and chief captains [principal men of war] are specified in their contrast [civil and military eminence]. Then the rich and the mighty. Finally, together with the freemen, the slaves. The range of view, therefore, extends far beyond an absolute democracy. In the perspective of the day of wrath, slaves, equally with freemen, appear loaded with guilt and convulsed with apprehension, for it stands to reason that without the servilism of the laity there could be no hierarchs, and without the servilism of political slaves no despots could subsist. When all are said to hide themselves in the clefts and in the rocks of the mountains, we are reminded of the overthrow or removal of the mountains, spoken of before. That, however, all slavish souls would find refuge in the ruins of the old order of things; nay, that they would rather share in their destruction than step into the bright presence of the great day, lies in the nature of the grand contrast between their worldly life and the judgment of which they are on the eve. The convulsion described will, however, as a mighty convulsion of souls, be universal (Luke xxi. 25, 26); ay, a holy trembling (as set forth in the Dies Iræ*), shall pass over even the servants of God, for whom the day of judgment is the day of final redemption (Luke xxi. 28). Hence the appeal of the unprepared to the mountains and rocks: Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. The economies of the Godhead seem to have changed, in accordance with the great change of the times. The face of God the Father, the perfect light of His revelation, acts like a judgment of the Spirit, similarly to the face of Christ in His earthly pilgrimage. The wrath of the just and righteous God is now committed to the Lamb, i. e., He is to execute the actual judgment of separation. It is a judgment under the sign of wrath, because it comes as the final decision, after the days of forbearance and long-suffering (Rom. ii. 5), upon an infinite accumulation of guilt. Wrath, as the synthesis of love and righteousness—the latter having the leadership—is manifested in positive inflictions of death (Ex. iv. 14, 24; Ps. xc. 6). With the wrath of the Lamb, the danger of the second death is revealed (Matt. xxv. 41). For the great day of His wrath is come (see Zephaniah), and who is able to stand? Here we perceive the tone of worldly-mindedness, which sees only wrath in judgment, not judgment in wrath. The day of wrath is characterized as a super-human death-doom. Of a distinction between the blessed and the damned, these exclamations know nothing. For the fact that the words that we are examining have a bearing not upon the dogmatical deliverance of Augustinian theologians, nor upon the terrors of conscience with which all human spirits may be smitten at the dawning of the great day, but upon the outbreaks of a mere slavish anguish of men of the world—an anguish that knows of no blessed existences—is evident from the expressions of despair which precede the final saying. It is the worldliness of the old world in its death-thought.

*["*Quantus tremor est futurus,
Quando Juxta est venturus,
Cuncta stricte discussurus.*"]—E. R. C.]

[ABSTRACTS OF VIEWS OF LEADING MODERN ENGLISH AND AMERICAN COMMENTATORS. By the Am. Ed.—It was pertinently remarked by Barnes at the beginning of his comments on this chapter: "It is at this point that interpreters begin to differ, . . . here commences the divergence towards those various, discordant, and many of them wild and fantastic theories, which have been proposed in the exposition of this wonderful Book." The Am. Ed. deems it expedient at this point to introduce abstracts of some of the views which have been put forth by leading English and American divines in recent times. His own view will be presented in an Additional Note at the close of the Explanations in Detail, on p. 178. sq.

ELLIOTT.—This author is the most distinguished (English) advocate of what Lange styles the Chronological Church-historical school of interpreters. He has favored the Church with four large volumes on the interpretation of the Apocalypse, replete with extended, rich and varied learning on the subject of which it treats. (Horse Apocalypticæ, 5th Ed., London, 1862.) One of the chief excellencies of his work, is his constant citation of the infidel historian Gibbon, thus striving to elucidate prophecy, by a historical record prepared by an opponent of the truth of the inspiration of Scripture. He identifies the Horses of the first four seals with the Roman Empire, under different appearances in different times, and the Riders with the Emperors of those times. He regards the period of the first six seals as extending from the date of the Apocalypse (which he fixes at A. D. 95 or 96) to A. D. 395, the year in which Augustine was elevated to the See of Hippo. The character of this period he describes as from the stand-point of the Seer: "The coming temporary prosperity and the decline and fall of the Empire of heathen Rome." He divides the period as follows: First Seal: From the accession of Nerva to the incipient deterioration of the government under Commodus (A. D. 96-183). Second Seal: From the close of the preceding to the accession of Diocletian (A. D. 183-284). Third Seal: The time of distress from excessive taxation following the Edict of Caracalla. (This era overlaps the preceding, as Caracalla was assassinated A. D. 217; Elliott assigns no date of its close.) Fourth Seal: The period of fearful mortality from War, Famine, Pestilence, and Wild Beasts (A. D. 248-268). Fifth Seal: The "Æra of Martyrs,"—the Diocletian persecutions (A. D. 303-312). Sixth seal: (Part I; ch. vi. 12-17).—The politico-religious revolution of the time of Constantine, which involved the destruction of the political supremacy of heathenism (A. D. 323); (Part II; ch. vii.).—The æra of general religious deadness, and special religious life (that of the 144,000 sealed ones), extending from the time of Constantine to that of Augustine.

BARNES, the distinguished American commentator, is mentioned in connection with Elliott, from the fact that he agrees with him in his general principles of interpretation. The scheme he adopts is precisely similar to that of Elliott, so far as the first five seals are concerned. In reference to the Sixth, however, he presents the following as descriptive of its events. "It is, in one word, the impending judgments from the invasions of the Northern hordes of Goths and Vandals threatening the breaking up of the Roman Empire; . . . the tempest of wrath that was, as it were, suspended yet on the frontiers, until the events recorded in the next chapter (vii.) should occur, then bursting forth in wrath in successive blasts, as denoted by the first four trumpets of the seventh seal (ch. viii.), when the Empire was entirely overthrown by the Goths and Vandals. The precise point of time which, I suppose, this seal occupies, is that succeeding the last persecution."

MOSES STUART, the eminent Professor in the Theological Seminary at Andover, held, as is well known, the view that the Apocalypse was written before the destruction of Jerusalem, and that the prophecies of the greater portion thereof (to the close of ch. xix.) had special and immediate reference to the period closing with that event.*

* [The views of this distinguished commentator have been by many strangely misunderstood and misrepresented. He has been understood as holding that the entire Book has reference to events that have long since occurred, and yet in his comment on ch. i. 1, he writes "Now, although the closing portion of the Revelation relates, beyond a doubt, to a distant period, and some of it to a future eternity," etc. He is also by many understood as teaching that the first portion had reference only to events preceding the destruction of Jerusalem, and yet the opening paragraph of his Introduction (Vol. I., p. 9) contains this sentence (the italics being his own): "It lies upon the very face of the whole composition, I mean the prophetic part of it, that the coming and completion of the Kingdom of God or of Christ, or, in other words, the triumph of Christianity over all enemies and opposers, its universal prevalence in the world for a long series of years, and its termination in an endless period of glory and happiness, constitute the main theme of the writer, and is indeed the almost exclusive subject of his contemplation." In § 9, entitled "Object of the Book" (Vol. I., p. 155), he writes, "The final and complete triumph of Christianity over all enemies, and the temporal and eternal glory and happiness to which this triumph leads the Church, or, still more briefly, as Lücke has stated it, 'the coming and completion of the Kingdom of God,' is the gene-

He entitles his special Introduction to chapters vi.-xi. (Vol. I., 183 sqq.) "FIRST CATASTROPHE, OR OVERTHROW OF THE JEWISH PERSECUTING POWER;" declaring therein, "Nothing, in my apprehension, can be further from a correct mode of interpretation than a mere historical and literal application of any of the symbolic part of the Apocalypse. The prophetic portion is all symbolical picture; but not such a picture as to constitute a regular history of wars and calamities. In its very nature, most of it is generic, and not individual and specific." He continues, in reference to the Seals (p. 151), "The first four seals indicate the assembling and preparing of an awful array commissioned against the enemies of the Church. . . . A mighty conqueror bedecked with the emblems of victory leads on the hosts of destruction. These hosts, armed with deadly weapons, follow him. Then, in the train comes famine, commissioned against the enemy, and, in the rear of famine, march Death and Hades, the allied tyrants of the under world; while the ravenous beasts of the earth, waiting to devour the corpses of the slain, close the terrific procession." Concerning the Fifth Seal he continues (p. 159), "The awful array, symbols of the work of destruction about to be accomplished, have been summoned, have taken their places, and formed the ranks of the army. Before marching into the battle their ardor is now to be excited. In accordance with the design of rousing up powerful sympathies on such an occasion, the persecuted and slaughtered Martyrs are presented, lying covered with blood at the foot of the altar where they have been sacrificed, and crying aloud to the God of Justice to take cognizance of their wrongs and vindicate their cause." And, again (p. 163), "On the opening of the sixth seal, the sun and moon are darkened; the stars fall from heaven; the heavens themselves are rolled away with a mighty wind; and all the people of the land to be smitten are filled with terror and amazement, and fly to the rocks and mountains for refuge from the dreaded invasion which is about to be made." He explains the celestial phenomena foretold as portending, according to the ideas of those addressed, merely "calamitous events."

Wordsworth regards the Seals as representing "a prophetic view of the history of the Christian Church, from the first Advent of Christ to the end of the world;" not however in successive eras, the one closing as the other begins. The Rider on the white horse he identifies with Christ, and He "is followed in the second, third, and fourth seals by another (hostile) Power, riding on three horses in succession." This Power is Death (Satan), who, in the second seal makes an assault by persecution; in the third, by heresy, producing spiritual famine; in the fourth, by various workings: (1) barbarian incursions (ῥωμαῖα, the barbarian sword), (2) heresies and schisms producing spiritual famine and death (Ἀντὶ and θάνατος), (3) heathen Rome,

Papal Rome, the Romish hierarchy—τὰ ὅπρια τῆς γῆς. The opening of the fifth seal unveils the condition of the faithful departed, in the intermediate state, in Paradise. "The sixth seal reveals the crisis of greatest suffering for the Church; it is the Friday of her Passion Week. But it is also the eve of the Sabbath of her rest."

ALFORD regards the openings of these seals as corresponding "to the various arrangements of God's Providence, by which the way is prepared for the final opening of the closed book of His purposes to His glorified Church." He classes together the first four, viewing "these four visions as the four solemn preparations for the Coming of the Lord, as regards the visible Creation, which the four Living-beings symbolize." In his own language, "The whole Creation demands His coming. Ἐρχομαι is the cry of all its tribes. This cry is answered first by the vision of the great Conqueror (not Christ Himself, but only a symbol of His victorious power) Whose arrows are in the hearts of His enemies, and Whose career is the world's history. The breaking of this first seal is the great opening of the mystery of God. This, in some sense, includes and brings in the others. The others . . . hold a place subordinate to this. They are, in fact, but exponents of the mysteries enwrapped within this conquering career: visions of the method of its being carried out to the end in its operations on the outward world." The Second Seal he regards as representing "the reign of the sword (War) as one of the destined concomitants of the growing and conquering power of Christ, and one of the world long and world-wide preparations for His Coming." The third, as Famine, limited, however, "in his desolating action, by the command given, that enough is to be reserved for sustenance," i. e., (as Lange) Dearth. The fourth, as destroying influences,—sword, famine, pestilence, wild beasts. These seals he believes "to be contemporaneous, and each of them to extend through the whole lifetime of the Church," although he admits "that they may receive continually recurring, or even ultimate fulfillments, as the ages of the world go on, in distinct periods of time, and by distinctly assignable events." The opening of the fifth seal brings to view the souls of the martyred saints, and the cry for the Coming of the Lord is now from them. The opening of the Sixth Seal he regards as intimating "(ch. vi. 12-17) immediate approach of the great day of the Lord, Matt. xxiv. 29, (vii. 1-8); gathering of the elect out of the four winds, Matt. xxiv. 31, (vii. 9-17); vision of the whole glorified Church, Matt. xxv."

LORD (An Exposition of the Apocalypse, New York, 1847) identifies the Riders with different classes of Ministers: I. "The pure teachers of Christianity at large." II. "Diocesan Bishops," by whom, as he alleges, there was "a usurpation of powers which Christ has not authorized, an interception thereby of religious peace from the earth, and, finally, a compulsion of men to apostasy, in order to confirm and perpetuate that usurpation." III. Philosophic, mystic, and ritualistic teachers, who "reduced the Church to a destitution of the means of spiritual life, analogous to the dearth of bread produced by oppressive exactions in the Empire." IV. "Metroporic theme of the Revelation." And, again, in § 28 ("Apocalypse designed for the Church in every Age," Vol. I., 478), we find the following: "I regard the Apocalypse as containing matter which is a mirror of all that is to happen in respect to the Church. I regard the whole Book as (a) particular illustration of a general principle—of a generic truth."—E. E. C.]

litan, Archbishops, and other superior prelates of the fourth and subsequent ages, and especially the Patriarchs of the Greek and the Popes of the Latin Church. . . . It was at this period, and under the promptings and guidance of those great Prelates, that the Church first formally apostatized from the faith and worship enjoined in the Gospel, and embraced a false religion." Hence followed, he contends, spiritual pestilence and death. In respect of the other seals: he regards the V. As a Heaven scene, symbolizing the appearance of the martyrs in the presence of God, and their reception by Him. "It contains no note either of the commencement or close of the period to which it belongs. The whole representation, however, indicates that it is late in the reign of Antichrist. . . . Its period is doubtless during the ravages of the fourth horseman," etc. He represents as follows the VI.: "The events denoted by the symbol are such as must naturally occupy a long period. A political convulsion subverting one form of government and instituting another is itself the work of years. The change of the sun to black, and the moon to blood, denote, not their extinction and disappearance, but their conversion from an agreeable and salutary to a dreaded and disastrous agency; and the change of the new rulers, which it denotes, from justice to oppression, and exercise of a tyrannical sway, requires quite a considerable period. It is subsequently that the fall of the stars takes place, by which their defection from their stations is symbolized. And the final disappearance of the heavens, the removal of the mountains and islands, and the promiscuous flight of rulers and subjects from the presence of the Lamb, are to follow at a still later period. The first three of these great events have undoubtedly already taken place" (the French revolution, the conversion of the Republic into despotism, the overthrow of that despotism). Then a period, during which the sealing of ch. vii. takes place; then "the annihilation of the civil governments, the Advent of the Son of God, and a resurrection of the saints." —E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ch. vi. 1, 2.

VISION OF THE FIRST SEAL.

Ch. vi. 1. The literal system is at much trouble to settle upon an adequate conception of the opening of the single Seals and the succession of the single visions. The individual leaves of the book are, manifestly, books in themselves; and the individual books open not into leaves with dead figures, but into living pictures. Each new leaf is a new world-scene, illuminated by a light from the open Heaven. Heinrich's idea, according to which the six pictures are found upon the unsealed sides of the book, see in Düsterdieck. According to Düsterdieck, the opening of each separate Seal denotes a separate vision; this view is in opposition to the vital connection of the different items. According to Bengel, the two groups of four and three are so divided that the first four refer to visible things, and the last three to invisible things. On Alosar's wonderful allegory, see Düsterdieck. There is no reason for referring the four beasts [Living-beings] or Life-forms by name to the four Seals. The general relation between the Life-forms and the Seal-pictures is expressed, not thus: the creation, on the one hand, and the Seal-visions on the other; but thus: the Fundamental Forms of the Divine governance, on the one hand, and on the other, the fundamental forms of worldly history. From kai eidov ore, Düsterdieck draws the inference that the opening of the Seals was not itself the subject of vision. It is merely necessary, however, to distinguish between the emphasis falling upon the new and leading fact, the forth-coming figure, and that which after the foregoing narrative is more a matter of course, viz.: the acts of opening. Düsterdieck likewise maintains that the hearing of the voice forms no part of the eidov. In regard to this, we would remark that the visions in general branch into voices and visible appearances. According to this, the eidov of ver. 1 will be universal, branching subsequently into a manifestation for the ear, ver. 1, and one for the eye, ver. 2 (kai eidon). According to Düsterdieck, the thunder-tone of the voice is to be taken for granted in the case of all four voices after its mention in connection with the first voice; Hengstenberg, on the other hand, justly insists upon the peculiar significance of the first voice.

Düsterdieck cannot positively deny that the formula come and see is not only rabbinic but also specifically Johannean. His declaration that John's nearer approach is required is void of meaning, since a visual appearance is referred to. For the reasons here intimated, we regard the reading which omits the see as an improper correction.

[The weight of evidence of the Codd. is about equally divided as to the reading (see TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL). Unless, therefore, some new uncial MS. be discovered, having special claims to confidence, we must form our conclusions as to the genuine text from collateral considerations. The fact that "Come and see" is more Johannean than the simple "Come" (if it be a fact), has no bearing on the question at issue, which is, What did John hear? and not, How was John in the habit of expressing himself? If it has any weight, it is rather in support of the hypothesis of interpolation, since a copyist would be more likely to insert a word, that he might bring a sentence into accordance with the style of his author, than to omit a word when the omission would involve a departure from that style.

[If the address of the Living-beings was to the Seer, nothing can be gathered as to its form, since, manifestly, it might have been either Come and see, or the abbreviated Come; if, however, it was to the Symbols, or to Christ, then it must have been simply Come. That it was not to John, Alford thus argues: "Whither was he to come? Separated as he was by the glassy sea from the Throne, was he to cross it? And where shall we find the simple verb ἐρχεσθαι used absolutely in such a sense, 'Draw near,' without ὦδε or some such particle? Compare also the place where the Seer is to go and take the little book (ch. x. 8), and see how different is the whole form of expression." To this it may be aided. Was not the Seer already at the point of vision? Why then was he called to draw nearer? Why the repeated call? Are we to suppose that he went back to his former position after the breaking of each Seal? Why the voice of thunder?

The view of Alford, however, as to the object of the call is liable to serious objections. He writes: "In interpreting so unusual a term of address, surely we should begin by inquiring whether we have not the key to it in the Book itself. And in this inquiry, are we justified in leaving out of consideration such a verse as ch. xxii. 17, τὸ πνεῦμα καὶ ἡ νύμφη λέγουσιν Ἐρχου κ. τ. λ., and the following αὐτὸν ἔρχου, κύριε Ἰησοῦ, ἰδ. ver. 20? This seems to show, in my mind, beyond a doubt, what, in the mind of the Seer, the remarkable and insulated exclamation ἔρχου imported. It was a cry addressed, not to himself, but to the Lord Jesus; and as each of these four first Seals is accompanied by a similar cry from one of the four living beings, I see represented in this four-fold ἔρχου the groaning and travelling together of creation for the manifestation of the sons of God, expressed in each case in a prayer for Christ's coming." This view, it must be admitted, is beautifully consistent with Alford's hypothesis, that the Ζῶα symbolize the different classes of animated beings, and could it be sustained by independent considerations (indeed, were it consistent with other considerations), would give great support to that hypothesis. The objections to it are: 1. In that it lacks any express reference to Jesus, it is altogether unexampled and unnatural as an address to Him. 2. The comparison of ch. xxii. 17 with 20, does not in the least support it; the call of ver. 17 is manifestly to the water of life mentioned in the last clause; and vers. 17 and 20 belong to entirely distinct divisions of the Book, the object of the ἔρχου of the latter being fixed by the immediately preceding Ναὶ ἔρχομαι ταχύ (see in loc.). 3. A voice of thunder is a voice of command, and not of prayer. Far better does it seem to the Am. Ed. to regard these voices as commands issuing from the ministers of God in nature (or, on the hypothesis of Lange as to the nature of the Ζῶα, from the Forms of God's Governance in nature). This view, of course, involves a special hypothesis as to the meaning of the four Riders, for which see Additional Note on p. 178 sq.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 2. And I saw, and behold, a white horse.—"The horses of the heroes of Roman triumphs were white" (Düsterdieck, p. 258). The single triumph of Christ, as set forth here, has in ch. xix. 14 extended through the Church Triumphant; it appears as an array of victorious hosts on white horses.

The horses [of the Seals] may not be specially identical with those of Zech. i. 8; yet they are in general related to them, as Divine sendings which proceed over the earth (Zech. i. 10). The chariots (Zech. vi. 1 sqq.) seem to denote the same sendings in involved forms of destiny.

The Rider is here characterized by the bow—not the sword. This distinction, according to Düsterdieck, has no symbolical significance. Such an inference, however, should not be drawn from the abortive interpretations offered, as especially the absurd one of Wetstein, who makes the bow indicative of a Parthian king. Doubtless the bow's property of being effective at a distance (as is the case in modern times with fire-arms of every description) is the true ground-idea of the picture. Düsterdieck's remark, that possibly the arrows spoken of in Ps. xlv. 6 were present to the mind of the Seer, excuses the interpretation of Vitrunga and others, according to whom the arrows that have to be supplied denote Christ's numerous Apostles and Evangelists. Here, however, the unity of the Rider and the unity of His bow are the main thing; and inasmuch as arrows are to be taken for granted as accompanying the bow, we are to understand them as signifying, not persons, but the lightning-like spiritual operations issuing from Christ Himself, and traversing the whole earth (Zech. ix. 14). Thus the weapons which Satan employs are fiery darts, Eph. vi. 16.

In opposition to Züllig and Hengstenberg, Düsterdieck maintains that στέφανος here (as 1 Cor. ix. 25) denotes only the wreath of a warrior—not the crown of a king. But there is a peculiar meaning in the wreath which adorns the brow of Him who is described as victorious over the whole earth. And though a wreath might be given to the Warrior in advance, as a promise of victory, as Düsterdieck maintains, the white horse would scarcely be given Him in advance also. That He, therefore, "already goes forth as a νικῶν," does not mean simply that His purpose ἵνα νικῇ will assuredly be attained; it denotes, rather, that He is the Victor absolutely, that He has conquered and will conquer. The principal victory of Christ through His death and resurrection, and the development of that victory into universal victory, could not be more pertinently represented. Düsterdieck himself comes to a similar conclusion a little further on.

The upholders of the Church-historical and world-historical interpretation necessarily make a special chapter out of the first Rider.

EBRARD: "We pass over those purely allegoric interpretations according to which this rider is Caligula or Trajan (Bengel and others; consult, however, Düsterdieck's note on this, p. 255), or war (Herder, De Wette), or the victory of evangelical preaching (Cyr. and others), or the word concerning Christ (Hofm.), or the fall (Berengaud.), and more of the same sort."

DE WETTE, without any foundation, even contrasts the mounted figure of Christ in ch. xix. 11 with the horseman in this passage.

HENGSTENBERG recognizes the figure as that of Christ. But what a Christ! Here also He goes forth only to execute judgment upon a godless world. Judgment and ever judgment! Here Christ rides forth for the development of the triumphs of salvation. In ch. xix. He goes forth in order to the triumph of judgment. Ebrard also remarks here: Christ is a warrior on horseback in reference to the hostile world. According to Ebrard, John has a view of earth from his station in Heaven, having been previously transported to Heaven. But the book of destiny with its earth-pictures is opened in Heaven.*

* [For the view of the Am. Ed. see Additional Note, p. 178.

[Alford, in the main, agrees with Lange in the interpreta-

Vers. 3 and 4.

VISION OF THE SECOND SEAL.

Come [Lange: and see]. From this it appears, it is claimed, that after the disappearance of the first Rider, John drew back and resumed his original place (Düsterdieck). According to Ebrard, he retired from the book during the interim. And this proceeding must necessarily be repeated yet two more times. Then, however, according to this literal apprehension of the passage, in which it is forgotten that we are in the midst of the whole vision, John would remain standing before the book after the opening of the fourth and fifth Seals.* Neither can we regard the second figure as the form of "personified bloodshed" [Düsterdieck]. There are yet other forms of bloodshed (see ver. 8); here its warlike form is intended. Concerning the bloody hue itself there can be no doubt (2 Kings iii. 22).

tion of this symbol. There is a difference, however, which is settled in his answer to the question: "What is the Rider on this white horse?" He writes: "We must not, in reply, on the one hand, too hastily introduce the Person of our Lord Jesus Himself, or, on the other, be startled at the objection that we shall be paralleling Hitt, or one closely resembling him, with the far different forms which follow. Doubtless, the resemblance to the Rider, ch. xix. Hitt, is very close, and is intended to be very close. The difference, however, is considerable. There He is seated forth as present in His triumph, followed by the hosts of Heaven: here, He is working in bodily absence, and the rider is not Himself, but only a symbol of His victorious power, the embodiment of His divine Kingdom as regards that side of its progress where it breaks down earthly power and makes the kingdom of the world to be the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ."

[Elliott (followed by Barnes) supports his view (see p. 168) as follows: He begins his discussion of the general subject of the Seals with the apocryphal probabilities that the Apocalyptic horse symbolized a nation, and that this nation was the Roman. He contends that, under this hypothesis, on the comparison of the symbols with the established facts of history, such unity and significance become apparent as to establish the truth of the hypothesis. (And it must be acknowledged, that if the unity and significance be as he claims them to be, it will be difficult to invalidate his conclusion.) He, then, in reference to the description of the character of the events of this particular seal (ver. 2, the crowns and the white color of the horse, indicating triumph and prosperity) asks: "Did not this answer very notably and distinctively to the general state and history of the Roman Empire for eighty or ninety years succeeding John's banishment? that is, from Domitian's death, A. D. 95, throughout the successive reigns of Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian, and the two Antonines, until the accession of Commodus, etc.?" In answer to this question, he refers to Gibbon's description of the period (vol. I., chs. I., II.), quoting the following from the second chapter of the great history: "If a man were called upon to fix the period in the history of the world during which the condition of the human race was most happy and prosperous, he would, without hesitation, name that which elapsed from the death of Domitian to the accession of Commodus." He strives to confirm his hypothesis by reference to the erēvavos and the bone of this Rider; showing that during this period of Roman history the erēvavos, and not the diadema, was the crown of the Emperor, and that Nerva, who was a Cretan by extraction (his great-grandfather was probably a Cretan see Hor. Ap. Vol. I., p. 116, notes 2 and 3), was properly represented with a bone, which was the symbol of a Cretan.—E. R. C.]

* [The erēvavos must have had some significance. If addressed to John (and it may have been if the καὶ βάρεν ἰδεῖν be genuine), it is not conceivable that it should have meant anything else than that he should go forward; and the thrice-repeated call implies that he must have retired after each opening. The further conclusion of our Author, however (which he seems to have presented in ridicule), is by no means necessary; the Ser, after the opening of the fourth Seal, might have retired, as he must have done after the opening of all the preceding. The necessity (on the supposition of the genuineness of the Rec.) of this advancing and retiring is among the considerations that go to establish the fact of interpolation (see Add. Comment on p. 170 sq.).—E. R. C.]

Special references: * To the Jewish war (Grotius, Wetstein, Herder, etc.); to the persecutions of the Christians (De Lyra and others); to Antichristianity, its rider being the Devil (Calov.); to the Roman empire (Vitrings); or the world-powers (Stern). The figure is correctly apprehended as general by some others (Hengstenb., Ebrard, Düsterd.).

Vers. 5 and 6.

VISION OF THE THIRD SEAL.

The black color of the third horse does not, according to Düsterdieck, indicate the mourning occasioned by the death, but trouble and vexation in general. It is not to be expected, however, that among colors of specific meaning, white, red, and pale-yellow, we should find one so general in its import, embracing all troubles. In Job xxx. 30 the blackness of the skin is connected with the drying up of the bones. The following passage in Lamentations, however, ch. iv. 8, 9, is particularly significant: "But now their visage is dark with blackness [A. V.: blacker than a coal; marg. read.: darker than blackness], so that they are not known in the streets; their skin cleaveth to their bones, and they are as dry as a stick. It fared better with those that were slain by the sword than with those whom hunger slew, etc." Nothing can be plainer than that the black color spoken of in the third Seal-vision is likewise that of hunger. ["The color is indicative of the mournful nature of the employment of the rider." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 5. A balance.—Hengstenberg: "The balance comes into consideration merely as a symbol of dearth or scarcity. For according to the subsequent verse the fruits of the earth are not weighed out, but measured." Where there is a superabundance, there is no counting and measuring, Gen. xli. 49; but where a thing is weighed out, there is none too much of it. Fundamental passages are Ezek. iv. 10: "And thy food which thou shalt eat (shall be) by weight, twenty shekels a day;" and ver. 16: "Moreover, He said unto me, Son of man, behold, I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem; and they shall eat bread by weight and with care."

* [Elliott and Barnes regard this Seal as symbolizing that long period of war and bloodshed which, commencing shortly after the accession of Commodus, extended to the accession of Diocletian (A. D. 185 or 6-234). As descriptive of this period, they make many citations from Gibbon, and (Elliott) the following from Sismondi (Fall of the Roman Empire, Vol. I.): "With Commodus' death commenced the third and most calamitous period. It lasted ninety-two years, from 192 to 284. During that time thirty-two Emperors and twenty-seven pretenders to the Empire alternately hailed each other from the throne by incessant civil warfare. . . . Ninety-two years of nearly incessant civil warfare taught the world on what a frail foundation the virtue of the Antonines had reared the felicity of the Empire." They support their hypothesis by such considerations as the following: (1.) All the Symbols, the red color of the horse, the peace taken away, the killing, the great sword, indicate a state of war; (2) the taking away of peace indicates that it was a state of war following a period of peace; (3) the πάγαια—the Roman battle-sword, not πομπαία as in ver. 8; that it was a state of civil war; (4) the sword given to the rider, that the "causal agency" in the state of war should be "those whose fitting and distinctive badge was sword-bearing," i. e. "the military."

[Wordsworth, who holds that the Rider is Satan making his first assault by persecution, writes: "This is the exposition which all the ancient interpreters have given of this Seal." On this point, however, he presents only one direct testimony from the Cutena—E. R. C.]

These passages rest upon Lev. xxvi. 26. [So also Elliott, Alford, etc. The last-named continues: "Some, as, e. g., Woodhouse, have defended the meaning 'yoke' for ζυγόν. But surely the question is here decided for us by Ezek. xlv. 10 [LXX.]: ζυγὸς δικαιοῦ, κ. τ. λ., where the same words occur in juxtaposition. The assertion of Mr. Barker, in his strictures on Elliott's Hor. Ap., that ζυγός in the sense of balance absolutely is very rare, is sufficiently answered by the proverb ἀκριβέστερος ζυγοῦ, by Diog. Laert. viii. 18. . . . Where a word can thus be used figuratively, in common sayings, its literal sense cannot be so very rare."—E. R. C.]

Ver. 6. And I heard as it were a voice.—[See TEXT. NOTES.] Gloomy cry, gloomy dispensation! It resounds in the midst of the four Life forms. That is, all four participate in it. [This is not, by any means, a necessary conclusion; the voice more probably proceeded from one, but which one is not specified.—E. R. C.] It is not, however (as Hengstenberg maintains), a piece of intelligence which concerns the representatives of the living beings on earth (in which category Hengstenberg places the Cherubim).

"The first half of the cry," says Düsterdieck, "sounds as when something is offered for sale" (Winer). But during a scarcity, produce is not cried for sale. On the other hand, a dearth is limited by a taxation of bread. The taxation here indicated issues from the midst of the four Living-forms.

HENGSTENBERG: "A measure, chanix, of wheat is designated by Suidas as the daily maintenance of a man (ἡμερήσιος τροφή). A denarius was the usual day's wages of a man, according to Matt. xx. 2." The dearth fixed by this taxation is certainly no famine as yet; moreover, as a permanent and universal suffering is denoted, the figure of famine would be an exaggeration. Hengstenberg thinks that "if a man should eat barley bread, the usual food of the common people (comp. John vi. 9, 13), which is three times as cheap as wheat bread, he and his family might make shift to live." Possibly they might, if the family was a very small one. [So also Elliott, Alford, Barnes, etc.—E. R. C.]

An unmeaning remark is that of Bengel, who observes that barley and wheat (see on the contrary, Ex. ix. 31, 32) ripen earlier than oil and wine. Hence there would be only a moderate dearth, because the later productions would succeed better. Still less should the contrast be obliterated by the declaration that the greatest economy should be observed in regard to oil and wine likewise (Rinck). The most utter misinterpretation is found in Ewald's assumption that the oil and wine remained uninjured in a sort of mockery. Though oil and wine are not, in the strictest sense, articles of sustenance, they are—even in the East, where they are more common—articles of luxury and enjoyment, and the oppressiveness of the contrast lies in the fact that the rich, who can also easily pay for the dear wheat, have their special luxuries at a proportionably cheap rate. Similar contrasts run through social life down to the present day.

Special interpretations:* The famine under Claudius (Grotius and others); famines in a more general sense (Calov., etc.); the black horse, false brethren whose works are black (Bede); dearth of spiritual nourishment (Vitranga, [Wordsworth and Lort]); heretics (à-Lapide); personified heresies (Stern). For additional fanciful interpretations, see Düsterdieck.

Vers. 7 and 8.

VISION OF THE FOURTH SEAL.

It is not without purpose and effect that of the fourth rider it is expressly said that his name is Death. In this stress upon the name, we might find it indicated that Death is only so called on earth; that he is not really death, but sleep, according to the name whereby faith knows him; nay, that he is even a consoling birth so far as the name by which he is known in the other world is concerned. The context, however, seems more to favor the idea that he here appears in the light of a terrific object, whom all men call by name, by his dread title. Death here appears as the specific death-power, as a historically aggravated mortality (see Ps. cx.). Hence he cannot be reduced to a specific form of death, pestilence, for instance, as Eien-

* [ELLIOTT and BARNES identify the events of this seal (see p. 168) with the period of distress following the edict of Caracalla, ante A. D. 217. Both these authors refer largely to Gibbon; the latter quotes (from Lort) the following from Lactantius (De Mort. Persec. ch. xxiii.), as furnishing "a painful but most appropriate illustration": "Swarms of exactors sent into the provinces and cities filled them with agitation and terror, as though a conquering enemy were leading them into captivity. The fields were separately measured, the trees and vines, the flocks and herds numbered, and an examination made of the man. In the cities the cultivated and rude were united as of the same rank. The streets were crowded with groups of families, and every one required to appear with his children and slaves. Tortures and lashes resounded on every side. Sons were gibetted in the presence of their parents, and the most confidential servants harassed that they might make disclosures against their masters, and wives that they might testify unfavorably of their husbands. If there were a total destitution of property, they were still tortured to make acknowledgments against themselves, and, when overcome by pain, inscribed for what they did not possess. Neither age nor ill-health was admitted as an excuse for not appearing. The sick and weak were borne to the place of inspection, a reckoning made of the age of each, and years added to the young and deducted from the old, in order to subject them to a higher taxation than the law imposed. The whole scene was filled with wailing and sadness. In the mean time individuals died, and the beds and the flocks diminished, yet tribute was none the less required to be paid for the dead, so that it was no longer allowed either to live or die without a tax. Mendicants also escaped, where nothing could be wrung, and whom misfortune and misery had made incapable of farther oppression. These the impious wretch affecting to pity, that they might not suffer want, ordered to be assembled, borne off in vessels, and plunged into the sea." He adds: "Were we now to represent these things by a symbol, we could scarcely find one that would be more expressive than that of a rider on a black horse with a pair of scales, sent forth under a proclamation which indicated that there would be a most rigid and exact administration of severe and oppressive laws, and with a special command, addressed to the people, not for the purposes of concealment, or from opposition to the government, to injure the sources of revenue."

[WORDSWORTH thus writes: "The imagery of the Apocalypse is derived from ancient Hebrew prophecy. The ground-work of its language here is that of Hosea xii. 7, concerning Ephraim. Ephraim in the Apocalypse is a representative of enmity to Judah, the Church of Christ. And Hosea thus describes Ephraim: He is a merchant; the balances of deceit are in his hand, he loveth to oppress; the characteristic of Heresy is to be a merchant, and it bears a balance in its hand. 'The Rider,' says Augustine, (?) 'has a balance in his hand, for he professes that he is teaching equitably, and yet he is doing wrong.'"—E. R. C.]

horn supposes. Besides, all Hades follows him, and Hades is not populated by pestilence solely. Hades on earth is the whole terrific retro-action of the Kingdom of the Dead on the race of mortals; it does not, therefore, denote the inhabitants of Hades (Eichhorn, Ebrard); otherwise the earth would be peopled with ghosts. Hengstenberg even tries to make Hades the place of torment, the abode of the damned, after the mediæval fashion, in accordance with his ruling view (p. 339). It is not said, however, that Gehenna spreads itself over the earth. Düsterdieck, moreover, justly remarks that general plagues are treated of here; not special plagues of unbelievers.

The color of the horse is χλωρός, the yellowish green of the fresh-springing verdure, and the greenish yellow of decay; the latter is the symbol here.

On the meaning of the fourth part, see above. It might be said—all men are mortal; but the fourth and pre-eminently worldly part is swept away by an aggravated mortality. In the Prophets, also, the four dark species appear as leading forms of punishment, viz.: the sword, hunger, death (in this special sense contagion [22], see Düsterdieck, p. 262), of which, again, pestilence is a particular form, and evil beasts (Lev. xvi. 22; Ez. k. xiv. 21). (Another explanation of the fourth part, see in Ebrard, p. 249.)*

[ALFORD: "The enumeration comprehends the four sore judgments" enumerated in Ezek. xiv. 21, and in the same terms (LXX): τὰς τέσσαρας ἐκδικήσεις μου τὰς πονηρίας, βομβήτων, καὶ λιμῶν, καὶ θύρια πονηρὰ, καὶ θανάτου. This fixes the meaning of this second and subordinate ἄνθρωπος as above" (i. e., "pestilence").—E. R. C.]

Special interpretations†: The mortal suffer-

* [The Am. Ed. must here express his dissatisfaction with every explanation that he has seen of the fourth part; nor can he propose an interpretation satisfactory to him. If, in his judgment, there is here either an undiscovered corruption of text, or else a knot in symbolism which it is reserved for some future commentator to unravel.—E. R. C.]

† [ELLIOTT and BARNES regard this seal as indicating the period (A. D. 242-250) embracing the reigns of Decius, Gallus, Emilianus, Valerian, and Gallienus. Concerning this period, as to its general characteristics, they quote from Gibbon the following: "From the great secular games celebrated by Philip to the death of the Emperor Gallienus, there elapsed twenty years of shame and misfortune. During this calamitous period, every instant of time was marked, every province of the Roman world was afflicted by barbarous invaders and military tyrants, and the wearied empire seemed to approach the last and fatal moment of its dissolution." In reference to particular things (the quotations are made from Barnes) we have the following: The sword (βομβήτων—the barbaric invasions): "This was the period of the first Gothic invasion of the Roman Empire; the period when those vast hordes . . . invaded the Roman territories from the East, passed over Greece, and made their appearance almost, as Mr. Gibbon says, within sight of Rome. . . . As one of the illustrations that the word 'should' be used by 'Death' in this period, we may refer to the siege and capture of Philopolis. 'A hundred thousand persons are reported to have been massacred in the sack of that great city.'" (Gibbon.)

[Hunger: "This would naturally be the consequence of long continued wars, and of such invasions as those of the Goths. Mr. Gibbon says, of this period: 'Our habits of thinking so fondly connect the order of the universe with the fate of man, that this gloomy period of history has been decorated with inundation, earthquakes, uncommon meteors, preternatural darkness, and a crowd of prodigies, fictitious or exaggerated. But a long and general famine was a calamity of a more serious kind. It was the inevitable consequence of rapine and oppression, which extirpated the produce of the present, and the hope of future harvests.'" Vol. I, p. 139.

[Pestilence: "Of the pestilence which raged in this period ings in the Jewish war (Weiststein and others); the pagan Romans under Domitian (Lyra); migration of nations (Huschke); death-bringing heresy (Bede and others [Wordsworth]); the Saracens (Vitringa).

Vers. 9, 10, 11.

VISION OF THE FIFTH SEAL.

Ver. 9. Under the altar.—"ὑποκάτω τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου, i. e., at the foot or lower part of the altar, where the victim was laid whose blood had been shed." STUART.—E. R. C.] "Two altars are mentioned in Revelation; namely, the golden altar of incense, and the altar of burnt-offering, which is not called golden. The former is denoted in ch. viii. 3, 4; ix. 13; the latter in ch. xiv. 18; xvi. 7. [Here it can be only the altar of burnt-offering that is meant. For this, as being the more public of the two, accessible and open to the view of all, is always the one intended in Scripture, and especially in the Revelation, when the altar is simply mentioned (comp. ch. xvi. 7). And here we can the less think of any other than it, as on it alone were the bloody offerings presented, and only under it could the blood be found, or the souls of those that had been slain."—(E. R. C.)] (? Hengstenberg). On the embarrassments in which the literal exegesis finds itself in striving to account for the position of the souls under the altar, and for their visibility, see Düsterdieck, p. 264. IDEM: "The reason why the souls are conceived of as under the altar, is found in the fact that the blood of sacrifices, as which the

Mr. Gibbon makes the following remarkable statement, in immediate connection with what he says of the famine: "Famine is almost always followed by epidemical diseases, the effect of scanty and unwholesome food. Other causes must, however, have contributed to the furious plague, which, from the year two hundred and fifty to the year two hundred and sixty-five, raged without intermission in every province, every city, and almost every family in the Roman empire. During some time, five thousand persons died daily at Rome; and many towns that had escaped the hands of the barbarians were entirely depopulated." l. 159.

[Wild beasts: "These are formidable enemies in the early stages of society, and when a country from any cause becomes depopulated. . . . Though not adverted to by Mr. Gibbon, there is a record pertaining to this very period which shows that this was one of the calamities with which the world was then afflicted. It occurs in Arnobius, Adv. Gentes, lib. i. p. 5. Within a few years after the death of Gallienus (about A. D. 300), he speaks of wild beasts in such a manner as to show that they were regarded as a sore calamity. . . . 'When we were waged with wild beasts, and contended with lions? Was it not before our time? When did a plague come upon man poisoned by serpents? Was it not before our time?'" martyrs are accounted, was poured out at the foot of the altar." He rightly adds, in opposition to Züllig and Hengstenberg, that it does not follow from this that by the souls, nothing but the blood is here intended. The altar is, by most commentators, regarded as the altar of burnt-offering [so Wordsworth, Elliott, Alford, Barnes, etc.—E. R. C.]; only De Wette incorrectly apprehends it as the altar of incense, in accordance with ch. viii. 8.

[Wordsworth comments as follows: "The word used in the seal for sword is different from that in ver. 4, and properly signifies a Thracian sword. . . . The Beasts of the Earth here, are savage powers exercising an earthly dominion for earthly ends. . . . Observe the article here, the Beasts, showing that although they have not yet been mentioned, they are present to the Divine fore-knowledge, and will be described more fully in later parts of the Apocalypse. . . . These words, the Beasts of the Earth, thus introduced, connect the time of the seal with the time of other prophecies in other portions of the Apocalypse. The words thus used in this book may be called chronological catch-words. They serve to rivet prophecies of contemporaneous events, and to mark identity of a subject, as well as a sameness of time. . . . We find an examination that the word Empire, Heast, is used in no less than thirty-seven places of the Apocalypse, and always in a special sense, signifying a particular power; we may therefore reasonably infer that the word is used in the same sense in the passage now before us. This seal, therefore, presents a compendious view of the sufferings which the Church of Christ would have to endure from the various workings of the Evil One."—(E. R. C.)

[WORDSWORTH: "The imagery of this vision is derived from the sacrificial service of the Temple (Ex. xl. 29); 'the blood of the victims being received by the sacrificing Priest in a vessel was poured out at the foot of the altar' (Jahn, Archæol., §377; see Lev. iv. 7, viii. 15; Isa. xxix. 1). The sacrificial word (ἐσπαυμένον), here rendered slain, is the same as is applied to Christ, the True and Faithful Martyr, the Lamb slain (see v. 6, 9, 12, xiii. 8), and to the Martyrs (in xviii. 24). This imagery had been already adopted by the Apostle St. Paul at Rome, on the eve of his own martyrdom: 'I am already being poured out,' etc. (2 Tim. iv. 6)."]—ALFORD: "The representation here, in which they are seen under the altar, is simply symbolical, carrying out the likening of them to victims slain on the altar. Even as the blood of these victims was poured under the altar, and the life was in the blood, so their souls are represented as under the symbolical altar in Heaven,* crying for vengeance, as blood is often said to do."—BARNES: "John saw these souls as if they were collected under the altar—the place where the sacrifice for sin was made—offering their supplications. Why they are represented as being; there is not so apparent; but probably two suggestions will explain this: (a) The altar was the place where sin was expiated, and it was natural to represent these redeemed martyrs as seeking refuge there; and (b) it was usual to offer prayers and supplications at the altar, in connection with the sacrifice made for sin, and on the ground of that sacrifice. The idea is, that they who were suffering persecution would naturally seek a refuge in the place where expiation was made for sin, and where prayer was appropriately offered."—E. R. C.]

On account of the word of God and on

* There is no altar of burnt offering in Heaven; the only altar there is that of incense. In the symbolical Tabernacle, the altar of burnt offering was placed in the open court, before the raḥ (the true Temple) and in the way to it; and so, doubtless, in the Apocalyptic vision. In the judgment of the American Editor, the outer altar was symbolic of the Earth as the platform of service (i. e. sacrifice in its broadest sense) offered unto God as the condition of entrance into the Holy Place. For the sinful creature, this service involves sacrifice in the sense of suffering and death. The perfect service, involving the voluntary endurance of suffering and death, which is the efficacious condition of the sinner's entrance into Heaven, was offered by the Second Adam; and yet those united unto Him are called to a service like His—a service of obedience, involving sacrifice in the narrower sense, the sacrifice of burnt offering. It was in respect of this that the Apostle desired, not only for himself, but for all believers that they might know the fellowship of Christ's sufferings, and be made conformable unto His death (comp. Phil. iii. 10 with 17). In the restitution of all things, doubtless, this earth will be brought into the Holy Place, and the brazen altar of burnt offering will become a golden altar of incense (Rom. viii. 21, ch. xxi. 3, 4), but until that day the earth will remain, before the Temple, an altar of sacrifice. The scene that the Seer beheld was (in the first part, an earth scene: during the present moon, in which he beheld the true followers of the Lord partaking in the sufferings of their Head. (See Add. Note, p. 178.)—E. R. C.]

account of the witness which they had.—

The testimony, according to the ancients, De Wette, and Bleek, is the testimony concerning Christ; according to Hengstenb., Ebrard, Düsterd., it is the testimony (objective or subjective?) which the martyrs have received from Jesus. Düsterdieck says: "This view is demanded, irrespective even of the parallelism of the foregoing τ. λόγ. τ. ὅ. by the clause ἡν εἶπον, which presupposes that the μαρτυρία which the martyrs had, had been in the first instance by them received, namely, from the true or original Witness, Jesus Christ." There is an exegetical obscurity here. The testimony is a specific term. The gospel which a man receives from Christ is not in itself a specific testimony or witness. It becomes testimony by faithful confession; and then, doubtless, Christ confesses Himself to the man by whom He is confessed. Here, however, the holding fast of confessors to their confession is denoted. ["The testimony is one borne by them, as most commentators; not one borne to them by the faithful Witness, as Düsterdieck and Ebrard, most unnaturally; for how could the testimony borne to them before the Father by Christ (so Ebrard) be the cause of their being put to death on earth?"] ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 10. They cried (ἔκραζον).—According to Ebrard, the souls; according to Hengstenberg, the slain. The grammatical reference, it is true, is to the latter; but the slain are the souls. In this vision Hengstenberg, after a more general view of all that goes before it, falls entirely into the church-historical interpretation, and speaks of catastrophes which hold out a prospect of the final judgment. All the seal-visions, from the first on, progress toward the final judgment; and this is assuredly true, therefore, of the vision of the martyrs in particular. Toward the actual end of the world, however, quite different forms of persecution take the place of slaying, see ch. xiii. 17.

According to Hengstenberg, the souls of the slain are not their spirits as existent in the other world, but their animal souls, identical with the blood, and destroyed in death along with their bodies; he, therefore, apprehends the description as purely poetical; or, rather, he gives a purely prosaic interpretation.*

* [It becomes an exceedingly interesting and important question whether Hengstenberg is not right. He writes: "The Souls of the martyrs, in ver. 9, are not the souls in the intermediate state, as expositors commonly suppose, the souls (ψυχαι) are many, of which it is said in the Old Testament that they are in the blood—the animal souls (see, for example, Gen. ix. 5, [the term here translated life is in the LXX. ψυχή]; they are murdered souls; but the blood itself might as well have stood, and in ver. 10, indeed, is actually put instead of the souls here. This is plain from comparing the original passage, Gen. ix. 10, where the blood of Abel cries to God from the ground. (Züllig: "Only a dramatizing of the thought; your blood demands vengeance, according to Gen. ix. 10, ix. 5, etc." [LXX.]). It is in accordance with the phraseology of the Old and New Testaments, in which everywhere the spirits (πνεύματα) only, not the souls (ψυχαι) of the departed are spoken of—see my Comm. on the Psalms, Vol. III., p. 87 (Trans.). It is shown by a comparison of the parallel passage, ch. xx. 4, where the discourse is of the souls (ψυχαι) of those who have been beheaded for the testimony of Jesus, and where the Prophet sees them live again. It is plain, finally, from the fact that the souls were seen on the altar, in reference to Levit. ix. 7 (comp. v. 9: "And the whole blood of the bullock shall he pour out at the bottom of the altar of burnt offering, which is before the tabernacle of the congregation." Accordingly, since the place under the altar has nothing to do with souls in the higher sense,

The souls invoke the Lord as ὁ δεσπότης; i. e., the Lord in His absolute power and authority. They doubt not that He is able immediately to bring the course of the world to a conclusion. The human soul in extreme distress is always prone to appeal to this power. Düsterdieck [also Alford], not without reason, brings out the special reference of the Divine title to the δούλοι, as indicated in our text by the σύνδουλοι.

The application of ἀληθινός to God's faithfulness to His promise (Vitringa, Bengel and others) is opposed by Düsterdieck. The word certainly does primarily denote the true, essential Lord; this, however, is not to the exclusion of an appeal to His faithfulness. [See on ch. iii. 7.—E. R. C.]

Them that dwell on the earth.—Antithesis to the servants of God. In demonstration of the ethical nobility of the longing uttered by the martyrs—a longing which contained neither a culpable impatience nor a desire for revenge—Bede has remarked: "Non hæc odio inimicorum, pro quibus in hoc sæculo rogarunt, orant, sed amore sequitis, quia ipsi iudici ut prope positi concordant" (Düsterdieck).

To Bengel's observation: "They are concerned for the honor of the holiness and truth of their Lord;" we must add that, for that very reason, they are also concerned for justice and their own justification.

Ver. 11. And a white robe was given unto them, to each.—This express singular is very significant. Each soul in particular is justified. According to Hengstenberg, this is but an illustration of their felicity, for the benefit of John and the Church. "According to ch. iii. 4, 5, and vii. 14, the white robe constitutes the attire of all the blessed, and they, as such, enter into glory immediately upon their departure out of this life. Accordingly, the words, was given, cannot refer to the bestowment itself, but to the consciousness of the Seer." Düsterdieck opposes this hypothesis of a 'poetical fiction,' but also combats the view of Bengel, who supposes that some particular thing over and above eternal salvation and blessedness is intended. "White stolas, or long white robes, are an excellent adornment and high honor." Vitringa's interpretation is, indeed, a more valuable one: "The cause of these martyrs shall be publicly vindicated in the Church, and they shall be recognized and extolled as sharers in the glory and Kingdom of Christ, their cause having for a time appeared in a dubious light." Bossuet, in accordance with the import of the white robe amongst the Romans, seems to regard it here as indicative of a special expectancy of the resurrection. Martyrdom is certainly a special candidnesship for glory; yet, according to the meaning of the white robe elsewhere in the Apocalypse, Vitringa appears to us to have presented the true signification of the present passage.*

[ALFORD: "The white robe, in this Book, is the vestment of acknowledged and glorified righteousness, in which the saints walk and reign with Christ, comp. ch. iii. 4, vii. 18 sqq. al. This was given to the martyrs; but their prayer for vengeance was not yet granted. The Seer saw in vision that this was so. The white robe was not actually bestowed as some additional boon, but seemed in vision to be thus bestowed, because in that vision one side only of the martyrs' intermediate state had been presented, viz.: the fact of their slaughter and their collective cry for vengeance. Now, as over against that, the other more glorious side is presented, viz.: that though the collective cry for vengeance is not yet answered, yet, individually, they are blessed in glory with Christ, and waiting for their fellows to be fully complete."—E. R. C.]

That they should rest.—According to Bengel and De Wette, ἀναπαύονται means a cessation from crying; according to Hengstenberg, it denotes the repose of the blessed, the rest from the toils and conflicts of life, with reference to ch. xiv. 13. This too, then, would be a mere poetic description. As in the humanly conditioned world of feeling, the impulse of justice and the impulse of mercy modify each other, and the latter especially appeases the former (James ii. 13), so too the impulses of longing in view of the Divine purpose and end of the world are appeased by the impulse of patience in view of the Divine plan of the world. Patience must supplement longing, Rom. viii. 17, 25. The consolation of them, by pointing them to the end of their earthly sufferings, is an independent affair, and its place is not here. The first word of comfort that would be spoken to a man who had been slain would not be—thou art now freed from all trouble [?]. The instinct of justice is æonic, and extends into eternity; this Kant saw.

[WORDSWORTH: "They enjoy the rest and refreshment of Paradise (Luke xxiii. 43), and are in Abraham's bosom (Luke xvi. 22). Therefore, as the Apocalypse says, 'Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord . . . for they (that they may [shall]) rest from their labors, ch. xiv. 13.'"—ALFORD: "Not merely abstain from their cry for vengeance, be quiet; but rest in blessedness, see ch. xiv. 13; Dan. xii. 13."—BARNES: "That is, that they must wait for a little season before they could be avenged as they desired."—E. R. C.]

Yet a little time.—Bengel's reckonings in regard to the length of the χρόνος suffer shipwreck on the right reading χρ. μικρόν (Düsterdieck). The term time in itself is the indefinite form of the future, softened for patience by the epithet: a little time, as also by the idea of the chronos as the legitimately expiring period leading to the καρπός. Then, again, the purpose of the waiting is stated: ἵνα πληρωθῶσιν, etc. That their full number may be made up. Wolf, Ebrard, Düsterdieck, De Wette: That their career might be completed, or that they might be com-we can only understand by the souls (ψυχαί) the animæ souls, which perish with the body." According to this interpretation, it is the blood, the murdered lives, of the saints that calls to God for vengeance. And this idea is far more in accordance with what we are taught concerning the character of the redeemed than the one commonly received. There is no incongruity in the supposition that the blood of martyred Stephen, like that of Abel, should have called upon God to avenge it; but we cannot entertain the thought that the spirit of him who, like Jesus, departed with a prayer for forgiveness, should, immediately after his departure, have raised the cry, Lord, avenge me, punish my murderers.—E. R. C.]

* [Does not a comparison of this verse with ch. vii. 9, 13, 14, indicate that the white robes have reference to a heavenly condition, and not to an earthly vindication?—E. R. C.]

pleted [in the sense of dying, or of moral perfection; De Wette thinks either may be intended. —Tr.]. Similarly Hengstenberg, in accordance with the reading πληρώσω. In opposition to Bengel's view, Hengstenberg remarks: "One must be very full of Judaistic notions to pretend to understand by the fellow-servants, future martyrs from among the Gentiles, and by the brethren, martyrs of Israel." Being slightly scholastic, however, is not always being Judaistic. Bengel had overcome the Judaistic tendency to a greater degree than many another man. According to Düsterdieck, against De Wette, the numeric completeness has reference only to the future martyrs. But neither can these constitute a separate class, according to John's view.

[ALFORD: "Shall have accomplished (scil. their course). Considering that this absolute use of πληροῦν, without an object following, is an ἀπαρ ληγμένον, it is strange that Ebrard and Düst. should designate πληρώσω as an explanatory reading for πληρωθῶ. If this latter be read, then we must render: shall have been completed (in number); a meaning found Luke xxi. 24; Acts vii. 23, 30; ix. 23; xxiv. 27; comp. also Col. ii. 10, which suggests another reason for altering to -θῶ."—E. R. C.]

The vision of the fifth seal has also been particularized. In the martyrs crying for vengeance, Vitringa discovered the Waldenses. Bengel interposed a chronos=1111½ years between the Apostolic martyrs that cry for vengeance and the martyrs of the future; thus he also struck upon the Waldenses—not, however, at the beginning, but at the end of the chronos.*

On isolated allegorizing interpretations of the words, souls under the altar, see Düsterdieck, p. 265.

Vers. 12-17.

VISION OF THE SIXTH SEAL.

Ebrard and Düsterdieck maintain with perfect truth that the end of the world is depicted in this vision [so also Wordsworth and Alford. See ADD. NOTE, p. 178.—E. R. C.]. And thus for the second time the cyclical structure of the Apocalypse is established. But as the condition of Laodicea and the Lord's standing before the door did but lightly touch upon the end, so the present cycle does indeed advance, yet in such a manner as to leave abundance of room for the following cycles. And this inasmuch as it is essentially confined to the cosmical indications of the beginning catastrophe. Our passage reproduces the parallels in the Eschatological Discourse, Matt. xxiv. 29, 30, in a prophetically developed form. The second vision has its foundation in Matt. xxiv. 6; the third and fourth visions have theirs in ver. 7; and the fifth in ver. 9. [This sketch, manifestly true in all the particular parallels mentioned, leaves entirely out of view, as will be observed, any parallel to the leading figure, the false Christs of ver. 5. See ADD. NOTE.—E. R. C.] Hence, all allegoristic interpretations which deny the reference of the fifth seal to the end of the world, making the vision consist of intermediate forms or more general features, are to be rejected. Prominence, however, must be given to the fact, that the Seer here beholds only the signs of the cosmical end of the world and the effects of those signs, whilst with the seventh seal, or in the trumpet cycle, chs. vii. and viii., the spiritual signs and events are revealed. By this fact exegesis is conditioned, as has been previously intimated. Hoffmann did not understand this sequence when he judged that nothing but a description of the new world could follow this delineation of the day of wrath. See Ebrard on this, p. 261. Whilst Ebrard gathers from our text that the whole firmament, the entire structure of the world, shall be destroyed and cease to be—a view which exceeds every Biblical limit, even 2 Pet. iii.—Düsterdieck, on the other hand, justly makes mention of the visional form of the revelation, though that, indeed, does not preclude the reality of the individual features as symbolically presented.

Ver. 12. A great earthquake.—See ch. xi. 13; xvi. 18; viii. 5. In all these passages, however, the context must decide whether the terrestrial or the social and spiritual import predominates.

[“We have no word but earthquake for σεισμός; but it does not, by any means, cover the meaning. For here the heavens are shaken (against Düsterdieck), and the sea, and the dry land. See Hag. ii. 6, 7, and . . . Heb. xii. 26, 27.”

ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

As sackcloth of hair, Is. 1. 8.

The moon like blood, Joel ii. 31.

The heavens rolled together, Is. xxxiv. 4.

The kings, etc., Matt. xxv. 32. “Kings are filled with anguish in common with the meanest slave” (Düsterdieck). This ought, properly, to be transposed, since the meanest slave has outwardly the least to lose.

Ver. 17. In the cry of the terrified and trembling ones to the mountains and rocks, the thought that they seek death (Hengstenberg, Ebrard, Düsterdieck) is not the primary idea conveyed by the text. They seek absolute concealment from the face of God and the wrath of the Lamb, from judgment, in their despairing repentance. And the meaning of this is, we admit, that this present life is so transformed for them into an invasion of the terrible beyond, that they now picture even that beyond as more endurable in reality than the life which they now live. Düsterdieck rightly characterizes these exclamations as representative of the utterances of unbelievers.

Special interpretations:* as applying to the

* [ELLIOTT and BARNES identify this Seal with the persecution under Diocletian (A. D. 303-312). They both give copious extracts from Gibbon and other historians. The latter quotes from Gibbon as follows: “Galerius at length extorted from him [Diocletian] the permission of summoning a council, composed of a few persons, the most distinguished in the civil and military department of the State. It may be presumed that they insisted on every topic which might interest the pride, the piety, the fears of their sovereign in the destruction of Christianity, I. 318.” “It would have been an easy task, from the history of Eusebius, from the declaration of Lactantius, and from the most ancient acts, to collect a long series of horrid and disgusting pictures, and to fill many pages with racks and scourges, with iron hooks and red hot nails, and with the variety of tortures which fire and steel, savage beasts, and more savage executioners, could inflict on the human body, I. 325.”—E. R. C.]

* [ELLIOTT and BARNES identify this Seal also with great periods in Roman history (see p. 168). [The former, who regards the period indicated in this chap-

Jewish war, especially the destruction of Jerusalem (Grotius and others); to intermediate historic spiritual events in the Church (Bede, Vitringa and others); particularly to the darkening of prophecy and law (Böhmer), to Christ blasphemed (the darkened sun), etc. See Düsterdieck, p. 269. On similar allegorizings by Hengstenberg, see Ebrard, p. 258.

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE FIRST SIX SEALS]

By the American Editor.

[Every proposed scheme of the Seals must be tried on its own merits, and that only which at once meets the requirements of the individual symbols, which preserves the unity of the whole system of symbolization, and which manifestly lies parallel with the established facts of history, should be accepted.]

It is an essential element in the scheme of Stuart, which represents the visions as having had their primary fulfillment in the events which terminated in the destruction of Jerusalem, that the Apocalypse should have been written before that event. This opinion is, in the judgment of the writer, successfully controverted by Lange (see Introduction, p. 59 sq.) and many of the ablest Commentators. But even if that opinion be correct, and if the visions did find a fulfillment in the events referred to, it seems rational to regard that fulfillment as only typical, in itself prophetic of one greater and more complete. We cannot suppose, in view of ancient history alone, that the tremendous imagery, either of our Lord's eschatological discourse, Matt. xxiv. 5-31, or of the Seals (which seem to lie parallel with the portion of the discourse referred to), should have had relation merely to the events that preceded and accompanied the victory of Titus. Still less, in view of the course of history since the destruction of Jerusalem and the manifest accordance of the symbolization therewith, can we avoid the conclusion that the latter was a forecasting of the former. Stuart himself, it will be observed (see Foot-note, p. 168), does not deny the validity of this conclusion.

The schemes of Wordsworth and Lord, whilst they have many things in them that have the appearance of truth, do not, even where the ter as that in which the political power of heathenism was destroyed, supports his view as follows: By the earth he understands the "Roman earth" (vol. i., p. 103); by the Armament Heaven above this Apocalyptic earth, "the ruling department in the dominant polity;" and by its luminaries, "the actual rulers and governing powers therein" (vol. i., pp. 103, 236 sq.). From this point of view he writes concerning this vision: "It surely betokened some sudden and extraordinary revolution in the Roman Empire, which would follow chronologically after the era of martyrs depicted under the Seal preceding; a revolution arising from the triumph of the Christian cause over its enemies, and in degree complete and universal." These conditions he finds fulfilled in the great revolution under Constantine—a revolution concerning which he quotes Gibbon as writing (vol. v.): "The ruin of the Pagan religion is described by the Sophists as a dreadful and amazing prodigy, which covered the Earth with darkness and restored the ancient condition of chaos and of night."

[BARNES fixes upon a different period, viz.: A. D. 365-410. He writes: "The design of these verses (15-17), in the varied language used, is evidently to denote universal consternation and alarm—as if the Earth should be convulsed, and the stars should fall, and the Heavens should pass away." He quotes largely from historians to show that these figures met their most complete fulfillment in the period closing with the destruction of the Empire by the Goths and Vandals.—E. R. C.]

presentation of historical facts is correct, satisfy the requirements of the Symbols.

Of the many historical views that have been presented, those of Elliott and Barnes have by far the greatest appearance of probability. But even these are liable to serious objections. 1. They fail in presenting well-defined historical periods. The historical hypothesis calls for successive periods which, although they may blend into each other at each beginning and close, shall be distinctly marked as satisfying the symbols in their central portions. The first and second periods presented by these Commentators (I. A. D. 96-184; II. 184 or 193-284) are well-defined (and to a considerable extent satisfy the symbols), but beyond these all is confusion. The third period does not begin at or near the termination of the second, but is embosomed within it, beginning before A. D. 217, and running on indefinitely; the fourth period is embosomed within the third (A. D. 243-268); the fifth (A. D. 284-310 or 312) does not begin on the termination of the fourth, or even of the third, but of the second. 2. Both these schemes present utterly unsatisfactory explanations of the Sixth Seal. We feel that the awful figures of this vision—a trembling Universe, the sun darkened, the moon as blood, the stars of Heaven falling to the earth—are not satisfied by the merely terrestrial convulsions that terminated in, either the destruction of the political power of Paganism, or the sack of Rome.

The hypothesis, advocated by Lange and Alford, that the first five Seals are synchronous, beginning, as to their development, at the date of the Apocalypse and continuing to the present time, is, in the judgment of the writer, correct, as is also the further hypothesis, that by the Riders on the second, third and fourth horses are meant respectively War, Death and Aggravated Mortality. He must, however, express his dissatisfaction with the interpretations of both these distinguished Commentators of the Rider on the first or white horse. Lange identifies this Rider with Christ. A special objection lies against this view, viz.: that it requires us to regard as mixed together symbols of entirely different orders. As the symbols of the second, third and fourth visions are aberrant, and as all the surroundings lead us to group the four Horsemen together, it seems natural to suppose that the first symbol should be aberrant also. Far better is the supposition of Alford, who, ignoring the consideration just mentioned, supports his interpretation that this Rider is not the personal Christ, but Christianity, by language quoted in the Foot-note on p. 171 sq.

But even this modified hypothesis is liable to serious objections. In the first place, it represents Christianity as wearing the golden crown, whilst those who profess it are represented in the fifth Seal as victims falling under the hand of the dweller upon earth. The crown of this Rider calls for recognized sovereignty in the world, and it is not satisfied by what is called the spiritual kingship of the Sons of God. There is a sense in which Christ was a King in humiliation; but the only crown He wore on Earth was the Crown of Thorns. It is the teaching, not only of the fifth Seal, but of the didactic portions of Scripture, that, throughout the present dispensation, His true followers, as pilgrims and sojourners here, must be partakers of His humiliation. Another objection to this view is, that it places Christianity in apparent subordination to God's ministers in nature (see last paragraph of the Add. Comment on p. 170 sq.). It is at the call of the Zōa that the four Riders come forth. The unity of the complex symbol seems to demand that each one of the Riders should act in one of the realms of God's natural government.

There is an hypothesis which, in the judgment of the writer, satisfies all the requirements of the entire symbolization, and which brings that symbolization into harmony with the other teachings of the Scripture and the facts of history, viz.: that the Rider on the white horse symbolizes mere Human Culture, or, to adopt the current term, Science.

From the beginning, Science has gone forth in triumph, conquering, and that he may conquer; amongst "the dwellers upon earth" he is the acknowledged and crowned King; his bow, like that of Apollo, is far-sounding and far-reaching. He has proclaimed himself, and now in louder and more triumphant tones than ever is proclaiming himself, to be the true deliverer of men from woe. And yet throughout the long period of his reign, though he has ministered much to intellectual and material advancement, he has been unable to abolish war, and dearth, and aggravated mortality, and the true followers of Jesus have been opposed and persecuted—sometimes with the sword and faggot, sometimes with less apparent, but not less real instrumentalities. As the servant of Christ, Science has been in the past, and will be more gloriously in the future, one of the grandest instrumentalities for human development and blessing; but, as an independent king, he is a mock Christ.

This hypothesis, which is consistent with historical facts, satisfies the Symbols of the first vision, and brings them into unity with those which follow; it places the first Rider in the same order of Symbols with the others; it places him in a realm of nature; it is consistent with the implications of the fifth Seal; it is in harmony with the teachings of the didactic Scriptures as to the condition of the Church throughout the present dispensation; and, lastly, it brings the entire vision into parallelism with the eschatological discourse of our Lord (Matt. xxiv.), in which He forewarned His disciples that in the future before His second Advent there should be (1) false Christs, ver. 5; (2) wars, ver. 6, 7; (3) dearth, ver. 7; (4) aggravated mortality, ver. 7; (5) persecutions, vers. 9, 10; (6) to be followed by fearful commotions and woes preceding the Advent, vers. 15-30; (7) the Advent, vers. 30, 31.*

In the opinion of the writer, the fifth Seal, as to its first part (vers. 9, 10), is an Earth scene representing the condition of the true followers of Christ (or at least the most faithful portions thereof) during the period of His absence. That this is to be a condition of humiliation and suffering, comp. 2 Tim. iii. 12; Matt. xxiv. 8, 9; John xv. 18-24; xvi. 1-4, 19-22; Rom. viii. 18-23, 35, 36; Gal. iv. 29; Phil. i. 27-30; 1 Thess. ii. 11-15 with iii. 3, 4; 2 Thess. i. 4-7; 2 Tim. ii. 3, 12; Heb. xii. 1-5; xiii. 13, 14; James i. 2, 3, 12; v. 7-11; 1 Pet. i. 6, 7, 11, 13; ii. 12, 21; iv. 1, 12-14, *etc.** As to its second part (ver. 11), it describes the condition of their departed spirits (see Foot-note, p. 176).

The events of the sixth Seal it seems most reasonable to regard as subsequent to those of the preceding Seals—indeed as still future. Even on the hypothesis that the fearful convulsions therein foretold are to be regarded as symbolic of revolutions in the realm of human government, it may be asked: Have there as yet been such revolutions as satisfy the tremendous symbols? And beyond this—Doubtless, fearful convulsions in human affairs were in the view of our Lord (Matt. xxiv. 29) and of the Seer (vers. 12-16); but can we regard their words as referring only to such convulsions? If the earth quaked, and the rocks rent, and the sun was darkened, when the God-man died (Matt. xxvii. 45, 51, etc.), is it not rational to expect, in view of such prophecies as those referred to, that similar portents will precede or accompany His Second Coming in glory?

That the sixth Seal heralds and introduces the End of the Æon and the Coming of the Lord for the Establishment of the Basileia, there can be no doubt; that in any proper sense it can be said to usher in the Final Consummation, the Advent of the Lord for Final Judgment, is exceedingly questionable (Add. Notes, p. 339 sqq.). It brings us to the very Appearing of the Lord; but here, that Advent and its accompanying and succeeding events are not described. We are again brought to the same event at the blowing of the Seventh Trumpet, ch. xi. 15; and again ch. xiv. 11. The full description, however, is reserved until the close of all the collateral visions ending in that event; it is presented to us chs. xix. 11; xx. 6.—E. R. C.]

* [As against the position taken above, may be urged the present exemption of the Church from persecution. This suggests the question, whether this exemption may not be the result of undue conformity to the world—a conformity exemplified in the case of the Church of Laodicea, ch. iii. 15-17. The only texts in the New Testament with which the writer is acquainted, militating against the truth of his position are such as 1 Tim. iv. 8; Matt. vi. 33; xix. 21; Mark x. 30. These texts, it is urged, promise temporal prosperity to true Christians. It is to be remembered, that they have immediate respect to present believers—to those to whom the Saviour directly declared that the world would hate and persecute them. The first passage cited was addressed to that very minister to whom it was declared (2 Tim. iii. 12) "All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." To suppose, therefore, that these texts imply a promise of temporal prosperity and freedom from persecution is to place them in direct antagonism with the general run of inspired utterance; and not only so, but it is to suppose the utterance of a promise that manifestly never was fulfilled in the case of those to whom it was primarily given. All the passages can, without straining, be regarded as implying the promise of spiritual prosperity in the midst of temporal adversity. Thus, and thus only, can they be brought into harmony with the declarations of prophecy and the facts of history.—E. R. C.]

* [The four realms of nature brought to view on this hypothesis are (1) human intellect, (2) government, (3) the processes ministering to growth and nourishment, and (4, possibly) the atmosphere as the seat of those influences which minister to health and disease. Is it not possible that the Ideal Form of the Zōa may have relation to these realms of nature: the Human Figure to the first, the Lion to the second, the Ox to the third, and the Eagle to the fourth?—E. R. C.]

SECTION THIRD.

The Seven Penitential Trumpets, issuing from the Opening of the Seventh Seal.

CHAP. VII. 1—IX. 21.

A—IDEAL HEAVENLY WORLD-PICTURE OF THE SEVEN PENITENTIAL TRUMPETS. THE IDEAL, INVINCIBLE CHURCH. ITS ESTABLISHMENT AS THE CHURCH MILITANT BY THE SEALING OF THE ELECT IN THIS WORLD; ITS CONSUMMATION WITH THE FOUNDING OF THE CHURCH TRIUMPHANT IN THE OTHER WORLD. PREPARATION FOR THE LOOSING OF THE SEVENTH SEAL.

CH. VII. 1—17.

- 1 And<sup>1</sup> after these [this<sup>2</sup>] things [om. things] I saw four angels standing on [upon] the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should [may] not blow on [upon] the earth, nor on [upon] the sea, nor on [upon]
- 2 any tree.<sup>3</sup> And I saw another angel ascending from the east [sun-rising], having the [a] seal of the living God: and he cried with a loud [great] voice to the four angels, [ins. those] to whom it was given to hurt [injure] the earth and the sea,
- 3 saying, Hurt [Injure] not the earth, neither [nor] the sea, nor the trees, till we
- 4 have sealed<sup>4</sup> the servants of our God in [upon] their foreheads. And I heard the number of them which were [om. them which were—ins. the] sealed: and there were sealed [om. and there were sealed] a hundred and forty and four thousand [ins. sealed] of all the tribes [out of every tribe] of the children [sons] of Israel.
- 5 Of [Out of] the tribe of Juda were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve thousand [ins. sealed<sup>5</sup>]. Of [; out of] the tribe of Reuben were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Gad were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve
- 6 thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Aser were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Nephthalim were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Manasses were sealed [om. were sealed]
- 7 twelve thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Simeon were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Levi were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Issachar were sealed [om. were sealed]
- 8 twelve thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Zabulon were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Joseph were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve thousand. Of [; out of] the tribe of Benjamin were sealed [om. were sealed] twelve thousand [ins. sealed].
- 9 After this [these things] I beheld [saw], and, lo [behold]<sup>6</sup>, a great multitude, which no man [one] could number, of [out of] all nations, and kindreds [tribes], and people [peoples], and tongues, stood [standing]<sup>7</sup> before the throne, and before

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 1. The Kai uncertain. [Words. and Tisch. give it with  $\aleph$ . B\*. P.; Lach. omits with A. C., Vulg.; Alf. and Treg. bracket.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 1. The reading  $\tau\omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron$  preponderates. [Critical Editors read  $\tau\omicron\upsilon\tau\omicron$  with  $\aleph$ . A. B\*. C.; Cod. P., Vulg., etc. give  $\tau\alpha\upsilon\tau\alpha$ .—E. R. C.]

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 1.  $\tau\iota \delta\epsilon\upsilon\tau\epsilon\rho\omicron\nu$ , more significant than  $\pi\alpha\upsilon\varsigma \delta\epsilon\upsilon\tau\epsilon\rho\omicron\nu$ . [Gries., Words., Lach., Treg., Tisch. (Ed. 1859) read  $\tau\iota$  with B\*. C., Vulg.; Tisch. (8th Ed.) gives  $\pi\alpha\upsilon\varsigma$  with  $\aleph$ . P.; Alford brackets  $\tau\iota$ .—E. R. C.]

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 3. [The reading  $\sigma\phi\alpha\gamma\iota\zeta\omicron\mu\epsilon\nu$  is without authority. All the Critical Editors with  $\aleph$ . A. B\*. C. P., etc.,  $\sigma\phi\alpha\gamma\iota\zeta\omicron\mu\epsilon\nu$ .—E. R. C.]

<sup>5</sup> Ver. 5. In the best Codd.  $\delta\epsilon\sigma\phi\alpha\gamma\iota\zeta\omicron\mu\epsilon\nu$  is given only at the beginning and at the close (vers. 5 and 8).

<sup>6</sup> Ver. 9. The Kai  $\acute{\iota}\delta\omicron\upsilon$  is doubtful. In a material aspect also, inasmuch as the whole chapter treats of one general vision. [Words., Alf., Treg., Tisch., give  $\kappa\alpha\iota \acute{\iota}\delta\omicron\upsilon$  with  $\aleph$ . B\*. P.; Lach. omits with A., Vulg.—E. R. C.]

<sup>7</sup> Ver. 9. [Words. and Alf. read  $\acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\omicron\tau\epsilon\varsigma$  with B\*; Cod. C. gives  $\acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\omicron\tau\epsilon\nu$ ; Lach., Treg., Tisch. (and Lange, see in loc.), with  $\aleph$ . A. P., etc.,  $\acute{\epsilon}\sigma\tau\omicron\tau\epsilon\varsigma$ .—E. R. C.]

- 10 the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and [ins. they] cried [cry] with a loud [great] voice, saying, [ins. The] salvation to [or, is with] our God which [who] sitteth upon the throne, and unto [or, is with] the Lamb.
- 11 And all the angels stood [were standing<sup>9</sup>] round about [om. about] the throne, [om.,] and about [om. about] the elders and the four beasts [Living-beings], and [ins. they] fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, saying, Amen: [ins. the] blessing, and [ins. the] glory, and [ins. the] wisdom, and [ins. the] thanksgiving, and [ins. the] honor, and [ins. the] power, and [ins. the] might [strength], be [or om. be] unto our God for ever and ever [into the ages of the ages]. Amen.
- 13 And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are [om. What are] These which [who] are arrayed in white robes [ins., who are they?] and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir [My<sup>9</sup> lord], thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came [that come] out of [ins. the<sup>10</sup>] great tribulation, and [ins. they] have [om. have] washed their robes, and made them<sup>11</sup> white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore [On this account] are they before<sup>12</sup> the throne of God, and [ins. they] serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them [αρχήσεται ἐν αὐτοῖς, shall spread his tabernacle over them]<sup>13</sup>. They shall [ins. not] hunger no [any] more, neither [ins. shall they] thirst any more; neither [οὐδὲ μὴ]<sup>14</sup> shall the sun light [πέσῃ, fall] on them, nor any heat [καύμα, burning heat]. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne [τὸ ἀνά μέσον τοῦ θρόνου] shall feed [shepherdize] them, and shall lead them unto living [om. living] fountains of waters [ins. of life<sup>15</sup>]: and God shall wipe away all tears [every tear] from their eyes.

<sup>9</sup> Ver. 11. Different readings see in Düst. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. give ειρήκισαν with  $\aleph$ . A. B\*. P. ( $\aleph$ . A. P., however, give ἰστέ.  $\aleph$ . also gives κίσαν, and B\*. κρίσαν.—E. R. C.]

<sup>10</sup> Ver. 14. There is a μου after κύριε according to B\*. C., etc. [Mov is given by Words., Alf., Treg., Tisch., with  $\aleph$ . B\*. C. P., Vulg., etc.; it is omitted by A. I., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>11</sup> Ver. 14. The article is significant. The reading of Lachmann omits it. [Words., Alf., Treg., Tisch., give ἐκ τῆς θλίψεως τῆς μεγ. with  $\aleph$ . B\*. P., etc.; Lach. gives ἀπὸ θλίψ. μεγ., with A. (Tisch. does not mention A. as presenting this reading).—E. R. C.]

<sup>12</sup> Ver. 14. "Their robes" [τὰς στολὰς αὐτῶν] in accordance with minuscules.

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 15. [Tisch. (Ed. 1859) gave ἐν τῷ θρόνῳ with B\*; Cod.  $\aleph$ . A. P., etc. (according to Treg. and Tisch.) give ἐν τῷ θρόνῳ; Words., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) give ἐνώπιον τοῦ θρόνου, the ἐνώπιον being apparently without authority. (Alf. claims for it  $\aleph$ . and A., and cites it as agreeing with B\*. The Am. Ed. cannot but suggest that the true reading is as given by  $\aleph$ . A. P., tho' ἐν (with the genitive) having the force of before or near (see ROBINSON'S Lex. under 'Εν', I. a. (B), and Winer, § 47, g. (c)).—E. R. C.]

<sup>14</sup> Ver. 15. Lange translates "will settle abidingly (in His glory of manifestation) over them." See EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL, p. 192., and also a most valuable note by Schaaf in the Lange Comm. on John (TEXT AND GRAM.) i. 14, p. 71. The idea here seems to be that God will spread His own special dwelling-place over them; this includes the idea that He will dwell among them.—E. R. C.]

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 16. (Alford and Tisch. (1859) read οὐδ' οὐ μὴ; Tisch., Treg., with  $\aleph$ . A. P., etc., read as above.—E. R. C.]

<sup>16</sup> Ver. 17. The reading ζῶντες. [So all modern Critical Editors, with  $\aleph$ . A. B\*. P., Vulg., etc.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.*

The literal, allegorical exegesis, with its chronological interpretation, has covered this section [ch. vii.] in particular, together with the corresponding eighth and ninth chapters, with confusion and obscurity. It should be premised, first of all, that chapters vii.-ix. constitute a whole, representing the essential form of the history of the Church in this world in respect of its spiritual aspect, in its connection with the history of the Kingdom of God, or the New Testament history of religion. [See p. 192sq.] If the seven churches were portraits of the Church in its spiritual and world-historical aspects; if, further, the seven seals were characteristic of the world-historical side of New Testament times; so now in the seven trumpets the New Testament history of religion, as the spiritual side of New Testament times, is exhibited, or, in other words, the Church is portrayed in its transcendent nature as militant and triumphant. It will appear, as we proceed, that the reference is purely to spiritual matters; let us meantime direct the attention of our readers to the characteristic of the section as presented in the concluding words ch. ix. 20, 21. The dark side in the entire period is the worship of demons, devilish spirits, and this dark side is divided into religious idolatries and moral enormities. As the sections throughout the Apocalypse unfold into the antithesis of Heaven-pictures and earth-pictures, so it is with the present one. If it be objected that the sealing of the 144,000 souls does not take place in Heaven, but on earth, we respond that to the Apocalyptic, Heaven and earth are not purely local terms, as is evident, moreover, from chaps. xii. and xxi. Even the Son of Man Himself walks on earth, amid the candlesticks, according to ch. i. We must, therefore, once for all, distinguish Heaven on earth from the earthly form of the Kingdom of God. And this Heaven on earth is in this case the kernel of the Church

* [Additions may be found under EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.—E. R. C.]

Militant, the plenary number of the sealed elect, from whose ranks are issuing, ever and anon, those victor-trains of parting souls that form the Church Triumphant in the world beyond the grave. Thus is framed the conception of the Heaven-picture of the ideal Church as a whole; as branching into the two stages of the Church Militant and the Church Triumphant (ch. vii. 1-8; 9-17). The contrasted earth picture of the Church is characterized by the trumpets themselves. We continue to designate these as penitential Trumpets, though prominence should also be given in the first place to the more general signification of the trumpetings, as figuring the sudden warlike or dramatic appearance of worldly spirits and spiritual errors, both of which, however, serve as an admonition to repentance, to the marrow of the Church. [See p. 212-qq.]

With the chronological and literal conception referred to, correspond the most considerable misunderstandings which attach to this chapter. Above all, the chapter should not be regarded in the light of an episode. Neither should it be considered as a special promise to the Jewish people. If we hold fast to the idea of the organic completeness and unitedness of the Apocalyptic narration, such an episode, which would be destructive of all connection, is inconceivable. As, furthermore, the seventh chapter, as the basis of the seven Trumpets, must perfectly coincide with the following two chapters, it cannot be reduced to a section of the last time.

So far as the Jews are concerned, those commentators are entirely at odds with the text who teach that the Jews in a literal sense are intended here. As surely as the New Jerusalem of ch. xxi. cannot denote a new Jewish city; as surely as the term Jews, as used in the seven epistles, denotes the very opposite of Judaists, namely, the true spiritual Israel; just so surely are the people of Israel, here, representative of the whole body of the people of God. It can be affirmed only that converts from Israel are included.

Or are the 144,000 souls, standing, according to ch. xiv., on Mount Zion, other chosen ones, though those here mentioned likewise appear as sealed? Or are the former, also, only Jews after all? And being Jews, are they virgins in the literal sense, as Rothe maintains; celibates, such as are found so seldom amongst the Jews? And has the scene so far changed that, whilst in our passage the Church in this world consists purely of Jews, but in the other world is made up of all nations, Gentiles predominating, therefore,—in ch. xiv., on the other hand, the Gentiles upon Mount Zion, i.e., in the same region in which they, in ch. vii., occupy the foreground, are displaced by the Jews?—In every case, we answer no.

Be it observed moreover, that if the symbolical significance be lost sight of in the leading matter, the Twelve Tribes must also be taken literally; as also the 12,000 of every Tribe; the omission of the Tribe of Dan, and everything else. And this, apart from the essential absurdity that during this whole period of sealed Jewish Christians, there should be no account made of sealed Gentile Christians on earth.

And here arises the question, why the New Testament Church should be symbolized by the Jewish Tribes; its kernel by sealed individuals belonging to those Tribes. This question is at once satisfactorily settled if we do but glance back at the prophetic representation of the destiny of Israel. The people of Israel is the typical servant of God, His elect, whose office it is to di-seminate His law amongst the Gentiles (Is. xlii., xliii., etc.), before the Servant of God in the truest and fullest sense of the term, the Messiah, is spoken of. The New Testament, again, takes up this typical import of Israel, but only decisively to transfer it to the spiritual Israel, the New Testament faithful people, or people of faith (Matt. vii. 11; Rom. ii. 28; ch. iv. 11, 12; Gal. iv. 26). In our passage there was abundant motive for going back to the symbolical name of Jews. and to the symbolical import of the Twelve Tribes in particular, since the position of the spiritual Israel in regard to spiritual heathendom—whose pressure into the Church the Apocalyptic fore saw—was to be marked.* We would observe, in this connection, that John, in accordance with ideal theocratic notions, regarded even Judaistic forms of corruption as a special formation of heathenism. Precautionary measures were virtually taken against misunderstanding, in the fact that the Seer made those who were sealed in this world re-appear, in their consummation in the other world, as an innumerable throng out of all nations. [See p. 193.] What we have here, therefore, is not a special scene from the last time, but an entirely new cycle of the whole New Testament time which, as a whole, is eschatological;—a heavenly portrait of the ideal Church.

The vision begins with the apparition of the four Angels that stand upon the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that no wind may blow upon the earth, nor upon the sea, nor upon any tree.

We have recognized the earth as the theocratic order or institution; here it is the New Testament order of things, as presented, first, in the Church alone, branching out, subsequently, into ecclesiastical and political life. On the four corners of this earth, where it comes in contact with the old world—from the direction of heathenism, consequently—the four winds arise. The four winds are the fundamental forms of those worldly time-currents which threaten the ruin of the Church (Dan. vii. 2; Eph. iv. 14). These time-currents must be loosed when their time comes, for a particular work is appointed them; on this very account, however, they are, as Divine dispensations, held by Angels, that they may not break loose before their time and destroy the earth, i.e., the young Church; the sea, or Christian national life, which is not yet strong; or individual Christians that, like all sorts of trees of God (τῆ) have begun to grow up (Ps. i.). [See p. 187.]

When another Angel appears, forbidding the four Angels to injure the earth, or the sea, or individual trees, until he shall have sealed the servants of God, there is presented, in the antithesis of two chronological sections of time, in the antithesis of the bound and the loosed winds, a spiritual antithesis; that, namely, of the sealed, over whom the four winds have no power, as contrasted with the injured earth, the injured sea, and the injured trees. The temporal distinction, however, has likewise its own independent signification; the winds are never loosed until the kernel of the faithful is firmly established.

* [See foot-note † on p. 27.—E. B. C.]

The nature of the other Angel, ascending from the rising of the sun, is determined by the idea of the sealing. Since the conception of justification has suffered such decay in the evangelical Church, it is not to be wondered at that our Theology has in still greater measure lost the idea of sealing, although the latter was pre-figured in the Old Testament (Ezek. ix. 4), whilst it appears distinctly in the New Testament as the idea of the eternal fixation of Christian character, to preserve it from the danger of apostasy (Rom. v. 4, δοκιμή; James ii. 21; Eph. i. 13). [See p. 186.]

With justification, the new life of faith is principally decided; it is necessary, however, that it should be historically proved and fixed, just as it was necessary that Abraham's faith should be proved (see James ii. 21; comp. ver. 23). Now this proving [or verification] is called, in its relation to the simple trials of life, proving; in its spiritual import, over against the temptations to apostasy, it is denominated sealing; Ezekiel symbolized it by a mark on the forehead. It is the mark of a spiritually quick and faithful confession, which the tempter, the spiritual murderer, passes timorously by.

It will hardly be supposed that the Apocalyptist had a lower conception of the sealing than the Apostle Paul; consequently, the Angel of sealing can be significant only of the Holy Ghost. [See p. 187.] He ascends with the rising of the sun; i. e., the life of Jesus Christ, in His glorification, results in the sending of the Holy Ghost. His seal is the seal of the living God; no letter, no form, no fancy:—nothing but the life of the living God, whose personal manifestation is consummated in the glorification of Christ, begets in pure and honest souls such a homogeneous Divine life as, in its matured form, victoriously withstands all the winds and storms of worldly history (1 John v. 4). For, after the sealing, all the four winds must have been suffered to sweep over them; otherwise it could not be said of them: they are come out of the great tribulation. Nay, sealing is itself a confirming against great temptation.

Again, this Angel has power, with a mighty voice to put his veto on an untimely loosing of the four winds. This is the power of mighty operations of the Spirit of God, checking for a while the currents of the spirit of this world; e. g., by this power heresies were restrained throughout the entire Apostolic age.

Then follows the sealing itself. This is too great and too extended for the Apocalyptist to describe the view of the acts themselves; he, therefore, hears the number of the sealed. And the mere number is a leading point; it is a pre-determined plenary number, the whole harvest of God (Matt. iii. 12), the whole inheritance of God. [See p. 193.] The winds may take their part, the chaff (Ps. i.; Matt. iii.); the whole wheat harvest is secured to the Lord. We scarcely need remark that the predestination indicated corresponds with religious and moral conditions. If it were not so, the sealed must have brought the mark on their foreheads into the world with them.

The plenary number of the sealed is 144,000. For all charismatic ground-forms of the life of faith are represented by the Twelve Tribes; whilst the 12,000 souls out of every Tribe represent the whole ramification of each ground-form into its twelve modifications, and the whole harvest of this fullness of the Divine Spirit and human spirits, through the entire Christian course of the world, as symbolized by 1000 years. In proportion to the historical extension of the Tribes, the number 12,000 is exceedingly small; this fact, however, agrees with all the declarations of the New Testament [in regard to the proportion of the saved].

The order of the Tribes gives rise to several queries. Why is the Tribe of Dan wanting here, whilst in the blessing of Moses the Tribe of Simeon was left out? Why is Simeon here even set over Levi? Why is Manasseh distinguished from Joseph, and why is Ephraim merged in Joseph? It would almost seem as if the Tribes had been mingled together promiscuously, in order to ward off every Judaistic conception from the figure. At all events, the perfect equalization of the Tribes is itself not without significance. A Jew would have expected preference to be shown to the Tribe of Judah; he would, however, have anticipated that the Tribe of Levi would have the priority over all. Levi, however, is placed amongst the later Tribes; the prerogatives of the Old Testament priesthood are at an end (Bengel). We shall revert later to the Christian and Jewish traditions in regard to the omission of the Tribe of Dan. As this Tribe early left its inheritance (Jud. xviii.), and conquered the city of Laish, which, probably, was subsequently included in the domain of Naphthali, the Israelitish genealogy merged it in Naphthali (see 1 Chron. iv. sqq.); and the Tribe the rather lost its symbolical significance, since it had damaged it, not merely by the surrender of its tribal seat, but also in other ways (by idolatry). And yet from none of these things need we conclude that the future Antichrist is to issue from it, or that it has died out. In all New Testament times, the Twelve Tribes have been represented only by Judah, Benjamin, Levi, and remnants of the other Tribes, and it is not known exactly where the great mass of the Ten Tribes are. The thing which the Apocalyptist had in view was a symbolical twelve, on a historical basis. Possibly the motive for this substitution of the venerable name of Joseph for Ephraim was, that a disturbing allusion to the falling away of Israel might be avoided. Amid all the seeming confusion of the Tribes, in which no distinction is made between the sons of Jacob's lawful wives and the sons of his concubines, it is still in harmony with the theocratic idea that Judah should head the list and Benjamin conclude it.

If we essay now to divide the entire table by the number three, as the number of spirit, into four times three, we have, first, two sons of Leah and one of her maid: Judah, Reuben, Gad;

we have, secondly, Leah's adopted son, Aser, Rachel's adopted son, Nephtalim, and Manasseh, the first-born of Joseph; the third triad is formed by Leah's sons, Simeon and Levi, and her adopted son, Issachar; in the fourth group, Zabulon is conjoined with Joseph and Benjamin, the late offspring of Leah with the late offspring of Rachel.

On a general survey, the thought forces itself upon our mind that the vision, in its symbolistic enumeration of the Twelve Tribes, has obliterated every semblance of a legal prerogative;—apart from Judah's place of honor, which, again, was symbolically significant of the dignity of Christ.

In the 144,000 sealed ones, the assurance is given that the Church shall in all ages have a heart or kernel firm as a rock; an invisible congregation of sealed ones, against whom every power of temptation, or every storm of the four winds, must break. Our eyes are not permitted to behold this kernel, this choicest and innermost part; for this reason, among others,—because many apparent forms of Christian heroism are delusive and fall (the young men fall and the youths faint, etc.), whilst insignificant and humble characters, or such as are disguised in worldly forms, step into the breach at decisive moments. Furthermore, we do not readily recognize and honor God's heroes in a strange attire, as, for instance, when they appear in the Middle Ages in monkish garb, or, in the eighteenth century, in the garment of critical humanism. Enough, the Rock is ever there, and though the gates of the abyss lift themselves up against it, they shall be confounded; and that Rock is Christ in His elect. The fact that these chosen ones are numbered, like the Einherjar [heroes] of Odin in the Northern mythology, points to the conclusion that the reference is not to all pious souls, indiscriminately, or in a body, but to those only who constitute the support of the Church, as is evident also from the description of the 144,000 in ch. xiv., and from the second scene of our vision, the picture of the Church Triumphant.

It is tacitly assumed that the four winds have been loosed subsequently to the sealing. Their effect, however, is not described until we come to the seven Trumpets, and then the figures are changed. Yet it is declared of the triumphant throng: these are they that come ([or, the coming ones] οἱ ἐρχόμενοι) out of the great tribulation (ver. 14). The throng is not secluded in Heaven, but is constantly receiving new additions. We have here, therefore, no picture of the Church Triumphant in its perfection; we see it in the period of its growth, during the entire course of New Testament times. Hence, too, this Church Triumphant presents the most diverse contrasts to the sealed on earth. It is a multitude so great that none can number it; because, in the first place, it increases every instant by the arrival of those who have died in the Lord; and, further, because not only the sealed heroes of God, but all the blessed make their appearance here. It is a multitude out of all the nations and tribes and peoples and tongues. That there are blessed Israelites in this throng, is a matter of course; and it is just as evident that the name Jews, in the picture of the Church Militant, is the symbolical title of honor of the heroes of the New Testament people of God. They who compose this multitude appear as the antitype of the sealed, i. e., the invincible on earth; they have overcome. They have left the storms of earth behind them; they stand before the Throne, to whose Occupant they owe their general redemption from the woes of earth; and before the Lamb, to Whom they owe their specific redemption. The white robes, with which they are clothed, are significant of their victory; the palms in their hands denote the eternal festival that has begun for them. Their maturity is evidenced in part from the fact of their ascribing their whole salvation to the grace of God, glorifying not simply the government of the Father, but also that of the Lamb; not simply the government of the Lamb, but also that of the Father, and praising the latter first. Their song is a unitous, mighty harmony, at which the Angels in the grand circle surrounding the Elders and the Living-forms, fall upon their faces and worship. The Amen which they utter, proclaims the union of the whole spirit-world with that redemption of which earth is the scene (Col. i. 20); and their present understanding of the great fact so long hid from their gaze (Eph. iii. 10; 1 Pet. i. 12) is expressed in their doxology. In accordance with their universal stand-point, they merge the praise of the Lamb in the general praise of God. It is evident from the praise which they render, that the world of spirits and the world of blessed humanity have become one congregation of God. The sevenfoldness of their ascription of praise has been referred, not without reason, to the antithesis of the seven Thunders; at all events, the whole New Testament Divine week, the entire accomplishment of the work of redemption is herein symbolized. In the first two dicta lies the general verdict, the praise of the spirits, corresponding with the glory of God. The two following dicta are declarative, on the one hand, of the wisdom of God; and, on the other, of the thanksgiving of the spirits. In the following two, mention is made of the honor, the honorableness, which God has given to His people, and with it is extolled the power or majesty to which they owe this honor. That, however, which has finally snatched the redeemed out of all tribulation, is the eschatological mighty ruling of God. And for this He is worshipped, in accordance with all these terms, into the æons of the æons; all the ground-tones of the world's history, and of the history of salvation form themselves into this eternal hymn, resounding henceforth without end throughout the æons.

The conversation next ensuing between one of the Elders and the Seer himself, reviews the spiritual career through which the blessed ones of Heaven passed on earth. The Elder seems to answer the question contained in the astonishment of the Seer by first questioning him as to whether he knows who the white-robed ones are and whence they come. Though the Seer himself cannot be uncertain in regard to the general facts of the case, he desires a heavenly assurance as to the earthly extraction of the blessed. He therefore replies: Thou knowest. The response of the Elder embraces both questions: Who are they? and whence come they? For they are sufficiently characterized by the statement that they came out of the great tribulation of all earthly trials and temptations; that they have escaped from it; and that, with a full sense of the inherent natural impurity of their garments,—which are significant of their form of life—they have washed them—washed them and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. We cannot conceive of blood as making garments white, but in the conception of salvation, the Atonement in Christ makes them white as snow. Here, then, righteousness of faith and righteousness of life are evidently united. In accordance with this is their exaltation (did roiro; comp. Phil. ii. 9). They are before the Throne of God, happy in the contemplation of His governance. They serve Him day and night in His Temple. This is the eternal, real Divine service of the priestly race; they have become absolutely devoid of will, and strong in will in their God. The glory of God is extended permanently over them, just as, in a typical manner, it was, outspread over the Ark of the Covenant in the Holy of Holies. All their longings, all their needs are satisfied; their hunger and their thirst are forever appeased; i. e., they are in the enjoyment of all heavenly blessings, whilst they are free from every annoyance from the earthly sun and every heat of the day. They are thus complete negatively and positively. They have reached the highest point of that experience which falls to the lot of God's people even on the earth, according to Ps. xxiii. The Lamb in the midst before the Throne is their Shepherd, Who feeds them and leads them to the water-springs of life. And, again, together with their positive felicity, their negative blessedness is expressed in a few glorious and comforting words: God Himself (their Leader through the vale of tears) shall wipe away every tear from their eyes. The highest heavenly consolation for every sad experience is theirs, in the warmest human form, as if consoling love were for them transformed into pure maternal tenderness. Every tear! Every tear of every sort! God shall wipe it away as a mother does with her child. The blessed, then, may come into the heavenly world with a tear in their eyes, a child-like question as to the way that God has led them.

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

[ELLIOTT says, concerning the two visions of this chapter, that they "together constitute the second part of the sixth Seal" (see p. 168). The period he places between the destruction of the political power of heathenism and the year 395. This period he sets forth as satisfying the symbols, in that it was one in which—1. "The threatening tempest of barbarians, which so soon subverted the Roman greatness, being just during the Constantinian era 'repelled or suspended on the frontiers'" (quoting Gibbon iii. 97); 2. "The great mass of the professedly Christianized population of the Roman world" were "Christians in profession only;" 3. Through the instrumentality of faithful ministers, Jesus gathered an elect portion for Himself from the corrupt mass. The first vision (vers. 1-8) he regards as "figurative not of events cognizable in real life by mortal eyes, . . . but of certain invisible and spiritual actings by Jesus Christ, whereby to constitute and mark out for Himself an election of grace;" the second (vers. 9-17) as indicating that the view of Christ's true Church . . . embraced the far future, . . . as well as the present; the perpetuation of this true Church in its integrity . . . ; and, in fine, the realization by the whole collective body of its many successive generations, and by each and all of its individual members, of the blessedness of accomplished salvation and the glory of the beatific vision."

BARNES agrees with Elliott, substantially, as to the period of the first vision, carrying it on, however, to the sack of Rome, A. D. 410. By the sealing he understands the affixing "some mark, sign or token" (1) "by which they who were the people of God would be known;" (2) "that would be conspicuous or prominent, as if it were impressed on the forehead;" (3) "appointed by God Himself;" (4) that "would be a pledge of safety." What this sealing is, he does not directly state. His language is such as to induce the belief, that he regarded it as, possibly, two-fold: (1) Christian profession, in view of which multitudes were saved in the destruction of Rome by Alaric, and (2) the "influence" "of the doctrines of grace" selecting and designating those who were "the 'true servants of God' among the multitudes who professed to be His followers." The process of sealing he regards "as continued throughout the long night of Papal darkness." The second vision (vers. 9-17) he regards as "an episode having no immediate connexion with what precedes or with what follows." "The scene is transferred to Heaven, and there is a vision of all the redeemed—not only of the 144,000, but of all who would be rescued and saved from a lost world."

STUART regards ch. vii. as an episode indicating the care of God for His people, and their safety in the time of destruction.

WORDSWORTH treats of the whole chapter as an episode, without directly declaring that it is so. He regards the first vision as relating to "the 'blessed company of all faithful people' gathered together from all parts of the world and constituting the Church universal, redeemed by Christ's blood, and sealed by His Spirit," etc.; the second vision he regards as relating to the same Church glorified and triumphant.

AFORD directly declares that the whole chapter is an episode; the first vision representing "the sealing of the elect on earth;" the second, "the great final assemblage of the saints in Heaven." Concerning the first vision, he declares that it "stands in closest analogy with Matt. xxiv. 31. . . . The judgment of the great day is in fact going on in the background." Concerning the nature of the sealing, he expresses no opinion; as to its intent, he argues that (1) "it was to exempt those sealed from the judgments which were to come on the unbelieving," and (2) "it appropriates to God those upon whom it has passed."

LORD connects the visions with the sixth Seal. Under his comments on this Seal, he writes: "Betwixt that fall (of Bonaparte in 1815) and the final subversion of the governments of the earth, denoted by the passing away of the heavens, a period intervenes during which the sealing symbolized by the next vision is to take place." In this vision (ch. vii. 1-8), he regards the "winds" as indicating "multitudes and nations roused to passion, and uniting in a violent demolition of political and social institutions;" the symbol of the sealing as denoting "that the servants of God, ere the whirlwind of ruin begins, are to be led to assume a new attitude towards the apostate Church, and usurping civil rulers, by which, and in a manner never before seen, they are to be shown to be indubitably His true people. . . . The sealed and the witnesses (ch. xi. 13) are undoubtedly the same." The scene of the second vision he declares to be the Divine presence. "The innumerable multitude stand before the throne of God and the Lamb, and are undoubtedly the redeemed raised from the dead, publicly accepted and exalted to the station of heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ in His Kingdom" (the resurrection here referred to is the first—that of "the holy dead").—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

To regard ch. vii. as an episode, with Eielhorn and others, and even Düsterdieck, is almost as incorrect as to assume, in accordance with Vitringa, that it constitutes the second and third parts of the sixth Seal; according to this view, the true contents of the sixth Seal, as described in ch. vi., would form but the third of it.

The discussions relative to the purpose of the sealing show the obscurity that has crept over the idea of sealing—an idea so familiar to the New Testament, and introduced even by the Old Testament. Düsterdieck justly combats the view of many exeges (especially à Lapide, Ebrard), according to which the sealing here denotes an insurance against threatening penal judgments. The New Testament sealing secures against that temptation to apostasy which is enveloped in the penal judgments, and thus conditionally, we admit, annuls the penal judgments so far as the sealed are concerned, although they pass through them. And hence the signs, σημεία, Ex. xii. and Ezek. ix., have a typical relation to this passage; a fact which Düsterdieck denies, notwithstanding his correct apprehension of the idea of sealing (p. 280).

[Is not the sealing the impressing upon believers the name, i. e., the image of God the Father and the Son (comp. ch. xiv. 1), or, in other words, is it not their sanctification? This interpretation well agrees with all the instances in the New Testament, in which it is said that believers are sealed (see 2 Cor. i. 22; Eph. i. 13; iv. 30). Barnes writes: "It would be something that would be conspicuous or prominent, as if it were impressed upon the forehead. It would not be merely some internal sealing, or some designation by which they would be known to themselves and to God, but it would be something apparent, as if engraved on the forehead." Sanctification, although internal as to its origin, becomes apparent in the whole carriage of the man; it shines forth from him. No figure of it, as apparent, could be more striking than that of a seal placed upon the forehead—the noblest and most prominent portion of the physical man.

[The intent of sealing is, first, to make manifest the fact of ownership, and, secondly, to secure. Both these ends are effected by the sealing, as interpreted above; and furthermore, it may be remarked, the safety of that portion of the sealed who may remain on earth during the period of the great tribulation is insured, whether we regard that tribulation as resulting from special judgments, inflicted by personal ministers of God, or from the influx of fearful temptations. In the former case, it is secured, as was that of the Israelites in the last great judgment inflicted upon the Egyptians, by the sprinkled blood of the paschal lamb; in the latter, by the spiritual strength inwrought by the Spirit of sanctification.—E. R. C.]

With the manifold misapprehension of the sealing, a non-appreciation of the universal import of this section is connected. Hence have arisen false specializations, as e. g.: the flight of the Christians to Pella (Grot. and others). All the Jews down to the final judgment (Heinrich). All the servants of God at the end of the days (De Wette). Hengstenberg, however, interprets the passage more correctly than would appear from Düsterdieck's notice of his views (p. 277). He writes as follows: "The sealing, as a symbolical act, is enclosed in a particular epoch of time; it takes place, once for all, before the commencement of the plagues with which the godless world is judged. The root idea, however, is this; that God protects His own in the midst of all the judgments that sweep over the godless world.—The sealing has reference to the entire duration of the Christian Church, until its final consummation; to the entire duration of the world, to its final destruction (?). It has, therefore, not yet lost its significance."

The relation of the second part of the chapter (from ver. 9 to the close) to the first part has been defined in harmony with the individualization of the section. The innumerable multitude of Christians, ver. 9, has reference to the Christians in Syria, according to Grotius. It forms a portion of the 144,000; a portion that have perished despite the sealing, according to Heinrich. It is also declared to be identical with the 144,000. Düsterdieck makes an ingenious attempt to answer the question why only believing Jews (as he supposes) are represented as sealed. If, however, it were really true that sealed Jewish Christians were alone intended here, the charge of Volkmar and others, that the Book is Judaistic, would not be so easily set aside. Ebrard affirms, that Israel alone is spoken of here, "not because the Gentile Christians then existing together with it are excluded from this congregation of Israel, but because they must be conceived of as adopted into it." This reminds us of a generally diffused school-idea, according to which Israel is, at the end, yet to obtain legal prerogatives; though it was to its pretension to such prerogatives that its apostasy was owing. The simple antithesis of the elect, as the kernel of the Church in this world, and the innumerable blessed, as the constituents of the continually increasing Church in the other world, is entirely overlooked. Even Düsterdieck limits the 144,000 to Jews. A special reason for this is the fact, that the Twelve Tribes are mentioned by name. As if the very Tribes had not a typical or symbolical meaning! Let the full consequence of Israel's symbolical import be gathered from the Prophets, Evangelists, and Apostolic writings, and Düsterdieck's arguments in favor of Bengel's view—viz., that in vers. 1-8 only Israelitish believers are intended, whilst ver. 9 has reference to blessed spirits from all nations, from the Gentiles and the Jews—will excite nothing but astonishment. On special distinctions see Düsterdieck, p. 280.

Ver. 1. Four angels.—These are neither four world-kingsdoms (Bede), nor ostensible Angels of Nature (De Wette), nor bad Angels (Calov.), nor distinct personal Angels, but symbolical angelic forms, like the Cherubs at the entrance of Paradise; denoting here all God's providential arrangements in regard to the forth-breaking of the spirit or winds of temptation.* "In the Angels who restrain and loose the winds, the idea that the salvation of the elect and the perdition of the wicked (?) come from God alone has, as it were, assumed flesh and blood. Comp. the similar symbolical representation in ch. ix. 14, 15" (Hengstenberg). The commentator just quoted also shows that the winds in Scripture are symbols of Divine judgments (p. 177); and it is thus that he apprehends them here. In the New Testament, however, they are also symbols of opinions, of false doctrines, Eph. iv. 14 (comp. Hos. viii. 7), and this meaning is by far the more probable one here.† Ebrard truly remarks, that the conception of the four corners of the earth does not necessitate the idea that the earth is a four-cornered plane. The four corners characterize the whole earth-world in respect of its spiritually dark side, the heathen earth. The Seer is already accustomed, like the Christian Church at a later period, to conjoin the idea of heathenism (Paganism) with the idea of a coming from the uttermost corners of the earth. And in this Ezekiel preceded him with his prophecy concerning Gog and Magog—a prophecy which John himself takes up (ch. xx.). According to Hengstenberg, the four winds denote, "that the storms of Divine judgments are to burst upon the earth from all sides." Düsterdieck maintains that the winds are to be taken simply as actual storm-winds, just as in ch. vi. 12 a real earthquake should be understood. Misunderstanding is driven to its utmost stretch when it is proposed to take the figures of an allegorical book literally, and when, on the other hand, the law-abiding explanation of these allegorical figures is denominated allegorical interpretation. With equal justice might it be said, that the sower of Matt. xiii. is a real sower, and that the spiritual interpretation of him is allegorical exposition. However abortive most of the interpretations of such allegorical figures may be, they are so only because they have not sufficiently regarded the key which is offered by the poetical and prophetic-symbolical style of expression. Our remark applies, for instance, to Bengel's explanation of the earth as Asia; the sea as Europe; the trees as Africa. Yet other interpretations see in Düsterdieck. Hengstenberg quite rightly understands the sea as denoting the sea of nations. Here, however, the sea should be apprehended in the better sense of the term, as symbolizing Christian national life, because it is possible for it to be injured; it cannot thus be understood, however, in cases where the harm proceeds from it, as Dan. vii. 2 and Rev. xiii. Hengstenberg thinks that the trees denote kings or magnates; trees and grass, the lofty and the lowly. We prefer, in this passage, to apprehend the trees in accordance with Psalm i., the grass in accordance with Psalm xxiii., since it is not neutral things that are spoken of as being injured, but positively good things.

[May there not be here a double symbolization—the storm directly significant of a convulsion that is to shake the real earth and sea, and that symbolic of convulsion in the whole fabric of human society? Our Lord connects together storms in the physical and social worlds as preceding His Coming (Luke xxi. 25-28), and the whole imagery of the Apocalypse leads to the idea that such storms will be connected in reality.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 2. And I saw another angel.—Vitringa, with perfect justice, regarded this other Angel as significant of the Holy Ghost. Düsterdieck considers it too great a digression from the text to regard him even as an Archangel (Stern), or as Christ (Calov., Hengstenb.). The term certainly is ἄγγελος, and not Holy Ghost; but outside of Apocalyptic symbolism, it is the Holy Ghost Who seals. [The Holy Ghost, doubtless, is the efficient sealer; but may not the Angel be a symbol of the instrumentalities by which He seals?—E. R. C.] This Angel undoubtedly says in ver. 8, the servants of our God; but he must, necessarily, speak as an Angel and he also includes with himself, as Hengstenberg correctly reminds us, the four Angels first spoken of. [The inclusion is possible, but not necessary.—E. R. C.]

Ascending from the sun-rising.—Even this, we are told, contains nothing but the "significant" intimation, "that the Angel who comes on an errand of blessing, with the guarantee of life eternal" (Angels, then, are possessed of such power!), "rises from the side whence light and life are brought by the earthly sun." Düsterdieck, with reference to Hengstenberg (?), Ebrard, Volkmar and others. The words, then, contain a modern poetical figure, and nothing more, though Scripture speaks of the rising of the Sun of righteousness (Mal. iv. 2; comp. Luke i. 78; Hengstenberg, p. 382 sqq.). Düsterdieck rejects a number of interpretations similar to his own (p. 284).

* [Lard regards the Angels as (Classical) Symbols of "the authors and propagators of those (disorganizing) opinions; the fomentors and directors of the violence to which they excite." There is nothing in this opinion inconsistent with the fact that they are under the direction of God, since the wicked are His hand, and He restrains the remainder of wrath (comp. Ps. xvii. 14; lxxvi. 10).

† [Aronson remarks: "This (that they are simply Angels) is all that is declared to us in the text, and it is idle to inquire beyond it. All allegorizing and all individualising interpretations are out of the question."—E. R. C.]

† [See preceding foot-note.—E. R. C.]

A seal of the Living God.—This term does not denote merely that the “seal belongs to the living God,” it means, rather, that it secures a life corresponding to the living God—the new life of believers. Hence God is termed the living God. According to De Wette, the expression means that God is the true God, and hence that His seal is the valid one. According to Hengstenberg, Düsterdieck and others, the meaning is, that God, as the Living One, is also the bestower of life. Our passage treats of the insurance of a life already given, as is always the case when sealing is spoken of. Together with the idea of insuring, the idea of property is included. These two conceptions really cannot be separated; he who seals anything, secures it to himself. Without this reference of insurance to ownership—of which Hengstenberg can find no certain example in Scripture—sealing, as such, would have merely the import of a mechanical fastening. But even a lock is not purely and simply a mechanical impediment.

“According to the hypothesis of several exegetes, the seal bore the name of Jehovah. Such commentators refer to ch. xiv. 1, where the elect are described as having the Name of God written on their foreheads, etc. It is to be observed, that Ezekiel (ch. ix. 4) merely speaks of a mark, without further qualification. This fact alone should prevent us from going beyond what is expressly stated in the text” (HENGSTENBERG). Others have conjectured that the seal bore the sign of the cross. Düsterdieck, on the other hand, concludes, from the omission of the definite article, that we are at liberty to suppose that God has different seals for different purposes. The Apostle Paul, however, seems to know of but one purpose in the sealing of the servants of God.*

And he cried with a great voice.—This, according to Hengstenberg, denotes the decidedness of the command. Other interpretations see in Düsterdieck, p. 286. We understand by it the mighty counter-working of apostolic Christianity against the incipient breaking loose of spiritual heathenism upon the Church.

To whom it was given.—We find no perfect in ἐδόθη; for it is not until the sealing that such power is given them. Previous to the sealing, the four Angels were just as much designed for the restraining of the winds as they afterwards were for the loosing of them, for they were the angelic purpose and the angelic measure of the winds themselves (Ps. civ. 4).

To injure the earth.—Ἀδικεῖν is to be apprehended in the more general sense of doing harm to.† A strange perversion of the sense is shown in the interpretations of Bengel, Herder and Rinck, according to whom the holding of the winds should be regarded as an injury, because they have a cooling or a dispersing effect. The ἔχειν in ver. 3, irrespective of anything else, decides in regard to the meaning. It even precludes the assumption that harm would result only in case the winds were loosed too soon. After the sealing, the injuring really ensues; though the loosing of the storms is not literally narrated, it is actually accomplished with the sounding of the seven Trumpets.

Till we have sealed.—The general apprehension of the plural as indicating that the Angel has assistants who are not mentioned, may have another direction given to it in the assumption, that the four Angels themselves are the assistants of the Angel who issues the command. This view is justly upheld by Hengstenberg, though Düsterdieck opposes it. For the repression and limitation, as well as the co-operation of temptation, of trial, of tribulation from without, are alike necessary in order that man may inwardly attain to his sealing. As, however, a certain degree of temptation is the condition of sealing, so there are also degrees of temptation which would be irresistible, were it not for the previous sealing. And this is the idea presented here. Hence the four Angels must first take a negative part in the sealing by holding the four winds in check for a time. Calovius' application of the plural to the Trinity, see noticed by Düsterdieck.

The servants of our God.—In the Old Testament all the pious are, in a general sense, servants of God, in accordance with His Torah [law]. In a special sense, however, the people of Israel, or pious Israelites, are His servants, being organs of God, designed for the diffusion of His light, His law and His salvation over the whole earth (Is. xlii. 1). In the most special sense, therefore, the Messiah is His Servant (Is. liii.). On account of the contrast of sonship and the slavish servitude of legalists (Rom. vi.), the term servant occupies a less conspicuous place in the New Testament. The διάκονος of God is a servant who is familiar with His Master's purpose, and serves voluntarily. The high and honorable name of δοῦλος, however, gradually and significantly re-appears, and the δοῦλος of Christ is also the δοῦλος of God (Tit. i. 1; Rev. i. 1). The true servants of God are those in whom Israel's destiny is fulfilled; those who, in and with Christ, represent, as the kernel of the Church, God's light and law on the earth.* And these, some exegetes would opinion from the fact, that “it was given” to them to injure, since it is the prerogative of God to use even the evil as His instrument; that which is a wrong from them, is no wrong from Him who permits, uses and restrains them (comp. Acts ii. 23).—E. R. C.]

* [The Apostle Paul, when he wrote of sealing, was writing, not as a prophet, but of a matter then existent. The fact that but one kind of sealing (or a sealing having but one purpose) then existed, or may exist throughout the greater portion of the Christian era, does not exclude the possibility that in “the last days” another kind may be employed.—E. R. C.]

† [The use of ἀδικεῖν, the proper meaning of which before an accusative is to do wrong to (comp. Matt. xx. 13; Acts vii. 26, 27, etc.), favors the idea of Lord, that the four Angels are symbolic of evil men, or, at least, the idea that they signify evil agencies. No valid objection can be urged against this fain persuade us, are Jewish Christians exclusively! "De Wette," says Ebrard, "wrongly refers to ch. xiv. 1 in proof of the incorrectness of the view which makes the sealed ones of ch. vii. Jewish Christians. In his opinion the 144,000 sealed ones of ch. vii. re appear in ch. xiv., being generally designated in ver. 3 as redeemed from the earth.—We shall see, in due time, that the 144,000 introduced in the latter chapter have nothing whatever to do with those of ch. vii."* And yet in each case the number and qualification [the mark on the forehead] are the same! The identity of individuals is, of course, not the material point: what we contend for is the identity of the idea: viz. of the 144,000 as the stand-holders of the people of God, the pillars of the Temple.

* [Therefore no less than six words in the Greek Testament which in the German Version are rendered Knecht, and in the English (with one additional) servant. The word generally and correctly so rendered is δοῦλος, the ordinary LXX. rendering of עַבְד. It cannot with propriety be said, that it occupies a less conspicuous place in the New Testament than its equivalent in the Old. In the Gospels, in direct address to the disciples and in descriptive parables, our Lord used it more than fifty times; it is applied twenty-five times to Christians in other portions of the New Testament. It is a term generally employed by the Apostles in the introductions to their Epistles as descriptive of their own

On their foreheads.—Düsterdieck: "The mark received by the servants of the Beast is—like the mark of slaves in ordinary life—impressed upon the right hand or the forehead (ch. xiii. 16; xiv. 9; xx. 4); the servants of God bear the seal and the name of their Lord on their foreheads alone. The fact that this is the most conspicuous place (Aret., Bengel, Stern and others) is a sufficient reason only in the case of the servants of the Beast; with the servants of God, the material point is, rather, that the noblest part of the body should bear the sacred mark." Again, there is no recourse to the Scriptural bases of the idea. Why does Aaron bear the name of Jehovah upon his frontlet (Ex. xxxix. 30; xxviii. 36), and upon his breast-plate the name of the children of Israel? The breast encloses the secret of faith; but the forehead manifests the confession, the stand-point, the symbol, the colors and standard (Rom. x. 10). When it is said of the house of Israel: It hath hard foreheads and obdurate hearts ([they are stiff of forehead and hard of heart] Ezek. iiii. 7), not only is the like substance of unbelief expressed, but also an antithesis of form. The expression: Thy forehead against their forehead, is precisely a case in point. The symbolical sense of the words is unmistakable (see Ez. iii. 8, 9).

Vers. 4-8. As the loosing of the storms is not described further on, neither is the very act of sealing now depicted. John heard the number of the sealed. Why "probably from the other Angel" (De Wette, Ebrard)? The visional hearing is the finest sensorium for the most secret and profound revelation (see 2 Cor. xii. 4). And there are here but three general points: Israel; the number, 144,000; each Tribe furnishing a twelfth of this number. On the number itself, see the Introduction, p. 16. The equality of the number 12,000 for each Tribe is, according to Düsterdieck, expressive of the idea that all have an equal share in the Divine gift of grace—none, however, of right. But if the Twelve Tribes, like the Twelve Apostles, be significant, as an organic totality, of the manifoldness of the different gifts of grace, the meaning of this equality will be, that the round sum and plenitude of every species of churchly gifts of grace is assured to the eternal Kingdom of God.

The enumeration of Levi amongst the Twelve Tribes has been pertinently explained by Bengel as follows: "The Levitic ceremonies being done away with, Levi is again placed on an equal footing with his brethren." Now if, Levi being included, Manasseh and Ephraim—the latter under the name of Joseph—retain their places in the catalogue, the result must be thirteen Tribes. In order to avoid this, the vision omits the Tribe of Dan.

On violences against the text, see Düsterdieck, p. 289. As also on the play upon the name of Manasseh; the ancient conjecture, that Antichrist is to come out of Dan (with reference to the figure of the serpent, Gen. xlix. 17!); the reference to the idolatry of the Danites; also the reference to the Jewish tradition, representing the Tribe as being extinct, with the exception of a single family. Düsterdieck himself thinks that the omission of Dan is to be explained on the ground of the Tribe's having become extinct. We refer to the general view of the chapter presented above.* The Tribe of Simeon was also in danger of being left out on account of its partial emigration and its partial fusion with Judah (see 1 Chron. iv.; comp., with reference to Simeon, Deut. xxiii. According to Düsterdieck, Issachar, too, is here left out).

On the promiscuous order of the sons of the different wives, and its design, as expressive of the co-ordination of all believers, see Hengst., p. 398 sqq.

For a table of the different occasions when the Twelve Tribes are mentioned, see Ebrard, relation to Christ; see Rom. i. 1; Phil. i. 1; Titus i. 1; Jas. i. 1; 2 Pet. i. 1; Rev. i. 1. With still less propriety can it be affirmed, that there was any relinquishment of the term because of "the contrast of sonship and the slavish servitude of legalists." In the very chapter to which our Author refers as presenting that contrast (Rom. vi.) δουλος is employed as a generic term applicable to both the righteous and the wicked (ver. 16), and the verb δουλεύω is twice applied to Christians (vers. 18, 22); and in the beginning of that very Epistle Paul styled himself a δουλος.

[In the primitive sense of the term, all creatures are the δουλος of God; as applicable to Christ and Christians, it carries with it the idea of voluntary subjection to Him as Master, Owner (comp. Eph. vi. 18). Ordinarily, this subjection implies ministration (in the ordinary sense of that word), because God commands His δουλος (having the opportunity) to minister. It is not implied, however, in the use of the term δουλος, nor is it always implied in fact: God sometimes calls His δουλος to serve by patient acquiescence in circumstances which forbid them to minister—"they also serve who only stand and wait." The position of Lange is based upon the altogether unauthorized (occasional) translation of δουλος by the German Knecht (=the English servant). Not only are these words radically distinct as to meaning, but in the New Testament one is never used as exegetical of the other, and, still further, never are Christians, as such, styled the δουλος of Christ. The only instance which can be, even apparently, adduced as negating the last assertion is John xii. 26; but even there, manifestly, the idea present to the mind of our Lord was personal ministration. For a full discussion of the terms δουλος and δουλεύω see Cremer's Biblico-Theological Lexicon of N. T. Greek (translated from the German); Edinburgh (T. & T. Clark), 1872—a most valuable work.—E. R. C.]

* [For a counter statement see Additional Note, p. 193.—E. R. C.]

* ["He must have had an important special reason for leaving out the Tribe of Dan; and this could only be a theological one. We find the key in such passages as ch. xiv. 4, where it is said of the 144,000: 'These are they who have not defiled themselves with women (i. e., sins [or rather idolatry—spiritual adultery]), for they are virgins,' ch. xxi. 27; ch. xxii. 14. Almost the only remarkable fact which is to be found in the history of the Danites is, that after having got possession of the land, they introduced into their territory a false worship (Judges xvii.), which continued through centuries." HENGSTENBERG.—E. R. C.]

p. 266 (Gen. xxix. 30; Gen. xlix.; Num. i.; Num. ii.; Deut. xxvii.; Deut. xxxiii.; Ezek. xlviii.)

On an error in the Cod. Sin. see Düsterdieck, p. 290. [Gād and Simeon are omitted; Joseph and Benjamin, transposed.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 9. As a matter of course,—De Wette to the contrary, notwithstanding—the section which now follows forms, in connection with the preceding section, one general picture.*

[“The vision seems to be transferred from earth to Heaven; for the multitudes which he saw appeared BEFORE THE THRONE, i. e., before the Throne of God in Heaven. The design seems to be to carry the mind forward quite beyond the storms and tempests of earth—the days of error, darkness, declension and persecution—to that period when the (entire) Church should be triumphant in Heaven.” BARNES.—E. R. C.]

A great multitude.—The elect in this world are numbered; the blessed in the other world are innumerable. This one antithesis makes a rent both in the Calvinistic doctrine of predestination and in the system of its antagonists, which fails to recognize the element of truth in the doctrine of election. It might be supposed, that the distinction consists in the fact that the 144,000 sealed ones are significant merely of the last Christian generation, whilst the blessed are congregated out of all generations. But even the sealed denote the whole sum of steadfast Christians out of the most diverse Christian ages.

An antithesis must have been formed in the Seer's perception by the fact, that he only heard on earth of a host whose ranks were closed, whose number was complete, whilst in Heaven he actually saw a whole train of constantly augmenting masses. The constituent element of the contrast can, however, lie only in the distinction between the chosen servants of God who have to withstand the storms of the kingdom of darkness on this earth, and the whole fullness of blessed souls, amongst whom there are also children, who have entered into bliss. In ch. xiv. this antithesis again makes its appearance; and that in stronger terms and as continuing in Heaven itself, without detriment to the blessedness of all.

According to Düsterdieck, the difference is contained in the circumstance, that the sealed are of Israel exclusively, whilst the great multitude are gathered out of all nations. According to Ebrard, the distinction consists in the fact, that the former are the Christians still on earth in the last time, being, therefore, pre-eminently Jewish Christians; whilst the latter are all the blessed in the other world, being, therefore, pre-eminently Gentile Christians. According to De Wette, the distinction consists in the fact, that the former are representative of an elect number, in antithesis to the rejected, whilst in the latter case there is no such antithesis.†

Standing before the Throne.—The nominative ἐστῶτες,‡ remarkable in connection with the accusative περιβεβημένους [see TEXT. AND GRAM.], seems, together with δῆλος, to be dependent upon ἰδοὺ, thus supporting the reading indicated; it may be explained, however, by the irregularity of the Apocalyptic style.

Standing before the Throne, and before the Lamb.—Contemplation of the two-fold and yet unitous source of their felicity, in God's providence and Christ's suffering; this contemplation is at once the continuance and the perfection of their bliss.

[“Of all nations.—Not only of the Jews; not only of the nations which in the time of the sealing vision had embraced the Gospel, but of all the nations of the earth. And kindreds—φυλῶν.—This word properly refers to those who are descended from a common ancestry, and here denotes a race, lineage, kindred. . . And peoples—λαῶν.—This word refers properly to a people or community as a mass, without reference to its origin or any of its divisions. And tongues—linguages.—This word would refer also to the inhabitants of the earth with respect to the fact, that they speak different languages . . . not as divided into nations; not with reference to their lineage or clanship; and not as a mere mass without reference to any distinction, but as divided by speech. The meaning of the whole is, that persons from all parts of the earth, as contemplated in these points of view, would be among the redeemed.” BARNES.—E. R. C.]

The white robes are the attire of victory. [“The emblems of innocence or righteousness, uniformly represented as the raiment of the inhabitants of Heaven.” BARNES. Comp. ch. iii. 4; vi. 11; and especially ver. 14, where the symbol is explained.—E. R. C.] The palms are signs of peace and festivity. From these the inference has been drawn that a heavenly Feast of Tabernacles or harvest is indicated (Züllig, Hengstenberg, p. 403, with reference to Zech. xiv. 16). “The palms, as a symbol of victory, attribute an activity to the redeemed which is not pertinent here, where everything subserves to the praise of God's transcendent redeeming grace” (Hengstenberg). As if any principal contradiction were involved therein! It cannot be disputed, however, that the Israelitish Feast of Tabernacles might form the point of departure for the present figurative representation. [The palm was the symbol of victory amongst the Greeks, but not amongst the Hebrews. With the latter (in the Feast of Tabernacles) it was the memento of trials from which they had been delivered—it was the symbol of salvation (comp. Lev. xxiii. 39-44.). The remarks of Trench on ch. ii. 17 (the last quoted), p. 85, are applicable here.—E. R. C.]

Vers. 10-12. With a great voice.—Now follows the doxology of the Church Triumphant, rejoicing in its deliverance from the great tribulation of the Church Militant. The mighty voice is the expression of the great, common, unitous feeling of all the redeemed at their complete redemption. Σωτηρία denotes the whole redemptive salvation, as principal and final σωτηρία [deliverance from sin (comp. Matt. i. 21) and voc.—E. R. C.]. “Grotius erroneously interprets ἡ σωτηρία metonymically (=gratias ob acceptam salutem). The thanksgiving consists rather in the fact, that the σσωμένοι ascribe the σωτηρία given them to their God as the σωτήρ" (Düsterdieck). This, then, is, after all, equivalent to converting the σωτηρία into a thank-offering.* The Apocalyptic doxologies have in all cases a similar profound meaning. They give back to God in thanks and praise that which He has first bestowed.

* [Why “as a matter of course,” when separated from the preceding section by the strong disjunctive phrase, μετὰ ταῦτα ἰδοὺ? See on ch. iv. 1 (and foot-note), p. 150; also Additional Note, p. 195.—E. R. C.]

† [See Additional Note, p. 195.—E. R. C.]

‡ [See Additional Note, p. 195.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 11. And all the Angels.—Here personal Angels are spoken of. Whilst the symbolical Angels are restraining the storms on earth, it is said of this heavenly choir: all the Angels.

Were standing.—The celebration of the fact of redemption summons them all around the Throne. They first ratify the song of praise raised by the throng of blessed human spirits, by their deep adoration and their Amen. Then they also give expression to their angelic stand-point in contemplating the redemption. We apprehend their doxology from the Christological point of view, so that three harmonious antitheses form a group of six, which, with a mighty finale, becomes a septenary. See the SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

Vers. 13-17. The ensuing explanation of the foregoing vision reminds us of a similar scene which occurs in ch. xvii. 7. The conversation here, manifestly, serves to give additional distinctness and effectiveness to the hortatory and consolatory idea of the vision.

Ver. 13. And one of the Elders answered.—An Elder speaks; what he says is an answer according to Hebrew usage. No explicit question preceded his reply: it had, however, an interrogative cause, consisting, doubtless, in the question enwrapped in the astonishment of the Seer. An Elder, as a representative of redeemed humanity, is the fittest interpreter of the scene depicted.† "The dialogistic form, with its distinctness and liveliness, serves to mark the point in question" (Düsterdieck).

These who are arrayed in white robes, who are they? and whence came they?—He does not mention the token of the palms—a circumstance which demonstrates more clearly his desire to give prominence to the great marvel: so many men of a sinful race—countless men—in the garb of innocence. Yes, countless holy men! How is it possible? Here the question qui genus? unde domo? (see Düsterdieck) acquires quite a unique significance.

Ver. 14. Lord, thou knowest.—This mode of address—lord or sir—is, in its more general sense, a term of respect. Thou knowest, Ebrard: "I, indeed, know; but thou knowest far better." Düsterdieck and others: "I know not, but I should like thee to tell me."

Both, of course, are aware that these blessed ones are men, and that they come from earth. Even John knows great things concerning the redemption and its effect. But notwithstanding this, it continues to be a question with him, what the nature of this vision of innumerable sanctified human beings, clad in snow-white raiment, is. He is battling with sin, like Elijah of old, and though it is with a New Testament experience of salvation that he is waging this conflict, still the view of the Elder is on a higher plane than his own, just as the voice that told of the seven thousand faithful Israelites was exalted above the conception entertained by Elijah. The wealth of the heavenly fruits of the Gospel passes even the ethical conception of a John.

The train of the blessed is an endless festal line; they come and come. Hence the answer:

These are they that come [Lange:—These are the ones coming].—And the answer to the question, Whence come they? is at the same time a reply to the inquiry as to who they are. All who suffered, fought and conquered in the great tribulation through which every Christian, from the beginning of the ages of the Cross down to the end, has to pass. According to Düsterdieck, the great tribulation of the last days is alone intended. He also thinks that the comers are to be regarded as "on earth as yet."

Out of the great tribulation.—This expression has, doubtless, an eschatological bearing; not, however, in the sense which Düsterdieck attributes to it, citing Ebrard in support of his view, though the last-named commentator says: "The great tribulation can be only that general one, which had begun in John's time, and which is to continue until the ἐκδίκησις at Christ's return." On the other hand, Bengel's interpretation of the great tribulation, as significant of all the Adamic trouble and toil of Earth, is, undoubtedly, too general, or, rather, it is altogether wrong, since the tribulation begins only with the conflicts of faith. This is the first historical fundamental feature of the blessed: they have passed happily through this great tribulation. The historical conflict, however, is based upon the inward fact:

And they washed their robes, etc.—Quite characteristically Johannine is this more definite apprehension of the Atonement in the innermost centre of the expiation. Equally characteristic the Catholic mediæval idea, held by Bede and Lyra, of the purifying power of the blood of the martyrs; Ewald himself, in his earlier publication, espoused this view (see Düst., p. 295). "Hengstenberg's distinction of the washing from the making white, and his application of the former to the forgiveness of sins and of the latter to sanctification, is contrary to the nature of the figure. A washing whereby the garments have become white, is denoted" (Düsterdieck).

[NOTE ON THE GREAT TRIBULATION.—Daniel (xi. 1) prophesied of a "trouble" (Θλίψις) to occur in the last days in the following language: (LXX.) καὶ ἔσται καιρὸς θλίψεως, θλίψις οἷα οὐ γέγονεν ἀπ' οὗ γεγένηται ἔθνος ἐν τῇ γῇ, ἕως τοῦ καιροῦ ἐκείνου. He also declared "at that time thy people shall be delivered (σωθήσονται)."<sup>1</sup> The evident implication of the Prophet is that this θλίψις shall not be visited upon the people of God, but upon men of the world. Our Lord (manifestly referring to this prophecy, for He uses its very phraseology) speaks of the same

* [The ascription, according to the view of Düsterdieck, implies thanks; but is not thereby converted into a mere thank-offering. It implies thank, because it is an ascription of praise in view of benefits conferred.—E. B. C.]

† [See foot-note † on p. 152.—E. B. C.]

θλίψις, describing it as great. His language is (Matt. xxiv. 21): ἔσται γὰρ τότε θλίψις μεγάλη, οἷα οὐ γέγονεν ἀπ' ἀρχῆς κόσμου ἕως τοῦ νῦν, οὐδ' οὐ μὴ γένηται. This θλίψις immediately precedes the Coming of the Son of Man (ver. 80); and there can be no doubt that the period thereof is that of the vengeance predicted Luke xxi. 22, whose special woes the disciples were exhorted to labor to escape by faithfulness (ver. 86). In the Epistle to the Church of Philadelphia, the same tribulation, doubtless, was alluded to as "the hour of temptation (πειρασμός)," which should "try them that dwell upon the Earth" (worldlings), but from which the faithful should be "kept" (Rev. iii. 10). It seems hardly possible to avoid the conclusion, that when, in connexion with the Coming of the Lord, a tribulation was spoken of to John, which, in the very words of Jesus, is emphasized as "the tribulation, the great one" (ὁ ἐρχόμενος ἐκ τῆς θλίψεως τῆς μεγάλης), the Seer must have understood by it the very tribulation predicted by Jesus. Two objections, possibly, may be urged against this view, viz.: that (1) the redeemed are said to come out of (ἐκ) the tribulation; (2) this interpretation involves that the innumerable white-robed throng consists only of those who were on earth at the beginning of the tribulation. Concerning the former of these, it may be said, that the force of ἐκ is not necessarily that the delivered should have been actual participators in, or sufferers from, that from which they are delivered, see chs. ii. 11; iii. 10; xviii. 4; John x. 89; Acts xv. 29; 2 Cor. i. 10; Gal. ii. 13; 2 Tim. iv. 17; 2 Pet. ii. 9, etc. The second objection disappears on the supposition, that the winds, which are to bring on the great tribulation, have been threatening, but are withheld, throughout the entire preceding period, until the sealing and gathering of the elect; on this supposition, all the redeemed who have died throughout the preceding ages have gone up from that which is constantly threatening (see under ch. iii. 10, and also Additional Note, on p. 198).

[There can be little doubt that the prophecy of our Lord, Matt. xxii. 15-22; Luke xxi. 20-24, found its first or typical fulfillment in the destruction of Jerusalem; it should be remembered, however, that, previous to that destruction, "the Christians, remembering the Lord's admonition, forsook Jerusalem and fled to the town of Pella, . . . where King Herod Agrippa II. . . . opened to them a safe asylum" (Schnaff's Hist. Ap. Ch., p. 391). It may be asked, if the flood, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and the destruction of Jerusalem, are not types of the great tribulation, and if the deliverance of Noah, of Lot, and of the Church of Jerusalem, are not, at the same time, types of the deliverance of the Saints (comp. 2 Pet. ii. 5-9)?—E. R. C.]

Ver. 15 On this account are they before the throne.—[They are in Heaven; see the extract from Barnes, p. 185.—E. R. C.] Perfectly Johannine: 1 John iii. 2. And all this Grotius soberly refers to the Christians in Pella!

And serve Him day and night.—The heavenly life has itself become a priestly service of God, being, moreover, as a spiritual life, elevated above the change of day and night (ch. iv. 8; v. 8; xxii. 8). [The heavenly life is not one of mere enjoyment, but of continued, active service.—E. R. C.]

And He that sitteth on the throne shall spread his tabernacle over them [Lange: shall settle abidingly over them].—Σκηνώσει is difficult to translate. Hengstenberg's translation: to tabernacle, is objected to by Ebrard on philological grounds. The expression μετ' αὐτῶν, ch. xxi. 8, is different from the present term ἐν αὐτοῖς. In ch. xxi. 22 it is declared concerning the City of God: I saw no Temple in it: God Himself is its Temple. There is, then, a development of blessedness in the other world. Whatever interpretation we may give to the passages in question, it is a thought of unique grandeur, that the glory or Shekinah of God, once veiled by the pillar of cloud and fire, and, outside of distinct prophetic manifestations, regularly revealed only in a figurative form to the High Priest in the Holy of Holies (of the Tabernacle), is now, in a permanent and apparent glory, to sink down from the Throne upon the blessed and spread itself out over them. See Matt. v. 8; 1 Cor. xiii. 12; comp. Lev. xxvi. 11; Isa. iv. 5; Ezek. xxxvii. 27. ["It is exceedingly difficult to express the sense of these glorious words, in which the fulfillment of the O. T. promises, such as Levit. xxi. 11; Isa. iv. 5, 6; Ezek. xxxvii. 27, is announced. They give the fact of the dwelling of God among them, united with the fact of His protection being over them, and assuring to them the exemptions next to be mentioned." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 16. They shall not hunger any more.—Ps. xvii. 15.

Thirst.—Is. lv. 1; Ps. cvii. 9.

Hunger and thirst, and the satisfaction of both these needs, are, throughout the Scriptures, the fixed figures of spiritual circumstances. As the body is a fixed symbol of the soul, so the conditions of bodily existence and satisfaction are a fixed symbol of the corresponding spiritual conditions. [If the vision was of the post-resurrection condition of the Saints, there was more than the figure of spiritual supply in these words. The bodies raised from the dead shall experience no want or pain.—E. R. C.]

The sun.—Ps. cxxi. 6; Ps. xc. and other passages. The oriental sun, in its overpowering effects; a type, also, of overpowering reality in daily life.

Any burning heat, (καύμα).—Heat of the hot wind, of the burden of the day, of fever, etc.

For the Lamb.—Is. xlix. 10. "He that hath mercy on them." [Ihr Erbarmen, their Compassionator.] From Him that shows mercy, or that pities, comes the Spirit of mercy; He perfects His manifestation in the spirit of the Lamb, personal and complete meekness, and founds a congregation of infinitely deep and firm peace. On the expression: τὸ ἀνά μύσθον τοῦ θρόνου, comp. Dusterdieck, p. 297. The meaning is probably this: that Christ, by His invincible meekness, has risen to the centre of the Divine government. As the meek are to possess the kingdom of the earth, so the Meek

One par excellence has attained the sovereignty over Heaven and earth at the right hand of the Father and in His Name, Matthew xxviii. 18; Phil. ii.

Shall shepherdize them.—Pa. xlii.; John x. And God shall wipe away every tear from their eyes.—Is. xxv. 8; Rev. xxi. 4.

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE VISIONS OF CH. VII.]

By the American Editor.

[That chap. vii. is independent of what precedes (although, of course, related to it), is evident from the disjunctive phrase, μετὰ τοῦτο εἶδον, with which it commences (see footnote, p. 190); and that it consists of two independent visions, is also evident from the similar phrase with which the second vision is introduced, ver. 9. These visions are here introduced as proper to this stage of the complex narrative. They do not, properly speaking, constitute an Episode, because they enter as materially into the revelation of things future as do the events under the Seals. They are not placed under the Seals, because the matters set forth were not concealed from the heavenly hosts (the withholding of the tempest of wrath, the sealing, and the gathering of the redeemed in bliss), but had been in process of development for a long time, possibly from the days of Abraham or even those of Abel.*

The 144,000 of the first vision the writer identifies with those of ch. xiv.; in his judgment the number and the almost certain reference to the Seal upon the forehead in ch. xiv. 1, place this beyond a peradventure. But if this identification be correct, then the Sealed constitute a peculiar portion of the redeemed, eminent for faithfulness and nearness to Christ: "They are the first-fruits, the ἀπαρχή, unto God and to the Lamb" (ch. xiv. 3-5). This fact seems also to be indicated by the number, which is one of perfection, which may well indicate, not merely completeness as to number, but the peculiar excellence, both in character and condition, of the whole body. They are selected from the tribes, the denominations, of the nominal Israel, the visible Church of God (possibly the Jewish as well as the Christian—the latter being the legitimate successor of the former, Rom. xi. 17, 18). By the sealing the writer understands (probably) a peculiar Christ-likeness impressed upon the sealed by the sanctifying influences of the Holy Ghost (see p. 186). The period of the sealing he regards as extending throughout the whole Christian dispensation, and possibly back to the institution of the visible Church in Abraham, during the whole of which periods the winds of Divine wrath were restrained.*

The second vision contemplated, not (or not merely) the ἀπαρχή, but the whole body of the redeemed (probably exclusive of the ἀπαρχή). This innumerable company was composed of individuals of all ages—ante as well as post-diluvian; of all races: it included, probably, that innumerable host of infants (more than one half of the entire human family), and those others amongst the nations, who, influenced by the Spirit by modes unknown to us, have been renewed and saved by the blood of the Atonement.

The manifest points of difference between the two companies have already been alluded to; they may, however, be arranged as follows: the one was innumerable, from all nations, the whole body of the redeemed; the other was a (comparatively) small, definite number, from Israel (the Church), the first-fruits. It may be asked, if another point of difference is not suggested by the ἐσθρέες of ver. 9; there the general throng are represented as standing before the Throne, but the promise to the faithful of the Church is that they themselves shall be enthroned with Jesus (comp. chs. iii. 21; xx. 4).—E. R. C.]

* [The Seals symbolize the concealment from angelic and human view of certain (not all) events in future history. Probably, at the date of the Apocalypse, both Angels and men expected the immediate return of Christ to earth. The eschatological predictions of our Lord (Matt. xxiv., etc.) up to the point of His promised appearing seemed to have been fulfilled (and typically they had been fulfilled) in the destruction of Jerusalem. It is probable that neither Angels nor men dreamed that centuries, or even months, of false Christs, wars, famines, pestilences, persecutions, would intervene before the earthly establishment of the promised Kingdom; and hence the importance of the unloosing of the Seals. But however these things might be hidden, the sealing of believers and the gathering of departed Saints in Heaven were not concealed from any. These were events that for years (or centuries) had been going on, and their continuance until the resurrection (when-ever, or after whatsoever events, that might be) was revealed and secured by the open promise of God. In the visions of ch. xiv., the Seer had a view of what had been openly progressing under the view of Angels, and the fact of whose future progress had already been revealed.—E. R. C.]

* [If by the sealed the first-fruits are meant, they cannot be regarded as consisting merely of those who shall be on Earth just before the great tribulation. Not only is it repugnant to reason and sensibility to shut out from that glorious company the Apostles and Martyrs, but we are expressly taught, that the primitive Christians formed a portion of the ἀπαρχή (Jas. i. 18), and the Apostle Paul assures us, that those who are alive at the Coming of the Lord shall not take precedence of those who sleep (1 Thess. iv. 14-17). Nor does it seem proper to exclude from the company of the faithful the Father of the faithful and that noble host described in Heb. xi., of whom it is impliedly declared that, though without us they are not made perfect, with us they shall be perfected (Heb. xi. 40).—E. R. C.]

B.—EARTH-PICTURE OF THE SEVEN PENITENTIAL TRUMPETS, ISSUING FROM THE OPENING OF THE SEVENTH SEAL.

CHAP. VIII. 1—IX. 21.

1. Opening of the Seventh Seal.

CHAP. VIII. 1-6.

- 1 And when he had [om. had] opened the seventh seal, there was [ἐγένετο=supervened] silence in [ins. the] heaven about the space of [om. the space of] half an hour.
- 2 And I saw the seven angels which [who] stood [stand<sup>1</sup>] before God; and to them
- 3 were given seven trumpets. And another angel came and stood at [or before<sup>2</sup>] the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with [or add it to<sup>3</sup>] the prayers of all [ins. the] saints upon the
- 4 golden altar which was [is] before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, which came [om., which came] with [to or for<sup>4</sup>] the prayers of the saints, ascended
- 5 up [om. up] before God out of the angel's hand. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with [from the] fire of the altar, and cast it [om. it] into [upon] the earth: and there were [supervened] voices, and thunderings [thunders, and voices],
- 6 and lightnings, and an earthquake. And the seven angels which [who] had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to [om. to—ins. that they might] sound [trumpet].

2. First four Trumpets. Predominant human spiritual sufferings under the figure of sufferings in Nature.

VERS. 7-12.

- 7 The first angel [om. angel<sup>5</sup>] sounded [trumpeted], and there followed hail and fire mingled<sup>6</sup> with blood, and they were cast upon the earth: [ins. and the third part of the earth was burnt up,]<sup>7</sup> and the third part of trees was burnt up, and all green grass was burnt up.
- 8 And the second angel sounded [trumpeted], and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was cast into the sea: and the third part of the sea became blood;
- 9 And the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life [ψυχὰς] died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed.
- 10 And the third angel sounded [trumpeted], and there fell a great star from [ins. the] heaven, burning as it were [om. it were] a lamp, and it fell upon the third

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 2. [For the use of the perf. and plup. of ἵστημι as an intransitive present and imp., see Grammar and Lexicons generally.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 3. [ἔκει with the genitive; see TEXT. AND GRAM. on ch. vii. 15 (Note 12). Lange explains: "ἐκί—bending over; Afford translates: over—E. R. C.]

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 3. [This alternative translation of δίδωμι ταῖς προσευχαῖς is adopted from the margin of the E. V. For this, or an equivalent, sense of δίδωμι, see Robinson's Les. (d). For a full discussion of this phrase, see Dr. Lillie's Note.—E. R. C.]

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 4. [See Winer, § 31, 6. c.; Lillie explains: "'Incense belonging to, designed for,' the case here answering to by with the latter of two nouns in construction."—See also EXPL. IN DETAIL in loc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>5</sup> Ver. 7. [All the recent editors, with M. A. B<sup>o</sup>. P., etc., omit ἄγγελος.—E. R. C.]

<sup>6</sup> Ver. 7. [Tisch. (8th Ed.), with M. P., gives μεμιγμένον; Lach., Alf., Trog. (and Tisch., 1850), with A. B<sup>o</sup>., μεμυγμένον.—E. R. C.]

<sup>7</sup> Ver. 7. Καὶ τὸ τρίτον τῆς γῆς κατέβη, omitted by the Rec. in acc. with minuscules. [Given by M. A. B<sup>o</sup>. P., etc.—E. R. C.]

- 11 part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of [ins. the<sup>9</sup>] waters; And the name of the star is called Wormwood: and the third part of the waters became<sup>9</sup> wormwood: and many [ins. of the] men died of [from] the waters, because they were made bitter.
- 12 And the fourth angel sounded [trumpeted], and the third part of the sun was smitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the stars; [,] so as [om. so as—ins. that] the third part of them was [might be] darkened, and the day shone not [might not shine]<sup>10</sup> for a [the] third part of it, and the night likewise [in like manner].

8. Last three Trumpets. Predominant demonic sufferings—in figures of Nature perverted into Unnaturalness.

CHAP. VIII. 13—IX. 21.

- 13 And I beheld [saw], and [ins. I] heard an angel [eagle<sup>11</sup>] flying through the midst of heaven [in mid-heaven], saying with a loud [great] voice, Woe, woe, woe, to the inhabitants of [them that dwell upon] the earth by reason of [éx] the other [remaining] voices of the trumpet of the three angels, which [who] are yet [about] to sound [trumpet]!

CHAP. IX. 1—21.

a. Fifth Trumpet. First Woe.

VERS. 1—12.

- 1 And the fifth angel sounded [trumpeted], and I saw a star fall [fallen] from [ins. the] heaven unto [upon] the earth: and to him was given the key of the bottomless [om. bottomless<sup>12</sup>] pit [ins. of the abyss]. And he opened the bottomless [om. bottomless] pit [ins. of the abyss]<sup>13</sup>; and there arose [ascended] a [om. a] smoke out of the pit,<sup>14</sup> as the [om. the] smoke of a great furnace; and the sun [ins. was darkened] and the air were darkened [om. were darkened] by reason of [éx] the smoke of the pit. And there came [om. there came] out of the smoke [ins. came forth] locusts upon the earth: and unto them was given power, as the scorpions of the earth have power. And it was commanded [said to, ἐπέειπεν] them that they should [shall] not hurt [injure] the grass of the earth, neither [nor] any<sup>15</sup> green thing, neither [nor] any<sup>15</sup> tree; but only those [the] men which [who (οἱ ἄνθρωποι)] have not the seal of God in [upon] their [the<sup>16</sup>] foreheads. And to them it was given that they should not kill them, but that they should [shall] be tormented<sup>17</sup> five months: and their torment was [is] as the torment of a scorpion, when he striketh [it hath stricken] a man. And in those days shall men seek death, and shall not find<sup>18</sup> it; and shall [ins. earnestly] desire to die, and death shall flee [fleeth<sup>19</sup>] from them.
- 7 And the shapes of the locusts were like unto [om. unto] horses prepared unto battle; and on [upon] their heads were [om. were] as it were crowns like gold, and 8 their faces were [om. were] as the [om. the] faces of men. And they had hair as

<sup>9</sup> Ver. 10. Τὸν ὄντα; comp. Delitzsch, p. 82. [So all the recent editors with N. B. P. This entire clause (after rivers) is om. by A.—E. R. C.]

<sup>10</sup> Ver. 11. The Rec. gives γίνεσθαι in acc. with minuscules.

<sup>11</sup> Ver. 12. [Alf., Treg. and Tisch., with N. A., give φέρον.—E. R. C.]

<sup>12</sup> V-r. 13. The reading ἀβύσσου has the best Codd. against it; for particulars see Düst. [Alf., Treg., and Tisch., with N. A. B., give ἀρού; P., however, reads ἀβύσσου.—E. R. C.]

<sup>13</sup> Ch. ix., v-r. 1. [The translation "bottomless pit" is altogether without justification. By it, an important fact of revelation is concealed from the readers of the E. V. (see EXCURSUS ON HADES, p. 384 sqq.)—E. R. C.]

<sup>14</sup> Ver. 2. The words καὶ ἠρόσαν τὸ πᾶν τῆς ἀβύσσου are groundlessly assailed. [All the recent editors give these words with A. P., Vulg. (Cl., Fuld., Harl.,<sup>2</sup> Tol.); they are om. by N. B., Vulg. (Am., Harl., Tol.), etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 3. Some Codd. omit καὶ τὸν ἄνθρωπον (etc.). [These words are om. by 1, 35, 41, 87 (see Tischendorf).—E. R. C.]

<sup>16</sup> Ver. 4. [For this rendering of τὰς see Winer, § 26, 1, first par. (The μὴ is here connected with the verb, the οὐδὲ being a mere continuance of the negation).—E. R. C.]

<sup>17</sup> V-r. 4. Tisch. (1859) gives αἰών. [Tisch. (8th Ed.) and Treg. omit with N. A. P., Am., Harl., etc.; Cod. B. gives it; Alf. and brackets.—E. R. C.]

<sup>18</sup> Ver. 6. [Lach., Words, Alf., Treg., Tisch., give βασανισθήσονται with N. A. P., etc. Lange reads βασανισθῶσι with B.—E. R. C.]

<sup>19</sup> Ver. 6. καὶ μὴ εὐφρανῶν, Cod. A. [P], etc. [So Lach. and Tisch. (1859); Tisch. (8th Ed.), Alf., Treg., give εὐφρανῶν with N. B.—E. R. C.]

<sup>20</sup> Ver. 6. The reading φέρον. [So Alf., Treg., Tisch., with A. P.; N. reads φέρει and B. φέρει.—E. R. C.]

- 9 the hair of women, and their teeth were as the teeth of lions. And they had breastplates, as it were [ins. iron] breastplates of iron [om. of iron]; and the sound of their wings was as the [a] sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.
- 10 And they had [have] tails like unto [om. unto] scorpions, and there were [om. there were] stings [ins. ; and] in their tails: and [om. : and—ins. is] their power<sup>29</sup>
- 11 was [om. was] to hurt [injure] men five months. And they had [have] a king over them, which is [om. which is] the angel of the bottomless pit [om. bottomless pit—ins. abyss], [;] whose [his] name in the [om. the] Hebrew [;] tongue is [om. tongue is] Abaddon, but [; and] in the Greek tongue [om. tongue—ins. he] hath his [the] name Apollyon. [ins. The] one woe is past [hath passed]; and, [om. and], behold, there come [ins. yet] two woes more hereafter [om. more hereafter—ins. after these things].

b. Sixth Trumpet. Second Woe.

VERS. 13-21.

- 13 And<sup>21</sup> the sixth angel sounded [trumpeted], and I heard a [or one (μία)] voice
- 14 from the four<sup>22</sup> horns of the golden altar which is before God, saying to the sixth angel [;] which had [the one having<sup>23</sup>] the trumpet, Loose the four angels which
- 15 [that] are bound in [at] the great river Euphrates. And the four angels were loosed, which [that] were [had been] prepared for an [the] hour, and a [om. a] day, and a [om. a] month, and a [om. a] year, for to [om. for to—ins. that they should] slay the third part of [ins. the] men. And the number of the army [armies] of the horsemen [cavalry<sup>24</sup>] were [was] two hundred thousand thousand
- 17 [two myriads of myriads]: and [om. and<sup>25</sup>] I heard the number of them. And thus I saw the horses in the vision, and them that [those who] sat on them, having breastplates of fire [fiery] and of jacinth [hyacinthine], and brimstone [sulphureous]: and the heads of the horses were as the heads of lions; and out of their mouths issued [goeth forth] fire and smoke and brimstone [or sulphur]. By these three [ins. plagues<sup>26</sup>] was [om. was—ins. were slain] the third part of [ins. the] men killed [om. killed], by the fire, and by [om. by<sup>27</sup>] the smoke, and by [om. by<sup>27</sup>] the
- 19 brimstone [or sulphur], which issued [went forth] out of their mouths. For their [om. their—ins. the] power [ins. of the horses]<sup>28</sup> is in their mouth, and in their tails: for their tails were [are] like unto serpents, and [om. and] had [having] heads, and
- 20 with them [these] they do [om. do] hurt [injure]. And the rest of the men [;] which [who] were not killed [slain] by these plagues [;] yet [om. yet] repented not [did not even<sup>29</sup> repent] of the works of their hands, that they should not worship devils [the demons], and [ins. the] idols of gold, and [ins. of]<sup>30</sup> silver, and [ins. of]<sup>30</sup> brass, and [ins. of]<sup>30</sup> stone, and of<sup>30</sup> wood; which neither can [can neither] see, nor hear,
- 21 nor walk: Neither repented they [And they did not<sup>31</sup> repent] of their murders, nor of their sorceries, nor of their fornication, nor of their thefts.

<sup>20</sup> Ver. 10. The reading of Lach. and Tisch. after Bengel. [Also of Words, Alf., Treg., κέρτα, καὶ ἐν ταῖς οὐραῖς αὐτῶν ἡ ἰφουρία αὐτῶν ἀδύκῃται; N. A. B*. P. give καὶ after κέρτα and omit it after the first αὐτῶν; N. A. P. have ἡ ἰφουρία αὐτῶν. B*. reads ἰφουρίαν ἔχουσιν; B*. inserts τοῦ before ἀδύκῃται, which is omitted by N. A. P. There are other minor variations of less authority.—E. R. C.]

<sup>21</sup> Ver. 13. [N. omits καὶ; B*. not only omits in this place, but inserts before μετὰ ταῦτα in preceding verse; in acc. with this, the correct pointing would be a period after woes, the translation running, And after these things, the sixth angel, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>22</sup> Ver. 13. Τεσσαράκοντα was omitted probably because it was regarded as superfluous; Düst. suspects it of being an interpolation. [Lach., Treg., omit with N. A. 23, 79, Am., Fuld., etc. Tisch. inserts with B*. P., etc.; Alf. brackets it.—E. R. C.]

<sup>23</sup> Ver. 14. A. B. [N. P.], etc., ὁ ἔχει; comp. Delitzsch with ref. to Tisch., p. 33, also p. 32 (No. 10).

<sup>24</sup> Ver. 16. Codd. A. B. [N. P.], etc., τοῦ ἰσχυροῦ.

<sup>25</sup> Ver. 16. [καὶ is generally om. in acc. with N. A. B*. P., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>26</sup> Ver. 18. [Recent editors generally insert πληγῶν, with N. A. B. C. P., etc.; C. omits τῶν, and N. omits ἐπὶ.—E. R. C.]

<sup>27</sup> Ver. 18. [The καὶ before καρπῶν is given by C. P., Vulg. (Cl.) and om. by N. A. B*. Vulg., Am., Fuld., etc.; that before θεῶν is given by P., and om. by N. A. B*. C. Vulg., etc.; critical editors generally omit both.—E. R. C.]

<sup>28</sup> Ver. 19. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch., with N. A. B*. C. P., Vulg., etc., give ἡ γὰρ ἰφουρία τῶν ἰσχυρῶν; Words. also αὐτῶν.—E. R. C.]

<sup>29</sup> Ver. 20. [Tisch. and Alf. give οὐδὲ with N. B*.; Lach. and Treg. οὐ with A. P.; Gb., Sz., Tisch. (1859), οὐ with C. For the rendering above (οὐδὲ), see Winer, § 55, 6 (foot-note 2).—E. R. C.]

<sup>30</sup> Ver. 20. ["The repetition, if not required in order to prevent ambiguity, is the most convenient compensation for the omission of the article." Dr. LILLIE.—E. R. C.]

<sup>31</sup> Ver. 21. The reading οὐ [καὶ οὐ μετάνοιαν].

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

The trumpet calls to war; the trumpet summons the congregation to assemble. Both points are embraced by the vision of the Seven Trumpets; it is the vision of the experiences of the Church as the Church Militant; the vision of her conflict in her spiritual assailments and perils.* This spiritual conflict of the Church is evident from each individual feature of the vision. The prayers of all the Saints: the third, as a diminution of three, the number of spirit; the opening of the abyss; the horsemen, coming from the great river Euphrates, i. e. from the sphere of Babylon; the slaughter of mankind, effected by their demonic horses; and the impenitence still remaining after all these plagues—everything is indicative of spiritual circumstances.

These spiritual circumstances are, moreover, of such a nature that they can be overcome only by a mighty effort of Heaven itself; by a tension of the heavenly spirits in meditation, prayer and intercession. Hence there is silence in Heaven. Praise seems to grow dumb in Heaven itself. Heaven prays in consideration of the conflicts which are before the Church on earth. The heavenly hour is the decisive hour of the whole crisis; the entire half of this hour is employed in the celestial hallowing of the conflict of the Church Militant.

In the mean time, the seven Angels, with the trumpets which are given them, stand waiting. The other Angel, whose task it is to give a heavenly completeness to the earthly and imperfect prayers of the Saints is, doubtless, in accordance with Rom. viii. 26, the Spirit of Prayer, in connection with the symbolical intercession of Christ. In this character he approaches the heavenly altar of incense. His instrument is the golden censer—the heavenly purification and measurement of the prayers which ascend to Heaven mingled with pathological turbidity and eccentricity (comp. the μετριοταειν of Christ the High Priest, Heb. v. 2). The incense given to him is offered upon the golden altar of incense before the Throne, and the smoke of it rises up and completes the imperfect prayers of the Saints before God.

By the retro-active power of this heavenly sacrifice of prayer, the earth is consecrated for her struggle: the Angel pours the fire of the altar, with which he has filled the censer, upon the earth. Then from the heavenly fire of prayer there issue on earth voices and thunders and lightnings and an earthquake: holy ideas and words, holy preachings and alarm-cries, holy illuminations and spiritual judgments, result in holy convulsions of the human world. Thus is set on foot a victorious counteraction against the onsets just beginning. Though seven terrible corruptive and destructive agencies are now, one after another, let loose against the earth, we must remember that the providence of God has encircled them with angelic might; that in Heaven they are transformed into seven grand dispensations; and that they are announced by Trumpets, which summon the Church to the conflict—summon her to resistance, by repentance and by a closer serriment in collectedness of spirit and in the life of Christian fellowship.

First Trumpet-blast.

The first Trumpet sounds, and hail, mingled with fire and blood, falls upon the earth. This is, unmistakably, the dispensation of carnal zeal, of sensuous piety, of fanaticism (Luke ix. 54), which falls upon the earth, i. e., the churchly form of the Kingdom of God (Ps. xciii.). The hail, or the icy coldness of men's souls toward true spiritual life, corresponds with the fire of superstitious passions (see Nitsch, System, p. 39); and the fire is continually more and more mingled with blood, as is demonstrated by the first appearance of fanaticism in sacred history, Gen. xxiv., and, further, by all kindred records, especially by the superstitious persecutions of heretics in the history of the Church. This unholy fire consumes the third part of the earth, i. e., the Church, or, in a universal sense, legal order; the third part of the trees (Ps. i.), i. e. pious personalities; and more than the third part of the green grass: the entire soul-pasture of the Christian flock (Ps. xxiii.) is more or less scorched and blasted, being converted partly into hay, partly into ashes.

Second Trumpet-blast.

The mountain, which is next introduced, is not a real mountain, but the appearance of a great burning mountain, rushing, like a giant meteor, through the air, although hurled, by some mighty hand, upon the sea. This, manifestly, is the deceptive semblance of a great Divine ordinance, which, changed by the flames of bigot passion into a self-consuming crater, is inflicted, as a Divine judgment, upon the sea or national life. The third part of the sea is turned to blood by means of religious wars and abominations of all kinds springing from fanatical party spirit. The further consequence is that the third part of the creatures in the sea perish, and the third part of the ships are destroyed. The poisoning of Christian national life by the false fire-mountain destroys a third part of the healthful and glad-some popular life, and a third part of all human intercourse, blessing and prosperity. Whole nations, states and vital branches of the state are, so far as their spiritual existence is concerned, in good part ruined. History affords abundant illustrations of these Apocalyptic words.

Third Trumpet-blast.

From Heaven, from the kingdom of spirit, a great star falls, a real spiritual luminary, burning like a torch, i. e., like a great and brilliant world-light. If we contemplate its spiritual fall, we cannot fail to perceive, that it is the personified likeness of false liberty, of the fanaticism of negation, rushing upon us under the semblance of a new enlightenment for the world. For it falls upon the third part of the rivers, i. e. more general spiritual tendencies, or currents, as they are called at present (Is. viii. 6; xxxv. 6); it falls also upon the fountains (Prov. xxv. 6), i. e., creatively original minds, whence the currents proceed.

* [See ADDITIONAL NOTE, p. 212sq., on this statement, and on the entire Synoptical View.—E. R. O.]

When it is said that the name of the star is called Wormwood, the idea immediately strikes us that it is indeed that embitterment by which—as in the history of Julian—a great portion of the heavenly knowledge-life, the enfranchising spiritual reform, is corrupted and transformed from a quietly shining heavenly star into a burning torch that falls from Heaven, and, instead of truly enlightening, poisons the fountains and currents of spiritual life. Thus a third part of the spiritual water of life, in society, culture and literature, is turned into a water of death, a soul-destroying partyism, sedition and sectarianism, inflicting even bodily death upon many men, by mortally embittering them (comp. Heb. iii. 8; Ex. xvii. 7; Num. xiv. 22; Deut. vi. 16).

Fourth Trumpet-blast.

A third part of the Heaven of spiritual life is closed, and thus the opening of the abyss at the blast of the fifth Trumpet is prepared. The third part of the sun is smitten; i. e., the third part of the sun of revelation is concealed and made of none effect by the united darkness of positive and negative fanaticism—superstition and unbelief. In like manner the third part of the moon is smitten. Together with the bright day-life of Christian knowledge, the night-life of the spiritual repose and peace of souls is, in a great degree, obscured; the spiritual life of nature, we might say, in accordance with Mark iv. 27.

Thus, too, the third part of the stars is smitten; in spite of all the advances of astronomy, the joyous upward gaze of immortal souls into the heavenly home of the eternal Father-house (John xiv. 2) declines with many even to utter extinction. And it is in perfect accordance with the laws of polarity, that, together with the true day-life of the spirit, the true night-life of the heart, especially in the intercourse of spirits, has suffered great loss.

By this great spiritual obscuration of sun, moon and stars—an obscuration which, though on the one hand partial, is, on the other hand, lasting—preparation is made for the first of the three great woes. This woe, together with its successors, is heralded by an eagle which John sees and hears, by reason of the rustling of his wings, flying through the lofty midst of Heaven; an eagle proclaiming with a mighty voice a three-fold woe upon the inhabitants of the earth—a woe coming with the last three Trumpets. As the horse denotes regular rapid historic motion, so the eagle is indicative of a vehement and mighty movement toward a great catastrophe. This eagle flies along the meridian altitude of Heaven, thus being visible down to the very horizon, besides being able to descry the coming woes with his piercing glance, and to make himself heard by all with his mighty voice. Thus the eagle is indicative of the lofty and rapid flight of the seer-spirit over the earth, with its sharp outlook upon the catastrophes of the last times. It is the very genius of Apocalyp-tics, the eagle of John. That it does not denote the final judgments themselves (as Hengstenberg maintains), is evident from the fact, that it distinguishes them from itself as the three woful times of the future. In spite of its lofty eagle nature, it seems to suffer in human sympathy with the inhabitants of the earth, upon whom the judgments are coming.

Thus the way is prepared for the #### Fifth Trumpet-blast.

Again a star falls from Heaven upon the earth, or, rather, it has already fallen when John sees it. If the previous falling star was the genius of all carnal levity, it is followed quite naturally by the genius of demonic gloom, the second Janus-face of the more general spiritual corruptions in Christian and, especially, modern times. This star receives the key to the pit of the abyss. The abyss is, undoubtedly, not equivalent to Sheol, or the realm of the dead, in the general sense of that term; but neither is it the same as Gehenna, in the full sense of that word as identical with the lake of fire. It is the hell-like or demonic region of the realm of disembodied and unembodied spirits—a region of torment, bounded on the one side by the brighter portion of Sheol and on the other by Gehenna (the remarks on p. 80 must be modified by the present comments; see p. 85). [See Excursus on Hades, p. 864 sqq.—E. R. C.]

It is declared, ch. xvii. 8, that the Beast ascends out of the abyss and goes into ἀνάστα; ch. xx. 8, Satan is cast into the abyss; after the final revolt, however, he also is cast into the lake of fire, to which the Beast and the false Prophet have previously been banished. In the present passage, mention is made of the same demon-region which, 2 Pet. ii. 4, is, through the medium of a verb, indirectly designated as Tartarus.

The pit of the abyss is manifestly the connecting channel by means of which the region of tormenting demons holds communication with the earth and with human life. It corresponds with the partial closure of Heaven. Not all of Heaven is closed; not all of the abyss is let loose upon the human world, but the connecting channel between earth and the abyss is now, in a mode entirely new, thrown open. As the revelation of Heaven, on its side, extends into the human world of spirit, so it is also with the pit of the abyss: it is opened in the demonic depths of the human psychical life itself through a demonic sympathy with the spirits of the abyss.

The genius of a God-estranged gloom is the star that opens the pit; the key in his hand is hopelessness, the more general form of despair. As the opening of the gloomy demonic death-realm below began with the darkening of the Gospel above, it is not in the modern world alone that a spirit of gloom has pressed into the Christian world. Rather, the origin of the sombre abysmal moods in Christendom is to be found in the land of the cultus of the dead, the cultus of graves—in Egypt. Again, during the whole of the Middle Ages we must distinguish between the monk's garb, assumed by all Christian confederations, and the specific spirit of monkery in its dark form. In the course of time the latter has continually been assuming darker and darker forms, until in the modern world it touches its other and worldly extreme.

Substantially, however, the two extremes of gloom amount to about the same thing; they are connected in a decided estrangement from the Gospel, from inwardness, as well as in a fanatical racing and chasing, and in absolute fancifulness, whether in a religious or an irreligious garb.

The first result of the opening of the pit of the abyss is the thick-rising smoke—spiritual derangement exhibiting itself in a gloomy play of the fancy, darkening more than ever the sun of truth and consciousness and the clear air of prospect and hope. Then locusts break forth out of the smoke;—demonic hobgoblin forms, not eating grass, as do locusts, but, like scorpions, stinging men. They have no power over the objective region of genuine spiritual life—over the grass of the soul's pasture, the verdure of new life, the trees of God by the rivers of water; their power is over those men who have not the seal of God on their foreheads. It is, therefore, manifest that good men, awakened men, well-meaning men, in a more general sense, may be exposed to them. Even those men, however, whom they successfully attack, they cannot directly kill; they have power only to torment them five months, i. e., to rob them of spiritual liberty, indicated by the numeral five, through a series of minor changes of time or of the moon. And in those days—those gloomy days of ancient and, especially, modern despair—men shall seek death and not find it; death shall even seem to flee before them. This does not exclude individual suicides on the extreme of these self-tormentings; in general, however, these gloomy soul-moods are below the level of the feeling of, and pleasure in, life. And what an array of phantoms, or mere semblances full of contradictions, do these tormenting spirits of modern soul-suffering constitute! The description of the text very significantly proclaims them to be nothing but fantastical and airy visions (see p. 22).

The phantasmagoria image forth, as war-horses, strong and passionate moods; they transform themselves into heads, wearing superb and kingly crowns, radiant with the semblance of gold; then they put on a humane face, as of man, and even assume a sentimentally soft deportment, indicated by the hair as of women, whilst yet they bite as though they had lions' teeth. But above all, they love to disguise themselves as grand warlike phantoms; they appear in breast-plated war-hoofs; their wings thunder like war-chariots charging to the battle; and with their fanciful terrors they change the world of Christian brotherhood more and more into a grand complex of camps. The venomous sting of these locusts is in their tails, which are like the tails of scorpions, the emblems of the evil spirit. Thus, too, the still worse power of the monsters of the sixth Trumpet lies not only in their mouths, but also in their tails. The meaning of this fact is, doubtless, that their effects increase and intensify toward the end; they make themselves felt particularly in the pains and painful consequences of party-trains. Their power is limited, however, and the Seer again brings into view its terminus, five months.

These demons of torment are, moreover, not isolated apparitions; they form a mysterious complex, a unity wherein, on the one hand, their fearful power lies, and, on the other, its limitation is contained. As Hades constitutes a unitous realm of the dead, governed by Death personified; and as the kingdom of evil, as beyond this life, is concentrated in Satan, whose manifest organ in this world is Antichrist, so, in the midst between Hades and the domain of Satan, the Abyss lies; this also is under the rule of a king, called, in Hebrew, Abaddon, and in Greek, Apollyon—the destroyer, waster. This king, in accordance with the distinct region and operation belonging to him, is the genius of despair, which must be regarded as specific destituteness of good or salvation, specific destruction. The two names doubtless signify, likewise, that the Hebrew form of his spoiling of souls is different from the Greek form; in the one case, he is wont to appear in the form of demonic possession; in the other, in that of melancholy madness. In view of all this, however, this whole terrible sphere of psychical torments must be clearly distinguished from the ethico-demonic plagues appearing at the sound of the sixth Trumpet.

This one woe passes; but it is the forerunner of two others which are still worse.

Sixth Trumpet-blast.

On account of the importance of what follows, this trumpet-blast is supplemented by a voice. The voice issues from the horns of the golden altar. Horns are symbols of protective power; the horns of the altar of incense, therefore, are significant of the perfect security of that spiritual life which proceeds from a life of prayer perfected in Heaven. In this sense the voice cries: Let loose! the Church is armed. Thus Christ Himself says: "It must needs be that offences come, but woe," etc. (Matt. xviii. 7; comp. 1 Cor. xi. 19). The following treats, doubtless, of offences in the strictest sense of the term—tares (see Matt. xiii. 38, 39). Loose the four Angels by the great river Euphrates.

With a grand assurance of victory, the vision brings out two fundamental features in the infliction of religious-ethical offences upon the earth. They appear at the start as four bound Angels. As emphatically as they, as offences, belong to the kingdom of darkness and are representative, in respect of the numeral four, of the spirit of the world (like the four beasts of Dan. vii.)—just so certain is it that they are bound by God's providence, and are unable prematurely to break forth to destroy His souls, and that, under angelic power, under the power of the four Angels who, according to ch. vii., hold them bound, they must, as dispensations of God, themselves go forth for judgment, when the time comes, as His messengers. In respect of their inmost essence, they may be representative of four fundamental forms of the Satanic essence and worldliness; they are, however, fundamental forms disguised as angels of light (2 Cor. xi. 14; 2 Thess. ii). Thus all heresies, at their first appearance, claim to be truths in a higher form of knowledge, and also operate as powerful lies through the admixture of elements of truth. Schleiermacher, perchance, might have found his four ground-forms of heresy symbolized here, had he properly appreciated the Apocalyptic style.

Again, though these offences seek to press forth in their quiet preparedness, they are conditioned by their Divinely ordained time as to hour, day, month and year; as to the hours of decisive conflict, the days of their apparent victory, the moons of their periodic change, and the years of their collective domination. As it is their natural tendency to kill men (John viii. 44), such is likewise their mission, inasmuch as they are instruments of judgment. Their murders, however, are spiritual murders; they deprive the third part of mankind of their spiritual life and prosperity.

After the portrayal of their peculiar essence, these fundamental forms vanish behind the prodigious train of horsemen forming their concrete appearance. What Bürger said of the dead [in the ballad of Lenore] is true also of erring spirits: they ride, and ride fast. One would think that a myriad might have been enough; but as a curse generates a curse, so the erring spirits is productive of more of its kind, even to myriads of myriads. The circumstance that the enormous number is twice given, may have its foundation in the fact that errors are divided into positive and negative ground-forms or extremes.

The concrete numeric form employed by the Seer does not, therefore, gain by its resolution into two hundred millions.

The Seer heard their number and could never forget it in its importance.

In these images of cavalry the horses themselves are the main thing. In ch. vi. the horses are but the bearers, in symbolical colors, of the acting riders; here, on the contrary, only the horses seem to be actually operative; the riders work merely as weak directors of the movements of their steeds and by their symbolical breast-plates and colors. Is the intimation intended that these riders, heretics, are, in many respects, not so bad as their horses, death-breathing heresies? Or is it suggested that the horses ordinarily run away with them; that they speedily lose control over the movements originated by themselves? Possibly both thoughts are intimated. At all events, they all, without exception, are strongly mailed against the darts of truth, of sincerity and soberness of spirit, for fanatics are chips of one block, though not in a predestinarian sense; there is among them a good deal of talent, ambition, ardor and a strong impulse of self-consciousness; but little genius, soul, piety and reverence. The colors of their breast-plates correspond with the fatal operations of their horses. The fire of fanaticism, so prone to be mingled with blood; the smoke of gloomy and confused mental disorders, already resolved into vapor; and the brimstone of still unused fuel floating about—how could the fundamental forms of false-lightism be more fitly characterized!

Again, the horses have heads as the heads of lions. Their arrogance, their aggressive appearance, assumes the semblance of true lion-heartedness, of genuine leonine strength. It is natural that their fatal operations issue from their mouths, though these may also, in a figurative sense, work by means of the pen. Besides the power in their mouths, they have power in their tails. These tails are still worse than those of the locusts of the fifth Seal; they are not like scorpions, but like serpents, which, after the manner of serpents, do harm with their heads. It is, perhaps, not out of the way to suppose that the Seer designed giving prominence, along with the direct dogmatic injuries, to the pernicious moral effects of offences or false principles; for thus they have a two-fold mortal agency—through head and tail. It is in the nature of the thing that an inestimable amount of bloodshed follows in the train of spiritual murders.

The Seer finally brings out the melancholy fact with which this cyclical world-picture closes; which is also, be it understood, a characteristic universal picture of the last time. The rest of the men, who were not killed by these plagues, are those who have not, through a fall into heresies, lost all spiritual life. In this respect, therefore, they offer a contrast to the others; yet even they have not suffered themselves to be roused to repentance. They are divided into two ranks, composed of those who are guilty in a religious point of view pre-eminently, and those whose guilt is pre-eminently moral—both ranks, however, being connected.

The principal offence of the one side is, that they are subject to the works of their hands, i. e., thoroughly externalized, sunk in externalisms, of which they do not repent. Demon-worship, a subtle service of devils—thus runs the terrible superscription, beneath which a pompous image-worship is set forth—idolatry with figures of gold, of silver, of brass, of stone, and of wood. The absolute irrationality of this idolatry is noticed by the Apocalypse as well as by the Old Testament. These idols can neither see, nor hear, nor walk; they are, therefore, less than the beasts.

On the other side, the chief superscription is that of murder—something which well corresponds with the service of the Devil; the individual forms—sorcery, fornication, theft—are at all events connected with this fundamental form. Sorcery [Magismus], in its most general import, is the duskiest side of immorality; it has a wide domain, from conscious impieties to ecclesiastical mechanisms. Fornication is a chief sin of heathen grossness under the mask of Christian culture. Theft understands sublimating itself into the most subtle and underhand forms of swindle and fraud.

We would submit the following general observations:

We have seen that the Seven Times Seven which forms the foundation of the Book, stands in a natural sequence. The same remark was applied, in particular, to the seven Churches. Again, if we examine the seven Seals, we cannot fail to recognize the naturalness of their sequence: war, dearth, all sorts of death, especially pestilence, martyrdom, earthquakes. The same remark holds good, furthermore, in regard to the Trumpets: 1. Fanaticism; 2. A fanaticised community-life; 3. Negative embitterment; 4. Darkening of revelation and of the life of salvation; 5. Penitential demonic psychological sufferings; 6. Demonic mental or spiritual disorders, heresies—preparatory to apostasy.

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

[ELLIOTT regards the Trumpet-septenary as included in the seventh Seal, and also this Septenary as chronologically consecutive on that of the six Seals preceding. The Period of the first six Trumpets (to the close of the First Part of the Sixth, ch. ix. 21)* he regards as extending from A. D. 395 to 1453, including "the destruction of the Western Empire by the Goths, and the Eastern Empire by the Saracens and Turks." The half hour's silence in Heaven (ch. viii. 1) he interprets as "the stillness from storms" in "the aerial firmament;" i. e., a continuance, for a brief period, of the calm brought to view, ch. vii. 1; by the incense offering he understands the presentation of the prayers of the Sealed before God by Jesus, the great High Priest. The Trumpets he regards as fulfilling the uses of the trumpets under the Levitical law, which uses he represents as two: (1) "as regarded the Israelites, to proclaim the epochs of advancing time;" (2) "during war-time, and as regarded their enemies, . . . to proclaim war against those enemies as from God Himself (Num. x. 1-10)." The first four Trumpets he, in common with other interpreters, regards as intimately connected together; and he understands by them the four Gothic ravages which ended in the subversion of the Western Empire. He contends that during the period of these ravages the Roman world was, in fact, divided into three parts, viz. the Eastern (Asia Minor, Syria, Arabia, Egypt); the Central (Mœsia, Greece, Illyricum, Rhœtia); the Western (Italy, Gaul, Britain, Spain, Northwestern Africa); and that the third or Western part was destroyed. The first Trumpet (ch. viii. 7): (A. D. 400-410) the Era of Alaric and Rhadagnisius. The second (vers. 8, 9): (A. D. 429-477) the Era of Genserio, to whom "was allotted . . . the conquest of the maritime provinces of Africa and the islands." The third (vers. 10, 11): (A. D. 450-453) the Era of Attila who, as a "baleful meteor," "moved against the Western provinces along the Upper Danube, reached and crossed the Rhine at Basle, and thence tracing the same great frontier stream of the West down to Belgium, made its valley one scene of desolation and woe;" thence directing his steps to "the European fountains of waters in the Alpine heights and Alpine valleys of Italy." The fourth (ver. 2): (about A. D. 476 or 479) the Era of Odoacer, by whom "the name and office of Roman Emperor of the West was abolished," and "thus of the Roman imperial Sun, that third which appertained to the Western Empire was eclipsed, and shone no more." By the Angel (Eagle) flying through mid-heaven (ver. 13), he understands the public "forewarnings of coming woe" that prevailed throughout the period from the death of Justinian, A. D. 565, to the rise of Mohammed and the Saracens—forewarnings in (1) the warning utterances of eminent fathers of the Church (Sulpitius Severus, Martin of Tours, Jerome, Hesychius, Evagrius, Theodoret, and especially Gregory the Great); (2) the generally diffused idea that the end of the world was approaching; (3) the threatening "outward state and aspect of things." The fifth Trumpet (ch. ix. 1-11): the Saracenic war beginning with the public announcement by Mohammed of his alleged mission, A. D. 612, and extending through one hundred and fifty years (five prophetic months, ver. 5) to A. D. 762, when, in the establishment of Medinat al Salem (City of Peace) as the capital of the Saracenic Empire and the following tranquillity, occurred what Daubuz calls "the settlement of the locusts."* The sixth Trumpet, Part I. (vers. 13-19): the Turkish woe, extending from January 18th, A. D. 1057, the day on which the Turcomans went forth from Bagdad on their career of victory, to the day on which the investiture of Constantinople was completed, to May 16th, A. D. 1453 (i. e., 396 years, 118 days—the prophetic year, month and day, ver. 15).†

BARNES agrees substantially with Elliott as to the periods of the Trumpets, and the nature of the judgments inflicted under them. He differs in certain points of interpretation, as will be seen under EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

WORDSWORTH regards the description of the seventh Seal as closing with ch. viii. 1, to be resumed in the glories set forth in chs. xxi., xxii.; and maintains that the Seer then proceeds to portray the Divine judgments, from the beginning, on the enemies of the Church, under the Seven Trumpets. The Trumpets are prefaced by the prayers of the Saints (vers. 3, 4), in answer to which the judgments are sent forth (vers. 5, 6). The Trumpets correspond with the woes inflicted upon Egypt (Ex. ix. 23-26), and to the sevenfold encircling of Jericho (Josh. vi. 1-20); the first six are preparatory denunciations, warning, calling to repentance, and preparing for the seventh which will convene all nations to the general judgment. The first (ver. 7) is a retributive sequel to the second Seal, and represents the woes which fell upon the Roman Empire in the fourth century, when it was smitten by a hail storm from the North (the Gothic invasion). The second (vers. 8, 9): the uprooting and destruction of Imperial Rome (which had been as a great Volcano) by the Goths, Vandals and Huns. The third (vers. 10, 11): heretical teachers (represented by the fallen star), who embittered the waters of Holy Scripture. ("In the Seals heresy is represented as a trial of the Church; in the Trumpets it is treated as a judgment inflicted on (godless) men for sins.") The fourth (ver. 12): "a prophecy of the great prevalence of errors, defections, apostasies and confusions in Christendom, such as abounded in the Seventh Century." The fifth (ch. ix. 1-11): the Mohammedan (Saracenic and Turkish) woe. The sixth (vers. 13-21): "This vision has revealed . . . that the Holy Scriptures (four-fold

* [Elliott regards the Second Part of the Sixth Trumpet as extending through ch. xi. 13.—E. R. C.]

* [To Daubuz, according to Elliott, is due the above explanation of the one hundred and fifty years.—E. R. C.]

† [For particulars, see EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.—E. R. C.]

Gospel), though bound as captives for a time, would be loosed by the command of God, and that they would traverse the world like an innumerable army. And although they are . . . ministers of salvation unto many, yet the Vision has declared, that the Holy Scriptures would be like instruments of punishment and death to the enemies of God." (!)

ALFORD regards the seventh Seal as having its completion in ch. viii. 5; the preparation for the Trumpets, however, he looks upon as "evolved out of the opening of the seventh Seal." The first four he regards as connected together by "the kind of exercise which their agency finds"—"the plagues indicated by them" being "entirely exercised on natural objects." The fifth and sixth are in like manner connected; the plagues being inflicted on men—the former by pain, the latter by death; the seventh forming rather the solemn conclusion to the whole than a distinct judgment of itself. He affirms (1) that the series of visions reaches forward to the time of the end, and (2) that the infliction of the plagues is general, no particular city nor people being designated as their object. He assigns no date for the beginning of the Trumpets, and leaves us in doubt as to whether he regarded them as in the process of development or still future.

LODGE apparently regards the seventh Seal as closing with ch. viii. 5; the silence was symbolic of a short period (1) of contemplation, submission and faith amongst Angels and the Redeemed in Heaven, and (2) of quiet on Earth—the period of repose intervening between the close of persecution, A. D. 811, and the commencement, near the close of that year, of the civil wars by which Constantine was elevated to the throne; the voices, etc. (ver. 5), symbolize the agitations and revolutions which attended the elevation of Constantine and the subversion of Paganism. His interpretation of the Trumpets is substantially that of Elliott and Barnes.

GLASGOW* represents the seventh Seal as comprehending the Trumpets. The period of silence he identifies with the seven and a half days from the Ascension to Pentecost, the smoke of the incense with the Intercession of Christ, the fire thrown on the land with the effusion of the Holy Ghost. The Trumpets he regards as successive: I. The woes ending in the destruction of the Jewish state, one third of the people being destroyed by the Roman army. II. The expatriation of the Jews after the revolt under Barcochba (the mountain burning with the wrath of God cast into the sea of the pagan empire). III. Usurpation of Prelacy. IV. Arianism promoted by Constans and Constantine. V. The Mohammedan woo (Saracens and Turks). VI. The four bound Angels are kings, popes, inquisitors, and councils, previously kept in restraint, but who are now loosed to slay the third part of the men, i. e. true Christians—the period of persecution beginning A. D. 1123, and extending to the Reformation.—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ch. viii. 1. Half an hour.—"The anxious expectancy of the inhabitants of Heaven" (Düsterdieck). Classical, but not Biblical: Stupor callitum (Eichhorn). Similar interpretations see in Düsterdieck, p. 299. Vitringa: The whole purport of the seventh Seal is: ecclesia in pace! Similar interpretations see in Düsterdieck, p. 301. Hengstenberg offers a most remarkable interpretation: Silence of Christ's enemies (in Heaven!). We regard Düsterdieck's polemic against the idea that there is a recapitulation in this place also, as utterly wrong; especially do we object to his unconditional rejection of Lyra's interpretation, viz. that nothing but the Church's battle against heretics is depicted, though it is true that this explanation would be applicable only to the sixth Trumpet, if heresies proper were alone involved. The fact that there is a difference between a supposed anxiety in Heaven and a readily intelligible tension of spirit and prayerful mood in the same blessed place needs no further exposition. See the SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

[For different views of the oray see Add. Note, p. 201 sq. Bishop Newton (after Philo) calls attention to the fact, that "while the sacrifices were made (2 Chron. xxix. 25-28), the voices and instruments and trumpets sounded; while the priest went into the Temple to burn incense (Luke i. 10), all were silent, and the people prayed to themselves." (See also 2 Chron. xxix. 29). This silence was, so to speak, intensified on the great day of Atonement when, at the offering of the incense and the sacrifice, all save the High Priest withdrew from the Sanctuary (see Levit. xvi. 17; also Kitto's Cyc., Articles ATONEMENT [DAY OF] and INCENSE). It was said to the souls under the altar in answer to their cries (the cries of their blood for vengeance), that they should rest until the full number of martyrs (or the time of martyrdom) had been completed (ch. vi. 9-11). On the completion of the number, or the time (it matters not which, for they would be completed together), the Seer beheld in symbolic vision the offering, by the Great High Priest, of their prayers (doubtless inclusive of the cry of the blood of their sacrifice), together with the incense of His own merits before the Throne—it was fitting that during that highest offering every creature sound, even that of praise, should be hushed in Heaven.—E. R. C.]

* [(The Apocalypse Translated and Expounded: JAMES GLASGOW, D.D., Irish Gen. Ass. Prof. of Oriental Languages, etc. Edinburgh: 1872.) The Am. Ed. regrets that the above-mentioned valuable Commentary was not received in the United States until after a large portion of this work was in print. He subjoins an abstract of Dr. Glasgow's scheme of the Seals. They were all synchronous as to their opening: I. Christ; II. Apostate Judaism; III. Greek and Roman Paganism; IV. Gnosticism; V. Martyrs of the old Economy; VI. General Commotion; the sun (the Church) was darkened at the death of Christ, the moon (the political government of the Jews) suffered a total eclipse, from which it never emerged, the stars (the rulers of the Synagogue) lost their light, the heaven (the Jewish Church) passed away, the mountains and islands (the provincial governors in Judea and those whom they represented) fell, kings and magnates (the nations they represented) were oppressed with the idea that they were exposed to the wrath of God (ch. vii. is not a description of any prophetic times or successive events, but of the condition of the Lord's people worshipping, serving and blessed). VII. As above.

[The patent objections to this scheme are, first, that in fact it places the events of the sixth and seventh Seals before the others; and, secondly, that it reveals to John as things to "be hereafter" (ch. iv. 1) events that had taken place in connection with the Crucifixion, the Ascension and the Pentecostal Effusion of the Spirit.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 2. And I saw.—This scene, depicted in vers. 2-6, can have taken place only in the pause of the οἰή. Heaven is sunk in prayerful silence; it is also, however, busy preparing to encounter the ill effects of the events which transpire at the blast of the seven Trumpets. According to Ebrard, this scene of preparation takes place after the silence: according to Düsterdieck, the silence ceases with ver. 5, since there we read of thunder and voices. (Further on, however, he also makes the οἰή end with ver. 6.) But these latter are but the general consequences of the sacred fire cast upon the earth.

The seven Angels who stand [Lange: stood] before God; not who stepped [took their stations] before God (Luther). But neither is the reference to seven Angels who, by preference, stand permanently before God (Düsterdieck; Archangels, De Wette; the seven Spirits, Ewald). They are, undoubtedly, the Angels of the seven Trumpets (Ebrard, Hengstenberg), and the article—the seven Angels—has reference to the presupposition that these seven stand ready, waiting their Divine commission. With Hengstenberg, the idea of the seven Archangels shifts into that of Angels whose number is modified by that of the Trumpets.

Seven Trumpets.—See above. For an archaeological treatise on the Trumpets, see Hengstenberg, p. 432 sqq. [Eng. Trans., p. 395 sqq.].

Ver. 3. Another Angel.—"The other Angel, like the one mentioned in ch. vii., is to be regarded as a real Angel," says Düsterdieck. The meaning of this is, that the Apocalypse is not to be treated as a symbolical Book in this passage either. Hengstenberg, also, at first regards the Angel here described as occupying merely the position of a carrier, although he subsequently remarks that he is nothing but a symbolical figure. Manifestly, the former view is in opposition to the text. This Angel ministers at the heavenly altar of incense. For it is to such an altar alone that the present passage refers, as Grotius and others maintain; not to an altar of burnt-offering, as is the opinion of Hofmann and Ebrard.

The question might well be asked: What idea should we connect with a heavenly altar of burnt-offering? The altar of incense is quite another thing. Comp. Düsterdieck's polemic against Hofmann and Ebrard, p. 305.

The attribute of this Angel is the golden censer; by the heavenly incense which he burns, the prayers of all the Saints on earth are perfected. This Angel can even pour the holy altar-fire upon the earth and waken voices, thunders, lightnings and earthquake. Can an Angel do all this? Such forced literalism should surely not bear the name of historical interpretation. If consistently retained, it would here of necessity lead to the Roman Catholic idea of angelic mediation. The inquiry is historical as to who is elsewhere in Scripture to be regarded as the perfecter of earthly petitions, by heavenly intercession or by the heavenly administration of prayer. The result of such inquiry precludes the possibility of this Angel being taken for any but Christ, in accordance with Bede, Böhmer, and many others (1 John ii. 1), or the Holy Ghost (Rom. viii. 26). It might, however, also be maintained, that the heavenly perfecting of human prayers is generally represented by a symbolical angelic form (Grotius: angelus precum ecclesie).

A golden censer.—On λαβανωτός see the lexicons.

There was given unto him much incense.—Much of the spirit of prayer, of heavenly renunciation and heavenly confidence.

[Of what was the incense of the Tabernacle symbolical? In seeking an answer to this question, it should be remembered that it was compounded of the most precious spices, that in its normal condition it was most holy (Ex. xxx. 34-36), but at the same time inefficacious for its peculiar uses until consumed by fire from the altar of burnt-offering; thus consumed, however, it was that without which the High Priest could not enter the Holy of Holies to offer the blood of the Atonement (Lev. xvi. 12-14), and with which every morning and evening was sanctified (Ex. xxx. 7-9). What can it symbolize but the excellencies of the God-man, most holy in their normal condition, but made effluent and efficacious for atonement and sanctification only by fire from the Altar of Sacrifice?—E. R. C.]

That he should add it to the prayers.—Ταῖς προσευχαῖς has been differently interpreted to mean: as the prayers; in the prayers; or among them. The attempt has also been made by emendations and constructions to improve the simple sense, that this incense was intended for the prayers of the saints, that is, for their heavenly supplementation and perfection (Vitr., Calov. and others).

Upon the golden altar.—This, according to Ebrard, is the altar of incense, whilst, on the other hand, the altar mentioned elsewhere, in vers. 8 and 5, is an altar of burnt-offering. The altar of burnt-offering in ch. vi. 9 should not be cited in support of this view, for that is to be found, in a symbolical sense, on earth. If, however, this description of a golden altar before the Throne be applied to the idea of the Temple, the golden altar is the Ark of the Covenant, ch. xi. 19. The Ark of the Covenant was really an altar, and that the third and holiest; it was also golden. According to Lev. xvi. 12—a passage misconstrued by Ebrard, p. 281; see in opposition to him Düsterdieck, p. 305—the offering of incense was, on the great Day of Atonement, made over the Ark of the Covenant in the Holy of holies.*

* [The American Editor is unable to find the slightest foundation for the assertion, that the Ark of the Covenant was an Altar. Most certainly it is not implied in ch. xi. 19; and the offering of Lev. xvi. 13 was before the Lord, and consequently before the Ark, which supported the Mercy-seat. That, in the second reference, the ascending cloud of incense covered both the Mercy-seat and the Ark, most certainly does not imply that the offering was made either upon or over the latter; and also, manifestly, if it implies this in the case of the latter, it must also in that of the former, and so the reference proves not only that the Ark, but that the Mercy-seat was an Altar! It is inconceivable that the Ark should, in the Divine intent, have been an Altar without

* [See foot-note on p. 175 (first column).—E. R. C.]

Ver. 4. And the smoke . . . ascended.—EBRARD: "The prayers of the Saints had ascended long before this; but had hitherto not been heard." This relation between earthly prayers and heavenly intercessions, or perfectings, cannot possibly, however, be thus parted into separate times.* The human prayers are, as it were, swallowed up by the smoke of the heavenly incense, whose attributive destination is "to the prayers of the Saints;" in this form, the smoke rises before God—locally speaking, this can mean only: over the Ark of the Covenant. Thus is the perfect acceptability of the prayers expressed. Their acceptance and answering is also, however, symbolically set forth.

Ver. 5. And the Angel took the censer.—He fills it with fire from the altar of incense, and casts the fire upon the earth. Thus, rightly, Düsterdieck. Ebrard, on the other hand, is of opinion, that he must have taken the fire from the altar of burnt-offering, and then have set the censer down upon the altar of incense. Hence the fire, he thinks, is indicative of the flame in which the martyrs were burned, and is to be regarded as a fire of judgment. It is not to be wondered at that Hengstenberg even here finds a close connection between the fire of prayer and the fire of seal which shall consume the adversaries. According to him, the silence in Heaven itself is but a silence of the annihilated enemies of God upon earth (p. 424 [Eng. Trans., p. 392 sq.]). Here, however, we have to do with the heavenly fire of Divine providence, which, having perfected the prayers, is now become a fire of saving grace. By its being cast upon the earth, the earth is rendered capable of bearing the judgments now following; by no means, however, are these voices, thunders, lightnings and earthquake significant of the judgments themselves. Comp. the voices, Matt. iii. 17; xvii. 5; the thunder, John xii. 29; the earthquake, Matt. xxviii. 2; Acts iv. 31; xvi. 26.

[The fire with which the incense was ignited was taken from the altar of burnt-offering (Lev. xvi. 12); it is probable, however, that the coals cast upon the earth were taken from the golden altar, where the incense had been consumed; the fire of sacrifice which made effluent the virtues of Christ for the blessing of His people is poured back on earth for vengeance.† The any distinct declaration of the fact in the Pentateuch; and not only so, but the supposition is inconsistent with the ideas manifestly attached to both the Ark and the Altar. The former, containing the moral law, was the foundation of the Divine Throne; the latter was the platform of human service.—E. R. C.]

* [Is it not absolutely necessary for us to hypothesize a certain kind of separation? The prayers of saints are always acceptable to God, and are always accepted by Him, through the merits of Christ; but, though accepted, they are not always efficacious for the immediate procurement of the results asked for, even where the bestowment of these results is in the Divine purpose. For ages the entire Church Militant upon the earth have, day by day, offered the prayer for the complete establishment of the Kingdom of Righteousness, and yet the bestowment of the object of that prayer has been deferred (comp. ch. vi. 10, 11). These prayers have, in a sense, to speak, been gathered up by Jesus, and in due time they will be urged before the Throne with the incense of His intercession, and the answer will be bestowed.—E. R. C.]

† [Barnes is of opinion that, "by casting the censer upon the earth," "it is designed to show that, notwithstanding following explanation is suggested in Kitto's Cyc. (Art. INCENSE), which is worthy of consideration: "A silver shovel was first filled with live coals (at the altar of burnt-offering), and afterwards emptied into a golden one, smaller than the former, so that some of the coals were spilled (Mishna, Tamid, v. 5, Yoma, iv. 4)." It is possible that this Temple custom may have been reproduced in the vision; the preceding explanation, however, seems the more probable.—E. R. C.]

Hengstenberg regards the earthquake as "the presage of imminent great revolutions." But, be it observed, the earthquake was induced by fire from Heaven, which can here properly be said only of reformation. [?]

For general observations on the first four Trumpets, see Düsterdieck, p. 308.

Vers. 6, 7.

FIRST TRUMPET.

Ver. 7. Hail and fire, mingled with blood.—Comp. Ex. ix. 24; Joel ii. 30. Düst.: "To explain allegorically all that John now sees," i. e. to assume that the Apocalypse is a symbolico-allegorical Book, ["is an undertaking, which, there being no ground for it whatever in the text, can lead to nothing but arbitrary guess-work."]* By sticking to the letter of the text, on the other hand, we arrive at the conclusion, that the third part of the earth (the surface of the earth, with all that is thereon) is burnt up, "and, still more, the third part of the trees and all the grass upon the whole earth." All the abortive interpretations in the world cannot make us abandon our conviction that the Apocalypse has an allegorical meaning.†

Düsterdieck cites Bede: Pæna gehennæ; Grotius: Judæorum obduratio and iracundia sanguinaria (not bad!); Wetstein: Arma civilia, etc., p. 310. Sander, better than many others, interprets the figure as significant of the fire of false devotion, joined with bloodshed, placing the same, however, in the definite period of the the prayer that would be offered, great and fearful calamities would come upon the earth, . . . as if the prayers were not heard any longer, or as if prayer were now in vain.—E. R. C.]

* [The portion within the brackets is supplied from Düsterdieck, Lange having ended the quotation with an "etc." before his own comment.—E. R. C.]

† [The question is not whether the Apocalypse has an allegorical meaning—that is admitted by all—but as to whether everything in it is always allegorical, or rather mediately symbolical. This, it would seem, our Author himself does not always claim; for he admits, and must admit, that sometimes when Heaven and Earth and Angels are mentioned, the real Heaven and Earth and real Angels are intended, and that always when God is spoken of, the Divine Being is designated. Indeed, it seems scarcely possible to construct an allegory in which some portion of the figures will not be natural; and most certainly the union of the Natural with the Symbolic appears everywhere else throughout the prophetic Scriptures. The following examples are taken from an excellent article on this subject by Elliott (Hor. Apoc. Vol. I., p. 357 sq.): Ezek. xxvii. 28. "In this passage Tyre is symbolised as a ship, and Nebuchadnezzar as the destroying wind that shipwrecked it; yet the chorographic phrase: in the midst of the sea, designates the literal locality of the situation of Tyre, and the 'East,' that of the kingdom of Nebuchadnezzar with respect to it." Ps. lxxx. 8, 11: "Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt. . . . It sent out its boughs unto the sea, and its branches unto the river." Here, "though the vine is symbolic, yet the Egypt, sea (Mediterranean), and river (Nubates) are all notoriously literal." See also Ezek. xxxii. 2-16; Jer. lii. 6; Is. lvii. 5, etc.—E. R. C.]

time succeeding Constantine. The Kreuzritter thinks the migration of nations is referred to. Paulus believes that a great scarcity and famine is intended (the soil and vegetation being particularly involved in the dispensation). Gärtner thinks there is a reference to Arianism.

[By this Trumpet, Elliott and Barnes understand the desolation of the Western Empire by the Goths under Alaric and Rhadagastius (see p. 201; where also Elliott's exposition of "the third part" may be found). These commentators regard their hypothesis as confirmed by the fact, that the nature of one of the elements of the plague (hail) indicates it as coming from the North, and the further fact that it was upon "the land" indicates that it was to fall on the continental provinces. Both these conditions were fulfilled in the invasion contemplated. Bishop Newton, who previously presented this view, farther supports it by the following extract from Philostorgius, a historian who wrote in this period: "The sword of the barbarians destroyed the greatest multitude of men; and among other calamities, dry heats with flashes of flame and whirlwinds of fire occasioned various and intolerable terrors; yea, and hail greater than could be held in a man's hand fell down in several places, weighing as much as eight pounds (Hist. Ecc. l. ii. ch. 7). He also quotes from Claudian, who, in his poem on this very war, (De Bello Getico, ver. 178), compares the invaders to a storm of hail.—E. R. C.]

Vers. 8, 9.

SECOND TRUMPET.

See Jer. li. 25; Ex. vii. 20.

"The text," remarks Düsterdieck, "contains nothing of an allegorical nature." And this though the literal apprehension admits of positively no well-founded conception. The above-cited commentator quotes, in illustration of the allegorical interpretation, Bede: Diabolus, etc., in mare sæculi misus est; Grotius: The mountain is the arz Antonia in Jerusalem; Hengstenberg, who, he says, "entertains, in general, the view, that all the Trumpet-visions except the last are representative of the same thing, vis. war;" Ebrard: The volcanic, Titanic energy of egoism, etc. Ebrard likewise supposes that the mountain is a volcano (like the Throne of God, ch. iv.), which, by reason of its inward raging violence, plunges into the sea (ἰσχυρὸν is subversive of this view). Düsterdieck believes the ὥς to be indicative of the fact, that only a mass of fire resembling a great mountain is intended. But since the mountain is always significant of a fixed and permanent order of things, ὥς merely denotes that this mountain lacks the reality of the spiritual mountain nature. The same truth is involved in the fact, that the mountain is on fire, and that hence, to counteract its conflagration, it is thrown into the sea. Christian history is acquainted with many such burning mountains, which, by reason of fanaticism, have incurred judgment—beginning with the destruction of Jerusalem, the fall of Judaism, the casting of which into the sea of nations resulted in a considerable empoisonment of national life. Similarly, not only have states subsequently fallen—as, for instance, the Eastern Roman Empire—but also a series of dynasties, being become a prey to fanaticism, have been hurled from their proud eminence.

Sander holds that the Arian controversies are here predicted. The Kreuzritter regards the passage as expressive of the maritime supremacy of the Roman Empire; while Gärtner maintains that the erroneous doctrines of the Orient, and Islam, etc., are denoted. In short, every variety of arbitrary interpretation attaches to the passage. [For other views, see on p. 201 sqq.—E. R. C.]*

Vers. 10, 11.

THIRD TRUMPET.

Ver. 10. There fell a great star from the Heaven.—The literal apprehension brings with it such queries as these: whether the star itself were devoted to perdition, or whether perdition consisted but in the falling of the star; how one star could fall upon so many streams and springs; and how it is that wormwood, which is not a deadly poison, can here have such bitter effects. Düsterdieck remarks, à propos of the last question, that natural wormwood is not meant here, immediately breaking out again into a polemic against allegorizing expositors, i. e., expositors of allegories.

We cannot deny that the most aimless and arbitrary play of interpretation again meets us at this passage. Pelagius, Arius (H. W. Rinck thinks Arius is here intended—a view which is also held by Renan, Strauss, Schenkel and their associates), Romulus Augustulus and Gregory the Great file past us in accordance with more ancient conceptions of the great star, whilst the synchrono-historical interpretation advances the Jewish fanatic Eleazar (Düsterdieck, p. 818). According to Ebrard, the star is, "as it were, the natural spirit of bitterness, the power of bitterness or embitterment, sent down by God in visible concentration, so to speak, as a judgment upon the earth." Sander construes the star as false asceticism, monkish morality, constantly developing after Constantine's time. According to Paulus, apostasy is intended. According to Gärtner, "the adulterations of doctrine by the Romish bishops and priests" (thus the Kreuzritter).

Even the external form of the star has been the subject of a superfluity of conflicting conjectures: it has been represented as a shooting-star of great magnitude (Züllig, Ewald); a comet (Wetstein); a "great star" in the literal sense of the words (Düsterdieck). On the import of the star see Dan. xii. 8; Jude 13. On the fountains see Prov. xiii. 14; xiv. 27; xviii.

* [Elliott and Barnes suppose that this plague relates to the ravages of the Vandals under Genseric. The latter thus writes: "The symbol of a blazing or burning mountain, torn from its foundation and precipitated into the ocean, would well represent this mighty nation moved from its ancient seat and borne along toward the maritime parts of the Empire." The former confines the conquest to "the maritime provinces of Africa and the islands—all, in short, that belonged to the Western Empire in the Mediterranean. Both refer largely to Gibbon and other historians to show that the Vandals were principally a naval power, and that their ravages were confined to the maritime provinces and islands of the Mediterranean, and to the destruction of the fleets of the Empire, two of which were completely destroyed.—E. R. C.]

4; xxv. 26. On the river see 2 Kings v. 12; Isa. viii. 6; Ezek. xlvii. 1. [See also pp. 201 sq.—E. R. C.]*

Ver. 12.

FOURTH TRUMPET.

The third part of the sun.—It is necessary here to lay special stress upon the fact, that in treating of the Trumpets we have to do with spiritual affairs—not with natural phenomena. It is, therefore, somewhat superfluous to ask whether a natural percussio of the sun (after the Rabbins) or a supernatural one (in accordance with Wolf) be meant; whether a temporal third of the luminary (in accordance with Ebrard) or a local third (in accordance with Düsterdieck) be intended.

These ideas, since they have no symbolic significance, are not to be pressed; the idea, however, that the third part of the brightness of the luminary is smitten or done away with (according to Bengel, Böhmer and others) is, as we think, the true one. This is to be understood, in the first place, as touching the effect of the luminary, and it must be limited to its general effect in time; it should not be taken as an effect prejudicial to every individual Christian. Thus, when the third part of the sunshine is extinguished, this fact corresponds with the loss of the third part of the capacity of the human spiritual vision for taking in the sunlight—the third part of man's love and kinship to spiritual sunlight. The thing meant is a more general obscuration of the light of revelation; an obscuration conditioned upon human guilt and modified by a fraction of the numeral of spirit. But as amid this obscuration there are those for whom all three thirds of the sun are smitten—men walking in the darkness of night—so, on the other hand, there are those who have the full light of the firmament. The censure which De Wette and Düsterdieck cast upon the Seer as having “unnaturally” followed out the uniformity existing between the third of the luminary and the third of the day or night-time, rests only upon a prejudice in favor of the sensuous conception of the passage, i. e., upon a failure to recognize its symbolicalness. Ebrard qualifies his interpretation of the third as a temporal third with the remark: “This is conceivable in the vision; scarcely so in reality. Here also therefore, the vision must contain a prophetic symbol.” He adds: “Hengstenberg is, as usual, ready with his allegorical application of the vision to anxious and gloomy times of war. Vitringa, by the sun, apprehended the Roman Emperor; by the moon, the Patriarchs [ecclesiastical]; by the stars, the bishops; by the whole vision, Arianism, together with the migration of nations, etc.” Other interpretations see noted in Düsterdieck, p. 814: The troubling of the Church by false brethren, heresy, Islam, political disorders, Goths and Vandals, etc. Sander justly remarks: “No positive operation of hostile powers, no distinct and single perverted tendency is here spoken of; it is something purely negative—a suppression of light, a recession of truth, subsequent to the operation of the three perverted tendencies already mentioned” [first three Trumpets]. He thinks this condition belongs to the time of the Middle Ages. The Kreuzritter makes this Trumpet refer to the operations of Mohammedanism. Gärtner finds the Beast from the abyss here indicated—the sovereignty of the people, which is to set up a false religion. Gräber interprets the obscuratio as significant of the stoppage of the machine of state, the disturbance of magistratic affairs. The reverse of this dismal darkening see in Is. xxx. 26. The opposite of the latter idea see in Is. xxiv. 28, and again in Is. xiii. 10. On the symbolism of the sun, Mal. iv. 2. For the figure of the moon, Gen. xxxvii. 9 may not be without significance. Feminine nature, natural life, nocturnal consciousness: kindred ideas. The Kreuzritter applies the darkening of the moon to the darkening of natural wisdom, science, civilization and culture, by Mohammedanism. Düsterdieck thinks the first four Trumpets have reference to cosmical foretokens of the end of the world, in accordance with Matt. xxiv. 29. [See also pp. 201 sq.—E. R. C.]*

* [Barnes and Elliott (and historical interpreters generally) understand by the events under this Trumpet the ravages of the Huns under Attila. A brief abstract of the views of the former was presented on p. 201. The latter writes: “It is not a lurid meteor (lurid, pale, ghostly) that is here referred to, but a bright, intense, blazing star—emblem of fiery energy, of rapidity of movement and execution, of splendor of appearance—such as a chieftain of high endowments, of impetuosity of character, and of richness of apparel, would be. In all languages, probably, a meteor flaming through the sky has been an emblem of some splendid genius causing or threatening desolation and ruin; of a warrior who has moved along in a brilliant but destructive path over the world, and who has been regarded as sent to execute the vengeance of Heaven.” All these points he finds realized in Attila, whose common appellation is “the Scourge of God.” He finds a further confirmation of his view in the facts that (1) “the principal operations of Attila were in the region of the Alps (the fountains of waters) and on the portions of the Empire whence the river flow down into Italy;” (2) “at least a third part of the Empire was invaded and desolated by him;” (3) “the meteor seemed to be absorbed in the waters: their power (the Huns) seemed to be concentrated under Attila; he alone appeared as the leader of this formidable host; and when he died, all (their) concentrated power was dissipated.” (A full detail of the career of Attila may be found in Gibbon, chs. xxiv., xxv.)—E. R. C.]

* [Barnes and Elliott refer this prophecy to the Era of Odoacer, by whom the name and office of the Roman Emperor of the West were abolished. In support of this view, Barnes thus writes: “Of the effect of the reign of Odoacer, Mr. Gibbon remarks: ‘In the division and decline of the empire, the tributary harvests of Egypt and Africa were withdrawn; the numbers of the inhabitants continually decreased with the means of subsistence; and the country was exhausted by the irretrievable losses of war, famine and pestilence. St. Ambrose has deplored the ruin of a populous district, which had been once adorned with the flourishing cities of Bologna, Modena, Regium and Piacenza. Pope Gelasius was a subject of Odoacer; and he affirms, with strong exaggeration, that in Emilia, Tuscany, and the adjacent provinces, the human species was almost extirpated. One third of those ample estates, to which the ruin of Italy is originally imputed, was extorted for the use of the conquerors’ (ch. xxv.). Yet the light was not wholly extinct. It was ‘a third part’ of it which was put out; and it was still true that some of the forms of the ancient constitution were observed—that the light still lingered before it wholly passed away. In the language of another (Elliott, Hor. Apoc., Vol. I., p. 383 sq.). ‘The authority of the Roman name had not yet entirely ceased. The Senate of Rome continued to assemble as usual. The consuls were appointed yearly—one by the Eastern Emperor, one by Italy and Rome. Odoacer himself governed Italy under a title (that of Patrician), conferred on him by the Eastern Emperor. There was still a certain, though often faint, recognition of the supreme imperial authority. The moon and the stars might seem still to shine in the West, with a dim, reflected light. In the course of the events, however, which rapidly followed in the next half century, these too were extinguished. After above a century and a half of calamities unexampled almost, as Dr. Robertson most truly represents it, in the History of

Ver. 18.

[ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE THREE WOES.]

Ver. 18. An eagle.—DE WETTE: "An angel in the form of an eagle." (Thus other commentators.) There is no need arbitrarily to augment the symbolical angelic forms. According to De Wette, μεσσηνισμὸς here, as in ch. xiv. 6, means through the midst of Heaven. But the passage cited forms part of a Heaven-scene, whilst the one which we are now examining occurs in the midst of an Earth-scene. Düsterdieck rejects the opinion set forth by Ewald in his first Comm., viz., that the middle space betwixt the vault of Heaven and the Earth is intended, but seems to think that his [Düsterdieck's] own explanation—through the meridian altitude of Heaven—is identical with that of De Wette. (Of course, Düsterdieck's interpretation must be taken approximatively, the zenith being only a point, affording no space for the flight of an eagle.) [De Wette, it would seem, uses the term "Heaven" in the sense of the place of God's visible presence, whilst Düsterdieck employs the word as significant of the firmament above us.—Tr.]

The Three Woes have reference to the subsequent three Trumpets; they are, therefore, entirely new calamities, exceeding the former ones. They come as visitations upon the human race; they are woes in the strict sense of the term, however—as bringing destruction—only to the earthly-minded dwellers upon the Earth.

Interpretations: EBRARD: "The world has become a putrefying carcase; the eagle of judgment flies along, croaking (?) his thrice-uttered woe." Referring to Matt. xxiv. 28. (Similarly Herder, Böhmer, Volkmar.)

HENGSTENBERG: The eagle here forms a contrast to the dove, John i. 82. "Whether the woe, is intended to recall the croaking of the raven, as Hofmann supposes, we will not undertake to decide."

"According to JOACHIM, the eagle is Gregory the Great." The same, then, who, according to another, was represented by the falling star.

DE LYRA applied the eagle to John; it is certain that it is Johannine, as a symbol of Apocalyptic prophecy. (Similarly the Kreuzritter, p. 480.) [See also on pp. 201 sq.—E. R. C.]

Chap. ix. 1.

FIFTH TRUMPET, OR THE FIRST WOE.*

Ch. ix. 1. I saw a star fallen from the Heaven to the Earth.—Its fall is done; it

Nations, the statement of Jerome—a statement couched under the very Apocalyptic figure of the text, but prematurely pronounced on the first taking of Rome by Alaric—might be considered at length accomplished: Christianum terrarum hunc extirpationem est—The world's glorious sun has been extinguished; or, as the modern poet (Byron, Childe Harold, Canto IV.) has expressed it, still under the Apocalyptic imagery:

"She saw her glories star by star expire,"

Will not even one star remained to glimmer in the vacant and dark night." The passage from Robertson (Charles V. pp. 11, 12) is: "If a man were called on to fix upon a period in the history of the world during which the history of the human race was the most calamitous, he would without hesitation name that which elapsed from the death of Theodosius to the establishment of the Lombards in Italy."—E. R. C.]

* [Elliott and Barnes, in accordance with Bishop Newton and many other historical interpreters, understand by this has fallen hither from Heaven to judgment, Luke x. 18; Is. xiv. 12. A star—therefore not an Angel (Eichhorn); either good (Bengel) or bad (Düsterdieck); certainly not the devil (Bede, against which view ch. xii. 9 militates). According to Düsterdieck, the ideas of star and Angel are confluent (Ps. ciii. 21; Jer. xxxiii. 22). Here, however, where distinct symbols or conceptions are treated of, the two forms must be kept separate. If we suppose the locusts to be phantasies originating in psychical gloom, we may take the star, which has fallen from Heaven, to be repentance without faith, or the sorrow of this world—so-called Cain or Judas repentance—or the remorse and penance of religious self-torment, whether clothed in a more ancient and mediæval or a more modern form. Comp. John xiii. 80; 1 John iii. 21.

Trumpet the woes under the Saracenic invasions. They support this view by considerations such as the following: 1. The admixture of the human with the bestial (vers. 7, 8) seems to imply, that the agents in this woe were men. 2. It is implied, that they were actuated by a false religion by vers. 1-3, 11. 3. That they were symbolized by locusts (ver. 3) indicates (1), that they were from the Orient, Arabia especially (see an exceedingly able article by Elliott [Hor. Apoc. Vol. I., pp. 420 sq.] on "The Local Appropriateness of Scripture Symbols"); (2) that they ravaged in numerous and immense armies as succeeding swarms; (3) their destructiveness. 4. The peculiarities of appearance presented vers. 7-10 are strikingly principally horsemens: (1) like unto horses, they were principally horsemen; (2) crowns like unto gold, their peculiar head-dresses—turban adorned with gold (Elliott) or yellow (Barnes); (3) faces like men, bearded; (4) hair like women, they wore their hair (unlike other military nations) long. ("In that most characteristic of Arab poems, Antar—a poem composed at the time I speak of—we find the mustache and the beard, the long hair flowing on the shoulders, and the turban also, are specified: l. 340; 'He adjusted himself properly, twirled his whiskers, and folded up his hair under his turban, drawing it from off his shoulders.' l. 169; 'His hair flowed down his shoulders.' ll. 117; 'Antar cut off Maad's hair in revenge.' iv. 325; 'We will hang him up by his hair.' ll. 4; 'Thou foul-mustachied wretch!' Elliott); (5) teeth like lions, their ferocity; (6) breastplates as of iron, "Sale's Koran ii. 104, 'God hath given you coats of mail to defend you in your wars'" (Elliott). 5. The addition of the scorpion (also pointing to the Orient) sting, ver. 10, indicates (1) that their agency was to be on men, and not as the simple locust figure would have indicated, on vegetation, ver. 4. (It was the command of the Caliph Aboubekr, the father-in-law and successor of Mohammed, in accordance with the spirit of the Koran, issued to the Saracens on the invasion of Syria, "Destroy no palm trees, nor burn any fields of corn; cut down no fruit trees, nor do any mischief to cattle, only such as you kill to eat." Gibbon, ch. li.); (2) that it was to be a tormenting, not an utterly destructive, agency, ver. 5 (the sting of the scorpion is exceedingly painful, but not ordinarily fatal, see Books of Travel generally. In reference to the nature of this woe, as thus appropriately symbolized, the following is extracted from Barnes):

"[As applicable to the conflicts of the Saracens with Christians (Christendom, the external Church), the meaning here would seem to be, that the power conceded to those who are represented by the locusts was not to cut off and to destroy the Church; but it was to bring upon it various calamities to continue for a definite period. . . . In respect to this, some remarkable facts have occurred in history. The followers of the False Prophet contemplated the subjugation of Europe and the destruction of Christianity from two quarters—the East and the West—expecting to make a junction of the two armies in the North of Italy, and to march down to Rome. Twice did they attack the vital part of Christendom by besieging Constantinople; first, in the seven years' siege, which lasted from A. D. 668 to A. D. 675, and secondly, in the years 716-718, when Leo the Isaurian was on the Imperial throne. But, on both occasions, they were obliged to retire defeated and disgraced. Gibbon, iii. 461 seq. Again, they renewed their attack on the West. Having conquered Northern Africa, they passed over into Spain, subdued that country and Portugal, and extended their conquests as far as the Loire. At that time they designed to subdue France, and having united with the forces which they expected from the East, they intended to make a descent on Italy, and complete the conquest of Europe. This

To him was given, etc.—It is the key of the pit of the Abyss, and is given him only after his fall. Repentance was in Heaven at first, but, through want of submission, fell to Earth, a fallen star, receiving now the melancholy ability to open the pit of the Abyss, the demonic domain of the lower realm of the dead. On the Abyss, comp. the Lexicons. The pit, φύλαξ, denotes the mouth of the Abyss; the mouth being significant of the close connection and readily opened communication between human psychical life and the demonic domain.

Different interpretations of the star see in De Wette, p. 102:—(Lyra): Valens; (Grotius): Eleazar; (Herder): Menahem, the son of Judas. The Abyss: the fortress Masada. Abaddon: Simon, the son of Gorion. A singular interpretation is given by Alcasar: the Mosaic Law.

According to Hengstenberg, the star is an ideal person, a line of rulers, the last and grandest form being Napoleon. Sander: Mohammed and his Islam. Gärtner: Arius. The Kreuzritter: The hierarch; he regards the ascending smoke as enthusiasm and fanaticism.

[BARNES (on ch. viii. 10): "A star is a natural emblem of a prince, of a ruler, of one distinguished by rank or by talent. See Num. xxiv. 17 and Isa. xiv. 12. A star falling from Heaven would be a natural symbol of one who had left a higher station, or of one whose character and course would be like a meteor shooting through the sky." And in loc.: "This denotes a leader, a military chieftain, a warrior. In the fulfillment of this, we look for the appearance of some mighty prince and warrior, to whom is given power, as it were, to open the bottomless pit, and to summon forth its legions." [ALFORD: "The reader will at once think on Isa. xiv. 12: 'How art thou fallen from Heaven, purpose was defeated by the valor of Charles Martel, and Europe and the Christian world were saved from subjugation. Gibbon iii. 489. "A victorious line of march," says Mr. Gibbon, "had been prolonged above a thousand miles, from the rock of Gibraltar to the mouth of the Loire; the repetition of an equal space would have carried the Saracens to the confines of Poland and the highlands of Scotland. The Rhine is not more impassable than the Nile or the Euphrates, and the Arabian fleet might have sailed without a naval combat into the mouth of the Thames. Perhaps the interpretation of the Koran would now be taught in the schools of Oxford, and her pulpits might demonstrate to a circumcised people the sanctity and truth of the revelations of Mahomet." The arrest of the Saracen hosts before Europe was subdued, was what there was no reason to anticipate, and it even yet perplexes historians to be able to account for it. "The calm historian," says Mr. Gibbon, "who strives to follow the rapid course of the Saracens, must study to explain by what means the church and state were saved from this impending, and, as it should seem, inevitable danger." "These conquests," says Mr. Hallam, "which astonish the careless and superficial, are less perplexing to a calm inquirer than their cessation—the loss of half the Roman empire than the preservation of the rest" (Middle Ages ii. 3, 166). These illustrations may serve to explain the meaning of the symbol—that their gain and commission was not to annihilate or root out, but to annoy and afflict. Indeed, they did not go forth with a primary design to destroy. The announcement of the Mussulman always was, 'the Koran, the tribute, or the sword,' and when there was submission, either by embracing his religion or by tribute, life was always spared. 'The fair option of friendship, or submission, or battle,' says Mr. Gibbon (iii. 387), 'was proposed to the enemies of Mahomet.' Comp. also vol. iii. 463, 466."

[6. The length of the war, five months, i. e. (in the prophetic calendar) one hundred and fifty years—the precise length of the Saracenic invasion (see abstract of Elliott on p. 201; and also the Note on Prophetic Days, p. 260.—E. R. C.)

O Lucifer, son of the morning!' And on Luke x. 18: 'I beheld Satan as lightning fall from Heaven.' And doubtless as the personal import of the star is made clear in the following words, such is the reference here. We may also notice that this expression forms a connecting link to another place, ch. xii. 9, in this Book, where Satan is represented as cast out of Heaven to the Earth. . . . It is hardly possible, with Andr. Ribera, Bengel and De W., to understand a good Angel by this fallen star." ELLIOTT agrees with Alford in regarding him as Satan, whom he looks upon as the inspirer of Mohammed. (For other views see on pp. 201 sq.)—E. R. C.]

Ver. 2. And he opened the pit of the abyss.—The smoke. The region of the evil conscience in the realm of the dead is a region of self-burning, like Gehenna, whence the smoke of torment ascends. The Seer knows of a retroaction of the gloomy feelings of this region on the Earth, the more since this region is even to be found in the back-ground of an unfree human soul-life in this world. Hence there results a great darkening of the sun and air.

Ver. 8. Locusts.—Old Testament types, Ex. x. 12-15; Joel i. and ii. In antithesis to natural locusts; which desolate vegetation, these locusts leave unharmed all green things, attacking solely those men who have not the seal of God.

The scorpions of the earth.—(Of the earth; De Wette: in antithesis to the abyss.) See the article Scorpion in Winer, particularly the distinction between the Oriental and the Italian species.

Interpretation of the locusts: Longobards, Vandals, Goths, Persians, Mohammedans, Jewish zealots. Bede and others: The raging of heretics. The Pope and the monks; or, Luther and the Protestants (ancient Protestant exposition—in opposition to Bellarmine and others), etc. Hengstenberg: Martial hosts, see Dürstler, p. 328. "He who, like Hebert (Die zweite sichbare Zukunft Christi, Erlangen, 1850), looks for the literal fulfilment of all these visions, expecting, for instance, the actual appearance of the locusts described in ver. 1 sqq.,* certainly does more justice to the text than any allegorist; by reason of a mechanical conception of inspiration and prophecy, however, he fails to recognize the distinction between real prophetic matter and poetic forms" (Dürstler). Remarkable words, if we consider that by allegorists are understood such as regard the Apocalypse as a Book of allegoric figurative forms.

Ver. 5. Not kill them, but that they shall be tormented [LANGE: torment them].—This trait is characteristic; it runs through ver. 6: They shall seek death and not find it. In itself, this torment is not spiritual death as yet; it is, however, so great as to make men weary of life.

Five months.—The reference of the five

* "The fact that such creatures have never yet been seen should not make us conclude, that they never can or never will come. In the last times many things, till then unheard of, shall come to pass—much thitherto unseen shall grow mortal vision." Thus HERRER. This mode of apprehension, however, has nothing to do with inspiration, as Dürstler thinks, but with literal exegesis.

months to the popular idea that locusts are wont to appear during the five months from May onward (Düsterdieck, p. 823 [Alford]), does not preclude the symbolical significance of the number. Here, too, manifold guesses have been hazarded. See De Wette, p. 102; Düsterdieck, p. 821; Ebrard, p. 294; Sander, p. 70. Vitringa thought he had found the key to the mystery in the following formula: Each day of each month=one year. Bengel defined the month as 15  $\frac{1}{3}$  years. Hengstenberg saw in the number 5, as the number of incompleteness, the sign of half. Thus: "A long time, but not the longest."

Ver. 6. Seek death.—"A terrible counterpart to the ἐπιθυμία of the Apostle, springing from the holiest hope" (Düsterd.).

Vers. 7-10. Like horses.—The likening of the locusts to horses see likewise in Joel i. and ii. As crowns.—Ewald: The antennæ. Düsterdieck and others: A jagged elevation in the middle of the thorax (?). Hengstenberg: The sovereign people. We must not overlook the fact, that the figures are modelled from the idea, as is often the case in the Gospel parables.

Their faces as the faces of men.—Hengstenberg cuts the knot: "Virtually they really were the faces of men." Undoubtedly if they were troops of cavalry!

Ver. 8. Hair as the hair of women.—Hengstenberg: Suffering their hair to grow at will, uncut and untended. Ebrard: "Mild and gentle womanly faces." By this he understands, not inaptly, those women whom, as history shows us, the spirits of the abyss employ as tools to decoy many fools. Yet the text does not speak of women's faces.

As the teeth of lions.—To terrify—not to bite with. Hence the interpretation of Calov. and others is wrong: The false doctrines and blasphemies with which heretics have rent the orthodox Church. Düsterdieck thinks their devolating voracity is symbolized; this quality, however, should not be portrayed here.

Ver. 9. As iron breastplates.—Their thoraxes.

The sound of their wings.—Comp. Joel ii. 5.

Ver. 10. Tails like scorpions.—Does this mean that their tails themselves are like scorpions (Bengel and others); or that they, like scorpions, have tails (Düsterdieck)? The analogy of ver. 19 seems to favor the former supposition. But as we must adhere to the general idea of the locusts, the latter view is the more probable.

Ver. 11. And they have a king over them.—According to Hengstenberg, this king is identical with the fallen star. And certainly it is impossible not to perceive a close affinity between them. If, however, we regard the fallen star, a faithless remorse and penitential self-torment, as the beginning of the plague of locusts, their king surely must be regarded as its consummation—the genius of absolute self-torment. This symbolical king must likewise be distinguished from Satan, for whom Grotius and others take him. The comment: An angel who is, in a peculiar manner, the head of the Abyss (Bengel and others) throws no light on the subject.

14

Abaddon.—See the Lexicons, article אַבְדּוֹן. It occupies in the Old Testament the same relation to Sheol as in the writings of the Rabbins to Hell. [See Excursus on Hades, p. 364.—E. R. C.]

Apollyon.—With reference to ἀπόλλεια. John had himself beheld the truest type of the whole locust plague in the development of Judas, in reference to whom it must be said that even suicide is a seeking of death and not finding it. [See Excursus on Hades.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 12. Behold, there come.—On the singular, ἐρχεται, see Düsterdieck. De Wette reads ἐρχονται, with Cod. B. and others. The following two woes are, according to the arrangement of the Seer, intensively as well as extensively greater. The climax, intensively viewed, may be stated as follows: Penitential self-torment; the spiritual death of heresy; consummate apostasy. Extensively defined: An infliction of torment upon such men as have not the seal of God; an infliction of death upon the third part of men; and, moreover, double hurtfulness; an apparent general fall into destruction by the reception of the mark of the Beast. See ch. xiv. 9-11.

Ver. 13 sqq.

SIXTH TRUMPET, OR THE SECOND WOE.*

In consequence of the omission of the utterances of the seven Thunders, ch. x., the esoteric sketch of the cycle in question is incorporated in the sixth Trumpet. And this makes it possible to regard the sixth Trumpet as a double Trumpet.

* [Elliott and Barnes, in accordance with Bishop Newton and many other distinguished historical interpreters, understand by the events under this Trumpet the Woe of the Turkish invasions (see pp. 201 sq.). The following is an abstract of the alleged parallelism between the prophecy and history, in view of which this view has been adopted and supported. (In the arrangement of the points, the plan of Barnes has been, in great measure, followed.) 1. The place of departure: ver. 14 declares this to be the Euphrates; it is a well known fact, that the Turks went forth from this river on their career of conquest. 2. The four Angels: ver. 14: Barnes explains this by referring to the fourfold division of the old Turkish Empire, previous to the outpouring on the remains of the Roman Empire into four Kingdoms—Persia, Kerman, Syria and Roum (Gibbon, ch. lvii.); Elliott discards this and all similar divisions, and suggests, that the number four was chosen either (a) in accordance with the propriety of the figure as indicating that there would be a general outpouring, in correspondence with the four winds which are the proverbial representatives of all winds, or else (b) as indicating that the tempest Angels (ch. vii. 1) loosed in the Saracenic woe were subsequently bound at the Euphrates. 3. The preparation: ver. 15: the Turkish Empire, having its seat about and to the East of the Euphrates, had long been growing in power and fitness to subdue the Eastern Roman Empire; long before their attack upon the latter, they had become the most powerful nation on the earth (see Gibbon, ch. lvii.). 4. Bound and loosed: vers. 14, 15: it is a matter of surprise that the powerful Empire which had subdued the East should so long have refrained from moving westward; it would seem as though they had been restrained by some superior power. 5. The material of their armies: ver. 16 implies that this was cavalry, the well known principal element of the Turkish hosts. 6. Their numbers: ver. 16, two myriads of myriads; the Turkish armies were immense. Gibbon says (ch. lvii.): "The myriads of Turkish horse overspread a frontier of six hundred miles, etc." (It is probable, if this hypothesis be correct, that the number relates to the entire number engaged throughout the period of the invasions.) 7. The numeration: by myriads, ver. 16: it is one of the peculiarities of the Turks to speak of numbers, not as we do, by thousands, but by myriads (myriads), "so that it is not without his usual propriety of language that Gibbon speaks (as in the quotation in the preceding division) of 'the myriads of Turkish horse'" (Elliott). 8. Their personal appearance: ver. 17, "breastplates fiery, hya-

It is half the Trumpet of heresies; half the Trumpet of beginning apostasy. Hence the second woe is continued through ch. x. to ch. xi. 14. Hence, also, it results that the second woe is in two stages. At the end of the first stage, men do not repent of the works of their hands, ch. ix. 20; at the end of the second stage, there is at least a repentance of fear, ch. xi. 13. Still it must be observed that the section consisting of chs. x. and xi. to ver. 14 is representative of an entirely new cycle—a cycle connected with the preceding section only from ch. xi. 7. The connection between the two consists in the fact, that in ch. ix. we have to do with the spiritual end of the course of the world; in ch. xi. 7 sqq., with the spiritual beginning of the end of the world. Thus at the revelation of the consummate offence, the precursory offences form themselves into a unit. See 2 Thess. ii. 7, 8.

Ver. 13. A voice from the four horns.— cinthine and sulphurous;" Danbus remarks: "From their first appearance, the Ottomans have affected to wear warlike apparel of scarlet, blue and yellow." 9. The heads of the horses as the heads of lions, ver. 17; indicative (1) of their strength and fierceness—these were well-known characteristics of the Turkish cavalry; (2) not only of the characteristics, but of the titles of the heads or leaders; Gibbon writes (ch. liv.): "The name of Alp Arslan, the Valiant Lion, is expressive of the popular idea of the perfection of man; and the successor of Togrul Bey displayed the fierceness and generosity of the royal animal. He passed the Euphrates, and entered Cesarea, etc." Elliott remarks (vol. I., p. 498): "This kind of title, which reminds one of those of the American Indians, seems to have been common among the Turks. So Kiril-Arslan, the Red Lion, a chief contemporary with Togrul Bey; and again Kilidge Arslan (Noble Lion) etc." and again he writes (p. 510): "So Rycaut on the Turks, ch. xxi.: 'The Turks compare the Grand Seigneur to the lion, and other kings to little dogs.'" 10. Out of their mouths, etc., ver. 17. Barnes remarks: "This is just such a description as would be given of an army to which the use of gunpowder was known. Looking now upon a body of cavalry in the heat of an engagement, it would seem, if the cause were not known, that the horses belched forth smoke and sulphurous flame;" the use of fire-arms by the Turks in their invasion of the Eastern Empire is one of the established facts of history. 11. The destructive agency, ver. 18: Not only did the Turks use fire-arms, but to this agency, more than to aught else, was their success due, as appears from the following remarks of Gibbon in reference to the siege of Constantinople, ch. lxviii.: "Among the implements of destruction, he (the Turkish Sultan) studied with peculiar care the recent and tremendous discovery of the Latins; and his artillery surpassed whatever had yet appeared in the world. A founder of cannon, a Dane or Hungarian, who had almost starved in the Greek service, deserted to the Moslems, and was liberally entertained by the Turkish Sultan. Mohammed was satisfied with the answer to his first question, which he eagerly pressed on the artist: 'Am I able to cast a cannon capable of throwing a ball or stone of sufficient size to batter the walls of Constantinople? I am not ignorant of their strength; but were they more solid than those of Babylon, I could oppose an engine of superior power: the position and management of that engine must be left to your engineers.' On this assurance, a foundry was established at Adrianople, the metal was prepared, and at the end of three months Urban produced a piece of brass ordnance of stupendous and almost incredible magnitude; a measure of twelve palms is assigned to the bore; and the stone bullet weighed above six hundred pounds. A vacant place before the new palace was chosen for the first experiment; but to prevent the sudden and mischievous effects of astonishment and fear, a proclamation was issued that the cannon would be discharged the ensuing day. The explosion was felt or heard in a circuit of a hundred furlongs; the ball, by the force of gunpowder, was driven about a mile; and on the spot where it fell, it buried itself a fathom deep in the ground. . . . The same destructive secret had been revealed to the Moslems, by whom it was employed with the superior energy of zeal, riches and despotism. The great cannon of Mohammed has been separately noticed—an important and visible object in the history of the times. But that enormous engine was flanked by two fellows almost of equal magnitude; the long order of the Turkish artillery was pointed against the walls; fourteen batteries thundered

Not from God, "behind the altar." The four horns of the altar denote the complete, all-sided protective power of the altar. From the same altar on which the prayers of the saints were perfected (ch. viii. 3-5), the signal that they have been heard goes forth. The earth is now, in its sealed ones, prepared by voices and thunders and lightnings and an earthquake of the spiritual life; the greatest temptations may, therefore, now be let loose. The distinction between these new and great temptations and the foregoing ones is at the same time expressed. That which the voice from the horns of the altar says, is, of course, to be traced back to Divine decision. According to Düsterdieck, the misapplication of the horns to the four Gospels (Zeger and others) may have even occasioned the reading—four horns. Nevertheless, four, as the number of completeness, is not devoid of significance in a correct apprehension of the passage.

at once on the most accessible places; and of one of these it was ambiguously expressed that it was mounted with one hundred and thirty guns, and that it discharged one hundred and thirty bullets. From the lines, the galleys, and the bridge, the Ottoman artillery thundered on all sides; and the camp and city, the Greeks and the Turks, were involved in a cloud of smoke which could only be dispelled by the final deliverance or destruction of the Roman empire." In view of such historical facts, Elliott remarks: "It was to 'the fire and the smoke and the sulphur,' to the artillery and firearms of Mahomet, that the killing of the third part of men, i. e., the capture of Constantinople, and by consequence the destruction of the Greek empire, was owing." 12. Power in their tails, ver. 19: on this Elliott remarks "A horse-tail to denote a ruler! Strange association! Unlikely symbol! Instead of symbolising authority and rule, the tail is in other Scriptures put in direct contrast with the head, and made the representative rather of the subjected and the low. Besides which, it is not here the lordly lion's tail, but that of the horse. Who could ever, a priori, have conceived of such an application of it? And yet among the Turks . . . that very association had existence, and still exists to the present day. . . . It is the ensign of one, two or three horse-tails that marks distinctively the dignity and power of the Turkish Pasha." Barnes remarks: "The image before the mind of John would seem to have been that he saw horses belching out fire and smoke, and—what was equally strange—he saw that their power of spreading desolation was connected with the tails of the horses." 13. The number, the third part of the men, ver. 18: this Elliott explains as indicating the overthrow of the Eastern, or one-third of the entire, Empire. Barnes writes: "No one in reading the accounts of the wars of the Turks, and of the ravages which they have committed, would be likely to feel that this is an exaggeration; it is not necessary to suppose that it is literally accurate." 14. The time of continuance—a day, hour, month and year, ver. 15: this period in the prophetic calendar, on the ordinary hypothesis of regarding the prophetic year as consisting of three hundred and sixty days, would equal three hundred and ninety-one years and thirty days. Elliott, however, calls attention to the fact, that the term employed is not the prophetic καρπός, but καιρός; he therefore hypothesizes that the Julian year was intended, and thence deduces as the period contemplated, reckoning twelve hours to the prophetic day (comp. John xi. 9, three hundred and ninety-six years, one hundred and eighteen days. The Turks, according to Abulfeda, went forth from Bagdad on their career of Western conquest on the 10th of Demicalad A. H. 448, which corresponds with January 18th, A. D. 1067; from this to May 29th, 1453, the date of the fall of Constantinople, is three hundred and ninety-six years, one hundred and thirty days; or counting to May 16th, the day on which the investment was completed, the fortieth day of the siege, we have the exact prophetic period. Concerning the fortieth day, we have the "unintended expository words (of Gibbon): 'After a siege of forty days, the fate of Constantinople could be no longer averted.'" 13. The effect, vers. 20, 21: it is notorious that, previous to the Turkish war, nominal Christendom was sunk in a condition of (1) idolatry (the invocation of saints), (2) idolatry (image worship), (3) murders (bloody persecutions), (4) superstitions (incantations and pretended miracles), (5) fornications (abounding impurities), (6) thrifts (indulgence, masses, etc.); and it is equally notorious that this woe was not followed by general repentance.—E. R. C.]

Other interpretations of the four horns see in Düsterdieck, p. 332. How important it is that the trials should not break out before their set time, appears from the fact, that the Angel of the sixth Trumpet may loose the four bound Angels only upon a higher order. The same truth is demonstrated by the co-operation of the sixth Angel. Offences must come.

[The following, abridged from Elliott (Vol. I., pp. 481 sqq.), is worthy of consideration: "When a voice of command issued from the Throne, or some divinely commissioned Angel, it was an intimation that it originated from God; but when proceeding from some other local source, it was indicated that the locality whence the voice proceeded was one associated with sin to be punished (comp. Gen. iv. 10; xxxi. 38; Isa. lxvi. 6; Hab. ii. 11; James v. 4). So here, a cry commissioning judgment from the mystic incense Altar indicates that that Altar had been a scene of special sin. But this explanation is only partial. It would seem as if guilt had been contracted in respect of some ritual in which the horns of the Altar were concerned. There were three such services in the Mosaic ritual. The first two were the occasional atoning services for sins of ignorance; the third that of the Annual Atonement. In all these cases, some of the blood of the sacrifice was put on the horns of the Altar (comp. Ex. xxx. 10; Lev. iv. 8-7, 13-18; xvi. 1-18). It was thus that Hzekiah made atonement for Israel after its apostasy under Ahaz (see 2 Chron. xxix. 20-24). This rite of Atonement having been performed, the promised reconciliation with God followed. From the Temple, and Altar, and each blood-bedewed horn of the altar, a voice, as it were, went forth, not of judgment, but of mercy; instead of summoning destroying armies against Judah from the Euphrates, it staid them (comp. 2 Chron. xxxii. 21; Isa. xxxvii. 38, 34). Thus direct was the contrast between Israel's case under Hzekiah, and that of Christendom as here figured. And now when, after the judgments of successive Trumpets, the Seer heard a voice denouncing judgment yet afresh from the four horns of the golden Altar, what could he infer but this, that in spite of the previous fearful rebukes of their apostasy, neither the priesthood nor the collective people, at least of this third of Christendom, would have repented. More particularly, as the rite had special reference to the sins connected with the incense Altar itself, it was to be inferred that those sins would be persisted in: to wit the abandonment of Christ in His character (1) of the one great propitiatory Atonement, and (2) of the one great Intercessor; and thus the sin would be graven even on the four horns of the golden Altar, and their one and common voice, or that of the intercessorial High Priest from the midst of them, would pronounce the fresh decree of judgment: 'Loose the four Angels to slay the third part of men.'"—E.R.C.]

Ver. 14. Loose the four angels.—The number four being the number of the world, the four symbolical angels represent the collective spirit of the world, collective heathenism, in its infection of Christianity and transformation of Christian truths into powerful lies, 2 Thess. ii. These angels are, therefore, neither bad angels (Bede, Düsterdieck and others), nor good ones (Bossuet), nor destroying ones (De Wette, Ebrard), if, by such, personal beings are understood. As symbolic forms they are, beyond question, evil spirits—yet in angelic shape; as it were in the angelic shape of the one Satanic mask of an Angel of light (2 Cor. xi. 14) in four world-forms. Different interpretations of the quaternary see in Düsterdieck, p. 333.

At the great river.—We doubt not that the hither bank of the great river Euphrates has an import similar to that of Babylon, yet without coinciding with Babylon. Babylon is a peculiar configuration of the spiritual river Euphrates; that river, the general basis and condition of Babylon—spiritual Babylon as the sphere of historical Babylon.

Different interpretations: Parthian armies against the Romans; Roman armies against Jerusalem; Tartars, Turks (the Angels being their commanders). The Euphrates, the Tiber; Babylon, Rome (Wetstein). The Euphrates, the border of Abraham's land, or of the Roman empire.

According to Düsterdieck, the mention of the Euphrates is merely schematical [schematisch], as the region whence plagues usually came in the Old Testament—the Assyrians, for instance. Insignificant enough!

EBERD: "Almost all ancient Protestant exegetes discover in this passage a prediction of Mohammedanism. Grotius, Wetstein, Herder, Eichhorn and others think it prophetic of the army of Titus, which destroyed Jerusalem. De Wette, with Züllig and Ewald, occupies the ground of 'fancy'."

In opposition to these historical conceptions, a just reference has been made to the supernaturalness of the martial hosts portrayed. Düsterdieck will not listen to any allegorical apprehension of this supernaturalness, and so, according to him, these armies are still more incomprehensible than those of the locusts. According to Gärtner (p. 465), the two hundred millions of horses are two hundred millions of devils—hosts of Satan, amongst whom the fanatical faith of Islam, symbolized, as he contends, by the Euphrates, originates. The horsemen are such men as are borne away by the horses.

Ver. 15. The four angels were loosed.—The resistance hitherto made by the power of truth is withdrawn.

Prepared for the hour, etc.—Beautifully expressive of the certainty that these trials, like all hateful things in the world, have their appointed time, and that time only, Luke xxii. 58.

To slay the third part of men.—Only spiritual slaying can be meant here, as is further indicated by "the third part," three being the number of spirit, ch. viii. 7-12.

Ver. 16. And the number.—Two hundred millions [two myriads of myriads]. He did not himself count the hosts, but heard the number through the voice of prophecy; this fact makes the number more than ever significant. It being impossible to conceive of an army of this size, Bengel has added together all the Turkish armies of more than two centuries; Hengstenberg sees an allegorical collective designation of all armies in the number; whilst Düsterdieck takes it as schematical [schematisch]—that is to say, denoting, like the army, nothing definite. But, manifestly, the number itself is allegorical. The myriad is indicative of an enormous number; the formula, myriad times myriad, denotes the infinite productivity of the figures; and, finally, the binary is significant of an antithesis, either of positive and negative offences, or of dogmatical and ethical heresies.

Ver. 17. And thus I saw the horses.—In the vision, he adds, probably because the monstrosity of their appearance necessitates a slight reminder of the fact that we have here to do with allegorical forms; an assumption which Dürstendiek, in his horror of allegory, endeavors to refute.

And those who sat on them.—The horses are of prime importance (see above); their riders, however, are first described. In this place the riders bear the colors of the horses, as the horses the colors of the riders in ch. vi.

Having breastplates.—According to Bengel and others, the riders are here referred to; according to Dürstendiek and others, the words, having breastplates, refer to both horses and riders. This view is contradicted, in the first place, by the impossibility of putting the idea into execution; and, furthermore, by the antithesis between the colors of the breastplates and the destructive stuff issuing from the mouths of the horses. Many hypotheses have been founded on the colors of the breastplates, see Dürstendiek, p. 337. On βάκινθος see Ebrard. He conjectures that this color was dark brown; it cannot but be seen, however, that it must correspond with the color of smoke. Dürstendiek would have it that "dark red" is the corresponding color.

As the heads of lions.—Not actual lions' heads. A cruel and terrific aspect cannot be meant by this, according to Dürstendiek, because it "would undoubtedly correspond better with the allegorical exposition."

It is likewise denied that there is an allegorical meaning to fire, smoke, and brimstone. The combination is, most certainly, found in volcanoes in natura. The significance of these forms, however, appears from the following other passages: ch. xiv. 10, 11; xix. 20; xxi. 10. For different interpretations, see Dürstendiek. The view of Calov., who finds the three substances associated in the Koran, is particularly striking. Other singular exegeses are those of Grotius (burning torches), Hengstenberg and Bengel (the murderous spirit and wanton destructiveness of soldiers). It is worthy of note that the same materials which compose the erring spirit of this world, create the hellish torment of the next: the fire of fanaticism; self-dissolution in ambition and self-seeking; demonic irritability—inflammability.

Ver. 19. For the power of the horses.—They are hurtful in a two-fold manner; with their mouths and with their snake-like tails. Their principal power, however, is in their mouths. On the futile application of this double figure to the fable of two-headed serpents or amphisbænæ (Wetstein, Beng., Herder), see Dürstendiek.

Other interpretations: Bengel: Reference is had to the turning of the Turkish cavalry, to the sudden detriment of their pursuers.

Hengstenberg interprets the hurtful power in the tails as significant of the insidious malignity of martial hosts; for fiery wrath, warlike terrors, and the like, pervade the visions of the fifth and sixth Trumpets particularly, according to him.

Grotius: The tails are indicative of foot soldiers [on the backs of the horses, behind the horsemen].

Sander: They dragged the teachings of their false prophet behind them.

Volkmar has even applied this passage to the kicking out of the horse behind.

The after-effects of all heresies consist in the fact that they poison morals and manners, introducing a destructive element into Christian social life especially, and thus issuing in psychical and physical evils.

Ver. 20. And the rest of the men, who were not killed by these plagues.—The Seer distinguishes between the specific destruction of a third of mankind by the fatal horses and the general corrupt condition of the human race.

Repented not.—Comp. ch. xvi. 11. Their conversion should show itself in a specific abstinence from religious and moral transgressions. The works of their hands, therefore, do not directly denote their whole conversation and walk, but those characteristic sins in which, of a truth, their whole walk was reflected. It has been maintained that idols are thereby indicated, as their own manufacture (Hengstenberg, Dürstendiek); but the first object—τὰ δαιμόνια—stands in the way of this view. This first object is, indeed, of prime importance to the Seer. The meaning is as follows: subtle demon-worship, symbolized by subtle idol-worship offered to images of the most diverse materials; see 1 Cor. x. 20.

Which neither see, etc.—Compare the analogous passages in the Old Testament [Psa. cxv. 4-7; cxxxv. 15-17; Is. xlvii. 7; Jer. x. 5; Dan. v. 23].

Ver. 21. Of their sorceries.—The poison-mingling, as the word might likewise be understood, is already contained in the preceding murders.

Ebrard: "Sorcery is to be understood as seductive enchantments." The reason alleged in support of this view, viz., that true sorcery is a sin against God, whilst the present passage treats of injuries inflicted by man upon his brother man, is, however, of insufficient weight. All gross (poison-mingling) and all refined sorcery is conjoined with injury to one's neighbor. The terms are, doubtless, symbolical throughout; Gal. v. 20.

"It is clear that the author is thinking of heathen." De Wette (similarly Dürstendiek). Truly, the author regards all the things mentioned, even in respect of their most subtle conception, their most subtle manifestation in Christendom, as heathenish.

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE SEVENTH SEAL AND THE TRUMPETS.]

By the American Editor.

[The very position of the Seventh Seal, separated as it is from the others by the visions of chap. vii., should lead us to suppose that it is sui generis; and a careful consideration of its development supports and enforces this supposition. The most rational hypothesis, as it seems to the Am. Ed., is that it includes the Trumpets and the Vials; there is no strong disjunctive at the beginning of either ver. 2 or 6, such as would certainly have been employed had the Seal closed with ver. 1 or 5, and no such disjunctive occurs until ch. xviii. 1. This hypothesis is not only in accordance with the manifest indications of the phraseology, but it avoids the supposition that a Seal was opened without any thing being revealed under it, and it also gives unity to all that follows, and to the whole complex vision.

In the view of the writer, the opening of the first five Seals discloses the general course of history to the time of the second Advent—false Christs, war, dearth, aggravated mortality, together with the persecutions of the saints; the opening of the sixth reveals the events immediately preceding the Advent (see pp. 178 sq.); the seventh is the Seal of Judgment (also terminating in the Advent), in which, under the Symbol of Seven Trumpets (indicating the going forth of Jehovah against the enemies of His people, comp. Num. x. 9; xxxi. 6; Josh. vi. 4, 5; 2 Chron. xiii. 14; Jer. li. 27, etc.), are revealed the woes to be visited upon the sinful and persecuting world-power; * the last Trumpet develops into the seven Vials.†

That the opening of the Seal was to be delayed, is consistent with God's dealings in judgment—sentence against an evil work, ordinarily, is not executed speedily (Ecc. viii. 11); and not only so, but it is intimated, (ch. vi. 10, 11), that there should be delay until a certain period (or number of martyrs) should be completed.

The length of this period of delay being unrevealed, the time of the beginning of the Trumpet-blasts can be determined only by the occurrence. It becomes a most interesting and important question: Have any of these blasts been given, or are they all still future? The writer must acknowledge that, after a careful consideration of the principal views that have been presented, he has been constrained to the conclusion that the scheme of interpretation advocated by Elliott and Barnes is substantially correct (see foot-notes on pp. 205 sq.). The points of resemblance between the symbols and the events of history, especially as portrayed by the infidel Gibbon, are too many, too striking, and too exact, to allow the thought that they are merely fortuitous. It would seem as though God had raised up the great historian just mentioned to perform a work for the Bible and the Church, which could not have been so effectually performed by a friend—at times it seems as though he were writing history, purposely for the elucidation of prophecy. The language of Barnes in reference to the correspondence between the events of the sixth Seal and the history of the Turkish invasion, as described by him, may be equally applied to the correspondence between the entire series of symbols and his descriptions of all the invasions which historical interpreters have adduced as fulfilling these symbols: "If Mr. Gibbon had designed to describe the conquests of the Turks as a fulfillment of the prediction, could he have done it in a style more clear and graphic than that which he has employed? If this had occurred in a Christian writer, would it not have been charged on him that he had shaped his facts to meet his notions of the meaning of the prophecy?"

* [These judgments, in the opinion of the Am. Ed., commenced after the Woman had become the Harlot—after the unholy alliance between the Church and State. See on ch. xvii.—E. R. C.]

† ["There were to be seven Trumpets sounded, and under the seventh Trumpet seven Vials poured out. The numeral resemblance of these to the seven trumpet blasts sounded on seven successive days against the ancient Jericho, and which were followed on the seventh day by seven compassings of its walls, till on the last the wall fell down, and entrance was given to Israel into that first city of the promised Canaan (Josh. vi. 3-16)—this interesting resemblance, I say, has been noticed by Ambrose Anseret in old times, and in more modern times by Vitringa, and other Apocalyptic interpreters after him. It almost seemed as if some power were marked out hereby as the New Testament Jericho; whose domination opposed, and whose overthrow would introduce the saints' enjoyment of the Heavenly Canaan." Elliott, Vol. I, p. 319.—E. R. C.]

It must be acknowledged that there are difficulties connected with this interpretation; that there are some points where the symbol and the event adduced as realizing it, do not seem exactly to harmonize. It may be remarked that, in view of the imperfection of our records of history, and the partial ignorance of individual interpreters, even of that which is imperfectly recorded, such discrepancies are to be expected—indeed, it is matter of surprise that they are not more numerous and important. In fact, one of the influences that led the writer to adopt, in the main, the scheme of Elliott, was the exhibit of objections by Alford. Thoughts, such as the following, arose in his mind: If these are the only objections that can be adduced by an acute and learned opponent, they are tantamount to an acknowledgment that in the far more numerous and important matters presented in the scheme, there is complete resemblance between the Symbol and the event; and if this be so, either these discrepancies will disappear on a more thorough investigation of our historical records, or else they will serve to show that on the points at issue our records are themselves imperfect. The first of Alford's objections is to Elliott's interpretation of the third part (see p. 201). He remarks, "It is fatal to this whole class of interpretations that it is not said: the hail, etc., were cast on a third part, but that the destruction occasioned by them extended to a third part of the earth on which they were cast. And this is most expressly declared to be so in this first case by all green grass being destroyed, not a third part of it" (ch. viii. 7). Now, Elliott's hypothesis concerning the third part is deduced from a most careful comparison of ch. viii. 7-12 with the acknowledged facts of history. It is notorious that four successive hordes of enemies did, in the Fourth and Fifth centuries, burst upon the Roman Empire, their ravages being almost entirely confined to a third, or the Western division, thereof; and it is manifest, also, that these ravages did, as to their general features, most strikingly fulfill the requirements of the symbolization—the first invasion being on the inland provinces, the second on the maritime portions, the third on the rivers and fountains, the fourth affecting the governors, the Luminaries of that third part (see pp. 205 sq.). In view of the general agreement, which is like that of the mountain shadows on the bosom of the Lake of Geneva and the mountains themselves, it seems legitimate to conclude that the symbol shadowed forth the fact, and that the third part of the former was designed to indicate (when the event should occur) the third part of the smitten empire. If this be so, then, when it is said that hail fell upon the earth, we may understand the prophecy as meaning that it fell upon that third part; and, be it observed, there is no undue straining of language in such an interpretation, for certainly there is no disagreement between a prophecy that Great Britain shall be smitten, and the fact that Scotland receives the blow. And still further, by the third part of the trees and all the grass, we may understand the trees and the grass of that smitten third part.

Another objection is that Elliott's scheme fails to give any satisfactory explanation of the exemption of the sealed from the torment of the fifth plague (ch. ix. 4). So far as Elliott is concerned, the objection is well taken. This does not imply, however, that an explanation cannot be given consistent with the scheme. Whilst historical records do give us the general information that the citizens of those countries which had been the seat of the old Roman Empire did suffer fearfully from the Saracenic invasions, they are almost totally silent as to the fate of individuals; from historical investigation it is impossible to determine who were the sealed, and what was their condition during the ravages of the Saracens. Alford writes: "In the very midst of this corrupt Christianity, were at that time God's elect scattered up and down; and it is surely too much to say every such person escaped scathless from the Turkish (Saracenic) sword." If from other points of resemblance between the Symbol and the Saracenic woe (and there are many such which cannot be challenged, see pp. 207 sq.), the identity between the object of prophecy and that woe can be established, then it is not "too much to say," especially in view of the absence of all proof to the contrary, that God did, according to His promise, preserve His sealed ones from the torment which was visited upon the unsealed.

Another objection is brought against Elliott's interpretation of the crowns like unto gold (ch. ix. 7). "Elliott tries to apply it to the turban; but granting some latitude to the στέφανος, the δουνοί χρυσοί, will hardly bear this. The appearance of a turban, even when ornamented with gold, is hardly golden." True; but a yellow turban (Barnes) might be described as like to gold. Certainly Alford, who interprets fiery and sulphureous (ver. 17) as meaning red and light-yellow, should have no objection to this explanation.

Alford again writes: "I cannot forbear noticing, as we pass, the caprice of historical interpreters. On the command not to kill the men, etc., in ch. ix. 5, Elliott says: 'i. e., not to annihilate them as a political Christian body.' If then the same rule of interpretation is to hold, the present verse (6) must mean that 'the political Christian body' will be so sorely beset by these Mohammedan locusts, that it will desire to be annihilated, and not find any way. For surely it cannot be allowed that the killing of men should be said of their annihilation as a political body in one verse, and their desiring to die in the next, should be said of some thing totally different, and applicable to their individual misery." The propriety of the criticism of the distinguished commentator may be allowed, and yet it be shown to have no force against the historical scheme. In chs. i.-lii. of the immortal history of Gibbon, we have described the rise, the conquests, and the decline of the Saracens. In the grand features of history as therein set forth, we perceive the similarity to the complex symbol of ch. ix. 1-11. Prominent amongst these features is the fact that though the Mohammedan conquerors tormented, they never totally destroyed the political combinations of Christendom. In Europe they were as an invading army encamped—they were never able to take Constantinople; although they ravaged the country around Rome, they were restrained from the capture of the Imperial City; in their advance upon Christendom from the Pyrenees, they were driven back by Charles Martel. Even in Spain, where for centuries they held dominion, they never completely extinguished either the Spanish nationality or the organized Church. In Syria, where their first conquests in Christendom were made, although their sceptre has passed away to the Turks, we still find nominally Christian communities substantially as they were organized in the days of the Saracens. "After the revolution of eleven centuries, the Jews and Christians of the Turkish Empire enjoy the liberty of conscience which was granted by the Arabian Caliphs. . . . All the oriental sects were included in the common benefits of toleration; the rank, the immunities, the domestic jurisdiction of the patriarchs, the bishops, and the clergy, were protected by the civil magistrate. . . . The captive churches of the East have been afflicted in every age by the avarice or bigotry of their rulers; and the ordinary and legal restraints must be offensive to the pride or the zeal of the Christians" (Gibbon, ch. li.). From the beginning, these communities have been tormented, but not destroyed. And not only so, but from the days of the Caliphs their preservation as organized communities, having a peculiar dress, has been in accordance with the policy of their rulers—they are thus more easily kept in subjection, and are separated from Moslems as inferior and tributary. The very preservation of these communities has in all time subjected them to torment, to official exaction and popular contumely and persecution. Is it not most natural to suppose that as political communities they have desired annihilation?

The last objection urged by Alford is against Elliott's interpretation of ch. ix. 19. "Well may Mr. Barker say (Friendly Strictures): 'An interpretation so wild, if it refutes not itself, seems scarcely capable of refutation.' Happily, it does refute itself. For it is convicted, by altogether leaving out of view the power in the mouths, which is the principal feature in the original vision; by making no reference to the serpent-like character of these tails, but being wholly inconsistent with it; by distorting the canon of symmetrical interpretation in making the heads attached to the tails to mean that the tails are symbols of authority, etc." The force of the criticism is admitted, and yet, like the preceding, it bears not against the historical scheme. The following is suggested as possibly the true explanation of the verse alluded to. On opening Webster's Dictionary we find the following as the second definition of Basilisk: "In military affairs, a large piece of ordnance, so called from its supposed resemblance to the serpent of that name, or from its size. This cannon carried an iron ball of 200 pounds weight, but is not now used." Such were the cannon with which the Turks moved to the assault of Constantinople. These long, serpent-like instruments of destruction, dragged breach foremost in the rear of the companies that served them, might well have been described in symbol as tails, like unto serpents having heads; and the power by which the Turkish armies breached the walls of Constantinople, and thus subjugated the Eastern third of the old Roman Empire (ch. ix. 18), was in these tails and the mouths of these heads.

It should be remarked, in conclusion, that the resemblance contemplated in this Note is not merely between the individual symbols and the events which have been adduced as fulfilling them respectively, but it is a resemblance between the entire series regarded as a whole, and the entire course of history—it extends to the relations of the symbols to each other, their succession and mutual proportions.—E. R. C.]

SECTION FOURTH.

The Seven Thunders, or Seven Sealed Divine Voices; the mystery of mysteries, as mediatory of the end of the world.

CHAPTER X. AND CHAPTER XI. 1-14.

(Transition to Part Second.)

A.—VEILED HEAVEN-PICTURE OF THE SEVEN THUNDERS.

CHAP. X. 1-11.

a. The Angel of the Time of the End.

- 1 And I saw another<sup>1</sup> mighty [strong] angel come down [descending] from [out of] heaven, clothed with a cloud: and a [the<sup>2</sup>] rainbow was [om. was] upon his head, and his face was [om. was] as it were [om. it were] the sun, and his feet as
- 2 pillars of fire: and he had [having<sup>3</sup>] in his hand a little book [scroll] open [opened]: and he set his right foot upon the sea, and his [the] left foot [om. foot]
- 3 on [upon] the earth, and cried with a loud [great] voice, as when [om. when] a lion roareth: and when he had [om. had] cried, [ins. the] seven thunders uttered [spake] their voices.

b. The seven Thunders as mysterious Mediations of the Time of the End.

- 4 And when<sup>4</sup> the seven thunders had [om. had] uttered [spake] their voices [om. their voices],<sup>5</sup> I was about to write: and I heard a voice from [out of—ins. the] heaven saying unto me [om. unto me],<sup>6</sup> Seal up [om. up] those [the] things which the
- 5 seven thunders uttered [spake], and write them not. And the angel which [that] I saw stand [standing] upon the sea and upon the earth lifted up his [ins. right<sup>7</sup>]

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 1. ἄλλος is groundlessly omitted by some minuscules. [It is omitted by B*, and P. Critical Editors give it with K. A. C.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 1. The article is firmly established. [Critical Editors generally give it with K.<sup>1</sup> A. B*. C.; Rec. & al. omit with L. 7. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 2. [Crit. Eds. generally give ἔχων with K. A. B*. C. P., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 4. Cod. K. reads ὅρα [instead of ὅτε]. An exegetical substitution.

<sup>5</sup> Ver. 4. An addition of the Rec. [Om. by crit. Eds. with K. A. B. C. P., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>6</sup> Ver. 4. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch., with K. A. B*. C. P., etc., omit μὴ; Lange retains.—E. R. C.]

<sup>7</sup> Ver. 5. An omission of the Rec. [Given generally in acc. with K. B*. C. P.; omitted by A.—E. R. C.]

- 6 hand to [ins. the] heaven, And swore by him that liveth for ever and ever [into the ages of the ages], who created [ins. the] heaven, and the things [ins. in it] that therein are [om. that therein are], and the earth, and the things [ins. in it] that therein are [om. that therein are], and the sea,<sup>8</sup> and the things [ins. in it] which are therein [om. which are therein], that there should be [om. there should be] time
- 7 [χρόνος] [ins. shall be] no longer [or not yet (οὐκέτι ἔσται)]: But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin [should be about] to sound [trumpet], [ins. is also finished] the mystery of God should be finished [om. should be finished], as he hath [om. hath] declared [ins. the glad tidings (εὐηγγέλιον)] to his servants the prophets.
- c. Second, new Calling of the Seer, in order to the symbolical Preparation and symbolical Annunciation of the Time of the End.
- 8 And the voice which I heard from [ins. the] heaven [ins. I heard] spake [speaking] unto [with] me again, and said [saying], Go and [om. and] take the little book [scroll] which is open [opened (τὸ ἡνεωγμένον)] in the hand of the angel which [that]
- 9 standeth upon the sea and upon the earth. And I went [ins. away] unto the angel, and [om. and] said unto [saying to or telling] him, [om. ,—ins. to] give<sup>10</sup> me the little book [scroll]. And he said [saith] unto me, Take it, [om. it,] and eat it up; and it shall make [om. make—ins. embitter] thy belly bitter [om. bitter], but [ins. in thy mouth] it shall be in thy mouth [om. in thy mouth] sweet as honey. And I took the little book [scroll] out of the angel's [om. angel's] hand [ins. of the angel], and ate it up; and it was in my mouth sweet [om. sweet] as honey [ins. , sweet]: and as soon as [when] I had eaten it, my belly was bitter [embittered].
- 11 And he said [they say]<sup>11</sup> unto me, Thou must prophesy again before [or concerning<sup>12</sup>] many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings.

<sup>8</sup> Ver. 6. Καὶ τῆς θαλάσσης [καὶ τὰ ἐν αὐτῇ] is omitted by N*. [and also by A.—E. R. C.]

<sup>9</sup> Ver. 8. [Critical Editors give λαλοῦσαν and λέγουσαν with N. A. B*. C. P., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>10</sup> Ver. 9. [Critical Editors generally give δοῦναι with N. A. B. C.; Rec., with P., gives δοῦ.—E. R. C.]

<sup>11</sup> Ver. 10. [Cod. N. gives ἐγμίσθη.—E. R. C.]

<sup>12</sup> Ver. 11. The reading, λέγουσιν, although strongly attested, might have originated in a consideration of the co-operation of the voice and the Angel. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch., with N. A. B., give λέγουσιν; λέγει is supported by P. The former reading, against Lange, is adopted above.—E. R. C.]

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 13. [For the force of ἔτι with the dative, see WINEY, § 48, c., and the grammars and lexicons generally. The Am. Ed. has inserted the alternative translation in deference to the distinguished authorities by whom it is supported. In his own judgment, the proper translation is before (possibly in a Aoristic sense), as in his opinion, it should be, Heb. x. 28. In confirmation of this opinion in the case in Hebrews, it should be noted that those condemned to death under the Mosaic law, were executed before (in the presence of) the witnesses. (Comp. Deut. xvii. 8, 7; xiii. 8-9; Acts vii. 58).—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

The picture of the prevailing impenitence of the generality of men, or of the ruling world as a whole, leads (as in Matt. xxiv. 37) to the announcement of the end of the world itself. The end of the world is brought on, however, not simply by the development of human corruption into a readiness for judgment, but, rather, by the development of the Kingdom of God over against man's corruption, and, most of all, by the development of the conflict between the two.

It was to be expected that the Apocalypse would contain a revelation of the history of the Kingdom of God, its development, advances and reforms. And this revelation was made to the Seer in the voices of the seven Thunders. But the Prophet was commanded to seal those voices; he was forbidden to write them. This trait is, unmistakably, a special sign of the Divine origin of our Book; no imitator, no apocryphal apocalypticist would have thought of this holy silence, and still less would he have consented to observe it.

The fact that the Thunder-voices betoken a new revelation, an advance of the Kingdom of God, and, relatively, a reform, is proved by the thunders of Sinai; by the thunder which heralded God's answer to Job (ch. xxxvii. 2); the description of Israel's redemption amid thunder and lightning in the prophecy of Zechariah (ch. ix. 14); the voice of thunder over Christ as He prayed in the Temple (John xii. 28)—the voice which said: I have glorified My name, and will glorify it. A reference to the charismatic element, in the name of the Sons of Thunder, is also appropriate here. [See foot-note †, p. 52.—E. R. C.]

Now why was the unfolding of this bright side of the Kingdom of God, the succession of seven holy reforms, not written? Schleiermacher regrets the omission of a revelation of this sort. The Spirit of revelation wisely withheld it. The Seer might hear the seven Thunders; but the writing of them might have been prejudicial to the free development of New Testament times. The example of the gross misinterpretations of Old Testament prophecy lay at the door. Moreover, this was not to be a section of prophecies, in the more general sense of the term, but a closed [geschlossenen] Apocalypse. Yet the Seer was permitted to communicate a few features, in exoteric form, which fill up this space.

The Heaven-picture of this cosmical and eoclesiastic history of the seven Thunders is opened by the appearance of a strong Angel, Who descends from Heaven clothed with a cloud—the rainbow above His head. These attributes strongly resemble the picture of Christ at His coming, as elsewhere portrayed (ch. i. 15; Dan. x. 6); the last terms—His face as the sun, and His feet as pillars of fire—being particularly suggestive of the appearance of Christ in the first chapter. We may, therefore, say that the same relation which is sustained by the Angel of the Lord, in the Old Testament, to the first Parousia of Christ, is borne by this Angel to His second Parousia. It is the manifestation of the New Testament figure of Christ in the foretokens of His power. This Angel, in the might and victorious confidence of His appearance, reminds us of the Archangel Michael; as the author of the seven Thunders or reformations, He suggests the dispensation of the Holy Ghost. There is also a close connection between the seven Spirit-forms of the Holy Ghost (Is. xi.; Rev. i.), and the seven revelation-forms of Christ in archangelic shapes (1 Thess. iv. 16). Christ's reformatory breaches through the old form of the world are, in their personal features, conflicts and victories of the Archangel Michael (ch. xii. 7); in respect of their ideal effects of Divine origin, they are Pentecostal seasons of the diffusion of the Holy Ghost.

But as this strong Angel is related to the approaching end of the world, so also is the little book in His hand thereunto related. Three books are associated in the Apocalypse. The first is the book of the course of the world, in its relation to the end of the world (ch. v. 1). The last is the book of life, as the book of God's Church which is to be perfected at the end of the world (ch. xx. 15; xxi. 27). Between these two, comes the book of the world's end, the revelation of the events of the approaching end of the world. The first book was closed with seven Seals; this book, on the other hand—a little book, because the last things shall come in the quick succession of a catastrophe and epoch—is unrolled, opened. Relatively it is reflected in the everlasting Gospel (ch. xiv. 6), the Gospel as the glad tidings of the final σωτηρία with which a blissful eternity begins—in contradistinction to the Gospel of Salvation in the midst of time. For the tidings of the last day are to believers a Gospel themselves; not, indeed, really another one (ἕτερον, Gal. i. 6), but the final metamorphosis and glorification or spiritualization of the first Gospel, Luke xxi. 28.

The Angel sets his right foot upon the sea, and his left upon the land. The right one on the sea, for it is from the sea, from surging, popular life, that the last and mightiest crises arise, ch. xiii. That Antichristianity which is from the earth will be a secondary affair.

The setting of His feet on the sea and on the land denotes, not simply and in general His power over the whole earth, but also, particularly, His power over the two opposite fundamental forms of its spiritual life—earth and sea; theocracy and world.

His cry is a great one; His voice as that of a lion. The lion, from of old, is significant of the warlike and victorious epochs or transruptions of the Kingdom of God in the history of the world, Gen. xlix. 9. When Satan goes about as a roaring lion, he does but imitate the voice of the true Lion. He gives utterance to a lie as to his power and as to his courage. The lion-voice of the triumphant Christ then seems immediately to branch out into the seven Thunders of His reformatory witness. The fact that these Thunders are, in the most special degree, mediatory of the end of the world, is evident from all that follows; why their voices, their ideal revelations were not written, we have seen above. Here a very special sealing takes place, for reformers must walk by faith, not by sight. The result, however, is summed up by the Angel in His dread oath concerning the imminent end of the world. A more powerful expression of the assurance of the Divine Spirit, the confidence of prophetic faith, in regard to the approaching end, could, we venture to assert, scarcely be conceived of. The right hand of the Angel is lifted toward Heaven. The oath is an oath by Him Who liveth from eternity to eternity, and Who, as the Creator of all things, defines the measure and limit of all creaturely vital movements toward the end. Mark xiii. 32. There shall be no more time (χρόνος [Zeitraum=respite]); from the term defined by the Angel, i. e., from the opening of the seventh Trumpet, the καρπός, the catastrophe of the end of the world shall begin. They are days, numbered days—the times of the voice of the seventh trumpet. In those days, the mystery of God, the specific mystery of the Father (Mark xiii.), shall be fully accomplished.

The fact that the time of the seven Thunders forms the transition to the final period of the world, i. e., also to the Second Part of the Apocalypse, is evident from the circumstance that the section of the seven Thunders can be inserted between the sixth and seventh Trumpets, whilst a complete and minute survey of the section leads to the expectation that the Antichristian time must follow directly upon the seventh Thunder. Another proof that a general turn in affairs now takes place, is involved in the fact that the same voice from Heaven that spoke to the Seer in ver. 4, as well as at the beginning (ch. i.), now commands him to take the little book out of the hand of the Angel. The Angel gives him the book, directing him, at the same time, to eat it (comp. Ezek. iii. 2), and telling him that it will cause him bitter pain in his belly, but will in his mouth be sweet as honey. The Seer forthwith experiences the truth of the Angel's words.

Apocalyptic things have a wondrous charm. To the honey-like sweetness of the little book in the mouth, that enormous mass of literature testifies, which is engaged in the eating of it. But whoever has, with some degree of understanding, appropriated the little book, is greatly pained within him by its startling perspectives and images. A termination is then put to all idyllic conceptions of the future and the end of the world.

But by the eating of the book the Seer is doubly as much a Prophet as before. As he has prophesied concerning the course of the world, down to its end, so he must now prophesy of the end itself, in the course of the world, in accordance with the words: Thou must prophesy again, concerning many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings. The universal peoples' life is now to form the foreground of his prophecy. By way of preliminary, however, an Earth-picture is annexed to this commission, in which the general effect of the seven Thunders is reflected. That is, it forms, in its conjunction with the seven Thunders, the transition from the course of the world to the end of the same.

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the Am. Editor.

[ELLIOTT regards the entire section, ch. ix. 20—xi. 15, as referring to "The Reformation, as occurring under the latter half of the Sixth Trumpet: including the antecedent history, and the death, resurrection, and ascension, of Christ's two sack-clothed Witnesses;" the whole period extending from "A. D. 1453—1789." He interprets ch. x. as indicating the beginning of the Reformation—the strong Angel is Christ, His adornment in antithesis to the antichristian claims of the Popedom; the opened little scroll, the opened Bible; the Seer himself the symbol of Luther and the reformed clergy; the sweetness in the mouth, the delight following the personal reception of the opened Gospel; the embittering, the woes following the promulgation before peoples, etc.; the prophesying again, the resumption of evangelical preaching, which had been almost entirely relinquished; the seven Thunders, the Papal bulls; the sealing, the non recognition, publication, and action upon those bulls as of authority. The Angel's oath he interprets as follows: "There shall be time no longer extended, viz., to the mysterious dispensation of God which has so far permitted the reign of evil, including the power of Papal Rome's mock thunders; the seventh Trumpet's era being its fixed determined limit—"For in the days of the seventh angel, when he shall sound, the mystery of God shall be finished."*

BARNES, as to the general interpretation of ch. x., agrees with Elliott, save that in reference to the Angel's oath he adopts the view put forth by the latter in his earlier editions, viz.: "That the time (of the consummation) should not yet be; but in the days, etc."

STUART writes: "The impression made on my own mind by ch. x. is, that the design of it is to show in an impressive manner that the vision respecting this book with seven Seals (ch. v.) is just now at its close, that nothing more remains but the sounding of the seventh and last Trumpet, and that this shall speedily take place, ὀκνέτι χρόνος ἔσται, ver. 6. With this seems also to be joined another object, viz., to introduce this final catastrophe with all the solemnity and demonstration of its importance, which the nature of the case seemed to require. The destruction of the Temple and City of God, and also the destruction of the Jewish nation, were events such as cannot often happen, and when they do, it is intended that they shall make a deep impression. The new commission which John receives (ver. 11) seems to be a circumstance which obviously contributes to show, that his former vision of the sealed book was now at its close or completed, and that he needed new directions for the further discharge of prophetic duty. The contents of the book are not sealed. He devours them, i. e., he reads them with avidity, in order that he may know what they contained; and then he is told, that he must prophesy again respecting many nations and people, and tongues and kings. Thus, when the last or seventh trumpet shall have sounded, his task will still proceed; while the scene is entirely changed in respect to those whose destiny is predicted." Concerning the seven Thunders he remarks, "What was declared in the voice of thunder was ominous of the catastrophe near at hand. Estire silence (represented by the sealing) is neither commanded nor observed. . . . What the seven Thunders most probably declared fully to John, he is restrained from writing down, etc."

WORDSWORTH regards the Angel as representing Christ, the items of description setting forth His excellencies; the seven Thunders, as signs of His power and indignation, representing the consummation of God's judgments; the little scroll as containing a prophetic episode unrolled by Christ; the eating as indicating, that the Seer made it his own; the oath as implying "that there shall be no longer any delay or respite for repentance to the wicked, or postponement of reward to the righteous, save only in the days of the last Angel;" the act of swearing as indicating that on account of the overflow of iniquity, even in the Christian Church, the world would begin to doubt the truth of Christ's universal sovereignty, and as designed to put an end to such doubts.

ALFORD regards ch. x. 1—xi. 14, as "episodic and anticipatory." This section, which relates to things still future, he represents as consisting of two episodic visions, that of the Little Book, and that of the Two Witnesses. In respect of the former, he regards the Angel as an angelic minister of Christ; the symbols with which he is accompanied (those which surrounded the Throne of God in ch. iv. 2 sqq.) as betokening "judgment tempered with mercy, the character of his ministration, which, at the same time that it proclaims the near approach of the completion of God's judgments, furnishes to the Seer the book (little scroll) of his subsequent prophecy, the following out of God's purposes of mercy." In his judgment the meaning of the Thunders, whilst they form a complete portion of the Apocalyptic machinery, is not revealed, and is by us undiscoverable. The χρόνος of the oath he regards as that of ch. vi. 11; the intent of the oath being to declare that the delay there referred to is at an end.

LORD regards the Angel as representing the Ministers of the Reformation; the seven Thunders as denoting violent expressions of thought and passion by those addressed ("one of the first and most violent of these thunder utterances was a false pretence to inspiration, and expression of the persuasion that the period had arrived for the final overthrow of Antichrist and establishment of the Redeemer's millennial Kingdom"); the solemn oath of the Angel, as a response to these thunder voices, designed to correct their error, denoting the answer by Luther and the reformers, from Scripture, to errorists, showing that the time of the millennial Kingdom was not yet to be; the Seer as symbolizing the reformed Church, to which the ministry extended the open Gospel symbolized by the little scroll; the prophecy as indicating the fulfilling by the members of the Church "the office of witnesses for God in the presence of Antichristian rulers and nations."

* [The interpretation of the oath above is that given in the 5th edition. In this edition Elliott writes, "Another proposed interpretation, 'that the time shall yet be,' which in my earlier editions I adopted from other preceding interpreters, appears to me on reconsideration to be on grammatical grounds inadmissible; since I cannot find authority for its meaning yet, in that sense of our English word yet or as yet."—M. E. C.]

GLASGOW.—The period indicated by the vision of ch. x. is the beginning of the Gospel age; the Angel is Christ; the voice as a lion roaring is Christ's commission to preach; the seven Thunders are the voices of the disciples proclaiming the truth; the direction to seal the Thunders indicates that the proclamations of the Church are not inspired and therefore not to be incorporated in the Canon; the oath implies a term and end of the seven Thunders; the opened scroll is the Bible (the revealed Word of God), the reception of which is sweet to the taste, and yet fills the Christian soul with sadness; the declaration "Thou must prophecy, etc." announces the communication of the New Testament prophetic gift, to the ministry symbolized by John, and the extension of the prophetic commission as to all people.—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ver. 1. This is as little the beginning of an inter-scene as ch. vii. Some confusions resulting from the misapprehension of those who so regard it, see in Düsterdieck, p. 342. Likewise curious discussions concerning the stand-point of the Seer. If he was transported to Heaven in ch. iv. 1, how could he see the Angel come down from Heaven? De Wette has rightly limited that more definite transportation to Heaven to the contemplation of the heavenly Throne-scene. Düsterdieck "retains," with Ewald, "the heavenly stand-point." According to this, John must finally have come down to earth with the heavenly Jerusalem. Hengstenberg has remarked, with justice, that there is no question of exclusive localities here.* [ALFORD remarks—"The place of the Seer yet continues in Heaven," calling attention to the fact that, in ver. 9, he is represented as going away (ἀπῆλθον), i. e., from his former place.—E. R. C.]

Another strong angel.—The other Angel is distinguished as the strong one from the foregoing Angels of the Trumpets. It does not follow from the ἰσχυρός that he should be specially distinguished from the ἰσχυρός of ch. v. 2 (after Bengel and others). We have called this Angel the angelic image of Christ, preceding His speedy Parousia. This, undoubtedly, is not, in the strictest sense, Christ Himself, as Bede and many others maintain; but neither is the conception of a mere Angel that which is presented in the text (in accordance with Düsterdieck and others). Düsterdieck: "The very style of the oath (ver. 6) is inappropriate to Christ." Bengel remarks, on the other hand: "The Apocalypse makes a distinction throughout between the Father and Christ."

Clothed with a cloud.—"The cloud characterizes the Angel as a messenger of Divine judgment" (comp. ch. i. 7; Hengstenb., Eb-rard [so also Alford]). It has, however, a much more general significance, as is evidenced by the cloud at the Transfiguration and the Ascension. It denotes, in general, the mysterious veiling of the Divine and heavenly glory from the human eye on earth.

[And the rainbow upon his head.]—"The (γ) well known, ordinary, rainbow; indicating, agreeably with its first origin, God's covenant of mercy." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

[And his face as the sun.]—See chs. i. 16; xviii. 1. Indicative not merely of His manifested glory, but of His light-giving, life-giving power. The sun in the solar system is the noblest and most glorious symbol of Christ in His relations to the Universe.—E. R. C.]

His feet as pillars of fire.—This feature, also, is interpreted as indicative of judgment, as in ch. i. 15. An antithesis to the rainbow is, doubtless, presented. That, however, is not simply a token of covenant grace in general; it is also a sign or guaranty of a continuing existence of the world until the end. Here too, then, it is a sign that the end of the world has not yet arrived. The sun-like radiance of the face denotes, like the revelation of God itself, both grace and judgment. Düsterdieck very correctly observes that the end of the world embraces both judgment and redemption. Aretius applies the cloud to the incarnation of Christ—Christ's flesh.

Ver. 2. In his hand a little scroll.—Bengel: In his left hand, see ver. 5. Why a little book [scroll]? See above. Three different expositions are cited by Düsterdieck, p. 346. [ALFORD: "That (the seven sealed scroll) was the great sealed roll of God's purposes; this but one portion of those purposes." GLASGOW: "This book applies to the whole contents of the Bible, which, though the greatest of books in character, truth, beauty, and importance, is comparatively a small Book in bulk, and thus adapted for use, translation, circulation, and universal perusal."—E. R. C.]

Opened.—It is open, as the unrolled conclusion of the book opened by the Lamb.

Sea and earth neither denote simply that the tidings brought by the Angel are for the whole earth (De Wette), nor are they significant merely of power over the whole earth (Ewald); the expression likewise embraces the contrast of sea and earth in their symbolical import. Christianity recognizes the truth and the falsehood on both sides of the contrast—ecclesiastical authority and political national life—and rules, without party-spirit, over both parties.

Interpretations of the antithesis: Bengel: Europe and Asia. Hengstenberg: The sea of peoples and the cultivated world, etc.—All of which Düsterdieck denominates allegorizing.

* ["The presence of John in Heaven must be understood positively—not exclusively." Hengstenberg.—Ta.]

Ver. 3. With a great voice.—According to Bengel, the purport of the voice is given in ver. 6; according to Dürstiediek, its purport cannot be determined. We regard it as the unitous source of the seven Thunders; hence it is as little definitely intimated as the purport of these. The “threatening character” [Ewald, Dürstied.] of the cry is interpolated in the description.

The seven thunders.—The symbolical idea of the thunder is presupposed by the Son of Thunder. The number of the Thunders is distinctly stated—seven—being the number of a full cycle (designated by us as the cycle of the Re-formations). The article accompanies the expression of this definite totality. The Old Testament type of the Divine manifestation is most distinctly contained in the seven Thunders, Ps. xxix.

Different interpretations of the seven Thunders and their purport: Seven roaring heavens; seven Spirits of God; identical with the seven Trumpets; the oracles of the Prophets; the blessed mystery of the new world (Hofmann); curses; the seven crusades; seven future acts of God; terrible judgments on the persecutors of the Church. [For other interpretations see Abstract of Views on pp. 218sq.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 4. And when the seven thunders spake.—They have, therefore, a verbal purport, as distinct and diverse revelations. “In accordance with the command, ch. i. 11, John was about to write what the thunders had spoken.”

I was about to write.—i. e., he entertained this idea in the vision—an idea, however, which would have been the basis of the future act.

A voice from heaven.—From this also it is evident that the Seer is no longer thinking of himself as in Heaven. He was but momentarily in Heaven, by virtue of a special, higher transportation of his spirit. Dürstiediek strangely supposes that he was still in Heaven, but that the voice sounded from the interior [Tiefe, depth] of Heaven. [“From this it does not follow that the Seer is on earth, any more than in ver. 1.” ALFORD. Had the Seer been in Heaven, it is evident that he must thus have spoken to indicate that the voice came not from Earth, but with authority.—E. R. C.]

Seal.—According to Hengstenberg, this has reference merely to this place (in the Book!). For various and, in part, curious explanations of the commandment not to write the voices, see Dürstiediek, p. 350.

Ver. 5. Lifted up his right hand.—Gen. xiv. 22; Dan. xii. 7. Symbolism of the sacred, heavenly consciousness and certainty of the oath; see Deut. xxxii. 40 and other passages. [“Jesus, the faithful and true Witness, has here left, for the guidance of His people, a pattern according to which they should be adjured when called to give evidence in a court of justice—not by the idolatrous act of kissing a book, but by lifting the right hand in appeal to the living and true God, that what they speak is truth.” GLASGOW.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 6. By him that liveth.—God the Father, by virtue of His economy, alone has knowledge originally of the time and hour of the Parousia (Matt. xxiv. 36); this knowledge He has here communicated to the New Testament “Angel of the Lord.” Every χρόνος or period closes with a καὶρός or epoch; and this is particularly true of the final age.

Interpretations: Simply the cessation of time; cessation of the time of grace; a chiliastic measure of time—a non-chronos (1 Bengel: Close of the non-chronos—between 1,000 and 1,100 years—the year 1836); most commentators: the commencement of the fulfillment of the mystery of God; see Dürstiediek, pp. 351 sqq.—“The time of the seventh Trumpet.”

[The view of Alford, viz., that the χρόνος is that of ch. vi. 11, seems to the Am. Ed. to be the true one. It was there declared to the souls under the altar that they should rest ἐν χρόνῳ. The season referred to, manifestly, was that of world domination—to be followed by the avenging of the martyrs. In this passage the Angel declares, “Ὅτι χρόνος οὐκ ἔσται.* It seems hardly possible to avoid the conclusion that those χρόνοι are one and the same. And this interpretation is in accordance with truth elsewhere revealed. It would seem as though the judgments under the first six Trumpets, although the beginnings of coming woe, are rather judgments calling to repentance. The avenging, properly speaking, does not take place until the last Trumpet. This the writer supposes to be the period of the great tribulation—a tribulation from which the Saints are to be exempt, a period in the beginning of which their humiliation is to end (comp. Matt. xxiv. 21, 22; Luke xxi. 36; Rev. iii. 10; see also Add. Com. under ch. vii. 14). Then is finished the μυστήριον (see Add. Comm. on ch. i. 20) the glad tidings of which had been declared to the Prophets (ver. 7).†—E. R. C.]

Ver. 7. In the days of the voice.—The fact that days are still spoken of, after the cessation of time has been proclaimed, can be explained by the distinction of χρόνος and καὶρός, but not, with De Wette, by the remark that the stand-point of the vision is not strictly preserved.

The mystery of God.—The mystery of the last things, announced by the Prophets; in a

* [According to Middleton On the Greek Article i. 3, 3 (referred to by Elliott, Vol. II., pp. 125 sq.) the absence of the definite article is supplied by the fact that the copula is the verb substantive (see Acts xxiii. 6; John v. 9; John xix. 14; Mark xi. 18; John v. 1).—E. R. C.]

† [It is well worthy of consideration whether there is not a connection between this section of the Apocalypse and 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52. It is difficult to imagine that in two Books, both written under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, the manifest parallelism between the μυστήριον and the last σάλπιξ, and the glad tidings announced in the one, and the μυστήριον and the last σάλπιξ, and the glad tidings referred to in the other, should have been merely fortuitous. Nor is there ought in the events described under these last Trumpets to forbid our regarding them as one and the same. Certainly there is nothing inconceivable in the idea that the period of vengeance upon the persecutors of the saints, should be raised in which the heirs of the first resurrection should be raised from the dead, and, together with living saints, be removed to some place of safety (see Excursus on the First Resurrection, ch. xx. 5, 6). It may also be remarked that this hypothesis does not involve the id—that the Apocalypse was written before the Epistles to the Corinthians. It should be remembered that the Trumpets were introduced into the Apocalyptic vision, in full accordance with the imagery of preceding Scripture, as indicating the going forth of Jehovah for the deliverance of His people, and for the execution of judgment upon their enemies. It should therefore excite no surprise that the Apostle Paul should, under the inspiration of the Spirit, have referred to a period as that of the last Trumpet, which in the more complete revelation to John should be so described.—E. R. C.]

wider sense the eschatological mystery of the world's history. According to Dürsterdieck and many ancients, only Old Testament Prophets are here intended; we cannot see, however, why the Prophets of the New Testament, and consequently Christ Himself, should be excluded. The grand fulfillment of this prophecy is immeasurably dwarfed by a reference of it to the emancipation of the Christians from the oppression of the Jews (Grotius, Eichhorn). [See under ch. i. 20; and also preceding Foot-note.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 8. Go.—He is to go to the Angel. Of course this means in idea, in the vision. He is boldly to draw near the opening of the terrible new revelation. As the Angel is standing on earth, so the person commanded to approach him has his station there also. According to Dürsterdieck [and Alford], the Seer was still in Heaven.

Vers. 9, 10. And I went, etc.—According to Dürsterdieck, the eating of the little book is not allegorically intended. And yet by accepting the interpretation of Beza: insere tuis visceribus et describe in latitudine cordis tui, with reference to Ezek. ii. 8; [iii. 1-3;] Jer. xv. 16, he does admit that the passage has an allegorical sense. ["To eat is, in various Eastern languages, expressive of receiving. (See Jer. xv. 16; Ezek. iii. 1; Job xxiii. 12; Ps. xix. 10). The reception of Divine truth is a mental and spiritual exercise, sustaining and developing the higher nature as food does the body." GLASGOW.—E. R. C.]

The Angel says, in accordance with his view of the operation of the little book:

It shall embitter thy belly, but in thy mouth it shall be sweet as honey.

The Seer, on the other hand—from the standpoint of the eater—says:

Ver. 10. It was in my mouth as honey, sweet: and when I had eaten it, my belly was embittered.—Learned discussions on this antithesis, see in Dürsterdieck, p. 355. Bengel has even harmonistically inferred a double sweetness—before and after the bitterness. Besides the false interpretation of Heinrich, the interpretations of Herder, Bede, Vitringa and Hengstenberg come under consideration; with the last of these commentators, Dürsterdieck himself agrees. The distinction between the first reception and the subsequent digestion, or investigation, is represented. Dürsterdieck pertinently refers to the similar experience of Ezekiel (ch. iii. 8; comp. ch. ii. 10); the explanation which he accepts is also the best. ["The Angel, dwelling on the most important thing, the working of the contents of the book, puts the bitterness first; the Evangelist in relating what happened, follows the order of time." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 11. And they say [Lange: he said] unto me.—On the plural, see the Textual Notes. The passage ch. xii. 6 is no parallel.

Thou must.—It makes a false antithesis to refer the dei exclusively either to his internal obligation, caused by his eating of the book, or to the objective command of the Angel, since the two are closely connected.

Prophecy again.—The prophecy of the end of the world, now following, is thus distinguished from the prophecy hitherto given, concerning the course of the world (Grotius, Hengstenberg, Dürsterdieck, Ebrard).

Erroneous interpretations: Antithesis to the old Prophets (Bengel). Again, i. e., after returning from exile (Bede, et al.).

[Prophecy again before (or concerning) many peoples, etc.—For the views of the Am. Ed. as to the correct rendering of the preposition, see TEXT. and GRAM. "*Prophecy*ing. In the Scriptural sense of the word, a prophet is one who speaks for another, as Aaron is called the prophet or spokesman of Moses. 'Thou shalt speak unto him, and put words into his mouth, . . . and he shall be thy spokesman,' Ex. iv. 15, 16; or, as he is called, vii. 1, thy prophet. The prophets of God, therefore, were His spokesmen, into whose mouth the Lord put the words which they were to utter to the people. To prophecy, in Scripture, is accordingly, to speak under Divine inspiration; not merely to predict future events, but to deliver, as the organ of the Holy Ghost, the messages of God to men, whether in the form of doctrine, exhortation, consolation, or prediction." HODGE, Com. on 1st Corinthians, ch. xi. 4. This interpretation of the word is consistent with the idea that the prophesying here referred to was that of the ministry of the Reformation, symbolized by the Seer, before peoples, etc.; or with the cognate and perhaps truer idea that the Apostle was to prophesy again—his ministry being resumed and carried on by them. (See, however, the following Add. Note.)—E. R. C.]

Difficulties of construction, arising from an imperfect distinction between Heaven-pictures and Earth-pictures, see cited by Dürsterdieck, p. 357. Also a quantity of abortive applications of the chapter, the fault of which applications, however, does not lie in "the allegorical interpretation" in the abstract—i. e., the correct assumption of the allegorical character of the text. Thus, the strong Angel is declared to be: The Emperor Justin; Justinian; the evangelical preachers; the Pope. The little book [scroll] is called: The Codex Justinianus; the New Testament.

On the relation of the two books (ch. v. and the present chapter), we refer to the Synoptical View. Diverging opinions concerning them are that they are: (a) identical; (b) altogether different; (c) that the second is a distinct part of the first book; (d) that it is a repetition of the first.

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE VISION OF THE ANGEL WITH THE LITTLE BOOK].

By the American Editor.

[The Am. Ed. inclines to the opinion of Elliott, that the period contemplated by this vision is that of the Reformation. On this hypothesis all the symbols (with one exception subsequently noticed) are beautifully appropriate and significant—the Angel, clothed with symbols indicating excellencies falsely claimed by the antichristian Papacy, representing Christ; the Seer, the ministry of the Reformation proclaiming the truth, as the prophets of Christ, before peoples and nations, and tongues and kings; the open book, the Bible opened by Christ, sweet to the taste of those who receive it by reason of the instruction and assurance of salvation that it affords, and yet producing sorrow both in its study and in the faithful promulgation of its truths. The truth of this hypothesis seems to be confirmed (1) by the position of the vision following the second woe—if that represent the Turkish invasion, then this would aptly indicate the following Reformation; and (2) by the à priori probability that such a glorious event as the Reformation would not be unnoticed in the Apocalyptic visions, and unless this vision indicate it, it is unnoticed.

[The writer must acknowledge, however, that there is much in the vision that seems to demand a still future fulfillment—especially the oath of the Angel (see above) which apparently contemplates a speedy sounding of the seventh Trumpet; and also the declaration to the Apostle that he is to prophesy again. This declaration, which is not satisfied by the fact that he continued his Apocalyptic narration, seems hardly to be satisfied by the hypothesis that he resumed his prophecy (symbolically) in the preaching of the Reformers. May it not be that there is here an indication that the Seer is personally to be one of the two prophesying Witnesses of the succeeding vision (see ch. xi. 3-10, especially 8, 9, 10)?—E. R. C.]

B.—INTIMATIONS FROM THE EARTH-PICTURE OF THE SEVEN THUNDERS. FEATURES OF THE PREPARATIVE REFORMATORY RENEWAL OF THE EARTH; OR TRAITS OF THE OPERATION OF THE SEVEN THUNDERS WHICH, IN THEMSELVES, WERE SEALED.—IN CONCLUSION: THE FIRST AND PRECURSORY ANTICHRISTIANITY; OR THE BEAST FROM THE ABYSS, THE DEMONIC REALM OF THE DEAD.

CHAP. XI. 1-14.

a. The Inner and the Outer Church.

VERS. 1, 2.

- 1 And there was given me a reed like unto a rod: [,] and the angel stood, [om. and the angel stood,—ins. he]<sup>1</sup> saying, Rise, and measure the temple [ναόν] of God, and
- 2 the altar, and them that worship therein [in it]. But [And] the court which is without [outside of] the temple [ναοῦ] leave [cast] out,<sup>2</sup> and measure it not [it shalt thou not measure]; for it is [was] given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall, they tread under foot forty and [or and] two months.

b. The Two Witnesses. The Ideal Church and the Ideal State.

VERS. 3-12.

- 3 And I will give power [om. power] unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore [sixty] days, clothed in sackcloth.
- 4 These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks standing<sup>3</sup> before the God
- 5 [Lord]<sup>4</sup> of the earth. And if any man [one] will [wills<sup>5</sup>] hurt [to injure] them, fire proceedeth [goeth forth] out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man [one] will hurt [shall will<sup>6</sup> to injure] them, he must in this manner
- 6 [thus must he] be killed. These have [or ins. the<sup>7</sup>] power to shut [ins. the] heaven, that it [om. it—ins. rain (ὀρέγς)] rain [βρέχῃ] not in [during<sup>8</sup>] the days of their prophecy: and have power over [ins. the] waters to turn them to [into] blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues [every plague], as often as they [ins. shall]
- 7 will. And when they shall have finished their testimony, the beast [wild-beast] that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit [om. bottomless pit—ins. abyss] shall make war against [with] them, and shall overcome [conquer] them, and [ins. shall] kill

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 1. The reading of the Rec., and the Angel stood and said, is without sufficient foundation. [Cod. B<sup>o</sup> gives καὶ εἰσέρχεται ὁ ἄγγελος; Critical Eds. generally omit, and also give λέγει with A. B<sup>o</sup>. P., instead of λέγει, acc. to K<sup>o</sup>.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 2. [Treg. and Tisch. give ἔξωθεν with K<sup>o</sup>. A.; Alf. ἔξω with B<sup>o</sup>. Cod. K<sup>o</sup> reads ἔσω and P. ἔσωθεν.—E. R. C.]

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 4. The reading ἐστῶτες with A. C. K<sup>o</sup>. [K<sup>o</sup>. B<sup>o</sup>. P.] and others.

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 4. Κυρίου in acc. with A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. [K<sup>o</sup>. P.], not Θεοῦ.

<sup>5</sup> Ver. 5. The reading θέλει. [So Crit. Eds. with K<sup>o</sup>. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>6</sup> Ver. 5. [Treg. and Tisch. give θελήσῃ with K<sup>o</sup>. A.; Gb., Sz., Lach., Alf., Tisch. (1859), θέλει.—E. R. C.]

<sup>7</sup> Ver. 6. Lach. gives τίς with A. C. P.; Tisch. omits with K<sup>o</sup>. B<sup>o</sup>; Alf. brackets and Treg. marks with *.—E. R. C.]

<sup>8</sup> Ver. 6. [Mod. Crit. Eds. give ὅς τις ἡμᾶς with K<sup>o</sup>. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P. See Lange, Exp. in Detail.—E. R. C.]

- 8 them. And their dead bodies [corpse<sup>9</sup>] shall lie [be] in [upon] the street [broad-way<sup>10</sup>] of the great city, which spiritually is called [is called spiritually] Sodom and Egypt, where also our [their<sup>11</sup>] Lord was crucified. And they [men] of the people [peoples] and kindreds [tribes] and tongues and nations shall [om. shall<sup>12</sup>] see their dead bodies [corpse] three days and a half, and shall not [om. shall<sup>13</sup> not] suffer [ins. not] their dead bodies [corpses] to be put in graves [a sepulchre].
- 10 And they that dwell upon the earth shall [om. shall<sup>14</sup>] rejoice over them, and make merry,<sup>15</sup> and shall [or om. shall<sup>16</sup>] send gifts one to another; because these two prophets tormented them that dwelt on [dwell upon] the earth. And after [ins. the] three days and a half the Spirit [a spirit] of life from God entered into them,<sup>17</sup> and they stood upon their feet; and great fear fell upon them which saw [those] who beheld] them. And they [or I]<sup>18</sup> heard a great voice from [ins. the] heaven saying unto them, Come up hither. And they ascended up to [into—ins. the] heaven in a [the] cloud; and their enemies beheld them.

c. The Judgment.

VERS. 13, 14.

- 13 And [ins. in] the same [that] hour was there [there was] a great earthquake, and the tenth part of the city fell, and in the earthquake were slain [ins. names] of men seven thousand: and the remnant were [became] affrighted, and gave glory to the God of [ins. the] heaven.
- 14 The second woe is past; and, [om. and,] behold, the third woe cometh quickly.

<sup>9</sup> Ver. 8. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch., give τὸ πτώμα with A. B. C.; Lange, and Rec. τὰ πτώματα with N. P. In ver. 9, first occurrence, N. also gives the singular; P. alone, the plural: in the second occurrence all the Codd. give the plural.—E. R. C.]

<sup>10</sup> Ver. 8. [See EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.—E. R. C.]

<sup>11</sup> Ver. 8. Instead of ἡμῶν, read αὐτῶν. [So Modern Crit. Eds. generally with N. A. B. C. P.; Rec. et al. read ἡμῶν with I; N. omits both.—E. R. C.]

<sup>12</sup> Ver. 9. [Lach., Words., Alf., Treg., Tisch., give βλέψουσιν with N. A. B. C. P., Gb., Sm.; Lange, βλέψουσιν with Vulg. etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 10. ἄψουσιν. [So Eds. generally with N. A. C. P., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>14</sup> Ver. 10. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch., give χαίρουσιν with N. A. B. C. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 10. Εὐφραίνονται. [So Modern Eds. with N. A. C. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>16</sup> Ver. 10. [Tisch. reads πέμψουσιν with N. P.; Lach., Words., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (1859), Lange, πέμψουσιν, with N. A. C.—E. R. C.]

<sup>17</sup> Ver. 11. Ἐν αὐτοῖς. See Dist. [Tisch. so gives with A.; Treg. reads αὐτοῖς without ἐν with C. P. (he cites A. as reading ἐν αὐτοῖς); Alf. brackets ἐν; N. B. read εἰς αὐτοῖς.—E. R. C.]

<sup>18</sup> Ver. 12. The reading ἡκούσα was probably preferred as apparently the more natural one. [So Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch., with N. A. C. P., Vulg., etc. Gb., Tisch. (1859), Lange, give ἡκούσα with N. B. (Treg. cites P. as giving the latter reading).—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

The first figure that we meet with in this chapter could scarcely be plainer; nothing save a lapse into the misapprehensive literal conception could, from this passage, ch. xi. 1, 2, draw the conclusion that the Temple in Jerusalem was still standing at the time of these visions. The Temple has always been a symbol of the visible form under which the Kingdom of God has appeared, i. e. the Theocracy at first, and, later, the Church; and even the Temple of Ezekiel most distinctly presents this typicalism (especially in the features of the mystical stream, ch. xlvii. 1, and the voice of the Lord, ch. xliii. 7). In general, the mystical Temple of Ezekiel seems to constitute a form which is transitional to the Temple of the Apocalypse, in accordance with the symbolical circumstances. The Holy of Holies has become one with the Holy Place, because the time of reconciliation has come; and, on the other hand, the outer court has spread into a number of outer courts, because it must become a place for all nations; comp. Matt. xxi. 13; Is. lvi. 7. This significance and grandeur of the outer court particularly appears in the picture presented in the Apocalypse. Its contrast to the Temple is likewise strongly set forth. The Prophet is to measure the Temple, but not the outer court. The Temple of Ezekiel is also measured, ch. xi. But the City of Jerusalem itself is described as an immeasurable place in the Prophecy of Zechariah, ch. ii. 1 seqq. In the Apocalypse, the measured Temple expands into the measured City of God (ch. xxi. 15); the unmeasured or immeasurable outer court expands into the ideal domain of the world and the nations, out of which all glory shall be brought into the Holy City (Rev. xxi. 24; xxii. 2).

The Temple itself, then, must be measured; a reed is given to the Prophet that he may measure it. The Spirit of God in the Church has within Himself and in the Prophet a consciousness that the inner, essential Church is a Divine entity, chosen by God and known to Him—not a passing cloud, a drifting, shifting, transitory object. That which is here expressed by measure, is twice declared by the number 144,000 (chaps. vii. and xiv.). So the Northern Mythology claims that the heroes of Odin are numbered.

A still more remarkable circumstance is that the Altar also is measured—the Altar of incense—the whole domain of holy prayer-life. And, humanly speaking, this belongs to the most conscious consciousness of God—to the inmost intuition (innersten Erinnerung) of the Church.

Finally, the worshippers in the Temple are to be measured. For the spiritual nature and development of every individual believer, the degree and the species of his glory, are known to God; they repose upon the individual capacities and disposition of each believer, as determined from eternity, his free agency being in nothing impaired (see Matt. vi. 27).

In antithesis to these Divine fixities, an immeasurable indefiniteness is reserved for the outer court. There can be nothing hostile in the direction to cast it out; the words can be expressive only of the decree that it is not to be measured along with the Sanctuary, that the consciousness of its externality is to be made permanent. For in its very quality of an outer court, it already lies outside of the Temple; and, furthermore, the direction: cast it out (on the milder or more general signification of ἐκβάλλειν, see the Lexicons) is modified by the words: measure it not. And why not? For it is given to the Gentiles. This does not mean merely, because the throng of the Gentiles—of such as are not subjective, living Christians—is immeasurable, but also because their assembly is fluctuating; because the outer court denotes the vestibule to the Sanctuary—a preparation for entrance into the Sanctuary. Of course, so long and in so far as the Gentiles are Gentiles, they trample on the outer court, as is also declared concerning the impenitent Jews, Is. i. They are loungers, street-walkers [Pflastertreter] in a religious sense; their outer court is the entire Holy City, i. e., the Church as an external body; they are they who, according to another figure, “stand all the day idle in the market.” In the Christian service of the Sanctuary, they constitute the ebbing and flowing mass; they may, as a pious man once paradoxically expressed himself, sit in the way of the truly devout. Their theological knowledge consists partly of gross popular conceits, partly of spiritualistic mist. In confession, they strain the Divine word, in one direction, into a literal ordinance, and relax it, in the other direction, until nothing but an uncertain sentiment remains. In matters of practical piety, they are either violently active or inconstant and wavering. In all cases, the treading of the outer court is the leading feature of their devotions.

In regard to the import of the forty-two months, Düsterdieck and others believe, that they are connected with “the type of the duration of the down-treading of the Holy City by Antiochus Epiphanes.” That, however, lasted but three years (see 1 Macc. iv. 59; comp. ch. i. 55). Moreover, the different designations of the theocratic time of tribulation (a time, two times, and half a time, Dan. vii. 25; xii. 7), according to times, years, months or days, are not without a mutual connection (see Introduction, p. 16). The forty-two months are the times of the pilgrimage of Christianity through the world, bearing the cross of suffering—suffering inflicted on the internal Church through the external Church. These times are defined as forty-two little periods of change.

The second picture, in the history of the Two Witnesses, treats of another antithesis—that of the Christian Church and the Christian State. For the voice of the Lord which, in the text, so simply speaks of His two Witnesses, we, in face of the many marvels which have here been found, conceive of as setting forth the antithesis of the Christian Church and the Christian State; and this in accordance with the original passage in the Prophecy of Zechariah, on which the present passage is founded. The candlestick of Israel, the light and law of the Theocracy (Zech. iv. 2), receives its oil from the two olive-trees, or sons of oil, standing at the right and left of it (vers. 3 and 4). Now these, as they stand before the Ruler of the whole Earth, are, according to the context (ch. iii.), Joshua, the High-Priest, the typical representative of the future Church, concerning whom it is expressly declared, that he stands before the Angel of the Lord, and Zerubbabel the governor, the typical representative of the future State, distinguished by like dignities (ch. iv. 6, 7).

Many, no doubt, will regard this conception as too home-spun—not sufficiently ingenious or anecdotal. But, let us further remark, the removal, through the Man of Sin, of the hindrance to Antichristianity—the κατέχων (2 Thess. ii. 6), or κατέχων (ver. 7)—coincides precisely with the removal of the two olive-trees [German, sons of oil] through the medium of the Beast out of the abyss.

The two Witnesses of God prophecy. To prophecy is to aid in opening for the Kingdom of God a way into the future, by declaring the signs of the future.* True advances, developments and reforms, are prophecies in act. All sound dogmas of the Church, as well as all sound laws of the State, are prophecies. Both Witnesses prophecy clad in sackcloth—in the penitential garb of the Church Militant and of the State, which latter is engaged in an incessant struggle with the ungodly spirit of the world. Here the movement continues through an uninterrupted chain of days’ works—one thousand two hundred and sixty days. The time is equal to the forty-two months, but is viewed from an entirely different point; the whole Church and the whole State, in their higher aspect, are denoted here. As, however, Church and State are distinct under the new dispensation, their oil no longer flows together in one candlestick; both are olive trees [oil-trees]; both, also, are candlesticks. Again, they stand before the God of the earth; i. e., they unitedly represent firm, historic order, authority,—symbolized by the earth. Both have retained somewhat of the Old Testament character, the Elijah nature; and they are, manifestly, drawn after the type of Elijah. When they desire to injure any one, fire goeth forth out of their mouth. This can, of course, only be spiritual fire; just as the sword issuing from the mouth of the Lord, is but a spiritual sword. Nevertheless, it is a fire of judgment; it devoureth their enemies. The death that they inflict upon those who offend them, cannot be apprehended as the spiritual death in order to the new life; at least social death must be understood—exclusion from religious communion and civil fellowship, practiced in the Middle Ages under the great and gloomy forms of outlawry and excommunication. Their power to shut the Heaven, that it rain not, is most strongly suggestive of Elijah; whilst their power over the waters, to turn them into blood, and to smite the earth with every plague, as often as they shall will, recalls the wonders done by Moses in Egypt.

* [See Add. Comm. on ch. x. 11, p. 221.—E. R. C.]

They can shut Heaven. The meaning of this is, they can check and withhold the blessings of the Spirit.

To turn the waters into blood, is to darken the currents of national life through wars and bloodshed.

To smite the earth with every plague, means to curtail the blessing of the historical authority or order of things in every way, and to convert it into a curse. As often as they shall will, adds the Seer, thereby indicating a great development of despotism and autocracy in their power.

Can it be supposed, we ask, that toward the end of the New Testament economy, two persons could appear as Prophets, having power to answer personal grievances with devouring fire? Or having power, at their own discretion, to bring forth in nature such wonders of judgment, and inflict them upon the earth? The Church and the State, however, have, in a symbolical sense, acted after precisely the Old Testament fashion here described, and that, with such a mingling of their qualities, as though they had done all things in common. They have likewise, in respect of their fundamental tendency, prominently set forth by the Seer, prophesied, i. e., served the cause of development; and they have been Witnesses of God—representatives of His light and justice.

The predominantly Old Testament character of the past and present fulfillment of their mission, undoubtedly aids in cutting short the time of their testimony and in facilitating the triumph of the Beast over them. In consequence of the severity—in many respects excessive—of their rule, as manifested, particularly, in the form of the mediæval excommunication, and the military and judicial system of the same period, a two-fold Helot rancor, an ecclesiastical and political resentment, has ineffaceably impressed itself on the memory of the agitated life of the nations, bringing near the fatal time at which the Beast of Antichristianity may ascend out of the abyss.

Be it observed that Antichristianity passes through three climactic stages before attaining to perfection; exhibiting itself first in the form of the Beast out of the abyss, next in that of the Beast out of the sea, and finally in that of the Beast from the earth. The Beast out of the abyss possesses, as yet, no positive popular and human apparent form, much less the complete mock-holy semblance of the Lamb, possessed by the Beast from the earth; it first comes forth, as a bodiless spirit, from the abyss, in the power of a predominantly demonic spirit of the times, or party spirit. This spirit has ascended from the abyss, i. e., the demonic region of the realm of the dead, which constitutes a transition-form to the final hell. In this respect he is suggestive of the spirit of gloom which arose from the abyss at the fifth Trumpet. And from the fact of this resemblance, it results that he does not necessarily appear in the naked forms of lawlessness [Anomismus]. There is a gloomy churchly form which is subversive of the true Church, and a passionate state-form which undermines the true State. If we have recognized in the two Witnesses the intimate union between Church and State, as respects the bright side of both institutions, it becomes evident that their absolute disagreement must speedily be followed by self-dissolution. The true spirit of the Church can, indeed, long curb the wantonness of the State; the true spirit of the State can long protect the Church against a false ecclesiastical system. But mankind has already seen the false Church-form in conflict with sound State principles, and vice versa. And mankind must finally see the Church ruined by the Church, the State by the State, because in the case of each, sombre party-spirit has taken the place of right principles.

The Beast, then, shall make war with the two Witnesses—not merely a word and pen war, but also the war of social breach. He shall conquer them in public opinion, as men say, and complete his triumph by killing them. They are killed when destroyed as to their true principles—when the masses rule over faith and worship [Kultus] in the Church, over morals and culture in the State; or when, in the State, the last trace of kinship with the Church is destroyed through principal Atheism, and the last trace of political or social discipline and duty has disappeared from the Church. Then are they killed, even though their outward forms continue to exist, like the shades of departed substances, as, for instance, the forms of the Roman Republic under the first Emperors.

It is most significantly said: their corpses lie in the street of the great city. Their bodies, therefore, are not formally buried and put out of sight: they remain in the public street of the great city, under the eyes, and amid the surging to and fro, of a society fundamentally anarchical.

The great city itself is called Sodom and Egypt. Sodom is the symbol of perfect unnaturalness; Egypt is the symbol of a magical natural science and deification of nature. The two extremes, in their abominable coalition, are the Janus heads of a world which, in her deification of nature, is fundamentally at variance not only with God, but also with the kernel or inmost essence of nature itself.

There, adds the Seer, their Lord was crucified. The crucifixion of Christ was itself the result of a coalition of the spiritual unnaturalness of Judaism—self-murderous, in the killing of its Messiah—and the heathen world, which had fallen into sorcery [Magismus] and an intellectual cultus of nature.

Thus, as the murderess of Christ, Jerusalem may be the type of this great collective city, Sodom-Egypt; that the real Jerusalem itself is intended, can be supposed only under the erroneous system of an anti-symbolical, so-called historical treatment of the Book. With the symbolical name Jerusalem, however, another collective city, Babylon, might easily correspond. Some of the men, better disposed ones, who still have a remnant of influence left, individuals of the peoples and tribes and tongues and nations, shall in the meantime keep their dead bodies in view for three days and a half—not permitting them to be put into sepulchres; assuredly, in the hope of their revival. But the time rich in promise, the time of resurrection, the three days (Hos. vi. 2), pass away without affording any comfort; the corpses lie there until the hour of despair, indicated by three days and a half. And precisely this fact is a cause of delight to those who dwell on the Earth, or cling to the Earth in her earthiness—the earthly-minded ones. They rejoice over the apparent destruction of the two Witnesses; they hold feasts and contemplate further festivities; mutual greetings, in the way of presents or compliments, are exchanged, falling, particularly, to the share of the great utterers of public opinion, we doubt not.

The reason for all this is as follows: These two Prophets tormented them that dwell upon the Earth. Churchly rule [Norm] and civil law have always, to the true men of this world, who have made themselves at home on the Earth, been as a troublesome fanaticism, only disciplinary and tormenting.

But the people who watched their dead bodies have not sorrowed in vain. Finally, out of the horror of the human heart, full of a religious-moral anguish, a super-terrestrial power develops. It is thus not without instrumentality that, in the most disconsolate hour, the flame of the ecclesiastical and the political spirit rises again bright and heavenly, with united brilliancy and glorified beauty; that a spirit of life from God penetrates the corpses, so that they again stand upon their feet, prepared for war and victory, offering defiance to the whole apostate world, and diffusing great spiritual terror over all with whom they come in contact.

But they are not commissioned to fight again the former conflict; in the Kingdom of Spirit, they have triumphed through their defeat, like Christ their Lord. Therefore they hear, or the Seer hears, a great voice from Heaven saying to them: Come up hither.

But how can the Christian Church and the Christian State have assigned to them an ascension more glorious than that of Elijah—similar to that of Christ Himself? Nitzsch says: "Church and State shall, in their consummation, be swallowed up in the unity of the Kingdom of God." Let us particularly consider the following in this connection:

Their ascension is their exaltation above the former historical, in part pedagogical, forms, into the ideal form of a pure spiritual fellowship. They ascend into Heaven even whilst still on Earth, by being transported into the realm of pure spirit, of perfect fellowship with God. When, however, it is declared, that a cloud envelops them, there takes place a gathering and separation of this perfected congregation of God, this Bride of Christ, from the unbelieving world (Matt. xxiv. 31); and, no less, an alteration of her condition, to meet the heavenly glorification—an alteration characterized as an "attaining" [Entgegenkommen—coming towards] "the resurrection" (Phil. iii. 11); as a being "changed" (1 Cor. xv. 51); as a being "caught up into the air to meet the Lord" (1 Thess. iv. 17).

Their enemies must be spectators of their beginning glorification.

The hour of their glorification, however, becomes an hour of judgment for the world. The separation of the congregation of God from the world is followed by a great earthquake; all the relations of the old human society are shaken and mingled confusedly together by the separation of the salt of the Earth. Thus a great reaction is awakened in the better elements of the ungodly world. The tenth part of the godless city falls in the earthquake. Ten, as perfect development, realized freedom, is also perfect will, decided tendency. Thus, with the fall of the tenth part of the Antichristian world, the back-bone of that world is broken; henceforth it is a confused mass, anxiously expectant of the end. This change is especially brought about, however, by the fact that seven thousand names of men, or men of name, are slain in their names by the earthquake. Without doubt, the reaction of the terrified peoples has been directed with special fury toward their leaders, who, as seducers, by thousands, as spirits, by seven (Matt. xii. 45), have promised men the seventh day—the peoples' holiday. Above all, their names, shimmering with a deceptive lustra, are given up to scorn and destruction.

Whilst we must not forget that a cyclical life-picture of the entire New Testament time is here presented to us, neither should the fact be overlooked, that the conclusion of this time is characterized as the second woe—the intermediate one therefore—that which forms the transition from the first to the third woe; and it is in accordance with this fact that we must seek to determine the eschatological import of the present section.

We have seen that the second woe has presented itself in the grand succession of heresies (religious and ethical), which run through the entire Christian time; the time of this woe, therefore, coincides with that of the activity of the two Witnesses; it forms the reverse of their dispensation (Matt. xxiv. 26). It has likewise been found that the third woe begins with the seventh Trumpet, as the time of ripened Antichristianity, with features historically developed and determined.

The second woe is, therefore, a peculiar formation of the times, consummated at the defeat of the two Witnesses and continuing until the period of positive Antichristianity. Its characteristic feature is the tremendous rocking of affairs beginning with the bursting forth of Antichristianity. The authorities and guardians of Church and State seem at last to be everlastingly destroyed; the better disposed are but individuals from all parts of the world who, in a manner, keep watch by the bodies of the slain, whilst the ruling party celebrate the excited festivities of an utterly secularized party-spirit. Then, however, by reason of the separation and gathering of the Church of God, a reaction again takes place; the power of the goddess city is shaken by the glorious precursory appearing of the congregation of the Kingdom and by the altered sentiments of many of her inhabitants—in whom the change, however, bears the predominant character of a repentance of fear, and can therefore give way to the full manifestation of Antichristianity in the third woe. This period of a purely Antichristian spirit of the times, without final consolidation, is, in more general descriptions, included together with the final revelation of Antichrist, e. g. 2 Thess. ii. 8. The manifestation of wickedness [or the Wicked One—des Boshafsten] has its gradations, as has already been intimated. This time seems to be more definitely characterized by the Beast, which is transformed into the eighth king (ch. xvii. 11), and which forms the transition from the seven kings of the old world of authority to the ten kings of absolute democracy.

We must, further, not overlook the fact, that even the second woe touches the end of the world, and that even the third woe, the revelation of Antichristianity, reaches back into the old time. In this connection, we would again call to mind the law of the cyclical circles; they ever present total world-pictures, though observing a continual progression toward the end of the world and illustrating always a different aspect of the world.

A feature worthy of notice is that the Beast of this second woe ascends out of the same abyss whence, after the fifth Trumpet, the smoke, accompanied by the swarm of locusts, arose; that, on the other hand, it precedes the third woe of consummate Antichristianity, just as the judgment upon Babylon (chs. xvii. and xviii.) precedes the judgment upon the Beast (ch. xix.)

We have, then, in ch. xi., the Earth-picture of the Christian visible world, in respect of its all-sided historic conformation in good and evil; above all, in respect of the conflict, waxing ever more pronounced, between ecclesiastical and political nomism ([Nomismus] in the good sense of the term), on the one hand, and the antinomism or anormism of false liberty, or the modern spirit of the times, on the other hand—a conflict finally conducting, in part, to the ripe antithesis betwixt the Kingdom of God and the world, and ending, in the world itself, with the most extreme fluctuations.

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

[ELLIOTT and BARNES regard vers. 1, 2, as properly belonging to the preceding section (the latter part of ver. 2 being transitional to the following section) and as indicating the Re-Formation of the Church by those whom the Seer symbolized. The Temple, in the widest sense of the term, (inclusive of the Sanctuary and all the Courts) they interpret “as symbolic of the Christian Church Universal: the Holy of Holies . . . representing that part of it . . . gathered into Paradise; the remainder of the Temple . . . the Church on Earth, the Holy Place, . . . as figuring the Church in respect of its secret spiritual worship and character, . . . the Altar-court . . .

the Church in respect of its visible and public worship, . . . the outer or Gentile court is the symbolic scene of the adscititious members from out of heathenism.” The bestowment of the rod (Elliott), as denoting “the royal authorization of those whom St. John here represented . . . in the work of the Scriptural re-formation of the Church;” the direction to measure, coupled with the casting out, as implying, 1. The defining of those who alone could rightly be considered as belonging to Christ’s Church (“such as in public profession and worship recognized that cardinal point of the Christian faith which the Jewish Altar and Altar ritual-worship symbolized, viz. justification by the alone efficacy of Christ’s propitiatory sacrifice”);—2. The exclusion or excommunication of “the Romish (and Greek?) Church . . . as apostate and heathen;”—the recognition of those excluded as within a Court of the Temple, as indicating that those excluded “would continue to appear for a time attached as an appendage to the Church visible.” By the Witnesses they understand the unbroken series of upholders and proclaimers of truth, divided as follows: (1) The earlier Western Witnesses, such as Serenus of Marseilles in the early part of the 8th Century, the Anglo Saxon Church, Agobard, Claude of Turin, etc.; (2) the Eastern line, consisting of the Paulicians arising about A.D. 653; (3) the United Eastern and Western lines, during the 11th and 12th Centuries; (4) the Waldenses* and Albigenses origina-“Antichrist is the falsehood (doomed to eternal damnation), covered with the appearance of the truth and righteousness of Christ and His spouse . . . being administered by false apostles; and defended by one or other arm (i. e., the spiritual and secular arm). . . . Thus it is not a certain particular person, ordained in a certain grade, office, or ministry, considering the thing generally; but the falsehood itself, opposed to the truth, with which however it covers itself, adorning itself outwardly with the beauty and piety of Christ’s Church, of Christ Himself, His names, offices, scriptures, sacraments. The iniquity of this system, with all his ministers, higher and lower, following it with an evil and blinded heart—such a congregation, taken together, is called Antichrist, or Babylon, or the Fourth Beast, or the Harlot, or the Man of Sin, the Son of Perdition.

* [Elliott (Vol. II., Appendix) gives at length, and in the original, the Noble Lesson of the Waldenses. This work, written about A.D. 1170, presents the Witness of the Waldensian Church to the truth. He gives, Vol. II., pp. 390-396, translations from this, and from one of their later works entitled Antichrist. So valuable and interesting is the latter as indicating the position of that remarkable people in reference to Rome, and as witnessing against her, that the extract presented by Elliott is here reproduced. (The last paragraph is as presented by Barnes.)

“His first work is, that the service of latria, properly due to God alone, he (Antichrist) perverts unto himself and to his works, and to the poor creature, rational or irrational, sensible or insensible; as, for instance, to male or female saints departed this life, and to their images, bones, or relics. His works are the sacraments, especially that of the eucharist, which he worships equally with God and Christ, prohibiting the adoration of God alone.

“His second work is, that he robs and deprives Christ of the merits of Christ, with the whole sufficiency of grace, righteousness, regeneration, remission of sins, sanctification, confirmation, and spiritual nourishment; and imputes and attributes them to his own authority, to his own doings, or to the saints and their intercession, or to the fire of purgatory. Thus he separates the people from Christ, and leads them away to the things already mentioned; that so they may seek not the things of Christ, nor through Christ, but only the work of their own hands; not through a living faith in God, and Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit; but through the will and the works of Antichrist, agreeably to his preaching that man’s whole salvation depends on his works.

“His third work is, that he attributes the regeneration of the Holy Spirit to a dead outward faith; baptizing child-ting about A. D. 1170; (5) the Churches of the Reformation.—They interpret: (1) The 1260 days as indicating 1260 years; (2) the olive-trees and candlesticks, that they were to consist of both ministers and churches; (3) the number two that they were to be, (a) a number competent to bear witness (comp. Deut. xvii. 6; xix. 15, etc.), (b) a small number, (c) possibly the original division into two lines, Eastern and Western; (4) their being clothed in sack-cloth, that they were to witness in the midst of grief and persecution; (5) their power (Barnes), (a) over those who should injure them, to devour them with fire, their doctrines and denunciations, which would resemble consuming fire (resulting ultimately in Divine judgment); (b) to shut heaven, that spiritual blessings would seem to be under their control. ("During the ages of their ministry, there was neither dew nor rain of a spiritual kind upon the earth, but at the word of the Witnesses. There was no knowledge of salvation but by their preaching—no descent of the Spirit but in answer to their prayers; and as the Witnesses were shut out from Christendom generally, a universal famine ensued," Seventh Vial); (c) over the waters, that the wars, commotions, etc., which have followed the attempts to destroy them, and which have caused rivers of blood to flow, would seem to have been in answer to their prayers; (6) the war against them, the war of extermination waged in particular against the Waldenses ("from the year 1540–1570 . . . no fewer than nine hundred thousand Protestants were put to death by the Papists in different parts of Europe."—Barnes); (7) the Beast (the fourth Beast of Daniel, Dan. vii.), the Papacy; (8) the death, the apparent destruction of the Witnesses at the Lateran Council (to which all dissentients had been summoned and at which none appeared) when, May 5, A. D. 1514, the Orator of the Council proclaimed to the Pope from the pulpit, "Jam nemo reclamatur, nullus obstitit." "There is an end of resistance to the papal rule and religion; opposers there exist no more:" and again "The whole body of Christendom is now seen to be subjected to its Head, that is to Thee." (Quoted by Elliott, Vol. II., p. 450); (9) the not permitting their bodies to be buried, "that they should be treated with indignity as if they were not worthy of Christian burial," (it was decreed that heretics should be denied Christian burial by the ren in that faith, and teaching that by it is the consecration of baptism and regeneration, on which same faith it (he) ministers orders and the other sacraments; and on it founds all Christian religion.

"His fourth work is, that he rests the whole religion and sanctity of the people upon his Mass; for leading them to hear it, he deprives them of spiritual and sacramental manuduction.

"His fifth work is, that he does every thing to be seen, and to girt his insatiable avarice.

"His sixth work is, that he allows manifest sins without ecclesiastical censure and excommunication.

"His seventh work is, that he defends his unity, not by the Holy Spirit, but by the secular power.

"His eighth work is, that he hates, persecutes, makes inquiry after, and robs and puts to death the members of Christ.

"These things and many others, are the cloak and vestment of Antichrist: by which he covers his lying wickedness, lest he should be rejected as a heathen. But there is no other cause of idolatry than a false opinion of grace, and truth, and authority, and invocation, and intercession; which this Antichrist has taken away from God, and which he has ascribed to ceremonies, and authorities, and a man's own works, and to saints, and to purgatory."—E. R. C.]

Lateran Council, A. D. 1179; again, 1215, by Gregory IX.; and by Pope Martin, 1227; (10) the broad place (or way) of the City, (Elliott) the Council above mentioned, representing the whole Roman power, gathered in Rome; (11) the rejoicing, etc., the special rejoicings after every new victory over "heretics," and especially at the close of the Council mentioned in sect. (8)—(see Elliott, Vol. II., pp. 454 sq.); (12) the resurrection after three days and a half, the renewal of witness by Luther—Luther posted his theses at Wittenberg, Oct. 31, 1517, i. e., three years and 180 days after May 5, 1514, when the Orator of the Lateran Council (see above in 8) proclaimed heresy to be extinct; (13) the ascension, the deliverance of the Churches of the Reformation from persecution and into positions of prosperity and influence; (14) the earthquake, the Reformation—"That religious revolution which astonished and convulsed the nations of Europe" (Lingard, quoted by Barnes); (15) the fall of the tenth part of the City, the falling away from Rome of, (Barnes) a considerable portion of her power, (Elliott) England, one of the ten Papal kingdoms; (16) the slaying of seven Chiliads, (Elliott) the separation from the Roman power of the Seven United Provinces of Holland—(Barnes) the proportion of those who perished in Europe in the wars consequent on the Reformation; (17) the remnant affrighted, the alarm of, (Elliott) the remnant of Papists in Protestant countries, (Barnes) the entire unconverted portion of the Roman City; (18) gave glory to God, (Elliott) praise was given by the Witnesses, (Barnes) the unconverted stood in awe at what God was doing.

STUART understands vers. 1, 2, "to prefigure the preservation of all which was fundamental and essential in the ancient religion, notwithstanding the destruction of all that was external in respect to the Temple, the City, and the ancient people of God." The vision of the Witnesses he interprets as symbolizing "that God would raise up faithful and well endowed preachers among the Jews, at the period when the nations were ready to perish; that those preachers would be persecuted and destroyed; and after all that the Christian cause would still be triumphant."

WORDSWORTH regards (vers. 1, 2) the Temple and Altar (of incense) as symbolizing the true Church; the reed as the Scriptures; the measuring as an act "of appropriation and of preservation (Num. xxxv. 6; Jer. xxxi. 39; Hab. iii. 6; Zech. ii. 2), and also of partition and separation, (2 Sam. viii. 2)"; "in this vision of the Apocalypse, the last written of all the Books of Holy Scripture (the completion of the Canon or measuring rule), St. John receives the reed from Christ and measures the Church." The two Witnesses he understands as indicating the Church (called two as consisting of both Jews and Gentiles), enlivened and enlightened by the two Testaments (the two olive trees); their persecution, death, etc., that the history of Christ will be reproduced in the history of His Word and Church. The Beast and City he interprets as Barnes and Elliott.

ALFORD remarks, "No solution at all approaching to a satisfactory one has ever yet been given of any one of these periods. This being so, my principle is to regard them as being still among things unknown to the Church, and awaiting their elucidation by the event." Concerning the Witnesses he remarks on ver. 6, "All this points out the spirit and power of Moses combined with that of Elias. And undoubtedly it is in these two directions that we must look for the two witnesses or lines of witnesses. The one impersonates the law, the other the Prophets. The one reminds us of the Prophet whom God should raise up like unto Moses; the other of Elias, the Prophet who should come before the great and terrible day of the Lord." As to whether the prophecy is to be fulfilled by individuals or lines of witnesses, he does not attempt to decide.

LORD writes as to the measuring of the Temple, "The rod is the symbol of the revealed will of God; . . . the Holy of Holies . . . the scene in which God visibly manifests Himself, Christ intercedes, and the Cherubim, the representatives of the redeemed, serve in His presence; so the other sanctuary symbolizes the place or places on earth in which the true worshippers offer Him the public worship which He enjoins. The Altar on which incense, the symbol of prayer, was offered, represented the Cross of Christ, the instrument of His expiation, and thence of reconciliation and access to God. . . . To measure the Temple, then, was to seek and learn the truths taught in the Scriptures, and symbolized first by the inner sanctuary, . . . and next . . . by the outer sanctuary, respecting the place or places on earth which He has appointed for the worship which He enjoins on His people, respecting the expiation on which they are to rely, . . . and respecting the ministers who conduct the worship He enjoins. . . . The court, which was on the outside, . . . denoted the station of the congregation of visible worshippers; . . . to reject it as no part of the Temple, was therefore, to reject the body of the nominal or visible, as not true worshippers; and the direction to reject it was equivalent to the prophecy that the nominal was not to be a true Church. . . . The command to measure the Temple was addressed to the Apostle doubtless as representing the same persons as he symbolized in the prediction that he must again prophesy before peoples, etc." On the subject of the Witnesses, he agrees as to their nature, substantially, with Elliott and Barnes; their death, resurrection, and ascension, however, he regards as still future and as literal. The 1260, and three and a half, days, he interprets as symbolic of years.

GLASGOW refers the measuring to Apostolic times. "The Apostles (symbolized by John), by inspiration, gave laws of discipline and of morals, for receiving or excluding candidates or members. Thus they measured the House and City of God. And they measured the Altar by teaching the doctrine of the one sacrifice offered by Christ, and of His intercession, and of His government on the mediatorial throne; and they measured the worshippers, by supplying the patterns and rules of duty, and thus furnishing the means of distinguishing the Lord's peculiar 'people' from His enemies." The outside court he interprets substantially as Elliott; the trampling of the City, as the predominance "of what Neander and Killen have called 'the Catholic system.'" The Witnesses he also interprets as symbolizing the Paulicians, Waldenses, etc.; he begins the Witness, however, with the protest of the Novatians about A. D. 258, and thus concludes the 1260 days (or years) of prophesying in sackcloth (or affliction) in A. D. 1514. He adopts the opinion that the declaration made May 5th, 1514, in the Lateran Council, referred to above, denotes the death and exposure of the dead bodies of the Witnesses. On other points of interpretation he agrees generally with Elliott.—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Düsterdieck holds, with us, that the present section really closes with ver. 14. [With Elliott and others, the Am. Ed. regards vers. 1 and 2 as connected with the preceding chapter. See Additional Note, p. 132.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 1. And there was given me a reed.—After the analogy of Old Testament prophetic-symbolical transactions; see Ia. viii. 1, and many other passages, particularly in the Prophecies of Jeremiah and Ezekiel.

Given.—By whom? The indeterminateness denotes that nothing in the symbolism is dependent upon this feature. The literal interpretation would fain define the giver.

A reed.—Ezek. xl. 8; Rev. xxi. 15. [Like unto a rod.—"The word βάβδος, rod, is coupled three times in the Apocalypse with the adjective οὐρνῶ (ii. 27; xii. 6; xix. 15). And in the same places it is coupled also with the verb ποιμαίνειν, to tend, as a shepherd does. The idea is thus suggested of a pastoral staff." WORDSW.—E. R. C.]

Saying [Lange: Whilst it was commanded].—Ἀέγων—indefinite form. Bengel explains, grammatically but not symbolically: the κάλamus.

Measure the Temple.—The Temple in Jerusalem had long since been measured; it, however, is not what is meant here. Neither, indeed, is the measuring to be taken literally. The worshippers, also, are to be measured, i. e., precisely determined. In Ezek. xl. 8 sqq., the measuring of a symbolical Temple is spoken of, whilst Rev. xxi. treats of the measurement of the symbolical City of God.

According to Düsterdieck and many others, the measuring here denotes exemption from destruction; the above-mentioned commentator supposes that the treading under foot of the outer court is indicative of actual destruction. Yet the very passages that he cites [in connection with the measuring]—Amos vii. 7; Hab. iii. 6—have reference to destruction, and the idea that the outer court was destroyed, but that the Temple and the worship continued to subsist, is utterly futile, as is in general the so-called historic application of the passage to the Temple at Jerusalem. Düsterdieck calls the interpretation of the Temple as the true Church of God, allegoristic! One-sided, we admit that it is, to interpret the measuring of the Temple as indicative of a reconstruction of the Church, or to apply the contrast between the Temple and the outer court, in which contrast the chief weight of the similitude lies, to the contrast between the evangelic Church and Catholicism; in opposition to the latter exposition, Catholic exegetes distinguish between good Catholics and excommunicated persons. [See the ABSTRACT or VIEWS, etc., pp. 227 sqq.—E. R. C.]

The altar.—The Altar of incense. The Altar of burnt-offering stood in the outer court. [Elliott and Barnes regard the Altar as that of burnt-offering. It must be acknowledged that the language apparently points to the three great divisions of the Temple enclosure—the vaos or Sanctuary, the θυσιαστήριον or altar (court), and the court outside the Sanctuary, i. e., the court of the Gentiles. Of these courts, that of the Gentiles alone entirely surrounded the Sanctuary; the inner court merely enclosed it on three sides: the latter, from both its local and spiritual relations to the Sanctuary, could not so well be described as outside (τὴν αὐτὴν τὴν ἔξωθεν τοῦ ναοῦ), as the former.—E. R. C.]

In it (ἐν αὐτῷ).—These words might be referred to the Altar of incense, inasmuch as all prayers do, in a symbolical sense, ascend from the Altar of incense; most exegetes, however, make them relate to the Temple.* The main thing, here as elsewhere, is the contrast presented to those without. John is thought even here to have in view the imminent destruction of Jerusalem, differing, however, from the eschatological prophecies of the Lord by predicting a preservation of the Temple, and placing the faithful Jewish Christians therein! (comp. also De Wette, Lücke, p. 354).

Ver. 2. And [Lange: But] the court which is without the Temple.—On misapprehensions of the outer court, by Luther, Vittinga, Ewald, see Düsterdieck.

Cast out.—Eichhorn, correctly: Profanum declarata.

Given unto the Gentiles [heathen].—[On the New Testament force of τὰ ἔθνη see Cremer's Biblico-Theological Lexicon under ἔθνος. The following is extracted: "It is a peculiarity of New Testament, or, indeed, of Bible usage generally, to understand by τὰ ἔθνη, πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, those who are not of Israel, opp. οἱ Ἰσραήλ, Ἰουδαῖοι, Acts ix. 15; xiv. 2, 5; xxi. 11, 21; xxvi. 20; Rom. ii. 24; iii. 29; ix. 24, 30, 31; xi. 25; 1 Cor. i. 28; Gal. ii. 15: οἱ ἐκ περιτομῆς; Acts x. 45: περιτομῆς; Gal. ii. 9 (cf. Eph. ii. 11): γένος; 2 Cor. xi. 26 parallel; οἱ κατέλοιποι τῶν ἀνθρώπων, Acts xv. 17. In this sense the word corresponds to the Hebrew גוֹי (LXX. sometimes—λαός, e. g., (Josh. iii. 17; iv. 1), which signifies primarily nothing but a connected host, multitude. . . . Τὰ ἔθνη are the peoples outside of Israel—the totality of the nations, which, being left to themselves (Acts xiv. 16), are unconnected with the God of Salvation, Who is Israel's God; Acts xxviii. 28; Eph. ii. 11, 12; Rom. xi. 11, 12; Gal. iii. 8, 14; 1 Thess. iv. 5; Eph. iii. 6; Matt. xii. 21. Left to themselves and to their own will, they stand in moral antagonism to the Divine order of life, Eph. iv. 17; 1 Pet. iv. 8, 4; 1 Cor. x. 20; xii. 2; Matt. vi. 82; Luke xii. 30; cf. Matt. xviii. 17; they are not in possession of the revealed law. Rom. ii. 14; cf. ix. 30; nor are they bound to the rules and laws of Israelitish life, Gal. ii. 12, 14, 15. It is this moral-religious lack that renders so significant the emphasis laid on the ἱερεῖς, on the part of the ἔθνη, Rom. i. 5; xv. 18; xvi. 26. . . . Whether in the Apocalypse ἔθνη is opposed to Israel, or, as it appears to me, to the New Testament redeemed Church, must be left to commentators to decide. Rev. ii. 26; xi. 2, 18; xii. 5; xiv. 8; xv. 8, 4; xvi. 19; xviii. 3, 28; xix. 5; xx. 8, 8; xxi. 24, 26; xxii. 2." See foot-note† on p. 27.—E. R. C.]—[Given unto.]

—Düsterd.: They shall lodge therein as victors, treading the outer court and the entire Holy City. Bengel—better, at least: The outer court is not measured, because an unthought-of throng of Gentiles shall one day worship therein. But something more than a mere future is contemplated. De Wette and others: The bloody sacrificial service, consummated on the altar of burnt-offering, shall cease.

Ver. 8. My two Witnesses.—According to Düsterdieck, these must be personal individuals. Personal individuals possessing the characteristics described cannot be pointed out as existing at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, or as living on through the entire Cross-age of the Church down to the end of the world. According to Düsterdieck and others (p. 382), these two witnesses are Moses and Elijah; according to Stern and others, they are Enoch and Elijah; even Luther and Melancthon have been suggested. According to Ebrard, they are symbols of authorities, powers, which, however, he pertinently enough defines as Law and Gospel. Since the Witnesses can be witnesses of Christ only, the term, My witnesses, is elucidative of the strong Angel mentioned in the foregoing chapter [who spoke to John, ch. x. 9, 11, and whom Lange apparently regards as still speaking]. [See ABSTRACT or VIEWS, pp. 227 sqq., and ADD. NOTE, pp. 232 sq.—E. R. C.]

I will give.—What He gives them is declared by what follows; δόσω, therefore, need not be supplemented by conjectures.

Sackcloth, as a penitential dress, Jer. iv. 8; Jon. iii. 5; Matt. xi. 21. [As a garment of affliction, see Gen. xxxvii. 84; 2 Sam. iii. 31; xxi. 10; 2 Kin. vi. 30; Esth. iv. 1, 2, 8, 4; Job xvi. 16; Pss. xxx. 11; xxxv. 18; lxi. 11; Isa. iii. 24; xv. 8; xx. 2; Jer. xlviii. 37; xlix. 8; Amos vii. 10.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 4. The two olive trees.—The Seer, as an accomplished symbolist, has described in the olive trees of Zech. iv. perfectly admissible types of New Testament affairs. On ἀιγιόχοι, see the remark in Düsterdieck. ["As the olive-tree furnished oil for the lamps, the two trees here would seem properly to denote ministers of religion; and as there can be no doubt that the candlesticks, or lamp-bearers, denote churches, the sense would appear to be that it was through the pastors of the churches that the oil of grace which maintained the brightness of those mystic candlesticks, or the churches, was conveyed. The image is a beautiful one, and expresses a truth of great importance to the world:—for God has designed that the lamp of piety shall be kept burning in the churches by truth supplied

* [With equal propriety may they refer to the Altar court, if that be meant by the θυσιαστήριον. And indeed the introduction of this clause seems to point to this interpretation of the Altar, as only priests worshipped in the Sanctuary—the people worshipping in the court. On the other hand, however, it may be contended that, as all true Christians are priests, their proper place of worship is the Sanctuary.—E. R. C.]

through ministers and pastors." BARNES.—E. R. C.]

Before the Lord of the earth.—The Lord is the unitary authority of the earth or the theocratic institution—which formerly branched into Joshua and Zerubbabel, and now ramifies into State and Church. Ebrard interprets the Old Testament Lord of the whole earth as indicative of the king of Persia, and regards the corresponding New Testament expression as significant of the ruler of this world.

Vers. 5, 6. "The individual lineaments of this description, especially in ver. 6, are borrowed from the history of Elijah and Moses. This reference—admitted by all expositors—to the miracles of those old Prophets (miracles which are in no wise allegorically understood) of itself renders it highly improbable that the description of the present passage is allegorically intended" (Düsterdieck). Most original logic, this! As if historical facts, and especially such as have since their very occurrence assumed a symbolical coloring, might not be employed in allegorical descriptions. A slight examination of the New Testament will speedily convince us that such is not the case. [See the quotation from Alford, p. 229.—E. R. C.]

Fire goeth forth out of their mouth.—Jer. v. 14. The reference to 2 Kings i. 10 is by Düsterdieck considered of doubtful propriety, because Elijah calls down fire from Heaven. But even this fact might be paraphrased, in the prophetic style, as follows: fire proceeded out of his mouth, Sirach xlviii. 1. If, however, we take the words, out of their mouth, and fire, literally, we have "a fearful reality" (Düsterd.). This is called historical exegesis. The spectator of such fire-works might possibly say: a dubious reality—magic; such an one would be able to set his mind at rest only by echoing the verdict of Rothe: "God is an adept at sorcery."

Ver. 6. Power to shut Heaven.—1 Kings xvii. 1.

During [Lange: For] the days.—If the words, for the days of their prophecy, denote the time of their entire activity, and that with reference to the 8½ years of drought predicted by Elijah, the time of this entire activity would need to be reduced to ordinary years—and this is not practicable. We, therefore, apprehend the passage thus: for the days fixed by their prophecy.

Over the waters.—Ex. vii. 19.

With every plague [Lange: With all (manner of) plagues].—Reference to the Egyptian plagues generally. According to Düsterdieck, it is inadmissible to interpret even these features allegorically, i. e., to apprehend them as allegorical. Whilst the interpretation of Bede—making the power to shut Heaven the potestas clavium—may be too restrictedly ecclesiastical, the more general application of the passage to the withholding of the rain or blessing of the Gospel, is certainly removed beyond the objection urged against it, viz.: that in case of its acceptance, it would be necessary to apprehend 1 Kings xvii.; James v. 17; Ex. vii. sqq. figuratively also; and this, apart from the fact that even these passages are not to be taken in so naked a Græco-historical sense as many seem to suppose.

Ver. 7. Finished their testimony,* the wild-beast, etc.—Preliminary and more general symbolization of Antichristianity. This one Beast branches into two Beasts in ch. xiii.

Vers. 8-10. In the broad-way† [Lange: street] of the great city.—The literal method entails the apprehension of the fact that the bodies remained lying in the City, in accordance with the ancient conception of the great impiety of suffering corpses to remain unburied. The question arises here, however: are the individuals (ver. 9) of (all) the peoples identical with the persons mentioned in ver. 10, who are described in general terms as the inhabitants of the earth, and are, therefore, enemies of the Witnesses? The text plainly distinguishes between the two classes. There is, then, in any case, a two-fold interest which is subserved by the leaving of the corpses unburied—a hostile and a friendly interest. In ver. 9 it is declared: βλέπουσιν ἐκ τῶν λαῶν, etc.

"That the great City is identical with the Holy City, where the ναὸς τοῦ θεοῦ stands (ver. 1 sqq.), and that it is, therefore, none other than Jerusalem, is evident from the context" (Düsterdieck). Even the literal interpretation is forced to admit that Sodom and Egypt (see Is. i. 9; Ezek. xvi. 48) is a "spiritual appellation," the fact being expressly set forth in the text. Yet this appellation is robbed of the greater part of its force, when the attempt to exhibit a distinction (Hengstenberg's, for instance: Egypt has reference to religious corruption, Sodom to bad morals) is swept aside, with the declaration that the only point of importance is that in which Sodom and Egypt are essentially one, viz.: perfect hostility to the true God, His servants, and His people.

The great City.—As the so-called historical interpretation regards the present passage as significant, throughout, of the real Jerusalem (Ewald, Bleek, De Wette, Düsterd., et al.), the following question arises: Why is the City called the great, and not the holy? Discussions of this question are submitted by Düsterdieck, p. 370. The question does not present itself at all to a more correct exegesis—one that appreciates the symbolical import of the passage. It is something of a leap to discover, like Calov., here, in the City of Jerusalem, Babylon—in Babylon, Rome—in Rome, papal Rome. Undoubtedly, this great City of Jerusalem is, in essentials, of like import with the great City of Babylon (in the more general sense of the latter, ch. xvi. 19); but the context contains a reason for the fact, that the City is here indirectly called Jerusalem, as the city where the Lord was crucified, and there, Babylon. Here, namely, it represents the symbolically modified Theocracy, or Divine establishment, embracing Church and State, as a mock-holy fallen Theocracy; there, it represents the centre of the open Antichristian spirit of the world.—The meaning of the great City is more generally apprehended by Ebrard, p. 842.*

* [Lord translates: And when they would finish their testimony, etc.; and comments: "The Witnesses would finish their testimony before the close of the 1260 years, doubtless under the apprehension that it was no longer to be necessary; that the great changes wrought in public opinion, and in the condition of the apostate Church by judgments on it, divested it of its dangerous power, and insured its speedy overthrow; and that they might therefore turn from the mere endeavor to maintain the truth in opposition to it, to the happier task of proclaiming it to those who had never yet heard the glad tidings."—E. R. C.]

† [See Kitto's Dict. of the Bible, Title STREET.—E. R. C.]

Different interpretations of the three and a half days see in Düsterdieck, p. 871. A short time; the time during which Christ lay in the grave; the time which exceeds the term during which corpses should remain above ground; analogous to ver. 2; Chiliastic computations of the number.

Ver. 11. And after the three days and a half, a spirit of life, etc.—Materially [as distinguished from grammatically], Hengstenberg's interpretation of πνεῦμα ζωῆς as the Spirit of life cannot be incorrect [Düsterdieck to the contrary, notwithstanding], since this spirit proceeds from God.—A form of peculiar significance: εἰσηλθεν ἐν αὐτοῖς.

Great fear.—The usual effect of great Divine wonders, angelic appearances, spiritual operations, and especially of the wonder of resurrection.

Ver. 12. And they ascended, etc.—Suggestive of the ascension of Elijah and, still more, of Christ's ascension.

Vers. 13, 14. And in that hour.—That is, the events narrated took place simultaneously with the ascension of the two Witnesses and were co-operative therewith. According to Düsterdieck, not even this earthquake should, as Ebrard maintains, be symbolically apprehended as an extraordinary event. In respect of the numbers, we refer to the SYNOPTICAL VIEW. Ebrard's interpretation, see p. 847; comp. Düsterdieck, p. 874.

In spite of the invincible difficulties which lie in the literal apprehension (the outer court destroyed; the Temple, and even the worship therein celebrated, continuing; the two Witnesses vomiting fire; Christ prophesied the destruction of Jerusalem—the Seer narrates its visitation by an earthquake, etc.), Düsterdieck, supported, we must own, by notable predecessors, believes that this apprehension is in all points firmly established against the symbolical apprehension. An allegorical text, however, does not cease to be allegorical for the simple reason, that a multitude of wrong interpretations have attached themselves to it. Arbitrary interpretation is not conquered by cutting the Gordian knot and plunging into the absurdities of literalism; that which is requisite and able to overcome it is a more precise and accurate determination of the symbolical expressions and conceptions of the Old Testament. Such a determination at once dispatches the following collection of arbitrary expositions presented by Düsterdieck, p. 875.

Vers. 1 and 2 are, according to Bede, prophetic of the institution of the festival of Church consecration by Pope Felix. The two Witnesses are, according to Lyra, Pope Silverius and the Patriarch Meunas; or, according to others, the testes veritatis; or the Waldenses; or Huss and Jerome; or Luther and Melancthon. The Beast out of the Abyss is the Imperial general Belisarius, or the Pope. The Temple is the true Church; the outer court, bad Christians, etc. Similar chronological computations see in Düsterdieck's note, p. 876.

* [For an exceedingly able argument designed to show that Rome was probably referred to by the Apocalypticist, see Barnes in loc.—H. B. C.]

In reality, however, most of the so-called allegorists essentially occupy the same standpoint with the historical expositors after Lücke, Bleek, Düsterdieck, and others; both have in view particular historic facts, literally defined; only, according to the allegorists, these particularities are actual, inspired prophecies, veiled in figures. Modern supporters of the historical view have found some portions of the veil indispensable; they, moreover, divide the prophetic items into truths and errors.

With all Düsterdieck's fondness for literalism, however, he decidedly rejects the rationalistic interpretation, p. 877 sqq. See likewise his further examination of the symbolical exegesis as represented by Hengstenberg.

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE SECTION.]

By the American Editor.

[In the judgment of the American Editor, vers. 1-8 (or 7) are connected with the vision of the preceding chapter—vers. 2-8 (or 7) containing an address made to the Seer during that vision, in which the work and death of the Witnesses are verbally described to him. The vision of the Witnesses begins with ver. 9 (or 8). It will be perceived that at that point the phraseology changes; the Seer no longer rehearses what another told him; he describes what he himself beheld. If this opinion be correct, the Apocalyptic stand-point of John at the vision beginning ch. x. 1, was probably at the period of the death of the Witnesses; in the explanatory narration beginning ch. xi. 8, the narrator described as future that which was to be; but in the description of the vision, John describes as past and present that which (in symbol) he so beheld.

THE WITNESSES.—Who are they? Barnes has well declared concerning the passage which describes them: "This is, in some respects, the most difficult portion of the Book of Revelation." There are many points in the description which seem to favor the idea that they are, as is contended by Elliott, Barnes, etc., the long line of protesters against a heathenized Christianity; there are other points, however, in which we feel that, on this hypothesis, the symbols are but inadequately satisfied; the miraculous powers ascribed to them, for instance and especially, seem to demand something which the history even of the Waldenses does not fully supply. The thought has arisen in the mind of the writer, that possibly here, as in some of the Old Testament prophecies, and probably in those concerning Antichrist (see ADD. NOTE, p. 339), the symbols may have a double objective—respecting (1) two lines of witnesses which are to be consummated in (2) two individual Witnesses, in whom they are to be fully (as Immediate-similar Symbols) realized. On this hypothesis (possibly) the lines would prophesy throughout the twelve hundred and sixty years of initial Gentile trampling; the individuals throughout twelve hundred and sixty days of consummate trampling (the three and a half years—twelve hundred and sixty days, during which the lines would lie as dead), and then be literally slain, and lie unburied for three and a half days.

On the general hypothesis that lines of witnesses

(either primarily or exclusively) are intended, two questions arise, viz., What is the period of their rise? and what of their death? These questions are so intimately associated that they cannot with propriety be considered separately; they constitute one complex subject. On this subject there are three particular hypotheses set forth by those who adopt the day-for-a-year theory: 1. That of Elliott, that they began in the Paulicians about A. D. 658; were slain at the Lateran Council, May 6th, 1514; arose again in Luther, Oct. 31st, 1517; and still continue their testimony. 2. That of Glasgow, who agrees with Elliott as to the period of their death, but who places their beginning about A. D. 253, in the Novatian protest. 3. That of Lord, who substantially agrees with Elliott as to the period of their beginning, but who places their death in the future. Of these hypotheses, the first seems to the writer to be clearly inadmissible; the comparison of vers. 8 and 7 requires that we should place their death at the close of the twelve hundred and sixty days of their testimony. There is much to commend the earlier period of beginning advocated by Glasgow. Manifestly, there is much in history to support the idea that a death of the Witnesses did occur at the Council referred to—a death followed by a resurrection three and a half years after in the rise of the Reformers; and it is certainly a question whether, twelve hundred and sixty years before, a trampling of the Church by the previously invading Gentiles did not begin in the almost unconditional restoration of the lapsi—a restoration against which the Novatians in sackcloth protested. But, on the other hand, this hypothesis not only assumes a doubtful terminus a quo, but it fails to provide for the present time when, manifestly, there exists just such a trampling as then existed, and likewise a similar witnessing.

The writer would suggest as a possible solution of the difficulty, that there was contemplated (1) an initial trampling of the outer court beginning about A. D. 253, followed by a typical death of the Witnesses in 1514; (2) a more complete trampling beginning, perchance, in the introduction of image worship, to be followed by a more complete death in the future; (3) the whole to be consummated, as indicated above, by the prophesying and death of individual Witnesses.

As to the measuring, the writer agrees with the general opinion of the commentators whose views he has presented above. That opinion may be most completely set forth in the language of Wordsworth: "The action of measuring is one of appropriation and preservation, and also of partition and separation." This act, possibly, was initially and typically performed at the Reformation; probably it will be more fully performed in the future, when the casting out (the excommunication) of those who trample the outer court will be proclaimed by an individual (or a class) directly commissioned for this purpose by the Great Head of the Church. May not this event be coincident with the call to the people of the Lord, who may still remain in Babylon, to come out of her (ch. xviii. 4)?—E. R. C.]

PART SECOND

THE END OF THE WORLD.

[CH. XI. 15—XXII. 5.]

SECTION FIFTH.

Developed Antichristianity. The seven-headed Dragon and his Image [Erscheinungsbild]: the seven-headed Beast.

CH. XI. 15—XIII.

A.—THE HEAVEN-PICTURE ABOVE THE ANTICHRISTIANITY ON EARTH; OR THE PRECURSORY TRIUMPH OVER THE DRAGON, AND HIS FALL FROM HEAVEN TO THE EARTH.

CH. XI. 15—XII. 12.

a. Pre-celebration of the Victory.

CH. XI. 15—19.

- 15 And the seventh angel sounded [trumpeted]<sup>1</sup>; and there were great voices in [ins. the] heaven, saying, The kingdoms [kingdom]<sup>1</sup> of this [the] world are [is] become the kingdoms of [om. the kingdoms of] our Lord [Lord's], and of [om. of] his Christ
- 16 [Christ's]; and he shall reign forever and ever [into the ages of the ages]. And the<sup>2</sup> four and twenty [twenty-four] elders, which [who]<sup>3</sup> sat [sit]<sup>3</sup> before God on
- 17 [upon] their seats [thrones], fell upon their faces, and worshipped God, Saying, We give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty [or All-ruler], which [who] art, and [ins. who] wast, and art to come [om. , and art to come]<sup>4</sup>; because thou hast taken to
- 18 thee [om. to thee] thy great power, and hast reigned. And the nations<sup>5</sup> were angry [wroth], and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should [om. , that they should—ins. to] be judged, and that thou shouldest [om. that thou shouldst—ins. to] give [ins. the] reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to [om. to] the saints, and them that [those who] fear thy name, [ins. the] small and [ins. the great]<sup>6</sup>; and shouldest [om. shouldest—ins. to] destroy them which [those who] destroy the

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 15. The plural of the Rec. is based upon a misapprehension of the passage. [Modern Critical Editors read ἐκ τῆς βασιλείας with N. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P. Vulg., etc. The Rec. is supported by only 1, 7.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 16. [Lach. omits the oi in both instances, the former with N<sup>o</sup>. A., the latter with A. B<sup>o</sup>, etc.; Alf. brackets both; both are given by Treg. and Tisch., the former with N<sup>o</sup>. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P., the latter with N. C. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 16. [Gb., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) give κάθισται with N<sup>o</sup>. B<sup>o</sup>. C., etc.; Lach., Tisch. (1859), Alf., καθίστανται with A. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 17. [See Add. Comm. on ch. i. 8, p. 93.—E. R. C.]

<sup>5</sup> Ver. 17. The third item is here om. by the best Codd. [Modern Crit. Eds. om. with N. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P., Am., Vulg., Harl., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>6</sup> Ver. 18. [See Add. Comm. on ch. xi. 2.—E. R. C.]

<sup>7</sup> Ver. 18. On an erroneous accusative in Cod. A., and in some others, see Dürstler. [Lach., Alf., and Treg., with N<sup>o</sup>. A. C., read τοὺς μικροὺς καὶ τοὺς μεγάλους; Tisch., with N<sup>o</sup>. B<sup>o</sup>. P., gives τοὺς μικροὺς, α. τ. λ.—E. R. C.]

19 earth. And the temple of God [ins. which was in the heaven]<sup>a</sup> was opened in heaven [om. in heaven], and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament [*co-*venant]: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings [thunders], and an earthquake, and [ins. a] great hail.

CH. XII. 1-12.

b. The Theocracy. Christ. The Churches of the Wilderness, or Church of the Cross.

1 And there appeared [om. there appeared] a great wonder [sign (σημειον)—ins. was seen] in [ins. the] heaven; and a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars: And she being with child cried [crieth]<sup>a</sup>, travailing in birth [om. in birth], and pained [tormented] to be delivered 3 [bring forth]. And there appeared [was seen] another wonder [sign] in [ins. the] heaven; and [,] behold [,] a great red [πυρρόδς] dragon, having seven heads and ten horns, and [ins. upon his heads] seven crowns [diadems] upon his heads [om. upon his heads]. And his tail drew [draggeth]<sup>10</sup> the third part of the stars of [ins. the] heaven, and did [om. did] cast them to the earth: and the dragon stood before the woman which [who] was ready to be delivered [about to bring forth], for to devour her child as soon as it was born [that, when she should bring forth, he might 5 devour her child]. And she brought forth a man child [male son (υἱὸν ἄρσεν)<sup>11</sup>] who was [is (μέλλει)] to rule [shepherdize] all [ins. the] nations with a rod of iron [an iron rod]: and her child was caught up [away (ἡρπάσθη)] unto [to] God, and 6 to [to] his throne. And the woman fled into the wilderness, where she hath [ins. there]<sup>12</sup> a place prepared of [by (ἀπό)<sup>13</sup>] God, that [ins. there] they should feed [may nourish]<sup>14</sup> her there [om. there] a thousand two hundred and threescore [sixty] days.

c. Establishment of the Church Triumphant in the Heaven of the inner Spirit-life on Earth. Freedom of the Invisible Church.

7 And there was [ἐγένετο] war in [ins. the] heaven: [,] Michael and his angels fought against [warring with]<sup>15</sup> the dragon; and the dragon fought [warred] and his angels, 8 and [ins. they] prevailed not; neither was their place found any more in [ins. the] heaven. And the great dragon was cast out [thrown down] (ἐβλήθη), that [the] old 9 [ancient] serpent, [ins. that is] called the [om. the] Devil, and [ins. the] Satan [or adversary], which deceiveth [that seduceth or misleadeth (ὁ πλανῶν)] the whole world [inhabited world (οἰκουμένην)]: he was cast out [thrown down] into [unto] the 10 earth, and his angels were cast out [thrown down] with him. And I heard a loud [great] voice saying in [ins. the] heaven, Now is come [ins. the] salvation, and strength [the power], and the kingdom of our God, and the power [authority] of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast [thrown] down, which accused [that accuseth] 11 them<sup>16</sup> before our God [ins. by] day and [ins. by] night. And they overcame [*con-*quered] him by [on account of] the blood of the Lamb, and by [on account of] the word of their testimony; and they loved not their lives [life (ψυχὴν)] unto the [om. the]

<sup>a</sup> Ver. 19. The reading ὁ ἐν τῷ οὐρανῷ. [Alf. om. ὁ with ℣. B.; Treg. and Tisch. give it with A. C. P., etc. Crit. Eds. generally give οὐρανῷ without the add. of ὁ as in ℣.—E. R. C.]

<sup>10</sup> Ch. xii. 2. The reading καὶ ἔκρᾶεν is probably an alteration of the original reading. [Alf., Treg. and Tisch. read ἐκράεν with ℣. A. P.; Tisch. (8th Ed.), Lach. (maj.), prefix καὶ with ℣. C.; Tisch. (1859), Lach. (min.), Treg., omit with A. B. P.; Alf. brackets; Lach. reads ἐκρᾶεν with C.; B. gives ἐκρᾶεν.—E. R. C.]

<sup>11</sup> Ver. 4. The Imperfect is probably an alteration. [The reading σῶται is unquestioned.—E. R. C.]

<sup>12</sup> Ver. 6. Codd. A. C. give the reading ἄρσεν instead of ἄρσεν. [So Crit. Eds. generally. ℣. and B. give ἄρσεν (B. ἄρσεν).—E. R. C.]

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 6. Ὅπου ἔχει ἐκεῖ. [Alf. and Tisch. give ἐκεῖ with ℣. A. B. P., etc.; Rec. Lach. and Treg., omit with C. 1, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>14</sup> Ver. 6. [Crit. Eds. give ἔδω with ℣. A. C. P.; B. reads ἔδω.—E. R. C.]

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 6. [Lach. and Alf. give τράφουσιν with A. P.; Gb. and Tisch. (1859), ἐκτρέφουσιν with B.; Treg. and Tisch. (8th Ed.), τρέφουσιν with ℣. C. For the N. T. use of iva with the Ind. Pres., see Winer, § 4, par. 3.—E. R. C.]

<sup>16</sup> Ver. 7. We follow the best authenticated, although difficult and venturesome reading τοῦ πολεμήσαι. [Crit. Eds. give πολεμήσαι with ℣. A. B. C. P., Gb., ℣., Lach. (1859), Treg. prefix τοῦ with A. C. P.; Tisch. (8th Ed.), omits with ℣. B.; Alf. brackets. Winer (§ 44, 4) confesses his inability to explain the construction, and thinks it probable that there is a corruption of the text. Alford comments: "The construction is remarkable, but may easily be explained as one compounded of (τοῦ) τοῦ Μ. καὶ τοῦ ἀγγ. αὐτοῦ πολεμήσαι (in which case the τοῦ depends on the ἐγένετο as in Acts x. 25) and ὁ Μ. καὶ οἱ ἀγγ. αὐτοῦ ἐπολέμασαν. In the next clause it passes into this latter." Lillie, assuming the correctness of the text (τοῦ πολεμήσαι) prefers "to construe ὁ Μ. καὶ οἱ ἀγγ. αὐτοῦ as absolute nominatives, with the participle of the substantive verb understood." This gives a construction equivalent to the one adopted above. For other explanations see Winer and Lillie.—E. R. C.]

<sup>17</sup> Ver. 10. There is an unimportant difference between αὐτῶν and αὐτοῦς. [Alf. and Tisch. read the latter with A. P.; Treg., the former with ℣. B. C.—E. R. C.]

12 death. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them. Woe to the inhabitants of [om. the inhabitants of]<sup>17</sup> the earth and of [om. of] the sea! for [because] the devil is come down unto you, having great wrath [anger], because he knoweth that he hath but a [om. but a] short [little] time.

<sup>17</sup> Ver. 12. The reading τοῖς κατοικοῦσιν is a gloss. [It is supported only by L.—H. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

Here, manifestly, the beginning of the End commences, and, consequently, the second division of the Apocalypse. It begins with the heavenly pre-celebration of the victory over the Dragon—Satan—and over his representative on earth—the Beast, i. e., Antichrist. This pre-celebration is linked to the blast of the seventh Trumpet. A striking turn in the description is found in the fact, that the Spirit of prophecy does not make the seven-headed Beast appear immediately upon the blast of the seventh Trumpet, as the seven Trumpet-Angels emerged from the seventh Seal. In like manner, the vision of the seven Seals might not directly follow the picture of the seventh Church; nor, furthermore, can the seven Vials of wrath be immediately linked to the seven heads of Antichrist, and this irrespective of the fact, that these [the heads] constitute, in the first place, a unitous phenomenon. If it had been designed that the seven Thunders should be particularly set forth, they would have followed upon the seventh Trumpet, whilst the seventh Thunder would have been succeeded by the announcement of the Antichristian time. The sealing of the seven Thunders, however, necessitated a modification of the outward consequence of the septenaries; nor could the new Divine manifestations issue from the preceding bad human conditions, but could only follow them as judgments.

From the seventh Trumpet great or powerful voices proceed. Not one voice, but a chorus of voices—and those, mighty, voices—concordantly proclaim the great victory.

This is, manifestly, an expression of the strongest assurance of victory, developed in the very fact of the emergence of Satan and his Antichrist.

This assurance of victory in Heaven is also an assurance of victory in the spirit-realm of the Kingdom of God in this world, i. e., in the invisible Church. It is a fundamental feature of the Kingdom of God, that this assurance of victory has been in process of more and more glorious development from the Protevangel down to the consummation of the New Testament (1 John v. 4). And, indeed, with the death and resurrection of Christ the victory is, in principle, decided, so that there is no longer question save as to the full development of the principle into the visible appearance.

But in what manner do the voices proclaim the victory? The kingdom of the world is become our Lord's and His Christ's, and He shall reign to the sons of the sons. The position of Christ toward God the Lord is economically modified here, because the kingdom relationship is involved (see 1 Cor. xv. 25-27). Since we must distinguish between a Kingdom of power, possessed by God from the beginning, and a Kingdom of His Spirit's sovereignty in spirits, founded by His grace in Christ, to which, however, the kingdom of darkness stands opposed—an anarchy of spirits, under the lying power of Satan—the point in question here can be nought but the synthesis, already accomplished in principle, of the Kingdom of power and the Kingdom of grace. It is a Kingdom of God over the world, which is at the same time a Kingdom over hearts; or a Kingdom over hearts which, from the invisible Church, goes forth, in dynamic operation, through all the world, finally spreading through the worlds of space, as through the sons of time.

At the close appearing of this Kingdom, the kingdom of darkness is destroyed. With the mere announcement of this absolute Kingdom is conjoined the absolute thanksgiving of pious humanity in the evening of the world; pious humanity as represented by the twenty-four Elders, the Presbytery of the Theocracy and the Presbytery of the New Testament Kingdom of God, both of which institutions have had so much to suffer from the oppressions of the kingdom of darkness. [See foot-note†, p. 152.—E. R. C.]

They, lying upon their faces, rightly return thanks to God as the All-Ruler, Who now has taken to Himself—i. e., brought into full operation—His great power. In these words a grand theological revelation is contained. From the beginning of the world's history, but, above all, in the humiliation of Christ, in His cross, and His cross-bearing Church, God has so greatly restrained His power, in the maintenance of the liberty, thereunto opposed, of moral agents, and in the service of love, as to make it seem as if He had laid that power aside. Now, however, that the seed of liberty has gradually matured, having sprouted up partly on the right hand side, partly on the left hand side, He can unchain His full majestic power, and He has begun His absolute royal rule.

The first mark of this turn in the current of affairs is peculiar; it has almost the aspect of a contradiction. The heathen [nations] have become wroth, it is declared; the power of darkness seems just now to be more than ever at liberty. But as, in the second Psalm, the strongly emphasized to-day marks the very date of the general rebellion against Jehovah and His Anointed as the date of the anointing and institution of His Son—as the date of the crucifixion of Christ became the date of His exaltation likewise—so it shall be at the time of the last great apostasy; even above the wrath of the heathen and simultaneously with it, the revelation of the wrath of God appears.

The wrath of God is destination to death (Ex. iv. 14; comp. ver. 24; Ps. xc.). The suicidal death-choice of the old world, in its apostasy from the living God, brings the judgment of the Divine destination to death directly upon this old world. The living have become a prey to death; the dead, on the other hand, revive. The time of the dead, when it is their turn to have justice done them, has come; the retributive judgment must be held, in which God gives to His servants their reward, i. e., the final perfect and solemn restoration, which forms the antithesis to all the ignominy and sorrow of their historic life.

And here the Old Testament Prophets and the New Testament saints are beautifully linked together; and with them, all the God-fearing, who have kept the name of God—their knowledge of God—sacred; all, both small and great, in the whole sphere of God's Kingdom. For they all had to suffer from the destroyers of the earth—of Divine order on Earth, as well as of Nature and Earth in the literal sense.

But the time of compensatory retribution is likewise the time of punitive retribution: the destroyers of the Earth must themselves be destroyed.

The judgment is consummated amid the complete revelation of that idea of justice by which it is put in execution. Hence the Temple of God in the Heaven is opened, i. e., the radiant archetype of the Kingdom of God on Earth is revealed in its ideal and dynamical authority for mankind. The Ark of the Covenant in this Temple becomes visible; the heavenly rule [Norm] of the condemning law, as well as of the real redemption, is made known to all the world.

Nor is the radiant appearance all; it produces, as a vital phenomenon, in the richest manifestations of its powers, lightnings, or revelations of the Spirit; voices, or Divine words and thoughts; thunders, or lively stirrings of soul; earthquake, or convulsions of the old world; and a great hail, as a symbol of the conflict betwixt Heaven and Earth: fire and cold issue from the disclosure of the heavenly spirit-world at the end of the world.

And now the history of Antichristianity on Earth is prefigured by the history of it in Heaven. Here Heaven is manifestly the pure celestial sphere of spirit and of spirits, the background of all occurrences in that general history of the world which is visible to all. A great sign appears in this Heaven. A Woman, the Kingdom of God, modified by the feminine receptivity of the human mind, is seen. She makes her appearance in the unity of the Old Testament Theocracy and the New Testament Kingdom of Heaven; she is adorned with the sun of revelation; with the moon, as a symbol of nature, in its subserviency to the Kingdom of God (and also as symbolizing the change of times), under her feet; and a crown of twelve stars upon her head—the adornment of a plenary number of elect spirits appertaining to her. The Seer has deeply felt the conflict of the transition from the Old Covenant to the New, as is proved by the words: And she, being with child, crieth, etc.; the Lord's people, together with Himself, have experienced these throes of the Messiah (see John xvi. 21). This sign is accompanied by another: Behold, a great fiery-red Dragon. In Heaven! how is this possible? Heaven is that realm of spirit and of spirits in which Christ overcame Judas (see the author's Leben Jesu, Book ii., p. 1328), without the observation of mere historical men, in their external world; hence, it is the spiritual back-ground of worldly history. In this Heaven, the great red Dragon appears; the winged primeval serpent, at once serpent and swine; signalized as a monster, not only by the fiery hue of the murderer, but also by the seven heads, and especially by the disproportion between the seven heads, or the caricature symbol of holy intelligence—not to say of a Holy Spirit—and the ten horns or the symbols of worldly power; the heads only are adorned with diadems, thus making the worldly power appear as unauthorized might, obtained by artifice. Farther on, the Dragon, the ancient serpent (Gen. iii.), is expressly called the Devil and Satan (ver. 9; ch. xx. 2). These seven heads of the Dragon are not to be identified with the seven heads of the Beast, nor are they to be referred to historical shapes; they are seven spiritual deformities which ape the seven Spirits, or ground-forms of the Spirit.

It is declared concerning his first exertion of violence: His tail draggeth the third part of the stars of the Heaven, and cast them upon the Earth. This cannot be regarded as significant of the apostasy of a portion of the angels, since the angels of the Dragon are spoken of, further on, as still in Heaven.

The passage should rather be interpreted in accordance with ch. viii., particularly ver. 10.

The third part of the spirits designed as light-bearers in the human Heaven are, by the violent oscillations of the demonic tail—overpowered, that is, by the impressions of apparently irresistible vivacity and might—swept from the Heaven of spiritual purity, and cast upon the Earth; made subservient to worldly-mindedness, in order to the more thorough transformation of God's Earth (Ps. xciii.) into an Earth estranged from God. The preliminaries to the crucifixion of Christ were, in particular, the fruit of this act of the Dragon. Fallen stars constituted the government of Palestine and the majority of the Sanhedrin; even the Messianic hopes of the Jews were satanically poisoned. In the face of Christ's appearance, however, the machinations of the Dragon concentrate themselves; for Christ is the glorification of the personal God, of love in the love-kingdom of personal life, by means of an absolutely worthy personal conduct; Satan, on the other hand, is the seducer and accuser of men, who tends to sink the whole world in worldliness—to plunge the personal kingdom into the service of impersonal things; by means of the lying perversion of his own true creaturely essence into the semblance of a false divinity.

Shamelessly, therefore, the Dragon takes his stand before the Woman who is about to be delivered, that he may devour her child. Thus was the power of evil concentrated in Israel at the very moment when Christ, in respect of His historical descent from the eternal congregation of God, extending through the Theocracy and the Church, was about to be born.

But the new-born Child is a man—the Man, simply (Is. ix.)—destined, in the words of the Old Testament (Ps. ii.), to rule [shepherdize] the nations with a rod of iron; ordained to the government of the world in redemptive and judicial righteousness—for Satan, therefore, unattainable in His essence (John xiv. 30). His own name for Himself is the Son of Man, in the highest sense. Pilate calls Him the Man [ὁ ἀνθρώπος = Mensch, human being]. The vision calls Him the Man [Mann (υἱὸν ἀνθρώπου)], in the highest sense of the term. And here, in accordance with the spiritual, æonic aspect of the history, there is no special reference to the sufferings of Christ; His death itself forms a part of His elevation above every assault of Satan; hence it is declared: her Child was caught away to God and to His Throne. This exaltation (Phil. ii. 6 sqq.) is at the same time the foundation of the Church Triumphant in Heaven and on Earth.

Of the Woman it is said, that she fled into the wilderness. She is the same who bore Christ—hence, the Old and New Testament Church in undivided unity. The wilderness, prepared for her by God as a place of shelter,* exhibits a transformation similar to that presented by the cross. As the cross, from the tree of the curse, has become the symbol of salvation, so this wilderness, from being the abode of demons (Lev. xvi. 22; Matt. iv.; xii. 43), was changed into a refuge from the Arch-demon. This wilderness is the perfect New Testament renunciation of the world, which makes the Church on Earth, in respect of its invisible kernel, like unto the Church in Heaven. The entrance thereto is baptism into the death of Christ (Rom. vi.); its external form is asceticism; its security is courage for the cross; its verdant oases are the triumphs of the martyrs. The time of residence in this wilderness is modified after the measure of the New Testament trial-time; not in the form of the change of times (ch. xi. 2), but in that of uninterrupted days' works—twelve hundred and sixty days (ch. xi. 8). In regard to the Woman herself, the notation of time is more obscure, less definite, and gloomier: a time, two times, a half time (ch. xii. 14; Dan. xii. 7)—running, we may say, into apparently endless helplessness or destitution (Luke xviii. 1).

The succeeding scene is most wonderful. The theatre of this war in Heaven—a conflict marvellous when considered merely in the abstract—is, we believe, the spiritual and spirit world of the Church Invisible—not, however, the Heaven of Christ's glory.

The nature of the conflict is equally remarkable: Michael and his angels (as the attacking party) war with the Dragon; but the Dragon also wars, and his angels (as the resisting party). We have shown elsewhere that the Archangel Michael is an image of Christ victoriously combatant. Christ is an Archangel in His quality of Judge; and He appears as Judge, not only at the end of the world, but also in the preservation of the purity of His Church (Acts v. 1 sqq.; 1 Cor. v. 1 sqq.). That Christ has His angels also—those that war with Him—not merely in the evening of the world, but from the beginning, is a fact which John has previously intimated in his Gospel (ch. i. 51); they are the principles and spirits which are with Him absolutely. And so the Dragon also has his angels, his assistants. Since the foundation of Christ's Church, Christian and Antichristian principles have been warring with each other—primarily, in spiritual, intellectual and ethical forms (John xiv. [xv. 1]).

These battles are not simply central general combats, but a sum of great single conflicts. Michael wars; the angels war; the Dragon wars, and his angels. But, with them, he is defeated.

Why is it so concisely declared: they prevailed not? Be it observed, in the first place, that the principal victory of Christ has already taken place, and that the final historic victory cannot yet be intended. But Satan is totally defeated, in so far as respects the fact, that the New Testament Heaven, in its central essence, is thoroughly purged from him and his angels; in Heaven their place is no more found. That is, as the Church Triumphant is now established in Heaven, so, in correspondence with it, the Church on Earth has also a place that is purified from all Satanic essence—the sphere of pure Christian spiritual life, the communion of saints. Out of this Heaven, therefore, is cast the great Dragon, the ancient Serpent (the demonic seducer of Adam); the Devil and Satan, as the slanderer and enemy of mankind (Job ii.), who has continually changed the conception: man is sinful and wicked—into the calumnious sentence: he is fundamentally bad; and this, on account of his success in approving himself the seducer of the whole world.

When it is declared, that the whole Satanic troop is cast upon the Earth, in company with its leader, it cannot be necessary to apprehend the declaration in an astronomical or local sense. Expelled from the inner Church, Satan now directs his whole assault against the outer Church. The wheat of Christ's field remains pure; but the field, as such, becomes impure: the enemy sows his tares amongst the wheat.

The foundation of the holy Church, the communion of saints, is an infinitely glorious achievement. A great voice pronounces the hymn of victory; it is a single, common triumphant consciousness of all the heavenly throng. Now there is founded, with Christ and through Him, a pure, eternal Heaven, which descends from Heaven to Earth. And with the pure Church, the New Testament Kingdom of Heaven is established, in which God reigns with three attributes: He has taken upon Himself the salvation—the perfect and final redemption from all evil; He has, further, taken to Himself the power over redeemed souls, and has called in the current of worldly affairs as co-operative in redemption (Rom. viii.); and, consequently, He has finally assumed the real Kingdom of His Spirit as a sovereignty over all good spirits. The attribute of Christ is, henceforth, the authority, the executive power (ἐξουσία). Such is the constitution of the Kingdom (ch. xi. 15).

How all this has come to pass, is intimated in the following words. The negative term runs thus: the accuser of our brethren is cast down, who accuseth them before our God by day and by night.

* The Seer seems to repeat himself in ver. 14, the flight into the wilderness being again depicted there. But in this very fact, the architectonics of the Book may be seen. Here, in ver. 9, we have the Heaven-picture; in ver. 14, the Earth-picture.

The temptations to despair, which Satan brought to bear upon the consciences of men, subsequent to his seduction of them into sin, are annihilated, throughout the whole realm of faith, by the sure and perfect peace of reconciliation (comp. 1 John iii. 20; Heb. ii. 15).

And they conquered him by [on account of] the blood of the Lamb, is the reason assigned for their victory; for it is upon the triumph of Christ that the triumphs of Christians are grounded. Their heart-victories, however, have become intellectual victories likewise, through the word of their testimony; and victories of their entire life, because they loved not their life unto death, when martyrdom was the price of adherence to the truth (Matt. xvi. 24, 25).

Therefore rejoice, ye Heavens, and ye that dwell (take up your abode) in them—such is the festal conclusion. Heaven spreads out into a plenitude of Heavens (John xiv. 2), and these Heavens become peopled with blessed conquerors.

A terrible contrast to the above is presented by the last words: *Woe unto the inhabitants* of the earth and of the sea.* The danger is heightened for the world-church of external order and authority, as well as for the surging popular life and the fluctuations of society. For the Devil, as the poisoner of the truly historical powers, has made their common destruction his aim. He has great anger; the principle of demonic worldly-mindedness is excited—the more, as it is a final paroxysm, or because he knoweth that he hath little time.

The fact that the Heaven-picture continues to this passage, is proved, among other things, by the concluding hymn (vers. 10–12).

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

I. Ch. xi. 15–19.

[ELLIOTT regards ver. 14 as setting forth the cessation of the Turkish woe—the period of cessation beginning with the battle of Lepanto, A. D. 1571, and extending to the peace (humiliating to Turkey) in 1791, between Turkey on the one side and Russia and Austria on the other. He connects this “second half” of the Turkish woe with the visions of ch. x. 1–xi. 18, as follows: It was just after the “slaying of the third part of men” (ch. ix. 18), i. e., the fall of Constantinople—and the ineffectiveness of the catastrophe to induce repentance (see p. 210, foot-note), that the Covenant Angel descended (ch. x. 1)—betokening the Reformation (see p. 218); and also it was just after the fall of the tenth part of the City and the seven Chitiads (ch. x. 18), i. e., the political earthquake following the Reformation (see p. 228), that the announcement of ver. 14 was made. (The beginning of this earthquake he places about A. D. 1569; the battle of Lepanto was fought A. D. 1571.) Vers. 15–19 he interprets as a general Heaven-picture of the last time (including the establishment of Christ's Millennial Kingdom), the development of the great events of this vision being deferred until after “the parenthetic Visions” in chs. xii.–xiv.

BARNES regards the description of the events of the seventh Trumpet as closing with ver. 18; the period extending to the establishment of the Millennial Kingdom, and the vision closing the series of visions beginning at ch. v. 1. He regards ver. 19 as commencing “a new series of visions, intended, also, but in a different line, to extend down to the consummation of all things.”

STUART: “One powerful and bitter enemy of Christianity is now, or is speedily to be, put down. The judgments of Heaven, which had been so gradually proceeding, and seemingly so slow, are immediately to be consummated. The triumph of Christianity over opposing and embittered Judaism is to be completed. ‘Their place and nation are now to be taken away.’ The progress of the Gospel can no longer be stayed by them.”

WORDSWORTH agrees with Barnes in regarding this section as closing the first series of visions, and with commentators generally, in regarding it as referring to the last time.

ALFORD: (Ver. 14). “Transitional—The episcopal visions of chs. x. 1–11, xi. 1–18 are finished; and the prophecy refers to the plagues of the sixth Trumpet, ch. ix. 18–21. These formed the second woe, and upon these the third is to follow (vers. 15–19). But in actual relation and detail it does not immediately follow. Instead of it, we have voices of thanksgiving in Heaven, for that the hour of God's Kingdom and vengeance is come. The Seer is not yet prepared to set forth the nature of this taking of the Kingdom, this reward to God's servants, this destruction of the destroyers of the earth. Before he does so, another series of prophetic visions must be given regarding not merely the dwellers on the earth, but the Church herself, her glory and her shame, her faithfulness and her apostasy. When this series has been given, then shall be declared in its fullness the manner and the process of the time of the end.”—“Notice (1), that the seventh Seal, the seventh Trumpet, and the seventh Vial, are all differently accompanied from any of the preceding series in each case; (2) at each seventh member of the series (a) we hear what is done, not on earth, but in Heaven (chs. viii. 1; xi. 15; xvi. 17); (b) we have it related in the form of a solemn conclusion (with slight variations), ἐγένετο βοῶντα κ. τ. λ., chs. viii. 5; xi. 19; xvi. 18 sqq.; (c) we have plain indication in the imagery or by direct expression, that the end is come, or close at hand, by (a) the imagery of the sixth Seal, and the two episodes preceding the seventh Seal, (β) the declaration here ἦλθεν ὁ καιρὸς τῶν νεκρῶν κριθῆναι, (γ) the ἔξοδος sounding from the Temple and the Throne on the pouring out of the seventh Vial; (δ) all this forms strong ground for inference, that the three series of visions are not continuous, but resumptive; not indeed going over the same ground with one another, either of time or of occurrence, but each evolving something which was not in the former, and putting the course of God's providence in a different light. It is true that the Seals involve the Trumpets, the Trumpets the Vials; but it is not mere temporal succession, the involution and inclusion are far deeper,” etc.

LORD: The seventh Trumpet is to be followed by 1. The assumption by the Redeemer of the dominion of the earth in a new and peculiar relation as its King, and the commencement of a visible and eternal reign. 2. The resurrection, and public adoption as heirs of the Kingdom, of all saints who have suffered the penalty of death; and the acceptance and reward of all living saints. 8. The destruction of the apostate powers, the Wild-beast, False Prophet, etc. This Trumpet is cotemporaneous with the seventh Vial (comp. ver. 19 with xvi. 18 sqq.); the lightnings, voices, etc., denoting excitements, commotions, and revolutions among the nations, and the descent on them of judgments. The opening of the inner Temple and the exhibition of the Ark (ver. 19), denote, probably, that the mysteries of the former administration are finished, and that thenceforth the reasons of the Divine procedure are to be understood.

* [In the Text (see ver. 12 and note 17) our author properly omits these words.—R. E. C.]

GLASGOW regards the prophecy of the period of the seventh Trumpet as contemplated in only ver. 15. This period he holds to begin with the Reformation and to extend "through all the period of the Vials." "The Trumpet declares the Kingdom to be Christ's, and goes on to announce the events by which all rebels are to be brought to submission or extinction." The voices he interprets as "The voice of Jesus through the instrumentality of ecclesiastical voices. They are the voices of Luther, Zwingli—all the Reforming preachers." He explains the expression: "His Christ's," as relating to the Church (see EXPL. IN DETAIL). Vers. 16, 17 describe a Heaven scene (at the opening of or throughout the period?); ver. 18, an Earth scene at the beginning of the Reformation. Ver. 19, he refers to the day of Pentecost, when "Peter and the other apostles, by preaching, 'opened the door of faith instrumentally!'" (See EXPL. IN DETAIL.)

II. Ch. xii. 1-12.

[ELLIOTT: With this section this author regards PART IV. of the Apocalypse as beginning, including chs. xii., xiii., xiv. This PART presents a "supplemental and explanatory history of the Rise, Character, and Establishment of the Beast from the Abyss, or Poppedom; with its chief Adjuncts; and the contrasted Impersonation of Christ's faithful Church." The vision of this section he holds to be retrogressive. By the Travailing Woman he understands Christ's true visible Church, in the heaven of political elevation (invested with Christ as the Sun of Righteousness; the moon, representing the civil authority, under her feet; the stars, ecclesiastical ministers, recognized as dignified authorities before the world); bringing forth with pain (the Diocletian persecution) a son who is to rule, etc., i. e., producing children who, united and multiplied into a nation, are to be raised to dominant political power; (this elevation being first accomplished under Constantine, to whom, according to Ambrose, was given the title "Son of the Church"). The Dragon he interprets as the Roman Empire as a persecuting power hostile to Christianity. He presents the following indications as to the time of the birth and effort to destroy: (1) not until after the close of the Second century, as it was then that the dragon was first used as a Roman ensign; (2) not until the time of Diocletian, as it was then that the diadem was first assumed as one of the imperial insignia; (3) the drawing by the Dragon of a third part of the stars of Heaven indicates that though he was still in the political heaven, his power was diminished to a third part of the Imperial power, and this occurred about A. D. 313, when in two divisions of the Roman Empire, Europe and Africa (under Constantine and Licinius), Christianity was in the ascendancy, but in the third, Asia (under Maximin), Christians were still exposed to persecution; (4) this was the period of the termination of forty weeks (280 prophetic days from Pentecost) of the Church's gestation. The attempt to destroy he explains by (1) the persecution of Maximin (see Gibbon ii. 489); (2) the apostasy of Licinius, A. D. 323, and the following persecutions. The catching up of the child to God and His throne he regards as the elevation of Constantine, as an avowed Christian, to the undivided throne of the Roman Empire, and the consequent establishment of Christianity, after the defeat of Licinius at the battle of Adrianople, A. D. 323 (see Gibbon and historians generally). (For the explanation of the flight of the Woman, see the following abstract, p. 258.) The war in Heaven he regards, as indicating the struggle of Paganism for re-elevation to political power under Licinius and Julian the Apostate, and the throwing down of the Dragon (or Satan, who inspired them) as the final downfall of Paganism, primarily in the defeat of Licinius, and finally in the death of Julian in the Persian War, A. D. 363. Vers. 10-12 (1st clause) he interprets as the Church's song of victory in the "symbolic Heaven of political elevation and power." The last clause of ver. 12 he regards "as a detached and solemn notification by the dictating prophetic Spirit of some woe on the Roman Empire soon about to follow," reference being had "primarily, to heretical persecutors within the Church and Empire; and, secondarily, to the Gothic scourge."

BARNES agrees, in the main, with Elliott. His most important variations are as to—1. The adornment of the Woman: by the moon under her feet he understands "the ancient (Jewish) and comparatively obscure dispensation now made subordinate and humble; and by the twelve stars, "the usual well-known division of the people of God into twelve parts." 2. The war in Heaven: he writes, "Another vision appears. It is that of a contest between Michael, the protecting Angel of the people of God, and the great foe, in which victory declares in favor of the former, and Satan suffers a discomfiture, as if he were cast from Heaven to Earth."

STUART interprets (1) the Woman as the Church ("not simply as Jewish, but in a more generic and theocratic sense, the people of God") at the period of Christ's birth; (2) the child as Christ Himself; (3) the dragon as Satan inspiring Herod, Judas and other persecutors; (4) the attempt to destroy as the massacre at Bethlehem and the other assaults on our Lord; (5) the catching up to Heaven as the Ascension; (6) the War in Heaven (the lower heaven, the air) as a struggle between good and bad spirits, "according to the usual popular modes of conception;” * (7) “the words of the voice in Heaven (ver. 10 sqq.) are to be regarded mainly as anticipative of victory in respect to the future, grounded on a reminiscence of victory with regard to the past.”

WORDSWORTH regards ch. xii. as a “Prophetic View of the History of the Church relatively to Rome” (vers. 1-12, relatively to heathen Rome). “The Woman in this vision is the Christian Church; she appeared in Heaven, for her origin is from above; she is clothed with the Sun, for Christ is the Sun of righteousness; she has the moon under her feet, because she will survive the changes of this world; she has on her head a crown of victory (στέφανος); the crown of twelve stars indicates the Twelve Apostles.” The Dragon is the Old Serpent, who is called in this Book the Dragon, see vers. 9, 15, 16, where the names Satan, Devil, Dragon and Serpent are interchanged; the Dragon is also described here as having Seven Heads, etc.; diadems are symbols of royalty; horns are emblems of power (Luke i. 69); the number seven represents completeness, and combined with the number ten (ten horns), it connects this manifestation of the Dragon with the display of his power, as wielded by the fourth great Monarchy, that of Rome.” Herefers the Male Son primarily to Christ, secondarily to the people of Christ; the rod of iron is Christ’s word, the Holy Scriptures, and by it the male children, the masculine spirits of Christ’s Church, are endued with power from Him to rule the nations and overcome the world.” (On the flight of the Woman see the Abstract on p. 261.) Concerning the war in Heaven, he writes: “St. John now reverts to an earlier period, in order to recite the antecedent history of the Dragon, and to explain the circumstances under which he was led to persecute the Woman, and he traces that history till it is brought down, in ver. 14, to the same point as in ver. 6, namely, to the escape of the Woman in the Wilderness; Satan is displayed as he was before his fall from Heaven.”

ALFORD regards the vision of this chapter “as introductory to the whole imagery of the latter part of the Apocalypse,” and holds that “the principal details of the present section (chapter) are rather descriptive than strictly prophetic.” By the Woman he understands “the Church, the Bride of God, and, of course, from the circumstances afterwards related, the Old Testament Church, at least at this beginning of the vision;” by the Dragon, the Devil (“he is πυρρός, perhaps for the combined reasons of the wasting properties of fire, and the redness of blood;” the seven crowned heads represent “universality of earthly do-

* [SCRIPTURAL ANGELOLOGY.]

[STUART gives, in the Appendix of his Commentary on the Apocalypse, an elaborate Excursus on this subject, of which the following is an abstract.

I. Good Angels.

1. They are very numerous, Dan. vii. 10; Ps. lxxviii. 17; 2 Kings vi. 16, 17; Heb. xii. 22; Matt. xxv. 53; Jude 14; Rev. v. 11.

2. They accompany the Divine Majesty and the Saviour, and take part in all the peculiarly glorious displays which they make, either in the way of mercy or of judgment. (1). At the giving of the Law, Dent. xxxiii. 2; Ps. lxxviii. 17; Heb. ii. 2; Acts vi. 53; Gal. iii. 19. (2). At the destruction of Jerusalem, Matt. xxiv. 30, 31. (3). At the final judgment, Matt. xiii. 39-41; xxv. 31; 1 Thess. iv. 16; 2 Thess. i. 7-9.

3. They are guardians—(1). Of the Lord Jesus, Luke i. 11-20, 26-38; Matt. i. 20, 21; ii. 13, 19, 20; iv. 11; John i. 51; Luke xxii. 43; Matt. xxviii. 2-7; Mark xvi. 6-7; Acts i. 10, 11. (2). Of individuals, Matt. xviii. 10; Gen. xxxiii. 1; 2 Kings vi. 17; Ps. xxxiv. 7; Acts xii. 7-15; Heb. i. 14. (3). Of nations and kingdoms, Ex. xiv. 19; xxiii. 20; xxxiii. 2; Num. xx. 16; xxii. 22-35; Josh. v. 18; I. a. lxiii. 9; Dan. x. 5-13, 20, 21; xl. 1; Zech. i. 8-14; iii. 1, 2; xii. 1; Jude 9. From all this it is apparent that not only the Jews but other nations—that not only Jesus and the saints, but little children have their guardian angels.

4. They are employed as special ministers for executing Divine justice. See many of the preceding passages; also Gen. xix. 1-23, comp. with xviii. 1, 2; Ex. xii. 23; Josh. v. 13, 14; 2 Sam. xiv. 16, 17; 2 Kings xix. 35; Acts xii. 23; Rev. vii.-xii.; xvi.

5. They seem to watch over and govern the different elements, Rev. vii. 1, 2; xiv. 18; Job. i. 6, (prob. 7); xix. 17; (also probably Ps. civ. 4; Heb. i. 7).

6. They were regarded as Intercessors, Job, xxxiii. 23; Zech. i. 12, 13. In Rev. viii. 3 an Angel takes his station by the altar in Heaven, and presents “much incense . . . with the prayers of all saints.” (He endeavors to show, by copious extracts from Jewish and contemporary Christian writings, that John is not singular in his alleged meaning in Rev. viii. 3. This view, be it observed, does not involve the utterly unscriptural idea that Angels may themselves be invoked.)

II. Evil Angels.

1. These are numerous, Matt. xxv. 41; xii. 26; Mark v. 9.

2. They were originally good, but fell from their first estate, 2 Pet. ii. 4; Jude 6.

3. One is more distinctly marked and made very prominent. He is called (1). Satan (ἁδὲν), the adversary, Job i. 6-12; ii. 1-7; 1 Chron. xxi. 1; Zech. iii. 1, 2; Matt. xii. 26; Mark iv. 15; Luke xxi. 3; Acts v. 3; Rom. xvi. 20, etc. (2).

The Tempter, Matt. iv. 1-11; xiii. 19; Luke xxii. 3, 53; Acts v. 8; 1 Cor. vii. 5; 1 Thess. iii. 5; 2 Cor. x. 3; Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2, 8, 10. (3). The Destroyer (Ἀπολλών), Rev. ix. 11. (4). The Devil (ὁ διάβολος), the accuser, calumniator. This designation is too frequent to need references.

4. The extent of Satan’s power, together with that of other evil spirits (demons), is very great, 2 Cor. iv. 4; John xii. 31; John xiv. 30; Eph. vi. 12; Col. i. 13; Rev. xii. 17; xx. 8. (This extensive influence is the result of corruption in men, rather than of any irresistible power in Satan, Jas. iv. 7; 1 Pet. v. 8, 9; Eph. iv. 27.)

5. Place of evil spirits before the general judgment. (1). The Abyss. This word means without bottom, unfathomable. The idea of the Hebrews respecting it was that of a deep, dark pit or chasm, which was, or might be, closed up, and where darkness perpetually reigned; hence Jude 6, “angels . . . kept in perpetual chains under darkness,” &c., in the deep and dark abyss. See also 2 Pet. ii. 4; Luke viii. 31; Rev. ix. 1, 11; xvii. 8; xx. 1-3 (this, ver. 9, is styled φυλακή). (2). Deserts, Isa. xlii. 21; xxxiv. 14; Rev. xviii. 2; Matt. xii. 43. (3). The air, Eph. ii. 2; vi. 12.

6. They are sometimes employed as executioners of Divine justice or chastisement, Job i. 11; 1 Kings xxii. 21-23; 1 Cor. v. 5; 1 Tim. i. 20.

The Excursus concludes with the following: “Is angelic interposition unworthy of the Godhead? What then are the laws of nature, and all the intermediate agencies by which the Maker of Heaven and earth carries on His designs and accomplishes His purposes? On the other hand, I can conceive of no more magnificent and ennobling view of the Creator and Lord of all things, than that which regards Him as delighting to multiply, even to an almost boundless extent, beings made in His own image, and therefore rational, and moral, and immortal, like Himself. How different from representing Him as the Master of a magnificent puppet-show, all of which He manages by merely pulling the wires with His own hands! To make Him the only real agent in the universe, and all else as mere passive recipients of His influence, is to take from Him the glory that results from the creation of numberless beings in His own image—beings which reflect the brightness of their great Original. It is this intelligent and rational creation in which John lives, moves, thinks, and speaks. The universe, as viewed by him, is filled with ministers swift to do Jehovah’s will. They stand before His throne; they preside over nations; they guide the sun in his shining course; the moon and stars send forth radiance at their bidding; the very elements are watched over by them; even infants are committed to the guardianship of presence-angels; and ‘the Angel of the Lord encampeth round about all that fear Him.’ Such is the Universe, which the God Who is, and was, and is to come has created and governs; and amid the contemplation of productions and arrangements such as these, John wrote the glowing pages of the Apocalypse.”—E. B. C.]

minion;" "the magnitude and fury of the Dragon are graphically given by the fact of its tail . . . sweeping down the stars of heaven"; by the child, "the Lord Jesus, and none other" ("the exigencies of this passage require that the birth should be understood literally and historically, of that Birth of which all Christians know;" (see also EXPL. IN DETAIL, ver. 5). Concerning the war, he writes: "The war here spoken of appears in some of its features in the Book of Daniel, ch. x. 13, 21; xii. 1 (also Jude 9) . . . Satan's being cast out of Heaven to the Earth is the result not of the contest with the Lord Himself, of which it is only an incident leading to a new phase, but of an appointed conflict with his faithful fellow angels led on by the Archangel Michael." (See also EXPL. IN DETAIL.) In conclusion he writes: "I own that I have been led . . . to think whether after all the Woman may represent, not the invisible Church of God's true people, which under all conditions of the world must be known only to Him, but the true visible Church: that Church which in its divinely prescribed form as existing at Jerusalem was the mother of our Lord according to the flesh, and which continued as established by our Lord and His Apostles, in unbroken unity during the first centuries, but which, as time went on, was broken up by evil men and evil doctrines, and has remained, unseen, unrealized, her unity an article of faith, not of sight, but still multiplying her seed, those who keep the commandments of God and have the testimony of Jesus, in various sects and different countries, waiting the day for her comely order and oneness again to be manifested—the day when she shall 'come up out of the wilderness, leaning on her Beloved;' when our Lord's prayer for the unity of His people being accomplished, the world shall believe that the Father has sent Him. If we are disposed to carry out this idea, we might see the great realization of the flight into the wilderness in the final severance of the Eastern and Western churches in the seventh century, and the flood cast after the Woman by the Dragon in the irruption of the Mohammedan armies. But this, though not less satisfactory than the other interpretations, is as unsatisfactory. The latter part of the vision yet awaits its clearing up."

LORD. "The Woman is the representative of the true people of God; . . . her sunbeam robe, her station above the moon, and her crown of stars, bespeak her greatness, conspicuousness, and majesty; . . . her cry and labor to bear, denote the importunate desire and endeavor of those whom she symbolizes to present to the empire one who should, as their son, rise to supreme power, and rule the nations with an iron sceptre, etc." "The great red Dragon symbolizes the rulers of the Roman Empire; the seven heads denoting the seven species of the chiefs of its ancient government; the ten horns the chiefs into which its western half was divided on its conquest by the Goths; . . . its sweeping its tail through the sky, dragging one-third of the stars, and casting them to the earth, represents its violent dejection of one-third of the Christian teachers from their stations by imprisonment," etc. By the child he understands CONSTANTINE; and his being caught up to God and His throne he takes as denoting "both (1) that he was rescued in an extraordinary manner from the attempts of the Pagan Emperor to destroy him, and exalted to supreme power in the Empire; and (2) that he became in that station a usurper of the rights of God, and an object of idolatrous homage to his subjects." "That the Woman fled into the desert, signifies that the people of God, wholly disappointed in their expectation of a more favorable rule from monarchs professing to be Christian and exposed to greater evils than they had suffered from their pagan persecutors, were compelled, in order to safety, to retire from the nationalized Church into seclusion." (See also Abstract on p. 262). Concerning the war, he writes: "Michael and his angels are symbols of believers in Christ, who gain a victory by faith in His blood, by proclaiming His word, and by submitting to martyrdom rather than swerve from fidelity to Him. . . . Satan* and his angels, on the other hand, symbolize antagonists of believers, who endeavor by contradiction to countervail, or by persecution to prevent, their testimony and to maintain the supremacy of idolatry. . . . The period of this war was the period of the persecutions by Diocletian, Galerius, Maxentius, Maximin, and Licinius; and the victory, that change of feeling that rendered persecution and paganism itself unpopular, prompted Constantine to espouse the cause of the Christians, and finally led to the rejection of paganism as the religion of the State." "The chant (ver. 10) was uttered by the victors, and indicates that the Church was to regard . . . (the victory) as insuring the speedy Advent of Christ, and commencement of His millennial reign. The heavens summoned to rejoice are the new heavens, the symbol of the risen and glorified saints; . . . they who dwell in those heavens are the sanctified nations who are to live under their sway; . . . the land and the sea . . . denote the nations at rest and in agitation anterior to the establishment of that millennial kingdom." "That the dejection of Satan and his angels was to be a woe to the earth, indicates that the decline of the pagan party into a minority was to exasperate its priests and rulers, and lead them to more violent measures, to overwhelm their antagonists, and restate themselves in authority."

GLASGOW regards the Woman as denoting the invisible Church; the Child, all the regenerated children of God, the assumption of the Child, the elevation of the members of the Church invisible to a heavenly status; the Dragon ("the seven headed monster, with his sixth head now fully developed"),† the heathen empire; the attempt to devour, the persecution of the Church begun, in a public and national sense, in A. D. 51, under Claudius, but in an indirect sense in Herod's massacre of the babes; the flight (ver. 6, distinguished from that of ver. 14), the banishment of Christians in the first persecution, A. D. 51. The war he interprets as the intellectual and polemical warfare waged between Jesus (Michael) and His ministers (Quadratus, Aristides, Justin, etc.), and Satan and his ministers (Celsus, Porphyry, Diocletian, etc.), resulting in the defection, i. e., the destruction of Pagan supremacy under Constantine. The hymn (ver. 10) he regards as that of Christians raised to the Heaven of ecclesiastical superiority; the woe (ver. 12) as implying that Satan instigated the pagan priesthood to resist Christianity to the utmost, and also that after Constantine, Arianism prevailed.

* [Lord distinguishes between the great Dragon of ver. 2, and the great red Dragon of ver. 6, identifying the former with Satan.—E. R. C.]

† [GLASGOW: "The pagan empire occupied the place and character of all the heads developed and gone. . . . Various enumerations of them (the heads) have been propounded. That which bears most verisimilitude is: 1. Egypt . . . 2. Palestine or Arabia (Amalek, Idumea, etc.) . . . 3. Assyria . . . 4. Babylon . . . 5. Persia . . . 6. Paganism, or Hellas, dating from Alexander's conquest of Persia, B. C. 331, and comprehending Greece and Rome, until Paganism fell, and which, when it became complete, assumed the nature and received the name of Dragon. 7. Rome, which began first with Constantine, who adopted Byzantium as his capital, B. C. 325, and thus led the way to the rise of that new or second Roman empire, called Episcopate, the monster with seven heads (the first six represented by the last) and ten horns." (See footnote†, p. . .) —E. R. C.]

AUBERLEN.* "Woman and Beast form manifestly the same contrast as in Daniel the Son of Man and the Beasts. . . . In both cases it is the human which is opposed to the bestial, only with Daniel in male, with John in female shape. Daniel beholds the Man, the Bridegroom, the Messiah; because he looks into the time when Christ shall reappear visibly and establish His Kingdom upon earth. John, on the other hand, within whose horizon lies, to speak at present only in a general way, the time before the second advent, beholds the Woman, the Bride, the Congregation of God in the world. He beholds her in the figure of a Woman, and this symbolism is not confined to the Apocalypses, but is a consummation of the whole usus loquendi of the Old and New Testaments. It begins in the Pentateuch . . . (for example Ex. xxxiv. 15; Lev. xvii. 7; xx. 6, 6; Num. xiv. 33; xv. 39; Deut. xxxi. 18; xxxii. 16, 21). We find a further development of this view in the writings of the Prophets. . . . (Isa. i. 21; L. 1; liv. 1; Jer. ii. 2, 20, 28–25; iii. 1; Ezek. xvi., xxiii.; Hos. i., etc.). In the New Testament the same expression is used by John the Baptist (John iii. 29). Thus from the very outset Christ is introduced in the place of Jehovah: in the time of fulfillment Jehovah became Jesus Christ, as His name manifests, ὁ Κύριος, the Lord. He Himself calls Himself the Bridegroom (Matt. ix. 15). . . . We meet the same view in the Apostolic Epistles (Eph. v. 23–32, comp. with Gen. ii.) . . . All this the Apocalypse sums up in one word, Woman (xii. 1). The characteristic of woman, in contradistinction to that of man, is her being subject (Eph. v. 22–24), the surrendering of herself, her being receptive. And this is in like manner the characteristic of man in his relation to God, and receiving from Him. . . . Humanity, in so far as it belongs to God, is the Woman; therefore it is said of Christ, the Son of the woman (xii. 5), that He is a Male-Son. True, He is born of a woman; . . . but at the same time, He is the Son of God, and as such His relation to the Church is that of Husband to Wife. . . . This is the simple meaning of the addition of male to son, apparently pleonastic. . . . Beside Him no man dare deny his receptive, woman-like position; for they who imagine to have life in themselves, who separate themselves from God, rise against Him, and, trusting to stand in their own strength, sink to the level of irrational beasts. The proud nature-strength of man is not of a manly, but of a beastly kind; it is nothing but the brute force of the beast. . . . The choice of symbols is (not) accidental or arbitrary, but based on the essential characteristics of Woman and of the beast. . . . Woman and Beast designate the Kingdom [Church] of God, and the kingdom of the world, not only in this or that period of their development in time; but also in general universality." By the male-son, this commentator understands (as above) CHRIST; by the Woman, at the period of Christ's advent, "the congregation of God in its Old Testament shape;" by her adornments—the sun, the supernatural Divine light borne by her; the moon under her feet, heathenism vanquished and conquered by her; the crown of stars, the twelve-fold division of Israel (continued in the twelve-fold New Testament shape, ch. xxi. 12). The wilderness he regards as indicating the heathen world whither the Church fled from Canaan; "the flight of the Woman into the wilderness is nothing else but the passing away of the Kingdom, [Church] of God from the Jews, and its introduction among the Gentiles: Matt. viii. 11, 12; xxii. 43; Acts xiii. 46, 47; xxviii. 25–28." ("The Acts of the Apostles gives us a grand comment upon this in the description it contains of the Church's migration from Jerusalem to Rome. . . . The Church's life is nourished by the kind ministrations from on high; she lives in the wilderness, even as Israel on manna from Heaven; . . . but though she finds no nourishment, yet she finds a refuge and an asylum in the Gentile world, even up to this day.") Concerning the war in Heaven (vers. 7–12) he writes: "We cannot possibly find anything else but a description of the fact, known to us from other parts of Scripture . . . that the Prince of this world is judged by the completion of Christ's work of reconciliation. . . . There are three stages of the conflict of Christ and Satan. The first is the temptation of Christ in the wilderness; . . . (the second, the assault upon) those who were near Christ, in order to oppose the Saviour's work; the third, in which the victory is consummated, is the sufferings and death, the resurrection and ascension of Jesus. (What Paul expresses in Col. ii. 15, in a didactic form, John saw in a prophetic vision. The devil is now cast out of Heaven after the Son is raised to the throne of God, ver. 5. The Archangel Michael is appointed the executor of the judgment. For according to Dan. x. 13, 21; xii. 1, he, among the high angelic Princes, is the Angel to whom is entrusted the defence of God's Church against the opposing powers in the invisible world of spirits.)" Vers. 12 sqq. he regards as setting forth the second period* in the history of Satan * [Auberlen holds that the history of Satan and evil spirits "consists of an ever deeper downfall, in four gradations or periods. The first extends to the first coming of Christ (ver. 8 etc.) presupposes that hitherto, up to the ascension of Christ, the demons were in Heaven like the other angels, and that like them, they influenced Earth from their abodes in Heaven, in which there are many mansions. See Job i. 6; ii. 1; 1 Kings xxii. 19–22; Zech. iii. 1, 2). The second period is from Christ to the commencement of the Millennium; then Satan is cast out of Heaven to earth, where he exercises yet free power. . . . The third period embraces the millennium.

* [Although this distinguished author cannot be classed with English and American commentators, it is deemed proper here to present an abstract of his views.—E. R. C.]

during which, having "lost his power and place in Heaven, and chiefly for this reason, because (ὅτι) he can no longer accuse men before God," "he concentrates all his strength (by temptation and persecution) to ruin as many souls as possible." (See also in loco.)—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.*

Ch. xi. 15. Great voices.—Voices simple are prophecies. In view of the hasty movement of the Kingdom of Darkness toward the revelation of Antichristianity, Heaven is filled with the triumphant and prophetic presentiment that now the judgment upon the dark kingdom and, consequently, the appearance of Christ's Kingdom, are near. "The question—to whom did these voices belong?—need neither be asked nor answered" (Düsterdieck). For various insignificant hypotheses on this subject, see Düsterdieck. This commentator also rightly discards the limitations of the circuit of the seventh Trumpet (Hengstenberg: it embraces vers. 15-19; Ehrard: vers. 15-18), and, in connection with others, maintains the proleptical import of the voices. On the other hand, the interpretation of the words:

In the Heaven, as indicative that John is still in Heaven, reposes upon a comprehensive misapprehension of the structure of the Book.

The kingdom of the world.—Simultaneously with the Satanic and Antichristian uprising, the imminent emergence of the Kingdom of Christ is decided (Matt. xxvi. 64; comp. Ps. ii.)—as beginning, however, with dynamical operations which are in constant process of development, and do not become perfectly apparent until the end, at the Parousia.

Is become our Lord's.—Rapturous feeling of the Christian consciousness, in face of the apparent rule of the Beast who is about to come forth.

He shall reign.—See Dan. vii. 14.

Our Lord's and His Christ's.—Careful observation of the economical relation.

Vers. 16, 17, 18. The twenty-four Elders.—These, therefore, are distinguished from the voices; doubtless, however, as forming the concentrated acme of them. The prophecy concerning the Kingdom of God likewise assumes a stronger expression. First, in the circumstance that the Elders fell upon their faces (see ch. iv. 10; v. 8, 14; vii. 11; xix. 4). The contemplation of the sublime, thrills us with a sense of our own littleness and nothingness; the adoring and admiring consideration of the sublime, triumphant Divine rule, in its moments of grandeur, casts angels and men upon their knees. In the twenty-four Elders we see, as ever, the elect representatives of the human race. [See foot-note †, p. 152.—E. R. C.]

The enemy is bound; and as he was cast out of Heaven to Earth, he is now cast into the bottomless pit [pit of the Abyss] and rendered harmless, Rev. xi. 1-3. After having been let loose for a little while, he is, fourthly, judged and cast for ever and ever into the lake of fire (Rev. xi. 7-10; Matt. xxv. 41; 1 Cor. vi. 8). Thus the whole history which the Apocalypse gives of Satan, is a continual succession of his being cast out, hurled down (ἀποθνήσκει, xii. 9; xx. 3-10).—E. R. C.]

* [Special comments are reserved for the Add. No's, p. 250 sq.—E. R. C.]

The second element in which the prophecy of the Kingdom presents a stronger tinge, is the form of their adoration: they give thanks, in the loftiest assurance of spirit; they regard what is to come as already decided. "They give thanks, not because they regard themselves as participants in the great power and government of God (Hengstenberg), a conception which is as remote from the subject here as in ver. 15" (Düsterdieck). As remote, in the sense of hierarchical superiority, and as near, in the sense of humble co-heirship with Christ. Furthermore, the feeling that God is the All-Ruler assumes additional prominence, and the future of His consummate sovereignty has become present—hence the omission of ὁ ἐρχόμενος.

Because Thou hast taken, etc.—In the economy of grace, God had suffered human spirits to pursue their own way in liberty, emptying Himself, as it were, of His power, even to the semblance of impotency (Christ on the cross), that He might then make conquest of souls in this their liberty, and educate them to salvation. Now, however, this economy of salvation is ended, and God brings His whole authoritative sway into active and visible operation again.

Thirdly, there is a particular grandeur in the sign by which the Elders recognize the turning-point of the times. This sign consists in the fact that

The nations [Lange: heathen] were wroth.—In the very wrath of the revolt, the apostasy of the heathen—and also of the Christian peoples, which have, by apostasy, become heathen again,—the Seer—as, approximately, the singer of Ps. ii. (particularly in the to-day that exegetes have misunderstood)—perceives that the wrath of God is on the point of executing its judgment. Not only has He arisen "against the wrath of His enemies," but in the very wrath of His enemies, the judgment of His wrath is revealed. Undoubtedly, however, the wrath of God first issues forth, in full revelation, in the Vials of wrath [or anger]* which follow upon the wrath of the heathen under the domination of the Antichristian Beasts.

The time of the dead.—We understand this, not as significant of the judgment upon the awakened dead, ch. xx. 12, with Düsterdieck, but as indicative of the satisfaction imparted to the pious dead by the judgment upon living transgressors (see ch. vi. 10, 11). This judgment is two-sided: first, it gives reward to all the servants of God, and that in all proportionate degrees: to Prophets, saints, even to simple God-fearing men—and not only the great, but also the small. This reward does not necessarily begin with the heavenly glory; the most affecting reward is satisfaction, vindication of honor, justification. Hence the second side of the judgment, the antithesis:

To destroy those who destroy the earth.—The latter expression recurs in ch. xix. 2. It is in every respect highly significant, whether by earth we understand the theocratic Divine institution, or the basis thereof, the cosmos, which, in all points of its ideal destinations, is laid waste by the enemies of the Lord, even in the direction of an ungodly civilization.

* [See note 29, p. 275; and foot-note on p. 276.—E. R. C.]

Düsterdieck refers τοῖς δούλοις to the Prophets only, apprehending τοῖς φρονημένοις as a summary expression for the entire mass of the godly. The distinction of Bengel, adopted by Hengstenberg, accords better, however, with New Testament usage; namely, the servants of God and the God-fearing—by servants understanding the saints together with the Prophets. Nor must the antithesis, the small and the great, be confounded with the same antithesis in ch. xiii. 16 and xix. 18—interior relations being contemplated here.

Ver. 19. And the Temple of God which was in the Heaven was opened.—Herewith begins the heavenly fulfillment of the preceding festal prophecies.

The Heavenly Temple is the archetype of the earthly Temple (see Ex. xxv. 9 and 40); it is, therefore, the ideal Kingdom of God. The Church Invisible, then, begins to become visible; even the Ark of the Covenant in the Holy of Holies is seen. The meaning of this is, we believe: the ideal import of the holiness of the law and the truth of the redemption becomes a matter of Christian knowledge manifest to all the world. Hence, also, there proceed from this great ideal appearance lightnings, and voices, and thunders, and earthquakes, and a great hail—all kinds of awakening and vitalizing convulsions of the spiritual world. They commence with lightnings, with grand radiations of new illumination, and close with a great hail, in which the grand conflict of hostile winds with the heavenly spring-wind in the spiritual atmosphere seems to be set forth. So far as the idea of the heavenly Temple, the heavenly Ark of the Covenant, etc., is concerned, we may remark that the Jewish axiom cited by Düsterdieck [see p. 150 and foot-note.—E. R. C.]: quodcumque in terra est, id etiam in cælo est, does not stand on the same footing with the Jewish tradition to the effect that the lost Ark of the Covenant had been transported to Heaven. On the confusions of construction attaching to vers. 18 and 19, see Düsterdieck, p. 388.

The different expositions of the present section follow the lead of the various conceptions of the whole Book. According to the Church-historical view, reference is had to the conquest of the Goths and other Arians by Narses (Lyra). According to the synchrono-historical view, we have an announcement of the truth, that access to the heavenly Sanctuary is open to all through Christ (Herder), or a reference to the destruction of Jerusalem (Eichhorn), or to Barcocheba (Grotius). According to Hofmann, the law has now received its due through the medium of the judgment; therefore, the Ark of the Covenant, which contains the law, can now appear. According to Hengstenberg, the Ark of the Covenant appears, because the Covenant now meets with its visible realization. Similarly Düsterdieck. Sander better explains: "The testament [covenant] which the Lord made with His Church and, particularly, with Israel, becomes manifest in all its glory; to many, profound glimpses into the mysteries of the covenant are vouchsafed," etc.

Ch. xii. 1. "If that judgment upon Antichristianity, which the Lord comes to execute, is to be represented in exact completeness and reasonableness [Begründung=state of being based upon just and sufficient reasons.—Tr.], not only must the deepest Satanic foundations of Antichristianity as a whole be laid bare but, likewise, the most essential shapes in which this radically Satanic Antichristianity appears in the world, must be depicted" (Düsterdieck).

A great sign was seen in the Heaven.—According to Ebrard, this means simply a symbol. Hengstenb. is of the same opinion. Düsterdieck strives to distinguish this symbol from other figures, which, he declares, are in no whit allegorical in their nature; he, however, cites, in illustration, no figures that are not allegorical; for dearth, for instance, in ch. vi., is assuredly presented in an allegorical figure. Hengstenberg, on the other hand, superfluously suggests that John is continually seeing only signs.

Be it observed, in the first place, that the Seer here speaks of a great sign; and, furthermore, that the Woman cannot be intended as a symbol of the Church or the Theocracy simply in and for herself; but that her condition forms an important element in the symbolism. The great sign in Heaven presents, in a highly striking picture, which is no mere symbol, but a historical life-picture or parabolical phenomenon (an entire composition of single symbols), the whole spiritual conflict betwixt the Kingdom of God and the kingdom of Satan—a conflict which is at the same time a presage of the imminent emergence of Antichristianity, to do battle against Christianity in this present visible world.

A woman.—In reality, only three explanations are possible here:

1. The Woman (as the Bride of the Lord, in accordance with a standing Biblical view, based upon deep and essential spiritual relations, the contrast of spiritual receptivity and spiritual creative power), is the Christian Church (Bede et al. to Bengel et al.), or, particularly, the Christian Church of the last time (à Lapide, Stern, Christiani). The attempt has been made to remove the contradiction which makes the Christian Church the mother of Christ, by saying that by the birth of the Messiah we are to understand the birth of Christ in believers; or even by declaring that His birth is His return to judgment (Kliefoth).

2. The Woman can be only the Old Testament Church of God, the true Israel (Herder et al. to Düsterdieck). Ebrard even apprehends by the Woman, the natural people of Israel qua possessor of the promises.

3. The Woman is the Old and New Testament Church of God in undivided unity (Victorinus to De Wette, Hengstenberg, Auberlen). The fact that the Woman cannot be referred to the New Testament Church alone, results clearly from ver. 5; the Christian Church did not bear Christ. Holding fast the identity of her in the Heaven and her in the wilderness, neither can the Woman be significant of the Old Testament Church by itself, since the same Woman lives on in the wilderness throughout the New Testament period of the cross. The unity of the Old and the New Testament Church of God lay, doubtless, much nearer to the contemplation of John than to that of an exegesis whose view is, in many respects, too exclusively fixed upon externalities. Though it is impossible that John could have apprehended the Woman as Mary herself, yet the fact was most closely present to his consciousness that this Mary, whose bodily offspring Christ was, was the final concentration of the Old Testament Theocracy—the Theocracy which, in respect of its inner essence, spiritually gave birth to the Messiah, and which, in respect of this inner essence again, continued, as the Kingdom of God, in a new and New Testament shape.

But who then are the λογοί of ver. 17? queries Dürstendiek. This we shall touch upon later.

Clothed with the sun.—It is an obvious fact that the sun is a symbol of the Divine revelation of salvation; comp. Mal. iv. 2; also Ps. xix., where the sun is spoken of in connection with the law, i. e., revelation. The distinct reference of the sun to the historic Christ, which many have sought to establish (Bede, etc.), is not pertinent here, because Christ is the Son of the Woman. According to Hengstenberg, the sun is the glory of the Lord; but with the glory of the Lord, the Lord Himself is clothed (Ps. civ. 1, 2).

So far as the moon is concerned, Diana of the Ephesians was well known to the Apostle as a symbol of nature, and to readers of Asia Minor there was something peculiarly striking in the circumstance that the Seer represents the moon as appearing under the feet of the Woman whose clothing was the sun. The symbol of Isis also denotes nature. Thus Constantine saw the cross over the sun, because in his time the latter was adored, as a symbol of the nature-divinity, by a sublimated heathenism, and particularly in his own family.

The figure of the moon has likewise been variously interpreted—as significant of: Worldly glory (Bede); the light of the Old Testament (Grotius); the light of Church teachers, in so far as that is derived from Christ (Calov.); the light of the Turkish crescent (Bengel; to make this true, however, half of the moon must be invisible. The same commentator regards the sun as the Christian Empire!); created light (Hengstenberg; the same looks upon the sun as significant of uncreated light); pale night with her half (?) moon-light (Ebrard). Poetic description (Dürstendiek).

A crown of twelve stars.—Twelve is the number of completeness; the crown, as a wreath or garland [prize], is an ornament which has been obtained by a struggle; the stars are the elect spirits of the Kingdom of God (Dan. xii. 8). The number twelve has been taken literally, and, in accordance with the whole interpretation, referred either to the twelve Apostles (Vitringa, et al.), or to the twelve Tribes of Israel (De Wette, et al.).

Ver. 2. And she, being with child, orieth.—Several grand contrasts successively appear here. First, the Woman in her heavenly garb of light; then the same, crying out in the pains of a hard travail and menaced by the hellish Dragon. Again, the Woman in her simply beautiful and sublime raiment of light, over against the Dragon in the startling forms and glaring colors of demonico-bestial unnaturalness. Furthermore, the third part of the stars of Heaven; swept away and cast down by the tail of the Dragon. Next, the Son lifted up to the Throne of God, and the mother sheltered in the retirement of the wilderness. The crying Woman represents the sufferings of the true Israel at the time of Christ's crucifixion—sufferings of which John had the deepest experience.

Ver. 8. Another sign.—The sign is not only the symbolical form of the Devil, as the prince of darkness, the adversary of the Kingdom of God, the murderer of man and mortal enemy of Christ, but also a presage of the imminent outburst of the Antichristian power. The allegorical figure of the serpent, originally significant of Satan, was blended, even upon Israelitish ground, with the figure of the crocodile or leviathan; in Jewish tradition, together with the features of the dragon of story, it received the name thereof, especially through the mediation of the Septuagint (δράκων=דָּרָקוֹן and לִירֶן). Though the dragon, in the narrower sense, has, in accordance with passages in the Psalms, been represented as king of the sea and of marine animals (like the Midgard serpent in Scandinavian mythology), he also occupies the position of a hostile ruling power toward the Earth; and the present figure in the Apocalypse symbolically indicates that which in the Gospel of John is denoted by "the prince of this world" (John xii. 31; xiv. 30; xvi. 11). Greek mythology elevated the dragon, subsequent to its killing by Hercules, into a constellation, situated near the polar star, and embracing several stars in its folds. Jewish tradition elaborated the original figure of a serpent into a dragon with seven heads (see De Wette, p. 127).—Even in Christian story, the dragon-slayer, under different names (Michael, St. George), occupies an important place.

A great red [Lange: fiery red] dragon.—Πυρρός, the designation of the color, is looked upon by many as blood-color, in accordance with ch. vi. 4, and considered as referring to him who, from the beginning, has been the murderer of man (John viii. and 44), and who now seeks to kill, in particular, the Son of the Woman also. Ebrard combats this interpretation, maintaining that blood-red and fire-red are two different things, and that fire is a symbol of destruction and ruin. The fire-hue certainly is susceptible of several shades, from pale to brownish red. In ch. vi. 4, blood-color is unmistakably indicated. In the Neronian persecution, John had, moreover, become acquainted with the prelude to those stakes at which, since then, the hues of blood and fire have so often mingled.

Seven heads and ten horns.—"The picture is not to be conceived of (with De Wette) as so utterly without taste, as if on four of the heads there were one horn and on the remaining three, two horns, but (with Bengel, et al.) as having ten horns on one of the heads." This is said to be proved by ch. xvii. 5, 9, 12; but the horns of Satan must not be identified with the horns of the Beast. Neither is it possible for us to see how one head with ten horns could, beside these, carry a crown likewise. A correct appreciation of the symbolism, however, will leave the disposition of the ten horns amongst the seven heads to exegetical controversy. The appearance is designed to be monstrous, however. By many, a wrong leap is taken from the figure of the heads and horns of the Dragon to the heads and horns of the Beast (see Düsterdieck, p. 395; Ebrard, p. 355; Hengstenberg, p. 603), although the Seer himself has taken sufficient pains for their distinction. The seven heads of Satan are not, in the abstract, to be divided into historical phases, any more than are the seven archangelic forms, or the seven Spirits, that, from the Throne of God, go forth into all lands, to be thus distributed. In the case of the seven heads, the septenary bears the import of the whole Satanic week, so to speak—in its continuance, as a plenary number of lying works, from the beginning of the Satanic labor in Paradise: this week, with its demonic days' works, gives promise of a new Paradise, an absolute witches' Sabbath*—which, however, shall be celebrated in the lake of fire.

The same emphasis must be laid upon the symbolical element in the case of the ten horns; i. e., neither are they to be identified with the ten kings who appear as ten horns of the Beast. Ten is the complete course of the world; ten horns are the complete world-power, here, indeed, appearing as lying powers. This circumstance [of their falsity] is manifest in the fact that Satan has three more horns than crowns. In more ancient times Vitringa, at least, pointed out the difference of equipment between the Dragon and the Beast; the same has been done in modern times by De Wette. Ancient exegetes have, moreover, taken the difference for granted, by referring the seven heads of the Dragon to seven bad spirits, or the whole number of bad spirits; to seven capital vices, or the seven deadly sins: or by apprehending, by the ten horns, the ten sins against the ten commandments; or worldly power; or the multitude and might of the demons.

According to Hofmann, the seven heads symbolize the non-unitary power of Satan; according to De Wette, they are a symbol of wisdom—that is to say, of consummate cunning. In the Indian mythology, the members of the divine forms are multiplied, for the purpose of portraying the superhuman greatness of the qualities indicated.

Erroneous historical interpretations see cited by Düsterdieck: Diocletian, the one head with ten horns. Düsterdieck himself; the Roman empire [imperium], etc. Düsterdieck, p. 396; De Wette, p. 127.

The Heaven, in which the Dragon makes his appearance, can be neither the antemundane Heaven of the angel-world—since the fallen angels did not immediately fall to earth—nor the Heaven in which the glorified Christ is enthroned. That which is intended, therefore, is the Heaven that Christ has instituted on earth—the invisible Church, the Communion of saints—into which Satan, as a Dragon, has found entrance, just as, long ago, he pressed into Paradise.

* [Witches' Sabbath (Hexenabbath): "the festive conventicle of witches and spirits, for the indulgence of wild uproar and dissolute mirth." SANDERS' Wörterbuch.—Tr.]

Ver. 4. And his tail, etc.—De Wette: "The strength of dragons is resident in their tails, Solin., ch. xxx. in Wetstein." Three is the number of spirit. A third is a fraction in reference to spiritual things. The significance of the third has already been set forth in ch. viii. From the one star of embitterment, of merely germinant apostasy, an apostasy of the third part of the stars, i. e., the spiritual Church—heaven, has resulted. These stars are, by the lashings of the Satanic tail, by the magic of an apparently prodigious vital power, cast from Heaven to earth, i. e., from being stars of the invisible Church, they become demonic organs of the external Church and of Christian political order.

The reference of the stars to angels (Vitringa, et al., Ebrard) is most erroneous: further on, the Dragon himself, together with his angels, is found still in Heaven. The division of the stars into two classes, based upon their reference to churchly teachers (Grotius, et al.), and to believers or saints (Alcasar, et al.), is inadmissible. According to Ewald, the action of the Dragon's tail constitutes merely a poetic trait—being indicative of eagerness for combat. Düsterdieck also reduces the description, in essence, to a poetic picture. Other interpretations see quoted by the last named commentator, p. 398.

And the Dragon stood [trai=stepped—took his stand].—According to Pliny viii. 3, dragons move in an upright posture. Comp. Wetstein, De Wette.

Ver. 5. A male son.—Jer. xx. 15. The strong expression of the manfulness of the Child by the neuter ἀρσεν, is not merely explanatory of His destination, in accordance with Ps. ii. 9, to shepherdize (in accordance with the Sept.) all the nations with a rod of iron (Düsterdieck); it also contains a slight intimation of the fact that Christ has, by His resurrection, frustrated the attempt of Satan to devour Him. De Wette totally denies the emphasis in the apposition; Düsterdieck, unnecessarily, discovers an announcement of the shepherding of Antichristian nations in judgment.

Manifestly the Messiah is here denoted in the literal sense of the term—not in any metaphorical sense whatsoever. This truth, however, does not invalidate the typicalness of the facts set forth: the people of Christ, in whom He is born on earth, are, like Him, themselves caught away into Heaven, through the medium of suffering and death, from Satan's plots for their destruction.

Manifold interpretations of the words, as referring to the Christ born of the Church, from Bede onward, see in Düsterdieck, p. 400, De Wette, p. 128 (Christians; Constantine the Great: the Nicene confession; the Roman Church; Christianity, etc.).

[“These words (who is to shepherdize all the nations, etc.), cited verbatim from the LXX. of the Messianic Psalm ii., and preceded by the ὁ of personal identification, leave no possibility of doubt who was here intended. The man-child is the Lord Jesus Christ, and none other.” ALFORD. See also the abstract of Auberlen, p. 243, and the ADD. NORM. p. 250sq.—E. R. C.]

And her child was caught away.—Sub

specie æterni, the sufferings of Christ, as instigated by Satan, down to His very death upon the cross, are a baffled machination, resulting in the consummation—opposite to that desired—of His exaltation to the Throne of God. De Wette pertinently cites the words of Jesus (John xiv. 30): The prince of this world hath nothing in Me. Mark also his comment on the “absurd interpretation” of Grotius concerning the translation of Christ, on the hypothesis that the Roman Church is meant. On the same hypothesis of a mystical birth of Christ, Lyra spoke of the liberation of the Church, and Eichhorn of its growth. The fact that the actual history of the humiliation and exaltation of Jesus (hence also the fact of the Ascension) underlies the Apocalyptic description, is vainly denied by Düsterdieck; he himself subsequently admits it, in a certain degree, by saying that the historical actuality serves merely as a firm, concrete substratum for the idea.

Ver. 6. And [Lange: But] the woman fled into the wilderness.—On the repetition of this passage, see above. The wilderness becomes a place in the heavenly region itself by its perfect symbolico-ideal import: heroic abnegation of the world. On the term designating the period of retirement in the wilderness, see Symbolism of Numbers in the Introduction. Also De Wette, p. 121. In commenting on the wilderness, exegetes have referred to the wandering of Israel through the wilderness; the sojourn of Elijah in the wilderness; the flight of the parents of Jesus to Egypt; withdrawal from the world and renunciation of it; the flight of the Christians into the wilderness; the flight of the Christians to Pella, etc. Even waste-lying Palestine is mentioned (by Hofmann) as the wilderness in which the Woman, who is still fleeing, will one day arrive (!).

De Wette calls the interpretation of the flight as the flight of the Christians into the wilderness, “pettily literal”—a comment which is ungrounded, since in that flight the external fact originally coincided with its inner significance—as was the case in regard to Christ’s sojourn in the wilderness.

[AUBERLEN supports his view that by the wilderness is meant the heathen world (see p. 243), by considerations such as the following: “It is by flight that the Woman comes into the wilderness. If we remark whence she flies, we shall also find whither. It is before the persecutions of the Devil, through Herod, and in general through the Jews. But whither does she fly? . . . Undoubtedly from the Jews to the heathens. Therefore it is that, in this passage, the attribute given to Christ elsewhere, that He will rule the heathen with an iron sceptre (ii. 27; xix. 5; Ps. ii. 9), is expressly mentioned. From the time of His ascension, the heathen are given to Him as His field; thither His Church, persecuted by the Jews, takes her refuge (from Acts viii. onwards). There God has prepared a place for her to be sheltered and nourished. . . This signification . . . is corroborated by the prophetic usus loquendi. We know that Canaan, as the seat of all temporal and spiritual blessings of God, is called the land of glory, of pleasantness, etc. (Jer. iii. 19; Ezek. xx. 6, 15; Dan.

xi. 16, 41; viii. 9). The land of the heathen, on the contrary, is a wilderness, because forsaken by the fullness of Divine life and strength. As God dwells and reveals Himself in the land of glory, the demons dwell in the wilderness (Matt. xii. 43; Mark i. 13; Lev. xvi. 21, 22; Isa. xxiv. 14); they are the rulers and princes of the heathen world (1 Cor. x. 20; Rev. ix. 20). Hence, when Israel is exiled to Babylon, it is said to be in the wilderness (Isa. xl. 3; xli. 17–19; xlii. 10–12; xliii. 19, 20,” etc.—E. R. C.]

Vers. 7–12. Expulsion of Satan from the Heaven of the spiritual Church, the communion of saints.

“The assumption that the Dragon pursued the Child even to the Throne of God, and that this was the cause of the conflict that arose in Heaven (Eichhorn, Herder, De Wette, Stern), is not only utterly without foundation in the context, but is also incompatible with what is stated in ver. 5” (Düsterdieck). The commentator from whom we have just quoted, will, however, listen to no conjectures as to the signification of this Heaven, and calls even Bede’s explanation (which is also that of Primasius and others), in ecclesia, “allegorical interpretation.”

Ver. 7. War in the Heaven.—Treatises on the difficult reading which we meet with here, see in De Wette (p. 131; Düsterd., p. 404). [See TEXT. AND GRAM.—E. R. C.]

Michael.—We read this as in apposition to the war in Heaven. The war is Heaven is the eternal, holy, and warlike opposition against the Satanic Kingdom; an opposition represented by Michael, the warlike form of Christ, a form which also manifests itself in His Church as the spirit of discipline.

“The view of Vitringa, of which Hengstenberg is an earnest advocate, that Michael is not an Angel (according to Dan. x. 13; xii. 1, the guardian Angel of the Old Testament people of God; according to Jude 9, an Archangel), but Christ Himself, or, as Hengstenberg prefers to say, the Logos—suffers shipwreck at the very outset—irrespective of the passage Jude 9, where the express title ὁ ἀρχάγγελος, according to Hengstenberg, no more contains a proof against the divinity of Michael than the utterance of our Lord, John xiv. 28, bears testimony against the homoûsia of the Son—in the impossibility of regarding the Michael of ver. 7 and the Child of ver. 5 as one and the same person” (Düsterd.). Within the range of sensuous apprehension this is, undoubtedly, impossible; in Christology, however, Christ can, at the same time, be a child, in Bethlehem, and the Son of God, in universal relations and manifestations. We take it that Michael, in accordance with the difficult reading, is, from the outset, Christ in warlike array against Satan, and that hence it is that the angels of Michael are appointed to be angels of war against the Kingdom of Darkness. The very designation of Michael in Jewish Theology as the συνήγων, or advocate of the pious, in opposition to the κατήγων, is expressive of the assumption that Michael is no mere angel. [See foot-note, p. 241.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 8. “Hofmann, Ebrard and Auberlen preposterously dogmatize on this verse, maintaining that it presents the idea that until then (until the Ascension of Christ, ver. 5, Auberlen [see pp. 243sq.]; during the whole 'world-period,' from the Ascension, Ebrard) Satan and his angels have really had their place in Heaven. In the presentation of this view, reference is had to the appearance of Satan before the Lord, Job i., in the sense of an historical fact, and from Zech. iii. it is shown that Satan's occupation in Heaven is that of accusing" (Düsterd). Ebrard even assumes that during the whole world-period of the 1260 days, Satan has a right to appear before God as the accuser of the people of Israel, etc., p. 365.

We have already called attention to the conciseness of the expression: they prevailed not; neither was their place (as a permanent position) found any more in the Heaven

Ver. 9. And the great Dragon was thrown down [Lange: cast out], etc.—A solemn and comprehensive expression, declaratory of the expulsion of Satan, hence also of his lying arts and motives, from the Church of God, the kernel of humanity. First, the symbolical term: the ancient serpent. The great Dragon, as the mortal enemy of Christ, long ago began his murderous sport as the ancient serpent. The serpent of Paradise has become the great Hell-dragon. And, similarly, in accordance with his true essence, the fiend has, from being the Devil, or slanderer and accuser of mankind, become its unmasked foe, Satan. Although known in, and cast out from, Heaven under these titles, he resumes his old courses in the world as the seducer of the whole world. In antithesis to the holy kernel of the Church of God, he now becomes, more truly than ever, the seducer of the world.

He was thrown down unto the earth.—That is, not out of the cloud-heaven upon the terrestrial globe, but out of the inner Church upon the external Church and the ecclesiastico-political institution. It is a truth supported by historical data, that the antithesis of the external Church to the inner spiritual Church of faith has, in many impure, egotistical organs of the former, been the cause of the more perfect development of the hypocritical world-spirit in hierarchical and sectarian forms. The second clause of the sentence, therefore:

And his angels were thrown down with him, must not be regarded as relating purely to demonic powers of the other world. The declaration concerning the angel of Satan, who buffeted the apostle Paul [2 Cor. xii. 7], is suggestive of the hatred of Jewish or Judaizing fanaticism; and such fanaticism was also at work in the rise of the synagogues of Satan, of which the Apocalypticist speaks.

Vers. 10-12. The song of triumph over the liberation of the invisible Church, the communion of saints, from the deceptive arts of Satan and his angels.—This song is expressive of the great contrast betwixt the inner and the external Church—a contrast as great as that between Heaven and earth, nay, between wheat and tares, though, notwithstanding it, the Church in its totality continues to be a unitous organic phenomenon until the end of the world. Hail to the one! Woe to the other!

Ver. 10. Now is come (ἐγένετο) the salva- tion and the power and the Kingdom of [Lange: with] our God.—These words, difficult in an exegetical point of view, are explained by the assumption of a traditional antithesis. In this holy region, which is purged from all Satanic works, but one salvation is known, which, as principal and final σωτηρία, is with God alone. Here, therefore, there is no condition of the forgiveness of sins, or of the going home to the Father through human mediation. Here the mighty rule of God alone prevails, and the Church is purely and alone His Kingdom, in which the authority of no other ruler is of any account. The rule of the Divine authority, however, is mediated singly and only by the pure and infallible mighty rule of Christ.

For the accuser (κατηγοῦν) of our brethren is thrown down.—Satan is, on the one hand, the seducer of the natural life to levity by the sophism, that sin is nothing, and on the other hand, the accuser of the spiritual life, and the deluder into melancholy, by the sophism, that sin is unpardonable; in both aspects, he is the calumniator of man before God, in the declaration that man is worthless to the very core. As seducer, he endeavors to rule in the world; as accuser, he seeks dominion in the Church. So long as men's consciences are unperfected (Heb. ix. 9, 14), so long are they in fear of death (Heb. ii. 14, 15); and just so long are they not free from the power of the accuser, as exercised through hierarchs and sectarian heads of parties. If, however, the accuser be but decidedly cast out of the sanctuary by means of the perfect peace of the reconciliation, then is salvation found here alone with God, and all the might of hypocrites influenced by Satan is here broken. But how has this Divine freedom in the peace of God been brought about?

Ver. 11. They conquered him on account of [Lange: by virtue of] the blood of the Lamb.—The appropriation of the reconciliation in the death of Christ was, at the same time, a being baptized, with Him, into His death, resulting in their joyful confession of Him. [ALFORD: "They conquered by virtue of that blood having been shed; not as in E. V., 'by the blood,' as if δα had been with the genitive. The meaning is far more significant; their victory over Satan was grounded in, was a consequence of, His having shed His precious blood; without that, the adversary's charges against them would have been unanswerable. It is remarkable, that the rabbinical books give a tradition that Satan accuses men all days of the year, except on the day of Atonement. Vajikra Rabba, § 21, fol. 164. 8, in Schöttgen."—E. R. C.]

The word of their testimony. In the consistent bearing of this testimony, they loved not their life unto death; they were, in respect of the posture of their hearts, ideal martyrs, even though real martyrdom should not have been required of them. That the Heaven on earth is here intended throughout, is evident from the fact that the great voice in Heaven says: The accuser of our brethren is thrown down. Thus do the blessed in the Heaven beyond, speak of the sealed in this present world.

Interpretations of the heavenly brethren: As the Angels; the twenty-four Elders; the perfect saints in the other world. According to Ebrard, the voice proceeds from the whole number of individual Israelites who are converted throughout the period of the 1260 days; by the brethren in this world, he understands Israel as converted at the end of the world-period.

Ver. 12. Therefore rejoice, ye heavens.—Significant plural. The dwellers in the Heaven beyond this life, as well as the dwellers in the Heaven in this life. Düsterdieck combats the declaration of Hengstenberg, that the saints on earth are included in this apostrophe (in accordance with Phil. iii. 20; Eph. ii. 6). The former commentator regards the inhabitants of Heaven as proleptically celebrating the victory, yet future, of their brethren. This explanation is foreign to the context, and does not held fast the antithesis.

Woe to the earth and the sea.—Even here Bengel looks upon earth and sea as significant of Asia and Europe. Düsterdieck utterly rejects every "allegorical interpretation," and thus the two unreconciled propositions stand contrasted: WOE TO THE EARTH (with the Accusative)—"Satan is made a conquered foe even for believers on earth" [Düsterdieck's comment on ver. 11.—Ta.].* If the terrestrial orb were meant, in its merely literal sense, the mention of the sea would be superfluous. Hengstenberg rightly refers the sea to the sea of nations, and thus, here also, a contrast to it is formed by the earth as the theocratic institution and order, as ecclesiastical and, relatively, ecclesiastico-political authority.

The devil is come down unto you.—Even within the sphere of the earth there is an above and a below. The devil, after being cast down, makes pretence of a voluntary descent, as a sort of Mentor, to the pastors of the earth and the agitators of the sea.

Having great anger.—The animosity of the kingdom of darkness and its prince is heightened by the presentiment of its imminent judgment—a presentiment conditioned by the sense of its vileness.

Little time.—We cannot identify καίρος with χρόνος, as if the whole time from the Dragon's expulsion from Heaven to the coming of the judgment were intended, as the "time of Antichrist," or, according to Bengel, the period from the year 947 to 1836. The καίροι of Satan do not run through the whole Chronos of the Church of the cross; they emerge from time to time only, as particular moments of apparent triumph for the kingdom of darkness, even though Satanic temptations pervade all times; see Luke xxii. 53. Here, therefore, the kingdom of darkness, in its deepest demonic foundation, as represented by Satan himself and his angels, appears first as an ultramundane spiritual kingdom—which, however, in its onslaughts against the Kingdom of God and His Anointed, begins, in the centre of the Theocracy in this world, as, subsequently, in the periphery of the Church, to belong to this world. Satan already has his instruments in this world, as prefigured by his organs in the specific Antichristian sphere, the Beast out of the sea and the Beast from the earth. The attributes of this hellish triad are attributes of falsehood and hypocrisy. The Dragon has seven heads, the sea-Beast has seven heads; and whilst the plurality of heads announces the monster, the septenary, as holy, seems to cover this drawback; it is the number of holy days' works, promissory of an entrance upon the eternal Sabbath, the new Paradise. In still more hypocritical guise, the Beast from the earth appears; he has two horns like the lamb. This is the pseudo-Christian figure which comes to the aid of the Antichristian shape, by means of which the latter succeeds in obtaining perfect apparent victory. The consummate hypocrisy of this second Beast forms a contrast to the insolent boldness of the Beast out of the sea. The ten horns of Satan are themselves indicative of complete earthly world-power, as well as the ten horns of the first Beast; but the former wears the crowns, a sacred seven, with the semblance of legitimacy, upon his heads, whilst the Beast has ten crowns, which he boldly sets upon his horns, as manifest signs of his usurped revolutionary power. This hellish triad agree, however, in blasphemous speech; even the Lamb speaks as a Dragon.*

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE SECTION.]

By the American Editor.

[In the judgment of the writer, this Section is divisible into two parts. The first, ch. xi. 15-18, presents the doxology of the heavenly host† in view of the events of the seventh and last Trumpet, which events are immediately in order to the establishment of the Millennial Kingdom, and issue in that establishment. At the first blast of the Trumpet this doxology is begun. The second part, ch. xi. 19-xii. 12, forms the introduction to the development of the events of the Trumpet. Ch. xi. 19, like the preceding doxology, may indicate purely a Heaven-scene in which, under circumstances of inexpressible grandeur, the Divine purposes in fulfillment of the promises of the Covenant will be unveiled to the inhabitants of Heaven; or it may betoken a fearful convulsion, shaking Heaven and Earth, which will inaugurate, and perhaps be continued throughout, the period of this Trumpet.]

The Woman and the Dragon.

The writer adopts the view, that the Woman symbolizes the True Church; and the Dragon, Satan, or more probably the host of evil spirits under the leadership of Satan (possibly one-third of the original number of blessed spirits, ch. xii. 4). He regards them as Classical Sym-

* [The precise position of Düsterdieck is, that ver. 11 contains a proleptical celebration of the future victory of earthly believers, whilst ver. 12 rather reverts to the actual condition of affairs, proclaiming joy to the Heavens and the dwellers therein, on account of the victory over the Dragon; but woe to the earth and all its inhabitants—even to believers, since it is theirs now to make good the triumph proleptically rejoiced over, and to fight the raging Dragon, even to the death.—The contrast between the "two propositions," therefore, is not quite so irreconcilable as would appear from Dr. Lange's statement of the case.—Ta.]

* The hypothesis earlier advanced by Bleek, to the effect that the Book originally closed with ch. xi., has since been declared by himself to be untenable (Apok. p. 120; Beiträge, p. 81). This dispatches the note in Hengstenberg l. c. p. 583.

† [For the writer's views concerning the Elders see footnote to p. 152.—E. R. C.]

hols (see p. 146), as also the male Son of ver. 5, representing the ἀπαρχή (see below). He cannot adopt the conclusion that the vision is retrogressive. This seems to be forbidden by the phraseology of the Apocalypticist. There is here no strong disjunctive (καὶ μετὰ τοῦτο εἶδον) as in the beginning of the account of the intercalated vision of ch. vii., not even the secondary disjunctive καὶ εἶδον (see ADD. NOTE, p. 193; and foot-notes, pp. 150, 190); the whole narrative flows on as though the Seer were describing one continuous scene. And not only so, but there is nothing to require an unannounced and unprecedented break in the description at this point, and still further, as will appear, the idea that the actions ascribed to these symbols occurred after the blowing of the seventh Trumpet gives a unity to the whole description unattainable on any other hypothesis.

As to the adornment of the Woman, the writer adopts the general view set forth by Lange (pp. 237, 246), understanding, however, by the crown of twelve stars the dignified position and completeness of her ministers. (On the number twelve, see p. 15; and for an inspired exposition of the stars, ch. i. 20.) He has formed no decided opinion as to what is symbolized by the seven crowned heads and the ten horns of the Dragon. He would suggest, however, that this symbolization may have been employed because of the relation of Satan to the seven-headed and ten-horned Wild Beast (the World-power, developing in seven Empires, the last being divided into ten kingdoms, see p. 272), which he inspires, which is his earthly representative and instrument. On this hypothesis, the Dragon appropriately wears the crowns on all his heads, as the one inspirer and ruler of all; but the Wild-beast is introduced as wearing the crowns upon his horns (ch. xiii. 1) as indicative of the time of his appearance on the Apocalyptic platform.

By the male Son, the writer understands the ἀπαρχή, who, with Christ, their Elder Brother and Head, are to rule all nations with an iron sceptre (comp. ch. ii. 26, 27; iii. 21; xx. 4, 6; Matt. xix. 28; Luke xxii. 29, 30; 1 Cor. vi. 3; see also ADD. NOTE, p. 198). In one point of view (exclusive of Christ), this body constitutes the Bride of the Lamb, and is so symbolized, ch. xxi. 2, 9; but in another (as forming one body with Christ—a body of which He is the Head, the Root, the King, the Elder Brother, the Husband) it may appropriately be styled the male Son. The travail of the Woman commenced with the Advent of Jesus, and from that time until the present the Dragon has continually stood before her striving to destroy her offspring, which continually has been caught away from his grasp to the Throne of God. She is brought into the field of Apocalyptic vision in the last time, when her long labor is near its end. John beheld the completion of the birth, the last assault of the Dragon, and the completed deliverance of the male Son from his attacks. Then the completed body, the ἀπαρχή, the 144,000, delivered from Satan and the woe that is to come upon them that dwell upon the Earth, stand in safety, with their Head, on Mount Zion (comp. vers. 5, 12; Luke xxi. 35, 36; Rev. iii. 10; vii. 4, 14; xiv. 1-5; see also NOTE ON THE GREAT TRIBULATION, pp. 191 sq., and ADD. NOTE, p. 193).*

The War in Heaven the writer also refers to the period of the seventh Trumpet. It may, indeed, have begun on, or before, the Ascension of Jesus; but for reasons already given, we must conclude, that it comes into the view of the Seer as waged to its completion under this Trumpet. As additional reasons for this opinion may be urged the following: 1. The declaration concerning the Dragon following his dejection, "he knoweth that he hath little time," ver. 12; the time accorded could not have been characterized as little if the dejection occurred at either the Ascension of our Lord or the establishment of Christianity under Constantine. 2. The declaration that the woe following the dejection should be visited upon the Earth. This seems to point to the period of the great tribulation (see above; and also 2 Thess. ii. 8-18, comp. with Matt. xxiv. 21-24, in which the last and most violent outburst of Satanic malice is directly connected with the great tribulation). The writer adopts in the main the views of Auberlen as to the nature and place of demons; holding, however, that the dejection is still future; that when it takes place, the hosts of evil spirits being concentrated on Earth, the fulfillment of the last quoted prophecies, which lie parallel with the remaining portions of this vision, will begin.

By the flight of the Woman into the Wilderness, the writer thinks it probable, is intended the removal of the vital Church to some earthly retreat of seclusion and safety. By the victory of ver. 11 he understands not that of Michael, but the victory of the Saints whom the Dragon persecuted and accused.—E. R. C.]

* [An objection to the interpretation given above may arise in the minds of some from the fact, that after the dejection of the Dragon to Earth, he is represented as making war with the remnant of the Woman's seed, v. r. 17. The writer will here only remark, that in his mind there is a growing conviction that the ἀπαρχή does not include all true Christians, but that it consists of a select portion of them—the specially faithful. He regards ver. 17 (τοὶ λοιποὶ τοῦ σπέρματος αὐτῆς) as strongly confirmative of this view. See ADD. NOTES, pp. 193 and 291.—E. R. C.]

B.—THE DRAGON UPON THE EARTH; OR, CHRISTIANITY, AND, OPPOSED TO IT, ANTICHRISTIANITY, IN ITS DEVELOPMENT AND IN THE TWO GROUND-FORMS OF ITS MATURITY; THE BEAST OUT OF THE SEA AND THE BEAST OUT OF THE EARTH.

CHAP. XII. 18—CHAP. XIII. 18.

CHAP. XII. 18—18.*

a. The Dragon and the Prelude of Antichristianity.

- 13 And when the dragon saw that he was cast [thrown] unto the earth, he persecuted 14 the woman which [who] brought forth the man child [male son]. And to the woman were given [ins. the<sup>1</sup>] two wings of a [the<sup>2</sup>] great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness, into her place, where she is nourished [ins. there] for [om.
 15 for] a time, and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent. And the serpent cast out of his mouth [ins. after the woman] water as a flood [river] after the woman [om. after the woman], that he might cause her<sup>3</sup> to be carried
 16 away of the flood [river]<sup>4</sup>. And the earth helped the woman; and the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed up the flood [river] which the dragon cast out
 17 of his mouth. And the dragon was wroth with [concerning<sup>5</sup>] the woman, and went [departed] to make war with the remnant of her seed, which [who] keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ [om. Christ]<sup>6</sup>.
 18* And I [he]<sup>7</sup> stood upon the sand of the sea, [.]

CHAP. XIII. 1-18.

b. The Antichrist out of the Sea of Nations.

- 1 And [ins. I] saw a beast [wild-beast] rise up [ascending] out of the sea, having seven heads and ten horns [ten horns and seven heads]<sup>8</sup>, and upon his horns ten crowns [diadems], and upon his heads the [om. the] name [names<sup>9</sup>] of blasphemy. [;]
 2 and the beast [wild-beast] which [that] I saw was like unto a leopard, and his feet were [om. were] as the feet of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion: and the dragon gave him his power, and his seat [throne], and great authority
 3 [ἐξουσία]. [;] And I saw [om. I saw]<sup>10</sup> one of [from among] his heads as it were [om. it were—ins. if] wounded [slain]<sup>11</sup> to death; and his deadly wound [or the wound of his death] was healed: and all the world [the whole earth] wondered after the beast

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

- <sup>1</sup> Ver. 14. [Tisch. inserts ai, with A. C. P.; Treg. marks with *; Alf. brackets; it is omitted by K. B*.—E. R. C.]
<sup>2</sup> Ver. 14. [Alf., Treg., Tisch., insert τὸν before ἀετῶν; it is omitted by K.—E. R. C.]
<sup>3</sup> Ver. 15. [Gb. and Sz. read ταύτην with P. 1, 7, instead of αὐτήν, given by Modern Eds. with K. A. B*. C.—E. R. C.]
<sup>4</sup> Ver. 15. [An unusual compound adjective is here employed, ποταμοπόρρον; the literal translation of the sentence is, that he might make her river-borne.—E. R. C.]
<sup>5</sup> Ver. 17. ["The ἐν presents the Woman as the ground and occasion, not as the immediate object, of the Dragon's wrath. Comp. Matt. xviii. 3; Mark iii. 5, etc.; and see Winer, § 52, c." LULLIE'S Notes. Winer, § 52, c. (c), gives ἐν in this place the force of over.—E. R. C.]
<sup>6</sup> Ver. 17. [Modern Editors omit Χριστοῦ with all the Greek Codd.; it is given by the Vul. Gt., om. by Am. and Pahl.; Lange retains.—E. R. C.]
<sup>7</sup> Ver. 18. This reading is given by K. A. C., Vulg., etc. The Rec. ἐστάθην (retained by B*. [P.] etc., Gb., Tisch., etc.), has the internal connection against it. The standpoint of the Seer is immovable; the scenes he beholds are movable. [The reading of Lange, with which Lach., Alford, and Treg. agree, is adopted.—E. R. C.]
<sup>8</sup> Ch. xiii. 1. According to K. A. B*. C. [P.] etc., the κεφάλαια are mentioned first; and indeed they are more striking here than the heads; the natural sequence, preferred by the Rec., would here be inappropriate.
<sup>9</sup> Ver. 1. The plural ὀνόματα is given by K., A. B*, and many others. Dusterdieck regards it as interpretative, but it might also be supposed—one Beast, one name. [Treg. and Tischendorf give the plural; Alford gives ὄνομα with C. P.—E. R. C.]
<sup>10</sup> Ver. 3. Inserted for the sake of clearness. [It is omitted by Crit. Eds. with K. A. B*. C. P. 1, Am., Tbl.; it occurs in Vulg. Gt. Doubtless the μύας is governed by the ἐκδορ of ver. 2; the Seer beheld the Wild-beast ascending with a wounded head. Ver. 21, in a sense, parenthetical and subsidiary to ver. 1.—E. R. C.]
<sup>11</sup> Ver. 3. [The marginal reading of the E. V. (first-class, marked †) is here adopted. See section on Marginal Readings in the Special Introduction, by the Am. Ed.—E. R. C.]

* [The notation of Lange and of Critical Editors of the Greek Testament is here adopted. That which is here styled ver. 18 is the first clause of ch. xiii. 1 of the English Version. See NOTE 7 above.—E. R. C.]

4 [wild-beast]. And they worshipped the dragon which [om. which—ins. because he] gave power [the authority (τὴν ἐξουσίαν)] unto the beast [wild-beast]:<sup>12</sup> and they worshipped the beast [wild-beast], saying, Who is like unto [om. unto] the
5 beast [wild-beast]? [ins. and] who is able to make [om. make] war with him? And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies;<sup>13</sup> and power [om. power—ins. there] was given unto him [authority (ἐξουσία)] to continue
6 [act<sup>14</sup>] forty and [om. and] two months. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy [unto blasphemies]<sup>15</sup> against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and<sup>16</sup>
7 them that dwell [those who tabernacle] in [ins. the] heaven. And it was given unto him to make war with the saints, and to overcome [conquer]<sup>17</sup> them: and power [authority (ἐξουσία)] was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations
8 [every tribe, and people<sup>18</sup>, and tongue, and nation]. And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him,<sup>19</sup> whose names are not [every one whose name<sup>20</sup> hath not been] written in the book of life of the Lamb [ins. that hath been] slain [or ins. ]<sup>21</sup>
9 from the foundation of the world. If any man [one] have [hath] an ear, let him
10 hear. He that leadeth into [If any one is for] captivity shall go [om. shall go—ins. ] into captivity [ins. he goeth]<sup>22</sup>: he that killeth [if any one shall kill]<sup>23</sup> with the sword [ins. he] must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience [endurance] and the faith of the saints.

c. The Antichristian False Prophet, as the last Product of the Earth—i. e., the Ancient Order of Things—in its Lapse into Antichristianity.

11 And I beheld [saw] another beast [wild-beast] coming up [ascending] out of the 12 earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power [authority (ἐξουσία)] of the first beast [wild-beast] before him, [in his presence;] and [ins. he] causeth [maketh]<sup>24</sup> the earth and them which [that] dwell therein [in it] to [om. to—ins. that they should] worship the first beast [wild-beast], whose deadly [om. deadly] wound [ins. of his death] was healed.
13 And he doeth great wonders [signs], so that [or in order that also (ὅτι καὶ)]<sup>25</sup> he maketh [may make] fire come down from [ins. the] heaven on [unto] the earth in 14 the sight [presence] of men, and deceiveth [seduceth or misleadeth (πλανᾷ)] them that dwell on the earth by the means of [because of] those miracles [the signs] which he had power [it was given to him] to do [work] in the sight [presence] of the beast [wild-beast]; saying to [telling] them that dwell on the earth, that they should [om. that they should—ins. to] make an image to the beast [wild-
15 beast], which [who<sup>26</sup>] had [hath] the wound by a sword, and did live [lived]. And

<sup>12</sup> Ver. 4. [The Am. Ed. leaves unaltered the pointing of Vers. 3 and 4, in the E. V. On this subject critical editors are widely at variance. That pointing which, in his judgment, will most correctly present the entire passage, is as follows: And one from among his heads as if slain to death. And the wound of his death was healed; and the whole earth wondered after the wild-beast, and they worshipped the dragon because he gave the authority unto the wild-beast, and they worshipped the wild-beast, saying, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 6. We give the plural in acc. with the Rec., N. C. Opposed to this we find the singular, and the reading βλάσφημα. [Treg. and Tisch. (8th ed.) as Lange, which reading is adopted above; Gb. and Tisch. (1859), give βλασφημίας with B*. P.; Lach. and Alford, βλάσφημα with A.—E. R. C.]

<sup>14</sup> Ver. 5. [For this translation of ποιῆσαι, see Robinson sub voce 2. (b). Lange translates schallen.—E. R. C.]

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 6. [Crit. Eds. read εἰς βλασφημίας with N. A. C. The singular is given by B*. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>16</sup> Ver. 6. [Lach., Alford, Treg., Tisch. (8th ed.) omit καὶ with N. A. B*. C.; Lange and Tisch. (1859) retain (as above) with N. B*. P., Vulg.—E. R. C.]

<sup>17</sup> Ver. 7. The first half of this verse is omitted in A. C. [P.], etc., and is discarded by Lach. Codd. N. B. and versions [Vulg., Cop., Æth.] give it. The omission is to be explained by the repetition καὶ ἰδοὺ. [Alford, Treg., Tisch. retain. Against such authorities the Am. Ed. dares not remove the sentence from the text, although he regards the internal evidence as favoring the judgment of Lachmann.—E. R. C.]

<sup>18</sup> Ver. 7. [Crit. Eds. insert λαόν with N. A. B*. C. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>19</sup> Ver. 8. The reading αὐτὸν in acc. with A. B*. C. etc.

<sup>20</sup> Ver. 8. Several unimportant variations here. Tisch. [Alford, Treg.] gives οὗ οὐ γέγραπται τὸ ὄνομα κ. τ. λ. [Some Eds. give τὰ ὀνόματα with N. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>21</sup> Ver. 8. [It is doubtful from the text whether or not a comma should here be introduced. Lange omits. For a presentation of his views and those of other commentators, see under Exp. in DETAIL, pp. 268 sq.—E. R. C.]

<sup>22</sup> Ver. 10. For various readings, see Tisch. and Disterd. [Lach. (ed. maj.), Alford, Tisch., with A., give εἰ τις εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν, εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν ὄντας; Treg., with N. B*. C., gives εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν only once; Lange seems to adopt the reading of the Rec.—E. R. C.]

<sup>23</sup> Ver. 10. [Treg. and Tisch. give ἀποκτενεῖ δὲ with B*. C. P.; Alford reads ἀποκταθῆναι with A.—E. R. C.]

<sup>24</sup> Ver. 12. καὶ ποιῇ, N. A. C. [P.], Lach. [So Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th ed.). Tisch. (1859), καὶ ἐποιεῖ with B*.—E. R. C.]

<sup>25</sup> Ver. 13. [WILKES writes, § 53. "In the defective diction of the Apocalypse, ἵνα is apparently used once, xiii. 13, for ὥστε or ὥς, after an adjective including the notion of intensity: magna miracula, i. e., tam magna, ut, etc." The Am. Ed. must express his dissatisfaction with this unprecedented, though generally accepted, translation—the more especially, as, in his judgment, the ordinary force of the particle gives a good sense.—E. R. C.]

<sup>26</sup> Ver. 14. The striking reading ὅς in A. B*. C. [P.], is probably based upon an exegetical interpretation of the Beast. [N. L. etc., give ὅς. The reading ὅς, which Alford, Treg., Tisch. adopt, is clearly to be preferred.—E. R. C.]

he had power [it was given to him] to give life [or a spirit<sup>27</sup> (πνεῦμα)] unto the image of the beast [wild-beast], that the image of the beast [wild-beast] should both speak, and cause that<sup>28</sup> as many as would [should]<sup>29</sup> not worship the image of the beast [wild-beast] should be killed [slain]. And he causeth [maketh] all, both [om. both—ins. the] small and [ins. the] great, [ins. and the] rich and [ins. the] poor, [ins. and the] free and [ins. the] bond, to receive [om. to receive—ins. that they should give<sup>30</sup> them] a mark in [on] their right hand, or in [on] their foreheads [forehead]: and [or om. and]<sup>31</sup> that no man might [one should be able to] buy or sell, save [but] he that had [hath] the mark, or [om. or] the name of the beast [wild-beast], or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast [wild-beast]: for it is the number of a man; and his number is Six hundred threescore [and sixty] and [om. and] six.<sup>32</sup>

<sup>27</sup> Ver. 15. [The Marg. Read. (†) of the B. V. is breath. This meaning is altogether unprecedented in the New Testament.—E. R. C.]

<sup>28</sup> Ver. 15. Lachmann, in acc. with A. [P. 7, Vulg. et and Paul.], reads ita before sed. [This reading is also given by Treg.; Alford brackets; Tisch. and Lange omit with P. O. Am., etc. The Am. Ed. has not felt at liberty to alter the generally accepted reading, although he is inclined to adopt the opinion of Lach. and Treg. If the ita be genuine, the translation will be, "the image of the wild-beast should both speak and act, in order that as many as," etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>29</sup> Ver. 15. [Lach. Tisch. (1859), Alford, Treg. read πορευόμενοι, with A. B. P.; Tisch. (8th ed.), οὐκ with P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>30</sup> Ver. 16. [Crit. Eds. give δωρεῖ with P. A. B. P. C. P.; 1 reads δωρεῖ; 7, δωρεῖς; 26, 95, ἀνδωρεῖ.—E. R. C.]

<sup>31</sup> Ver. 17. Lachmann, in acc. with C, omits the καὶ without sufficient reason. [Tisch. (8th ed.) omits with P. C. & Tol., etc.; Tisch. (1859), Treg. give it with P. A. B. P. Vulg. (except Tol.), etc.; Alford brackets.—E. R. C.]

<sup>32</sup> Ver. 18. [Tisch. Treg. read χίττ with B. 1, 6, etc. (Tischendorf's Ed. of B. gives χίττ); Alford, ἐκατόντα ἑξακκ with A. Cod. P., instead of the ἐκατόντα of A., reads -αι; and P. 7, -αι. Cod. C. gives ἐκατόντα ἑκα ἑξ.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

PREFATORY REMARKS ON THE RELATION OF CH. XIII. TO CH. XVII.—It has already been remarked that the figure of Satan and his seven heads (ch. xii.) must not be identified with the figure of Antichrist and his seven heads. Neither must the history of the rule of Antichristianity, primarily set forth as a whole (ch. xiii.), be identified with the judgment upon the first third of Antichristianity, the Harlot, (ch. xvii.). Consequently, the details also (chs. xiii. and xvii.), especially the parallels of the seven heads, may, indeed, be regarded as similarities, but are not to be treated as identities. This remark applies particularly to the deadly wounding of one of the Beast's heads (ch. xiii.) and the temporary disappearance of the Beast (ch. xvii.)—a disappearance certainly resultant upon the wounding. All those combinations that are grounded upon the identity of these two items, which are connected as cause and effect, fall to pieces when subjected to a more precise and circumstantial exegesis. It is impossible to overlook the antithesis, that, in the total history of Antichristianity (ch. xiii.), the False Prophet, the spirit of a fallen Hierarchy, is subservient to the Antichristian political World-power, whilst in the history of partial Antichristianity (ch. xvii.), the Woman rides upon the Beast, although the Beast at last destroys the Harlot. Comp. Ebrard, pp. 377 and 456.

Above all, we would remind our readers of the fact that we have another entire cyclical world-picture before us, viewed under the aspect of Antichristianity; it is no mere petty section of Roman history, comprised, as some would have it, between the years 1 and 70 A. D. Further, the following definite antithesis is distinctly evident: As the Beast out of the sea represents the whole of historical worldly political Antichristianity, as embraced, however, in its final consummate appearance—so, likewise, the Woman, contrasted with the Beast, is not, so to speak, a particle of the Kingdom of God, still less the Jewish people, but the whole Old and New Testament Kingdom of God, and this too with reference to the final form of the Old Testament, in which the Mother appears, and to the final form of the New Testament Church, which divides into the two forms of Harlot and Bride, finally appearing as the Bride.

Our Earth-picture is in three sections. In the first, the devilish essence has obtained no human shape, but already operates by summoning to its aid human masses which unconsciously serve it. In the second section, it has fashioned an organ unto itself in the appearance of the Beast out of the sea. In the third section, it has even made a Beast from the earth, a production of the old Theocratic order of things, subservient to the sea-monster, and hence, indirectly, ministrant to itself.

The beginning of the first section plainly shows that here the Earth-picture commences which corresponds with the Heaven-picture, for in ver. 14 ver. 6 is repeated. Here, however, we have the amplifactory statement: to the Woman were given the two wings of the great eagle, that she might fly into the wilderness. The great eagle may be relatively understood of worldly powers, if the context require such an apprehension, as for instance in Ezek. xvii. 8, 7. When, however, the term is as free from limitation as we find it here, our thoughts are led back to the redemption of Israel from Egypt, when Jehovah bare the people on eagle wings (Ex. xix. 4); and we are the more forcibly reminded of that event, since Israel, also, found refuge from the pursuing Pharaoh far out in the wilderness. If Jehovah Himself is not to be here understood, the thing signified is His redemptive providence, in its powerful, swift and lofty flight, unattainable for all earthly pursuers. The fact that the wings must be two in number requires no elucidation; it is, however, somewhat remarkable that the Woman receives the wings herself and becomes a flying Woman. Thus did the young Church of Christ fly from Jerusalem to Pella; and thus in every subsequent persecution it has fled deeper into the wilderness of solitude, of concealment, of renunciation, of foreign countries;* thus it finally fled literally into the wilderness of hermitry and monasticism. For the wilderness forms, in general, a contrast to the worldly region of secular life, just as the wilderness into which the Eagle bore Israel formed a contrast to Egypt. The Middle Ages afford a symbolical representation of these flights, in the development of monkish forms, of constantly increasing strictness, in face of every new advance of secularization;—back of these figures, however, lies the fact that the Church has ever fled deeper into the hiding-place of world-renunciation. Here is her place, where she is nourished. And how she has been nourished with heavenly strength, has been shown by the Mystics of the Middle Ages as well as by the Martyrs of the Reformation.

The time of her sojourn in the wilderness, or the time of the Church of the Cross, is, as has already been observed, obscurely designated in a twofold manner—by the number  $3\frac{1}{2}$  and by the indefinite form of times.

Thus she is nourished from the face of the Serpent. Even the serpent of hierarchical despotism scarce observed how the Church was nourished inwardly with powers of the world to come [Heb. vi. 5].

But the abode of the Woman does not remain hidden from the Serpent, who casts out of his mouth water as a river, that he might cause her to be carried away. In the parable of the mustard seed, Christ had described the development of the seed into a tree-like shrub, which the birds would mistake for a real tree, and make their nests in its branches; John could already see the beginnings of the fulfillment of this prophecy in the pressing of foreign elements into the living Church. In his quality of Seer, however, he had the broadest and most extensive view of this whole inundation of the Church by the Græco-Roman world, by the migrations of nations, by its baptism with many peoples. For it is an irrefragable fact that waters are indicative of surging national life (Ps. xciii. 3, 4); consequently, the river here denotes a violent flux of national life against the essential Church, and the casting of this water out of the mouth of the Dragon forces the inference of a diabolical background to this tremendous onset. We cannot, of course, deny the fact that an opposite attraction to the light had its share in influencing the Germanic peoples, especially, in their migrations; this, however, does not invalidate a truth clearly unfolded in the migrations of the Huns, the Vandals, the Turks, and the Mongols, in their perilous onset against the Church. And, moreover, the Germanic nations were urged on and swept away by the dark lust of conquest of the Huns. But the earth helped the Woman by opening her mouth and swallowing up the river. It was the earth as a Divine institution, in the double form of the pedagogical Church of the Law, striking back into the Old Testament, and the Christian State, which subdued the flood of barbarous nations through the medium of a Theocratic education.* Numbers xvi. 32 can hardly, merely on account of the similarity of expression, be cited here as analogous.

The rage of the Evil One is, indeed, only heightened by this discomfiture; it, however, takes another direction. The Dragon, angry concerning the Woman, departs to make war "with the remnant of her seed." These are designated as truly pious persons; they keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ. The explanations of them as brethren of Christ, or Gentile Christians, or Zionites, are not satisfactory. It would seem nearer the truth to say that they are the individual Christians who, collectively, form the Woman (Bleek et al.), if the text did not make a decided distinction between the Woman, or the Kingdom of God in its visible appearance, and these isolated children of the same. And here it is a natural proceeding to glance back from the striking expression of ἄνθρωποι (comp. ch. iii. 2) to the significant typical expression of the Prophets: the remnant ([residue, remainder] שְׁאֵרִית שָׁמַר; Is. x. 20–22; xi. 11; xxviii. 5; Amos ix. 12; Micah ii. 12; iv. 7; vii. 18, etc.). There has been a storm of judgment, in the assaults of the Dragon upon the Woman, at the end of which there is but a remnant of individual Christians left, who are true servants of God and martyrs of Christ. The Woman has had to submit to an alliance with the earth; the essential Church has had to consent to an alliance with the Theocratic ecclesiastico-political form. In consequence of this alliance, the Church has itself become more akin to the earth, and a distinction has arisen between her visible totality and her living children. Subsequently she is herself partially represented by the earth. In the last time, therefore, Satan instinctively directs his attacks only upon the vital Christianity of individual Christians. He may gain many a victory in combat with them; for how many separatists and sects fall a prey to diabolical deceit. As a whole, however, they resist him, and this urges him on in the direction of the sea, the social life of the nations.

Accordingly, he stands upon the sand of the sea. Here he appears to vanish—only, however, to arise in his moral creature, the Beast out of the sea, positive Antichristianity. The fact that here, as well as Dan. vii. 2 sqq., the sea represents the life of the nations, is proved not only by the consistent import of this symbol, but also by the agreement of the idea in respect of the ascending Beast. The fundamental thought is this—that always a demonic ruling power issues from a spiritual anarchy of excited national life, and rests thereupon. It does not follow from this that we already have to do with a democratic form of Antichristianity. The decisive passage where we are to seek for light is the scene ch. xvi. 19. After the out-pouring of the seventh Vial of wrath, the one great city, Sodom-Egypt (ch. xi. 8), is divided into three * Christians as emigrants to Bohemia, Poland, Germany, Prussia, America—a long story. See M. tt. x. 23.

* In connection with the general fulfillment of this prophecy, reference may be made to the slaughter of the Huns, the victory of Charles Martel, and, in general, to the triumphs of Christendom in the East and West over Mohammedanism.

parts, and the one judgment branches into three judgments—the judgment upon specific Babylon, executed by the ten kings (chs. xvii., xviii.); the judgment upon the ten kings, executed through the Parousia of Christ (ch. xix.); and the judgment upon Gog and Magog as the host of Satan, executed through the intervention of God with fire from Heaven (ch. xx. 9). Hence it is evident that in the present bestial figure, those three potencies are still undivided—Antichristian absolute despotism, democracy and anarchy. That the decidedly worldly character of the Beast is expressed, is evidenced by his coherence with the Danielic world-monarchies; and, no less, by his hostile antithesis to the Theocratico-churchly Woman, and his distinction from the False Prophet from the earth. Still, the three ground-forms of Antichristianity already peep forth from our unitous figure, and among them, of course, the first ground-form, Babylon, appears. That a great Beast of prey is intended, is evident from the attributes of the Beast as well as from his peculiar designation (θηριον not ζῷον). With these attributes, he appears as a unitous compound of the Danielic beasts, yet in an original modification. The ten horns of the fourth Danielic Beast come in view here. In the stead of the four Beasts, however, we have the one Beast, and that not with four, but with seven heads, because here the centre of gravity falls in the New Testament time, beyond the vision of Daniel. The Beast has, moreover, become civilized with the times. In the vision of Daniel, the lion occupies the foreground; here, the general aspect of the Beast is pied, like the less formidable leopard—variegated with hierarchic and despotic colors. Of the Danielic bear, the Johannean Beast has retained the ursine feet, on account of his ungainly appearance, or his fatal embraces. Of the lion, the mouth remains (see 1 Pet. v. 8). Thus compounded, he is still more of a monster than the fourth Danielic Beast; and his monstrosity is still further increased by the fact of his union of the seven spirit-like and apparently holy heads with ten horns of worldly authority—a disproportion which distinctly proclaims that his authority is to be regarded as bestial arbitrariness, and not as reposing upon actual spirit-might; this fact is also evident from the circumstance that he has set his crowns not on his heads, but, more shamelessly than Satan himself, on his horns.

On the other hand, the heads have on them names of blasphemy, different forms of rebellion against the Divine-human government of God, and against the God-man Himself (Dan. vii.; 2 Thess. ii.).

The Dragon seems desirous of being completely merged in this his representative. He gives him (the manner of the giving is intimated John xiii. 27) his magical power, i. e. his lying power; his throne or his terrific ruler-glory, intimidating to all that is cowardly and base on Earth; and his authority as a ruler (see Matt. iv. 9; 2 Cor. iv. 4).

Manifestly, this collective appearance of Antichristianity reaches back into the Old Testament; in this it resembles the collective appearance of the Kingdom of God, in the form of the Woman (ch. xii). As, however, the main history of the Woman falls in the New Testament time, so it is with the full revelation of Antichristianity, which even tapers at last into the consummate figure of Antichrist (vers. 17, 18).

And now we come to the hardest knot of the Book. The point of departure for our consideration is the mark, or recognition-sign (χάραγμα), the real symbolum of the congregation of the Beast. Every one who chooses to belong to this congregation must bear this sign about him, either on his forehead or on his hand. After the analogy of branded slaves, he must bear the Antichristian slave-mark on himself as a sign that he belongs to the Beast—indirectly to the Dragon—and that he has not fallen under social excommunication, like the confessors of Christ. Now is this mark to be apprehended literally or figuratively? The particulars seem to favor the literal apprehension of it. Either on the forehead or on the hand—either in ordinary writing or in number-writing.

Forehead and hand, however, are themselves intelligible symbols; and, consequently, the sign on the forehead seems to denote the Theocratic impiety of open confession of the prince of enmity to God and Christ, whilst the sign on the hand is apparently significant of the practical impiety of open atheistical audaciousness; thus a contrast is formed, as if the complete dogmatics and ethics of Satanic superstition and unbelief were intended.

But, though the spiritual deportment is the main thing, the instantaneous recognizability of the spiritual state is conditioned on a definite symbolum. This symbolum consists of the Antichristian party-name, corresponding to the generic name of Christian. The devil-worshipper calls himself after the name of the Beast who rules him; either plainly, without circumlocution, or in numeric writing.

In the declaration: here is wisdom—however, it cannot be meant that the Seer designs depositing here in a riddle the central point of all the wisdom of revelation. The like expression recurs, more plainly, in ch. xvii. 9: Here is the understanding that possesses [is master of] wisdom—in accordance with what follows after, the skillful, holy, intelligent ability to recognize the Antichristian power, or rightly to apply the Apocalyptic sign to the corresponding historic phenomenon. In this, therefore, wisdom will approve itself. Wisdom alone will not answer; understanding alone would be still further from the mark. But whosoever has the right understanding of wisdom will reckon the number of the Beast, or transpose the ideal marks of the Beast into historic marks.

The Seer next furnishes the key. The number of the Beast is, in the first place, the number of an unknown man. It runs through a line of precursory Antichrists down to the last specifically consummated Antichrist. The standing sign, however, is the demonic side of Antichrist, and this is signalized by the number six hundred sixty-six. By an absolute unreprieve and toil, by the absolute denial of the approaching Sabbath or Golden Age, and by an absolute aimlessness and abortiveness, or self-consumption, we are to recognize the features of Antichrist. Where these appear in demonic perfection, there is Antichrist (comp. Is. xlviii. 22; lvii. 21; lxvi. 24). To compute the number of the Beast means, therefore, to determine the human unknown Antichrist in accordance with the stationary and revealed traits of the demonic nature of Antichrist, with the understanding of wisdom (not the understanding of a prying and calculating curiosity).*

Between the general form of Antichristianity and its summing up in the last Antichrist, a highly significant consideration presents itself. One of the heads of the Beast appears as wounded to death; but the deadly wound becomes whole again. Such a wounding could proceed only from Christianity. We must, however, carefully distinguish the fact, that Christ Himself, in the kingdom of spirit, has bruised the serpent's head (the life-principle of the seven heads)—from the fact that historic Christianity inflicts a deadly wound upon the Antichristian world-power in the distinct head of the pagan-Roman world-monarchy,—a wound which, in this present world's history, can be healed. This item coincides precisely with the apparent vanishment of the Beast that was and is not and shall be, as represented by the seventh head (ch. xvii. 8-10.—See Int., pp. 25 sq.). Since that healing, all the Earth has been wondering after the Beast. Since within Christianity itself an Antichristian power has unfolded in many and diverse forms, having even partially matured its principles, the generality of men, especially such as are hangers on of authority à tout prix, have become accustomed to divide their hearts, and at the rupture of light [truth] and falsehood, right and might, with superstition and cowardice to pay homage to the lying power, making, for the most part, only symbolical reverences to Christianity. This is worshipping the Beast, and it is also, indirectly, a subtle devil-service—a worshipping of the Dragon. For that which has converted Satan into an Abri-man, an evil deity, for such men, is the fact that he has given power to the Beast; this he has accomplished by means of an impious policy of craft and violence—a policy which, starting from Italy especially, attained such fearful terroristic development in the Middle Ages. In reference to the Dragon, they worship Godless principles; in reference to the Beast, they worship his incomparableness and irresistibility. Vast pomp and inexorable hardness compose the social cement which, ever more and more, threatens to convert the majority of men into an idea-less, anti-ideal mass—the method which would succeed in giving mankind an animal training, were it not that it has a Divine kernel before which all the might of Satan must be confounded. So secure is Divine Providence in face of the Beast, that it gives him a mouth for all boasting and blasphemy, i. e., for all self-exaltation and derision of Divine truth, of Christian principles. For precisely this is the Divine method of sifting, as exhibited in the history of the world; thus the elect must become manifest, and thus the chaff must be separated from the wheat. To this end, therefore, authority is given to him, power to do what seems good to him for forty-two months. This, again, is the whole time of the Church of the cross—not, however, in the form of times or of days, but in the form of months [moons], like the abandonment of the outer court to the Gentiles (ch. xi. 2); the greatest vicissitudes and fluctuations thus being indicated. Meanwhile, this Antichristianity is perfecting itself against the end. Finally, there is an open manifestation of audacity; the Beast blasphemes God, and that in a threefold manner: he blasphemes His name, or revealed religion; His tabernacle, or His vital, simple, unadorned Church; and His children, the men of the Spirit [or men of spirit, i. e., spiritually-minded men], who dwell in Heaven: in his blaspheming against them that dwell in Heaven, a blasphemy against the hope of a hereafter is involved. It is also given him even to make war with the saints and to overcome them. For the combat is conducted before the undiscerning, appearance-seeking and party-spirited world, and here, almost invariably, it is the Stentor voice, arrogance and false pathos that decide; and the result is all the more certain since extraordinary magical and terroristic aids are on the side of the Beast, extending even to all terrors of violence and tricks of craft. Thus there is vouchsafed him an extension of authority over every tribe, and people, and tongue, and nation. Now it is an unmistakable fact that this ideally unitous might has hitherto, in its actual exercise, been only approximately unitous, although the phenomena of the gradual realization of such a unity occasionally appear in formidable powers. But with the developments of the Antichristian might, corresponds the homage of all who dwell upon the earth, the true slaves of the old ordinances and the old earth, further characterized as those whose names are not written in the Book of Life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. The meaning of this is—they lack the Divine trait of a believing aptitude for suffering, of willingness to suffer for the truth, to suffer with Christ.

The highly significant words now following, to which the arousing challenge is prefixed, "if any man hath an ear, let him hear," may primarily conduce to the comfort of believers amid the persecutions which the Beast prepares for them. The Old Testament law of the strictest retribution, in spite of that misunderstanding which regards it as abrogated in the social affairs of life, because it is thus abrogated, by a higher law, in the Kingdom of Love, of personal relations, re-appears at the close of the New Testament in all its freshness, nay, in sharper outlines than before. We refer our readers to the original text and the attempt of the translation to reproduce it.* The retribution will correspond in each case to the fault.

* The verb [ἀποδοῦναι] means not merely to reckon, but also to judge (pass sentence), decide, adjudge. We have already rejected the unsymbolical, though usual, hypothesis of an ordinary number. Such an hypothesis fails to recognize the symbolical character of the Apocalypse. It is an impossibility that the Seer should have regarded it as a mark of Christian wisdom, and that in an extraordinary degree, either to propose or to decipher such a numeric puzzle. In ch. xvii. 9 likewise, wisdom will approve itself, not in refinements of calculation, but in a religious-moral judgment, aided by a reference to Old Testament symbolism.

* [The translation of Lange is: "Wenn jemand eine Gefangenschaft betreibt, der wird sich in die Gefangenschaft"]

Believers are to comfort themselves with these words in their sorrows. The words are, also, however, designed for their instruction, for even well-meaning, pious zeal has, in manifold ways, violated the law of the patience [endurance] of the saints. Often are the sufferings of a later Christian generation expiations of ancient trespasses, committed in a sphere in which the patience [endurance] and the faith of the saints alone win the victory. Here appears the vital law which lies at the foundation of the patience and faith of the saints. The more prominence is given to this law, inasmuch as just these excesses of pious zeal to which we have referred, are connected with the contrast which now comes to view with the appearance of the second Beast, that arises from the earth. This Beast from the earth, the supreme issue of the spirit of corrupt theocratic authority, the spiritual extract of the fallen hierarchy, is a still more hateful monster than the Beast out of the sea. He is personified baseness, for he denies his origin, the consecrated earth of God. He is personified hypocrisy, for he has two horns like a lamb, and he speaks like a dragon; he is, therefore, still worse than the Beast out of the sea, in Satanic falseness, in Satanic hate. He is, likewise, personified hollowness, in that he begins to imitate the deeds of the first Beast. Finally, he is personified reprobacy, in that he becomes an eye-servant of the first Beast, changing from a prophet of God into a prophet of Antichrist. The prototype of such "arch-rogues" was Judas, when he became subservient to the enemies of Christ, himself excelling them in depravity.* Even in earlier Judaism such traitors made their appearance, especially in the time of the Maccabees, when Simon, Jason, Menelaus and the like figured (2 Macc. iv.). In reality, Caiaphas, in his relation to the Romans, belongs to this class. Throughout the Christian ages such perfidies have been repeated: there was a rank growth of them in the French revolution in particular. Even our own time betrays a peculiar disposition to the production of such subjects. The approach to the bridge of treason is, however, visible at all times in such tendencies as seek to obliterate, as far as possible, the contrast between God and the world, sin and grace, inwardness and outward show. But at all events, the master of false prophecy is yet to come—the vice-Antichrist, acting as the deputy [Scherge] of the head Antichrist, and seeking to save at least his thirty pieces of silver out of the wreck of his former system. Thus, therefore, the False Prophet enters the service of Antichrist; his office, henceforth, is to gain adherents for his master. He it is who also prepares the earth for apostasy. A special motive which he urges hinein. Wenn jemand mit dem Schwert tödten will, der muss selber (selbst) mit dem Schwert getödtet sein;" which may thus be rendered: "If any one driveth a captivity, he driveth himself into captivity. If any one will kill with the sword, he must himself (his very self) be killed with the sword."—E. R. C.]

* Here we have a striking Johannine trait. Not one in the circle of the disciples of Jesus penetrated so early and so deeply the demonic inclination to treason as John. And thus, doubtless, Judas became for him the type of the False Prophet. The way in which he several times strikes upon the idea of making fire fall from Heaven, is likewise characteristic of the Son of Thunder.

to induce men to become worshippers of the Beast, is the fact that his deadly wound is healed. This, in his sense, signifies that the operation of Christianity is exhausted—that Christianity has outlived itself—Biblical, pristine Christianity is at an end. This false, counterfeit lamb does great signs, and would even, in appearance, imitate the former Church-ban by a ban of nature, and make fire fall from Heaven. Here, especially, we perceive the heavenly integrity of the former Son of Thunder, who once desired to make fire fall from Heaven upon a Samaritan city. He now knows to what such a proceeding would lead, and knows that God has reserved to Himself the right in the final judgment to let fire fall from Heaven on the Satanic mob (ch. xx.). The signs, however, which the false lamb really executes, to the seduction of men, will be lying signs, like the cause which he serves—or, at all events, grandiose magical arts.* The greatest sign is the infatuation of men into making an image to the Beast—to the Beast, moreover, as presenting the mockery of Christ's resurrection, as having been wounded to death, and as having revived again—i. e., to the invincible, immortal Beast. It is a slight reminder of the sin of Aaron, that the men must make the image, but the False Prophet himself gives it a spirit, so that the image of the Beast can speak. Thus, in fine, the theory, science, poetry, and art of Antichristianity speak just as does this Beast himself in his practical shape. The declaration that the tendency of the image was to cause that all who would not worship the Beast should be killed, is doubtless to be taken as referring to social death; and matters even arrive at such a pass that those who refuse their countenance to the Beast are, by his godless company, who have adopted an absolutely anti-symbolical symbol, completely excluded from social intercourse, as indicated by buying and selling. Thus there is already prepared, by the world, that separation which Christ, at His coming, shall judicially consummate.

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

[ELLIOTT: The dejected Dragon (Satan) persecutes the Woman (the true, primitive, orthodox, catholicly united Church), also fallen from Heaven (her first figured state of elevation and glory), by inciting against her (1) Arian emperors (Constantius, A. D. 337-361; Valens, A. D. 364-378); (2) temptations to superstition: (3) the Arian-Pagan Gothic flood (see below). The flight into the wilderness indicates a change, not of place, but of state; it implies "the faithful Church's (gradual) loss of its previous character of Catholicity or Universality, its invisibility in respect of true Christian public worship and destitution of all ordinary means of spiritual sustenance." (For the period of the Wilderness-state, ch. xii. 14, see below with ch. xiii. 5.) The two wings of the great eagle, the assisting and protecting influence of the Eastern and Western divisions of the great, eagle-symbolized, Roman Empire united under Theodosius the Great; these wings were given to her: Theodosius was not only a Church-member, but appears to have been a truly pious man.* The flood cast out of the serpent's mouth, the Arian-Pagan Gothic invasions (a double idea suggested: (1) what flows from the mouth is doctrine, good or bad, Prov. xviii. 4; xv. 28; (2) floods are a constant Scripture metaphor for the invasion of hostile nations, Isa. viii. 7; Jer. xli. 7; Ezek. xxvi. 3; Nahum i. 8, etc.; see also, with the double sense, Ps. cxliv. 7); such was the fury of this flood as "to sweep away all the political bulwarks of the Roman authority before it; and thus might well have been deemed sufficient to sweep away also the Christian Church and Christianity itself, the professed religion of the Empire." The earth helped, etc.: "In those continuous and bloody wars of which the Western world had been the theatre, the barbarous invading population was so thinned, so absorbed, as it were, into the land they had invaded, that it needed their incorporation as one people with the conquered to make up the necessary constituency of Kingdoms. And in this incorporation, not only was much of their original institutions, customs and languages absorbed, but their religion altogether. . . . So the Arianism of the invading flood, as well as its Paganism, was seen no more. It was absorbed, as it were, into the soil, and had disappeared." The Beast from the sea (ch. xiii. 1) is one with (1) the Beast from the Abyss (ch. xvii. 8); (2) the little horn of Daniel's fourth wild Beast (Dan. vii. 7, 8, 19-24); (3) St. Paul's Man of sin (2 Thess. ii. 1-12); (4) St. John's Antichrist (1 John ii. 18-22; iv. 3; 2 John 7), and symbolizes the PAPAL EMPIRE (the sea representing the flood of invading Goths); the seven heads signify (1) seven hills (of Rome), ch. xvii. 9; (2) "the number of different successive governing heads of bestial character—forms of government—which (not another Beast or Empire, but) the same individual seven-hilled Roman Empire would be under from first to last, from its early origin to its final destruction; there being here premised, however, . . . that the seventh head visible on the Apocalyptic Beast would be, in order of existence, its eighth (ch. xvii. 11),† they (five having fallen at the time of the Apocalypse, xvii. 10) represent (a) Kings, (b) Consuls, (c) Dictators, (d) Decemvirs, (e) Military Tribunes, (f) the στέφανος crowned Emperors beginning with Augustus (the head then existing), (g) the αὐτοκράτορες Emperors beginning with Diocletian,* (this head received its deadly wound in the edict of Theodosius, suppressing Pagan worship, which edict, according to Gibbon, ch. xxviii., "inflicted a deadly wound on Paganism," but revived or sprouted again as an eighth head, viz.:) (h) the Popedom—professedly Christian, but essentially heathen: the ten horns represent the ten kingdoms into which the Western Empire was divided (and which gave their power and strength unto the Beast, ch. xvii. 12, 13), viz., (1) the Anglo-Saxons, (2) the Franks of Central France, (3) Alleman-Franks of Eastern France, (4) the Burgundian Franks of South-eastern France, (5) the Visigoths, (6) the Suevi, (7) the Vandals, (8) the Ostro-Goths in Italy, (9) the Bavarians, (10) the Lombards; (with changes, "the number ten will be found to have been observed on from time to time, as that of the Western Roman or Papal Kingdoms"): the Beast and the ten horns receive their power at one and the same time (μία ὥρα, ch. xvii. 12), i. e., from about A. D. 430-530; three horns plucked up before the Beast (Dan. vii. 8), the subjection of the Vandals, Ostrogoths and Lombards to the temporal power of the Pope (A. D. 538-755, in which last year was Pepin's donation of the Exarchate of Ravenna—a donation confirmed and enlarged by Charlemagne, A. D. 774, which completed Peter's Patrimony); blasphemies, as Christ's Vicar assuming all his offices as Prophet, Priest and King; worshipped (ch. xiii. 4, comp. 2 Thess. ii. 4), the Pope seats himself "on the day of his consecration upon God's high Altar under the dome of St. Peter's, there to receive the adoration of his Cardinals," and "in the eighth century it was Gregory the Second's boast to the Greek Emperor, 'All the kings of the West reverence the Pope as a God on Earth'" head visible on the Beast, though visibly the seventh, was, in point of chronological succession, the eighth. It was thus, indeed, that the Beast, under its new and last head, became what the Angel called it, 'The Beast that was, and is not, and yet is' (καὶ ἡνίκα ἔστιν καὶ οὐκ ἔστιν—and shall be present), ch. vii. 8; it having by that deadly wound been annihilated in its immediately preceding draconic form; and through the fresh-sprouted head, revived in its new or ten-horned bestial form. I said the next preceding draconic form, because it is stated, that the Dragon yielded to it (the Beast), on its emergence from the sea, 'his power and his throne and great authority.' So that the transition from the draconic state of Rome and its empire to the ten-horned bestial was direct, and without any other form or head intervening, according to the Apocalyptic representation." ELLIOTT, vol. iii., p. 115.—E. R. C.]

* [See Add. Comment on ch. xiii. 13, p. 270.—E. R. C.]

* [Elliott calls attention to the fact, that although the title of the sovereign remained the same, the nature of his office was entirely changed after Diocletian. He writes: "On turning to Gibbon . . . and glancing at the Index of Contents, ch. xiii., . . . both the fact and the symbol that we seek arrest the eye connectedly, even as if placed there for the very purpose of illustrating the Apocalyptic enigma: 'Diocletian assumes the diadem, and introduces the Persian ceremonial. New form of administration.'—The notice thus summarily given is explained and enlarged on in the history (ch. xlii.). The transition of the Roman Empire from its imperial or sixth head, introduced by Augustus, to a new and even<sup>h</sup> introduced by Diocletian, is thus distinctly declared: 'Like Augustus, Diocletian may be considered as the founder of a new empire,' and the change is then illustrated somewhat fully, as affecting alike the official dignity of the Prince governing, and the constitution and administration of the Empire governed."—E. R. C.]

* [First, to him (Theodosius), alone of Roman Emperors from Constantine to Charlemagne, the title has attached—deceitfully attached, to use Gibbon's expression—of 'THEODOSIUS THE GREAT.' Next it was his lot, alone of Roman Emperors after his bipartition by Valentinian, to unite the two divisions of the Empire, the Eastern and the Western, which now, let it be noted, in the very coinage of the Empire seemed to be figured as wings, under his own sway. Further, it was pre-eminently his character to use all this, his imperial power, success and greatness, as a protector and nursing father to the orthodox Church of Christ. As Gibbon says, 'Every victory of his contributed to the triumph of the Christian and catholic faith.' Indeed, not the professing orthodox Church alone (contradistinctively to the Arian) might claim Theodosius as a friend and protector; but Christ's true Church also, included in the former. For none, I think, can read his history without the impression of his real personal piety. See his character as sketched by Milner."—ELLIOTT, Vol. III., pp. 55 sq.]

[The patent objection to this exposition is, that it is difficult to conceive how the influence of Theodosius could have assisted the flight of the Church into the wilderness as that symbol is explained by Elliott; it would seem as though his influence must rather have tended to an escape from it.—E. R. C.]

† [His (the Angel's) meaning in this (xvii. 11) is easily seen, in so far as the symbol itself is concerned, by reference to the statement . . . of ch. xiii. 3, that one of his heads appeared to have been wounded to death by a sword, but that his deadly wound was healed. For a fresh head had evidently sprouted up in place of the preceding one cut down—a new seventh in place of the old seventh; so that the last

(Gibbon; see also Secular and Ecc. Histories). The two-horned Beast represents the Papal Clergy united under the Pope in his ecclesiastical character as Western Patriarch, and acting so as to support his usurpation as Vicar of Christ: (1) he has horns like a lamb, and speaks as a dragon, i. e. under pretence of preaching the Gospel, he elaborates a denial of Christ; (2) he exercises all the power and authority of the first Beast before (i. e. as responsible to) him, the grand characteristic (assumed) power of the Pope—that of the keys—is delegated to the clergy; (3) signs, the assumption by the clergy of the power to work miracles; (4) *causing them that dwell on the Earth to worship, the entire influence of the clergy exercised to support the usurped claims of the Pope. The Image of the Beast symbolizes the Papal General Councils, which virtually represented the Head of Antichristendom,* (1) it was the two-horned Beast (the papal clergy) that said to them who dwell on the Roman Earth, that they should make the image (constitute a General Council); (2) it was given to this Beast to give breath to the image, etc.—it was the peculiarity of the General Councils that on matters ecclesiastical the clergy should alone have voice*; (3) the Image was made to be worshipped—these Councils claimed to pronounce infallibly on questions of religion and faith; (4) the Image caused as many as would not worship it to be put to death—the Councils anathematized and excommunicated all who would not submit to their decrees. The name is, the one suggested by Irenæus, Ἀντιχρίστος—the numerical value of the constituent letters of which is (Α, 30 + α, 1 + ρ, 800 + ε, 5 + ι, 10 + ν, 50 + ο, 70 + ς, 200 =) 666; the imposing on men the mark, etc., is causing the inhabitants of the Roman Earth to devote themselves to the Papal Antichrist, and this both in profession (forehead) and action (hand), even as soldiers to their emperor, slaves to their master, devotees to their god.—The period of the Beast's continuance as a persecuting power, ch. xiii. 5, and of the wilderness-state of the Church, ch. xii. 6, is twelve hundred and sixty prophetic days or years: the primary terminus a quo of this period is the promulgation of Justinian's Code and Decretal Epistle to the Pope, A. D. 529-538; the secondary epoch is the Decree of Phocas, A. D. 604-608; the primary concluding terminus, A. D. 1789-1793, "the epoch by which a blow was dealt to the Papal power from which it has never recovered." (In reference to the secondary concluding terminus, Elliott calls attention to the fact, that Daniel (xii. 11, 12) foretells a supplemental period of seventy-five years which he (writing in A. D. 1861) suggested was probably to be added to that terminus in A. D. 1864-8. Writing in A. D. 1868 (Postscript to Preface, Vol. I.), he claims that the Bull of the Pope for the Convocation of an Ecumenical Council, issued in that year, in that it does not invite Sovereigns to sit in that Council, is "an admission of the completed end- *ing of the period of the kings of Western Christendom spiritually subjecting the power of their kingdoms to him; that is, of the completed ending of twelve hundred and sixty years." The present he regards as the supplemental period, to close about A. D. 1943.**

BARNES: (Ch. xii. 13-17). Satan (after his failure to destroy the Church through Pagan persecutions, see p. 240), "puts forth his power and manifests his hostility in another form—that of the Papacy. . . The Church is, however, safe from that attempt to destroy it, for the Woman is represented as fleeing to the wilderness (some place of refuge—possibly the retreats of the Waldenses, deserts, monasteries, etc.), beyond the power of the enemy, and is there kept alive. Still filled with rage, though incapable of destroying the true Church itself, he turns his wrath, under the form of Papal persecutions, against individual Christians."—(Ch. xiii.) The first Beast is the one (secular) Roman power contemplated as made up of ten subordinate kingdoms, which "combined in itself all the elements of the terrible and the oppressive, which had existed in the aggregate in the other great empires that preceded it." The second Beast is the Papacy considered as a spiritual power, putting on the apparent gentleness of the

* Elliott at this point (vol. iii., p. 260 sqq.) presents an elaborate argument, of which the following is an abstract, against the Day-Day, and in favor of what he styles

THE YEAR-DAY PRINCIPLE.

I. The presumptive a priori evidence.

1. From the nature of prophetic symbols. The Apocalyptic prophecies, to which the controversy relates, are confessedly symbolic prophecies (save that of the Two Witnesses, which some contend to be literal). In such prophecies (which are pictures in miniature), it is reasonable to expect that a proportion of scale will be observed between the symbol and the thing symbolized, in time as well as in other respects.

2. From God's declared purpose of making the near approach of the consummation evident at the time of its approaching; yet, till then, so hidden as to allow of Christians always expecting it. This seems to require that, when prophesying concerning times, a chronological cypher should have been employed.

3. From the probability that this cypher would be a day for a year. We find similar cyphers employed Dan. ix. 24-27 (Elliott contends that שָׁנָה, there meaning hebdomada, when by itself, always means a week—seven days); Ezek. iv. 1-6; Analogies, Num. xiv. 34; Lev. xxv. 2-4.

II. The direct evidence.

This arises from the fact, that the periods of so many prophecies interpreted on the Year-Day principle have proved correct. He refers to his interpretations of the periods of the Barabian woe, p. 201; the Turkish woe, p. 201; the Witnesses, p. 228; the Woman travelling in birth, p. 244; and sojourning in the Wilderness, p. 260; the ten-horned Beast's time of prospering, p. 260.

III. Objections. (Only the more prominent will be mentioned.)

1. The alleged novelty of the principle as one unknown in the Church from the days of Daniel to those of Wickliffe. Answer: The fact is not as alleged. From the days of Cyprian, this principle in reference to some prophecies has been adopted.

2. The alleged discrepancies and unsatisfactoriness of Apocalyptic expositions based on this principle. Answer: Wrong applications of a principle, resulting in discrepancies, do not militate against the principle itself, if it be supported (as this is, see under II.) by manifest coincidences.

3. The alleged necessary participation of all in communion with the Church of Rome throughout twelve hundred and sixty years (many of whom we have reason to believe were true Christians) in the curse and perdition of Babylon as set forth ch. xiv. 9-11. Answer: The chronological position of the warning which contains the threatening of woe is at the very end of the period of twelve hundred and sixty years, after the fall of Babylon (xiv. 8), and therefore after the call of ch. xviii. 4.—B. & C.]

* [As to the fitness of the symbol (εἰκὼν), Elliott writes: "The figure has been applied to the chief exemplifications that history offers of national representation by deputies. Bo e. g. of the British Parliament. Says Burke: 'The virtue, spirit and essence of a House of Commons consists in its being the express image of the feelings of a nation,' " etc.—B. & C.]

lamb, but at the same time possessing the spirit of the Dragon. The deadly wound of the first Beast indicates that the Roman civil and secular power was so waning (in consequence of the invasion of the Northern hordes) as to be in danger of extinction; the healing symbolizes the restorative and preservative influence of the Church of Rome upon the secular empire. The secular power thus preserved is to continue 1260 prophetic days or years—blaspheming (by its (1) arrogant claims, (2) assumed authority in matters of conscience, (3) setting aside Divine authority, (4) impious declarations in derogation of the Divine claims); persecuting (e. g., the Waldenses, Albigenses, etc.), but at last shall (1) go into captivity,* (2) come to an end in blood. —The image of the Beast symbolizes the civil government strongly resembling the old Roman dominion, which the spiritual power of the Papacy caused to exist, depending for its vital energy on the Papacy, and in its turn, lending its aid to support the Papacy.†—In reference to the name and mark of the Beast, Barnes agrees with Elliott.

STUART: (Ch. xiii.). The first Beast symbolizes the Pagan Roman Empire; the second, the Pagan Priesthood; the deadly wound of one of the heads, the death of Nero, one of the seven Kings of Ch. xvii. 10, 11; the restoration, the belief of a reappearance of that emperor (!); ‡ the image, the statue erected to him as a god; the forty-two months, the period of the Neronic persecution (from November, A. D. 64 to June,

A. D. 68); the name, ג'ר'ן קסר, the letters of which give the number 666.

WORDSWORTH: "The Two Wings are emblems of the Two Testaments; . . . the Church flies on their pinions in her missionary course through the wilderness of this world." The flood and the help of the earth, he interprets as Elliott.—(Ch. xiii.) He agrees with Elliott in the exposition of this chapter, with the following exceptions: By the seven heads he understands (ch. xvii. 10, 11) "the kingdoms which were successively absorbed within the circle of the Roman Empire, . . . the (1) Babylonian, (2) Medo-Persian, (3) Greek, (4) Syrian, (5) Egyptian, (6) Roman Heathen Imperial . . . (7) Imperial power of Germany." By the wounding, the ceasing of the imperial power in the abdication of Augustulus—it is not said that the Head was restored, but that the wound of the Beast was healed (ver. 12), the Beast lived on in the Papacy. By the image, "the personification of the Papacy, in the visible form of the Pontiff for the time being."

ALFORD: (Ch. xii. 18-18.) The figure of the wings is taken from Old Testament expressions in reference to the flight of Israel from Egypt (Ex. xix. 4; Deut. xxxii. 11). "We must not understand (by) the Woman, the invisible spiritual Church of Christ, nor (by) her flight into the wilderness, the withdrawal of God's true servants from the eyes of the world. . . I own that considering the analogies and the language used (in reference to Israel in the desert), I am much more disposed to interpret the persecution of the Woman by the Dragon, of the various persecutions by Jews which followed the Ascension, and her flight into the wilderness, of the gradual withdrawing of the Church and her agency from Jerusalem and Judea, finally consummated by the flight to the mountains on the approaching siege. . . And then the river . . . might be variously understood—of the Roman armies which threatened to sweep away Christianity—or of the persecutions which followed the Church into her retreats, but eventually became absorbed by the civil power turning Christian—or of the Jewish nation itself, banded together against Christianity wherever it appeared, but eventually itself becoming powerless against it by its dispersion and ruin—or, again, of the influx of heretical opinions from the Pagan philosophies which tended to swamp the true faith. I confess that not one of these seems to me satisfactorily to answer the conditions; nor do we gain anything by their combination. . . As to the time indicated by the 1260 days, or 8½ years, the interpretations given have not been convincing, nor even specious." See also the extract from Alford on p. 242. He concludes his section with the words: "This latter part of the vision yet waits its clearing up."—Chap. xiii.) The first Beast is one with the four Beasts of Daniel and that of ch. xvii.; he symbolizes the aggregate of the empires of this world as opposed to Christ and His Kingdom; the seven heads are (1) Egypt, (2) Nineveh, (3) Babylon, (4) Persia, (5) Græcia, (6) Rome, (7) the Christian Empire beginning with Constantine; the wounding (with Auberlen), the conversion of the empire to Christianity, by virtue of which the Beast in his proper essence, in the fullness of his opposition

* "This is yet, in a great measure, to be fulfilled; and as I understand it, it discloses the manner in which the Papal secular power will come to an end. It will be by being subdued, so that it might seem to be made captive, and led off by some victorious host. Rome now is practically held in subjection by foreign arms, and has no true independence; perhaps this will be more and more so as its ultimate fall approaches." BARNES. (This was written A. D. 1851.)—E. K. C.]

† [Barnes finds the fulfillment of this symbol in the re-establishment of the Roman Empire under Charlemagne. He quotes the following from Gibbon, ch. xlix.: "The title of patrician was below the merit and greatness of Charlemagne; and it was only by reviving the Western empire that they could pay their obligations, or secure their establishment. By this decisive measure they would finally eradicate the claims of the Greeks; from the debasement of a provincial town the majesty of Rome would be restored; the Latin Christians would be united under a supreme head in their ancient metropolis; and the conquerors of the West would receive their crown from the successors of St. Peter. The Roman Church would acquire a solemn and respectable advocate; and, under the shadow of the Carolingian power, the bishop might exercise, with honor and safety, the government of the city." To this he adds the following remark: "All this seems as if it were a designed commentary on such expressions as these: 'And he exerciseth all the power of the first Beast, . . . saying to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image to the Beast which had the wound by a sword and did live; and he had power to give life unto the image of the Beast,' etc. He also subjoins the coronation oath of the Emperor from Sigonius: 'I, the Emperor, do engage and promise, in the name of Christ, before God and the blessed Apostle Peter, that I will be a protector and defender of this holy Church of Rome, in all things wherein I can be useful to it, so far as Divine assistance shall enable me, and so far as my knowledge and power can reach.'—E. K. C.]

‡ [Stuart devotes a long Excursus to the establishment of this opinion. He writes: "I do not say that John meant to convey the impression that Nero would actually revive, and re-appear on the stage of action; for this I do not believe. But thus much I am compelled to believe, . . . that John here recognizes, and intends that others should recognize, Nero, by pointing to an individual respecting whom reports were everywhere current, such as have been exhibited above."—E. K. C.]

to God and His saints, ceases to be; the worship, etc., "are a sort of parody on ascriptions of praise to God (Ex. xv. 11; Ps. xxxv. 10; lxxi. 19; Is. xl. 18, 25; xlv. 5, etc.): they represent to us the relapse into all the substantial elements of Paganism of the resuscitated empire:" the forty-two months, the well-known period of the agency of Antichrist. The second Beast, identical with the false Prophet of ch. xix. 20, is the reviver and upholder of the first; in reference to the first, he is (1) identical as to genus, (2) diverse in origin, (3) subsidiary in zeal and action; he symbolizes the sacerdotal persecuting power, Pagan and Christian, which, gentle in its aspect and professions, was yet cruel in its actions. The Image, the statue of the Emperor, which every where men were made to worship; "it is not so easy to assign a meaning to the giving life and speech to the Image. . . The allusion probably is to some lying wonders permitted to the Pagan priests to try the faith of God's people. We cannot help, as we read, thinking of the moving images, and winking and speaking pictures, so often employed for purposes of imposture by their far less excusable Papal successors." Vers. 16, 17 point to the commercial and spiritual interdicts which have, both by Pagan and by Papal persecutors, been laid on non-conformity. Concerning the name and number, he writes in the Prolegomena, §5, 82: "It (ἄρκενός) is beyond question the best solution that has been given; but that it is not the solution, I have a persuasion amounting to a certainty." (See also in loc.)

LORD: (Ch. xii. 13-17.) "The Dragon who followed the Woman symbolizes the Pagan priests and their abettors; . . their following after her denotes their attempt to join her society by a profession of Christianity." "The Serpent . . was not the Devil who fought with Michael, but the Monster Dragon of seven heads (see p. 242), . . . it represents the rulers of the Roman Empire from the elevation of Constantine." The gift to the Woman of the wings, denotes that supernatural aids were granted her, viz.: graces that formed a part of herself; the river, the flood of false doctrines and superstitious rites introduced by Constantine and his successors; the earth, the people generally, who eagerly embraced the adulterated religion, and who by their exulting reception of it so occupied the attention of the rulers as to allow the dissentients to escape; the retreat from the face of the serpent, the flight of the true Church to a place unknown (the Waldenses, etc.); the anger of the serpent, the continued disposition to destroy; the making war with the remnant, the persecution of isolated dissentients; the time, times, and half a time, twelve hundred and sixty years.—(Ch. xiii.) The first Beast symbolizes "the Gothic rulers who established governments in the Western Empire during the Fifth century, and their successors and subjects to the present time;" the symbols of the first part of ver. 2, that this government unites in itself the agility of the leopard, the strength of the bear, and the mercilessness and voracity of the lion; the head receiving the wound was the last—the wounding denotes the slaughter of all Christian heirs to the throne and the accession of Julian the apostate; the recovery, the restoration of the Christian succession in Jovian; the worship, etc., of vers. 3, 4, that the populace (1) entertained for their rulers awe and admiration, (2) and regarding them as having acquired the rights of the old Roman Emperors, acquiesced in their assumptions in matters of religion; the great things and blasphemy, usurpations of authority over Divine rights, laws, etc.; ver. 7, the persecutions of the Albigenses, Waldenses, etc.; vers. 9, 10 predict the slaughter and vassalage of all who should attempt to deliver themselves from religious tyranny by force (exemplified in the history of all persecuted peoples); the forty-two months denotes 1260 years of domination (the terminus a quo being about A. D. 597 or somewhat later).* The second Beast indicates the "hierarchy of the Italian Catholic Church within the Papal dominions;" the earth whence he came, the population of the empire under a settled government; the two horns, twofold rule (civil and military)—lamb-like (apparently for ornament and defence), dragon-like (aggressive, insatiable, merciless); ver. 12 (first part), that it exercises the same power (civil and military) as the first Beast, and contemporaneously (issuing and executing decrees, making war, etc.); ver. 12 (second part), the leading of the populace to submit to blasphemous usurpations of the emperors; vers. 13, 14, the pretended miracles of the priesthood. The Image symbolizes the Papal Kingdom which the priesthood established—"the union of their several national churches into a single hierarchy, and subjection of them to the Pope as their supreme legislative and judicial head, after the model of the ancient civil Empire under Constantine," etc. The Name is ἄρκενός, whose letters give the number 666. Vers. 16, 18 indicate excommunication and outlawry for non-conformity.

GLASGOW: (Ch. xii. 13-18.) Ver. 13. When Satan could not prevent the external prosperity of the Church, he diffused the poison of heresy. Ver. 14. The second flight of the Woman; the great eagle is the fourth Zōa of chap. iv; the flight to the desert indicates expatriation (in the valleys of Piedmont, etc.); the time, etc., the prophetic period of 1260 years (beginning about A. D. 607).† Vers. 15-17, as Elliott.—(Ch. xiii.)

* [Lord's EXPOSITION was published in 1847.—E. R. C.]

† [Glasgow recognizes in the Zōa "The official and representative ministrant agencies commissioned by the Lord Jesus; and comprehensively all His people, when actively serving Him for the good of man." According to him, the Lion symbolizes "that like Judah of old will be the Christian people of the Gospel age, rising paramount to and subduing all the nations of the earth; the Ox, the ministers and people of Jesus" as (1) "enforcers of persecution," (2) abounding in "works of faith and labors of love;" the Face of a Man, the "people of God as bearing the image of Christ"—especially ministers; the Flying Eagle, "three great facts realized in the agencies employed by Jesus in His Church: (1) the means and power given them of escaping from the rage of their persecuting enemies; (2) their movement to distant places in bearing the gospel message; (3) their study of the prophecies, and their having 'their life hid with Christ, the Rock of Ages.'—E. R. C.]

‡ [Glasgow remarks: "It is worthy of being noted that there is in all these, as in prophetic dates generally, a margin of three or four, sometimes as many as seven, years, within which limit an event may be reckoned some few years earlier or later." (He might also have called attention to the fact that some prophecies have a double—an initial and consummate—objective, and consequently will have a two-fold beginning and ending.) He brings together some events that have for their period 1260 years, as follows:

This is not a new vision, but a continuation of the preceding—the Dragon that sank down in the sea (ch. xii. 18) emerges in a new form and with a new name; this Beast (see p. 242) emerges from the sea, i. e., “of the Arian Goths and northern Pagans, and remanent Pagans of the Empire.” For his expositions of the heads, see p. 242; in his interpretation of the horns he agrees with Elliott, p. 259. The wounding denotes the fall of the Western Empire, partially in A. D. 476, and more completely A. D. 493—this fall did not imply a total cessation of the imperial power; the imperial laws and principles were so adopted by the barbarian conquerors that ultimately a new Roman Empire sprang to life from the contused head of the old (the restoration). The transition of the Beast from the Dragon-form spanned over the time from Constantine to Justinian; the forty-two months were allotted to him after the healing of the mortal stroke, and their beginning (A. D. 529–532) was marked by the institution of the Benedictine Order, and the publication of the Code of Justinian. The second Beast is the Papal hierarchy (generally on this subject he agrees with Elliott). The Image—(sic)—“this we at once recognize in the temporal power of the Pope, and the territory called Peter’s Patrimony, granted by Pepin in A. D. 754; to which may be added the creation of cardinals, who are at once priests and temporal lords;” (this image of the monster has not the term of 1260 prophetic days assigned to it; the giving of spirit to it was fulfilled in the summoning of Western Councils—by these it both spoke and acted. The Name and number, Δαεινός, is one, though not the sole, solution of the problem. (He presents the following, all bearing on the Latin Church: Βενεδικτός, Ἱταλικὴ ἐκκλησία, Εὐπορία, Παράδοσις, Ἐσπερος ἄββα, ἡγὴν Ὁμή, Vicarius Filii Dei, Vicarius generalis Dei in terris, etc.).

AUBERLEN: (Ch. xiii.) This writer in many points agrees with Elliott, and his views have to a considerable extent been adopted by Alford, Glasgow and others. According to him: The first Beast represents the world-power; the seven heads, (1) Egypt, (2) Assyria, (3) Babylon, (4) Medo-Persia, (5) Greece, (6) Rome, (7) the Germanic-Slavonic Empire; the wounding, the conversion to Christianity of the seventh head;

[A. D. 67+1260—1327, from the Woman’s flight under Nero, until the setting up of a rival Pope by Louis of Bavaria, which gave a measure of relief—synchronous with the birth of Wickliffe, and the rise of Marcellus of Padua.

[A. D. 254+1260—1514, from the usurpation exercised by Cornelius, Bishop of Rome, to the death of the Witnesses (see p. 229).

[A. D. 292+1260—1552, from the beginning of the Galerian persecution to the Peace of Passau and the establishment of Protestant freedom.

[A. D. 311+1260—1571, from the election of Coelestinus as Bishop of Carthage leading to the Erastian interference of the Emperor, to the granting of liberty of conscience to Protestants in France, and the Pope’s excommunication of the Protestant Sovereign of England.

[A. D. 529+1260—1789, from the institution of the Benedictine Monks, and the publication of Justinian’s code, to the beginning of the French Revolution.

[A. D. 607+1260—1967 (8), from the decree of Phocas, to the Spanish Revolution, which brought down the last of the ten horns.—E. R. C.]

* [“St. John beholds ‘one of the Beast’s heads, as it were slain unto death, and the wound of his death was healed’ (xiii. 3, 12, 14). This deadly wound of one of the world-kings reminds us of what Daniel saw (Dan. vii. 4) with the healing, the apostatizing of the Christian head (this is the eighth head of ch. xvii. 11, the Antichristian Kingdom in the strict sense;* probably a person †); the ten horns denote ten

regard to the King of Babylon: ‘I beheld till the wings thereof (of the lion) were plucked, and the King received the upright posture and the heart of a man.’ We know that hereby the humiliation of Nebuchadnezzar’s high-soaring haughtiness is indicated, and his subsequent conversion to the living God. A similar change passes over one of the Apocalyptic heads of the Beast. It is not changed into a human head, but it receives a wound to death, and is thus rendered innocuous. The Kingdom of this world, for which this head stands, does not truly turn to the living God, so that its beast-nature is changed into a human one, as was the case with Nebuchadnezzar; but it does not develop its beast-like, brutal, God-opposed character, so fully as the six others; for a time it divests itself of its anti-Christian character. It appears as ἰσχυρύνων, as if slain; and the remark has been justly made, that this expression is chosen purposely, in order to point out an outward resemblance between the Beast and the Lamb, which John beholds (ch. v. 6), likewise as ἰσχυρύνων. The second Beast was like the Lamb, because it had two horns like a lamb (xiii. 11); the first is like the Lamb in having a deadly wound. Hence we must not expect, even of the Beast, of the world-power itself, that its development to the end will be in an exclusively heathenish form; it is to be Christianized externally; nay, for a time, it will appear to be altogether dead, and to have passed out of existence; and yet it will be in existence, and not have ceased to be Beast.” AUBERLEN, p. 297.—E. R. C.]

* [“The deadly wound is thus healed: The Beast which received it recovers life and returns, but now not only from the sea, but out of the Abyss, whence it drew new Antichristian strength of Hell (xiii. 3, 12, 14; xvii. 8; xi. 7). The Lord Jesus has expressed the same progression (Matt. xii. 43–45). The Christian Germanic world apostatizes from Christianity; the old, God-opposed, and anti-Christian beast-nature asserts itself with new power and gains the ascendancy; a new heathenism breaks in upon the Christian world. A heathenism which is worse, more demonic, more of the nature of the bottomless pit, than the ancient one, for it, as represented by the first heads of the Beast, was only an apostasy from the general revelation of God in nature and conscience (Rom. i. and ii. 14), whereas this heathenism is an apostasy from the full revelation of Divine love in the Son (comp. Matt. xi. 41, 42); it is refined, intensified heathenism, to which the words shall be addressed: ‘Remember from whence thou art fallen!’ (ch. ii. 5). This prophecy is not confined to the Revelation; it is the same apostasy (ἀποστασία) of which St. Paul speaks in 2 Thess. ii. 3, and which he sees culminate in Antichrist, the Man of sin, the son of perdition. And in describing the evil times of the last days (2 Tim. ii. 1 sqq.), the Apostle delineates the character of the men who shall live then, in a manner which reminds us of his characteristics of the heathens (Rom. i. 29): thus he foresaw a new heathenism within Christendom. For it is evident that he speaks of Christendom; his expressions—apostasy, 2 Thess. ii. 3; some shall depart from the faith, 1 Tim. iv. 1 (comp. 2 Tim. iii. 5; iv. 3, etc.)—plainly show it. What is peculiar to the Apocalypse is the clear juxtaposition of the Harlot and the returning Beast. The Lord Jesus (Matt. xxiv. 4, 5, 11, 23–26) and the Apostles speak of false doctrine, seduction, apostasy, more in general terms, whereas the Apocalypse distinguishes between two kinds of apostasies, Jewish and heathenish, of the Church and of the world; the pseudo-Christianity of the Harlot, and the anti-Christianity of the returning Beast. The latter is the world divested of all Christianity; the former, the world, adopting Christianity, or Christianity adapting itself to the world.” AUBERLEN, pp. 300 sq.—E. R. C.]

† [“It cannot be proved with absolute certainty that a personal Antichrist will stand at the head of the Antichristian Kingdom, for it is possible that the eighth, like the preceding seven heads, designates a kingdom, a power, and not a person, and the same may be said concerning the Antichristian horn described by Daniel, when compared with the ten horns. But the type of Antiochus Epiphanes is of decisive importance, for this personal enemy of God’s Kingdom is described in the eighth chapter of Daniel, as a little, gradually increasing horn, just as Antichrist is spoken of in the seventh. And this is corroborated by the Apostle Paul (2 Thess. ii.), who describes Antichrist (ver. 4) with colors evidently furnished by Daniel’s sketch of Antiochus, and who calls him, moreover, the Man of sin, the Son of perdition, which, if explained naturally, must refer to an individual (comp. John xvii. 12, where the same expression, ὁ υἱὸς τοῦ ἀπολείας, is used of Judas). In favor of the same view may be adduced, likewise, analogies in the history of the world; the previous world-kingsdoms had extraordinary persons as their heads, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Alexander the Great.

kingdoms into which the last head is to be divided (this division is still future). The second Beast is identical with the False Prophet of ch. xix. 20, and with the human eyes of the little horn of Dan. vii. 8; the first Beast is a physical, political—this a spiritual power, the power of doctrine and knowledge, of intellectual cultivation, of ideas; he arises from the earth, i. e., the civilized, consolidated, orderly world; he comes in a Christian garb and name, the horns of the lamb, but with the spirit and speech of the Dragon (comp. Matt. vii. 15); the Image which the False Prophet causes to be made (the historical substratum of which is in the image in Dan. iii., and the statues of the Roman Emperors, to which divine worship was paid), denotes the deification of the world and the world-power—this is the new heathenism, sinking back into the deification of nature and humanity, of which it cannot be predicted what forms of folly and bestiality (Rom. i. 22 sq.) it shall yet assume; with this enhancement of idolatry, seem to be connected new demonic mighty operations, according to ver. 15. Vers. 15-17 contain a prophecy that all public intercourse will be on condition of receiving the mark of the Beast (which is significantly contrasted with the Seal of the servants of God, ch. vii. 3 sq.), and that true believers will be given into the hand of Antichrist for persecution, as is intimated, Dan. vii. 21, 25; Matt. xxiv. 9.*—E. R. C.]

The spiritual and universal character does not exclude individual personal representatives. Every spiritual tendency has its distinguished representatives, and when it has reached its perfection, produces its representative καρὶ ἁγορεύει. Hence Anti-Christian tendencies produce different Antichrists; and it is a sober historical view, when Christianity maintains that these separate Antichrists shall, some future day, find their consummation in an individual, far exceeding them in the intensity of his evil character (Lange l. c. 374).* AUBERLEN, pp. 304 sq.—E. R. C.]

* [According to Auberlen the healing of the first Beast and the exercise of the special power of the second, set forth in ver. 12, have already begun. He writes: "The return of the Beast is represented, or at least prepared in that principle, which, since A. D. 1789, has manifested itself in beast-like outbreaks, and has since then been developed both extensively and intensively. This principle has appeared in various forms, in the Revolution; in Napoleon, despotism sanctioning revolution, proving, at the same time, that the Beast, even in this shape, can carry the Harlot; in Socialism and Communism. But we may yet expect other manifestations."—"It will not be denied by any one who views the events of the two last centuries with enlightened eyes, that also the prediction of the false prophecy has begun to be fulfilled. Unconverted Paganism passed over by degrees into the Church during the first centuries, and this mixing of Christian and Pagan elements produced Roman Catholicism. Then came the Reformation, dissolving this illegitimate union, and restoring pure Christianity; and hence, it was natural, that in the succeeding centuries, Heathenism should likewise appear more naked, undisguised, and decided, and should attack Christianity again, but at first only with spiritual weapons. The Antichristian element, which before was under a Christian guise, now came forward with increasing openness, and manifested itself as the false prophecy, as false doctrine, as the spiritual power of seducing ideas, which are based on a view of the world, radically false and opposed to God, but which spread and eat as a canker, under the name of philosophy, enlightenment, and civilization (2 Tim. ii. 17). It is a fact, that the Beast's coming to life again, and its new power, whereof we spoke above, is called forth, accompanied and strengthened by the influence of the False Prophet exactly as it is described in Rev. xiii. 12 sqq.: It is evident and palpable, that the philosophic principle of the autonomy of the human spirit, and the corresponding theological principle of Rationalism, that Idealism and Materialism, Deism, Pantheism, and Atheism, are all the products of the same spirit, the essence of which is apostasy from the fundamental principles of Christianity, alienation from the living and holy God, deification of the creature, is exactly what is meant in the Apocalypse by

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ch. XII. 13. He persecuted the woman.

—First he persecuted her Child, the holy Christ Himself; now he persecutes the Woman, the institution of the Kingdom of God; subsequently, when the Woman has, in respect of her outward appearance, allied herself with the earth, he persecutes her inner essentiality—that which is later to appear as the Bride—in her remaining children. That the earth must, equally with the wilderness, be symbolically apprehended, is required by the consistency of the description.

Ver. 14. The two wings.—The saving providence of God is represented, in eagle-like flight; the Church has so intimately appropriated this providence, that it may be said that the eagle-wings are given her, Rom. viii. 28-37. As the deliverance on eagles' wings, into the wilderness, is suggestive of Israel's deliverance, so, also, an entrance into the heavenly Canaan is in view; not, however, the Judaizing prospect of the external leadership of a Jewish Church at the end of the world.*

Where she is nourished.—The beginning of this fact had arrived even in the ancient days of John—with the flight to Pella. The typical element in the miraculous nourishment of Israel in the wilderness is here touched upon. She is nourished (and thus preserved) from the face of the serpent (Bengel, Ewald, et al.). That the wilderness is to be apprehended in a symbolical sense, is manifest from the fact that the Woman, whilst in it, is unattainable for Satan, although elsewhere earthly wildernesses are designated as a favorite abode of evil spirits. The Serpent, therefore, sends a stream of water out of his mouth after the escaped Woman.

Vers. 15, 16. Water as a river.—That is, in the form of an apparently incessant current. Disterdieck vainly labors to fix upon the interpretation of the torrent of water as a torrent of nations an allegoristic character. It is the simple historico-philological explanation of a very pronounced allegorical figure; whilst, on the other hand, the general application of the figure to pressing dangers, or the citation of billows of death and streams of destruction (Ps. xviii. 4), is meaningless in this connection, it being the intention of Satan not to kill the woman outright, but to cause her to be carried away of the river—possibly, only to cause her "to float with the current" (ποταμοφύητρον). The divergent specializations of the stream of nations do, indeed, rest upon ill-advised and arbitrary guess-work, practised in conformity to the theory of Church-historical predictions (persecutors; wicked men and evil demons; heretics; Saracens; worshipping the Beast. Indeed, even in a literal sense, in the present day, 'bestiality is the ideal of thinkers.' But even where this extreme point has not yet been reached, the False Prophet is powerful enough. What is bringing thousands from Christianity, and preventing others from coming to a belief in a full and true Christianity, is nothing else but respect for these intellectual powers which rule in these days, for modern Science and Culture." (These quotations have been made from the Edinburgh Trans. of the first edition of Auberlen, pp. 304, 311 sq.)—E. R. C.]

* [In accordance with his view that this vision relates to that which is still future (see App. Note, p. 250 sq.), the Am. Ed. regards this definite symbol (the two wings of the great eagle) as having reference to an object that cannot now be identified. For his views concerning the wilderness, see concluding paragraph on p. 251.—E. R. C.]

Ewald: a sore peril menacing the fugitive Christians by the Jordan! See Düsterdieck). Düsterdieck's objections against the general reference of the water-stream to streaming nations (p. 418) are based upon a continuous misapprehension of allegorical modes of expression. He asks: "Can it be said that the Germanic peoples came, like a flood, out of the jaws of Satan, and were swallowed up by the earth?" It may, assuredly, be assumed that in the first motions of the migrations of nations, especially in the rising of the Huns, demonic impulses were at play; and, similarly, it may be asserted that the Theocratic order of the Mediæval Occident overcame the hostile torrent of barbarians.

And [Lange: But] the earth.—Neither the application of this figure to the cultured Roman world (Auberlen) or to another opposing worldly power (Hengstenberg), nor the reference of it to the cleaving Mount of Olives (Zech. xiv. 4), in accordance with the opinion that the final Antichristian time is here exclusively spoken of (Eb-rard), corresponds to the explicit character of this Old Testament type.

Ver. 17. And the dragon was wroth.—Since the Dragon has already been wroth against the Woman, an increase of wrath is here expressed, developed in the conflict with the Woman. Hence the reading: ἐν in conjunction with τῇ γυναικί is significant. The preposition ἐν with the dative may, indeed, simply denote the object of an action, but it often signifies: concerning, on account of, about, and this is most frequently the case with verbs that indicate an emotion of the mind (as here). Satan becomes so incensed concerning the combat with the Woman that he now departs, etc.

With the remnant.—See above. A copious treatise on this point see in Düsterdieck, who, however, by these remaining ones apprehends, with Züllig, the Zionites (?) on earth.*

Ver. 18. And he stood.—[See TEXT AND GRAM., Note 7.—E. R. C.] According to De Wette and many others, the reading ἐστῆ is exegetically impossible. In reality, however, the reading of the Receipts, ἐστῆν, for which there is less authority, is far less possible. See above. Since a demonic operation upon the sea of nations is in question, Satan takes his station upon the sandy shore, a place where the earth is flat and the sea shallow. A contemporaneous appearance of the Dragon, on the sand, and the Beast, above the waves of the ocean, is not declared; the Dragon vanishes as the Beast inspired by him makes his appearance.

Ch. XIII. 1.† Ascending out of the sea.—See the Introduction. Out of the sea of nations: Many interpreters from Victorinus down. Out of Europe (! Bengel); out of the Italian insular kingdom (Ewald). The sea is the sea and nothing more, Düsterdieck declares, just as the earth is the literal earth—why, then, are not also the Beasts literal beasts?

A wild-beast.—Doubtless, only the God-opposed, Antichristian world-power can primarily be intended—eschatologically concentrated and modified, however (Auberlen, Hengstenberg). One-sided, therefore, is the interpretation of the Beast as pagan Rome (from Victorinus to Bleek and many others); and equally one-sided is the application of it to papal Christian Rome (Vitringa, Bengel, et al.). The import of the figure, undoubtedly, does not gravitate backward to heathen Rome, but, in accordance with its eschatological tendency, forward to Christian Rome. Heathen Rome can be but visible in one of the seven heads; and the like is true of Christian Rome, or, rather, the ecclesiastico-political Rome of the Middle Ages. The Beast is ἀναβαίνων through a long period. With the circumstance that the terrestrial ocean embraces the earth, the fact that the Beast from the earth does not appear as co-regent with the Beast out of the sea, but as his vassal, must not be confounded, as in Düsterdieck.—The Beast, as θηρίον, is to be distinguished from ζῷον; the word is indicative of a bestially ferocious nature, see Dan. vii. 1.

Ten horns.—See the Introduction.

Seven heads.—Interpreted as seven world-periods; or seven persecutions of Christians; or seven Antichristian world-powers. Hengstenberg defines these powers as follows (ii. 13): The Chaldean, Medo-Persian, Greek and Roman kingdoms. The first and second heads he looks for as existing before the Chaldean empire. Consequently, "only Egypt and Assyria can be thought of." The sixth kingdom, he affirms, is that of Rome, in accordance with ch. xvii. 10; the seventh endures, as he believes, until the cessation of the God-opposed power, and passes into the ten horns or God-opposed kings. We have taken the liberty of apprehending the seven heads otherwise (p. 25 sq.). In the first place, it is, in all probability, to be taken for granted that the Apocalypticist retains the four world-monarchies of Daniel. In accordance with his manner of constructing the seven, he then follows up the pre-Christian quaternary with a ternary, beginning with the Christian era. John would be more apt to include the Herodian kingdom in his system of heads than Egypt or Assyria. With Christianity, pronounced Antichristianity first began—began primarily, in the Herodian forms,* and continued in the new phase of the Christ-opposed Roman empire, as distinct from the Danielic vision of the Roman republic. With the application of the Beast to pagan Rome, a manifold explanation of the seven heads has been connected (the seven hills with ten kings, seven emperors with ten prefects). With the reference of the Beast to papal Rome, Vitringa conjoined an enumeration of seven principal forms of Roman government, from kings and consuls to the pope; by the ten horns he understood ten kingdoms subservient to the papacy, from the French kingdom to the Polish (see Düsterdieck). Pursuant to the interpretation of the Beast as the pagan Roman empire, Düsterdieck, in accordance with others (see Bleek, p. 826), makes of the ten horns with ten crowns ten Roman emperors; 1. Augustus; 2. Tiberius; 3. Caligula; 4. Claudius; 5. Nero; 6. Galba; 7. Otho; 8. Vitellius; 9. Vespasian; 10. Titus. The tenth, corresponding to the seventh head, is, he declares, still future [to the Seer]. His exposition of the relation between the ten horns and seven heads may be found p. 432. The whole, therefore, according to his view, is a petty repetition of the history of the time, clothed, in an illusory manner, in prophetic-symbolic form. It is not to be denied that the self-deifications of Roman emperors (Düsterdieck, page 58) were types of Antichristian blasphemies.

* [By the remnant the Am. Ed. understands those left on earth, subject to the assaults of the Dragon and his instruments, after the removal of the ἀπαρχή (see p. 251 and foot-note.—E. R. C.)

† [See the ADD. NOTES, pp. 222 sq.—E. R. C.]

* Züllig regards the eight kings as Edomitish princes.

Names of blasphemy.—It is neither assumable, with Zöllig, that the individual heads bore frontlets, on each of which was inscribed one letter, the whole number making together the inscription:

יהוה (although the antithetic reference to the frontlet of the High Priest, Holiness to Jehovah, is certainly ingenious)—nor that upon every head the same blasphemous name was written, according to Düsterdieck and others. Why should not a sevenfold form of Antichristian self-deification, corresponding to the seven world-powers, be intended? Bede refers to the name Augustus; Bengel conjectured that the name Papa was intended; Hengstenberg suggests the name of Christ, ch. xix. 16.

Ver. 2. And the wild-beast that I saw was like, etc.—The Beast is a compound of the four Danielic Beasts, Dan. vii. 4; amongst these, however, we regard the fourth Beast as the Roman world-kingdom, since the third Beast (ch. vii. 6) has the same number as the Greek world-kingdom (ch. viii. 8)—four wings, four heads, four horns. It is entirely incorrect, on the other hand, to identify the eschatological anti-theocratic horn (ch. vii. 8) with the precursory anti-theocratic horn (ch. viii. 8). Be it observed, however, in this connection, that the fourth Beast in Daniel, as the real eschatological Beast, embraces, together with the vision of the Roman kingdom, the entire series of world-powers, as coinciding, in perspective, with that kingdom. The ground-color of the Apocalyptic Beast is variegated, as was formerly the color of the Greek kingdom in its division. The fact that, with John, the four kingdoms have become one kingdom, rests upon the depth of intuition by which he has perceived the unitous demonic foundation of the world-kingdoms. The circumstance that the ten horns of the fourth Danielic Beast find their parallel in the ten horns of the Apocalyptic Beast, which embraces all the world-kingdoms, reposes upon the common symbolism of the number ten and the horns, by which a perfectly developed and organically ramified world-power is expressed. Amongst the different interpretations of the individual bestial forms, that of Cocceius is particularly interesting: Varii coloris. Ad hanc bestiam enim pertinent Christiani servientes episcopis et aliud principium fidei constituentes, item Ariani, Musulmanni, etc.

And the Dragon gave him, etc.—After this inauguration, the Dragon seems to retire from the scene. His representative now comes forward. The Devil has vanished from theology, philosophy, and popular consciousness, but Antichrist is present, in whom the genius of the former secretly lives on. To him is transferred, first, the demonic power, the true method of combining falsehood, hatred, and the breath of death into a magical agency. Then he has, secondly, the demonic throne, i. e., there is henceforth a centre of diabolical evil in this present world. Thirdly, great demonic authority is committed to him; he has despotic and anarchical organs enough.

Ver. 3. One from among his heads as if slain [Lange: wounded].—That the Apocalypticist could ascribe the wounding to death of a head of the Antichristian power only to the operation of Christ's victory, or to Christianity in its assumption of its visible place in history (Hengstenberg), but not to the migration of nations (Calov., Auberlen, De Rougemont, et al.), ought to be understood without further dissertation. Nothing save the ως could lead us to doubt that such was the fact, and that only if the word be regarded as indicative exclusively of mere empty appearance. The expression, however, does not mean that the wound itself was mere semblance, but that the probability of its inflicting death upon the head, and so, indirectly, upon the Beast, seemed to be mere semblance. The wound was, doubtless, principally mortal (as is evident from the expression: ἡ πληγή τοῦ θανάτου αὐτοῦ, vers. 3 and 12—each time referring to the Beast itself), but, so far as outward appearance was concerned, it seemed soon after to be healed, the Antichristian power of this head reviving. Now whilst the ancient Protestant exegesis referred this power, exclusively, to Rome (see Calov., Cocceius, Nikolai, Vitringa, Bengel, in Düsterdieck, p. 438), Düsterdieck maintains the limitation of the seven heads to seven Roman kings. A quid pro quo, he declares, is ascribed to the Apocalypticist when it is asserted that "he represents the holy Roman Empire as the revived world-kingdom of pagan Rome;" such an assertion, he states, is incompatible either with historical truth or with a sound conception of Biblical prophecy. We certainly are not willing to conclude, with Auberlen and others, from ὡς ἑσχατ., that an apparently Christian life and essence are ascribed to the healed* head. The explanation of Hengstenberg is as follows: ὡς ἑσχατ., as in the case of the Lamb, means that the slaying was accompanied by real death, but was now perceptible only by the scar, the Beast having become alive again;—this interpretation, also, may be dispatched with the remark that there is a wide difference between the risen Christ and the apparent restoration of the Antichristian Beast. We may safely leave the "holy Roman Empire" its measure of holiness, without, on the one side, with Rothe, regarding the Christian State as the heir of the goods of the Church, or with Hengstenberg, locating the Millennial Kingdom in the Middle Ages; but also without, on the other hand, shutting our eyes to the fact that the mediæval system of government, in its theocratic, ecclesiastico-political character, abandoned itself more and more, in the constraint which it exercised over men in matters of faith, in the Inquisition, in Machiavelism, in papistic and despotie forms of world-empire, to ungodly, worldly, and demonic principles. In the face of this great fact, Dürstediack arrives at the following interpretation: "The death-wound was given to the (fifth [?]) head by the death of Nero and the immediately following interregnum, etc. The healing of that death-wound took place when Vespasian, the founder of a new race of emperors, restored the empire, as its actual possessor, to its ancient strength and vitality." Far be it from us to deny that Dürstediack has performed a meritorious act in refuting that miserable invention—first appearing in the obscure sphere of Victorinus—which regards the fable concerning the risen Nero as here transformed into an Apocalyptic prophecy (see Dürstediack, p. 439 sqq.); he has, however, not accomplished the refutation without inconsistency, for if the Apocalyptic king be only a literal king, the wound can not be situate in Nero, and the healing, on the other hand, in Vespasian. Comp. the Introduction to this Commentary, pp. 26 and 60. Explanations by Grotius and Züllig, see in Dürstediack, p. 439, as also a special reference to the Popes, by Vitringa, in the note on p. 438. Sander thinks the wounded Beast is Gregory VII. Gräber, more appropriately, regards the wounding as the Reformation; in a certain degree, the Reformation does pertain to the death-stroke which the Beast received at the entrance of Christianity into the world.

* [Lange seems here to misapprehend Auberlen. It is to the wounded head that the latter ascribes an apparent Christian life; the wounding consists in the partial destruction of the beastly nature. See Abstracts of Auberlen, p. 263 sq. —E. R. G.]

And the whole earth wondered.*—This applies to the increasingly general despair as to the truth of the victory of Christ and the Christian principle—a despair which is confronted by a sovereignty and an external glory of the world-power which continually become more imposing. To this wonderment and admiration all converts of despotism and particularly of the hierarchy, who have turned their backs on Christianity, specially testify.

Ver. 4. And they worshipped the dragon.—The history of gross and subtle devil-service here arrives at its meridian. Most certainly the exclamation: Who is like unto the wild-beast, and who is able to war with him? does bear the appearance of a liturgy of this new demonic cultus, of "a blasphemous parody of the praise with which the Old Testament congregation celebrated the incomparable gloriousness of the living God (comp. Is. xl. 25; xlii. 7, etc.)." DÜRSTEDIACK. The commentator from whom we have quoted seems, however, to apprehend everything that is said in regard to a worship of the Devil, rather literally; hence he cannot approve of the utterances of Cocceius, according to whom such worship may be offered by the adherents of the papacy. But what is it to offer the most decided personal conviction to a worldly apparent power, let that power be of a hierarchical or a political nature? In every village where demonic villainy has become such a power that no one dares any more stand up for right and truth against it, there a subtle devil-service reigns, even though the people who indulge in it may still frequent the house of God.

[The verb προσκυνέω is the one elsewhere employed to denote the outward worship that should be offered only to God. See ch. iv. 10; v. 14; vii. 11; xiv. 7; xv. 4; xix. 4, 10; xxii. 8, 9 (ch. iii. 9 may seem to be an exception to the general rule; but even there the reference is to a grovelling in the dust as before a superior being). The reference here, and in vers. 8, 12, 15; xiv. 9, 11; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4, probably is to the payment of Divine honors. These prophecies have almost certainly been fulfilled, either typically or consummately, in the worship offered to the Pope.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 5. And there was given unto him.—An actual giving, in the ordinary sense of the term, is not intended, but a perfect abandonment, as a positive Divine destination to judgment. The σῶμα of the Beast, employed by him for blasphemy, is even itself to be regarded as a product of world-historical culture. The specifically great mouth may, in a formal aspect, be conceived of as an excessively cultivated mouth, practised in the rhetoric of deceit. Its manifestation in speaking great things, words of outrageous arrogance, of self-glorification (2 Thess. ii.), is in close correspondence with its blasphemies. In all great world-kingdoms, political and hierarchical, this polarity of godlessness appears. The great words of the King of Babylon (see Is. xiv.) were followed by the great words of the successors of Cyrus; these, by the self-deification of Alexander and the anti-theocratic machinations of Antiochus Epiphanes. To the last, finally, succeeded the vain-glorious vaunts and apotheoses of pagan (see Dürstediack, p. 58) and mediæval Rome, the echoes of whose last word are even yet resounding in all the churches and on all the thrones of Europe. The typical expression of this art of blasphemies is found in Dan. vii. 20 and 25. The time which is there granted to the last king for his blasphemy is defined in the form: a time, two times, a half time. Here, the authority of the Beast continues for forty-two months. These periods are not to be chronologically calculated; still less are they to be conformed to each other; the distinction lies in the choice of form. The forty-two months constitute a changeful time of tribulation, in which the number of rest and joy is continually crossed by the number of toil and distress (7 × 6).

Ver. 6. Unto blasphemies against God.—The blasphemies noticed in ver. 5 are here more particularly explained, and that with exceeding pertinence.

To blaspheme (first) His name.—In the more general sense, religion itself; in the more special sense, His revelation, especially His complete revelation in Christianity. The Beast retains a remnant of religious idea sufficient to make a god of himself (Antichristianity=pseudo-Christianity).

(Secondly) His tabernacle.—That is, the Church of God, the true, living Church, mentioned in Amos, ch. ix. 11, 12, as the house of God of the Λαοὶ out of all nations, in antithesis to the splendid edifice of the Temple. According to Dürstediack, Heaven is meant. But how should Heaven, as distinct from God and from those who dwell in Heaven, be an object of irreligious hate? Possibly it might be thus conceived of by those systems which regard the Earth alone as a place of spiritual life, and to which the idea of the stars as symbols of a local existence beyond this life is repugnant.

* [The German word (bewundern) includes the idea of admiration.—Th.]

The third blasphemy is, however, itself the blasphemy against the life beyond. With those who tabernacle in the heaven, not only is God's work of grace in Christians who are yet in this world blasphemed, as a recognized reality, but the inhabitants of the world beyond are themselves, likewise, blasphemed as vain shadows, or as men who, for a phantom hope, have sacrificed their pretensions to this present life.

As, to the Name of God, the Beast opposes his own self-deification, so, to the Tabernacle of God, he opposes God's desecrated Temple (2 Thess. ii. 4), and so, finally, to the vital Heaven of the blessed Church of Christ and to the hope of that Heaven, he opposes the present world, made empty and of no account by atheism and communism.

Ver. 7. To make war with the saints, and to conquer them.—Observe the grand integrity and boldness of the vision. The victory will, indeed, be only an apparent victory, for before God it is the saints who shall remain victors (ch. xii. 11); it is not necessary to conclude from this, however, that the Beast will conquer them merely by violence, by imprisonment, exile, death, and all sorts of θλίψις (Düst.; similarly De Wette and others). We question whether those are the methods of triumph of Antichristianity in the last days. At all events, killing is not spoken of previous to ver. 15. In the war of words, also, and the conflict of opinions, the Beast is able to conquer the saints, before an auditory fully given over to the spirit of the times. Even the religious disputations of the time of the Reformation may give us a preliminary idea of the magic of the loudest voices, of bold assurances, of disputatious arts, in presence of a sympathizing audience. Not merely the awkward utterances of an uncalled pious zeal, but also ripe testimonies to the truth, may, in great modern world-circles, be seemingly demolished by so-called witty jests. But when, in the future, public opinion, the press, the forms of mental intercourse in general, shall lapse more and more into what may be the ungodly tendency of the day, the tongues of truth and of love, of men and angels, may, in the end, be drowned by an impious majority of voices. The elect, of course, who are of the truth, will, doubtless, always recognize the voice of truth.

Authority was given him over every tribe, etc.—In connection with morbid universalism, a morbid particularism, on the other hand, is developed; the principle of nationality, which, in its ancient morbid form, preferred the isolation of the heathen nations to the principle of humanity, appears again in a modern morbid form; in this latter form, by the excessive stress which it lays upon tribes, it disintegrates the nation and the state; by an exclusive stress upon the people (for instance, the Italian or the Russian), it disintegrates the Church; and it results in making of the conflict of languages (whose common notions are increasingly denied) an eschatological Babel, and, by the fanatical battle of racēs [nations], puts an end to the conflict between the Kingdom of God and the kingdom of darkness. The relative authorization of the principle of nationality in the Kingdom of God has been earlier expressed in the Apocalypse (ch. v. 9; also, it is probable, ch. xi. 9). The fixedness of the four forms (φυλῆς, etc.; also ch. xiv. 6) manifests, at the same time, their authorization. Hence we have particularly to consider the distinction of λαός (ὁ ὡς cultured people, primarily Israel) and ἔθνος (ἡ ὡς a nationality, nation or race). At the last, this classification is perturbed, as it appears, by the agency of Antichristianity (ch. xvii. 5).

Ver. 8. And all that dwell upon the earth.—The dwelling on earth is the common characteristic of the different modern heathendoms: all who have made themselves at home in this world simply and exclusively. [The expression: "they that dwell upon the Earth" (οἱ κατοικοῦντες ἐπὶ τῆς γῆς) here, and elsewhere (ch. iii. 10; vi. 10; viii. 13; xi. 10 δύς; xii. 12; xiii. 8, 12, 14 δύς; xiv. 6; xvii. 2, 8) might be translated worldlings. It designates such as are in antithesis to those whose conversation is in Heaven, who live as pilgrims and sojourners here. —E. R. C.]

Shall worship him (προσκυνήσουσιν).—Αἰτῶν is rightly referred by Düsterdieck,—against Hengstenberg, who understands by it the king, ch. xvii. 11—to the chief subject ὁ δράκων, with the remark that the future form corresponds with such a reference ["(comp., on the other hand, ver. 4): as the activity of the Beast, in respect of its decisive part, is still in the future (comp. ver. 7, where it is first Divinely given to the Beast what it shall do), so also is the worship of the Dragon thereby induced still future." DÜSTERDIECK.—TR.]. There continually develops more and more fully, along with the enthusiastic veneration of the Antichristian power, a conscious bowing of the knee before the Satanic principles which lie at the foundation of that power (slander, murder, absolute egoism) and before the Dragon himself.

Every one whose name, etc.—Thus a contrast is found—not merely in a general way, but betwixt man and man—between the worshippers of the Dragon and those whose names are written in the book of life. This writing here denotes that security of the people of God which is expressed in ch. vii. by the sealing. And now the following question arises—Shall we read: Written in the book of life of the Lamb that hath been slain from the foundation of the world (Vulg., Bede, etc.), as the immediate reference of the closing words [ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου] seems to demand, or: written from the foundation of the world in the book of life of the Lamb that hath been slain (Grotius, Bengel, Hengstenberg, Düsterdieck, et al.), as seems to be decidedly indicated by the passage, ch. xvii. 8? It cannot, however, be denied that 1 Pet. i. 19, 20, supports the former and more ancient apprehension, as does also the Johannean utterance in the Gospel of John, ch. xvii. 24. Both apprehensions of the passage contemplate the first, and hence the last, cause of the security of God's people in that election which took place before the foundation of the world, and which has therefore prevailed since the foundation of the world. But as the pre-appointment of the glory of Christ was at the same time a pre-appointment of His death, and was conditioned, in its manifestation, by the foreview of His holy conduct, so the election of believers, in its manifestation, is conditioned by their faithfulness, in accordance with ch. xx. 12 (κατὰ τὰ ἔργα αὐτῶν). We, therefore, have to do with a mysterious synthesis of eternal personal foundation and disposition and a morally free verification [of said foundation and disposition]—neither with the one alone, in a predestinarian sense, nor with the other exclusively, in an Arminian sense. There is a decided lack of clearness in the following deliverance of Hengstenberg: "When temptation has attained its highest degree, nothing holds out against it save the eternal election based upon the atonement in Christ." Since both explanations are, materially, equally warranted, the more obvious course is to prefer the older exposition. And what shall we gain by so doing? Those who are written in the book of the Lamb that was slain from the foundation of the world, are such as form a contrast, in respect of their disposition and conduct, to those who dread and shun suffering; for by a dread of suffering, the greatest genius that mankind has ever seen may lapse into subtle cowardice, and thus fall under the dominion of the world and Antichristianity. Comp. Rom. vi. 8. The central point of those who are ready for suffering—the martyrs, who, precisely as such, are invincible—is formed by the Lamb, Who was mystically slain from the foundation of the world, and Who, from the very fact of His being thus slain, is the Prince of life, with Whose victory the ideal, eternal book of life is actualised.

["These last words (ἀπὸ καταβολῆς κόσμου) are ambiguously placed. They may belong either to γέγραπται, or to ἐσθαρμένον. The former connection is taken by Hammond, Bengel, Heinr., Ewald, Züllig, De Wette, Hengst., Düsterd. But the other is far more obvious and natural: and had it not been for the apparent difficulty of the sense thus conveyed, the going back so far as to γέγραπται for a connection would never have been thought of. . . . The difficulty, however, is but apparent: 1 Pet. i. 19, 20, says more fully the same thing. That death of Christ which was foreordained from the foundation of the world, is said to have taken place in the counsels of Him with Whom the end and the beginning are one." ALFORD.—The foreordination of an event is one thing, its occurrence is another. In like manner as the above, it might be said that, as the destruction of the world was foreordained from the foundation of the world, the world has been destroyed from its foundation. In the judgment of the Am. Ed., the manifest difficulty of the sense conveyed by the connection advocated by our author and Alford, together with ch. xvii. 8, not only justify, but require, the connection with γέγραπται.—E. R. C.]

VERS. 9, 10. If any one is for captivity [LANGE: If any one driveth a captivity], etc.—Whoever hears this declaration with the right hearing of faith, is perfectly comforted as well as perfectly warned. In God's world, a perfect system of retribution obtains. Just as elsewhere the depth of the suffering and the wrong-suffering of Christ is made the measure of His exaltation, so here the greatness and the manner of wrong-doing—especially in the Antichristian persecution of believers—are constituted the measure of future retribitional suffering. In the form of the legal jus talionis, this is a thoroughly matter-of-fact and indefeasible vital law. So much so, that the Apostle speaks elliptically, as if he were quoting a perfectly familiar paragraph from the Law: εἰ τις εἰς αἰχμαλωσίαν, etc. DÜSTERDIECK: "Volkmar regards the threat of the sword as directed against Nero." Of course, where the Apocalyptic Seer declares a profound and general vital law, there—according to Volkmar—an uncanonical, Christian poet of the people slyly doubles up his fist against Nero.* This reminds us of the kicking cavalry horses, ch. ix. 19.

[The declaration seems to be the announcement of a general law in reference both to Saints and the ungodly. In reference to the Saints, it is a declaration that if they resist persecution with carnal weapons, they shall perish by the sword. And has not this been exemplified in the history of the Albigenses and Waldenses, and others who have taken up the sword in their own defence? In reference to the persecuting world-power, it is a declaration that though for a season it may prosper, in the end it shall be destroyed with violence. The reception of this truth, which is but one phase of the more general truth, "Vengeance is Mine, I will repay, saith the Lord," Rom. xii. 19, manifests the faith and gives strength for the endurance of the Saints.—E. R. C.]

Here is the endurance [LANGE: patience] etc.—Does this mean: here must the patience and faith of the saints show themselves (DE WETTE), or: "here is patience existent; here are the foundation and the source of it" (DÜSTERDIECK)? The meaning may also be, however: here is the objective mark of the saints, the vital law which has become embodied in them. The suffering of wrong without doing wrong, in the assurance that the wrong-doing rebounds upon its author, in accordance with the law of retribution—this universal ordinance established by God in this world, appears principally in the cross of Christ and is continually further manifested in the endurance and faith of the saints. Thus, eschatological wisdom appears in the right understanding of the number of the Beast, ver. 17, and thus the wise man's understanding of eschatological symbolism, in particular, is evident in the right understanding of the seven heads of the Beast, ch. xvii. 9.—Here is the source or fountain:—this would be saying too much, inasmuch as Christ is the fountain, Who, verily, has drawn His constancy from the depths of that Divine law. On the other hand, the challenge: here let the patience and faith of the saints give evidence of themselves, would be saying too little. Here, therefore, appears the idea which is realized in the life of the saints.

* [Da mach' nach Volkmar ein unkanonischer christlicher Volksdichter gegen den Nero eine Faust in der Tasche.]

Ver. 11. Another wild-beast.*—The False Prophet, according to chs. xvi. 13; xix. 20: xx. 10; Iren. v. 28, (2). According to Düsterdieck and many who preceded him (Victorinus, Grotius, De Wette, Hengstenberg), the pagan Roman prophethood is here intended—that paltry system of augurs. “The many references to papal Rome (Cocceius, Calov., Vitringa, et al.)” are, according to Düsterdieck, precluded [by the application of vers. 1-8 to the Roman empire.—Ta]. The Augurs, then, had hypocritically imitated the lamb-like character of Christ! [Düsterdieck denies that there is any special reference to Christ as the Lamb, whilst he admits that there may be an allusion to the idiocracy of pseudo-prophethood as set forth in Matt. vii. 15.—Ta.]

Out of the earth.—Of this, various interpretations have been given, all of which regardlessly pass by the Old Testament symbolism: the Asiatic continent (Bengel and Ewald); earthliness or worldliness (Hengstenberg); as near as may be, meaningless (Düsterdieck); ἐκ τῆς γῆς signifies: out of that which “has already become firm soil” (Ebrard after Vitringa and Hofmann).

Two horns like a lamb.—We do not translate, like the lamb, since the Lamb, in the eminent sense of the term (ch. v. 6), has seven horns; the present description, however, like that unique Lamb, goes back to the phenomenon of the lamb generically considered; the Beast counterfeits the nature of the lamb. The two horns, therefore, are not to be placed in the category of a defect, in accordance with Ebrard: “the Beast (ver. 11) has but two horns, and is thus distinguished, as a natural sheep, confined within creaturely limits and boundaries, from that other Lamb.” According to this, he is innocent enough. But since he speaks as the Dragon, he is scarcely all right, notwithstanding his two horns. Hengstenberg’s conjectures respecting the two horns, see in Ebrard. The former commentator looks upon them as denoting the hidden might of the wisdom of this world! The lamb has his two horns simply for self-defence, and yet he speaks as the Dragon, as though he had ten horns. Are there not such lambs? See Matt. vii. 15. According to Düsterdieck, the speaking like the Dragon is indicative of the crafty speech of the deceiver and seducer, Gen. iii.; but the Dragon’s speech is not merely crafty, like that of the serpent, as is evident from the whole of the present chapter.

Special interpretations: Vitringa: The two horns are the two mendicant orders of friars. Hammond: Double priestly power of miracles and prophecy.

Ver. 12. And he exerciseth.—Ποιεῖ. In magical poesy he imitates all the power of the first Beast in presence of that Beast, thus preparing the earth and the dwellers thereon to worship the first Beast, whose wound was healed. The ἐν ὀνόματι αὐτοῦ cannot mean that he has from the outset voluntarily regarded himself as the vassal of the first Beast; his subserviency to him was not originally contemplated and does but gradually result from the operations of the second Beast. His mode of action being terrestrial, must eventually devolve upon the first Beast, and finally, the second form, as a matured Beast from the earth, becomes the conscious False Prophet of the Sea-Beast.

Ver. 13. Great signs.—Not real miracles, but ostensible, illusive wonders. The tendency is that he would even [seem to] make fire come down from the Heaven in the presence of men. That is, to the acknowledgment of spectators. Without doubt, this is an imitation of Elijah, in the sphere of the superstitious view of men. Agreeably to the conception of superstition, the fire of the Inquisition stakes fell from Heaven. A controversy between Hengstenberg and Düsterdieck on the subject of lva, see in the Commentary of the latter, p. 452. Misunderstanding of the passage. It might, indeed, be said that as a true Elijah goes before the true Christ, so a pseudo-Elijah goes before the pseudo-Christ.—False applications to the Pentecostal feast and to Solomon, see noted in Düsterdieck.

[The term σημεῖα (see also Matt. xxiv. 24; 2 Thess. ii. 9) is the same that is generally employed to designate the miracles of Christ. In both the additional passages referred to, τίματα occurs, and in the second δυνάμεις. And not only so, but the connection of ποιεῖν with σημεῖα is the form of expression commonly used by John to designate the working of miracles (see John ii. 11, 23; iii. 2; iv. 54; vi. 2, etc.). In view of these facts, together with a consideration of Deut. xiii. 1, 2, (where genuine σημεῖα and τίματα seem to be referred to) and the solemn warning of our Lord, Matt. xxiv. 24, 25, it seems, to the Am. Ed., scarce possible to avoid the conclusion that the miracles foretold are genuine. The implication of Deut. xiii. 1-5, seems to the writer to be that miracles alone are not evidence of Divine commission, that God may permit their being wrought for the purpose of testing His professed followers; and that the claims of one who offers miracles as a proof that he speaks by Divine inspiration, are to be further tested by the accordance of his teachings with extant Revelations. The last clause of 2 Thess. ii. 9 cannot be alleged as an objection to this view, since the τίματα ψεύδους (wonders of falsehood) may well be interpreted as τίματα in confirmation of the ψεύδος mentioned in ver. 11.—E. R. C.]

And he seduceth (or misleadeth).—DÜSTERDIECK: “The wonders are an actual means, (Matt. xxiv. 24);—as powerful lies, or lying powers, we would add.—Telling them that dwell on the earth to make an image to the wild beast.—DÜSTERD.: “The images of the deified emperors. The statues of Augustus and Caligula erected to them in the character of gods.” The Seer is not speaking of an image of the first Beast in the abstract, but of the image of that Beast in his quality of having the wound by the sword and reviving. This can be only an idealized, theoretical and poetical likeness of the regenerate heathen world power—a likeness which has diffused itself in the pagan deification of power, in hero-worship, image-worship and external cultus and popular superstition—a unique image of the pre-Christian world-power in many images. The image of the Beast is, therefore, the re-appearance of heathenism, or the heathen world-power, in the Christian world; and it is the False Prophet who causes the erection of this Image. Ay, he even knows how to communicate a sort of apparent life to the image of the first Beast.

* [See the ADD. NOTE, p. 272 sq.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 15. And it was given to him to give a spirit, etc.—A kind of spirit suitable to the kind of image; an appearance of unitous spirit-life, for modern heathenism as the image of ancient heathenism. It is impossible by this to understand the cultivation of humanism—practised by later Byzantinism and the Romanism of the Fifteenth century,—as the acme of the civilization of ancient heathenism. The image of the heathen world-power is spoken of—the reflection of that world-power, in copy, within Christendom. The fundamental features of this image are: abstract authority, corresponding with abstract superstitious demoralism—the design being abstract uniformity. At first, the second Beast claimed all this for himself, but, in accordance with the nature of the case, he was all the time playing into the hands of the first Beast, and has now, in the last eschatological time, entirely gone over to the service of the latter. The medium by which life is counterfeited in the image is the power to speaking. “Ver. 15 must not be apprehended as significant of a ‘spiritual speaking’ of pagan images of gods (in opposition to Hengstenberg, who remarks that the heathen, in his image of a god, objectified his own intuitions [Anschauungen], and that with a liveliness which attested itself in the allegations of actual speech on the part of those images); this trait of the description rather contains a suggestion of what is reported concerning divine images which are said really to speak (comp. Grotius, Ewald II.; the latter also refers to the deception of the people by means of talking images of the Virgin); and John seems to take for granted the reality of such demonic wonders” (DÜSTERDIECK). Disregard of the symbolicalness of the expression leads to such an assumption as the above, which virtually charges John with superstition. The image of the Beast can really speak. But as the image itself is a fundamentally false, new-heathenish, romantic system, so its speaking is the art of the fundamentally false and dazzling phraseology which is in the service of that system.

And cause that as many as should not worship the image of the wild-beast should be slain.—We understand this slaying in an eschatological sense, and regard it as signifying social annihilation—privation of oral, legal, social [in the more restricted sense of the term] life [=influence, efficiency]. The analogies discoverable in the heathen mode of procedure against Christianity (DÜSTERD., p. 458—letter of Pliny to Trajan: worship of the imperial image), consisting in the infliction of capital punishment, may have served as the starting-point of the text. The first great type of the uniformity-image was the tower of Babel. The first image which men were commanded, on pain of death, to worship, was the symbol of the first heathen world-power—the golden image of King Nebuchadnezzar, at Babylon (Dan. iii.).

Vers. 16, 17. And he maketh all.—The False Prophet operates upon all. This fact of his universal operation is emphatically set forth by a threefold antithesis: the small and the great, etc. The end for this universal company upon which the False Prophet has been working, is the Antichristian symbolism; they assume the mark of apertinency to the Beast (ch. xiv. 9, 11; xvi. 2; xix. 20; xx. 4). The terrible earnestness and decisiveness of this self-assignment of men to the Beast, and the distinctness with which the Seer foresees this formation of a perverted congregation of Antichristian confessors, are evident from his frequent recurrence to this fatal symbolism. We cannot perceive why Düsterdieck should regard the view of Grotius and others, who maintain that this idea is reminiscent of the heathen custom of stigmatizing slaves and soldiers, and thus signaling their apertinency to their masters, as at variance with Hengstenberg's view, that the χάραγμα will be a species of confession. The exclusive operation of the token is expressly brought out. Here, also, it is perfectly obvious that the Seer did not intend that his words should be taken literally. For it is impossible to overlook the fact that both the forehead and the hand have a symbolical significance in the Scriptures. The frontlet of the high priest, with its inscription; the expression: forehead against forehead, Ezek. iii. 8, 9; and similar passages afford sufficient evidence that the mark on the forehead imports a confession; whilst the mark on the hand is no less expressive of a practical tendency. See SYNOP. VIEW. Consume effrontery and consummate mutinousness—by these attributes, the members of this Church of the Beast shall recognize each other, and accordingly consign to social death those who are unmarked, not simply excommunicating them, but also civilly outlawing them. A fanatical Protestant interpretation of the χάραγμα by Cocco, see in Düsterd., p. 454.

Ver. 18. Here is wisdom.—The wisdom of God, like the wisdom of men, relates to the ends and aims of life. Hence Christianity, towards the end of the world, is more and more a vocation to wisdom, to the trying of spirits, especially to the recognition of the signs of the Antichristian spirit. Herein wisdom must show itself (see SYNOP. VIEW). Wisdom, however, is to be learned in learning to calculate the number of the Beast. That this can be no problematical, chilastic reckoning, in the true sense of that term, we may rest assured, by reason of the origin of the recommendation [“Let him that hath understanding,” etc.] with the Spirit of prophecy.

Various explanations of the number 666:

1. According to Hofmann (Schriftbeweis, ii. 2, p. 702), John himself was ignorant of the reference of the number to a determinate personality, having merely seen and written the number (similarly Luthardt, Die Offenb. Joh., p. 53). In reality, however, Hofmann pledges himself to the following solution: It will be the Greek enemy of the Old Testament Church of God, who will return to this earthly life in order to the destruction of the New Testament Church.

2. The difficult solution of the puzzle will be found in the future (Iren., Andr., et al.).—With Nos. 1 and 2, No. 8 is connected, which is as follows:

3 The number denotes a distinct human individual (Bede, Grotius, et al.).

4. The expression, ἀριθμὸς γὰρ ἀνθρώπων, denotes that the interpretation of the letters is to be determined in accordance with their conventional numeric value (which must be translated back into letters); the number must be referred, agreeably to ordinary human custom, to a name (Wetstein, De Wette, Hengstenberg, Düsterdieck, et al.). "That this is no easy operation is manifest from the history of the interpretation of this passage, which exhibits (comp. Wolf, Curæ; Heinrichs, Ex-curs. vi.; Züllig, Ex-curs. ii.) hundreds of attempts at a solution of the problem, etc." (Düsterdieck).

5. Interpretations looking off from the personal reference; amongst these, that of Bengel—666 years—is specially worthy of notice (Düsterdieck, p. 457).

Vitringa and Hengstenberg refer the number to the Hebrew name Adonikam (the Lord ariseth), because the Adonikam mentioned in Ezra ii. 18 had 666 sons. Hengstenb. gives a better alternate interpretation, in accordance with which the number 666, as a world-number, falls short of the Divine number Seven. In this sense, Luthardt contrasts the number 666 with 888, the number appearing in the Sibylline books as the number of the name of Jesus. By the employment of the Greek, the Hebrew and the Latin alphabet, the most diverse names have been arrived at (Nero, Diocletian, Luther, Calvin, names of Popes, the Jesuits, Napoleon, Balaam, Cæsar, Rome, etc., see Düsterdieck, p. 459. A quantity of chiliastic computations of time and other definitions, see noted in Ebrard, pp. 891, 892; De Wette, p. 139 sqq.). Calov., Eichhorn, De Wette, Ebrard, Düsterd., and others, have, after Irenæus, declared themselves in favor of the name λαρεῖνος. And thus, according to them, the great mystery amounts, after all, only to such a generality as the Roman world-kingdom.*

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE SECTION.]

By the American Editor.

[For reasons given in the preceding Add. Note (pp. 250 sq.), the writer regards the entire scene described in ch. xii., as having its consummate fulfillment in events under the seventh Trumpet—the blowing of which is yet future. In continuance, he would remark that to him it seems scarcely possible that (according to Lord) the flight of the Woman mentioned in ver. 6, should be different from that of ver. 14. He supposes that after the mention of the flight in ver. 6, an account of the Dragon is given, which in ver. 14 reaches the same incident. In vers. 15, 16 are foretold Satan's attempt, immediately following the flight, to destroy, and its frustration; ver. 17 declares his subsequent purposes of destruction; and in ch. xiii. are described the instrumentalities by which he endeavors to accomplish these purposes.

The position here taken, that the visions of this section have immediate respect to events still future, in which they are to be consummately fulfilled, is not inconsistent with the further idea that they may have already had a typical fulfillment. The course of history is often a foreshadowing, through long ages, of that in which it is to be consummated; and, in such case, a prophecy which has immediate respect to that consummation, will have a secondary (though previously fulfilled) relation to the foreshadowing events. Many of those prophecies which had an immediate respect to the Messiah, found a typical fulfillment in Israel. The many coincidences brought to view by Elliott and others, forbid the thought that in this section there is no reference to the Church of Rome; but, on the other hand, the circumstances of the vision, together with the manifest fact that the fulfillment claimed in the past is to so great an extent shadowy and incomplete, compel the conclusion that the consummate fulfillment is yet future.

The Beasts and the Image (ch. xiii.).

The writer adopts the opinion that the first Beast symbolizes the world-power, or rather that portion of the world-power within whose domain the Church has had existence, and is substantially (i. e., as to the object symbolized) identical with the statue of Dan. ii., the Beasts of Dan. vii., and the scarlet colored Beast of ch. xvii.; the heads representing the seven universal Sovereignities that have exercised temporal authority over the Church, viz.: (1) the Egyptian, (2) the Palestinian, or the Assyrian, (3) the Babylonian, (4) the Medo-Persian, (5) the Grecian (the five fallen heads, ch. xvii. 10), (6) the Roman (the one existing at the date of the Apocalypse), and (7) one that is yet to arise.†

By the wounding the writer understands, not only with Auberlen the nominal conversion of one of the heads, but also its ceasing to be as a universal Sovereignty; and by this wounded head he understands, not the seventh, as does Auberlen, but the sixth or Roman. They are notorious facts of history, (1) that the Roman head was converted (at least nominally) in the person of Constantine, and (2) that shortly after the period of Constantine the one Roman sovereignty ceased to exist. The imperial power was divided amongst the sons of Constantine, and though again united, it was again divided, and finally in the death of Theodosius it ceased to exist as a unit—and from that day to the present there has been no universal government within the area of Christendom. The Empire established in Charlemagne cannot be regarded either as the continuance of the sixth head, or as the seventh, since it never extended over the field of the Eastern Churches, and indeed not entirely over that of the Western. If the seventh head is in its universality analogous to that of the six that preceded it, we must look for it in the future.

* [Universal, i. e., in reference to what may be styled the era of the Church. No human government, since that of Noah, has been universal, in the more extensive sense of that term.—E. R. C.]

† [Daniel presents only the Sovereignities that were to bear rule in and after his day—his fifth power being presented in the feet of the Statue (ch. ii. 33, 41-43), and in the ten horns and little horn of the fourth Beast (ch. v. 1, 7, 8, 23, 24, 26). The view of John sweeps over the entire period of the Church's history, and embraces the two persecuting powers that had preceded Daniel. Glasgow, in his identification of the heads (see foot-note, p. 242), mentions the Palestinian as the second, and the Assyrian as the third. This cannot be correct, as it would imply that six heads had fallen at the date of the Apocalypse, which is directly counter to ch. xvii. 10. Auberlen omits the Palestinian, and reckons the Assyrian as the second, on the authority of Jer. i. 17 sq. Is it not more probable that the Bear contemplated the Assyrian and Babylonian as one head—the third, and the Palestinian as the second? Most certainly this power, as represented by the Philistines (or the Arabian horde), may well be regarded as one of the persecuting heads.—E. R. C.]

* See also the application of the number, on the part of the Swedish theologian Petrelli, to Joseph Smith, the founder of Mormonism, as discussed by me in No. 39 of the Deutsche Zeitschrift für christl. Wissenschaft, 1859.

It is with extreme hesitation that the Am. Ed. ventures to write any thing concerning prophecy as yet unfulfilled. He dares not dogmatise, and he scarcely ventures to suggest what he regards as the possible outline of the future as portrayed in Apocalyptic symbols.

Did ch. xiii. stand alone, the probable interpretation would be that the Beast is to arise from the sea of the nations with the seventh head not only fully developed, but analogous in form to those that preceded it, i. e., under one fully established and visible imperial government, the ten horns indicating ten subordinate kingdoms. A comparison, however, of this chapter with Dan. vii. and ch. xvii. suggests a different hypothesis. May it not be that in the first arising of the Beast the head is to be found in a confederation of the ten horns or kings (themselves wearing the diadems), which confederation is to be subsequently developed into an empire? May it not be that the Image, vers. 14, 15, is the Little Horn of Dan. vii. 8, 24, 25, before whom three of the original horns are to be plucked up, and who is to attain to supremacy over the others—the eighth head of ch. xvii. 11, who is of the seven—in whom the Beast is to be finally and completely “headed up,” and who is the personal Antichrist, the Man of Sin and Son of Perdition. On this hypothesis the second Beast (vers. 11–14), the False Prophet (ch. xix.

20) may represent a class of teachers (perchance an apostate ministry of Christ [comp. Matt. vii. 15], possibly to be consummated in an individual) under whose influence he shall arise, and be anointed and supported, who shall develop into the seventh complete head.

Of the prophecy as interpreted above, we have had a typical fulfillment in the history of the Western Empire. Although wounded unto death, the beastly nature of the world-power has continued throughout the ages. In the West we find the temporal power continued in ten kingdoms, which, under the instigation of the great adversary, might be regarded as confederate in the oppression of the true body of Christ. Under the influence of the Romish priesthood, the Pope—an image of the old Roman emperors—arose; before him three of the original horns were plucked up, and in process of time he attained to a real supremacy over the whole of Western Christendom (see Abstract of Elliott, p. 259). This Image of the old Roman Empire is now, it is true, shorn of his temporal, and in great measure of his spiritual, supremacy; but, in conclusion, it may be asked if it be not possible that he, under the influence and support of an apostate ministry, may yet develop into the seventh and consummate head of the Beast (the eighth head of ch. xvii. 11).

As to the number of the Beast, the writer agrees with Alford (see p. 262). As to the 1260 days, it may be remarked that in the typical fulfillment of the prophecy it may indicate a period of years—in the consummate fulfillment a period of days, or weeks, or months, or years. Properly the symbol indicates 1260 periods of time; what those minor periods are, can be determined only by the event, or at least in the period of fulfillment.—E. R. C.]

SECTION SIXTH.

(First Division.)

The End-judgment in general. The Judgment of Anger. The Seven Vials of Anger.

CHAP. XIV. 1—XVI. 21.

A.—THE IDEAL HEAVENLY WORLD-PICTURE OF THE LAST JUDGMENT; THE ANGER-VIALS IN GENERAL.

CH. XIV. 1—XV. 8.

1. The solemn Festival of the Elect. The Church Triumphant high above the Anger-Judgments of Earth.

- 1 And I looked [saw], and, lo [behold], a [the]<sup>1</sup> Lamb stood [standing]<sup>2</sup> on the mount Zion, and with him a hundred forty and four thousand, having [ins. his
- 2 name and]<sup>3</sup> his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from [ins. the] heaven, as the [a] voice of many waters, and as the [a] voice of a

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 1. [Crit. Eds. give rd, with N. A. B*. C.; it is omitted by P. 1, 28, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 1. Instead of the Rec. ἵστης, N. A. C. [P. 79] give ἵστης. [B* gives ἵστης.—E. R. C.]

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 1. His against the Rec. [Lange reads αὐτοῦ twice, but ἑαυτοῦ only once. Alf., Treg., Tisch., read rd ἑαυτοῦ αὐτοῦ and rd ἑαυτοῦ αὐτοῦ with N. A. B*. C.; 7, 16, 28, with Lange, omit the second rd ἑαυτοῦ; P. and 1 read as Rec.—E. R. C.]

- [om. a.] great thunder: and [ins. the voice which]<sup>4</sup> I heard the voice [om. the voice
3 —ins. was as]<sup>4</sup> of harpers harping with their harps: And they sung [sing] as it were [om. as it were]<sup>6</sup> a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts [living-beings], and the elders: and no man [one] could [was able to] learn that [the] song but [except] the hundred and forty and [om. and] four thousand, which 4 [that] were redeemed [bought] from the earth. These are they which [who] were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are [are] they which [who] follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth [may go].<sup>6</sup> These were redeemed [bought] from among men, being the [om. being the—ins. a] first-fruits [first-fruit] unto God 5 and to [om. to] the Lamb. And in their mouth was [ins. not] found no [om. no] guile [falsehood]: for they are without fault [blameless] before the throne of God
[om. before the throne of God].<sup>7</sup>

2. The Three Angels of the Annunciation of the Final Judgment.

a. Announcment of the Final Judgment as the Eternal Gospel.

- 6 And I saw another<sup>8</sup> angel fly [flying] in the midst of heaven [mid-heaven], having the [an] everlasting gospel [,]<sup>9</sup> to preach [declare glad tidings (εὐαγγελίσαι)] unto<sup>10</sup> them that dwell [sit]<sup>11</sup> on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred [tribe], and 7 tongue, and people, Saying with a loud [great] voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that [who] made [ins. the] heaven, and [ins. the] earth, and the<sup>12</sup> sea, and the [om. the] fountains of waters.

b. Announcment of the Final Judgment for the Destruction of Babylon.

- 8 And there [om. there—ins. another, second<sup>13</sup> angel] followed another angel [om. another angel], saying, [ins. Fallen, fallen, is] Babylon [ins. the great]<sup>14</sup> is fallen, is fallen, that great city [om. is fallen, is fallen, that great city],<sup>14</sup> because she [om.
because she—ins. who]<sup>15</sup> made [gave] all [ins. the] nations [ins. to] drink of the wine of the wrath [anger or rage]<sup>16</sup> of her fornication.

c. Announcment of the Final Judgment upon the Wicked.

- 9 And the [om. the—ins. another,]<sup>17</sup> third angel followed them,<sup>18</sup> saying with a loud [great] voice, If any man [one] worship [worshipeth] the beast [wild-beast] and his image, and receive [receiveth] his [or a] mark in [on] his forehead, or in [on] 10 his hand, The same [he also] shall drink of the wine of the wrath [anger] of God, which is [hath been] poured out without mixture into [or mingled unmixed in]<sup>19</sup> the cup of his indignation [wrath (ὀργή)] ; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the [om. the]<sup>20</sup> holy angels, and in the presence of the 11 Lamb: And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up [om. up] for ever and ever [into ages of ages]: and they have no [not] rest [ins. by] day nor [and by] night, who worship the beast [wild-beast] and his image, and whosoever [if any one] re-

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 2. [Alf., Treg., Tisch., read καὶ ἡ φωνὴ ἣν ἤκουσα ὡς with κ. B<sup>o</sup>. C.; P. reads, καὶ φωνὴν ἤκουσα ὡς.—E. R. C.]
<sup>5</sup> Ver. 3. The reading of κ. B<sup>o</sup>. [P.], etc.; A. C., etc., read ὡς φῶς. [Tisch., as Lange, omits; Alf. and Treg. bracket.—E. R. C.]
<sup>6</sup> Ver. 4. [Lange and Tisch. (8th Ed.) read ὡνάγγ with κ. B<sup>o</sup>. P.; Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (1859) ὡνάγγ with A. C. Y, etc.—E. R. C.]
<sup>7</sup> Ver. 5. This clause is wanting in the best codices. [So modern Crit. Eds. with κ. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P. 1, etc.—E. R. C.]
<sup>8</sup> Ver. 6. [Lange, Treg., Tisch., read ἄλλων with κ. A. C. P., Vulg., etc.; Gb. omits with κ. B<sup>o</sup>. Alf. brackets.—E. R. C.]
<sup>9</sup> Ver. 6. [The pointing is that of the Vulg., Treg., Lillie, etc.—E. R. C.]
<sup>10</sup> Ver. 6. Codd. A. C. [κ. P.] give ἐν before καθήμενος.
<sup>11</sup> Ver. 6. [Modern Crit. Eds. give καθήμενος with κ. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P. Vulg., etc. Lach. (min.), κατακείμενος with A. 14, etc.—E. R. C.]
<sup>12</sup> Ver. 7. [Tisch. (8th Ed.) gives τὴν with κ. B<sup>o</sup>; Lach. Alf., Treg., Tisch. (1859) omit with A. C. P. 1, etc.—E. R. C.]
<sup>13</sup> Ver. 8. [Crit. Eds. give δεύτερος in acc. with almost all the Codd.—E. R. C.]
<sup>14</sup> Ver. 8. [Modern Crit. Eds. read Ἐρεβν ἐρεβν Βαβυλὼν ἡ μεγάλη; the insertion of ἡ πόλις is without authority.—E. R. C.]
<sup>15</sup> Ver. 8. In accordance with A. C., etc., ἡ. [Ὁ is given only by 1 and 36.—E. R. C.]
<sup>16</sup> Ver. 8. [For this rendering anger see Note 29 below. It is, however, exceedingly questionable whether, by reason of its connection with wine and fornication, θυμὸς has not, in this place, a peculiar idiomatic force, and should not be translated rage. See Note 29 below.—E. R. C.]
<sup>17</sup> Ver. 9. In accordance with A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. [P.], etc.
<sup>18</sup> Ver. 9. [Crit. Eds. generally read αὐτὸς with Ὀυρ.; Lange reads αὐτὸς with A.—E. R. C.]
<sup>19</sup> Ver. 10. [The E. V. presents the idiomatic, though not the literal, translation of the Greek. Alford remarks: "From the almost universal custom of mixing wine with water, the common term for preparing wine, putting it into the cup, came to be κεράννυμι; hence the apparent contradiction in terms here."—E. R. C.]
<sup>20</sup> Ver. 10. [Treg. and Tisch. (8th Ed.) give ἀγγέλων ἀγγέλων (without τῶν) with κ. C. P., etc.; B<sup>o</sup>. prefixes τῶν; Tisch. (1859), Alf. read τῶν ἀγγέλων with A.—E. R. C.]

- 12 ceiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience [endurance] of the saints : [,] here are they that [om. here<sup>21</sup> are they that—ins. who] keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.

d. Deliverance concerning the Godly.

- 13 And I heard a voice from [ins. the] heaven saying unto me [om. unto me]<sup>22</sup>, Write, Blessed are the dead which [who] die in the Lord from [om. from] henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may [shall] rest<sup>23</sup> from their labours; and [for]<sup>24</sup> their works do [om. do] follow [ins. with] them.

3. The Three Angels of the Beginning Execution of the Final Judgment.

- a. The Judgment, or Harvest, of the Earth itself. The Chief Harvest, or the Harvest of the Blessed.
(Matt. iii. 12 a. Ch. xiii. 43.)

- 14 And I looked [saw] and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat [sitting] like unto the [a] Son of man, having on [upon] his head a golden crown (στέφανον),
15 and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came [ins. forth] out of the temple, crying with a loud [great] voice to him that sat on [the one sitting upon] the cloud, Thrust in [Send forth (πέμψον)] thy sickle, and reap: for the time [hour] is come for thee [om. for thee]<sup>25</sup> to reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe 16 [has become dry]. And he that sat on [the one sitting upon] the cloud thrust in [cast (έβαλεν)] his sickle on [upon] the earth; and the earth was reaped.

b. The Harvest of Anger, or the Judgment upon the Wicked (Matt. iii. 12; ch. xiii. 42).

- 17 And another angel came [ins. forth] out of the temple which is in [ins. the] heaven, 18 he also having a sharp sickle. And another angel came [ins. forth] out from [of] the altar, which had [om. which had—ins. having]<sup>26</sup> power [authority (έξουσία)] over [ins. the] fire; and cried with a loud cry [great voice] to him that had [the one having] the sharp sickle, saying, Thrust in [Send forth] thy sharp sickle, and
19 gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are<sup>27</sup> fully ripe. And the angel thrust in [cast] his sickle into [unto] the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it [om. it] into the great<sup>28</sup> winepress of the wrath [anger] of God.
20 And the winepress was trodden without the city, and blood came [ins. forth] out of the winepress, even [om. even] unto the horse [om. horse] bridles [ins. of the horses], by the space [or to the distance] of a thousand and six hundred furlongs [stadia].

4. Preparation, in Heaven, for the Judgment.

Ch. XV. 1—8.

a. The Ideal Preparation.

- 1 And I saw another sign in [ins. the] heaven, great and marvellous, seven angels having the [om. the] seven last [om. last] plagues [ins. the last]; [,] for 2 in them is filled up [finished] the wrath [anger]<sup>29</sup> of God.<sup>30</sup> And I saw as it were a [ins. glassy] sea of glass [om. of glass] mingled with fire: and them that had

<sup>21</sup> Ver. 12. The second ēē is unfounded. [Crit. Eds. omit with κ. A. B*. C. P. Vulg., etc.; it is given by 1. 7, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>22</sup> Ver. 13. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch., omit καὶ with κ. A. B*. C. P. Am., Fuld., etc.; Lange gives it with 1, 28, 36, Clem., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>23</sup> Ver. 13. [Crit. Eds. give ἀναπαύσονται with κ. A. C. (B* and 1 also give ἀναπαύονται); P. gives ἀναπαύσονται.—E. R. C.]

<sup>24</sup> Ver. 13. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) give γάρ with κ. A. C. P. Vulg., etc.; Lange and Tisch. (1859) read ὅτι with B*—E. R. C.]

<sup>25</sup> Ver. 15. ἔστι is omitted by the best Codd. [by κ. A. B*. C. P. Vulg.—E. R. C.]

<sup>26</sup> Ver. 18. The article ὁ is omitted by κ. B*. [P.]; the omission probably originated in an incorrect exegetical apprehension of the passage. [Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) omit; Lach., Lange, and Tisch. (1859) give it with A. C.—E. R. C.]

<sup>27</sup> Ver. 18. The reading ἡμαρται ἡ σταφυλή τῆς γῆς, in acc. with B*, etc. The earlier reading undoubtedly has more authorities in its favor. But why is this? The question is whether that which is difficult is significant. [Crit. Eds. generally give ἡμαρται αἱ σταφυλαὶ αὐτῆς, with κ. A. C. P. 1, Vulg., etc.; Tisch. (1859) instead of αὐτῆς reads τῆς γῆς with B*. 7, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>28</sup> Ver. 8. The remarkable reading τὸν μέγαν: the most obvious explanation is that ἀγρός is gen. commun. On the change of gender in the adjective see Wiener, De Witte, Düsterd. [The reading is supported by A. B*. C. P. 6, 8, etc.; κ. 7, etc., give τὸν μέγαν.—E. R. C.]

<sup>29</sup> Ch. XV. 1. (There are three words which in the E. V. are translated wrath: viz.: θυμός, as here; ὀργή, as in ver. 10; παροργισμός, which occurs only in Eph. iv. 26. The instances of the occurrence of the first two are as follows: Θυμός: Luk. iv. 28; Acts xix. 28; Rom. ii. 8 (indignation); 2 Cor. xii. 20; Gal. v. 20; Eph. iv. 31; Col. iii. 8; Heb. xi. 27; Rev. xii. 13; xiv. 8, 10, 19; xv. 1, 7; xvi. 1, 19 (ferocity); xviii. 3; xix. 15 (feroceness); ὀργή: Matt. iii. 7; Mark iii. 6; Luke iii. 7;

gotten the victory [those conquering] over [from] the beast [wild-beast], and over [from] his image, and over his mark [om. and over his mark,<sup>31</sup> and [and] over [from] the number of his name, stand [standing] on [or by] the [ins. glassy] sea of glass [om. of glass], having the [om. the]<sup>32</sup> harps of God. And they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works, [ins. O] Lord [,] God Almighty [,the All-Ruler]; just and true are thy ways, thou King of Saints [om. saints—ins. the nations].<sup>33</sup> Who shall [or should]<sup>34</sup> not fear thee [om. thee]<sup>35</sup> O Lord, and glorify<sup>36</sup> thy name? for thou only art holy (ἅγιος):<sup>36</sup> for all [ins. the] nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest [were manifested].

b. The Real Preparation. Equipment of the Angels of Judgment, or the Seven Angels with the Vials of Anger.

5 And after that [these things] I looked [saw], and, behold, [om. , behold<sup>37</sup>—ins. opened was] the temple of the tabernacle of the testimony [witness] in [ins. the] heaven was opened [om. was opened]: And the seven angels came out of [from] the temple, having [or that had]<sup>38</sup> the seven plagues, clothed in [ins. linen<sup>39</sup>] pure and [and] white [glistening] linen [om. linen], and having their breasts girded [girt around the breasts] with golden girdles. And one of the four beasts [living-beings] gave unto the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath [anger] of God, who liveth for ever and ever [into the ages of the ages]. And the temple was filled with smoke<sup>40</sup> from the glory of God, and from his power; and no man [one] was able to enter into the temple, till [until] the seven plagues of the seven angels were fulfilled [should be finished].

xxi. 23; John iii. 36; Rom. i. 18; II. 5 (his); 8; III. 5 (vengeance); iv. 15; v. 9; ix. 22 (his); xii. 19; xiii. 4, 5; Eph. ii. 8; iv. 31; v. 8; Col. iii. 6; 8 (anger); 1 Thess. i. 10; ii. 16; v. 9; 1 Tim. ii. 8; Heb. iii. 11; iv. 3; Jas. i. 19, 20; R-v. vi. 16, 17; xi. 18; xiv. 10 (indignation); xvi. 19; xix. 15. From a comparison of these passages, especially those in the Apocalypses, it will become apparent that the latter is the intensive of the former (see Lange in EXPL. IV. DETAIL on ver. 10),—that the effects of θυμῶς are for the most part experienced in the present life; those of ὀργῆς in the life to come. In accordance with what he regards as the manifest design of the Spirit to distinguish between the objectives of these terms, the Am. Ed. throughout this translation renders the former by anger and the latter by wrath. It may be objected that this change of the translation of θυμῶς involves a change in the formula Vials of wrath that has become a household phrase. It may be answered that due regard for the distinctions made by the Holy Spirit requires a change here, or in the rendering of ὀργῆς; and the latter would require an alteration of the formula—the wrath of the Lamb (vi. 16), the great day of His wrath (vi. 17), and the fierceness of His wrath (xvi. 19), the wrath of Almighty God, xix. 15.—It should be remarked that in the confused translation of these terms the E. V. closely follows Luther's Version, as it generally does in other instances.—E. R. C.]

<sup>30</sup> Ver. 1. [The translation contemplated is as follows: "Seven angels having seven plagues—the last, for in them is finished the anger of God."—E. R. C.]

<sup>31</sup> Ver. 2. Omitted in the best Cod. [Omitted by M. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P. 6, 7, 14, Vulg., etc.; it is given (see Tisch.) only by I, 25, 36, 79.—E. R. C.]

<sup>32</sup> Ver. 2. [Crit. Eds. omit the article with M. A. C. P.; it is given by B<sup>o</sup>. 2, 7, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>33</sup> Ver. 3. Two variations: of the sons, of the saints. [Crit. Eds. give τῶν ἁγίων with M. A. B<sup>o</sup>. P. 1, 6, 7, etc.; τῶν υἱῶν with; M<sup>o</sup>. C. 18, 95, Vulg., Am. Fidd., etc., read τῶν υἱῶν. Afford judiciously remarks: "The confusion has apparently arisen from the similarity of Αἰῶνων (eternities) and Αἰῶνων; but which was the original, it is impossible, in the conflict of authorities, to decide."—E. R. C.]

<sup>34</sup> Ver. 4. [The construction here is irregular—the first verb being δοξασθῆναι; the second, δοξάσειν.—E. R. C.]

<sup>35</sup> Ver. 4. δοξασθῆναι without εἰς. [So Crit. Eds. with A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P. 1, 12, etc., Am. Fidd.; 6, 7, 12, etc., subjoin εἰς; M. places it before οὐ δοξ.—E. R. C.]

<sup>36</sup> Ver. 4. [Crit. Eds. give δοξῶς with M. A. C. P. 1, etc.; B<sup>o</sup>. 6, 7, 8, read δοξῶς.—E. R. C.]

<sup>37</sup> Ver. 5. [The δοξῶς is supported only by Vulg., Cop., Prms., Ev.; Crit. Eds. omit with M. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P. 1, Syr., Arm., Eth., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>38</sup> Ver. 6. [Lange and Tisch. read εἰς ὄψεσιν with A. C., etc.; M. B<sup>o</sup>. 1, etc., omit εἰ; Alf. brackets, Trog. marks with εἰ.—E. R. C.]

<sup>39</sup> Ver. 6. Codd. A. C., etc. [Am. Fidd.] give the difficult reading αἰῶν; M. B<sup>o</sup>. [P. Vulg. αἰ.] support the Rec. [Lange, Alf., Tisch., give αἰῶν; Lach. and Trog. αἰῶν.—E. R. C.]

<sup>40</sup> Ver. 8. καρπύ without εἰς τοῖς, according to M. A. C. [P.]. [So Crit. Eds. generally; Tisch. (1859) prefixed εἰς τοῖς with B<sup>o</sup>.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

The fundamental idea of the whole section, chs. xiv.—xv., is the End-Judgment in its general form—the same Judgment which subsequently branches into the three special judgments upon Babylon, the Beast, and Satan himself in conjunction with Gog and Magog. The fundamental idea of this first division [chs. xiv., xv.] of our section is the preparation of the End-Judgment, or the judgment of the Vials of Anger,* in Heaven. Because this great judgment brings about the final decision, it is preceded by a very great and solemn preparation in Heaven, the description of which runs through two chapters, the judgments then being executed upon the earth itself, in swift succession, by the outpouring of the Vials of Anger (ch. xvi.). Thus, this heavenly prophetic celebration of the End-judgment is analogous to the the confusion of θυμῶς and ὀργῆς in the accepted Version, the same confusion exists in the language of German, as in that of English-speaking Theologians. As the German Zorn, like the English wrath, is used to translate both these words; and as it is capable of being rendered by both anger and wrath, the Am. Ed. takes the liberty of using the one or the other of the two English words according as the reference is to θυμῶς or ὀργῆς.—E. R. C.]

* [For the employment of this term rather than wrath see TEXT AND GRAM. (Note 28) on ch. xv. l. in consequence of great proleptical celebration of the Seven Seals of world-history in chs. iv. and v.

The anger of God is the manifestation of His love in the forth-going and predominancy of His righteousness unto judgment. God's anger ordains death as a punishment for sin—as a reaction against the spiritual death of man, continuous disobedience or germinant apostasy (comp. the art. Zorn [anger, wrath] in Herzog's Real-Encyklopädie). And inasmuch as anger impels apostasy, or hardening, which is but another form of apostasy, to a crisis, it conducts to eternal death through spiritual death—i. e., it manifests itself in judgment.

But as the very first manifestation of anger was but the climax of a rhythmical succession of chastisements under the reign of long-suffering (Rom. ii. 4, 5), so also the true anger [or wrath] period, the great day of anger [or wrath], appears in a succession of constant augmentations.

Great, however, though the anger-judgments may be, so that they wear the aspect of endless and nameless darknesses—as, e. g., in the destruction of Jerusalem, in the fall of Constantinople,—before God they are weighed and measured, and their measure and operation are appointed them by God's faithfulness. Thus, anger is contained in golden vials; it is so scrupulously prepared in Heaven, so pondered over, so permeated by the Divine Intelligence, that, as a heroic act of Divine reason, it embodies in itself precisely the opposite to what is described in the heathen pictures of the envy of the gods, and the might of destiny. Our remarks hold good especially in regard to the moderation and limitation of the anger-judgments for the righteous, who are oftentimes externally exposed to the same tempests as the godless—in regard to the cutting short of the troublous days, as the Lord expresses it (see Comm. on Matthew xxiv. 22); they are, however, also applicable to the operation of judgment in general.

As these Anger-Vials are, on the one hand, akin to the Trumpets, and unmistakably parallel with them (see Int., p. 86), they form, on the other hand, an antithesis to them, in that the Trumpets are predominantly exhibited in the light of judgments in order to awakening (see ch. xi. 13), whilst the Vials of anger generally operate as judgments of hardening (see ch. xvi. 9, 11).

The first great vision in the Heaven-picture of the end of the world is the throng of the elect centre of the Church Triumphant, representative of the Church Triumphant itself. The scene is on Mount Zion. That Mount Zion can neither be situate in Heaven, nor be geographically understood of the eminence on which the Temple stood in Jerusalem, is evident from the symbolical import of the expression. Accordingly, Mount Zion is the real State of God, in its consummation. The heavenly appearance, ch. i. 12, becomes, ch. iv. 2, the sphere of the heavenly Throne. In ch. vii. 9, the Church Triumphant is depicted in the process of its growth. Here we have the picture of its preliminary spiritual consummation. It is still, however, to be conceived of as in the sphere of the beyond, for only in ch. xxi. is the union between the Christian further and hither shores consummated in the descent of the heavenly Jerusalem, as the City of God, upon the earth. Then, and not till then, the complete pneumatico-corporeal transfiguration of the world, and the real resurrection, are declared. The spiritual consummation of the Church, however, is declared in this earlier passage—its blessed, secure position above the anger judgments now about to break upon the earth. The centre of the picture is formed by the Lamb. He is surrounded by 144,000 elect souls. To the query as to whether these are the same souls that appear as sealed ones in ch. vii., we would answer: First, that the crisis of trial lies before those sealed ones, whilst these who surround the Lamb have passed it, and are, to the triumphant prophetic gaze, perfected ones, the centre, therefore, of the innumerable throng of ch. vii. 9. Secondly, the symbolical import of the number 144,000 must be carefully regarded in this passage also. We need not, therefore, press the inquiry as to the identity of the two bands as individuals, but may regard as established their identity as a whole; inasmuch as the sealed elect of this world must also appear in the other world as perfected elect ones. The companions of the Lamb, therefore, are the complete number of the centre of the blessed, representing the entire Church Triumphant.* They have the Name of Christ and the Name of the Father written on their foreheads, i. e., they are perfected confessors, and hence not such as think they must obscure the Name of the Father by the Name of the Lamb; nor are they such as act in a converse manner. That the Seer intended to represent this throng as composed exclusively of Jews is an utterly ridiculous assumption, from beginning to end. It is, however, particularly ridiculous when the designation of them as virgins is literally understood of celibacy, and the climax of absurdity is reached with the explanatory citation of the Old Testament provision, in accordance with which sexual intercourse rendered unclean for a time. For marriage itself was so far from being represented in the Old Testament as defiling, that, on the contrary, the greatest promises were attached to it. Even Mary, the Mother of our Lord, was obliged to pass through a legal purification, and the Apostle Peter was married. To attribute such a view as the above to the writer of the Apocalypse is to regard him as a dualistic ascetic. Even the Patriarchs and Prophets would, on this ground, be excluded from the number of the elect by this supposed Judaist or Judaizing non-Judaist—for the historical interpretation advances even to the latter conception of the Apocalypticist.

This great optical wonder is followed by a great auricular wonder. The new song of the consummation of the Church Triumphant bursts, in a grand harmony, from Heaven. It sounds like the roar of many waters, for it is the united praise offered to God by the redeemed peoples. It sounds like a great thunder, for it is the completed, world-refreshing revelation of God. It sounds like the harping of harpers, for all true art has entered into the service of the holy. And they sing a new song. These words seem to relate primarily to the harpers, for it is declared that they sing it before the Throne, before the four Life-shapes and before the Elders. The song, however, is not their property; it is given to them as the perfect blossom of revelation; hence it is also new—a marvel of song, which has never before been. We must not overlook the fact that the new song, like the State of God, passes through different stages of development before attaining to perfection; see chs. v. 9; xiv. 8; xv. 8; xix. 6 (comp. Ex. xv.; Ps. xvi. 1). Even the 144,000 elect must learn the song, and they alone can learn it, because it presupposes the entire depth and circuit of their experience and the whole state of their being “bought from the earth.”

* [See ADD. NOTE, p. 193.—H. B. C.]

They have not defiled themselves with women. It is manifest that this can be understood only symbolically, for virgins are spoken of. The symbol, however, does not consist of women themselves, but of defilement with women, by which defilement the women themselves are more particularly characterized (Prov. ix. 13). That illicit intercourse is here referred to, and not marriage, may be understood as a matter of course, in a Book which closes with the Bridal of the Lamb. The Biblical representation of idolatry and apostasy under the figure of harlotry is familiar to all readers of the Sacred Writings, and the idea referred to is the more obvious here, since immediately before the great apostasy has been depicted. The doing of these virgin souls was, however, founded upon their being.* As virgins, they have also kept themselves pure from all fanaticism and party-spirit in their piety, for both these forms of the defilement of piety are also, in particular, very fatal forms of subtle idolatry. Their virginity is expressed in the fact that they follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth—follow Him, therefore, in all His historical and heavenly movements and advances, and follow only Him. Absolute, pure obedience in absolute, pure trust, is the sign that they are bought from among men as first-fruits (see Comm. on James i. 18) unto God and the Lamb. As, however, the consummation of their electness was based upon redemptive grace, evidence of that electness was given, above all, in the characteristics of uprightness (Prov. ii. 7; Eccl. vii. 8) and veracity. Grotius rightly makes mention of the fact that all idolatry is infected with falsehood (John iii. 21). The fact that they should not be represented as sinless and having no need of redemption, is manifest from the declaration concerning them, that they stand before the Lamb, that they are bought, and that no falsehood was found in their mouth—no species of untruthfulness—and that they stand as, in every respect, wholly perfected, blameless—as is expressly affirmed—before the Throne of God.

After this exhibition of the security of the whole blessed Kingdom of God, the announcement of the Judgment may be made. This Judgment has three sides:

First, it is, for the righteous, final redemption; hence, its proclamation as an everlasting gospel, the eschatological gospel of the final σωτηρία, through the judgment, to eternal blessedness and well-being ([Heil] Matt. xxv.; Luke xxi. 28). This gospel is proclaimed to all who sit on the earth, all who are most firmly attached to earth (ver. 6), before the coming of the Judgment itself; and the proclamation is conjoined with an admonition to voluntary self-humiliation before God, Who is here pertinently designated as the Creator, the Cause and Lord of all things, and particularly also, as the Author of the fountains of waters, i. e., all original geniuses.

The Judgment is, secondly, for the world ripe unto perdition, an actual fall into perdition. Hence the proclamation: Fallen, fallen is Babylon the great! Be it here observed that in this passage it is not Babylon in the narrower sense of the word, to which reference is had, as in ch. xvii. As in Genesis, ch. i., water is at first spoken of in the most general sense, then in a special sense, and finally in the most special sense, so here by Babylon the whole ungodly Anti-christianized world is intended. At the outpouring of the seventh Vial of anger, this ungodly and Antichristian world, represented by Babylon, is divided into three parts (ch. xvi. 19), when the general Judgment branches into the three special judgments: upon the Harlot, or Babylon in the narrower sense; upon the Beast; and upon Gog and Magog under the leadership of Satan. Concerning the more general Babylon which has, undoubtedly, for a considerable time had its culmination-point in the more special Babylon, it is declared: *She gave all the nations [heathen, Gentiles] to drink of the wine of the anger [or rage]* of her fornication.* Antichristianity is a unitous evil mock-growth, which has twined its stifling tendrils throughout humanity, as, on the other hand, the tree of the Kingdom of God has pushed its holy roots throughout the same. The wine of the anger of fornication is only materially identical with the anger of God (see ch. xi. 18); in a formal point of view it forms an antithesis thereto. The wine of the anger of fornication is, as sia, passionate, riotous intoxication in apostasy; as a judgment, it is also the wine of the wrath of God, the mind-deranging operation of the death-judgments of God.

Finally, the judgment consists, in the third place, of the sentence which interprets the facts. Thus the actual separation of the sheep and the goats (Matt. xxv.) precedes the sentence passed upon them. The sentence of the Angel is conditioned as follows: If any one worshippeth the Wild-beast and his image, and receiveth his mark on his forehead or on his hand. The one implies the other: recognition of the power of the Beast, and appropriation of the false idea of the system, theocratic or practical testimony. The sentence is as follows: he incurs the internal judgment of having to drink of the wine of the anger [or wrath] of God—deadly derangement of the mind; this is a wine mingled, i. e., here poured out (presented, credenti!) unmixed [ολως κεκρασμενος ἀπαροτος].† as the strongest and most intoxicating beverage, in the cup, the self-limiting decree, of His wrath [ὀργή]. The external local result is as follows: he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of holy angels and in the presence of the Lamb. The outward and apparent form of the Judgment is fiery self-consumption in the ever affluent new elements of fiery irritation. For as, to the righteous, every affluent experience is transformed into the gentle oil of the Spirit, so, to the wicked, every experience becomes brimstone—fuel for his passion. The temporal result of the Judgment is as follows: the smoke of their torment ascendeth into ages of ages. Smoke rises from fire; not, however, from a clear fire, but from that which is hemmed in and dim. Here, doubtless, the fire of hate is particularly referred to—fanatical passionateness in apostasy. Hence it is further declared: they have not rest by day and by night; this they have not, not in a good sense (ch. iv. 8), but in a bad sense, as demonic beings, and the true causality thereof lies in their very apostasy;—the context is: who worship the wild-beast and his image, and if any one receiveth the mark of his name. The fact that the condition of damnation can continue into the ages denotes, indubitably, the temporal immensity of that condition, but is also, at the same time, expressive of æonic figurations and alterations of it.

* Schiller: Gemeine Naturvern sahlen mit dem was sie thun, edle mit dem was sie sind.

* [See TEXT. AND GRAM. under ch. xiv. 8, note 16.—R. C.]

† [See TEXT. AND GRAM. under ch. xiv. 10, note 19.—R. C.]

At the close of this sentence, we again encounter the saying of ch. xiii. 10, amplified by the declaration that the patience [endurance] of the saints is also evidenced in keeping the commandments of God; their faith, meanwhile, appearing as a faith in Jesus. Only through this patience or endurance can a man escape that sentence of æonic fiery death. Here also, as in ch. xiii. 10, this spirit of blessed calm forms a contrast to the fire-smoke of the restless (Is. xlvi. 22). Here again the Seer significantly insists upon the fact that a vital veneration of God and faith in Jesus necessarily accompany each other.

The sentence unto damnation is now contrasted with the sentence unto blessedness. But why does not the Angel give utterance to the latter, and not a voice from Heaven? We might reply, because the experience of the celestial blessedness of proven Christians passes the experience of Angels. According to the context, this beatitude is pronounced by the Spirit, i. e., the Spirit of the Church Triumphant; He, therefore, gives utterance to a testimony of direct experience. The beatitude of the blessed dead is, however, specially signalized, and commended, as it were, as an inscription for grave-stones, with the command: Write. Although this precious sentence (ver. 13) holds good for all times—blessed are the dead, etc.—it is of particular moment when regarded in its bearing upon the last times. Then are the dying, who die in the Lord as they have lived in Him, to be accounted particularly blessed, because they are taken away from the storm of the last days (see Is. lvii. 1).

We, therefore, interpret ἀπάρτι in the following sense: Such are henceforth peculiarly blessed, because they attain unto rest from their sore conflicts, whilst the blessing of their works, and also their perfected vocation to ideal activity, accompany them into the Church Triumphant.

Before passing to a consideration of the three Angels of the beginning execution of the End-Judgment, we must examine the relation of these three Angels to the preceding three Angels of the announcement of Judgment. It is natural to suppose that the first three Angels form an organic totality (ἄλλος ver. 15, ἄλλος ver. 17, ἄλλος ver. 18, akin to ἄλλος, ἑτερος, ἄλλος, 1 Cor. xii. 10), and not that an abstract series of other and still other Angels is cited. The second angelic triad, then, corresponds to the first, and the following scheme is formed:

A. THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE END. THE LAMB STANDING ON MOUNT ZION (ver. 1).

1. The ἄλλος ἄγγελος, the proclaimer of the everlasting Gospel, or the Gospel of eternity (ver. 6).

2. The ἄλλος δεύτερος ἄγγελος, as the proclaimer of the decided fall of Babylon the Great (ver. 8).

3. The ἄλλος ἄγγελος τρίτος, the proclaimer of the judgment upon the worshippers of the Beast (ver. 9).

4. The voice from Heaven: Proclamation of the blessedness of the dead who die in the Lord.

B. THE ACCOMPLISHMENT OF THE END. APPEARANCE OF THE FORM OF THE SON OF MAN ON THE WHITE CLOUD (ver. 14).

1. The ἄλλος ἄγγελος, issuing out of the Temple, proclaiming the hour of the Judgment (the beginning of the entire Judgment) as a judgment upon Babylon (ver. 15).

2. The ἄλλος ἄγγελος, issuing out of the Temple in Heaven, with the sharp sickle for the consummation of the harvest (ver. 17).

3. The ἄλλος ἄγγελος, ver. 18, issuing from the Altar, having power over the fire of sacrifice—who challenges the preceding Angel to the completion of the End-Judgment, as that Angel (ver. 15) had in his turn challenged the form of the Son of Man (ver. 14).

We, therefore, distinguish the group of the proclamation of Judgment (A) and that of the execution of Judgment (B). The former is under the dominion of the Lamb, Who stands fast forever on Mount Zion as the Head of the Church Triumphant; the latter group is under the dominion of the form of the Son of Man on the white cloud, with the crown upon His head, and in His hand the sharp harvest-sickle—under the Christ, therefore, as He comes for Judgment upon the world (Matt. xxvi. 64; comp. Dan. vii.).

With the first Angel, who has proclaimed the eternal Gospel, i. e., the Gospel of a blessed eternity, the final σωτηρία (ver. 6), corresponds the first Angel of execution, in that he notifies the Son of Man of the hour or time of harvest, and summons Him to the harvest; whereupon, He Who sits upon the cloud, casts His sickle upon the earth and reaps the earth. This harvest (ver. 16) is, without doubt, the harvest of the wheat (Matt. iii. 12; xiii. 39), with which the Parousia begins (Matt. xxiv. 31), corresponding to the Gospel of the final redemption, and to be distinguished from the harvest of judgment (vers. 19, 20). Distinctive marks: The Angel of ver. 15 goes forth from the Temple, i. e., the ideal Temple of the ripened Church of God, for the ripeness of God's Church for redemption is the sign of the ripeness of the world for judgment; this Angel is the symbol of the decree of the Father (Acts i. 7). Again, this first harvest is called simply the harvest of the earth; it begins with Christ, as the Judge of the world, casting His sickle from the cloud to the earth—that is, with the commencement of His Parousia itself. Here, therefore, the earth which is reaped, is to be understood in the more special sense of the term.

With the second Angel of proclamation, who cries out: Fallen is Babylon (ver. 8), corresponds the second Angel of execution (ver. 17). This latter Angel issues forth from the Temple of Heaven, for the judgment unto judgment is based entirely upon the objective sentence of Divine Righteousness, which decides when the internal corruptness [Verderben] of the world must find its judgment in external ruin [Verderben]. Even this Angel of judgment, however (who bears a similarity to the import of Michael, the judging Christ), receives the summons to the execution of judgment from another Angel, the third Angel of execution. This Angel issues from the Altar; he has authority over the fire. This is what qualifies him to call for the fire of judgment. For every little flame, every fire of sacrifice, has been a pre-exhibition of the great sacrificial burning at the end of the world. Thus with the third Angel of proclamation (ver. 9), who announced that law of the Kingdom in accordance with which the sentence of damnation (vers. 9–11) and the Judgment, as a judgment of fire, ensue, corresponds the Angel of the actual fiery Judgment, whose world-historic prefiguration is sacrifice.

We scarcely need mention that this double angelic triad forms a group of symbolical figures; in which the first triad belongs more to the economy of Christ, and the second more to the economy of the Father.

It may appear particularly remarkable that the harvest of judgment is represented as a gathering of the vine—the vine thus, apparently, having an entirely different import here from that assigned it John xv. 1. It might here be suggested that all Antichristianity will be a corrupt and apostate Christianity. There is, however, another motive which lies at the door, viz., that of conforming the entire picture to the central idea of the wine-press, Is. lxiii. The wine-press of wrath or deadly judgment brings with it the retribution for the great blood-guiltiness of the world's history—especially as manifested in the history of the martyrs;—this retribution is exhibited in the mighty river of blood in which, at the end of the world, the life of the old humanity pours forth. The treading of the wine-press is accomplished without the city;* an antithesis by which only the City simple, the City of God, can be intended. The depth of the river of blood is indicated by the declaration that it reaches to the reins [Zügel] of the horses—not to the bits [Zäume, German Version], for in that case the horses would necessarily sink. It is with difficulty, therefore, that the horses of world-development (ch. vi. 2; xix. 14) can labor through this stream; it is only through a great crisis that the new world issues from the old. The bloody stream itself overspreads 1000 stadia, the symbol of an æon, by the space of 600 stadia, by which an immense extent of further suffering is indicated.

In ch. xv. is represented the preparation of this Judgment which is about to be executed through the medium of the Vials of Anger. It might be conjectured that the Earth-picture of the Anger-Vials would begin here, but individual traits are against such a supposition—especially the festival-keeping on the crystal sea. First, then, the Seer beholds another sign in Heaven, the seven Angels with the last seven plagues, or judgment-strokes, with which the anger of God shall be filled up. Again, however, the vision must strengthen the courage of the faithful; the description of the terrible angelic forms is therefore preceded by a picture of the celebration of the Judgment in the congregation of the blessed. The glassy sea is here, as in an earlier passage [chap. iv. 6], the completed history of the peoples as a history of salvation, sub specie æterni, transplumed by the Spirit of God; Divinely still and transparent, and Divinely moved. Here, however, it is mingled with the appearance of fire (see p. 34); for this new world-form has passed through the sacrificial fire as well as through the fire of the universal judgment; moreover, the reflection of the Vials of anger falls upon the crystal splendor of this sea. Hence, the blessed are here designated as victors over the Beast. Their victory is detailed. They have vanquished not only the temptation of the Beast, but also the temptation of his Image, the temptation of his mark, the Antichristian symbol; aye, they have overcome even the temptation to a covert [verbümmt] recognition of him by the assumption of the number of his name in a restless pursuit of vanity. And now they all have harps; harps of God, as Divinely inspired singers and players. The new song which they sing is now called the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb. Of the two songs, the song of the typical redemption (Ex. xv.) and the song of the real redemption, one unitous, grand anthem of redemption is born. Even the Law is, in the light of the consummation, glorified into a phase of the Gospel; and it is also, in spiritual forms, its very self glorified, elevated—and, by being elevated, in a sense abrogated [aufgehoben],—transmuted into celestial custom (Matt. v.). This song has reference to the imminent final Judgment from which they, through the redemption, have escaped, as Israel escaped from the pursuit of Pharaoh. Hence, mention is first made of the great wonders of God, particularly as manifest in His conduct of the Final Judgment. Hence, God is again magnified as the All-Ruler [Παντοκράτωρ],* and His ways, in particular,—His government and providences [Führungen und Fügungen—leadings and joinings]—are extolled as righteous and true; as righteous in His world-historic retribution—as true in His final fulfillment of all prophecies and threats. Thus

* [May there not be an allusion to the fact that the crucifixion of Christ, in which the sin and, par excellence, the blood-guiltiness of the world culminated, took place without the city—Ta.]

* [See on p. 94.—E. R. C.]

He approves Himself the essential King of the nations (not simply of the saints, after the scantily attested reading).* Thus the worship of the true fear of God appertains to Him at the end of days as much as, and still more than, in the days of the Old Covenant, for this fear is fundamentally diverse from the fear which is cast out by perfect love. The supreme reason for this worship is expressed in the words: He only is holy—words declaratory of the Absolute Personality, not merely as a negation of all impersonal conduct, but also as the Founder and Awakener of the Personal Kingdom of Love, in Whose almighty traction of love all nations [Hæden, heathen, Gentiles] shall come and worship before Him after they have beheld the grand manifestation of His judgments. These words point to a great conversion, to take place amidst the development of the world's judgment.

After this pre-celebration of the Judgment of Anger, the Seer, with new amazement (ver. 5), beholds the equipment of the seven Angels for the execution of the Judgment. The scene opens with the opening of the Temple of the Tabernacle of the Witness, i. e., the Ark of the Covenant—the Holy of Holies, therefore. There the holy Law reposes, which has testified the will of God to the nations; thence, therefore, perfect retribution proceeds, as a punitive providence which itself bears the mark of the Holy of Holies, and hence is to be regarded entirely as a providence in order to the protection of personal life.

This providence issues from the Holy of Holies, under the guidance of the seven Angels who are to execute the seven last plagues. These Angels themselves appear as highly consecrate spirits, clothed with pure, glistering (or pearl-beset?) linen, for they accomplish the deliverances of supreme truth and righteousness solely, in executing the sentence of the anger of God; they are no mediums for the outflowings of dark and unfree passion, no ministers of blind and senseless fate-strokes. Hence they are also girded as for a festal celebration, about the breast—not as for labor, about the loins; they are girded with golden girdles, the signs of Divine strength, self-determination, and bound-abiding faithfulness.

The seven Vials of Anger are given to the Angels by one of the four Life-shapes. Here it is particularly manifest that these Life-shapes cannot be regarded as symbolical forms of creature life.† They stand between God and these high Angels—who may not, indeed, be identified with the Archangels—and receive the Vials, which are full of the anger of God. One of them distributes the Vials; greater explicitness is not accorded to the vision—hence it would be mere guess-work were we to conjecture that the Lion was the recipient and distributor of the Vials.

Why do we here find the expression: Who liveth into the ages of the ages? The domination of God's wrath in inflictions of death is conditioned by this life. The manifestation of absolute Life is a decree of death to obstinate sinners.

Furthermore, God withdraws Himself from human view as an angry God. Thenceforth the Temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, so that none could go into the Temple until the seven plagues were fulfilled. This phenomenon cannot be resolved into the more general fact that the glory of God veils itself in the pillar of cloud or in a pillar of smoke (Ex. xl. 34; 1 Kings viii. 10; Matt. xvii. 5), although it is connected with that fact. For the Temple was not previously filled with smoke, to the eye of the Seer; he has even had a mysteriously expressed sight of God. But as God, as the Holy One, in general conceals Himself from the gaze of sinful man, so this is especially the case in His judgments. "He made the darkness about Him His covering—His pavilion round about Him dark waters [Wassernacht], clouds upon clouds," Ps. xviii. 11. Thus He covers Himself when He comes with terrors upon His enemies. For the Prophet Isaiah also (Is. vi.), the Temple in which he has seen the glory of Jehovah, afterwards becomes filled with smoke; a sign that this Temple should be burnt, but also an expression of the fact that God is, for the human eye, hidden most in His judgments, most difficult of comprehension therein. That affectionate and familiar boldness which seeks an immediate access into the Temple, to God, shrinks back amid the thunders of majesty; nevertheless, the Mercy-seat is set up in front of the Temple in the person of Jesus Christ for all in the whole world who seek for refuge (Rom. iii.).

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

[ELLIOTT: * Ch. xiv. 1–5, is parallel with chs. xiii., xiiii., and presents a view of the true Church gathered around the true Christ (the Lamb—standing, not yet enthroned)—in antithesis with the merely nominal Church gathered around the enthroned Antichrist, as set forth in those chapters; vers. 2, 8, mark a progression in their condition—they refer to the Reformation;—the harpers are the rejoicing members of the churches of the Reformation; the voice of many waters and of a great thunder implies the uniting of both nations and princes in their rejoicing; the new song, the song of the Reformation, as set forth by Luther: "Learn to know CHRIST, Christ crucified, Christ come down from Heaven to dwell with sinners! Learn to sing the New Song, Thou Jesus art my righteousness; I am Thy sin; Thou hast taken on Thyself what was mine; Thou hast given me what is Thine."—Vers. 6–8 are parallel with chs. xv., xvi. 1–14 (xi. 15–19), and set forth the missionary advance of the true Church throughout the Era predicted in those passages (see on p. 296).—Vers. 9–20 are connected with ch. xvi. 15 to the end of the Apocalypse (see on p. 297).

* [There is considerable complexity in the last part of Elliott's great work. The whole of chs. xii.–xiv. he regards as a connected revelation written on the outside of the Roll, and presenting a revelation parallel with that presented in the other portions of the Apocalypse (inside written) to the close of ch. xix. (see ch. v. 1). Chs. xii.–xiv. 5, he regards as extending to what he styles the primary end of the period of 1260 years, about A. D. 1789–93 (see p. 290); ch. xiv. 6–8, and 9–20, as above.—E. R. C.]

* [See TEXT. AND GRAMM. under ch. xv. 3, note 33.—E. R. C.]

† On the reading Λίβωρ, see Düsterd. [See also TEXT. AND GRAM.—E. R. C.]

‡ [See ADD. NOTE on pp. 161 sq.—E. R. C.]

BARNES: Ch. xiv. contains a succession of symbolical representations, designed to comfort those exposed to the troublous events of chs. xii., xiii., by showing the ultimate result of those events: There is represented by the vision of (1) vers. 1-5, the character and final triumph of all the redeemed; (2) vers. 6, 7, that the gospel will be preached among all nations, and that as indicating the near approach of the consummation; (3) ver. 8, the destruction of Antichristian, Papal Rome; (4) vers. 9-12, the certain and final destruction of all the upholders of that power; (5) ver. 13, the blessedness of all who die in the Lord; (6) vers. 14-20, the final overthrow of all the enemies of the Church; the harvest representing the righteous to be gathered into the Kingdom; the vintage, the wicked to be destroyed.—Ch. xv. commences the statement of the manner in which the pledges of the preceding chapter would be accomplished, which statement is pursued through the subsequent chapters, giving in detail what is here promised in a general manner—it “is merely introductory to what follows, . . . and designed to introduce the account of those judgments with suitable circumstances of solemnity.”

STUART: “The combination of three such powerful enemies against Christianity (the Dragon, Satan [p. 240]; the First Beast, Pagan Rome; the Second, the Pagan Priesthood [p. 261]), was in itself of fearful import. . . . To animate the courage, however, of this noble little band (of Christians), the writer arrests the progress of action in the great drama, in order to hold out the symbols of ultimate and certain victory: Symbol First is of the Lamb (Christ) on the earthly Zion, surrounded by His 144,000 sealed ones—not forces to be employed against enemies, but trophies of victory already achieved; Second, consists of a triplex series of proclamations of (a) the ultimate and certain spread of the gospel throughout the whole world, vers. 6, 7, (b) the absolute and certain fall of mystical Babylon (heathen Rome), ver. 8, (c) the awful punishment that awaits the followers of the Beast; Third, is constituted of a triplex series of actions—(a) the reaping, vers. 14-16 (the harvest which is ripe, i. e., the enemies of the Church whose wickedness is consummated), (b) the gathering, vers. 17-19 (also the wicked), (c) the treading of the wine-press, ver. 20.*—Ch. xv. A Heaven-scene preceding the infliction of the seven last plagues: the martyrs around the Throne sing the song of anticipative triumph, and praise the justice of God as about to be displayed in the overthrow of the Beast, vers. 2-4; the smoke preventing the entrance of any one into the Temple, ver. 8, indicates that no one is permitted to intercede for those about to be punished, and consequently, that their punishment is certain and inevitable.

WORDSWORTH: Ch. xiv. 1-5. This vision reveals that, although during the sway of the Beast many would fall from the faith, yet the true Catholic Apostolic Church of Christ (the 144,000—the number of completeness and union in the true doctrine and discipline of Christ, as preached by the twelve Apostles) would never fail, and would finally triumph over the power of the Beast, and would stand with the Lamb on Mount Zion (in antithesis to the rising of the Beast from the sea) in His Kingdom, which will never be destroyed (comp. Ps. cxxv. 1, etc.); the virginity of the 144,000 (ver. 8) indicates that they were not corrupted by the spiritual harlotries of Babylon (ver. 8; xvii. 1-5); the song of triumph (vers. 2, 3), is that of Angels chanting the victory of the Church.—Vers. 6, 7 predict the universal proclamation of the gospel (by literal Angels?), and that as a preparation for the End (compare Matt. xxiv. 4).—Ver. 8 is anticipative of the fall of Babylon, i. e., Papal Rome.—Vers. 9-11, a warning (by literal Angels?) against worshipping the Beast.—Vers. 14-16, Vision of the Last Judgment, as (1) a Harvest, the ingathering of the good; (2) a Vintage, the crushing of the wicked.—Ch. xv. 1. “St. John, having been brought in the foregoing chapter to the eve of the Day of Judgment, now re-ascends, as usual, to an earlier point in the Prophecy; and enlarges on the judicial chastisements to be inflicted on the Empire of the Beast.”—Vers. 2-4. “Anticipations, continued and expanded, of the future victory of the faithful over the power of the Beast.”—Vers. 5-8. “Preparation for the pouring out of the Seven Vials on the Empire of the Beast.”

ALFORD: Ch. xiv. This is not entirely another vision, but an introduction of a new element, one of comfort and joy, upon the scene of the last; it is anticipatory, having reference to two subjects to be treated of afterwards in detail—(1) the mystic Babylon, (2) the consummation of punishment and reward; it is general in its character, reaching forward close to the time of the end, and treating compendiously of the torment of the apostates and the blessedness of the righteous. It naturally divides itself into three sections: I. Vers. 1-5. The 144,000 are identical with those of ch. vii. 4, and represent the people of God; their introduction here serves to place before us the Church on the holy hill of Zion (“the site of the display of God’s chosen ones with Christ” [“the seat of God’s true Church and worship?”]), where God has placed His King, as an introduction to the description of her agency in preaching the gospel, and her faithfulness in persecutions. II. Vers. 6-13. The four announcements of this section form the text and the compendium of the rest of the Book—these are of (1) the universal proclamation of the gospel as previous to the final judgments, vers. 6, 7, (2) the fall of Babylon (Rome, Pagan and Papal—principally Papal; see on ch. xvii.), as an encouragement for the patience of the saints, ver. 8; (3) the final defeat and torment of the Lord’s enemies, vers. 9-12; (4) the blessedness of all who die in the faith and obedience of Christ. III. Vers. 14-16. The Harvest, i. e., the ingathering of the saints, answering to the proclamation of the gospel in vers. 6, 7. IV. Vers. 17-20. The Vintage of Wrath, fulfilling the denunciations of vers. 8, 11.—Ch. xv. PREFATORY to the Seven Vials: Ver. 1, the description of the vision; vers. 2-4, the song of triumph of the saints victorious over the Beast; vers. 5-8, the coming forth of the seven Angels, and delivering to them of the seven Vials. (See also in EXPL. IN DETAIL in loc.)

* [The above seems to be the division contemplated by Stuart.—E. R. C.]

LORD: Ch. xiv. 1-4. The 144,000 are the same as those of ch. vii.; they are also the Witnesses of ch. xi. raised from the dead; they have not belonged to the apostate Church, nor sanctioned the blasphemous usurpations of the Wild Beast, but are pure worshippers of God; they are the first-fruits unto God (distinguished from the complete harvest of vers. 15, 16); the song of ver. 3 is their song.—Ch. xiv. 6, 7. The Angel represents a body and succession of men, who are to bear the everlasting gospel both to the nations of the ten kingdoms, and to all other tribes and languages of earth.—Ch. xiv. 8. Great Babylon is the aggregate of the nationalized hierarchies of the ten kingdoms; she symbolizes the teachers and rulers of the churches, with whom the kings of the earth join in the institution, practice, and dissemination of a false religion; uniting with her in the usurpation of the rights of God as lawgiver, etc.; her fall is her severance from the civil governments, and dejection from her station and power as a combination of national establishments; the Angel is the representative of a body of men, his flight in mid-Heaven denotes their publicity and conspicuity, and his annunciation, that there is to be a public and exalting celebration of her overthrow.—Ch. xiv. 9-13. The warning implies that notwithstanding great Babylon has fallen from her station as a national establishment, men are still worshipping the Wild-beast and its image, and receiving its mark—those Romish hierarchies are still to subsist after their fall, and acknowledge the Pope as their head; the symbol fore-shows that after great Babylon has fallen from her station as a combination of nationalized hierarchies, numerous teachers shall arise who shall publicly and strenuously assert the exclusive right of God to enjoin the faith and institute the worship of the Church, etc.—Ch. xiv. 14-16. The one like the Son of Man represents (not Christ but) a human being, raised from the dead in glory, like the human form of Christ in His exaltation—the period of this agency, therefore, is after the revivification of the Witnesses; those harvested by him are the saints, living and mortal.—Ch. xiv. 17-20. The dejection of the vine into the wine-press signifies that those whom the vine symbolizes are to be crushed by the vengeance of the Almighty—the treading of the wine-press outside the city (the symbol of the nationalized hierarchies), denotes that the grapes are from their vineyards—the river of blood symbolizes the vastness and visibility of the destruction; the dejection of the vine into the press is a different work from the treading—the former is the work of the reapers, the latter of the Son of God.—Ch. xv. 1-4. A Heaven-scene wherein the entire mass of witnesses, who throughout the ages have held the testimony of Jesus, and refused submission to Antichristian powers, are represented as praising the wisdom and rectitude of the Almighty.—Ch. xv. 6-8. The introduction to the pouring out of the Vials, indicating that no intercession by the saints on earth for the salvation of Antichristian foes is to be offered during this period.

GLASGOW: Ch. xiv. The 144,000 are the same as those of chap. vii.—they are the first-fruits (comp. Ex. xiii. 15; xxxiv. 20), representing all God's ransomed people; the Angel of ver. 6 symbolizes the ministry of the gospel from the beginning (specially as missionaries to the heathen); the Angel of ver. 8 represents home missionaries, who are more controversial and Protestant than the preceding; the third Angel, ver. 9, symbolizes the Protestant ministry; the dead of ver. 13 are the martyred dead of all ages; the one sitting on the cloud, ver. 14, is Christ in His humanity throughout the gospel dispensation sitting on the cloud (the symbol taken from the cloudy pillar), which ever abides over the Church; the Angel of ver. 15, the whole body of Christ's ministry—the time of their prayer to Christ coincides with the death of the Witnesses, the reaping-time of His compliance with that prayer is that of the resurrection of the witnesses (the Reformation); the Angel of ver. 17 is the Holy Ghost; that of ver. 18 represents persecuted saints; the vintage symbolizes the wasting wars that followed the Reformation.—Ch. xv. The resurrection of the witnesses symbolizes the Reformation, and also presents a general view of the glorious events and retributions that followed.—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ch. xiv. 1. And I saw, and behold.—Lively introduction of the new, great vision of the heavenly pre-celebration and preparation of the final Judgment. The consummation of the Church, as appearing in the 144,000 virgins, is symptomatic of the consummation of the earth, of its ripeness for judgment.

The Lamb (ch. vii. 17)—here in the radiance of His glorious spoils of victory.

On the Mount Zion.—Is the mountain to be conceived of as in Heaven (in accordance with Grotius, Hengstenberg, Ebrard, et al.)? Or is it, in accordance with De Wette and Düsterd., to be taken in its "proper" acceptation, i. e., literally? Düsterdieck applies the epithet allegoristic to the interpretation of Mount Zion as the Church (after Bede, Calov., et al.), in his chronic misapprehension of what allegorism is. The vision is, evidently, a picture of the Church Triumphant, resident in that spiritual Heaven which pervades Heaven and earth. Mount Zion, however, particularly symbolizes the lofty citadel, the eternal fortress of the people of God.

And with Him a hundred and forty-four thousand.—There is as little foundation for the belief that these 144,000 are composed exclusively of Gentiles (Düsterdieck) as for the assumption that the 144,000 of ch. vii. are Jews exclusively. For a discussion of the question as to the identity (Grot., Vitringa, and many others) or diversity (Bleek, Neander, et al.) of the two assemblies, we refer our readers to the SYNOPTICAL VIEW [also ADD. NOTE, p. 193.—E. R. C.] The 144,000 of the present chapter are, as a whole, the same kernel of the Church of God—a kernel, however, which has developed, from a host of combatants warring on this side of the boundary which divides this life from the life to come, to a host of victors who have crossed the line; as, similarly, the seal on the foreheads of the first has become the open inscription of appertinency to God and Christ.

Ver. 2. A voice from the Heaven.—The heavenly character of the voice is the main thing; the sounds are sounds of perfection. The voices are in part voices of Christian nations (the voice of great waters), in part the voices of great Prophets (the voice of a great thunder), both the former and the latter being perfected in holy art (the voice of harpers). In a certain degree, therefore, the voice from Heaven certainly does represent the 144,000 themselves (Bengel, Hengstenberg, et al.); more strictly speaking, however, it is the true fountain of song within the Church of God, whose outflowings pass but gradually to the entire Church;—the choir of the celestial Church.—Great waters (ch. i. 15).—The voice of a great thunder (ch. vi. 1).—Harp (or citherns).—With all its sublimity, the song, in its spiritual beauty, is as exquisitely delicate as the music of the cithern. [ALFORD comments: "The harpers and the song are in Heaven, the 144,000 on earth; and no one was able to learn the song, i. e., to appreciate its melody and meaning, so as to accompany it and bear part in the chorus." On the other hand LORD remarks: "The Mount Zion on which the 144,000 stood was that of the heavenly tabernacle. . . The song, accordingly, which he heard from Heaven was their song; not the song of the other redeemed or of angels. This is apparent from the representation that it was sung before the Living-creatures and Elders, and that no one was able to learn it but the 144,000. To suppose it to have been sung by others, is to suppose that they had already learned it."—E. R. C.]

Ver. 8. A new song.—As the Old Testament is new in comparison with the primeval time; as the New Testament is new in comparison with the Old Testament; as the eternal gospel is new in comparison with the gospel of principal curruptia; so the new song is new in comparison with Moses' song of redemption;—a more developed form is the conjunction of the two songs (ch. xv. 8).—And no one could learn the song, etc.—The condition whereon the learning of it is dependent is not artistic talent, but the depth of ethical experience, such as is possessed by the 144,000. The highest æsthetics, the most profound artistic intelligence, in the simplest words.

Vers. 4 and 5. On different attempts to construe the following, see Düsterd.

Attributes of the 144,000: 1. They are virgins (παρθέναι, virgin-like [Jungfräuliche]; the Greek term is applied to men as well as to women) in a religious sense; they have kept themselves pure from idolatry (Coccei., Grot., et al.), ideal iconoclasts, who, it may be, even as heathen, perceived the myths to be but symbols. The words [παρθέναι γὰρ εἶσιν] have been infelicitously referred to monkish asceticism by Roman Catholic exegetes; to celibacy (Augustine, Bede, Rothe, Düsterdieck); to chastity (Hengstenberg; abstinence from all fornication, De Wette); to the Christians of the last days (Hofmann). And thus the symbolism of the entire Old Testament, bearing upon this point, has been unable to obtain a foothold in the minds of these commentators. And the flimsy deductions which Neander and others (also Düsterdieck especially, see his note, p. 466) have drawn from the misunderstanding, are a result of this ignoring of the Old Testament symbol, a recognition of which should the more assuredly have been induced by the fact that this virginity forms the extreme contrast to the extreme abomination of idolatry, viz.: the worship of the Beast.*

2. These (with emphasis) are they who follow the Lamb, etc.—Düsterdieck and others lay stress upon the present, follow, in order to confute the interpretation of the term as a preterite, expressive of the following of Christ to tribulation and death (Grot., Bengel, Hengstenberg). They are the constant attendants of the Lamb, it is declared. The latter thought, however, is inclusive of the former one, even as it is also the result of it. ["If He goes to Gethsemane, they follow Him thither; if He goes to Calvary, they take up their cross and follow Him thither. He is gone to Heaven, and they will be with Him there also." WORDSWORTH.—E. R. C.]

8. These were bought.—Emphasis is laid upon the personal worth of these souls by the repetition of οἱ. They are redeemed [bought] in a special sense, agreeably to their destination of being an ἀνάρχη for God and the Lamb. ["Redeemed from among men"—language derived from the Book of Exodus: 'The first-born of my sons I redeem' (Ex. xiii. 16; xxiv. 20). This exhibits the 144,000 as representing all God's ransomed people."—E. R. C.]

Does ἀνάρχη constitute an antithesis to the entire world (in accordance with De Wette, et al., comp. Jas. i. 18), or, which is more probable, to the general throng of believers (Ewald), or of the blessed (Bengel, Düsterd., et al.)? In accordance with the distinction made, ch. vii., between the 144,000 and the innumerable multitude, a special selection is likewise intended here. In this view, the difference between the Augustine-Calvinistic and the Biblical doctrine of election is clearly apparent.

* [ALFORD: "There are two ways of understanding these words. Either they may be figurative, implying that the pure ones lived in all chastity, whether in single or in married life, and incurred no pollution (see 2 Cor. xi. 2); or they may be meant literally, that these purest ones had lived in that state of which St. Paul says, 1 Cor. vii. 1, καὶ ὑμεῖς ὡς ἡμεῖς ἄνθρωποι μὴ ἀντρεσθαι; and as between these two meanings conceive, that the somewhat emphatic position of καὶ ὑμεῖς ὡς ἡμεῖς goes some way to decide. It is not ἀντρεσθαι, the fact of impurity in allowed intercourse, but καὶ ὑμεῖς ὡς ἡμεῖς that is put forward, the fact of commerce with women. I would therefore believe that in the description of these who are the first fruits from the earth, the feature of virginity is to be taken in its literal meaning. Nor need any difficulty be found in this. It is on all hands granted that he who is married in the Lord enters into holy relations of which the single have no experience, and goes through blessed and elevating degrees of self-sacrifice, and loving allowance, and preferring others before himself. . . But neither on the other hand can it be denied that the state of holy virginity has also its peculiar blessings and exemptions. Of these, the Apostle himself speaks of that absence of distraction from the Lord's work, which is apt to beset the married, busy as they are with the cares of a household and with pleasing one another. And another and primary blessing is, that in them that fountain of carnal desire has never been opened which is so apt to be a channel for unholy thoughts and an access for the tempter. The virgins may thus have missed the victory over the lusts of the flesh; but they have also in great part escaped the conflict. There is not the triumph of the toll-worn and stained soldier, but the calm and the unspottedness of those who have kept from the strife."—E. R. C.]

4. In their mouth was not found falsehood.—"The term ψευδος (comp. ch. xxi. 27) is to be apprehended in its general import, and not to be limited to the falsehood of idolatry (Grot.: non vocarunt deos, qui dii non sunt, Bengel), heresy, or a denial of Christ (Hengstenberg), Düsterdieck. This deliverance is more than half recanted by the remark that a certain antithesis to the sphere of falsehood in which the seducing pseudo-prophet moves, is obvious, (after Ewald, Ebrard). Idolatry is the primary form of falsehood, see Rom. i.

Summation of attributes: For they are blameless.—Here, again, their æonic disposition is cited as the basis of their temporal conduct; as in ver. 4: for they are virgins.

In discussing the design of this vision it must first of all be stated that, in accordance with the construction of the whole Book, the vision has not a backward reference to ch. xiii., but a forward reference to ch. xvi., as a life-picture of the final ωρμή contrasted with the final Judgment. Church-historical interpretations of particular details—some of which are of a remarkable character—see in Düsterdieck, p. 468, and De Wette, p. 143. Christiani's reference of the 144,000 to the Church of the last time agrees better with the context than many another interpretation. A reference to the Israelitish Church of the end [Luthardt] belongs to a Judaizing chiliasm.

Vers. 6 and 7. Another Angel.—The reference of the expression "another Angel" to Angels who have previously appeared upon the scene (De Wette, Düsterdieck), is untenable. The difficulty of ἄλλος was, perhaps, the cause of its omission in Cod. B.; see above.—Flying;—Comp. ch. viii. 13.—In mid-heaven.—A herald to the whole world.—An everlasting gospel.—Ebrard: "The older exegetes, together with Lücke, are probably right in understanding the import of the tidings to be salvation in Christ generally." (Note by the same com.: "Of course this apprehension does not in the slightest degree justify the arbitrary allegoristic references of the three Angels to Wickliffe, Huss, and Luther, and the like. Calovius understood by the first two Angels Luther and Chemnitz, most coolly appropriating to himself the honor of being the third.")—In conjunction, that is, with the other opponents of syncretism; see De Wette on this passage; also Düsterd., p. 474.) Other interpretations of the three Angels, see collected in De Wette, p. 147 (Peter de Bruis, Wickliffe, Luther, etc.). Ebrard refers the Angel of the everlasting Gospel to the preaching of the Gospel amongst the heathen, which, according to Matt. xxiv., precedes the end. But though the old Gospel is, in respect of its purport, an eternal Gospel, it should, as the Gospel of principal salvation, be distinguished from the Gospel of the final redemption to eternal felicity; and the new proclamation, of which the present passage speaks, is not for the heathen alone, but for the whole earth. One-sided, but not incorrect, is the explanation of Corn. à-Lapide: A message promissory of the eternal good things in Heaven. According to Hengstenberg, the message of the Angel is a Gospel [even for the enemies of God], inasmuch as his exhortation to repentance is conjoined with the grant of a respite for repentance. But there is no intimation here of a respite for repentance in the strict sense of the words. The last-named commentator interprets the attribute eternal as having reference solely to the irrevocability or certainty of this Gospel. On the reference of this Angel to Luther, comp. Hengstenberg, II., p. 133.

To declare glad tidings unto them, etc.—The fact that this message is not addressed simply to the heathen who may still be left (Ebrard, p. 408), is clearly evident from the further explication of those for whom it is intended: to every nation, etc. Neither can it be said that the Angel's exhortation to repentance is distinct from his message of joy:—the message in its totality is the everlasting Gospel, in the form of a parænesis [παράκλησις].

The general character of the exhortation:—Fear God, etc., rests upon the law that the preaching of the end goes back to the preaching of the beginning; and that partly on account of the fact that most Christians have learned very little from Christianity, and that there is now no time to lose. The fear of God, according to the text, would be for many the beginning of salvation, as it is elsewhere declared to be the beginning of wisdom. Finally, in the eternal Gospel, the form shall have become transparent for the universal Gospel, and a real worship of God, Who, besides the Heaven, has made the earth and the sea and fountains of waters—all in a symbolical sense—would be the actual foundation of conversion, the beginning of all Christian development. This Gospel is, certainly, conditioned, but, as conditioned, it is also a real Gospel (see Luke xxi. 28). It cannot be denied that the passage is suggestive of man's absolute dependence upon God, as opposed to a false dependence upon, and subserviency to, the Beast;—the particular truth, however, which it is designed to exhibit is, that the judicial power of God is based upon the fact that He is the Creator of all things.

Ver. 8. And another, second Angel, etc.—It is not on account of the dramatic vividness of the scene that one Angel follows another (Düsterd.), but because of the rapid succession of particular items in the approaching judgment—a truth of which Grotius was sensible when he commented thus: Quot rei nunciandæ, totidem nuntii.

Fallen.—One of the sublimest words of consolation for advanced Christians. Comp. Is. xiv. Before God, the thing is decided; the decision on earth approaches. The passage is, therefore, a proleptical description, in prophetic form, of an imminent event (see ch. xi. 18).—Triumphant certainty is expressed in the repetition: fallen!

Babylon the great.—Babel was, even in Genesis, the primeval type of a God-opposed world-power; in the Prophets, Babel [or Babylon] became the greatest type of the anti-theocratic world-power; and here the typical expression is perfected in the type of the anti-Christian world-power. Godless self-exaltation (Dan. iv. 30), apparent crushing omnipotence over against the Church of God, and perfect impotence in face of the suddenly approaching storms of Divine judgment—are the individual features of the type. Here, however, as has already been remarked, the reference is, not to Babylon in the narrower sense of the term, but to Babylon in the most general sense, culminating, of course, in Babylon in the more restricted sense.

Who gave all the nations to drink of the wine of the anger [or rage] of her fornication.—Wine is a symbol of enthusiasm; fornication is a symbol of idolatry; and θυμός in this connection is the wrathful [angry] zeal of fanaticism.* As fanaticism, in its lust of rule and its intolerance, corresponds with internal irreligiosity and prodigality, so idolatry itself corresponds with actual unchastity. These characteristics are found combined in the religion of ancient Babylon, and are in process of constant development, corresponding to the increasingly God-opposed character of the world-powers. Various have been the false interpretations of the wine of anger, as e.g., poisoned wine and ardent wine—explanations rightly rejected by Düsterdieck. Yet the expression can not be regarded as significant purely of the wine of the anger of God; rather, together with the anger of the heathen [nations] or the Harlot, the reaction of the Divine anger develops into judgment (see ch. xi. 18; xvii. 4; comp. Rom. i. 21 sqq.). Thus the fornication also is not simply "fornication committed with great Babylon" (Düsterdieck), but, above all, the fornication of the Harlot herself (see Jer. xxv. 15; li. 7). De Wette and others assert that this Babylon is pagan Rome solely (Tertull., Augustine, etc.); not papal Rome (Vitringa, Bengel, et al.), or Jerusalem (Abauzit, Herder, et al.), not even the wicked world or world-power (Andreas, Bede, et al.). Hengstenberg also confounds Babylon in the wider and Babylon in the narrower sense (ch. xviii.). Similarly Ebrard. It should, indeed, be observed that the judgment upon the great universal world-Babylon commences with the judgment upon Babylon in the narrower sense of the term.

Vers. 9-11. And another, third Angel.—He proclaims the code or norm of judgment in an eschatological form.—With a great voice.—This clause is wanting in the description of the second Angel. Hengstenberg thinks that this is because the proclamation of the second Angel is related to that of the first as the particular to the general, whilst the proclamation of the third Angel is of a general cast again. The distinction, however, lies also, and in a greater degree, in the purport of the announcements.

If any one worshippeth the Wild-beast, see ch. xiii.—He also shall drink, etc.—Düsterdieck: "Kai autós (comp. ver. 17) represents the individual as incurring judgment equally with the Harlot herself (compare Ewald)." A nearer reference of the kai autós would, perhaps, be to the fact that he has previously, in company with the Beast, himself drunk the wine of anger of Antichristian fanaticism, and presented the same to others (see ch. ix. 17, 18; xiii. 10; Hengstenberg, II., p. 151). Taken in the abstract, the reference to the Beast would also give a good sense. The meaning is that none shall be able to excuse himself on the plea that the Beast or the False Prophet seduced him; every one who has worshipped Antichrist shall be personally responsible for the fact—he himself, man for man. An important rule, as opposed to those who hold that individuals belonging to a great mass are personally excused from responsibility. The error is the greater when it includes the belief that the holiness-treasures of a heavily indebted hierarchical system* are available for personal profiting.

Of the anger of God.—Anger for anger—the holy coming as a retribution upon the evil.

Which is mingled [=poured out—prepared] unmixtd.—The expression, literally apprehended, contains a contradiction; it must, therefore, be taken as an oxymoron. Now if, with Wetstein and others, we take κερῶν in the trite sense of to pour out, no distinct point is visible. The explanation of Züllig: "pure essence of mixtures" [spices, etc.], needs not to be refuted. Hengstenberg, on the other hand, seems to hit the point: "In the Divine wine of anger, mixture with water corresponds to the element of grace, of compassion. The entire absence of such an element is represented here." Düsterdieck calls this comment artificial. [See TEXT. AND GRAM., NOTE 19.—E. R. C.]

In the cup of His wrath.—Here ὀργή appears—the stronger form of θυμός. [See TEXT. AND GRAM., note 29.—E. R. C.]

Tormented with fire and brimstone.—Ch. ix. 17; xx. 10. "The hell punishment here described may not be resolved, in accordance with Grotius, into pangs of conscience" (Düsterd.). It goes on, however: In the presence of holy angels and of the Lamb. Can this be said of the torments of hell, in the strict sense of the term? The torments of hell resultant upon a being cast into the lake of fire are spoken of later. Do they not begin, however, in this life, especially at the end of time, where time and eternity come in contact with each other? The fire is the glow of passionate self-consumption; the brimstone is an envelopment in the fuel of irritability and irritation—a fuel constantly blazing up afresh with new ardor; the pangs of conscience are as yet in the background, or at least form but a part of the torment. On the Old Testament types of punishment by fire, see Hengstenberg, II., p. 150. A leading passage bearing upon the subject is Is. lxvi. 24. ["See ch. xx. 10, and Is. xxxiv. 9, 10, from which the imagery comes. De Wette is certainly wrong in interpreting ἐν ὧν, nach dem Urtheile—in the judgment of. It is literal, and the meaning as in Luke xvi. 23 sqq., that the torments are visible to the angels and the Lamb." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

And the smoke of their torment.—Ch. xix. 3; Is. xxxiv. 10; Matt. xxv. 41. Smoke is * [Whether the indebtedness has a human or a Divine bearing—i.e., whether it signifies the issue, by the system in question, of more promissory notes than its capital will cover,—or whether it is indicative of a moral involvement toward God—the German leaves undecided (Heilighen Schuldenes rines schoer verschuldeten hierarchischen Systems); Dr. Lange's somewhat frequent use of the Apokalypse, however, favors the idea that both aspects of the matter were contemplated by him.—Ta.]

* [See TEXT. AND GRAM. (note 16) in loc.—E. R. C.]

a phenomenon attendant upon imperfect combustion. If they burned with free devotion in sacrificial fire, they would blaze refulgently, without smoke; the more the flame is restrained by resistance, the thicker and blacker is the smoke which pours forth. Hence, also, βασανισμός is not pure [passive] suffering, but a racking or torturing process. Hengstenberg: "They have no rest day and night from being tormented"—with reference to ch. xx. 10, and in opposition to Vitringa, who interpreted the passage as referring to the torment of conscience.

They have no rest by day and by night.—Absolute unrest or excitement—a frantic condition, therefore—forms the spiritual aspect of their βασανισμός.

Who worship, etc.—The present form of the verb must not be overlooked. The offence continues along with the βασανισμός. It is not: who worshipped. With the punishment, the crime which at the first merited that punishment, endures.

Ver. 12. Here is the endurance [Lange: patience], etc.—Are these words a digression of the Seer, or are they the concluding utterance of the Angel? In accordance with the analogy of ch. xiii. 10 (comp. also ver. 18), they are a practical digression of the Seer. Thus Hengstenberg regards them: "The verse has reference to the point of view, the purpose to which the foregoing is subservient." Does this mean that the warning against this hell-punishment is the source of the patience [endurance] of the saints? This is about the theory maintained by those who occupy a legal stand-point; it was the theory of the Middle Ages, and is still the theory of the most popular Protestant sermons which advocate a turning from sin to holiness principally on the ground of the pain thereby to be escaped. The patience [endurance] of the saints, however, has its source in the righteousness of God, in that sacred and Divine justice which is here depicted in characters of flame (see ch. xiii. 10). The explanation: Here is the place for patience, here it must give proof of itself (De Wette, Hengstenberg, Ebrard), virtually translates ὁδε by hitherto which, undoubtedly, in and for itself gives a good sense; it is also immediately to be retained as a challenge, as is evidenced by the subsequent sentence. The construction of τιποῦντες "is informal, like ch. i. 5; ii. 20" (Düsterdieck). In the sense of the Seer, however, a second ὁδε is, probably, presupposed. The expression: The commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, is, doubtless, of wider scope than the distinction of Law and Gospel. The whole of revelation is grounded in the eternal righteousness of God, and culminates in the faith of Jesus, which is principally the steadfastness of Jesus Himself.

Ver. 13. And I heard a voice.—We cannot fix this voice upon any distinct person [i. e., "saint or Elder" (Hengstenberg)]; nor are there two voices (the first voice and the speaking Spirit, Züllig). It is the voice of God's Spirit Himself in the Church Triumphant, in His sympathy with the Church in the last time. The temptation to apostasy is more prevalent than ever: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. Düsterdieck (in accordance with most commentators) rightly distinguishes between the theme, which closes with ἀπάρτι, and the subsequent rationale. On a preposterous reference of ἀπάρτι to the last sentence, see Düsterdieck. With Cocceius and Hammond, we firmly adhere to the view that the proposition does not simply contain a general consolatory truth, but that it has a special bearing upon the last troublous time. Those, however, who die in the Lord are not to be apprehended as martyrs of the old style (Züllig); for the expression is not: die for the Lord's sake (Grotius, et al.), but in Him, in positive fellowship with Him.—Henceforth is by Roman Catholic exegetes explained (Stern) as intimating that the intermediate state of purgatory is now [at the end of the world] done away with; by De Wette, Hengstenberg, Düsterdieck, it is interpreted as signifying that the glorious end is near—hence also the perfect beatification of believers. This explanation should be retained only upon the condition that special stress be laid upon μάρτυρες, with reference to the temptations and trials of the last time; but precisely this has previously been disallowed by Düsterdieck. Our explanation of the manifestly interpreted iva is indicated in the translation of the text given in the beginning of this chapter. See the author's Dogmatik, p. 1248.

["The mention of the endurance of the saints, brings with it the certainty of persecution unto death. The present proclamation declares the blessedness of all who die not only in persecution, but in any manner in the Lord, in the faith and obedience of Christ. And the special command to write this, conveys special comfort to those in all ages of the Church who should read it. But it is not so easy to assign a fit meaning to ἀπάρτι. That it belongs to the preceding sentence, not to the following one, is, I conceive, plain. . . . And, thus joined with the former sentence, it must express some reason why this blessedness is to be more completely realized from this time when it was proclaimed than it was before. Now this reason will quickly appear, if we consider the particular time, in connexion with the proclamation which is made. The harvest of the earth is about to be reaped; the vintage of the earth to be gathered. At this time it is, that the complete blessedness of the holy dead commences: when the garner is filled and the chaff cast out. And that not on account of their deliverance from any purgatorial fires, but because of the completion of this number of their brethren, and the full capacities of bliss brought in by the resurrection." ALFORD.—"The language is evidently not to be construed as implying that they who had died in the faith before were not happy, but that in the times of trial and persecution that were to come, they were to be regarded as peculiarly blessed who should escape from these sorrows by a Christian death." BARNES.—E. R. C.]

For [Lange: But] their works follow with them.—A rejection of the bare idea of reward is detrimental to the idea of retribution itself. The same spirituality of Theology which combats the idea of legal merit as pertaining to works, has also to maintain the truth that those works of believers which have been done in God have become for the performers of them not simply powers and virtues of the new life, but also riches of that life. The κόποι, as such, are left here—from them the blessed rest; but as ἐργα, as ideal operations, they pass with them, as their escort, into eternity. Not simply the memory of their deeds accompanies them, but also the love-blessing of this whole world in which they have helped to build the future. [May not the distinction be this: They rest from their labors (service rendered with fatigue and pain), but their works (service to be rendered without fatigue and pain) follow them? See Add. Comments on ch. vii. 15, and foot-note (*) (2d column), p. 154.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 14. And I saw, and behold (a new vision-wonder, the Judgment scene itself).—The Angels of the announcement of Judgment are succeeded by the Angels of the execution of Judgment; Christ being, as before, at the head. Düsterdieck's superscription of the following section: "further figurative announcements of the now imminent judgment," overlooks the antithesis between this section and the preceding one.—A white cloud.—Commencement of Christ's Parousia. The fact that Christ alone can be intended is manifest not only from the attribute of the golden crown and the parallelism with Dan. vii. 13; Matt. xxvi. 64, but also from the harmonious contrast between vers. 14 and 1. In the latter passage, Christ stands, as the Lamb, on Mount Sion, keeping holy-day in the midst of the Triumphant Church; in the former, the King Militant appears on the white cloud to execute judgment upon the world. Even the parallelism which the three following Angels of execution sustain toward the three preceding Angels of announcement, serves as evidence that none other than Christ can be intended.* Hence, Düsterdieck rightly rejects the interpretation of the figure as an Angel (Grotius, et al.), or as heroic princes, proclaimers of the principles of evangelic truth (Vitringa).—A sharp sickle.—The implement of harvest in the hand—a symbol of beginning judgment.

Ver. 15. Another Angel.—No reference is had to ver. 14, nor to the preceding Angels (Düsterdieck); the reference is to the two following Angels; see above.—Send forth thy sickle.—Such a command is, certainly, not in harmony with the position of a real Angel; assuredly, however, the decree of the Father (see above) is most aptly set forth in a symbolical Angel.

Ver. 16. Cast His sickle.—The commencement of the judgment, therefore, precedes the actual Parousia of Christ.† The Harlot, or Babylon, is first judged through the Beast (ch. xvii. 16); then follows the appearance of Christ, for the destruction of the Beast himself (ch. xix. 11). Babylon, or the fallen theocracy, is destroyed by mankind; the Antichristian bestialization and deification of man is destroyed by Christ; Satan, with his rabble rout, is destroyed by God the Father.—And the earth was reaped.—This is the true harvesting of the fruit, the net produce of the harvest-fields of earth for God (Matt. xxiv. 31).*

Ver. 17. Another Angel.—This Angel represents the judgment of reprobation, or the dark side of the Judgment. According to Hengstenberg, this Angel is Christ Himself again. It is wrong to suppose either that Christ only is intended or that a mere ordinary Angel is meant. Why should not the Angel, as a symbolical unit, represent that plurality of Angels, who, according to Matt. xiii. 41, are the executioners of judgment? The present passage is not identical with ch. xix. 15, nor with Is. lxiii. Certainly, Christ is Himself the Judge in reference to the reprobate as well as to the blessed, but the Angel, as such, is the symbol of a manifestation of Christ which must be distinguished from Christ Himself. Hengstenberg sees in this Angel a terrible warning to those who might suffer themselves to be driven by fear into concessions; he does not say, however, what concessions he means—the expression is so indefinite that it might even mean concessions against the hierarchy.

Vers. 18, 19. And another Angel.—See chs. viii. 3; xvi. 7. The altar here is not the altar of burnt-offering on earth, but the altar of incense in Heaven.—Out of the altar; this can be said only of a symbolical Angel. The mythical idea of a fire-angel (De Wette) must be rejected (see above).

Gather the clusters of the vine of the earth.—Hengstenberg: "Such an antithesis between the harvest and the vintage as is assumed by Bengel, is not indicated by any feature of the description." Manifestly, however, the first harvest, as the fruit harvest [fruit—in the primitive sense of that which is profitable and good.—Ta.], is characterized by the fact that the harvest-field has become dry or white in appearance; the grapes, on the other hand, are full of grape-blood. See Ebrard, pp. 416-18. Compare Joel iii. 18. The remarkable choice of the figure of the vine, the grape, and the blood of the grape might, primarily, be based upon the fact that the vintage comes later than the wheat-harvest—thus signifying that the judgment upon the wicked is not until after the ingathering of the righteous. To this, however, must be added the consideration that Christ calls Himself  $\theta\acute{\alpha}\nu\alpha\tau\omicron\varsigma\ \eta\ \alpha\lambda\theta\iota\nu\eta$ , an expression suggestive of the contrast of a vine which is such in a merely symbolical, unreal sense. Such an one was the Old Testament Theocratic Church at first. The whole vineyard early became corrupted, however, according to Is. v. The vine was laid waste, Ps. lxxx. It became a degenerate vine, Hos. x. 1; Jer. ii. 21; Deut. xxxii. 32. It is to be given over to judgment, Ezek. xvii. 6-10. The fact that the Old Testament vineyard, with its vines, has become a fief [Lehnbesitz, the old feudal term—estate in loan, trust-estate] of the New Testament Church of God, is declared by the parable Matt. xxi. 33 sqq. Christ, the true [wesentlich—essential, genuine] Vine, is the author of true [see preceding parenthesis] eternal joy and inspiration; the symbolical vine of the New Testament Church, therefore, in so far as it differs from Christ, is a vine which attains its maturity in spurious enthusiasms, fanatical and untrue joys and festivals. The most terrible thing in its degeneracy, however, is the fact that its clusters acquire their juice [Blut] by blood-shed—that it has been the author, to a constantly increasing extent, of demonic joys of bloodthirstiness; hence pure blood flows from it when it is trodden in the wine-press, and the conception grape-blood or juice is exchanged, with fearful irony, for blood (see Is. lxiii. 8). The base-lying thought is the following: as much blood as the vine has drunk in, shall be pressed out of it again in the great wine-press of the anger of God.

* [For a different view, see abstract of Lord, p. 283.—E. R. C.]

† [This conclusion does not follow. If the appearance of the Son of Man on the white cloud be the "commencement of Christ's Parousia" (see comment on ver. 14), then, manifestly, the casting forth of the sickle does not precede that Parousia.—E. R. C.]

* [For a contrary view, see abstract of Stuart, p. 232.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 20. Without the city.—Explained by most commentators of Jerusalem; by others of Rome. In the symbolical apprehension of the passage, only the City of God can be meant. But is this the Church, as Hengstenberg maintains, or the heavenly Jerusalem, as Bede, et al., affirm? The external Church, at all events, can not be intended, since the text treats of the end of the world, a time when the Church is fallen. The visible appearance of the heavenly Jerusalem (ch. xxi. 2), however, is preceded by the Judgment—in the first (ch. xviii. 24; xix. 2), second (ch. xix. 17 sqq.), and even third instance (ch. xx. 9). Nothing, therefore, save the vital Church of God of the last time can be understood—in its quality, incontrovertibly, of passing into the visible appearance of the heavenly Jerusalem and the imperishable City of God (ch. xxi.); as, on the other hand, the treading of the grapes begins with the judgment upon Babylon (to which judgment it seems, also, to have special reference), but extends through the subsequent judgments into the æons. We are of opinion that this æonic duration is that which is denoted by the 1600 stadia (see above).—In view of all this, therefore, the application of without the City to the contrast of Heaven is not entirely incorrect, but too external. Curious interpretations of the reins, see in Düsterdieck's note, p. 478. [Alford regards the City as that of ch. xi. 2, viz.: Jerusalem; so also Barnes, etc.; Wordsworth, as the New Jerusalem; Lord, as that by which the apostate hierarchies are represented.—E. R. C.]

For a thousand and six hundred stadia.—By this we understand a punitive suffering extending beyond this present æon into future æons, a state of misery to which the eye can see no limit. Manifest interpretations of the number, see in De Wette. The complete number 1000 and the age of Noah at the time of the deluge (Andreas). The number  $4 \times 400$ , denoting the expanse of the earth and the four regions of Heaven (Victorinus, et al.). The length of Palestine (Bengel, et al.), with reference to Jerome. Extension of the Roman dominion (Mede). The British Islands (Brightman: the Reformation; Cranmer: the Angel, ver. 18!). Martyrdom of converted heathen (Alcasar). According to Ebrard, the number should be analyzed by 40. "The number 40 is the number of punishment;  $40 \times 40$  is, therefore, the number of involved punishment." An involved [mathematical sense] temporal measure of punishment of some 1600 years does not exactly coincide, however, with the æonic succession of judgment.

Ch. xv. 1. Another sign in the Heaven.

—The Seer has already beheld the unitious phenomenon of the final Judgment; he now sees the historic preparation and development of the same in the succession and intensification of the Anger-Vials or judgments of hardening. The antithesis to the sign in ch. xiv. 14 is the pragmatical preparation of the Judgment. The sign, however, is a sign in the Heaven; it still belongs to the Heaven-picture. "The greatness and marvellousness of the sign does not lie solely in the fact that seven Angels—not Archangels (Züllig, Stern; comp. De Wette)—appear simultaneously, but also in their peculiar equipment: ἔχοντες πλῆρες ἐνρά" (Düsterdieck). Hengstenberg thinks that even before the reception of the Vials they might have been recognized as the Angels of the seven plagues by some sign—especially by eyes like flames of fire. Züllig, De Wette, Ebrard, Düsterdieck, rightly regard the vision of ver. 1 as the superscription of the immediately following section, as the Angels themselves do not issue from the Temple until ver. 5 (in opposition to the conception of Hengstenberg). We do not think, however, that the section under this superscription reaches to ch. xvi. 21 (Düsterd.), but hold that it ends at ver. 8, since with ch. xvi. 1 a new picture—the Earth-picture—begins.

The seven plagues—the last.—That is, the eschatological last anger-strokes, which bring in the final Judgment; these plagues are, manifestly, characterized as judgments of hardening. The last: This term is, on the one hand, not to be construed as having reference to individual life, or to be taken partially (Bengel); but on the other hand, neither should it be confounded with the final Judgment itself (Hengstenberg), as Düsterdieck justly remarks. Ἐρελσθη denotes not so much the coming to an end as the consummation, the full development of the anger of God. Even in this point the New Testament preserves its septenary, in contrast to the ten plagues under which Pharaoh and the Egyptians hardened themselves. As, however, those plagues were instrumental to the redemption of the people of Israel, so are these instrumental to the perfect redemption of the New Testament Church of God. For the unitious mass of the earth all plagues do indeed come to an end with the last of these plagues; it is not so in the case of the enemies of Christ.

Vers. 2-4. And I saw as it were [Lange: an appearance as].—It might be queried: Is not this a second and therefore superfluous pre-celebration of the Judgment, since we have already had one pre-celebration of it in ch. xiv. 1-5? That, however, was the general pre-celebration of the entire Judgment, with reference to the Church Triumphant and its escape from said Judgment; here we have the more special pre-celebration of the plagues of anger, the second part of the Heaven-picture. The antithesis to the fearful stormy succession of those last strokes of anger is formed by the crystal sea—the world-history of the saints, calmed and clarified in God; the antithesis to the impenitent world on the earth is formed by the conquerors by [on] the crystal sea; the antithesis to the blasphemies of those visited by the plagues is formed by the heavenly celebration in song, and adoration of the righteous judgments of God.

As a glassy [Lange: crystal] sea mingled with fire, see ch. iv. 6.—Düsterdieck justly remarks, against Ebrard, that the article [before sea] must be absent because it is only the image of a crystal-clear sea that is spoken of. The greater stress must be laid upon this circumstance, since the idea of a crystal surface of sea mingled with fire does not come within the possibilities of thought, and hence Ewald, in consequence of his insisting upon the reality [materiality] of the image has arrived at the conception of an "ineffably seething and foaming mass, a fiery broth" (see Düsterdieck, p. 484). The image of a crystal-clear sea in Heaven may, however, readily appear as though illuminated and "reddened by the fiery glare of the Anger-Vials on earth; and this very reflection is expressed in the song of praise which refers to the judgments of God; moreover, the clarified world-history has itself passed through the fire of earthly world-history (see p. 34 and ch. iv. 6). ["The addition, μεμιγμένην πυρὶ, is probably made as bringing into the previous celestial imagery an element belonging to this portion of the prophecy, of which judgment is the prevailing complexion." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

And I saw those conquering.—To this passage, again, a great and confused mass of interpretations attaches. De Wette: The multitude and glory of the blessed (And., Areth.). Baptism (Primas., et al.). The Divine truth in which believers have their station (Vitringa). Multitude of the heathen (Alcas.). Gentile Christians (Grotius). De Wette: The atmosphere. The last named commentator rejects the reference to the brazen sea in the Temple, but assumes a reference to Israel's passage through the Red Sea. The fire has also been variously interpreted: Trial-fire (Andreas; others: temptation, persecution, conflict). Martyrdom (Primas.). Love (Grot.), etc. See De Wette, p. 152. According to Düsterdieck, the crystal sea mingled with fire denotes the unity of the beatific grace and the judicatory righteousness of God. The conquerors are not simply martyrs (in accordance with Eichhorn, Ewald, et al.), neither are they (because of the present: νικῶντας) such as are still in the conflict; they are, in a proleptical representation (De Wette), the congregation of victors, especially those of the last time, over against the great plagues of the last time and those who blaspheme under them. 'Εκ τοῦ θνῆσιον undoubtedly does not mean that they have destroyed the power of the Beast; from this fact, however, it does not follow that it must mean: away from the Beast [vom Thiere weg], as if they had kept themselves at a distance from him.

[On (or by) the glassy sea.—"Does ἐν import actually upon, so that they stood on the surface of the sea, or merely on the shore of? On every account the latter seems the more probable, as better suiting the heavenly imagery of ch. iv., and as according with the situation of the children of Israel when they sung the song to which allusion is presently made. The sense may be constructionally justified by ch. iii. 20, and viii. 3." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Harp of God.—Tuned solely for the praise of God (Beng.).

Ver. 3. And they sing, etc.—The song of Moses is the lyrical celebration of the typical redemption by Moses; the song of the Lamb the celebration of the real redemption by the Lamb; and the two songs in their unity as one song are the lyrical celebration of the Old and New Testament revelation faith, in view of the whole redemption which began with Moses, was decided with Christ, and is now thoroughly consummated through the fiery judgments of God. Not two songs, therefore, sung respectively by Old and New Testament believers (Andr.); not the song of Moses applied to Christ and the things of Christ (Grotius); not a song composed at once by Moses and by the Lamb (Ewald, Düsterdieck.); but the whole redemption as mediated by Moses and Christ, with a distinct reference to the song of Moses and the passage through the Red Sea, as a type of the passage through those rivers of fire by which the faithful of the last time shall be separated from the hardened sinners of that time.

Great and marvellous, etc.—The thought of Vitringa: Canticum Moysi habet spirituales et mysticum sensum, secundum quem si accipiat fit canticum agni, contains something of truth inasmuch as even in the song of Moses, together with the omnipotence of God, which destroyed the enemy and saved the people of Israel, the manifestation of His holiness is especially magnified, and it is also even intimated that the whole event must make a startling and a relatively awakening impression upon the heathen. Comp. Ex. xv. 14-16 with the conclusion of the song in the Apocalypse.

Vers. 3, 4. The song first glorifies, in an objective contemplation of the Judgment, the marvellous, all-swaying, kingly rule of God over the world, in particular over the nations—a governance now attaining its consummate appearance, especially in the righteousness and truth (absolute consistency and faithfulness) of His ways. Then, secondly, it declares the impression made by this rule upon the conquerors: it produces the most sacred awe of the holiness of God, and a joyful enthusiasm which prompts them to praise His name as it shines in the perfection of His revelation. Thirdly, the song expresses the prophetic expectation of the effect which these judgments of God shall produce upon the world of nations;—a genuine New Testament trait as expressive of the hope that many shall yet be converted even under the ministry of the Vials of Anger, Ex. ix. 16, xiv. 7; Ps. cxxvi. 2; Micah vii. 16.—In ver. 4, as well as in ch. xvi. 6, δοξα is used "in reference to God, which is unusual."

Ver. 5. Opened was the Temple.—It is more precisely defined as the Temple of the Tabernacle of the witness. According to Grotius, Ebrard and others, the Holy of Holies is itself intended; according to Ewald and Düsterdieck, the Sanctuary proper is intended, as an adjunct to the Holy of Holies. Hengstenb.: "The Temple in its quality of being the place of the testimony." The Temple as the Sanctuary, in contrast to the Holy of Holies, also needed not now first to be opened; see Syn. View.—Be it further observed that the seven Angels are symbolical figures of anger in the ramification and course of its domination. ["The ναός is the holy place of the Tabernacle, to which latter the appellation τοῦ μαρτυρίου is here peculiarly appropriate, seeing that the witness and covenant of God are about to receive their great fulfillment." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 6. Clothed in linen pure and glistening.—Their adornment is similar to that of Christ. Their import also is, doubtless, connected with that of the Archangel Michael. The reading λίθων gives occasion to many debates here (see Düsterdieck, p. 486). Clothed with Christ, the Jewel, or with the ornament of the virtues (Andreas)? This is destitute of all appropriate meaning, and about the same remark may be applied to the explanation that (with reference to Ezek. xxviii. 13) a garment bestudded with precious stones might be understood. In conjunction with such a λίθος the adjective λαμπρός would be rather superfluous, and καθαρός, at all events, would be inappropriate.

Ver. 7. And one of the four Living-beings [Lange: Life-shapes].—Here, likewise, the false interpretation reappears, according to which the four so-called Beasts are representatives of the creature, and hence one of them appears because the plagues concern the whole creation.—Into the ages.—The eternity of God surpasses the time of the seven Anger-vials. The Vials of Anger also, denote death, unceasing and repeated—and over against them stands the eternally Living One.

Ver. 8. With smoke.—Veiling of the Divine Majesty (Bengel). Also a sign of His unapproachableness in the manifestation of His holiness. See Is. vi.; Ex. xl. 84; 1 Kings viii. 10. Comp. Syn. View. Different interpretations, see in De Wette, p. 154; Düsterdieck, p. 484. There are some very curious interpretations amongst those cited, as for instance that of Cocceius: The human ordinances of popery debar men from faith. Or that of Calov.: Symbol of the blindness of unbelief.

["No one was able to enter into the Temple (comp. 1 Kings viii. 10, 11; Ex. xl. 34, 35) until the seven plagues of the seven Angels should be finished.—The passages above referred to give the reason: because of the unapproachableness of God, when immediately present and working, by any created being. See Ex. xix. 21. When these judgments should be completed, then the wrathful presence and agency of God being withdrawn, He might again be approached."—ALFORD. See also the conclusion of the abstract of Stuart, p. 282.—E. R. C.]

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE SECTION.]

By the American Editor.

[This section consists, as it seems to the writer, of three complete visions, and the beginning of a fourth—each relating to a period still future, and terminating with the consummation of the present æon (the æon immediately preceding the establishment of the Millennial Kingdom). Each of these visions is independent—each contemplating matters not referred to in any of the others, and each describing events mentioned by all the others, though in a different mode and under different relations.

Vision I., ch. xiv. 1–13, is introduced by the strong disjunctive formula, Καὶ ἰδὼν, καὶ ἰδὼν, and consists of several consecutive parts.—Part first (vers. 1–5) contemplates the body about to possess the Kingdom—the Lamb with the completed ἀπαρχή (see p. 193)—standing on the Mount Zion.* It describes also the condition and character of the chosen companions of Christ.—Part second (vers. 6, 7) relates to a universal proclamation of the Gospel preceding the outpouring of the Vials of anger. Whether the Angel, in this and the following parts, denotes a real Angel, or symbolizes a body of men specially commissioned for the purpose indicated, it is impossible now to determine.—Part third (ver. 8) foretells a proclamation of the fall of Babylon (see on ch. xviii. 2).—Part fourth contemplates a public proclamation of woe to be visited upon the worshippers of the Beast; (the execution of the judgments set forth in this and the preceding proclamation is presented in detail in chs. xvi.–xix.)—Part fifth is designed for the comfort of the saints. It refers (ver. 12) to the ground of their endurance, viz.: the sure destruction of the power of their persecutors; and then declares (ver. 13) their certain blessedness when the trials of this life are ended.

Vision II., ch. xiv. 14–20, is introduced by the same formula as the preceding. It contemplates Christ in the exercise of His office as Ruler over all things (comp. Eph. i. 22)—(1) as gathering His ripened Church from the earth (vers. 15, 16); and (2) as executing judgment upon His enemies. This execution of judgment, as in the preceding vision, is more fully set forth in chs. xvi.–xix.

Vision III., ch. xv. 1–4, is not indeed introduced with the same formula as the preceding; it commences, however, with one equally significant. It is purely a Heaven-scene. It contemplates, on the one hand, the chosen ministers of the judgments about to be executed; and, on the other, the entire glorified Church gathered before the Throne as worshippers, and as spectators of the course of Divine Providence on earth. (Is not this assemblage the same as that mentioned ch. vii. 9? See ADD. NOTE, p. 193.)

Vision IV. begins with ch. xv. 5, and extends to the close of ch. xvii. This vision is introduced with one of the most significant disjunctive formulas employed in the Apocalypse: Καὶ μετὰ ταῦτα ἰδὼν (see foot-note, p. 150, first column). It consists of three parts.—Part first, ch. xv. 5–8, sets forth the preparation of the ministers of vengeance for their work, and the heavenly

* [It is an interesting question, Where is the Mount Zion here mentioned? Is it earthly or heavenly? In the judgment of the writer, it is heavenly. Christ as Head of the Millennial Kingdom does not come into visible manifestation (on earth) until after the pouring out of the Vials (see ch. xix. 11–16). The earthly Jerusalem and the earthly Zion are types of places in that glorious world where Jesus and His disembodied saints now are (comp. John xiv. 2, 3; Heb. xii. 22), awaiting the time for the establishment of the Basileia and the manifestation of the Sons of God on earth.—E. R. C.]

events attendant thereupon.—Part second, ch. xvi., describes the execution of their work.—Part third, ch. xvii., contains a supplemental statement concerning the Harlot and the Beast, upon whom judgment had been executed.—E. R. C.]

B.—REAL EARTHLY WORLD-PICTURE OF THE SEVEN VIALS OF ANGER; OR, THE END-JUDGMENT IN GENERAL.

CHAP. XVI.

- And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways [om. your ways], and pour out the [ins. seven<sup>1</sup>] vials of the wrath
- 2 [anger] of God upon [into] the earth. And the first went [departed], and poured out his vial upon [into] the earth; and there fell [came (ἐγένετο)] a noisome [an evil] and grievous sore<sup>2</sup> upon the men which [who] had the mark of the beast
- 3 [wild-beast], and upon them which [who] worshipped his image. And the second angel [om. angel<sup>3</sup>] poured out his vial upon [into] the sea; and it became as the [om. as the] blood [ins. as] of a dead man [man]: and every living soul [or soul
- 4 of life (ψυχὴ ζωῆς)] died [ins., the things] in the sea. And the third angel [om. angel<sup>4</sup>] poured out his vial upon [into] the rivers and [ins. the] fountains of [ins. the] waters; and they became blood [or there came blood (ἐγένετο αἷμα)]. And I heard the angel of the waters say [saying], Thou art righteous, O Lord, [om. O Lord,]<sup>5</sup> which [who] art, and [ins. who] wast, and shalt be [om. and shalt be<sup>6</sup>—ins. the<sup>7</sup> Holy], [or who art and who wast holy,]<sup>8</sup> because thou hast judged thus [didst
- 6 adjudge these things]. [;] For [because] they have [om. have] shed [poured out] the blood of saints and prophets, and thou hast given them blood to drink; for
- 7 [om. for]<sup>9</sup> they are worthy. And I heard another out of [om. another out of]<sup>11</sup> the altar say [saying], Even so [Yea], [ins. O] Lord [ins. the] God [ins., the] Al-
- 8 mighty [or, All-Ruler<sup>12</sup>], true and righteous are thy judgments. And the fourth angel [om. angel<sup>13</sup>] poured out his vial upon (ἐπὶ) the sun; and power [om. power
- 9 —ins. it] was given unto him [it] to scorch [ins. the] men with fire. And [ins. the] men were scorched with great heat [scorching], and [ins. they]<sup>14</sup> blasphemed the name<sup>15</sup> of God, which [who] hath power [the authority] over these plagues:
- 10 and they repented not to give him glory. And the fifth angel [om. angel<sup>16</sup>] poured out his vial upon the seat [throne] of the beast [wild-beast]; and his kingdom was full of darkness [became darkened]; and they gnawed their tongues for [be-
- 11 cause of (ἐκ)—ins. the] pain, and blasphemed the God of [ins. the] heaven because of (ἐκ) their pains and [ins. because of (ἐκ)] their sores, and repented not of (ἐκ) their

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

- <sup>1</sup> Ver. 1. [Crit. Eds. generally give ἑπτὰ with *ℳ. A. B*. C. Vulg., etc.*; Lange omits with P. 1, 28, etc.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>2</sup> Ver. 2. Εἰς instead of ἐπὶ. [So Crit. Eds. with *ℳ. A. B*. C. P., etc.*—E. R. C.]
- <sup>3</sup> Ver. 2. Ἐν instead of εἰς. [So Crit. Eds. with *ℳ. A. B*. C. P., etc.*—E. R. C.]
- <sup>4</sup> Ver. 3. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. omit ἄγγελος with ℳ. A. C. P., Am., Fuld., Demid., Tol., etc.; Lange retains with *B*, Clem., etc.*—E. R. C.]
- <sup>5</sup> Ver. 4. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. omit ἄγγελος with *ℳ. A. B*. C. P., Vulg., etc.*; Lange retains with 1, 35, etc.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>6</sup> Ver. 4. [Lange, Alf., Treg., Tisch. give ἐγένετο with *ℳ. B*. C. P. 1, Vulg., etc.*; Lachmann reads ἐγένετο with A. 36, 95, etc.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>7</sup> Ver. 5. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. omit κύριε with *ℳ. A. B*. C. P. 1, Am., Fuld., Demid., Tol., etc.*; Lange retains with Clem., Lapa., Ath.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>8</sup> Ver. 5. [Ἐρχόμενος is without authority; all Crit. Eds. read θεός.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>9</sup> Ver. 5. Ὅτιος without καὶ ὁ. [So also Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (1859), with *A. B*. C.*; Tisch. (8th Ed.) gives ὁ with ℳ. P.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>10</sup> Ver. 6. [Crit. Eds. generally omit with *A. B*. C. P. etc.*; ℳ gives ἑπὶ.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>11</sup> Ver. 7. [Crit. Eds., with ℳ. A. C. P., give simply τοῦ θυσιαστηρίου λέγοντος.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>12</sup> Ver. 7. [See Additional Comment on ch. i. 8, p. 93.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>13</sup> Ver. 8. [Crit. Eds. generally omit ἄγγελος with *A. B*. C. P., Am., Fuld., Tol., etc.*; Lange retains, with ℳ. 1, 6, Clem., etc.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>14</sup> Ver. 9. [Gb., Sn., Tisch. (1859) insert of ἀνθρώπων with *B**; Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) read as above, with ℳ. A. C. P. 1, 36, Vulg., etc.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>15</sup> Ver. 9. [Crit. Eds. generally read τὸ ὄνομα; A. gives ἰσάριον.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>16</sup> Ver. 10. [Crit. Eds. generally omit with *ℳ. A. B*. C. P., Am., Fuld., Demid., Tol., etc.*; it is given in 35, 36, etc., Clem., etc.; Lange brackets.—E. R. C.]

12 deeds [works]. And the sixth angel [om. angel<sup>17</sup>] poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates<sup>18</sup>; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the 13 kings of the east [who are from the sun-rising] might be prepared. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come [om. three unclean spirits like frogs come] out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast [wild beast], and out
 14 of the mouth of the false prophet [ins. , three unclean spirits as frogs]. [;] for they are the [om. the] spirits of devils [demons], working miracles [doing signs], which [that]<sup>19</sup> go forth unto [upon (ἐπὶ)] the kings of the earth and [om. of the earth and]<sup>20</sup> of the whole world [inhabited world (οἰκουμένης)], to gather them [ins. together] to the battle [war] of that [the] great day of God [ins. the] Almighty [or All-Ruler<sup>21</sup>]. Behold, I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest [that] he walk [ins. not] naked, and they see his shame.
 16 And he [or they]<sup>21</sup> gathered them together into a [the<sup>22</sup>] place called in the [om. the] Hebrew tongue [om. tongue] Armageddon [or Harmagedon]. And the seventh angel [om. angel<sup>23</sup>] poured out his vial into [upon] the air; and there came a great<sup>24</sup> voice out of<sup>25</sup> the temple of heaven [om. of heaven<sup>26</sup>], from the 18 throne, saying, It is done. And there were (ἐγένετο) [ins. lightnings, and] voices, and thunders, and lightnings [om. , and lightnings]; and there was (ἐγένετο) a great earthquake, such as was not since [from the times when] men were [a man was]<sup>27</sup> upon the earth, so mighty [such] an earthquake, and [om. and] so great.
 19 And the great city was divided [became (ἐγένετο)] into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell: and great [om. great] Babylon [ins. the great] came in remembrance [was remembered] before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the 20 fierceness [anger] of his wrath. And every island fled away [om. away], and the 21 [om. the ] mountains were not found. And there fell upon men [om. there fell upon men] a great hail [ins. as of a talent in weight descendeth] out of [ins. the] heaven [ins. upon the men], every stone about the weight of a talent [om. every stone about the weight of a talent]; and [ins. the] men blasphemed God because of the plague of the hail; for the plague thereof was exceeding great [because great is the plague of it exceedingly].

<sup>17</sup> Ver. 12. [Crit. Eds. generally omit as in preceding Note; Lange retains.—E. R. C.]

<sup>18</sup> Ver. 12. [Gb., Sz., Tisch. (8th Ed.) omit the article before Euphrates with N. B*. P., etc.; Lach., Alf., Tisch. (1859), Lange, prefix it, with A. O. 1, etc.; Treg. brackets.—E. R. C.]

<sup>19</sup> Ver. 14. The reading ἐκπορεύονται is unimportant. [Alf., Treg., Tisch. read ἀκπορεύονται. This reading is adopted above.—E. R. C.]

<sup>20</sup> Ver. 14. [Omitted by Crit. Eds. with N. A. B*, Vulg., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>21</sup> Ver. 16. [Crit. Eds. read συνήγαγον with A. B*. C. P., etc.; N. gives -γον. Lange translates he, regarding God as the subject (see in loc.); the more natural reference, however, is to the πνεύματα of ver. 14, which, as a neuter plural, may be the subject of a verb in the singular.—E. R. C.]

<sup>22</sup> Ver. 16. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. give τόν with A. B*. 1, etc.; Lange omits with N. 14, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>23</sup> Ver. 17. [Crit. Eds. generally omit with N*. A. B*, Am., Field, Tol., etc.; Lange retains with N*. 1, 23, 35, etc., Clem., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>24</sup> Ver. 17. [Lange, Treg., Tisch. give μεγάλη with N. B*, Vulg.; Gb., Lach., Alf. omit with A. 1, 12, 46.—E. R. C.]

<sup>25</sup> Ver. 17. Ἄνθ' τοῦ ναοῦ, ἀνθ' τοῦ θρόνου. [So also Tisch. (1859) with B*; Gb., Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) give ἐκ instead of the first ἀνθ', with N. A. 1, etc. The latter reading is adopted above.—E. R. C.]

<sup>26</sup> Ver. 17. [Τοῦ οὐρανοῦ is omitted by Crit. Eds.: it occurs only in B*. 1, 6, 33, Arm.—E. R. C.]

<sup>27</sup> Ver. 18. Ἀνθρώπος ἐγένετο. [So Crit. Eds. with A. 33, Cop., Arm., Beza; 1, 7, 8, etc., read οἱ ἄνθρωποι ἐγένοντο.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

The seven Vials of Anger embrace the collective Earth-picture of the world-judgment in general. Hence the seventh Vial is comprehended together with the rest, and not, like the seventh Seal and the seventh Trumpet, made the basis of a new Seven. The seven Angels of Anger follow each other in rapid succession and with terrible effect; only, between the third and fourth Vials, there occurs a double digression, in a sort as a theodicy of these fearful judgments and for the tranquillization of the startled mind. Now if we hold fast the idea that anger is an infliction of death, death being the decomposition, the dissolution of life, the explanation, in general, of the present section is already established;—especially if we further consider that the anger, or death-judgment, of God is operative through the medium of the anger of the heathen [nations], or the frenzy of false enthusiasm. Once more we are reminded of the lofty consciousness and teleology of the plagues. Only at the command of a great voice from the smoke-filled Temple—at the bidding of God, therefore—do the Angels begin their work. Each one knows, in his quality of Angel, his particular rank in the angelic series, and his particular mission. The following is the succession of the outpourings of anger:

1. Into the earth. This, therefore, is the death, the vital decomposition and dissolution of the New Testament Theocracy, the external phenomenal form of the Church (and relatively of the Christian State, inasmuch as the old Theocracy embraced both State and Church). (See the Introduction, pp. 33 sq.; 2 Thess. ii.) The effect of this first Vial is a malignant sore, with which all the worshippers of the Beast are smitten. The consummate idolatrous world-spirit in the Church, in churchly dignities and forms, results in an incurable fiery sore of fanatical self-consumption and self-destruction (2 Tim. ii. 17). The form of this sore is intoxication through the medium of the cup of anger, i. e., the confusing false enthusiasm or fanaticism which it inspires as the product of the denial of all religious and moral principles.

2. Into the sea. The worldly life of state and nations likewise becomes the subject of a process of decomposition which leads to death. Consummate passionate subjectivism and party-spirit, in all the forms of senseless self-intoxication, in mercantile, socialistic, absolutist and many other directions, finally rupture all social, popular, and political coherence. The sea becomes blood (Ex. vii.), and this blood is as that of a dead man; dead blood. All the goods of the social life of the nations lose their vital value, because they have become the property of consummate egoism. They are dead like the men who determine their value, and operate fatally upon every one who would carry on his life in this sea of blood. Every living being, it is declared, died in the sea.

3. Into the rivers and fountains of waters. Self-empoisonment of mental currents, and, what is still worse, self-empoisonment of fountains, the original life of geniuses and men of talent. And there became blood [fyévero aīua]. It is not said that this blood was like that of a dead man. The life of minds, of mental culture—pouring forth in an unnatural state of obduracy and frenzied deification of self, frenzied deification and bestialization of man—becomes a nauseous and fatal death-draught for those who would quell their thirst at the fountains and streams of waters. The natural life-fountains and life-rivers of minds have, in the perversion of moral nature to unnaturalness, become fountains and rivers of deadly intoxication and mental distraction.—Now ensues a pause. The Seer hears the Angel of the waters speaking. And here let us avoid the pagan and also Rabbinical conception of spirits of nature,—water or fire angels in the literal sense of the term. The Angel of the waters, in this passage, is the Angel who brings anger upon the water, the Angel of the Divine rule as exercised over the surging, social nation-life of men; just as the Angel of the Altar (ver. 7) or of the fire (ch. xiv. 18) is the spirit or teleology of all fire of sacrifice on earth. The Angel of the waters adores the righteousness of God in this terrible judgment upon the waters. Men must now drink blood, because they have shed the blood of Saints and Prophets, i. e., also, because they have first turned the heavenly fountains of waters on earth, out of which it was designed that they should drink, into blood. The assent of the other Angel from the Altar* designates the natural consequence of the ancient blood-guiltiness still more decidedly, in accordance with the idea of the Altar, as a righteous judgment of God.

4. Upon the sun. The sun of revelation itself; not in respect of its essence, but in respect of its shining and effect. The true shining of the sun is as vitalizing life; its effect is healthful vital heat. But how is it when men begin to make Christianity, in great part, a hot-blooded system of confession or negation, a thing of priesthood or of sects!—how is it when churchly fanaticism begins to produce Sicarii, as did Jewish fanaticism in the Jewish war! The fanatical heat of the one class calls forth increasingly the blasphemy of the other, instead of all being horrified at this frightful incapacity for receiving the simple sunshine of Christianity in purity, at this still more frightful capacity for converting the light of revelation into nothing but a misleading and infatuating power and a consuming passion.

5. Upon the throne of the Beast. The Beast must still be understood in the general sense, like the City of Babylon (ver. 19), for the branching of the one judgment into three judgments has not yet taken place. The throne of the Beast is the government, the system of Antichrist. His kingdom became darkened; this means, we think, that it became confused in its contradictions—it lost its consistency. For it was a sphere of spiritual and religious-moral darkness from the beginning. Such self-confusion is already to be seen where atheism and spiritism, bigotry and blasphemy, criticism and fanaticism hold high carnival together.—Then a mighty and poignant self scorn comes over the haughty spirit of the associates of this kingdom, and they gnaw their tongues in the pain of their impotence and nothingness. They blaspheme the God of the Heaven because of their pains. In so far as they need an object for their blasphemy, therefore, they are still theists. They blaspheme God as the God of the Heaven—all that is transcendent is hateful to them because the Beast has become their god on earth.* In so far, also, as Nature reflects the Divine lineaments of her Creator, she too, doubtless, becomes the object of their blasphemy; indeed she is occasionally blasphemed even now by some who make her the subject of their investigations. Because of their pains and because of their sores they blaspheme; the sores—i. e., the malignant ulcers which do not, as local focuses, eliminate the morbid matter from the system, but which overpower the life, changing it into morbid matter and consuming it—continue, therefore, from the first Anger-vial through all the stages of outpoured anger. This blasphemy of despair sets in instead of the repentance of faith.

6. Upon the great river, the Euphrates. Here also we look upon the Euphrates as the line of demarkation between the civilized world and the barbarous and savage world of the nations of the East (ch. xx.; Ezek. xxxviii. sqq.). We see, accordingly, that the army of horsemen (ch. ix. 14) comes from the küther shore of the Euphrates, from the region of Babylon, the seat of the most ancient civilization, the type of all Antichristian world-monarchies (Dan. vii.). On the other hand, the kings of the East [from the sun-rising] come from beyond the Euphrates, as the representatives of all the barbarism of the remotest world. The drying up of the Euphrates, therefore, signifies that the barrier-line between the civilized world and the rudest and roughest popular life is done away with, in a social as well as a terrestrial sense. In consequence of the mental confusion and distraction resultant upon a false over-refinement, the way is prepared for the hostile attack of rudeness and barbarism upon the seat of culture. Nevertheless, the Eastern barbarian kings come not uncalled. Three spirits, resembling frogs, proceed out of the mouth of the Dragon, and out of the mouth of the Beast, and out of the mouth of the False Prophet. Thus a frog-clamor with three variations is formed. The key of Satan is contempt of man (Job ii. 4); the key of the Beast is the deification of man (2 Thess. ii.); the key of the False Prophet is a bigoted training of man—a compound of the preceding two elements (ch. xiii. 13, 14). Thus these modern nightingales, the frogs, announce the new spring-time of mankind. As spirits they are spirits of demons, of such demons as engender moral possession; with this effect they come upon the kings of the earth and set on foot the great revolt-alliance for the war of the great day of God, Who, as the All-Ruler, over-rules even this uprising (see ch. xix. 19, xx. 8). As the greatest of catastrophes, this event shall come very suddenly and as in the night-time—hence the admonition of ver. 15. None should abandon himself to spiritual carelessness, as one that sleeps without his garments, for a man so doing might be cast out naked into the night. This admonition applies even to the pious, in reference to the last time. The rebel host gathers, as appointed by God the Judge, at a field of battle called Harmageddon [or, Armageddon].

* [May not a sense of the contrast between their own wretched condition and the condition of the blessed inmates of Heaven induce this peculiar form of blasphemy?—T.]

* [See EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL, ver. 7.—E. R. C.]

The enigmatical name of Harmageddon or Harmagadon gives occasion for a precursory examination of the entire section. The three special judgments following, from chapter xvii. on, are already visible in this general sketch of the judgment. This is manifestly the case with the incipient judgment upon the Beast (ver. 10), as compared with the consummate judgment upon the Beast, ch. xix. 19. So, likewise, the judgment upon Babylon (chs. xvii. and xviii.) is visible in the judgment of the first Anger-vial, poured out upon the earth. The second Vial of anger is annexed to the first; the third and fourth form a transition to the fifth. The reflection of the sixth Vial of anger we behold in the judgment upon Gog and Magog. When these are said to surround the camp of the Saints and the beloved City, it necessitates the reference of the name Har-Magedon (Mount of Decision or Sentence) to the Mount of Olives in accordance with Zech. xiv. 4. The mountains of Israel shall in general, according to Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix., be mountains of decision. A more precise definition of the locality, the valley of the dead (ch. xxxix. 11), leads us into the region between Jerusalem and the Dead Sea—likewise, therefore, into the vicinity of the Mount of Olives. Hence, the Seer may have merely borrowed the name from the northern waters of Megiddo, where the Israelites conquered the heathen kings of Canaan (Judge; v. 19), and from the southern plain of Megiddo (2 Kings xxiii. 29), where Josiah was defeated by the Egyptians,—possibly with the idea that the mountain of Megiddo puts an end to the fluctuations between victory and defeat in the wars of the people of God.

7. Upon the air. The air is the vital element of the earth, the sea, the sweet waters, and mankind. With the decomposition of this vital element—which cannot be understood simply of the common spirit-world of humanity, but must be regarded as having reference also to the cosmical vital conditions of men and of the earth, because the end in the former sense necessarily brings with it the end in the latter sense—the death of the old form of the world is decided. Hence a great voice resounds from the Temple of Heaven and from the Throne, saying: It is done. This end of the world (see ch. xx. 9 sqq.), however, is not the annihilation of the world, but its setting, in order to a resurrection. Hence the dying of the old world is accomplished amid lightnings, and voices, and thunders, annunciatory of a new world, and together with these comes the great earthquake whose like has never been since men were on the earth (see 2 Peter iii.). And now out of the great general judgment, the three special judgments develop (ver. 19). The great City is broken up into three parts. The judgment upon great Babylon consists, primarily, in the fact that it is divided into a small, specific, mock-holy Babylon, into the demonic Kingdom of the Beast, and into a brutal, Satanic mob-kingdom (comp. Ezek. xxxviii. 21, 22). The cities of the nations [Gentiles] likewise fall—the ancient seats of worldly civilization; the islands of small and intimate communities vanish, as do also the towering mountains;—great, secluded churches, even proud, firm-based states are sought for now in vain. Equilibrium in the spiritual world as well as in nature is destroyed; all things waver betwixt fiery heat and deathly cold;—hence the formation of hailstones, of the weight of a talent, which fall upon men; these hailstones and their fall are, of course, not to be apprehended in a purely material sense, according to which they would dash all men to pieces, but they are still real and terrible enough to provoke the remnants of a recognition of God in the wicked to fresh blasphemy. With the partition of Babylon the Great, the judgment is in reality already decided, there being a reciprocal negation on the side of the parts, and the whole, consequently, being in process of complete dissolution; in like manner the tower-building of ancient Babel was put an end to, and, in its centrality, judged, by the Divine dispersion of those engaged therein.

We call attention once more to the fact that in ver. 19 the ramification of the great general End-judgment into the three special judgments now following, is expressed.

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

[ELLIOTT: Chs. xvi. 1-14; xi. 15-19; xiv. 6-8; xv., relate to the same period (see on p. 281)—viz.: "The era of the French Revolution, as figured under the first six Vials of the seventh Trumpet," a period extending from A. D. 1789 to A. D. 1848. Chs. xi. 15-19; xv. 1-xvi. 1 is the introduction and commencement of the Vial-outpouring.*—(Note the similarity of the first four Vials to the first four Trumpets. See on p. 201). Ver. 2. The first Vial. The ἔλαος (expressive of the boil that broke forth on the Egyptians, comp. Ex. ix. 9,—probably the plague-spot or the small-pox) figures "some extraordinary outbreak of moral and social evil, the expression of deep-seated disease within, with raging pain and inflammation as its accompaniment—disease of Egyptian origin perhaps in the Apocalyptic sense of the word Egypt, and alike loathsome, deadly, self-corroding, and infectious—that would arise somewhere in Papal Europe, shortly after the cessation of the Turkish woe, and on the sounding of what might answer to the seventh Trumpet's blast; an evil, too, which would soon overspread and infect the countries of Papal Europe generally and their inhabitants." It symbolizes "that tremendous outbreak of social and moral evil, of democratic fury, atheism, and vice, which was speedily seen to characterize the French Revolution; that of which the ultimate source was in the long and deep-seated corruption and irreligion of the nation; its outward vent, expression and organ in the Jacobin clubs, and their seditious and atheistic publications; its result, the dissolution of all society, all morals, and all religions; with acts of atrocity and horror accompanying scarce paralleled in the history of man; and suffering and anguish of correspondent intensity throbbing throughout the whole social mass, and corroding it—that which from France as a centre, spread like a plague, through its affiliated societies, to the other countries of Papal Christendom; and proved, wherever its poison was imbibed, to be as much the punishment as the symptom of the corruption."—Ver. 8. The second Vial. A judgment on the maritime power, commerce, and colonies of the countries of Papal Christendom—i. e., Spain, France and Portugal. It symbolizes—(1) The great naval war which continued A. D. 1798-1815, in which "were destroyed near 200 ships of the line, between 800 and 400 frigates, and an almost incalculable number of smaller vessels of war and ships of commerce. It is most truly stated by Dr. Keith (Signs of Times, ii., p. 209) that the whole history of the world does not present such a period of naval war, destruction, and bloodshed." (2) The revolt of the transatlantic colonies and the following bloodshed.—Vers. 4-7. The third Vial. It symbolizes the judgment of war and bloodshed visited on the countries watered by the Rhine and the Danube, and on the sub-Alpine provinces of Piedmont and Lombardy, A. D. 1792-1805.—Vers. 8, 9. The fourth Vial. This symbolizes a judgment on the German Emperor and the other sovereigns of Papal Christendom. Napoleon, A. D. 1806, compelled the renunciation by the Emperor of Austria of the title "Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire and of Germany;" he also deposed the other papal kings, and "scorched men with fire," A. D. 1806-1809. (Comp. the Explanation of the fourth Trumpet, p. 201).—Ver. 10. The fifth Vial. A judgment on Rome (the throne of the seven hills), consecutive on that of the former Vial. Immediately after the battle of Wagram, A. D. 1809, the Pope was subjected to insult and spoliation, his temporal authority over the Roman State was abolished, and Rome itself was incorporated with France as the second city of the empire.*—Vers. 10 (last clause). 11 set forth—(1) The severity of sufferings endured; (2) the blasphemy (a) of France in atheism, (b) of Papal countries (subsequently of France also), in ascribing Divine prerogatives to creatures; (3) the continuance in sin of those who had been punished, after the cessation of the preceding judgments.—Ver. 12. The sixth Vial. The first portion symbolizes judgment on the Mohammedan Turk, begun A. D. 1820, in the assertion of independence by Ali Pacha of Yanina, and the immediately-following Greek insurrection, and continuing in the gradual decay of the empire to the present time. By the kings from the sun-rising are symbolized the Jews; the way for their return to their own land being prepared in the decay and fall of the Turkish Empire. By the three frogs are figured three unholy principles, going forth throughout the whole habitable world—viz.: (1) from the Dragon, heathen-like infidelity; (2) from the Beast, popery; (3) from the False Prophet, priestcraft.—Ch. xvi. 15-xxii. 15, together with ch. xiv. 9-20, represents "The present and the future, from A. D. 1849 to the Millennium and Final Judgment"—the first portion of which is the era of the seventh Vial. Ch. xiv. 9-20 presents the primary and briefer series of prefigurations of the era of the seventh Vial in the part without-written† of the Apocalypse, down to the wine-press treading before the Millennium; this consists of four parts—(1) vers. 9-11, a public and notorious outcry of warning throughout European Chris-

* [BARNES, in support of a similar view, quotes the following: "In this connection, I may invert here the remarkable calculation of Robert Fleming, in his work entitled Apocalyptic Key, or the Pouring out of the Vials, first published in 1701. It is in the following words: 'The fifth Vial (ver. 10, 11), which is to be poured out on the seat of the Beast, or the dominions which more immediately belong to and depend on the Roman See; that, I say, this judgment will probably begin about the year 1794, and expire about A. D. 1848; or that the duration of it upon this supposition will be the space of fifty-four years. For I do suppose that, seeing the Pope received the title of Supreme Bishop no sooner than A. D. 606, he cannot be supposed to have any vial poured upon his seat immediately (so as to receive his authority so signally as this judgment must be supposed to all) until the year 1848, which is the date of the twelve hundred and sixty years in prophetic account, when they are reckoned from A. D. 606. But yet we are not to imagine that this will totally destroy the Papacy (though it will exceedingly weaken it), for we find that still in being and alive, when the next Vial is poured out.' p. 68. Ed. New York. It is a circumstance remarkably in accordance with this calculation, that in the year 1848 the Pope was actually driven away to Gaeta, and that at the present time (1851) he is restored, though evidently with diminished power."—E. B. C.]

† [See foot-note, 2d column, p. 201.—E. B. C.]

* [Elliott calls attention to the fearful convulsions in nature—tempests, hail-storms, re-opening volcanoes, earthquakes (ch. xi. 19)—that preceded the outbreak of the French Revolution.—E. B. C.]

tendom and its dependencies as to what is meant by the Beast and his image, and as to the fate of their followers; (2) vers. 12, 13, a deep impression and earnest inculcation, on the part of the true Church, of the near approach of the grand epoch of blessedness predicted in Scripture of departed saints; (3) vers. 11-16, the first grand act of the judgments of the consummation on Antichristendom; (4) vers. 17-20, the last judgment, a judgment unto blood, upon apostate Christendom. Ch. xvi. 15-21 presents "The fuller Apocalyptic figuration, as within-written," of the events immediately preparatory to, and those included in, the seventh Vial; down to the wine-press treading, and destruction of the Beast and False Prophet, immediately before the Millennium;" in it are—(1) ver. 15, an introduction to the outpouring, the warning, indicating increased faithfulness on the part of the ministry in declaring the coming of the Lord and the duty of being prepared to meet Him (?); (2) ver. 16, the success of the unclean spirits in influencing kings and people against Christ and His Church; (3) vers. 17-20, the seventh Vial—realities yet future are symbolized, viz.: An extraordinary convulsion, darkening and vitiation of the moral and political atmosphere of Europe (having, perhaps, a literal groundwork in some ominous derangement of the natural atmosphere), ministering disease to each body politic, and, perhaps, resolving society for awhile into its primary elements; resulting, finally, in the resolution of the Papal Empire into a tri-partite form, in which form Rome (including its subject ecclesiastical State and the political tri-partition connected with it), is to receive its peculiar and appalling fate.

BARNES agrees, in the main, with Elliott; he makes, however, the following important differences in interpretation: 1. The pouring out of the fourth Vial upon the sun, etc. (ver. 8), indicates "that a scene of calamity and woe would ensue as if the sun should be made to pour forth such intense heat that men would be 'scorched,'" the reference being to the wars following the French Revolution.—2. By the kings of the East (ver. 12) are to be understood the rulers of the East (Orient?); "All that is fairly implied in the language here is that the kings of the East would be converted to the true religion," and that the destruction of the Turkish power would be in order thereto.—3. The three malign influences symbolized by the "frogs" (ver. 18) are not specifically characterized.—This author quotes largely from Allison's History of Europe in support of his interpretations.

STUART regards the Vials as a series of judgments upon the enemies of the Church, terminating primarily in the death of Nero and the destruction of Jerusalem, and ultimately (?) in the destruction of the Pagan power under Constantine. He writes: "The author of the Book has given a sketch which corresponds, with a good degree of exactness, to the state of facts. The persecuting power of the unbelieving Jews ceased in the main with the destruction of Jerusalem. Hence the tempest and earthquake which lay that place in ruins, are the finale of the first catastrophe. But not so with the second. The death of Nero was indeed the destruction of the Beast, for the time being, and it made a temporary end of persecution. But the Beast still came up again from the pit; the contest was renewed, and, with many remissions, continued down to the time of Constantine. Rome, as heathen, then finally ceased to persecute. The Beast was finally slain."

WORDSWORTH regards the visions of the Vials as partially fulfilled, and yet only as "a prelude and specimen of what will be more fully developed." He interprets the εἰς with which the ἐξέχου of the first three Vials is construed as denoting infusion into and admixture with the object of punishment, and the ἐν of the last four as indicating the Divine vengeance as trampling upon it. His interpretation of the Vials is as follows: 1. This plague is upon men's persons, and consists in physical and spiritual disease, the result of the teachings and practices of the Papacy.—2. The sea represents nations in a restless state, and the plague is that carnal men lose the genuine properties of men and become mere things.—3. This plague is inflicted on the resources of the Papacy; those things that once supplied it with wealth and power (indulgences, pretended miracles, etc.), become occasions and instruments of its suffering and shame.—4. The temporal splendor (sun) of the Papacy, by the galling exactions through which it is maintained, already scorches its subjects.—5. "The fifth Vial is poured upon the throne of the Beast; and his kingdom is darkened. Here is another reference to the plagues of Egypt, etc. (No exposition is given).—6. This plague consists in the decay of supremacy, secular and spiritual, which is to Rome, the spiritual Babylon, the source of her glory and strength, as was the literal Euphrates to the literal Babylon. By the kings of the East are symbolized saints whose advance Rome has hindered.—7. The destruction of Rome, the mystical Babylon, "the capital city of the Empire of the Beast."

ALFORD. This writer remarks generally concerning the Vials: 1. The series reaches on to the time of the end, and the whole of it is to be placed near that time. 2. As in the Seals and the Trumpets there is a marked distinction between the first four and the following three—the objects of the former being the earth, the sea, the springs of water, and the sun, those of the latter being more particularized. 3. As in the other series, so here there is a compendious and anticipatory character about several of the Vials, leading us to believe that those of which this is not so plain, partake of this character also. 4. We have no longer, as in the Trumpets, a portion of each element affected, but the whole. 5. While by the plague of the fourth Trumpet the sun is partially darkened, by that of the fourth Vial its power is increased.—He presents no affirmative views as to the nature of the specific plagues, save in the case of the last, which he regards as indicating the destruction of the city of Rome and the execution of vengeance on the mystic Babylon.—For particular remarks see under EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

LORD: The office of the seven Angels is sim-

* [See foot-note, 2d column, p. 201.—E. B. C.]

ply to assist the revelation, by designating the commencement of the seven judgments, and distinguishing them as inflictions of Divine wrath; not to symbolize the agents on earth by whom they are caused. The interpretation of the several Vials is as follows: 1. The earth, when distinguished from the sea, etc., denotes the population of an empire under a settled government; the men were those who have the mark of the Wild-beast; the ulcer symbolizes an analogous disease of the mind; a restlessness and rancor of passion exasperated by agitating and noxious principles and opinions, that fill it with a sense of obstruction, degradation and misery—this ulcer represents the restlessness under injury, the ardor of resentment, hate, and revenge, the noxiousness and contagion of false principles and opinions that marked the commencement of the political disquiets of the European States toward the close of the last century.—2. The sea denotes the population of a central kingdom in violent commotion; it is to the animals that live in it what a people is to the monarchs, nobles, ecclesiastics, etc., who owe to them their support. This symbol denotes the second great act in the French Revolution, in which the people slaughtered one another, and exterminated all the influential ranks, king and queen, nobles, etc.—3. Rivers and fountains are to the sea what smaller exterior communities are to a great central nation. This symbol denotes the vast bloodshed in the other Apocalyptic kingdoms, in the insurrections and wars that sprung out of the French Revolution.—4. Those who exercise the government of a kingdom are to the people what the sun is to the land and sea. This symbol denotes that the rulers of the people on whom the preceding judgments fell, were to become armed with extraordinary and destructive powers, and to employ them in the most violent and insupportable oppression.—5. The ascription of a throne and kingdom to the Wild-beast shows that he is the symbol of the rulers of an empire. The effect of the Vial on the throne is not depicted, but only its consequence to the kingdom; the subversion of the throne, however, is implied—the event indicated is the subversion of the imperial throne of France, and re-establishment of the Bourbon dynasty in 1814 and 1815.—6. The Euphrates is used as a symbol in a relation analogous to that of the literal river to the literal Babylon. The entire symbol indicates that agencies are to be exerted by which vast crowds of the supporters of the nationalized hierarchies (see p. 283) are to be withdrawn from them. This Vial has already begun.—(Vers. 13-16. The Dragon is the symbol of the rulers of the Eastern Roman Empire supporting an apostate Church, and arrogating the right of dictating the religion of their subjects, and implies that at the period of this event, a government is to subsist that shall nationalize the religion of that empire as under its last imperial head; the Wild-beast is the symbol of the civil rulers of the Kingdoms of the Western Empire; and the False-Prophet of the hierarchy of the Papal states. The unclean spirits represent ecclesiastics who profess to work miracles, and thus establish a Divine sanction to their mission; they induce the kings of the whole world to unite in a war to prevent the establishment of Christ's Kingdom. The Great Day is the day when Christ shall visibly descend from Heaven and destroy His enemies and establish His Kingdom.)—7. This Vial is to be poured into the air which envelopes the globe, indicating that the great changes which follow it are to extend to all nations. Lightnings, voices, and thunders are symbols of the vehement thoughts and passionate expressions of multitudes, occasioned by the sudden discovery of momentous truth. The earthquake denotes a civil revolution in which the whole surface of universal society is to be thrown into disorder, and ancient political institutions to be shaken down. Great Babylon (p. 283) is to be divided into three parts. The cities of the nations are the hierarchies without the ten kings, as the Russian, Greek, etc.; these are to fall. Great Babylon is then to be destroyed. Every smaller combination of men symbolized by the islands is to be dissolved, etc. These events are to follow the Advent, to precede the vintage and perhaps the harvest, and are to occupy a considerable period.

GLASGOW interprets the Vials: 1. The Vial was poured out by the preaching of Luther in 1517; the woe was executed in the wars waged by Charles V., subsequent to 1519, against France and Rome.—2. Poured out in the great Protest in 1529; the woe executed in the immediately following wars.—3. The rivers and fountains represent the purer Christians that, living in the midst of a nominal Christianity, have spiritual life. The pouring out of this Vial is the shedding of Protestant martyrs' blood, beginning in 1546; followed by the shedding of retributive blood.—4. Symbolizes a stroke (?) upon the ecclesiastical power. It began at the rising of the Tridentine Council in 1564, and was followed by the Popedom of Pius V., the revolution in Holland, the massacre of St. Bartholomew, and the invasion of the English coast by the Spanish Armada, etc., producing what has been styled "the counter-Reformation."—5. The attitude of self-defence assumed by the Protestants against Rome, followed by the Thirty Years' War.—6. The decay of the population and power of the nations that constitute Great Babylon, i. e., the Roman or Latin nations, beginning with the first French revolution.—7. The air represents the intellectual department of knowledge. The pouring out of this Vial symbolizes the remarkable changes in political ideas, and revolutions in governments that have taken place and are yet to take place in consequence of the unprecedented advance in Science and Philosophy, to terminate in the destruction of the systems of the heathen world (involved in the fall of the cities of the nations) and Romanism (involved in the fall of Babylon or Rome).—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

On the different divisions of the Vials of Anger into four and three, and five and two, compare Disterdieck, p. 489. The same commentator observes here (in variation from p. 21) that "all seven Vials are poured out one after the other without intermission." At all events, the vehement haste of a rapid approach to the end is unmistakable. Though there is no longer question of a fraction that is smitten (first a fourth, then a third), yet the generalness of the phrase, on the earth, on the sea, etc., is not to be understood in a literally absolute sense, but only as a universal operation which draws the process of worldly history to a close; otherwise we could hear no more of an emerging Church of God, the Bride of Christ.

Ver. 1. A great voice.—"This can belong only to God Himself (Bengel, Züllig, Hengstenberg)." Düsterdieck. The voice speaks, however, of the Vials of the anger of God.—The voice out of the Temple is the voice of the Temple itself. The house of salvation says: My work upon this hardened race is at an end; now let the reign of anger begin. In like manner it was the spirit of compassion, from the four horns of the Altar, which in its time gave the signal for the loosing of the hosts of horsemen by the Euphrates (see ch. ix. 18). The Apostle Paul makes the entirely analogous declaration (1 Cor. v.): "In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, I have determined . . . to deliver the same unto Satan." See Rom. ii. 5.

Into the earth.—Here the earth embraces the whole sphere of the Vials of Anger, in distinction from [the earth of] ver. 2. Comp. ch. viii. 5.

Ver. 2. Into the earth.—The earth in a special sense, in accordance with its symbolical import (see above).—An evil and grievous sore.—Ex. ix. 10, Deut. xxviii. 35, Job ii. 7. The malignant sore comes upon individual men from the earth—from the corrupt mass it fastens upon individuals; the corrupt character of the theocratic authority corrupts those characters that are subject to it, throws them into a condition of moral self-consumption. As they have marked themselves with the χάραγμα of the Beast, they are now, by way of retribution, marked with the sore.

Ver. 3. Into the sea.—On the symbolical import of this, see Syn. View.—Blood as of a dead man.—"Not a great pool of blood, as of many slain (on νεκρῶν as νεκρῶν, see Lapide, Eichh., De Wette, Hengsten., et al.), but the horrorfulness of the fact is increased by the circumstance that the sea seems like the coagulated and already putrefying blood of a dead man (Bengel, Züllig, et al.)." Düsterd. Since the blood of a living person quickly coagulates, the difference does not seem so very great. The main thing is that it is changed as into dead blood of dead men, in which no living being can be without dying. Fearful deadly poisoning of the life of the nations. That which had its being in this sea, lost its life in it. "Τὰ ἐν τῇ θαλάσσῃ is in apposition" (Ebrard).

Vers. 4-7. Into the rivers and fountains of waters.—The drinkableness of this blood, as contrasted with that of the sea, should, we think, not be premised.* Here the drinking of blood is a punishment; in ch. xvii. 6 it appears as an offence meriting punishment. In the latter passage, the effect of fanatical blood-shedding, intoxicating even to frenzy, is meant; here we have the punishment of men with the drinking, repugnant to nature, of blood—the imbibing of nauseous and pernicious draughts of moral death (ever provocative of greater thirst) which they derive from those very streams and fountains that should give them clear, refreshing, living water.

And I heard the Angel of the waters saying.—This Angel is certainly not the guardian Angel of the physical waters (see De Wette, p. 156, with reference to ch. vii. 1—"Angels over the winds"—and ch. xiv. 18—"an Angel over fire"), but neither is he merely "the Angel who emptied the Vial upon the water" (Grot., Ebrard). As sacrifices and prayers have a divinely ordained mission, represented by the fire-Angel, so geniuses—or the source-points of spiritual [geistig=intellectual, spiritual, as distinct from material] life—and spiritual [geistig] currents have their divinely-appointed mission. The spirit of the Divine destination of spirits and spirit-currents, therefore, gives utterance to the subsequent deliverance upon the great criminality of those men who have perverted these Divine appointments into the unnatural and horrible opposite of that which they were intended to be—into fountains and rivers of blood and death. According to Düsterdieck, the four Living-beings are analogous to the Angel over the water; he perceives a similarity to them in the Danielic Angel-princes also, whom he mentions (p. 492) in connection with Rabbinical conceptions ("earth-angels, sea-angels, fire-angels and the like)." Hengstenberg violently assumes a connection between our passage and John v. 4.

Who art and Who wast.—"The καὶ ὁ ἐρχόμενος is wanting here as in ch. xi. 17, because the coming to judgment is already in process of fulfilment."—Holy, δαός.—In this retribution, God has shown not only His righteousness, but also His δαός, His holy and pure personal dignity, the Divine humanity of His government, as making visitation in this judgment for the criminal contempt of personal dignity. [The term δαός has reference to the covenant love and mercy of Jehovah toward His own people. It is here used as the most fitting ascription to Him who had avenged the blood of His ἀγιοι, His consecrated ones, upon their persecutors.*—E. R. C.]—The blood of saints.

rivers and fountains is any more drinkable in its transformed state, as blood, than the blood of the sea.—Ta.]

* [This is one of the two occurrences of δαός in the Apocalypse, the other being in ch. xv. 4. In other portions of the New Testament it appears only in Acts ii. 27; xiii. 34, 35; 1 Tim. ii. 8; Titus i. 8; Heb. vii. 26 (δαός, Luke i. 75; Eph. iv. 24; δαός, 1 Thes. ii. 10). It is a term of comparatively frequent occurrence in the LXX, and is therefore generally employed to translate חסיד; it is also occasionally used for חַן, חֶסֶד, חַסְדִּים. CREMER writes: "The

* [Lange has reference, probably, to the following passage in Düsterdieck: "Taṭra refers to ver. 4, not to ver. 3, for reference is had (ver. 6) to drinkable water which is turned into blood, so that the inhabitants of the earth, who have shed the blood of Saints and Prophets (comp. ch. xiii. 7, 10, vi. 10, xi. 7, xvii. 6, xix. 2) are now constrained to drink blood." Düsterdieck, however, does not assert that the water of the meaning of חסיד is to be defined according to חסד (see Hupfeld on Ps. iv. 4). This word, which is goodness, kindness, is used to denote God's holy love towards His people Israel, both as the source and as the result of His sovereign choice and covenant with them; when applied to men it does not denote the corresponding covenant relationship and feeling of Israel toward God (not even in 2 Chron. vi. 42 cf.; Isa. lv. 8; lviii. 1), but love and mercifulness towards —Matt. xxiii. 35; Rev. vi. 10, xvii. 6, xviii. 24, xix. 2.

From the altar.*—The spirit of human destiny is not alone in adoring the righteousness and purity of God in this judgment; the spirit of sacrifice, of reconciliation, of intercession, joins in the sentiments uttered by the former. Over against the praise of Jehovah, the voice from the Altar brings in view the almighty sovereignty of God, the rule of Elohim Sabaoth, and instead of God's holiness it magnifies, together with the righteousness, the truth in the judgments of God. These do not appear simply at the end, unmediated; they are prepared from the beginning by the prophecies of the Scriptures, of the human conscience, and of history. The bold and hence difficult expression personifying the Altar, has been the subject of manifold conjectures and additions, such as the following: Another Angel from the Altar [E. V.]; the Angel who keeps watch over the spirits under the Altar; an inhabitant of Heaven standing by the Altar, etc. The explanation of Bede: Interior affectus sanctorum vel angelorum vel hominum, does not properly belong in this category of supplements cited by Düsterdieck. See ch. ix. 13. According to Düsterdieck, the idea of the speaking Altar is intelligible from chaps. vi. 10, viii. 3, ix. 13, xiv. 18. But no more than we are at liberty to identify all Altar-visions, may we identify the voice of the Altar itself and the voice of soul-lives beneath it crying for vengeance. According to Hengstenberg, "the Altar itself here rejoices at the vengeance" for the "blood shed upon it" (?).

Vers. 8, 9. Upon the sun.—Reference is not had to the sun considered by and for itself; but neither is the sun, "in its burning quality," "the figure of the sufferings of this life." The operation of the sun of revelation is intended (comp. ch. viii. 12). This operation—which is Christianity,—from being an enlightening and warming agency of blessing, is, by the anger-fire of fanaticism, over which the anger of God rules in judgment, converted into a glowing fire-shine [instead of the former and proper sun-shine.—Tz.], which makes men hot with great heat (passive); hereupon men, unable to distinguish between this fervid glow of an externalized Christianity and the name of God, Divine revelation itself, blasphemes the name of the God Who has authority over these plagues, instead of becoming converted (and so distinguishing between revelation-faith and fanaticism) and giving Him glory. This obduracy must be distinguished from impenitency (ch. ix. 20).—It was given unto it; αὐτῷ—to the sun (De Wette, et al.). Bengel and others incorrectly: to the Angel.

Vers. 10, 11. Upon the throne of the Wild-beast.—As in the fourth Vial of Anger others who are united with us in the same holy covenant. It is generally a d of love descending from above to those beneath, and not of love ascending." See also Alexander on Ps. iv. 4 (3). It is a fact worthy of notice that εἶδος is never used in the LXX for ὅτι, or any other word which εἶδος is employed to render, save in one instance, Prov. xxii. 11, where it is used to translate ὅτι, which in a single instance, Lev. x. 14, is translated εἶδος. And yet these terms are, in the E. V. of the New Testament, almost invariably translated by the one word holy!—E. R. C.]

* [See TAYLOR AND GRAMM, Note 11.—E. R. C.]

the judgment upon Babylon, the Harlot, is already foreshadowed, so in this fifth Vial the judgment upon the Beast, and in the sixth the judgment upon Gog and Magog (see ch. xiii. 2; 2 Thess. ii.) are intimated.—The throne of the Beast is the principal system upon which the power of the Antichristian life of the people rests. There is no question of the fact that the principle of the absolute sovereignty of the absolute quantitative majority is the root of the most godless and mischievous confusions and seditious agitations, and that with the loosing of these confusions, induced by the Angel of anger, a great intellectual and social darkness must of necessity diffuse itself over that kingdom (not rulerdom) of the Beast which, in an ethical sense, was already darkened. That there may be an allusion to the Egyptian darkness is not, indeed, to be denied; it, however, plays no important part here.—They gnawed their tongues.—Together with the sensation of torment, the emotion of rage is expressed, as in the wailing and gnashing of teeth.—Blasphemed the God of the Heaven.—The blasphemy is directed no longer simply against the name of God, revelation, but against the God of the Heaven, the primal revelation of God, and God in His universal revelation—hence, against all that is Divine. They have now reached the stage of recognizing, in the incipient ruin of the bestial kingdom, all the foregoing plagues as plagues, but instead of now, at last, repenting of their works, they pass from their unbelief to that demonic belief in which they do indeed recognize the God of Heaven as the author of their plagues and sores, but recognize Him only consciously to blaspheme Him even in this phase of heavenly omnipotence and glory. Ebrard queries how a darkening or mere withdrawal of light can be conceived of as causing so great torments. The key to this problem is, he thinks, furnished by the locust-plague of the fifth Trumpet—the present darkness being occasioned, as he maintains, by a host of scorpions—and he declares that "any man who is not wilfully blind must be able to see this." The sores of ver. 11 are also, as he thinks, distinguished from those of ver. 2, as the consequences of the unmentioned scorpion-stings. The problem as here set forth presupposes sensuous causes and effects; in the spiritual realm, however, there is nothing easier of conception than that the incipient darkening of the Antichristian Kingdom and all the fanatical hopes based upon it should result in the rage and torment of despair.

Vers. 12-16. Upon the great river [Lange: the] Euphrates.—See SYN. VIEW; comp. ch. ix. 14. Above all things we must distinguish between the starting-point of this side of the Euphrates (ch. ix.) and that of beyond the Euphrates. Therein is contained not merely a distinction, but also a contrast. It is wrong, therefore, to identify the Eastern kings with the four Angels (Ebrard). As little are they identical with the ten kings, ch. xvii. 12, who give their power to the Beast (De Wette, Düsterd.). The preparation of the judgment upon the Beast was treated of under the fifth Vial of anger. References to Eastern kings or Parthian allies ([confederated with Nero against Rome] Ewald), in the interest of the so-called synchrono-historical interpretation, need no more than a mention. An utter misapprehension of the sixth plague is manifested in Bengel's designation of the imminent judgment upon the kings as itself the plague, into which the kings run. The plague, undoubtedly, culminates in the barely intimated defeat of the kings; but their very coming is a plague also, because, like the Hun and Mongol trains, they sweep away with them to the battle against God all the unsealed men and powers on their road. On account of the laying bare of the Euphrates' bed, an event of historical occurrence in the capture of Babylon by Cyrus, it is maintained by some (Hofmann, Ebrard, De Wette, Brückner) that a battle of the Eastern kings against the spiritual Babylon is intended. To De Wette this passage suggests the passage of Israel through the Jordan. A number of interpretations of the kings see in De Wette, p. 157. Alcasar: The Apostles and Evangelists; Bullinger and others: Believing princes; Grotius: Constantine the Great; Vitringa: The Kingdom of France. Others: The King of Persia, the Barbarians, the Turks, the Flavians. Jews adopting the Christian faith (Herder: the Babylonish Jews who go to the aid of those of Palestine), etc.

Out of the mouth of the Dragon, etc.—Combined operation of all the evil powers. Out of the three great mouths go forth three unclean spirits, as spirits of seduction. Or rather they have gone forth from these mouths and now exist independently, although at the time of the last battle, in which Gog and Magog are judged, the Beast and the False Prophet are already destroyed (ch. xix. 10). On the other hand, some expositors would fain read in ver. 14 ἐκπορεύονται instead of ἐκπορεύεται, in order, by means of an artificial construction (see Hengstenberg), to gain the missing verb—which would, however, occasion material difficulties. The seed of rebellion lives on in impure spirits in that ring of heathenism which encircles the Millennial Kingdom. Be it, moreover, considered that here we are still in the course of the collective unitous description of the preparation for the General Judgment, and the colors of the three judgments still play into each other.

As frogs.—This similarity is borne by the unclean spirits themselves; it is not their uncleanness simply that is denoted by the ὄφρ (as according to Hengstenberg). The Egyptian frogs (Ex. viii.) were plaguing spirits because they went everywhere and defiled every thing with their uncleanness; these are plaguing spirits because they go forth to all parts as unclean demons, and seduce the kings of the earth to war against the City of God. They operate as spirits of demons, i. e., through ethico-psychical domination, after the analogy of possession. Even after the judgment upon the centralization of evil in the Harlot, in the Beast, and in the False Prophet, Satanic evil shall continue to exist in a seed of evil reminiscences amongst the heathen, and in demonic operations. The expedition to which they excite the Eastern peoples is not directed against Babylon=Rome, for this has already (chap. xvii. 18) incurred judgment. Hengstenberg says that the expedition is directed against Canaan, i. e., the Church, and that the prediction has reference "not to something that shall happen at some one future time, but to that which is to be continually repeated." It is also asserted that Rome is not referred to, because all the other plagues have an oecumenical character. As if it were not called urbs from orbis. That the expedition is really not directed against Babylon-Rome is evident from the order of the judgments. According to Grotius, by the three frogs should be understood three forms of superstition to which Maxentius was addicted (the first is extispicium, not extispicium); according to Luther, the sophists—namely, Faber, Eck and Emser: according to Vitringa, the Jesuits (the dried Euphrates being France, drained by its kings); according to Calovius, the Jesuits, Capuchins and Calvinists, etc. According to Düsterdieck, we should not ask what is to be understood by these three spirits—τ. ε., they are schematical—importing nothing. According to Artemidor (see De Wette), the frogs are significant of jugglers and buffoons. Aristophanes portrayed their allegorical significance long before the writing of the Apocalypse. The frog has been used as a symbol in manifold connections (see Friedrich, Symbolik und Mythologie der Natur, p. 611). A lively interpretation of these little impotent, yet withal vociferous, dwellers in slime, see in Ebrard, p. 485. Friedrich brings out the additional fact that frogs have impudent eyes.

Doing signs.—By this can be meant only lying apparent miracles*—a description which applies to demonic miracles in general. De Wette speaks of an infatuating eloquence. The charm of eternally-repeated phrases is resident in will-magic, in the overpowering of weak souls by the semblance of assurance.—The kings of the whole inhabited world.—This expression is conditioned by the preceding words: the Eastern kings; although these may finally draw yet other powers into their vortex.—To the war of the great day.—The two days and the two battles [wars] (ch. xix. 19, xx. 9) are as yet wrapped together in one—in such a manner, however, that the last battle is faintly visible. See Ezek. xxxviii., xxxix.; Dan xii. 1; Zeoh. xii., xiv.—The day of the last end-judgment, properly so-called (Jude 6). Thus Bengel, De Wette, and others. Other interpretations: the day is the entire time from the passion of Christ to the end (Bede). "The day of God has a comprehensive character, denoting all the phases of God's judgments, etc." (Hengst.) This is an attempt at the obliteration of definitives—paving the way for his theory of the Millennial Kingdom.

[The expressions, day of the Lord, great day of the Lord, etc., are of frequent occurrence in the New Testament; see Acts ii. 20; 1 Cor. i. 8; v. 5; 2 Cor. i. 14; Phil. i. 6, 10; ii. 16; 1 Thess. v. 2, 4; 2 Thess. ii. 2; 2 Peter iii. 10, 12. These passages (with the exception, perhaps, of those in 2 Peter), together with the one under consideration, seem to refer to the day of Christ's appearing for the establishment of His Millennial Kingdom (comp. ch. xix. 11-21; Matt. xxiv. 30 sqq.), and not to the day of Final Judgment (comp. ch. xx. 11-15; Matt. xxv. 31 sqq.) See Excursus on THE FUTURE COMINGS OF THE LORD, p. 339.—E. R. C.]

* [See Add. Comment on ch. xiii. 13, p. 370.—E. R. C.]

Behold, I come as a thief—A practical, warning digression of the Apostle, as in similar great decisive moments. As a vivid reminder of a saying of the Lord, he introduces the Lord as immediately speaking (see Matt. xxiv. 43, 44, Luke xii. 89, Rev. iii. 3). [Not a digression of the Apocalyptic, but a solemn re-affirmation by the Spirit of the warning of Jesus and His Apostles; comp. Matt. xxiv. 43, 44; Mark xiii. 85, 36; Luke xii. 89; 1 Thess. v. 2, 4; 2 Peter iii. 10.—E. R. C.] The peculiar form of Christ's admonition—as recommending watchfulness—is doubtless based upon the fact that He is speaking to believing readers. The keeping of the garments of salvation is an idea which lies the closer at hand since the glance of the Seer passes beyond even the day of the Parousia and the secure years of the Millennial Kingdom.

And He [or they], etc.—The combats are, without their will or even their knowledge, under the guidance of God, Who brings them to the battle-ground of their defeat (Ezek. xxxix. 2). The subject of συμμάχων is God (Hengsten., Ebrard); not the sixth Angel (Bengel), nor the Dragon (Ewald), nor, still less, the unclean spirits (Bleek, De Wette [Düsterdieck]).* Harmageddon.—See SYN. VIEW. On the different interpretations of Harmageddon, see Düsterdieck, p. 499. (Etymological interpretations: Excidium exercitus; the Capitol; Mount Janiculus. Historical interpretations: The Megiddo of Jud. v. 19, or the Megiddo of Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 29; comp. Zech. xii. 11.) Düsterdieck indeed notes the fact that the term mountain of Megiddo (הַר מְגִדּוֹ) differs from both of the Old Testament appellations—the waters of Megiddo, and the valley [Germ., Ebene=plain] of Megiddo; he, however, looks upon this distinction as an accessory circumstance, and thinks that there can be a reference only to the place where the Israelites were victorious over the kings of Canaan (Jud. v. 19). But why should not the fateful name of Megiddo have given occasion to a symbolical compound, with reference to Ezekiel and Zechariah?—denoting, therefore, the mountains of Jerusalem in a symbolical sense. On the repeated reference to Rome in Ewald, see Düsterdieck.—In an architectonic aspect it is very noteworthy that the sixth plague conducts us to the place of judgment at Harmageddon, without describing the judgment itself.

[Harmageddon.—It is evidently in the meaning of the Hebrew name of this place that its appropriate significance lies. For otherwise why should ἐβραϊστί be prefixed to it? . . . But this circumstance does not deprive the name of geographical reality; and it is most probable on every account that such reality exists here. The words τὸν τόπον τὸν καλούμενον would surely not be used except of a real place habitually so named, or by a name very like this. Nor need we search very far for the place pointed out. הַר מְגִדּוֹ, the Mountain of Megiddo, designates at least the neighborhood where the Canaanitish kings were overthrown by Barak, Jud. v. 19; an occasion which gave rise to one of the two triumphal songs of Israel recorded in the Old Testament, and therefore one well worthy of symbolizing the great final overthrow of the kings of the earth leagued against Christ.* That the name slightly differs from that given in the Old Testament, where it is the plain (2 Chron. xxv. 22) or the waters (Judg. v. 19) of Megiddo, is of slight consequence, and may be owing to a reason which I shall dwell on below. The LXX. in both places adopt the form which we have here, Μαγδό—δόν or—δών. Nor must it be forgotten that Megiddo was connected with another overthrow and slaughter, viz., that of Josiah by Pharaoh-Necho (2 Kings xxiii. 29; 2 Chron. xxxv. 22), which, though not analogous to this predicted battle in its issue, yet served to keep up the character of the place as one of overthrow and calamity; cf. also Zech. xii. 11, and the striking description, 2 Chron. xxxv. 25, of the ordinance of lamentation for Josiah. At Megiddo also another Jewish king, Abaziah, died of the wounds received from Jehu, 2 Kings ix. 27. The prefix Har, signifying 'mountain,' has its local propriety, see Stanley's description of the plain of Esdraelon, in the opening of his Sinai and Palestine, ch. ix. . . . Still there may have been a deeper reason which led to, or, at all events, justified the prefix. As the name now stands, it has a meaning ominous of the great overthrow which is to take place on the spot. Drusus, believing the word to be merely a mystic one, explains it to be חורבן גמול 'internecio exercitus eorum,' the overthrow of their army. But, conceding and maintaining the geographical reality, must not we suppose that such a name, with such a sound, so associated with the past, bore to a Hebrew ear, when used of the future, its ominous significance of overthrow? It is remarkable that in Zech. xii. 11, where the mourning for Josiah is alluded to, the LXX. render not the plain of Megiddo, but ἐν πεδίῳ ἱεροσολύμων, and this agrees with the interpretation of Andreas here, who supposes the name equivalent to διανομή. ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Vers. 17-21. And the seventh Angel poured out his vial upon the air.—The air is the common life-sphere of men. The Aetherial in the air is, therefore, in the first place a deadly decomposition of the spiritual life-sphere of men, resulting in the falling asunder of great communities. And this is the immediate result depicted in ver. 19. But with the separation of the three powers, Babylon, the Beast, Gog and Magog, is also introduced the cosmical decomposition of the earthly life-sphere—the end of the world.—From the temple, from the throne.—The throne does not appear to us to be expressive merely of a climax, in order to the more certain indication that the voice comes from God Himself (Düsterd.). From the Throne is, primarily, a modification—hence there is no καὶ to connect it with the preceding sentence. The Temple is the Holy of Holies; the Throne is the covering of the Ark of the Covenant. The consonance of Temple and Throne is the consonance of the economy of Christ and the economy of the Father. It is, in fine, a unisonous deliverance of the sentiment of the Church of God, as well as of the terrestrial cosmos, through which the voice of God is heard, saying: It is done! The end is decided. We take the word absolutely, with Eichhorn and others (actum est)—not, however, in the following sense: now is done that which was commanded (in ver. 1) (Bengel, Düsterd., et al.). A learned digression explains: fiat Roma (Grotius).

* [See TEXT AND GRAM., Note 21.—E. R. C.]

* [It is worthy of note that the Song of Deborah and Barak is in measure adopted both by David and the Apostles as descriptive (symbolic) of Messianic triumphs; comp. Judges v. 12; Ps. lxviii. 18; Eph. iv. 8.—E. R. C.]

And there were lightnings, etc.—Ch. xi. 19. Hengstenberg: "We have again reached precisely the same point at which we were already in ch. xi." Approximately true. According to Hofmann, the present vision comes to an end in the midst of ver. 18, and with the words kai σεισμός, etc., a new leading vision begins. On the evangelical import of the lightnings and thunders, see SYN. VIEW.—There follows then a great earthquake, such as was never heard of before—a convulsion of earthly relations to their very foundations, so that the Christian world is sundered into three parts, more truly, even, than the Jewish world was thus rent previous to the first Parousia of Christ.—And the great city.—We have already more than once pointed out the decisive import of this passage. It contains the key to all that follows, as a summary declaration, namely, of the General Judgment and as a disposition of the three following special judgments (Babylon—the Beast—Gog and Magog). Hence it results also that the great City, as such, must comprehend all three parts, and consequently that it can denote neither Christian nor Pagan Rome, though Rome is its highest representative point. Still further from the truth is the reference to Jerusalem (Bengel, Herder, Hofmann, et al.). Considered in and for itself, the great City is an ideal City, embracing all Antichristianity in the Occident and in the Orient. According to Hengstenberg (who remarks that two Cities in the Apocalypse bear the title of great, Jerusalem and Babylon, i. e., Rome), not only are we to avoid thinking of Jerusalem in this connexion, but we are also to put Christian Rome out of our thoughts—the City, he maintains, can be only a heathen City, heathen Rome. A certain tender care for "Christian" Rome is hardly mistakable here. It is impossible, however, that eschatological Antichristianity should ripen in a heathen City, knowing nothing properly of Christianity.—Became into three parts—"The number three (comp. ch. viii. 7, 8, 11, 12) has, perchance, a special reference to the three arch-enemies, ver. 13" (Ebrard). Düsterdieck: The Beast and the False Prophet, however, are regarded as one vanquished power (ch. xix.). The severance of two hostile powers is rightly insisted upon by Ebrard (p. 451); it cannot, however, be said that the third comes direct from the abyss, for the Eastern kings are on the ground; further, the specific Antichrist, in the narrower sense of the term, is the Beast (ch. xix.), not Satan (ch. ix.).—Babylon the great was remembered, etc.—Acts x. 31. Great Babylon is but the more definite designation of the great City. She receives the anger-wine of the seventh Vial of Anger to drink, and the effect of this wine continues through all the three special judgments now following. The anger of wrath [ῥαγ θυμὸς ῥαγ ὀργῆς] is aptly symbolized by the wine-cup; i. e., psychical intoxication and drunkenness, spiritual delirium tremens, is the common fundamental trait whence, in all three judgments, death proceeds.—The cities of the nations [Lange: Heiden], etc.—See SYN. VIEW. Ver. 20—According to Hengstenb., the islands and the mountains are indicative of kingdoms. "Together with the islands and the mountains" (says the same expositor) "the sea, also, has vanished." In a physical connection this is no necessary consequence, and in a symbolical connection we are constrained to ask: In what respect has the sea vanished?

Ver. 21. And a great hail, as of a talent in weight, etc.—"Hailstones of the weight of a mina are called incredibly great by Diodor. Sic. xix. 45, but our passage mentions hailstones of the weight of a talent, which contains sixty minas; they are, therefore, probably of equal weight with the stones used in the catapults" (Düsterdieck; comp. De Wette, p. 161). According to Ebrard, the hail of a hundred-pounds' weight, "symbolizes the tremendous blows of suffering and sorrow which the world sustains in this time of revolution."* Hail is a specific devastating atmospheric discharge arising from the tension of the physical extremes of heat and cold, and their conflict. Thus, after the dissolution of human fellowship, the most ruinous conflicts of the extreme parties will arise; most fearful in their effects, however, will be the momentary coalitions that will take place—a truth typically exemplified at the crucifixion of Christ [where Sanhedrin and rabble, Jew and Roman, for the time made common cause.—TR.]. But the great fluctuations of nature in the ageing cosmos are also expressed in this figure.—And men blasphemed God.—In order to be able to blaspheme God, they are in a sense become monotheists again [or, rather, the fearful exigency has startled them out of their false systems and brought their inner consciousness of the One Almighty to the surface.—TR.]. It is, certainly, not necessary to suppose that those who are struck by such a hail, blaspheme as they are dying (Hengstenberg). "Some are precipitated lifeless to the earth, others blaspheme" (Düsterdieck). "We are, assuredly, not to imagine that actual natural hail is meant" (Ebrard). This blasphemy is the result of the rage with which they are irritated by a course of worldly affairs which is utterly incomprehensible to them, and by the hostile view of the world which confronts them. Even now not only radicalism, but also liberalism operates thus upon the minds of the hierarchical party; and, vice versa, not only papacy, but even Christianity itself has the like effect upon anarchico-revolutionary spirits. Even in view of the objective world and the course of the times, extremists become increasingly irritated. Especially, not only socialistic, but also absolutist fanaticism is at a loss for money, weapons, wind and weather for the prosecution of extreme party-aims. All-sided pessimism, the issue of optimistic extravagances.—Different historical interpretations of the Vials of Anger, see in Düsterdieck, p. 503.

* [GLASGOW finds the objective of this prophecy in the tremendous cannon-balls—some of 600 pounds' weight—employed in modern warfare.—E. B. C.]

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE SEVEN VIALS.]

By the American Editor.

[In the judgment of the writer, the vision of the Seven Vials relates to events still future—events the last of which will immediately precede the advent of Christ for the establishment of His Millennial Kingdom. The plagues predicted are to be executed upon the opposers of Christ and His true followers—upon the followers of the Beast (i. e., the world-power, p. 272) and Babylon (i. e., the apostate or world-allied Church, see ADD. NOTE on p. 317); the whole series, possibly, constituting that which in ch. vii. 14 is styled simply “the great tribulation” (see ADD. NOTE, pp. 191 sq.).]

The writer is disposed to regard the terms earth, sea, rivers and fountains, and sun, of the first four Vials (vers. 2-10), as having been used literally—the prophecy being that these should be so affected as to cause them to give forth deleterious influences.—If by the Beast is to be understood the world-power, then, probably, by the pouring of the fifth Vial on his throne (ver. 10) we are to understand some influence upon established civil governments—either destructive, covering the nations with the darkness of anarchy; or strengthening, producing the darkness which flows from tyrannical oppression.—By the Euphrates of the sixth Vial we are, probably, to understand, with Wordsworth, Lord, and others, that which is to the mystical Babylon what the literal river was to the literal city. If this view be correct, then may we regard the symbol as indicating that current of opinion amongst worldlings in favor of, or those multitudes in the world allied to, the Apostate Church (“many waters” of ch. xvii. 1 and 15?). The drying up of these waters, or their falling away from Babylon, would prepare the way for her destruction set forth, ch. xvii. 16. May it not be that the kings from the sun-rising are those mentioned ch. xvii. 12, 13, 16, who are to destroy the Harlot (i. e., Babylon, comp. ch. xvii. 1 and 5)—and who are described as from the sun-rising from the fact either that when the Apocalyptist wrote they were below the horizon of vision, yet to arise (ch. xvii. 12); or that they were to come from the East? By the frogs (vers. 13, 14) we may understand teachers of evil, instigated by Satan, and some having civil and others ecclesiastical authority, and working miracles (see Additional Comment on ch. xiii. 13, p. 270), who shall seduce the nations into an assault on Christ and His true Church. For an explanation of Harmagedon, see the extract from Alford on p. 302.—The seventh Vial poured out upon the air may indicate an effect produced upon the literal atmosphere, at once universal in its influence and producing fearful convulsions in the realms of nature and in human society (comp. Isa. xiii. 6-10; Joel ii. 1, 2, 10, 30, 31; iii. 15; Matt. xxiv. 29; Mark xiii. 24, 25; Luke xxi. 25, 26; Acts ii. 19, 20; * Rev. vi. 12-17; see also Note on the sixth Seal, p. 179). The destruction of Babylon, here alluded to, is described in the following chapters.—E. R. C.]

* [The Apostle Peter quoted this prophecy of Joel without intending to teach that it had received its ultimate fulfillment in events attending the Pentecostal effusion. It seems impossible to resist the conclusions that the words of our Lord in Matt. xxiv. 29, etc., have reference to convulsions in nature immediately preceding his second Advent, and that the prophecies of Isaiah and Joel, though they may have already received partial and typical fulfillments, have ultimate respect to the same events.—E. R. C.]

SECTION SIXTH.

(Second Division.)

The Seventh Vial of Anger, or the Three Great End-Judgments.

CHAP. XVII. 1—XX. 10.

I.—FIRST SPECIAL END-JUDGMENT. JUDGMENT UPON BABYLON.

CHAP. XVII.—XVIII.

A.—THE JUDGMENT UPON BABYLON AS A HEAVEN-PICTURE, OR THE HEAVENLY PROPHECY OF THE FALL OF BABYLON.

CHAP. XVII. 1-18.

And there came one of the seven angels which [who] had the seven vials, and talked with me, saying unto me [om. unto me]<sup>1</sup>, Come [om. Come] Hither; I will show unto thee the judgment of the great whore [harlot] that sitteth upon [or in. 2 the]<sup>2</sup> many waters; with whom the kings of the earth have [om. have] committed fornication, and the inhabitants of [they who inhabit] the earth have been [were]

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 1. [Crit. Eds. omit me with W and A.—E. R. C.]<sup>2</sup> Ver. 2. [Tisch. inserts now twice with B*; Lach. and Treg. omit with W. A. P.; Alf. brackets.—E. R. C.]

3 made drunk with the wine of her fornication. So [And] he carried me away in the [om. the] spirit into the [a] wilderness: and I saw a woman sit [sitting] upon a scarlet colored [om. colored] beast [wild-beast], full of [or ins. the]<sup>3</sup> names of blasphemy, having seven heads and ten horns. And the woman was arrayed [clothed] in purple and scarlet color [om. color], and<sup>4</sup> decked [gilded] with gold and precious stones [stone] and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthiness [the uncleannesses]<sup>5</sup> of her fornication<sup>6</sup>: And upon her forehead was [om. was] a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF [ins. THE] HARLOTS AND [ins. OF THE] ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. And I saw the woman drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the martyrs [witnesses] of Jesus: and when I saw her, I wondered with great admiration [wonder]. And the angel said unto me, Wherefore didst thou marvel [wonder]? I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast [wild-beast] that carrieth [beareth] her, which [that] hath the seven heads and ten horns. The beast [wild-beast] that thou sawest was, and is not; and shall [is about to (μὲλλει)] ascend out of the bottomless [om. bottomless] pit [abyss] and [ins. to] go<sup>7</sup> into perdition (ἀπώλειαν): and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were [of whom the name is] not written in [upon] the book [scroll] of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold [see] the beast [wild-beast] that [ins. he] was, and is not, and yet is [om. yet is—ins. shall be present]<sup>8</sup>. And [om. And] Here is the mind which [that] hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains, on which the woman sitteth [or where the woman sitteth upon them]. [,] and there [om. there—ins. they] are seven kings: [ins. the] five are fallen, and [om. and—ins. the]<sup>9</sup> one is, and [om. and] the other is not yet come; and when he cometh [is come], he must continue a short space [little while]. And the beast [wild-beast] that was, and is not, even he<sup>10</sup> is the [an] eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition: And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings, which [who] have [ins. not yet]<sup>11</sup> received no [om. no—ins. a] kingdom as yet [om. as yet]; but [ins. they] receive power [authority] as kings one hour [ins. together] with the beast [wild-beast]. These have one mind (γνώμη), and shall [om. shall] give their power and strength [authority] unto the beast [wild-beast]. These shall make [om. make] war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome [conquer] them: for he is Lord of lords, and King of kings: and they that are with him are [om. are] called, and chosen, and faithful. And he saith unto me, The waters which thou sawest, where the whore [harlot] sitteth, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. And the ten horns which thou sawest upon [om. upon—ins. and]<sup>12</sup> the beast [wild-beast], these shall hate the whore [harlot], and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn [consume] her with [or in]<sup>13</sup> fire. For God hath [om. hath] put in [gave into] their hearts to fulfill [perform] his will [mind (γνώμη)], and to agree [perform

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 3. Tisch. (1859, also Treg.) gives γέμον τὰ ὀνόματα, with Cod. A., etc. [Lach., Tisch. (8th Ed.), Alf. read γέμοντα ὀνόματα; Tisch. (8th Ed.) declares that P. requires this division. The reading of the participle in the following clause, which, were it certain, would settle the question, is also disputed: Alf., Tisch. (8th Ed.) read ἔχοντα with N. P.; Lach., Tisch. (1859), and Treg., ἔχον with B*. 1, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 4. Lach. gives καὶ in acc. with A., etc. [So also Treg. and Tisch. (8th Ed.) with N. A., 1, 7, Vulg., etc.; Tisch. (1859) omits with B*. P.; Alf. brackets.—E. R. C.]

<sup>5</sup> Ver. 4. Codd. N. A. B*. give τὰ ἀκαθάρτα.

<sup>6</sup> Ver. 4. Codd. A. [?] B*, etc., give τῆς γῆς. [So Tisch. (1859) with B* (not A.); Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) give αὐτῆς with A. 1, 7, Vulg., etc.; N. reads αὐτῆς καὶ τῆς γῆς.—E. R. C.]

<sup>7</sup> Ver. 8. Codd. A., etc., give ὑπάγει. [So Lach., Alf., and Tisch. (1859); Treg. and Tisch. (8th Ed.) give ὑπάγειν with N. B*. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>8</sup> Ver. 8. [The "and yet is" is an attempted translation of the printed text of Erasmus, καὶνερ ἔστι. This reading, as is now generally conceded, is "an error of Erasmus' copyist" or of the press: it is not found in the original MS. of Erasmus. On this subject Dr. Conant writes (in his article on the Greek Text of the Apocalypse in The Baptist Quarterly): "The MS. reads, καὶ νῦν ἔστι, with ἔστι slightly removed from the preceding syllable (as often happens in manuscript), but with a distinctly written α in the syllable νῦν, and with the accentuation, unquestionably, of καὶ νῦν ἔστι. The copyist, mistaking α for ε in the syllable νῦν, and making a wrong division of syllables, wrote καὶνερ ἔστι, contrary both to the letters and the accentuation of the MS. There can be no doubt that the true reading is that of the ancient MSS., namely, the Syriac (καπερε=καπεραι), the Alex. (Cod. Eph. is defective here), B. of the Apoc., and the Porphyrion palimpsest, all of which have καπεραι." The reading thus indicated is universally adopted.—E. R. C.]

<sup>9</sup> Ver. 10. [Crit. Eds. read εἰς without καὶ in acc. with N. A. B*. P., Vulg., etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>10</sup> Ver. 11. [Lach., Alf., Tisch. read αὐτός with A. P. 1, Vulg., etc.; Treg. gives οὗτος with N. B*—E. R. C.]

<sup>11</sup> Ver. 12. The reading οὗτοι in acc. with B*. [N*. P., Vulg., etc. [So Alf., Treg., and Tisch.; Lach. reads οὗκ with A., Vulg.—E. R. C.]

<sup>12</sup> Ver. 16. [Crit. Eds. read καὶ with N. A. B*. P. 1, Am., Full., Demid., Tol.; Clem. and Lips. require ἐκ.—E. R. C.]

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 16. [Tisch. (8th Ed.) reads νῦν, without εἰς, with N. B*. P.; Lach., Tisch. (1859), Treg. read εἰς with A.; Alf. brackets.—E. R. C.]

one mind (κοιῆσαι μίαν γνώμην)]<sup>14</sup>, and [ins. to] give their kingdom unto the beast 18 [wild-beast], until the words<sup>15</sup> of God shall be fulfilled [finished]. And the woman which [that] thou sawest is that [the] great city, which [that] reigneth [hath kingdom] over the kings of the earth.

<sup>14</sup> Ver. 17. [This clause is omitted by Lachm., and bracketed by Alf., in accord. with A. 79, Vulg., etc.; it (or γινώσκω μίαν) is given by Trag. and Tisch., with M. B*. P. 1, 7, 14, etc.—E. R. C.]

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 17. Codd. A. B*. [M. P.] give of λόγος.

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

When we say: the fall of Babylon as a Heaven-picture, we mean, the fall of Babylon sub specie æterni, or, in other words, the phenomenon of Antichristianity in the Church, in all its historical bearings, illuminated by the light of revelation and designated for judgment by the rule of Divine Providence.

We must, above all, keep fast hold of the following points: 1. That the Babylon here spoken of, the Harlot, is to be distinguished from the general Babylon (ch. xvi. 19), and yet that it coincides with the latter as its first [last?]* historical culmination. 2. That the Beast which bears the Harlot is identical with the Beast out of the sea (ch. xiii.), as the peculiar antitheocratic and Antichristian organ of Satan; that, however, it here comes under consideration provisionally in a special aspect only, as bearing the Woman for a time, and, finally, judging her. Hence, also, the history of the Beast is more special here than in ch. xiii. In the latter passage, ver. 8, one of his heads is mortally wounded; here, the whole Beast disappears for a time (ver. 8).† 3. That the heads and horns of the Beast here resolve themselves into a special history consisting of two parts—a history which must by no means be confounded with the history of the Beast presented in ch. xiii.

That we are still in the sphere of the seventh Vial of anger is manifest, in the first place, from the bare fact that one of the seven Angels who had the Vials, shows the Seer the judgment of the great Harlot. The latter is preliminarily signaled by two marks: 1. She sits upon many waters; she is an authority based upon many nationalities, many national dispositions, peculiarities and currents. 2. With her the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and they who inhabit the earth have become drunk with the wine of her fornication. She herself has become for the kings of the earth, of earthly states and seats of culture, an idol, a subject of idolatry which has seduced them to a thousand-fold apostasy from the laws of religion, humanity, truth and righteousness; and not only have they departed from the true God and served false gods in company and connection with her, but they have also done the same independently, as her followers and imitators. They have, however, in many respects been swept along in this direction by those who inhabit the earth—by absolute hangers-on of the soil and of authority, who have become intoxicated in the fanatical enthusiasm of the bigotry of the world.

The Angel takes the Seer in spirit into a wilderness. Here, it seems, we a while ago left the Woman, once clothed with the sun (ch. xii.). And such is indeed the fact: it is the same wilderness, and not the same; the same Woman, and not the same. History sufficiently instructs us concerning the fact that the holy wilderness of world-renunciation, of asceticism, which so long guarded the integrity of the Woman, became in course of time a wilderness of spiritual and intellectual moral corruption—that the heavenly flight from the world was changed into a demonic seeking of the world, embodied in the wild career of false monks—that a wilderness of hypocrisy, pia fraus, fanatical terrorism and demoralizing dogmas of all kinds was gradually developed. But the Woman—is she, indeed, the same? Those who cannot understand how the one Woman (ch. xii.) can in the course of time have divided into the two figures of the Harlot and the Bride, should consider the fact that the wheat and the chaff grow on the same ear; that the same Theocracy which, in respect of its internal essence, bore Christ, also crucified Him, in respect of its external hierarchical figuration; and that thus the development of the Harlot and the Bride has not been effected in two separate lines, but in an original organic unity, in which the contrast has been continually maturing (see the foot-note on p. 25).

The following considerations now successively demand our attention:

1. The Woman and her relation to the Beast.
2. The Beast in his relation to the seven Heads.

3. The seven Heads in relation to the ten Horns.

1. The Woman and her relation to the Beast.

That the Woman here depicted is significant of the fallen Church there can be no doubt, when we consider the import of the Woman (the congregation of God) and of womanhood (religiosity)—(see Rink, p. 238 sqq.). The exclusive reference of this figure to pagan Rome fails to recognize, in the first place, the broad scope of the eschatological vision; secondly, the fact that even in the time of Domitian, and far more in the time of Nero, it would have been impossible for the Apocalypticist to speak of Rome as cherishing a true Antichristian thirst for the blood of the saints. Thirdly, such a reference misapprehends the idea of Antichristianity, which takes its rise only in corrupt Christianity. From these considerations it will also be evident, first, that not simply the fallen Romish Church,

* [It is probable that the erote of the German edition is a misprint for letite, as it is only in the latter form that the proposition of our Author can be accepted. It may be remarked that even with this correction the truth of the first part of the proposition is questionable. Is it not probable that by "Babylon the Great" of ch. xvi. 19, the Seer contemplated the entire Babylon as "headed up" in the Babylon of the last days; or, in other words, as identical with "Babylon the Great" of ver. 8?—E. R. C.]

† [Is not one and the same event set forth by the figures, "as slain" (xiii. 8), and "is not" (xvii. 8)—viz.: the apparent ceasing of the Beast to exist as Beast?—E. R. C.]

Rome, is here intended;—this is the further from being the fact since imperial Rome has been transferred to Byzantium and its centre of gravity has been thence removed to Moscow and St. Petersburg; moreover, the hierarchical principle radiates far and wide throughout the Church. It is also further evident, however, that nothing but Christian Rome can constitute the symbolical and historical apex of this whole body of the fallen Church. The Muscovite hierarchy is too rude to be this apex; sporadic hierarchy too theoretic; the mean lies where hierarchy is in its whole demonic depth. Nevertheless, we regard the seven mountains whereon the Woman sits, as but an allusion to terrestrial Rome, it being agreeable to the consistency of the Book to take the seven mountains as a symbolical figure, of which we must speak further on. The Seer declares that he wondered much to see the Woman as he saw her. We apprehend this utterance in the same sense with those expositors who have assigned the contrast of this figure with the appearance in ch. xiii. as the ground of the Seer's wonderment. In the earlier passage, we behold a celestial Woman, clothed with the sun, the moon under her feet, adorned with a garland of chosen stars, equipped with eagle's wings. Here we have a Harlot, riding or sitting upon a scarlet Beast, a Beast signalized with the hue of blood and blood-thirstiness (into which the fiery hue of the Dragon has darkened), and thus herself founded upon the Beast and its blood-thirstiness, i. e., upon an Antichristian world-power and bloody violence. The Beast is full of the names of blasphemy—there is no form of irreligion which is not comprehended in the absolute Machiavelism of world-monarchy: religious persecution, contempt of humanity, despotism over consciences, breach of promise, a doctrinal system of faithlessness—and the like—are some of the first articles. The incongruence of the seven Heads and ten Horns is brought into view here likewise, in order to the signalizing of the power indicated, as possessing the semblance, and but the semblance, of holiness. On this demonic Beast the poor Woman has prepared her a sort of throne for her exaltation; no longer is the moon beneath her feet—vanished are the stars of elect spirits, and the eagle-wings. She herself is clothed with a party-colored double red—with the royal hue of purple and the scarlet of blood—and over this is spread the sheen of gold brocade, of precious stones and pearls, the richest worldly adornment of every sort. In her hand the Woman holds the magical means of her dominion and glory, the golden cup, the symbolical vessel of consecrate and holy communion, solace and refreshment—but full of abominations; and, together with the cup, the uncleanliness of the fornication, i. e., the idolatry, of the earth—i. e., all those iniquities that follow in the train of idolatry. The abominations denote all manner of unnaturalnesses; the uncleanliness of the fornication of the earth are all those immoralities which are the consequential issues of the earth's departure from the true God and its service of false divinities. On her forehead she has a name written as a mystery; i. e., whoever is able to read the name, will read the following inscription: Babylon the Great, the Mother of the Harlots and of the Abominations of the Earth. She herself knows not that her proper escutcheon—absolute sovereignty over the consciences of earth—means only this, and can mean nothing else. Most repulsive is her appearance: A drunken woman! Through fanaticism intoxicated to the verge of frenzy! Drunken with the blood of the saints and with the blood of the witnesses of Jesus! Blood-guiltiness produces excitement, confusion of the mind; and this remark applies in the fullest sense to that blood-guiltiness whose measure is filled up in the persecution and destruction of the holiest witnesses of God and Christ. Grotius depicts this phenomenon with drastic vividness, like a Dutch genre-picture: Vidit eam ore rabido, despumante et evomente sanguinem, ut ebrii solent.—But now arises the question—how can the Beast lend himself to bear the Woman, when it is declared that the ten Horns and the Beast shall hate the Harlot and make her desolate (ver. 16)? The weight of the future tense must be observed here. At first the Beast is subject to the Woman, for it is the Woman who helped the Beast out of his apparent annihilation. The absolutism of the hierarchy has promoted the growth of the absolutism of despotism. Finally, however, there is a reversal of the relation, the Beast having made a pupil of the Woman's, the False Prophet, subservient to himself; and in the end it is the deep-lying antagonism between the demonic ground-forms of the two [the Woman and the Beast] which gives occasion to the full outbreak of hostility and the destruction of the Woman—possibly in a conflict in which the Beast will prove himself more human than the Harlot.

The Seer marvels to see the Woman in this situation—or, let us rather say, to see her again. According to the speech of the Angel, that which most surprises John is her fellowship with the Beast, her riding upon him—this most horrible Amazon-equipment. Hence the answer of the Angel [to John's wonderment] has in view an explanation of the origin of this mystery of the fellowship of the Woman and the Beast. The utterance runs thus: *The Beast was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the abyss, in order to go speedily into damnation.** This declaration [of the Beast's vanishment and re-appearance] is, certainly, a parallel to the mortal wounding of a head of the Beast (ch. xiii. 8), but it must be distinguished from the declaration concerning the king who “is not yet come” (ch. xvii. 10). The wounding of the Beast's head is the cause, the disappearance of the Beast the result; the return of the Beast is the transition from the seventh to the eighth head. For at that very moment of the vision [not the moment depicted by the vision, but the time at which the vision was vouchsafed.—Tr.], the Beast was not—he seemed to have vanished—whilst the sixth king was in being. We, therefore, understand the declaration of the Angel as of the following import: The Antichristian world-power was in being before Christ; it then seemed, for a period reaching to the time of the vision, to be annihilated by the victory of Christ—as indeed it was principally annihilated; it however was to return later as an external apparent power. And it was as the returned Beast that the Beast carried the Woman, for in that interval of his vanishment it was only in the saintly seeming of subserviency to the Woman that he could make his appearance again. But, again, it was also his wonderful re-appearance which induced the Woman to trust herself to him. From the wonder of all people dwelling upon the earth at the apparent invincibility of the Beast—that is, from the renewed belief in the irresistible power of evil—the complete fall of the Woman resulted—the vain fancy that with the help of the Beast, with the help of ungodly and God-opposed state-maxims, she might attain to greatness and ever-increasing glory. Hence this unblest concordat in which, for a long time, the Woman seems to rule the Beast, until she is finally deposed and destroyed by him.

* [So Lange here freely renders.—E. R. C.]

2. The Beast in his relation to the seven Heads.

Hither [let] understanding [come]. The mystery which the Angel here pronounces can be solved only through the union of worldly understanding [or an understanding of the world—Weltverstand] and spiritual wisdom. In the application of this problem to the Nero tradition, there would certainly have been no wisdom; at most, it could only have contained such an understanding as the Apocalyptist would have declared to be devoid of wisdom. To proceed, the seven Heads of the Beast are seven mountains, on which the Woman sits, and are seven kings. Here our task is, to abide by the laws of symbolism and not take a leap into geography, although we assume that there is an allusion to the City of the Seven Hills. Neither is it advisable to regard the sentence, and are seven kings, as tautological. As in the Book of Daniel, the world-monarchies (ch. ii.) are, in respect of their bright side, represented in the human image of metal, and (ch. vii.) in respect of their dark side, in the four beasts, so there is also here, doubtless, an antithesis to be taken for granted. The seven mountains are seven forms of empire—in the sacred number, because the State, taken in the abstract, is subservient to the purposes of the Divine Kingdom. The kings, however, seem here, in accordance with chs. xvii. 2 and xviii. 8, as despots, to represent the dark side of the world-monarchy, its God and Christ-opposed conduct—hence, pre-eminently, its bestial nature. The reference is not to individual kings; such a reference is impossible on this account, if for no other reason, viz.: because the kings must be in exact correspondence with the seven mountains. Otherwise the Apocalyptist must necessarily have seen fourteen heads, for, in accordance with the laws of allegory, the heads cannot denote two entirely different groups—the seven mountains as diverse from the seven kings. We reckon once more, therefore, the four world-monarchies of Daniel and add to them the Roman-Herodian government as the fifth monarchy. The sixth king is the Roman Empire at the time of the vision, and the Seer proleptically beholds the coming of a seventh, a world-monarchy, on which the Woman can ride for a short time. Then the Beast that was, and is not, again undisguisedly appears. In the seventh king it was, to a greater or less extent, the still anonymous bearer of the Woman; in the eighth, which issues from all the seven, as their evil extract, it will become the open enemy and destroyer of the Woman, and then, when it has fulfilled its judicial mission, it will go into perdition.

3. The Seven Heads and the Ten Horns.

The ten horns are distinct from the seven heads; they seem finally, however, to be comprehended together above the eighth head (eight is the number of the world), in which the Beast manifests himself again openly. The number ten is the number of the ripe development of the world, in antithesis to the number seven as the number of complete Divine order. And so, also, the horns denote bare power or force, in antithesis to the heads which symbolise the government of intelligence. They, therefore, together with the eighth king-picture from the life of the Beast, issue forth as ten kings of abstract power, as absolute radicalism. They had hitherto not yet received a kingdom; now they obtain, for one hour, complete imperial power in the world together with the Beast. This hour is, again, the great and fear-inspiring hour of the decisive conflict between open Antichristianity and the hypocritically disguised Antichristianity of the Woman. The ten kings rule, not successively, but conjointly; they are also not real kings, but mock-kings (ὡς βασιλεῖς),* and if they have one mind, it is but the spirit of Antichristian coalition. By the declaration: They shall war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall conquer them, etc., the finale is indicated—the judgment upon the Beast (ch. xix. 19). But to what purpose this interruption here? It explains that hatred of the Woman which finally bursts forth in completeness. A bold change of allegorical images is visible in the first and third verses, where the same Woman is spoken of as sitting upon many waters, and as sitting in the wilderness. Here [ver. 15] the reference is again to the waters on which the Harlot sits (and when we read: the waters which thou sawest, this inaccuracy reminds us of similar expressions in the Johannine Gospel). The sovereignty of the Harlot is based not only upon the wilderness and the Beast, but also, through these, upon the peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues. And she becomes in the end, by means of the semblance of Christocracy that clings to her, an object of hatred to the ten Horns and the Beast: She is destroyed by four principal strokes. In the first place, she is wasted, decolated: an allusion to the Harlot as a city, or to her false eremite estate. Secondly, she is stripped, exposed in her nakedness, a frequently cited punishment of courtesans, whose meretricious adornment has been a means of seduction.

* [When the Apostle Paul refers to the fact that the Thessalonians treated him as (ὡς) an Apostle, does he imply that he was a mock-apostle? The well-known force of ὡς is to indicate not mere similarity to an individual or a class, but inclusion in a class specified—thus it is declared, Matt. xxii. 26, that the people held John as a prophet; see also 1 Cor. iv. 1, 14; x. 15; 2 Cor. vi. 4, etc. And further: "To receive authority as a king," is to be a king, de facto if not de jure.—E. B. C.]

Thirdly, she is, while still living, robbed of her flesh, which her enemies devour: her goods, her territories, all her possessions become the prey of the foe. And fourthly, she is, in a sarcastic auto da fé, suggestive of so many like proceedings, burned with fire; amid the wrath-fire of open, bold Antichristianity, hypocritical Antichristianity meets its end.—For God gave into their hearts. As, in accordance with the grand view of the Seer, in the wrath of the heathen, the wrath of God is manifest in an ironical mode of judgment, so in the one mind and unanimity of these kings, the purpose of God is visible, and in the surrender of their kingdom to the Beast, the consummation of the prophetic words of God may be seen, as in that dark hour when Caiaphas and Pilate were made to subserve His Providence (John xi. 51, xix. 11). The Angel at the close comprehends the characteristics of the Woman in one expression: The Woman that thou sawest is the great city that hath kingdom over the kings of the earth. In the Woman, Great Babylon shall be judged specially as Babylon.

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

[ELLIOTT: * This chapter contains a vision (vers. 3-6), and a descriptive statement by the Angel (vers. 7-18); both the vision and statement are introductory to the judgment upon Babylon, and explanatory of its causes and reasonableness. In the Vision, the Woman represents Papal Rome; the Beast, the Roman Empire under its last or Papal head (see p. 259); the desert, the Roman Campagna. The period of time contemplated in the vision is the 1260 years of the Beast's life under his last head (p. 260).—In the description, the Angel contemplates the entire history of both the Woman and the Beast—the former representing Rome, Imperial and Papal (see ver. 18); the latter (identical with the Beast from the sea of ch. xiii.), the Roman Empire under all its heads or forms. (It is on the ground of the general nature of this description that Elliott denies that the burning of ver. 16 is the final burning foretold in ch. xviii. 8. He explains the destruction referred to in the former instance as preceding the vision—as that effected by the ten Gothic powers in the Fifth and Sixth centuries. These horns of the Beast (p. 260) then spoiled and burned the City, and so desolated the surrounding Campagna as to produce the ἐρημος or desert, in the midst of which Papal Rome arose, and in which (ver. 3) the vision was located).—The riding of the Woman on the Beast (ver. 3) symbolizes that the Western Papal Empire, as a whole, with the power of its ten secular kingdoms and many peoples, should uphold and be ruled by Papal Rome.—The double character of the Woman, as a Harlot with the ten kings and a tavern-hostess vending drugged wines to the common people (vers. 1, 2, 4), symbolizes her unholy alliance with the former, and her unholy and corrupting traffic (in indulgences, relics, transubstantiationcup, etc.) with the latter.—The adornment of the Harlot (ver. 4) presents, “as applied to the Romish Church, a picture characteristic and from the life; the dress coloring specified being distinctively that of the Romish ecclesiastical dignitaries, and the ornaments those with which it has been bedecked beyond any Church called Christian.”—The word Mystery, ver. 5 (allusive to the mystery of iniquity, 2 Thess. ii. 7, 8), “was once, if we may repose credit on no vulgar authority, written on the Pope's tiara.”*—The title “Mother of harlots, etc.,” is a parody of the title, “Rome, Mother and Mistress.”—The drunkenness with the blood of saints, ver. 6, symbolizes the martyr blood shed by Rome throughout the 1260 years of her prosperity.

BARNES: This chapter commences a more detailed description of the judgment inflicted on the Antichristian power referred to in ch. xvi.; it contains a description of the sequel of the seventh Vial, which is continued (in various forms) to the close of ch. xix.; it embraces the following: 1. Introduction, vers. 1-3; 2. A particular description of this Antichristian power, vers. 3-6; 3. An explanation of what is meant by the Woman, and of the design of the representation, which comprises (1), a promise of the Angel that he would explain; (2) an enigmatical representation of the design of the vision (containing a description of the Beast, etc.), vers. 8-14; (3) a more literal statement of what is meant by this, vers. 15-18.—The Harlot symbolizes Papal Rome; her adornment, fornication, cup, drunkenness, many waters, substantially as Elliott; her inscription, see EXPL. IN DETAIL, ver. 5.—The Beast is identical with that of ch. xiii. 1, and designates the Roman power (see p. 260)—the period of the vision being that of the Eighth or Papal head and the ten horns, or ten subordinate kingdoms†—viz.: the 1260 years of Papal supremacy.—The destruction of vers. 16, 17, is the final destruction of ch. xviii. 8, to be effected by the instrumentality of the ten secular powers who now uphold and are governed by the Harlot.—The ἐρημος, ver. 3, is the Roman Campagna.‡

* [“Scaliger, on the authority of an informant of the Duke of Montmorency whilst at Rome. And so again Francis Le Moine and Brocardus, on ocular evidence, they assure us; saying that Julius III. removed it. see Daubuz, Vitringa, and Bishop Newton, ad loc.” Foot-note by ELLIOTT.—E. B. C.]

† [Barnes agrees with Elliott as to the general interpretation of the heads and horns, as on p. 259. He understands, however, by the sixth head, not the diademed emperors whom he includes under the fifth, but the Dukedom under the Exarchate of Ravenna, continuing from A. D. 566 to 727.—E. B. C.]

‡ [Barnes agrees with Elliott as to the place indicated by the ἐρημος, but not as to the fact that it was produced by the destruction of ver. 16. The following extract which he makes from Gibbon's Decline and Fall, ch. xlv, deserves consideration: “Rome had reached, about the close of the sixth century, the lowest period of her depression. By the removal of the seat of empire, and the successive loss of the provinces, the sources of private and public opulence were exhausted; the lofty trees under whose shade the nations of the earth had reposed, was deprived of its leaves and branches, and the empty trunk left to wither on the ground. The ministers of command and the messengers of victory no longer met on the Appian or Flaminian way; and the hostile approach of the Lombards was often felt and continually feared. The inhabitants of a potent and peaceful capital, who visit without an anxious thought the garden of the adjacent country, will faintly picture in their fancy the distress of the Romans; they shut or opened their gates with a trembling hand, beheld from the walls the flames of their

* [Elliott is at this point exceedingly obscure. The above is believed to be a fair presentation of the views he designed to express.—E. B. C.]

STUART: Ch. xvii. is wholly occupied with an explanatory vision designed for the purpose of making the reader understand whose destruction is going on.—The Woman symbolizes the City of Rome, "altogether in the manner of the Old Testament prophets, who everywhere personify great cities by women."—"The Beast means the Roman Emperors, specifically Nero, of whom the report spread throughout the empire is (was) that he will revive, after being apparently slain, and will come as it were from the abyss or Hades; but he will still perish, and that speedily. The Beast symbolizes him of whom it is said, that all the world will wonder at and worship him, when they see him thus returned, as they suppose from the under-world" (see also p. 261).—The ten horns denote the subordinate and tributary kings of the empire, who unite with the Beast in persecuting the Church.—Ver. 16 indicates "that tyrants like Nero, and persecutors such as his confederates, would occasion wasting and desolation to Rome, even like that already inflicted by Nero, who had set Rome on fire and consumed a large portion of it. In a description so highly figurative as the one before us, nothing more seems to be necessarily meant."—The ἐπῆνος of ver. 8, is "appropriate to symbolize the future condition of the Beast."

WORDSWORTH. The views of this commentator concerning the Woman and her session upon the Beast, coincide generally with those of Elliott and Barnes.—For his interpretation of the Beast and the heads, see p. 261.—By the horns he understands "the kingdoms growing out of the Roman Empire at its dismemberment."—The ἐπῆνος, he declares, may indicate the Cam-houses, and heard the lamentations of their brethren who were coupled together like dogs, and dragged away into distant slavery beyond the sea and the mountains. Such incessant alarms must annihilate the pleasures and interrupt the labors of rural life; and the Campagna of Rome was speedily reduced to the state of a dreary wilderness, in which the land is barren, the waters are impure, and the air infectious. Curiosity and ambition no longer attracted the nations to the capital of the world; but if chance or necessity directed the steps of a wandering stranger, he contemplated with horror the vacancy and solitude of the city; and might be tempted to ask, where is the Senate, and where are the people? In a season of excessive rains, the Tiber swelled above its banks, and rushed with irresistible violence into the valleys of the seven hills. A pestilential disease arose from the stagnation of the deluge, and so rapid was the contagion that fourscore persons expired in an hour in the midst of a solemn procession which implored the mercy of heaven. A society in which marriage is encouraged, and industry prevails, soon repairs the accidental losses of pestilence and war; but as the far greater part of the Romans was condemned to hopeless indigence and celibacy, the depopulation was constant and visible, and the gloomy enthusiasts might expect the approaching failure of the human race. Yet the number of citizens still exceeded the measure of subsistence; their precarious food was supplied from the harvest of Sicily and Egypt; and the frequent repetition of famine betrays the inattention of the emperor to a distant province. The edifices of Rome were exposed to the same ruin and decay; the mouldering fabrics were easily overthrown by inundations, tempests and earthquakes, and the monks who had occupied the most advantageous stations, arraigned in their base triumph over the ruins of antiquity. . . . Like Thebes, or Babylon, or Carthage, the name of Rome might have been erased from the earth, if the city had not been animated by a vital principle which again restored her to honor and dominion. . . . The power as well as the virtue of the Apostles revived with living energy in the breasts of their successors; and the chair of St. Peter, under the reign of Maurice, was occupied by the first and greatest of the name of Gregory. . . . The sword of the enemy was suspended over Rome; it was averted by the mild eloquence and reasonable gifts of the Pontiff, who commanded the respect of heretics and barbarians."—E. B. C.]

pagna, or the moral wilderness in which Rome is situate, or both.—The destruction of ver. 16 he interprets as Barnes.

ALFORD. This commentator also adopts the generally accepted Protestant hypothesis (that advocated by Elliott and Barnes) concerning the Woman, her adornment, fornication, session upon the Beast, etc.—For his interpretation of the Beast and the seven heads, see pp. 261 sq.—Concerning the eighth head he writes: "This eighth, the last and worst phase of the Beast, is not represented as any one of his heads, but as being the Beast himself in actual embodiment. He is ἐκ τῶν ἐπτά, not 'one of the seven,' but the successor and result of the seven, following and springing out of them. And he εἰς ἀπώλειαν ἵκναιται—does not fall like the others, but goes on and meets his own destruction at the hand of the Lord Himself. There can be little doubt in the mind of the student of prophecy, who is thus described; that it is the ultimate Antichristian power, prefigured by the little horn in Daniel, and expressly announced by St. Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 8 sqq."—He interprets the ten horns as "ten European powers, which, in the last time, in concert with and subjection to the Antichristian power, shall make war against Christ. In the precise number and form here indicated, they have not yet arisen."—He regards the destruction as the final destruction mentioned ch. xviii.

LORD: It is apparent from vers. 1, 2, that the Woman had been beheld in a previous but unrecorded vision, sitting where there were seven mountains and many waters. The scene was the site of Rome; the seven mountains were the seven hills of that city, and were symbols of the seven kinds of rulers who had exercised the government of the ancient empire; the waters were symbols of the peoples, etc., of the empire; the Woman symbolized the nationalized hierarchies of the Apostate Church, and the actions ascribed to her show that the kings of the earth united with her in her idolatry.—The vision exhibited (vers. 8-6) and the explanation (vers. 7-18) represent the Woman in her relations to the rulers, first as her supporters, and finally as her destroyers.—The Beast on which the Woman was borne, was, and is not, and yet is: it was, as the successors of rulers of the ancient empire, which its heads symbolize, had been; it is not, as a government of a head is no longer exercised over the empire as anterior to its fall; and yet it still is, in an eighth form, inasmuch as the cotemporaneous kings who now reign over the kingdom into which it is divided exert a sway essentially the same—they are a combination of rulers and under their several governments one, by exercising their authority on the same principles and on the same authority as the seventh head, and in that respect they are an eighth appropriately symbolized by the same monster under the horns.—The names of blasphemy symbolize the * [Lord regards the Beast as identical with that of ch. xiii. 1. At the time of the emergence from the sea (ch. xiii.), the horns were diademed, which, in his judgment, indicates that then all the heads should have fallen, although at the time of the Apocalyptic but five had fallen. At the time of the emergence, and in the passage before us, the Beast represents "the Gothic rulers who established governments in the Western Empire during the Fifth century, and their successors and subjects to the present time" (see p. 262). The Beast in its arrogation by the rulers of the rights of God, in assuming to dictate the faith and worship of their subjects, legislating over Divine laws, making their will the reason that they are to offer worship, etc.—The session of the Woman on the Beast denotes that the combination of hierarchies whom she symbolizes is nationalized and established by the civil rulers.—The destruction of ver. 16 has already begun in the disallowance and scorn of the claims of the Established Church in most of the European States, the confiscation of her property in France, the conquest of the Papal States, etc.; and these judgments are to be carried on to a greater severity.

GLASGOW. This writer adopts the generally accepted Protestant view that the Woman symbolizes Rome ecclesiastical.—The Beast he identifies with the Beast of ch. xiii. 1, and the Dragon of ch. xii. (see p. 263), and regards it as symbolizing, in its entirety, the world-power, and at the period contemplated by the vision, the Roman Empire in and after the fall of the Western Empire, A. D., 493.—The heads have here a double symbolization; they are: 1. Seven mountains, i. e., the seven forms of government through which the Beast (since his emergence from the sea, ch. xiii. 1) has passed, viz.: (1) the state of ten horns represented in Italy for a time by Odoacer and Theodoric, (2) the government of Justinian in the West, (3) the Kingdom of the Lombards, (4) that of Pepin and Charlemagne, (5) that of Otto the Great, (6) that of Charles V., (7) that of the Emperors after Protestantism obtained political equality, A. D. 1555; 2. Seven kings, i. e., the original kingdoms out of which the Roman power rose, as on p. 242.—The horns he interprets as Elliott, see p. 259.—The session on the Beast he interprets as Elliott and Protestant interpreters generally.—The period of the vision he places in the latter part of the effusion of the seventh Vial; the Woman “is revealed to view in the same condition in which she has existed for a long period.”—Ver. 16 foretells the assaults that have from the era of the Emperors been made, from time to time, upon the Romish Church, to result in a complete destruction.

AUBERLEN: This chapter describes the Harlot and the Beast, ripe for judgment. (For the views of this writer concerning the Woman and the Beast, generically considered, and the wilderness, see pp. 248 sq., and 263 sq.). The Harlot is identical with the Woman of ch. xii., who symbolizes the Church of God in the world; she is the Church conforming to the world. The identity is established by, 1. The place where she is seen, the wilderness, comp. xii. 6, 14; xvii. 8. 2. The fact that the same expressions are used in chs. xii. and xvii. for wilderness and Woman (ἔρημος and γυνή). 3. The fact that the Beast in the two chapters is identical;—but Beast and Woman are in both placed in immediate connection; if the identity of the one is conceded, how is it possible to doubt that of the other? * 4. The expression used by the Seer: “When I saw her I wondered:”—the wonder finds its only explanation in the extraordinary change which had passed over the Woman; the impression made on John may be expressed by the words of Isaiah (i. 21): “How is the faithful city become a harlot!” 5. The reason which lies in the expressions: Harlot (xvii. 1, 5, 15, 16; xix. 2), to commit fornication (xvii. 2; xviii. 3, 9), fornication (xiv. 8; xvii. 2, 4; xviii. 8; xix. 2); Woman means the Church (see on p. 248); Harlot throughout both Testaments the Apostate Church, comp. Jer. ii., iii.; Ezek. xvi., xxiii.; Hos. i.-iii.; Matt. xii. 89; xvi. 4; Mark viii. 38; Rev. ii. 21. 6. The objective parallelism between Babylon and New Jerusalem; both are cities—the one a harlot, the other a bride (xvii. 1, 3, 5; xxi. 9); but as the latter is acknowledged to mean the transfigured Church, it follows that Babylon means the Church in its worldliness. 7. The contrast in xix. 2, 9, between the Harlot and the Wife of the Lamb. 8. The word Mystery on the forehead of the Harlot (ver. 5); this word warns us not to adopt a literal, but to look for a spiritual interpretation of those which follow, an interpretation to which we may be guided by Eph. v. 31, 32.—The word Harlot describes the essential character of the false Church; she retains her human form, remains a woman, does not become a beast—she has a form of godliness, but denies the power thereof (2 Tim. iii. 8). Her adultery “appears in its proper form when she wishes herself to be a worldly power, uses politics and diplomacy, makes flesh her arm, uses unholy means for holy ends, spreads her dominions by sword or money, fascinates the hearts of men by sensual ritualism, allows herself to become ‘Mistress of ceremonies’ to dignitaries of this world, flatters prince or people, the living or the dead—in short, when she, like Israel of old, seeks the help of one worldly power against the danger threatening from another;” it appears in a less gross form (comp. Matt. v. 28) “whenever she forgets that she is in the world, even as Christ was in the world, as a bearer of the cross and pilgrim, that the world is crucified to her and judged, whenever she regards the world as a reality and lusts after its power and pleasures.” “Herein consists the essence of whoredom, in leaning and listening, and conforming to, and relying on the world. Hence, there could not be a better description of it than that given, xvii. 3, 7, 9; the Woman sits on the Beast.”† (See also below).—The Harlot cannot be found exclusively either in the Romish Church, or in the Established State Churches. Christendom (the Church) as a whole, in all its manifold manifestation of sects, is the Harlot; the boundaries between Woman and Harlot are not denominational—true believers are hidden and dispersed, the invisible Church is within the visible, as the kernel within the shell;* nevertheless it is true that the Roman and Greek Churches are in a more peculiar sense the Harlot, than the evangelical Protestant. “The Roman Catholic Church is not only accidentally and de facto, but in virtue of its very principle, a harlot, . . . whereas the Evangelical (Protestant) Church is, according to her principle and fundamental creed, a chaste woman; the Reformation was a protest of the Woman against the Harlot.”—As yet the mystery of Babylon is not fully developed. Bengel was probably correct in his expectation that Rome will once more rise to power; it is probable that the Greco-Russian Catholicism will likewise become of importance; the adulterous, worldly elements, in all churches and sects, lean towards that false Catholicism, and pave the way for its progress;—and thus may it attain again to power.—In like manner as the Woman, the Beast also appears in this chapter in a shape other than before; the deadly wound (xiii. 8) is healed (see Extracts from Auberlen in foot-notes, pp. 268 sq.)—he recovers life and returns, but now not only from the sea (xiii. 8), but out of the abyss (xvii. 8), whence he has drawn new Antichristian strength of Hell; he is now scarlet-colored, a symbol of his blood-guiltiness; the names of blasphemy formerly on his heads (xiii. 1) now cover his whole body, as a sign that his opposition to God is now to manifest itself perfectly; the crowns which were formerly on the horns (xvii. 3) have now disappeared.† In such manner the Antichristian Kingdom comes into existence;—“a new kingdom in which all the Beast's opposition to God is concentrated, and raised to a power such as it had had never before; therefore we read of an eighth, which proceeds from the seven (xvii. 11), and is the full manifestation of the beast-nature.” The final apostasy will consist in the union of the pseudo-Christian and Antichristian elements, which the Apocalypse expresses by the Harlot sitting on the Beast;* this alliance likewise appeared in the concluding period of the Old Testament—apostate Israel, which was then the Harlot, formed an alliance with the heathen world-power against Jesus and His Apostles, see Luke xxiii. 12; Acts xvii. 5, 9.—The abominations committed by the Jews, drew down the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, that is the judgment of the Harlot by the Beast (Dan. ix. 26, 27)—an exact parallel to the future judgment set forth in vers. 16, 17.—The judgment on the Harlot has already begun; see extract in foot-note (first column), p. 264.—E. R. C.]

* [“It must strike the reader at a first glance that all three expressions, wilderness, Woman, Beast (ch. xvii. 3), are without the article, which would be naturally expected here as expressions known from their previous occurrence. But the omission of the article has its good reason. The three expressions are identical and yet in a sense not identical with the former; the heathen world, the Church, and the world-power, have undergone, as we shall see subsequently, great changes, so much so, that John can scarcely recognise them, and sees a beast, a woman, and a wilderness.” AUBERLEN.—E. R. C.]

† [Auberlen precedes the statements of which this section is an abstract, with a résumé of New Testament prophecy concerning the corruption of the Church. He writes: “Our Lord Himself has given no obscure intimations in the parables which refer to the history of the Church (Matt. xiii.), that when once the gospel, according to its destination, shall have the whole world for its field, . . . the Church would not be pure, but mixed, consisting of good and evil. The xxiv. ch. of Matthew, Christ’s eschatological words, in which He entirely symbolizes the Roman Empire in all its forms both before and after the disruption;—the heads representing the different forms of government before the disruption, viz.: kings, consuls, dictators, decemvirs, tribunes, Pagan emperors, Christian emperors; the horns as above.—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ch. XVII. 1, 2. One of the seven, etc.—Which, is not to be determined, though the judgment upon Babylon in the narrower sense is indicated under the fourth Vial of anger.—Hither, deepo (comp. ch. xxi. 3).—The reference is not to a local motion, but to a certain direction of the contemplation in accordance with the guidance of the Angel.—I will show unto thee the judgment.—“The fulfilment of the promise is not found immediately in ver. 8 (contrary to the opinion of Hengstenberg), nor is it contained at all in ch. xvii.” (Düsterdieck). It is doubtless, however, the idea of the Angel that John must already be able to see the judgment in this appearance of this Woman—ch. xvii. being the judgment in a Heaven-picture, and ch. xviii. the same in an Earth-picture.—Of the great harlot.—Pagan Rome, according to Düsterdieck. The following description is simply inappropriate to this conception.—That sitteth [Lange: is enthroned] upon many waters.—Pagan Rome did indeed reign over many peoples, but its throne did not rest upon the superstition of those peoples (Jer. li. 13 does not apply here). Still more forcibly does the following pronounce against the application of the passage to pagan Rome.—[Ver. 2]. With whom the kings of the earth committed fornication.—Pagan Rome did not allure the kings of the earth by blandishments; she destroyed them. There is one case—that of Antony and Cleopatra—which might be recommended, as a make-shift, to the “historical interpretation,” but even there the genders would have to be reversed before it could properly be regarded as applicable.—And they who inhabit the earth were made drunk, etc.—Not even this could be said, with reference to pagan Rome, either of the Spaniards, or of the views simultaneously the destruction of Israel and His Parousia, and hence judgment upon Israel and Christendom, —is based upon the fundamental view that the New Testament Church will become as much a wicked and adulterous generation as the Old Testament congregation; and the Lord dwells upon some symptoms and characteristics of this adultery, as distrust and suspicion, hatred, treachery (vers. 10-12), division into parties (23-26), false doctrine (21). In the light of this chapter the Apostles looked into the future of the Church, see 1 Tim. iv. 1 sq.; 2 Tim. iii. 1 sq.; iv. 3, 4; 2 Peter ii. 1-3; iii. 3; 1 John ii. 18.” Comp. also Luke xviii. 8.—E. R. C.]

* [Auberlen quotes as follows from John Michael Hahn (Briefe u. Lieder über die Offenbarung, vol. v., sect. 6): “The Harlot is not the city of Rome alone, neither is it only the Roman Catholic Church, to the exclusion of another, but all Churches and every Church, ours included, viz.: all Christendom that is without the Spirit and life of our Lord Jesus, which calls itself Christian, and has neither Christ's mind nor Spirit. It is called Babylon, that is, confusion, for false Christendom, divided into very many churches and sects, is truly and strictly a confuser. However, in all churches, parties and sects of Christendom, the true Jesus-congregation, the Woman clothed with the sun, lives and is hidden. Corrupt, lifeless Christendom is the Harlot, whose great aim and rule of life is the pleasure of the flesh, the welfare of the beast-like, sensual humanity, who is open to the influence of all false spirits and teachers, and is governed by the spirit of nature and the world.”—E. R. C.]

† [“Is this circumstance intended as an indication that the ten kingdoms into which the Germanic-Slavonic world is to be divided, will lose their monarchical form in the end? The expression (ver. 2), ‘receive power as kings,’ speaking of the power which they are to receive along with the Beast in the last time (μικρὸν ὥρα), seems to be in favor of such a supposition.” AUBERLEN.—E. R. C.]

* [In a preceding paragraph, Auberlen speaks of the union of the Woman upon the Beast as symbolizing her adultery (see above), but here as indicating the final apostasy. Although the former of these is the beginning of, and results in the latter, yet are they distinct as bud and fruit. Is it not more correct to say that the reason indicates the completed and public alliance of the Church with the world, or world-power?—E. R. C.]

Britons, or of the Germans, or of the Parthians, or of the Jews.

Ver. 3. And he carried me away in spirit.—This is to be understood only of a change effected in the ecstatic direction of the spirit [of the Seer]. "The confounding of this wilderness with that mentioned in ch. xii. 6, 14—a proceeding which, on account of the lack of the article is, even from a mere formal point of view, properly impossible—is in Auberlen's case connected with his view of the identity of the Harlot of ch. xvii. and the Woman of ch. xii.*" DÜSTERDIECK. Most certainly, the ascetic wilderness in which Jesuitism has its being is, spiritually, utterly diverse from the wilderness of Saint Anthony, and yet the two stand in the relation of historic continuity, and, hence, external unity. In like manner, the relation of the Harlot to the Woman is determined. According to DÜSTERDIECK, et al., the Woman is seen in the wilderness because of the desolation imminent upon her in accordance with ver. 16! The symbolical interpretation of the wilderness is abundantly illustrated both by the Old and the New Testaments (Moses, Elijah, John the Baptist, etc.); we must, therefore, wonder at the perverted interpretations of it (Bengel: Europe, especially Italy; other interpretations, see in DÜSTERDIECK, p. 506). The fact that the same Woman who here sits in the wilderness, is subsequently represented as sitting on many waters, must necessarily give trouble to the "historical interpretation."—And I saw a Woman sitting upon a scarlet Beast.—De Wette and Züllig embellish the Beast with a scarlet covering. The Beast must wear the color of blood (Andr. Lyra, et al.), just as the Dragon wears the color of flame, which is allied to blood-color. The Woman's attire is variegated; together with the blood-color, the honorable hue of purple appears. In general, the Beast of the present passage is identical with that of ch. xiii.; observe, however, the formal distinction that in the latter passage the Beast is spoken of in its general, world-historical shape, whilst here the primary and special reference is to it in its re-appearance after its vanishment, as the bearer, at first, of the Harlot.—Full of the names of blasphemy.—The γεγον† with the accusative is remarkable. Hebraizing: An emphatic expression: now filled up with writing; all the names of blasphemy. ["The names of blasphemy, which were found before on the heads of the Beast only (xiii. 1), have now spread over its whole surface. As ridden and guided by the Harlot, it is tenfold more blasphemous in its titles and assumptions than before. The heathen world had but its *Di*vi in the Cæsars as in other deified men of note; but Christendom has its 'Most Faithful' and 'Most Christian' kings, such as Louis XIV. and Philip II.; its 'Defenders of the Faith,' such as Charles II. and James II.; its society of unprincipled intriguers called after the sacred name of our Lord, and working Satan's work 'ad majorem Dei gloriam;' its 'holy office' of the Inquisition, with its dens of darkest cruelty; finally its 'Patrimony of St. Peter,' and its 'Holy Roman Empire;' all of them, and many more, new names of blasphemy, with which the Woman has invested the Beast. Go where we will, and look where we will in Papal Christendom, names of blasphemy meet us. The taverns, the shops, the titles of men and places, the very insurance badges on the houses are full of them." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 4. And gilded with gold and precious stone and pearls.—"The κεχρυσωμένη is zeugmatal" (Düsterdieck). Both precious stones and pearls, however, must have been set in gold. As a decoration of the Church, such an apparel rudely anticipates the adornment of the celestial congregation.—A golden cup.—Even the cup [Kelch=chalice] or goblet [Becher=beaker] would look very strange in the hand of pagan Rome. The cup is, apart from the symbolism of measure, here the symbol of fellowship; the golden cup symbolizes the holiest fellowship—the fellowship of salvation. But, filled with abominations, it is certainly akin to hypocrisy, as in accordance with Bede—a strange equivalent for the "poculum missaticum" (Calov.). According to DÜSTERDIECK, the golden cup means merely a cup that is golden, agreeably to the "historical interpretation." The accusative καὶ τὰ ἀνάθραρα is remarkable. The most plausible construction of this is, apparently, that of DÜSTERDIECK, who maintains that ἀνάθραρα should be taken as parallel with the accusative ποτήριον. It contributes to the characterism of the Woman when it is intimated that together with the cup she has all sorts of other things in her hand—things which the Spirit of truth designates as uncleanesses, and which are the issue of the fornication, i. e., idolatry, of the earth. ["This language is probably taken from Jer. li. 7, 'Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken; the nations have drunken of the wine, therefore the nations are mad.'" BARNES on xiv. 8.—E. R. C.]

Vers. 5, 6. A name written.—The μυστήριον does not belong to the inscription, but it characterizes it—i. e., it is declaratory that the name Babylon and the rest of the title—the mother of the harlots and the abominations, etc.—is to be symbolically understood. [So also BARNES, STUART, et al. On the other hand, HENGSTENB., WORDSWORTH, ALF., et al. LILLIE thus powerfully combats the former, and advocates the latter view: "1. While the Apocalypse is full of μυστήρια, in no other instance does the narrator herald one as such. 2. Supposing the inscription to have included μυστήριον, an explanation was thus formally invited which is furnished in ver. 7; and the interpreting Angel is then to be considered as taking up the very word, and as personally (ἐγώ) confronting the difficulty which it announced. 3. As the Angel uses it the term is attached not to the name, but to the Woman herself and her equipment. 4. In that reference it might very well characterize her origin, nature, history, and destination; graciously to know the evil—"the depths of Satan" (ii. 24)—"the mystery of iniquity" (2 Thess. ii. 7)—this, not less than the knowledge of the good, requires heavenly teaching and 'an unction from the Holy One' (1 John ii. 20). 5. Even if not intended thus to be itself descriptive of the Woman, μυστήριον might yet stand in the inscription as a sort of prelude or index to her name, somewhat like Ὀδοὶ καὶ ἀποκάλυψιν in ch. xiii. 18."—E. R. C.]

* [For the view of Auberlen, see foot-note (*), p. 311.—E. R. C.]

† [See TEXT, and GRAM., Note 3.—E. R. C.]

BABYLON THE GREAT.—This symbolism is introduced as early as in Genesis, with the history of the building of the tower, and carried on especially by Isaiah and Jeremiah; this special Babylon, however, must not be identified with the general Babylon (ch. xiv. 8 and ch. xvi. 19), as is ordinarily done.—The MOTHER OF HARLOTS has also a more special import; the mother is reflected in spiritually, or rather fleshly, kindred daughters, some of whom compete with the mother in magical power. Grotius is correct in supposing that the aspect of the Woman must proclaim her drunkenness—and that a drunkenness with the blood of the saints, even the witnesses of Jesus (see SYN. VIEW). Prelusive examples of blood-thirstiness and its augmentations are to be found in the old pagan world; this blood-thirstiness, however, is fulfilled in the specific lusting of the Woman after the blood of the witnesses of Jesus, prefigured, it is true, by the death of Abel (see Matt. xxiii.). ["The phraseology is derived from the barbarous custom (still extant among many pagan nations) of drinking the blood of enemies slain in the way of revenge. Here, then, the fury of the persecutors is depicted in a most graphic manner. Blood is drunk by them even to intoxication, i. e., copiously, in great quantities. The effect of drinking blood is said to be, to exasperate, and to intoxicate with passion and a desire of vengeance. But the copiousness of the draught, and so the extent and bitterness of persecution, is particularly marked by the expression here." STUART.—E. R. C.]—And I wondered.—The Seer could hardly have expressed so great astonishment at the blood-thirstiness of pagan Rome—a quality long notorious and, proportionably, not so extraordinary. But this Woman! The Jewish hierarchy had, certainly, already nailed Christ to the cross. But that such a Woman could finally be the product of the historical development of the Church of faith then existent, must appear even to the Seer, with his knowledge of the world, a thing unheard of. Düsterdieck here reverts to Auberlen, stating that it is the opinion of the latter that the Seer marvels at recognizing in the Harlot the degenerate Woman of ch. xii. 1. Düsterdieck calls this assumption an "egregious mistake." Not even Auberlen, however, could have looked upon the Woman herself as the Harlot; that which he so regards, is but the Woman's last historical representation—in antithesis to her internal essence, the finally emergent Bride.* Similar utterances of amazement at the degeneracy of the Church are to be found even in the Old Testament, Is. v. 1 [sq.], Jer. ii. 1 [sq.], ch. xviii., Ezek. xvi.; Matt. xxiv. 37, 1 Tim. iv., etc. According to Bengel, the Seer wondered at the phenomenon of so powerful a Beast being constrained to carry the Woman; according to Züllig, Düsterdieck, et al., he marvelled because he knew not the import of the phenomenon; according to Ebrard, his astonishment was occasioned by the change in the Beast which he had seen in ch. xiii. According to Hengstenberg, who frequently makes a point of discovering moral failings even in the visional moods of the Seer, the wonderment of John is censured as foolish. The object of astonishment is, doubtless, intelligible to the Seer—it is the contrast between the Woman and the Harlot; in regard to the origin and development of this contrast, however, he stands in need of enlightenment from the Angel. [The object of wonder is doubtless the complex mystery (the mysteria, for each object is in itself a mystery) concerning which the Angel gives an explanation, viz.: the Woman, the Beast, and their relation to each other. This is evident from the words of the Angel (ver. 7): Wherefore didst thou wonder? I will tell (explain to) thee the mystery, etc. The explanation extends through ver. 18.—E. R. C.] According to Düsterdieck, the Beast denotes the world-kingdom, and the Woman the world-city.

Ver. 7. I will tell thee the mystery.—The mystery which he is to know, is the relationship betwixt the Woman and the Beast [see above]. How has it come to pass that the Woman could seat herself upon this terrible Beast? Or how is it that the wild-Beast suffered itself to be mounted by the Woman, like a gentle palfrey? In this query lies the key to the dark words that follow. The first explanation is contained in the history of the Beast.

Ver. 8. The Beast . . . was, and is not, and is about to ascend out of the abyss.—The historic re-emergence of the world-power, spiritually wounded to death by Christianity—an event prophetically beheld by the Seer at a time when the Beast seemed to be really destroyed—serves as an occasion of offence and fall to the world and, consequently, to the majority of the men in whom the external and visible form of the Woman consists. The earthly-minded dwellers on the earth, whose names are not written in the Book of Life from the foundation of the world—who, therefore, do not belong to the selection of the sealed—shall wonder when they see this apparent revival and gain of dominion on the part of the Beast. This is the history of the waning faith in the world-overcoming victory of Christ and the simultaneously waxing faith in the omnipotence of the world-power. It is the history of all who can see the Kingdom of God only in a tangible Church, a tangible salvation, a tangible Head of the Church—in a word, in external things. All of these have lost all heart for the powers of the world to come; through them, the Beast rises and the Woman descends, in a spiritual sense, or, in respect of outward appearance, the Woman is elevated on the back of the Beast—by means of a compromise between the two. [For an exposition of the Abyss, see Excursus, pp. 864 sq.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 9. Herewith is connected the history of the Woman. It becomes intelligible only for the mind [Lange: understanding] that hath wisdom, the cultivated connoisseur of world-history, who views the same in the light of the Kingdom of God. The seven heads (of the Beast) are, primarily, seven mountains, on which the Woman sits. The fact that the Woman sits upon the seven mountains is, considered in and for itself, perfectly natural, for mountains are Divine political world-ordinances (see Rom. xiii.), and the seven mountains constitute the totality of the ground-forms of the political order of the world. But this natural conditionality of the Church upon worldly state ordinances becomes fatal from the fact that the seven mountains are at the same time seven kings, i. e., here, despotic powers; in other words, that the noble human image of metal (Dan. ii.) has a reverse side, in accordance with which it is composed of four rapacious beasts. Through the despotism of the world-monarchies, the Woman is continually drawn more and more into the parallel path of hierarchism, and her character becomes more and more corrupt. [See ADD. NOTE, p. 817.—E. R. C.]

* [For the view of AUBERLEN, see p. 311.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 10. After the general history of the Beast and the Woman, the Angel gives the Seer a world-historical exposition of his standpoint in time. Five kings, i. e., world-monarchies, from a theocratic point of view, are fallen. The one is now subsisting—the sixth king, i. e., the sixth world-monarchy, behind which the Beast seems, for the instant, to be annihilated by young Christianity. This view was, assuredly, more entertainable by the Seer at the time of Nerva or even Domitian than at the time of Nero. The other king is the seventh world-monarchy, the future historico-Christian world-monarchy in a general apprehension, in so far as it, as Beast, bears the Woman upon its back. The Seer, from his distance, beholds, in perspective, the time of the seventh king on a reduced scale; he must continue a little while. Then, however, the whole Beast reappears in the eighth king in his true and undisguised nature. As Satan has embodied himself in the Beast, so the whole Beast, as the sum of all world-historic enormities, embodies itself in the eighth monarchy. Hence the Angel speaks of the eighth king as proceeding from the seven, as, in a sense, the unitous evil genius who was present in separate forms in all his seven predecessors. But because world-historical wickedness is, so to speak, concentrated and sublimated in this monarchy, finally being, as it were, embodied in the personal Antichrist (though the latter may branch into ten mock-kings), the stay of this eighth king is not long; he appears, he becomes an instrument of judgment upon the Woman, he goes into perdition. [See ADD. NOTES, pp. 272 sq., 804 and 817 sq.—E. R. C.]

Hengstenberg correctly regards the seven mountains as symbols of seven kingdoms; Düsterdieck, on the other hand, with others, understands by them Rome, the City of the Seven Hills. Irrespective of our admission of an allusion to Rome, we consider the symbolic apprehension of the mountains as, indubitably, the true one, though, notwithstanding this, a number of other features are decidedly suggestive of the City of the Seven Hills. On the literal interpretation of the seven kings, or world-monarchies, as referring to seven persons, see p. 26, and the exegesis of ch. xiii.; comp. Düsterd., p. 512 sq.—Seven kings, this “historical,” i. e., literal, exposition [of Düsterdieck] declares, are merely seven kings and nothing more. Why then may not the Beast be a real beast and nothing more? The different modes of enumerating the kingdoms, see in Düsterd., ibid.—The five are fallen.—This, it is maintained, means that they are dead—in total contradiction to the use of terms. It may be queried: why is the successor of the fifth king not called the sixth, and the seventh, the seventh? Probably because both these numbers are in an eminent sense symbolical; here, however, this symbolism must lie dormant. The sixth is, contrary to the nature of six, the better, behind whom the Beast seems to have vanished; and the seventh is the tame one [der Zahme, with reference to the taming of the wild Beast into a palfrey, so to speak, of the Woman.—TA.], in whom the Beast again appears. The expression, and is of the seven [ver. 11] is differently interpreted, as: the returning Nero (De Wette, et al.); the returning Antiochus Epiphanes (Hofmann); a descendant of the seven (Primas., et al.). Düsterdieck, rightly, makes the eighth proceed from the totality of the seven. This conception is, truly, very difficult in connection with that view of the kings which regards them as significant of so many individuals. A thorough understanding of the subject, in general, is impossible on the basis of this latter view, as is demonstrated by the following note of Düsterdieck: “All interpretations are false, by which the concrete historic reference to the circumstances of the Roman Empire is discarded; thus, for instance, Andreas, who by the ἑπταίον (ver. 8) understands Satan, explains that by the appearance and, especially, the death of Christ, the Beast was brought to a state of not-being. Comp. Bede, C. à-Lap., Zeger, et al. Marlorat and other Protestants explain: Pagan Rome has passed away; Papal Rome is in present existence, but its world-dominion is in itself nought (οὐκ ἔστιν).” Various enumerations of the kings, in accordance with the synchrono-historical conception, see in Düsterdieck, p. 516. According to this expositor, the Seer did prophesy a little, after first prophesying ex post facto concerning kings already known to history; he fore-announced that Vespasian should be succeeded by his two sons: “Titus as the seventh, Domitian as the eighth—that Titus should continue for a short time, and that Domitian should appear as a personification of the whole Beast.” Nevertheless, “John was mistaken in the expectation that the Roman world-kingdom would perish with Domitian.” Still, Düsterdieck admits that a minimum of prophecy remains notwithstanding this mistake: “The singular error manifests, undoubtedly, a certain imperfectness of the prophetic essence in the Apocalypticist, but by no means entirely (!) abrogates that essence.”

Vers. 12 sq. Now follows the future history of the ten horns, in respect of their relation to the Beast and the Woman. For although their war with the Lamb is mentioned here, the principal point of view is the war with the Woman. The war with the Lamb, considered in and for itself, is not announced until ch. xix.; it is introduced here, in this earlier passage [ch. xvii. 14], because the hostility of the radical Antichristian powers against the Woman is directed against the last traces, reminiscences and tokens of Christianity in her nature.

Ver. 12. The ten horns are ten kings.—

The number ten is the number of the completed course of the world, the completed development of the world. In the ten kings, therefore, the political organization of the last phase of world-history is represented. They are all anarchical upstarts, who, thitherto, had not received the kingdom. They all coterminously attain to dominion together. They are all, in reality, mock-kings, or, symbolically defined, mock-governments and mock-powers, sporadically diffused over the earth, and for one hour only, i. e., for one unitous, great, final, terrible, but short decision-time, do they obtain the government with the Beast. This is the specific Antichristian evening of the world, which precedes the Parousia. The fact that they are but quasi-kings, is based not upon the shortness of the time of their supremacy (in accordance with Bengel and Düsterdieck), but upon the anarchical relations of the times. It is the period when the theocratic element in Church and State is laid dead, in accordance with ch. xi.; when the image and mark of the Beast prevail, in accordance with ch. xiii. [See on p. 308.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 13. These have one mind.—Not, simply, a common cause, but also a common theory ["one and the same view and intent and consent." ALFORD.—E. R. C.], the system of positive contempt and blasphemy of the name and tabernacle of God, and the dwellers in the Heaven (chap. xiii. 6), based upon a threefold perversion of the truth into strong falsehood (the absolute nameless Divine, the absolute religion of this world, and the absolute blessedness of this world). Hence, they stand, from the outset, in connection with the Beast and make themselves, with their masses of peoples, their power and authority, completely its organs.

Ver. 14. These shall war with the Lamb. [Together with the Beast, see xix. 19.—E. R. C.]—This announcement has a place here not independently, but as serving as an explanation of their hatred of the Harlot. Because they are enemies of the Lamb, even the dead, despiritualized symbolism, by which the Woman is still suggestive of the Lamb, is a subject of hatred. The Bride they scarcely see, because she is thoroughly internal, living, and human; she incurs their excommunication only in her individual members; the Harlot, however, they see, because she is thoroughly external, hindering life with her dead forms and denying humanity with her anti-human statutes.* Hence we here receive, in reference to the Lamb, only the precursory tranquillizing assurance that He shall conquer them because He is Lord of lords and King of kings. In His conflict and victory His people shall participate; they shall take part therein as truly called ones, who, in respect of their eternal ground-trait, are elect, and in respect of their character, in its temporal development,† faithful. For the description of them is not divisible into three characteristics, but into two—elect and faithful, jointly bearing the signature of the truly called. This companionship may be predicated of the sealed in this world, who are progressing toward the Parousia, as well as of the trans-mundane retinue of the Lord on Mount Sion, that is to appear with Him in accordance with ch. xix. [14].

[“Here is the ground and reason for the victory assigned, and that is taken, 1. From the character of the Lamb; He is King of kings and lord of lords. He has, both by nature and by office, power over all things; all the powers of earth and hell are subject to His check and control. 2. From the character of His followers; they are called, and chosen, and faithful; they are called out by commission to this warfare; they are chosen and fitted for it; and they will be faithful in it.—Such an army, under such a Commander, will at length carry all the world before them.” M. HENRY.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 15. And he saith unto me, The waters, etc.—These waters serve as an introduction to the judgment upon the Harlot. The Woman has a threefold foundation. Her safest position was in the wilderness, in so far as she was spiritually at home there. Pure renunciation of the world is identical with heavenly security. But even the seat upon the seven mountains, the seven kingdom-powers of political order, gave her, still, a royal firmness. She is, however, also founded upon the many waters of surging popular life, and this foundation has become infinitely fluctuating, since popular life has been set in motion from its very depths, and is sundering into peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues, and since the Woman has lost the foundations of genuine asceticism in the wilderness and of the protection of the seven mountains. Hence it is incorrect to say, “in spite of her wide dominion and all her glory, she shall be destroyed” (DÜSTERDIECK), for whence should the ten horns have their power if they did not establish themselves upon those very masses of peoples that have apostatized from the Woman?

Ver. 16. And the ten horns . . . and the Beast, these shall hate the Harlot.—This hatred manifests itself in two negative and two positive forms. They make her desolate, not in the sense of devastation, but they leave her to herself, they take her at her word, and make her a perfect eremitism; moreover, they deprive her of all worldly fullness and covering [Fülle und Hülle], so that she appears in all her nakedness. To these indignities are added positive damages; they eat her flesh, i. e., they wrest all her goods from her, and she herself is destroyed by the fire of negative fanaticism, after having so long raged with the fire of positive fanaticism. In all this the Beast, of course, acts through the horns or kings, hence et-a. Düsterdieck refers the flesh-eating to the figure of the Woman, and the burning to the figure of the City, of course maintaining that Rome is intended.

Ver. 17. For God gave into their hearts. Namely, to destroy the Woman. This judicial decree resolves itself into three parts: first, they must, blindly and against their will, execute the counsel of God; secondly, they must, in

* [The parallel passage in xix. 18, seems to indicate that the attack upon the Lamb and His followers shall be personal and direct.—E. R. C.]

† [Nach ihrem seilich ausgeprägten Charakter. The idea of the German is not that of an outward character, or form, imposed by the external application of a stamp, but one produced by internal out-pressure—by development.—E. R. C.]

thus doing, accomplish one purpose; thirdly, they must, in order to this end, surrender their whole power to the Beast until the latter, in like manner as an instrument of judgment, has accomplished all those words of God with which the Apostate Church has been threatened. Here, therefore, as in the crucifixion of Christ, Divine, human, and devilish counsels materially coincide in one, whilst they are formally, in their motives, thoroughly diverse and even opposed to each other. We, with Hengstenberg and others, refer the abroû after τῇ γυναικὶ to God, and not, with Bengel, Düsterd. and others, to the Beast, because this latter idea would then be tautologically expressed—the alliance between the kings and the Beast having previously been intimated. At the close of this chapter, Düsterd. vainly reiterates his assurance that nothing save pagan Rome can possibly be intended (p. 520).*

[Ver. 18. And the Woman that thou sawest, etc.—This verse concludes the Angel's explanation of the mystery (see ver. 7), and unmistakably presents to us as one and the same, the Harlot, the Great City, and Babylon the Great (comp. vers. 8, 5, 7, 18).—E. R. C.]

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON CH. XVII.]

By the American Editor.

[This chapter contains a section supplemental to the pouring out of the seventh Vial. It contains: 1. An introduction to the vision, vers. 1, 2; 2. The description of the vision, vers. 3-6; 3. The explanatory remarks of the Angel, vers. 7-18.

In his interpretation of the symbols, the writer agrees in the main with Auberlen, but with variations, as will appear. For his exposition of the Beast, see p. 272. In this chapter the Apostate Church, which, in ch. xvi., was figured by Babylon (i. e., the Great City=Rome), is presented under the symbol of a Harlot. These symbols represent the Church from different stand-points;—the former in her earthly relations as a great, populous, wealthy, powerful world-city; the latter in her relations to Christ, as a once chaste Bride now faithless to her husband;—each of these symbols represents an important truth which is not set forth by the other. In this chapter a portion of the imagery of the city-symbolization is preserved. This, indeed, may be regarded as detracting from the artistic unity of the respective symbols; but upon reflection it will be seen not only to unite the two symbols, but to give to each an instructive force that could not otherwise have been given. The mountains, the waters, and the wilderness are taken from the city-symbolization;—the mountains relate primarily to the mountains on which Rome is situate, which symbolize the seven great world-kingdoms; the waters, probably to the Mediterranean—that great sea which Rome once dominated, symbolizing the peoples and multitudes subject to the Church; the wilderness relates to the present and future Roman Campagna, an ἐρημος which aptly symbolizes the moral world-waste around the Church at the period contemplated in the vision—a waste which it was her duty to reclaim and cultivate, but which she has left uncared for.

The Vision, vers. 8-6, is a scene beheld under the seventh Vial; it represents the Church in the last time, in completed unholy alliance with the world-power, and ready for the destruction about to be visited upon her through the instrumentality of the Beast and the ten horns. The Introduction, vers. 1, 2, and the Explanation, vers. 7-18, sweep through the entire period of the Church's history; they represent her as sitting on the seven mountains (vers. 9, 10), i. e., as having formed in every epoch of her history an adulterous connection with the then existing world-power—a connection prefiguring, and consummated in, the alliance symbolized in the vision. The parallelism between the adultery and the destruction foretold in this chapter, and those set forth Hosea ii. 1-13, is manifest upon comparison. Is there not also a parallelism between the deliverance of Hosea ii. 14-23 and that alluded to ch. xviii. 4? In the latter case, as in the former, is there not an allusion to the education of a life-germ, in the day of destruction, from the corrupt mass, to be the seed of a new organism? The valley of Achor has ever been to the true Church a door of hope, comp. Hosea ii. 15; Josh. vii. 26; Isa. lxx. 10.*—E. R. C.]

* [The study of this chapter has induced the questions: Is not the range of the seven heads, given on p. 272, too narrow? May not the reference be to the world-powers of the seven great epochs of the Church's history? These are, I. The Antediluvian, ending with the apostasy set forth Gen. vi. 2, 12, and the Deluge. II. The Noachic, terminating in the spiritual adultery alluded to Josh. xxiv. 2, and followed by the call of Abraham. III. The Patriarchal, terminating in the idolatry of Israel in Egypt and the Egyptian oppression; (although not directly stated, it is probable that the spiritual adulteries in Egypt, mentioned Joshua xxiv. 14; Ezek. xx. 8; xxiii. 3, 8, occurred in the days of Israel's prosperity, Ex. i. 7, before her oppression by the Egyptians commenced). IV. The Mosaic, ending in the idolatry mentioned, 1 Sam. ii. 3, and the overthrow and subjection of Israel preceding the day of Mizpeh, 1 Sam. iv. 10, 11; vii. 3-14. V. The Samueic or Kingly, terminating in the adultery that was followed by the Babylonish captivity. VI. The Restoration, terminating in the alliance between the High Priest and Herod on the one hand and Pilate on the other, and the destruction of Jerusalem. VII. The existing epoch. At the close of each of the first six of these epochs there was on the part of the visible Church an apostasy from God and a completed alliance with the world, followed by a destruction more or less complete of the extant form of the Church and the bringing forth from the corrupt mass of a new life-germ. The prophecy under consideration foretells a similar adulterous alliance, a similar destruction of the visible body, and a similar eduction of the vital germ of a new organism, ch. xviii. 4.—E. R. C.]

* [Elliott also contends that the destruction effected by the horns cannot be the final destruction set forth in ch. xviii. 8, since the kings of the earth (the horns) are, xix. 9, spoken of as mourning over the burning. He therefore refers the spilling here mentioned to the destruction of Rome by the Gothic Kings in the Fifth and Sixth centuries (see p. 309). It must be admitted that he brings a weighty consideration in support of his opinion, one that may not be carelessly dismissed. It may be negatived by the fact, however, that men in their wrath often accomplish that over which they mourn in the subsequent hours of reflection. The Roman army destroyed the Temple at the capture of Jerusalem and this fulfilled the purposes of Jehovah (Josephus speaks of the soldier who applied the torch as "being hurried by a certain Divine fury"), and yet that destruction was mourned over by Titus and the army as a calamity.—E. R. C.]

B.—EARTH-PICTURE OF THE FALL OF BABYLON.

CH. XVIII 1-24.

And [om. And]<sup>1</sup> After these things I saw another angel come down [descending] from [ins. the] heaven, having great power [authority]; and the earth was light-
 2 ened [lighted up] with his glory. And he cried mightily [om. mightily] with [in] a strong voice,<sup>2</sup> saying, [ins. Fallen, fallen is] Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen [om. is fallen, is fallen], and is become the [a] habitation of devils [demons], and the [a] hold (φυλακή) of every foul [unclean] spirit, and a cage [hold] of every
 3 unclean and hateful [hated] bird. For all nations have drunk of [or fallen by]<sup>3</sup> the wine<sup>4</sup> of the wrath [anger or rage]<sup>5</sup> of her fornication, and the kings of the earth have [om. have] committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth are waxed [became] rich through the abundance [from the power or influence
 4 (δύναμις)] of her delicacies [luxury]. And I heard another voice from [ins. the] heaven, saying, Come [ins. forth] out<sup>6</sup> of her, my people, that ye be not partakers
 5 of [partake not in] her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached [heaped together]<sup>7</sup> unto [ins. the] heaven, and God hath remembered
 6 her iniquities. Reward [Render unto] her even [om. even] as [ins. also] she rewarded [rendered] you [om. you]<sup>8</sup>, and double unto her [om. unto her—ins. the]<sup>9</sup> double according to her works: in the cup which she hath filled [or mingled<sup>10</sup>], fill to [or 7 mingle<sup>10</sup> for] her double. How much she hath [om. hath] glorified herself [her-self], and lived deliciously [luxuriated], so much torment and sorrow give her: for she saith in her heart [ins. that]<sup>11</sup>, I sit a queen, and am no widow [a widow I
 8 am not], and shall see no sorrow [sorrow I shall not see]. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning [sorrow], and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire: for strong is the Lord God who judgeth [judged]<sup>12</sup>
 9 her. And [ins. there shall weep and wail over her] the kings of the earth, who [ins. with her] have committed fornication and lived deliciously with her, shall bewail her, and lament for her [om. with her, shall bewail her, and lament for 10 her], when they shall [om. shall] see the smoke of her burning, standing afar off for the fear of her torment, saying, Alas [Woe], alas [woe], that [the] great city [.] Babylon, that mighty [the strong] city! for in one hour is [om. is] thy judgment
 11 come [came]. And the merchants of the earth shall [om. shall]<sup>13</sup> weep and mourn
 12 [sorrow] over her; for no man buyeth their merchandise [lading] any more: The [om. The]<sup>14</sup> merchandise [lading] of gold, and [ins. of] silver, and [ins. of] precious stones [stone], and of pearls, and [ins. of] fine linen, and [ins. of] purple, and [ins. of] silk, and [ins. of] scarlet, and all thyine wood, and all manner vessels of ivory [every ivory article], and all manner vessels [every article] of most

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

- <sup>1</sup> Ver. 1. Kal is omitted in accordance with ℳ. A. B<sup>o</sup>. [P.], etc.
<sup>2</sup> Ver. 2. The true reading is ἐν ἰσχυρῇ φωνῇ, in accordance with decisive authorities. [So read Crit. Eds. generally; the iv with A. P.; the ισχυρῇ φωνῇ with ℳ. A. (B<sup>o</sup>.) P., etc.—E. R. C.]
<sup>3</sup> Ver. 3. [Tisch. reads πνεύματι, πνεύματι with P., καὶ with A. C.; Treg. πνεύματι with A. C.; Alf. brackets the π; ℳ. and B<sup>o</sup> give πνεύματι.—E. R. C.]
<sup>4</sup> Ver. 3. [Tisch. gives τοῦ οἴνου with ℳ. B<sup>o</sup>., Clem., etc.; Lach. and Alf. omit with A., Am., Fuld., Tol., Lips.; Treg. brackets.—E. R. C.]
<sup>5</sup> Ver. 3. [For the rendering rage, see Note 16 on Chap. xiv., p. 274.—E. R. C.]
<sup>6</sup> Ver. 4. There are various forms of this; we, with Lach. [Ed. Maj., Tisch. (1859)], read ἐξέλθε, with B<sup>o</sup>. C., and also from internal reasons. [Lach. (Ed. Min.), Tisch. (8th Ed.), Treg., Alf., give ἐξέλθετε with ℳ. A.; P. reads ἐξέλθετε.—E. R. C.]
<sup>7</sup> Ver. 5. Ἐκολλήσαντες in accordance with ℳ. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. [P.]. De Wette translates: "they have reached unto the heaven."
<sup>8</sup> Ver. 6. The ὅτι is omitted. [Om. by Crit. Eds. generally with ℳ. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P., Am., Fuld., Demid., Tol., et al.; it appears in 1, 31, 91, 96, Clem., Lips., et al.—E. R. C.]
<sup>9</sup> Ver. 6. The αὐτῇ is unfounded. [Om. by Crit. Eds. Tisch. and Treg. insert τά with ℳ. C.; Lach. omits with A. B<sup>o</sup>. P.; Alf. brackets.—E. R. C.]
<sup>10</sup> Ver. 6. [See Note 19 on Chap. xiv., p. 274.—E. R. C.]
<sup>11</sup> Ver. 7. [Crit. Eds. give ὅτι with ℳ. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P.—E. R. C.]
<sup>12</sup> Ver. 8. [Crit. Eds. give κρίνας with ℳ<sup>o</sup>. A. B<sup>o</sup>. C. P.; κρίνον is given by ℳ<sup>o</sup>. 1, 6., etc.—E. R. C.]
<sup>13</sup> Ver. 11. [Crit. Eds. generally give καίουσιν καὶ περθεύουσιν with ℳ. A. C. P.—E. R. C.]
<sup>14</sup> Ver. 12. [The article is without authority.—E. R. C.]

- 13 precious wood, and of brass, and [ins. of] iron, and [ins. of] marble, and cinnamon, [ins. and amomum,]<sup>13</sup> and odors [incense (θυμιαματα)], and ointments [ointment], and frankincense, and wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beasts [cattle], and sheep, and [ins. of] horses, and [ins. of] chariots, and [ins. of] slaves [bodies (σωματα)], and souls (ψυχαι) of men. And the [thy]<sup>14</sup> fruits [fruit-time (ὄπωρα)]<sup>15</sup> that thy soul lusted after are [om. that thy soul lusted after are—ins. of the desire of the<sup>16</sup> soul is] departed from thee, and all [ins. the fat] things [ins. and the bright things] which were dainty and goodly [om. which were dainty and goodly] are [have] departed from thee, and thou shalt [they<sup>18</sup> shall] find them no [never, never] more at all.<sup>19</sup> The merchants of these things, which were made [who became] rich by her, shall stand afar off for the fear of her torment, weeping and wailing [sorrowing]. And [om. And]<sup>20</sup> saying, Alas [Woe], alas [woe], that [the] great city, that was clothed in fine linen, and purple, and scarlet, and decked [gilded] with gold, and precious stones [stone], and pearls [pearl]! For [Because] in one hour [ins. was made desolate] so great riches [wealth] is come to nought [om. is come to nought]. And every shipmaster [pilot], and all the company in ships [every one sailing in the region (or any whither),<sup>21</sup> and sailors, and as many as trade by [ply the] sea, stood afar off, and cried when they saw [or seeing] the smoke of her burning, saying, What city is [om. is] like unto this, the great city! And they cast dust on their heads, and cried, weeping and wailing [sorrowing], saying, Alas [Woe], alas [woe], that [the] great city, wherein were made [became] rich all that had ships in the sea by reason of her costliness! for in one hour is [was] she made desolate.
- 20 Rejoice over her, thou [O] heaven, and ye holy [om. ye holy—ins. the saints, and the] apostles and [ins. the] prophets; for God hath avenged you [om. hath avenged you—ins. judged your judgment]<sup>22</sup> on her.
- 21 And a [or one] mighty [strong] angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it [om. it] into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall [ins. be cast] that great city [om. that great city] Babylon [ins. , the great city] be thrown down [om. be thrown down], and shall be found no more at all.<sup>23</sup> And the [a] voice of harpers, and [ins. of] musicians [or singers], and of pipers, and [ins. of] trumpeters, shall be heard no more at all in thee; and no [any] craftsman [artisan], of [ins. any art] whatsoever craft he be [om. whatsoever craft he be], shall be found any [no] more [ins. at all] in thee; and the [a] sound [voice] of a millstone shall be heard no more at all in thee; and the [a] light of a candle shall shine no more at all in thee; and the [a] voice of the [om. the] bridegroom and of the [om. the] bride shall be heard no more at all in thee: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth;<sup>24</sup> for by thy sorceries [sorcery] were all [ins. the] nations deceived [seduced or misled (ἐπλανήθησαν)].
- 24 And in her was found the [om. the] blood<sup>25</sup> of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were [have been] slain upon the earth.

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 13. In accordance with Ms. A. C. [P. 6, 11, Am., Vulg., Tol., Lépa], etc. In the Rec. ἐμψυμον is omitted.

<sup>14</sup> Ver. 14. Codd. Ms. A. C. read ὅσον ἤτις ἐπιθυμίας.

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 14. [The primary meaning of ὄπωρα is, "the part of the year between the rising of Sirius and Arcturus, . . . and so, not so much the Lat. Autumnus, as our dog-days or, at most, the end of summer. . . It was the proper time for both the field and tree fruits to ripen" (Liddell and Scott sub voce).—E. R. C.]

<sup>16</sup> Ver. 14. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) give ἐπιθυμίας with Ms. A. C. P. Vulg., etc.; Tisch. (1869) gave ἐπιθυμίας with B<sup>2</sup>; 7 reads ἐπιθυμίας.—E. R. C.]

<sup>19</sup> Ver. 14. [The expression never, never more at all is adopted as the best idiomatic rendering of the threefold negative of the original, οὐκ ἔτι οὐ μὴ.—E. R. C.]

<sup>20</sup> Ver. 16. [Crit. Eds. omit καὶ with Ms. A. B<sup>2</sup> C.; it appears in P. Vulg., Æth., et al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>21</sup> Ver. 17. [Crit. Eds. give καὶ ὅς ἐστι τῶν πλοίων ὁ ὄμιλος with Ms. A. B<sup>2</sup> C., Am., Vulg., etc. (B<sup>2</sup> inserts τὸν before τῶν). Lange adopts this reading, declaring the Rec. (ἐν τῶν πλοίων ὁ ὄμιλος) to be unfounded; he translates, however, all who sail to definite places. Alford translates, every one who saileth any whither. The first of the renderings given above is regarded as most in accordance with the presumptive meaning of the expression ἐν τῶν; see Robinson under ἔνι, iii. a; and τῶτος, d. (γ).—E. R. C.]

<sup>22</sup> Ver. 20. [Exegetes—ὅς ἐκρίνα ὑμῶν ἐπ' αὐτῇ. Lange translates: hath executed your sentence upon her.—E. R. C.]

<sup>23</sup> Ver. 21. [The negatives in this and the following verses are merely double; see Note 19.—E. R. C.]

<sup>24</sup> Ver. 23. [Lange translates: for the princes of the earth were thy merchants. See on pp. 323, 328 sq.—E. R. C.]

<sup>25</sup> Ver. 24. Cod. B<sup>2</sup> gives αἱματι; A. C. [Ms. P.] give αἶμα. [Tisch. adopts the former reading; Lach., Alf., Treg. the latter.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

With the vision of the heavenly counsel of judgment upon Babylon and the ideal judgment itself, is conjoined the proleptical representation of the actual judgment as taking place on the earth. Hence, together with the unity of the two sections, we must also recognize the contrast between these two pictures of Babylon. In the light of Heaven, Babylon appears as a Woman, who, in the pomp of false magnificence and beauty, has lapsed into the extreme of hideousness; a Harlot,—drunken with blood—the blood of the saints; bearing still the golden cup of holy consecration, but riding upon the blood-colored Beast of Antichristianity, the organ of the abyss. In her earthly self-sufficiency and in the lament of the earth on her account (ch. xviii.), she is a Queen, to whom the kings of the earth have paid homage, who has been magnified by the rich, the merchants, and the sea-farers, glorified by the artisans, and marvelled at, in her splendor, possessions and enjoyment, by the inhabitants of the earth.

A strong Angel, who descends from Heaven to earth, comes upon her. His strength is signalized by the fact that the earth is lighted up by his glory. There is but one enlightenment for the earth—viz., the light of the gospel; but there is a distinction between the stage of apostolic embassy, that of reformatory confession, dogma and cultus, and this spiritual day-light of evangelic truth—appropriated by all good spirits,—which, in Divine-human beauty, in Christian humanity, finally, as in one instant, extends from land to land, and illumines the fallen Woman in all her hatefulness, thus executing upon her the ideal judgment and denouncing (vers. 2, 8) the first real judgment, which appears as a self-judgment of the great Babylon in her internal relations. The ideal judgment is the heavenly proclamation of her fall, loudly promulgated through the earth. Fallen! fallen! is the judicial cry of Heaven. The fall agrees in greatness with the height which she claimed as Babylon the Great (see Is. xiv.).

First Fundamental Form of the Actual Judgment.
Revelation of the Inner Judgment of the Fallen Church [vers. 2, 8].

She has become a habitation or dwelling-place of demons;—does not this, considered in the light of Heaven, signify a sort of Hell on earth? A watch-tower [hold] of all manner of unclean spirits;—does not this mean a concentration of the most diverse evil motives and egistical characters? A coop or poultry-yard [hold] of all unclean and hated birds;—does not this mean a gathering-place of all volatile minds, intent upon the prey of earthly profits? (See Matt. xiii. 32.) The Spirit of prophecy has indicated a firm and exclusive organization by a three-fold term: a fixed habitation, a watch-tower, a secure receptacle for birds.* It is true that φυλακή, in both instances of its occurrence, may be significant of a prison; this term would not here have been applicable to the demons. The cause of this destruction of Babylon is the wine of the anger [or rage] of her fornication, i. e., the riotous enthusiasm of her anger [rage] or fanaticism in favor of her idolatries, her deifications of all sorts. Of this wine she has given to all nations to drink, and has intoxicated them more or less, instead of truly sobering them for the milk of the Gospel and wholesome nourishment, in accordance with the reiterated instructions of the Apostles Peter and Paul (1 Peter i. 13, iv. 7, v.

8; 1 Cor. xv. 34; 1 Thess. v. 6, 8; 1 Tim. iii. 2, 11; Titus ii. 2; 2 Tim. ii. 26). In distinction from this popular fanaticism, the kings of the earth, with the political consciousness of refined worldly-mindedness, have committed fornication with her—have deified her, permitted themselves to be deified by her, and shared all manner of other deifications with her.* Another pernicious effect is that the merchants, i. e., those speculators of earth who are bent upon mammon, have become rich through her luxury. The very one who should equalize earthly relations by the spirit of Christian brotherliness [i. e., the Church], has, by self-deification and the deification of earthly powers, brought to a culmination that false pomp and love of magnificence by which the normal distinction of rich and poor has been perverted into unnatural and pernicious extremes of luxury and pauperism. The poisoning of popular life, of politics, of social ordinances—such is the three-fold and yet unitous effect of her three principal sins: [1] the presentation of the wine of anger [or rage] (see Notes 5, p. 818; and 16, p. 274).—E. R. C.; [2] seduction to fornication; [3] luxurious external show.

Second Judgment. Social Judgment of Separation between the People of God and the City of Babylon (vers. 4, 5).

This separation is brought about by the command of a voice from the Heaven. Whilst the Angel who descended from Heaven has executed the judgment of the Spirit of truth, this voice comes from the height of Heaven, and, as appears from the context, from the judgment-throne of God Himself. The exode of the people of God from fellowship with Babylon, not only brings her internal judgment to view, but also serves as an introduction to the external judgment, because it is itself the dynamical social judgment. Thus must Noah go forth from the antediluvian race that had incurred the judgment of God; thus Lot must depart from Sodom; thus Israel, from Egypt; thus the primitive Christians, from fallen Jerusalem; and so on. This exode, which includes within itself the abrogation of all relations of religious fellowship, is demanded by truth, by righteousness, by fidelity to the Lord. Thus believers execute the minor ban in just reaction against the great ban, and the Church finally goes forth from the Church, in order that it may continue to be the Church (Heb. xiii. 13).† The conservation of human relations of duty will come out all the more clearly, the more the religious and moral errors of a false humanism are discarded in pure and strict freedom of spirit. This exode also becomes necessary, however, for the self-preservation of believing souls, as is declared by the warning: That ye partake not in her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues. How easily an accompliceship in guilt originates through implication in the sins of others, the Old Testament has typically demonstrated in the institution of the sin-offering (Lev. v.), as well as in many historical occurrences (Joshua vii.). The modern world's sensorium for these mysterious relations of guilt is much enfeebled. Even an entrance into the heritage of the heaviest ancient blood-debts is performed by many with as little misgiving as if they were stepping into a child's room pervaded with the breath of innocence, or even into a temple of pure spirit, pervaded with spirit-breath. The judgment of God, however, must be executed, because the sins of the City do not simply cry unto Heaven, like the sins of Sodom (Gen. xviii.), but they have become interlinked with each other and tower up upon each other even to Heaven, until they have become a demonic offence against the very Throne of God. Hence, God has become mindful of her iniquities—not simply of the last and newest, but of the entire series of them. The culmination of these iniquities has—humanly speaking—again made present to Him the whole history of their development, and with these words, the conclusion of His refraining long-suffering and the dawn of His infliction of judgment are expressed. At the basis of the expression in our passage lies a reference to the history of Sodom, the more obviously since here, also, a fiery judgment is at hand.

* [In the second and third instances one and the same term is employed, viz.: φυλακή; and in the first, κατοικη-τήριον.—E. R. C.]

* [For another exposition of the fornication, see Abstract of Ashten, pp. 311 seq.—E. R. C.]

† [See ADD. NOTE and foot-note, p. 317.—E. R. C.]

Third Judgment. The Recompense of Babylon (vers. 6-8).

The command to execute the judgment of retribution is not, like the preceding words, addressed to the people of God, as has been supposed in accordance with the reading of minuscules: *as she rewarded [rendered to] you.** But neither is the command addressed to the Angels of the plagues, as Bleek supposes, for this retribution is, according to ch. xvii. 16, to be executed by the Ten Horns and the Beast. The same judgment which, in the chapter cited, is spoken of as to be accomplished by them, is mentioned here, again, in ver. 8. The address is to those to whom she has presented the cup (Matt. vii. 6). De Wette with justice remarks: A challenge to the executioners of the penal judgment. Ἀποδιδόναι has at its second occurrence the meaning of the Hebrew כָּלַף. It shall be done to her as she has done to others. This is the law of historic retribution which runs through the whole of the Sacred Writings (see ch. xiii. 10). It shall, moreover, be recompensed double to her. As repentance has a double value in proportion to the punishment which preceded it (Is. xl. 2), so the guilt which is heaped up for the Day of Wrath has, similarly, a double value in reference to the succeeding punishment. So, in particular, the cup of the wine of anger is to be filled double for her. At the time of judgment, negative fanaticism falls, with double fury, upon the guilt of positive fanaticism.—But not simply the torments which she has inflicted upon men are to be recompensed to her, but also her self-glorification and arrogant ostentation are to be punished, in a corresponding degree, with torment and sorrow. The heavenly voice also gives the ground of this severe sentence. For, even now in the hour of judgment, she, hardened and without a foreboding of approaching ill, gives utterance in her heart to her false security thus: I sit [Lange: am enthroned as] a queen, and a widow I am not (comp. Luke xviii. 8;—not the Church that misses her heavenly Christ on earth), and sorrow I shall not see. This obduracy is the motive which doubles her guilt and punishment. Therefore, also, shall her plagues come in one day—i. e., she does not gradually sink into ruin, but she plunges into it in one grand historic catastrophe. The plagues branch out into the number of the world, the worldly number of completeness, four: Death, mourning [sorrow], hunger, fire. Death, doubtless, should not be interpreted as the death of her children (Düsterdieck), but as a presentiment of ruin which now comes over her. With this death, her egoistic lamentations correspond, amid which, again, her hunger after world-empire is augmented to fury, whilst the fire of judgment is already coming upon her. These plagues now attack her with inevitable certitude, for God has already commenced to judge her (ὁ κρίνας), and He is mighty in His judgments, which He executes through the medium of mighty earthly powers.

Hereupon the heavenly voice denounces a simultaneous judgment upon those classes which have mingled with Great Babylon and involved themselves in her guilt; representing them as mourners over the fallen one (vers. 9-20).

The unitous idea of these lamentations lies in the premise that the mock-holy City has her sympathies, her roots, in the worldliness of the world, especially the great world; that she has, however, brought this world, which it was her duty to convert to God, itself to the brink of perdition. For she has made self-deification, the titanic glorification of her own dignity and authority, the centre of all corruption. She has thereby induced the kings or potentates of the earth to push their authority also to a degree exceeding a right human measure, to exchange reciprocal deifications with her and either in pride to compete with her, or to make fellowship with her. Thus have been formed the spheres of a morbid luxury, far exceeding the measure of morality, and as the merchants of the earth, or the organs of this luxury, have attained to a colossal and morbid greatness, so, likewise, have their riches reached a corresponding grandeur. Even wholesale trade, in the most extensive sense of the term, or supermarine intercourse of the world with the world, has been drawn into this great vortex of feverish worldliness. Thus the most thorough men of the world, far and wide, have lived and sinned with Great Babylon, and are most profoundly shaken and discomfited by her fall. But they care not to share her lot with her; they are faithless to her in her hour of need. The kings stand afar off for the fear of her torment (ver. 10). The merchants stand afar off for the fear of her torment (ver. 15). The sea-farers and marine traders stand afar off and cry (ver. 17). Doubtless, together with the ideas of their participation in her guilt, their grief, and their cowardly desertion of their mistress, there is likewise expressed the fact that Great Babylon is involved in a tremendous conflagration, which illuminates the whole earth, which admits of no remedy, which none dare approach, which, however, is visible from the remotest spots—so far, at least, as its pillar of smoke is concerned—holding all spectators spell-bound with fear and amazement. It might be queried: why the great detailedness of the description, especially of articles of luxury (vers. 12-14)? Here we encounter the same masterly skill of the prophetic spirit which is displayed by Isaiah in his portrayal of the luxury of the Hebrew women (Is. iii.). For the worldly mind, this very detail of articles of pomp and pleasure is of supreme importance; the prophecy, therefore, ironically enters into this mode of view—the more, since for Babylon every particle of her pleasure becomes a particle of torment. It is, further, characteristic that the kings shall weep and passionately and loudly lament (κόπτεσθαι) over the fall of Babylon, yet shall hold themselves aloof even at the ascending of the smoke from the beginning conflagration. That which caused them to become worshippers of the City, were the greatness and (magic) power of it. The merchants of the earth weep also; their sorrow, however, takes the form of mourning for the loss which has assailed them. Together with the greatness of the City, its magnificence and wealth have dazzled them. The sea-farers express their mourning for Babylon most passionately, in accordance with their life on the water; they were enchained by the incomparableness of the City and the great gain which it brought them.

* [The ὅτι should be omitted. See TEXT AND GRAM., Notes 2, ver. 6.—K. E. O.]

The first lament is that of the kings of the earth; not the kings as such, but those rulers who, by the aid of the Hierarchy, have despotically governed, and, to enable them thus to do, have worked into the hands of the Hierarchy, being, therefore, bearers of a reciprocal dedication.

The heavenly voice describes the lament of the merchants most comprehensively. The splendor of the merchandise of the City is expatiated upon, as consisting of: (1) Precious things [metals, jewels] and splendid stuffs; (2) Costly material (fragrant citron [thyine-] wood) and costly vessels of precious stuffs of all sorts; (3) Spices, ointments, incense; (4) Delicious articles of enjoyment and nourishment; (5) Articles of a princely household, from draught-cattle and flocks of sheep to the souls of slaves—or slavish souls, which are the permanent fundamental condition of every Babylonish power. It might be thought strange that after all this, mention is made of delicious fruit,* and that here the enumeration passes into the form of an address to Babylon itself; but in this region the smallest thing is in many respects the greatest, and, moreover, a special category of gastronomical delicacies is in point—those, particularly, which belong to a princely desert. Whilst the kings designated the great disaster of one hour, the catastrophe, as a judgment upon Babylon, the merchants lament that in one hour the great wealth of luxury in which Babylon arrayed herself, is destroyed.

Still more openly do the sea-farers express their egoistical interest in their cry of woe and lamentation for Great Babylon.

After this fore-description of the special judgments which, with the fall of Babylon, come upon her companions, the judgment upon Babylon herself is represented in a symbolical act.

The heavenly voice replies to all the unworthy lamentations of earth with a cry of exultation. All those who long ago pronounced the spiritual sentence of Babylon's lost state, without its appearing that their sentence was of any value in the actual world, are exhorted to rejoice. Now their sentence is ratified by the judgment of God. For such is the meaning of the passage; reference is not again had to the false judgment which they have previously experienced from Babylon, for how would such a reference be applicable to Heaven? Babylon has been judged from of old: 1. By the Heaven in general, the whole ideal world of God; 2. By the Saints, and 3. By the Apostles—nay, 1. Even before them, by the Prophets of the Old Covenant.

Next follows the symbolical representation of the final consummation of the judgment. A strong Angel takes up a stone, like a great millstone, and casts it into the sea, making this act, the violent casting of the stone, the great whirlpool occasioned by it, and the precipitate sinking of the stone, a symbol of the imminent, sudden and violent reprobation of Babylon. The Angel, because he is a fore-runner of the close Parousia of Christ, is conceived of as a personal being (see ch. xix. 9, 10); his action, however, is thoroughly symbolical. The allegorical symbol gains in expressiveness, it becomes typical, if we consider that the sea denotes the life of the nations, that the millstone is already familiar as the instrument of punishment for offence given (Matt. xviii. 6), that, finally, the proclamation of the strong Angel, in connection with his action, is expressive of the surest certainty of the Spirit of God in His Church. The judgment upon Babylon superinduces a great agitation in the sea of nations. This agitation is occasioned by a great stone of stumbling or most flagrant offence given by Babylon to the world, in particular to the "little ones;"* and it is the Angel of the Christian faith who has in this world awakened the consciousness of the life of the nations in respect of this offence, as is expressed by the fore-runner of Christ from the other world, one, in angelic form, of the glorified ones who shall appear with Christ. The City, as Great Babylon, is destroyed; as a ruin, as a desert place, she continues, for a memorial of terror. Hence the Angel describes her imminent desolation, not simply in order to intimate that her own destruction is illustrated by the destruction of her glory. This has been previously declared. The design is, rather, to sketch the desolation of the ruin of this spiritual Babylon in negative traits, even as Isaiah depicted the desolation of the ancient Asiatic Babylon in positive traits. No musical sound from any festivity can be heard any more in the deathly stillness of Babylon. Not a single artist of any art can be found any more in the desert of her ruins. No sound of a mill betrays a trace of business or domestic life; no light of a candle occasions the inference of life or of a social circle; with the voice of bridegroom and bride, every festal presage of a future laden with new life has vanished. And now again, to conclude the picture, the grounds for the judgment are laid before us—viz.: Babylon's double guilt. On the one hand, she has fully corrupted the corrupt world. For the great of the earth, the possessors of power, were her merchants, i. e., the agents and abettors of her affairs (οἱ ἔμποροι is the predicate, according to Eichhorn; see also Ebrard). Note well the distinction. The ἔμποροι τῆς γῆς (ver. 3) have become rich through the Woman; the μεστάραι τῆς γῆς have become the ἔμποροι σου, i. e., of the Woman. [See TEXT AND GRAM., NOTE 24, ver. 23.—E. R. C.] Her love of magnificence has driven luxury to its acme, and converted the dealers in it into great lords; it is still worse, however, that she has made the great of the earth agents of her interests. It was her fault that the merchants* could in many cases become barons and princes—that the princes could in many cases become merchants [Krämer], e. g., of indulgences, hierarchical stocks, and the like. Thus she has instituted a reciprocal action between egoistical mammon-service and egoistical power. The nations have been led astray by her sorceries of all sorts. Thus she has seduced the world in its great and little ones. Of the kernel of the Church, however—the Prophets and Saints—not the living images, but the bloody traces of martyrdom, were found in her. The Angel, truly, seems to conclude his accusation in a very hyperbolic manner. Is the blood of all who have been slain on earth to be placed to the account of Babylon? We might say: Undoubtedly it is, inasmuch as, at the day of reckoning, Babylon forms the centre of all human guilt and blood-guiltiness. The choice of the verb, however, constitutes a very important item for consideration. Σπάζειν, the verb in question, denotes, at least in a predominant degree, slaying from a religious point of view; here, therefore, are indicated the slain upon the earth who have been slain as sacrifices to fanaticism in general, and especially in the religious wars and religious criminal courts of earth. The centre of these specific crimes is Babylon; it is manifest, however, that Babylon is not here intended simply as a local centre, for the like blood-guiltinesses make their appearance sporadically all over Christendom—though, indeed, always as fanatical radii, having a fanatical centre.†

* [Above, the stone was the symbol of Babylon; its being cast into the sea, the symbol of her punishment by God; but here the stone is the symbol of Babylon's sin, and its casting, that of her own sinful conduct!—E. R. C.]

* [See TEXT. AND GRAM., NOTE 17.—E. R. C.]

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

[ELLIOTT: (See on pp. 281, 296.) The section extends to the close of chap. xix. 4. In it we have—I. Ver. 1. An angelic proclamation of the approaching destruction of Babylon;—a proclamation, (1) similar to that of chap. xiv. 8, but with additional circumstances (ver. 8); (2) anticipative, but as immediately preceding the catastrophe. II. A warning voice to Christ's true servants to come out of her; which implies that (1) there would be some of the holy seed in the mystic Babylon, (2) their danger of participation in her destruction would be imminent. III. A vivid description of the catastrophe, in which are depicted: 1. Its nature, (1) unexpected (she sits a queen, etc.); (2) instantaneous (in an hour); (3) total (all life destroyed); (4) by eternal (superhuman?) fire (xix. 8): 2. The lamentations over the fall,—(1) of the kings who committed fornication with her; (2) of the merchants, etc., who were enriched by her. IV. The reasons for the judgment,—(1) her deception of all nations; (2) her persecution of the saints. V. The heavenly song of praise over the destruction,—(1) twice by the heavenly host, Hallelujah (xix. 1-3); (2) once (and it is the last act related of them) by the Elders and Living-beings, Amen—Hallelujah (xix. 4).—From this passage the following conclusions, as to the probable progress of fast-coming future events, may be drawn that—I. The destruction of Rome, the mystic Babylon (comprehending not only the City and the Ecclesiastical State; but, probably, the political tripartition adhering to it, xvi. 19), shall, very soon after the tri-partition, and unexpectedly, be effected by an earthquake and volcanic fire.* II. Immediately before this event there will be a diffusion of great religious light, and a sounding

* ["A mode of destruction not obscurely intimated by certain very striking allusive expressions in other prophecies both of the Old and New Testament (Isa. xxxiv. 9, 10; xxx. 33; Jer. li. 26; Luk. xvii. 28-32, etc.), and thus expected, as we find, alike by ancient Jewish Rabbis and Christian Fathers of the Church; not to add that the very nature of the Italian soil has forced on many a mind, in different ages, the thought of its physical preparedness almost for such a catastrophe." ELLIOTT.—BARNES, in support of the probable correctness of this view, writes as follows: "Gibbon (ch. xv.), with his usual accuracy, as if commenting on the Apocalypse, has referred to the physical adaptedness of the soil of Rome for such an overthrow. Speaking of the anticipation of the end of the world among the early Christians, he says, 'In the opinion of a general conflagration, the faith of the Christian very happily coincided with the tradition of the East, the philosophy of the atomists, and the analogy of nature; and even the country, which, from religious motives, had been chosen for the origin and principal scene of this conflagration, was the best adapted for that purpose by natural and physical causes; by its deep caverns, beds of sulphur, and numerous volcanoes, of which those of Ætna, of Vesuvius, and of Lipari, exhibit a very imperfect representation.' As to the general state of Italy in reference to volcanoes, the reader may consult, with advantage, Lyell's Geology, B. II., chs. ix.-xii. See also Murray's Encyclopædia of Geography, II. ii. . . . The following extract from a recent traveller will still further confirm this representation: 'I b hold every where—in Rome, near Rome, and through the whole region from Rome to Naples—the most astounding proofs, not merely of the possibility, but the probability, that the whole region of central Italy will one day be destroyed by such a catastrophe (by earthquakes or volcanoes). The soil of Rome is tufo, with a volcanic subterranean action going on. At Naples, the boiling sulphur is to be seen bubbling near the surface of the earth. When I drew a stick along the ground, the sulphurous smoke followed the indentation; and it would never surprise me to hear of the utter destruction of the southern peninsula of Italy. The entire country and district is volcanic. It is saturated with beds of sulphur and the substrata of destruction. It seems as certainly prepared for the flames as the wood and coal on the hearth are prepared for the taper which shall kindle the fire to consume them. The Divine hand alone seems to me to hold the element of fire in check by a miracle as great as that which protected the cities of the plain, till the righteous Lot had made his escape to the mountains.'—Townsend's Tour in Italy in 1850.—E. R. C.]

* [Krämer—a word of lower significance than Kaufleute, previously translated merchants; the latter denotes the great wholesale dealers, whilst the former signifies retailers—shopkeepers, as we say in English.—T.]

† [See EXPL. IN DETAIL, Add. Comment on ver. 24.—E. R. C.]

forth of strong appeals on the character and imminent doom of both Rome and the Papedom, alike in the Church and in the world. III. The Jews will probably at, or just after, the catastrophe, be converted (indicated by the Hebrew HALLELUJAH—this being the first introduction of a word from that language in praise). IV. Down to the time figured by this chorus (a song represented as being in Heaven), no translation of the living saints or resurrection of the departed will have taken place.

BARNES: This chapter is a still further explanatory episode designed to show the effect of the pouring out of the seventh Vial (xvi. 17-21) upon the Antichristian power; the description is that of a rich merchant-city reduced to desolation, and is but carrying out the general idea under a different form. We have—(1) the angelic descent and proclamation, vers. 1-3; (2) a warning to the people of God to be partakers neither of her sins nor plagues, accompanied by a description of the latter, vers. 4-8; (3) lamentation over her fall—by those who had been, (a) connected with her, (b) corrupted by her, (c) profited by her, vers. 9-19; (4) rejoicing over her fall, ver. 20; (5) the final (and total) destruction, vers. 21-24. (Whilst this writer regards the Papacy, and not the city of Rome, as the object specially contemplated by the prophecy, he thinks it possible that there may be a literal fulfillment of the prophecy burned with fire, ver. 8, in the destruction of the city as in order to the destruction of the power; for quotations tending to support this view, see the preceding foot-note. For special comments, see EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL in loc.)

STUART: In his Introduction to ch. xvii., this commentator remarks: "Before any attack was made upon the Kingdom of the Beast, an Angel proclaimed the fall of great Babylon (i. e., 'persecuting and pagan Rome'), xiv. 8. This, however, was only in general terms. But now the seventh Vial has been poured out, and the city has been shaken to its very foundation, and thus a ruinous state of things has already commenced, ch. xvi. 17-21. Final and utter extinction, however, still remains to be achieved. Accordingly an Angel next appears, and not only renews the proclamation of the fall of Babylon, but describes this in such terms as necessarily to imply its utter ruin." *

* [It is exceedingly difficult to determine what is the idea of STUART as to the interpretation of this chapter. This arises from the fact that nowhere in the special comment on it does he define what he means by Babylon; his meaning has to be sought through General and Special and Particular Introductions, and through excursions and textual comments. His comment on xiv. 8 can leave no doubt that there he regards Babylon as the City of Rome; that this interpretation is contemplated throughout this portion of the Apocalypse, is implied in numerous remarks. But the peculiar scheme of STUART requires him to regard the woe as having been accomplished; and manifestly the City of Rome has never yet become a desolation. The most plausible idea concerning his interpretation is that he regards the prophecy as having its specific fulfillment in the destruction of Rome long ago commenced, but not yet accomplished; and its generic accomplishment in the overthrow of all Antichristian powers. The view as to the specific fulfillment is suggested by the following remark under xiv. 8: "The reader is not to suppose, that fallen, while it denotes absolute certainty, at the same time denotes complete and instantaneous extinction. The predictions respecting ancient Babylon were fulfilled only in the lapse of several centuries; but they were at last fully accomplished. And so of the tropical Babylon. The

WORDSWORTH: "Fuller description of the future fall of the Mystical Babylon. It is to be carefully observed that though Babylon falls, the Beast still remains. Therefore, the fall of Papal Rome will not be the destruction of the Papacy."

ALFORD: Chaps. xviii. 1-xix. 10 relate to the Destruction of Babylon. I. Announcement of the destruction (chap. xviii. 1-3). II. Warning to God's people to leave her on account of the greatness of her crimes and coming judgments (4-8). III. Lamentations over her on the part of those who were enriched by her, by (1) the kings of the earth (9, 10); (2) the merchants (11-16); (3) the shipmasters, etc. (17-19). IV. The calling of the heavens and God's holy ones to rejoice over her (20). V. Symbolic proclamation of Babylon's ruin (21-24).

LORD: The Angel of ver. 1 symbolizes a body of men who shall with resistless light unveil the Apostate character of Babylon (i. e., the nationalized hierarchies, see pp. 810sq.). The fall of Babylon is her defection from her nationalized position; it is to be (1) in consequence of her idolatry, ver. 3; (2) followed by (a) her becoming the resort of the most detestable of (human) beings, ver. 2, (b) another proclamation by another body of men calling upon those true Christians who remain in her to come out of her, ver. 4; (3) effected (a) violently, ver. 21; (b) by the multitude, and not by the kings and great men who are to mourn over it, vers. 9-19. The fall is to be distinguished from the punishment (plagues); the latter is speedily and suddenly to follow the former, vers. 4-6. The destruction is to be entire, vers. 21-24.

GLASGOW: Ver. 1 introduces an account of what accompanies or follows close upon the full effusion of the seventh Vial. The Angel of ver. 1 is the Holy Ghost, who announces the coming fall of Babylon, i. e., the Roman State; the voice of ver. 4 is that of Christ. By the kings of vers. 9, 10, the traffickers of vers. 11-16, the mariners of vers. 17-19, are indicated the three parts into which the City is divided (ch. xvi. 19); "as ancient Babylon exists now only in the palace of her kings, the temple of Belus, and the tower of Nimrod, so over the fall of the mystic city are heard the wailings of superstitious rulers in the palace, of trafficking priests of simony in their cathedrals, and of far-travelled colonizers and missionaries, propagators of her errors."

AUBERLEN: "The judgment on the Harlot (i. e., Babylon—the apostate Church) is described more minutely in its various aspects (xviii. 1; xix. 5), first by an Angel having great authority; then by another voice from Heaven (vers. 4-20); after this, thirdly, by a strong Angel (21-24); and this is succeeded by great voices of much people in heaven (xix. 1-5), who praise God for the judgment executed.—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

According to Düsterdieck, the judgment upon Babylon is still imminent at the close of ch. xviii. ("note the future ἔρχεται"). whilst in ch. xix. 1 sqq., it is rejoiced over as actually accomplished. The judgment itself, therefore, [the act of judgment], would not be found in the description. As an external scene, it is, indeed, not to be portrayed. What, however, appertains to a judgment? Is not the heavenly sentence itself the ideal judgment (vers. 2, 3)? Is not the separation of the people of God from Babylon, which must ensue directly upon the heavenly command, the decisive dynamical judgment (vers. 4 and 5)? Next follows the historic recompense; first for Babylon herself (vers. 6, 7). And this is presupposed as an accomplished fact in the lamentation in which all her companions appear as sharers in the stroke which has fallen upon herself, (vers. 9-19). The rejoicing of Heaven and all the saints (ver. 20) clearly expresses the accomplishment of the judgment, and the symbolical act and speech of the Angel (vers. 21-24) are but declarative of the perfect reprobation of Babylon, together with its consequences, her guilt being once more solemnly affirmed. Thus is the judgment executed in four main acts. According to Hengstenberg, the Seer here describes what has already taken place. Exegesis, with him, steers backwards; it, probably, already sights the Millennial Kingdom—and this it is anxious to avoid, as though it were a rocky wall.

Apocalypse itself gives sufficient intimation of a gradual fulfillment; comp. Rev. xvi. 19-21 with xviii. 4-8, 20-24 and xix. 11-21.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 1. Another Angel.—A symbolic angelic form, suggestive of Michael, not precisely Christ (Calov., Hengst.), for the Parousia is not to come until after this. The Holy Ghost (Vitringa), however, is no angel of external events, and Luther's embassy did at least not bring Babylon with violence to her fall. Historically defined, Christianity, in a new, glorious, and therefore mightily efficacious phase of development, must be understood by the Angel. Hence alone is his glory to be explained, which lights up the whole earth. A couple of wretched and disorderly negotiations can, of course, not be intended by this.

Ver. 2. Fallen, fallen.—A certain future, which shall some day become both present and past. The cry of ch. xiv. 8 is reflected here; that, however, applied to the universal Babylon. In the first place, doubtless, the complete spiritual fall of Babylon is intended, as is manifest from the context: and is become, etc. But along with the complete spiritual fall, her historic fall is also decided. According to Düsterdieck, indeed, the words: a habitation of demons, etc., already denote external desolation, like the description Is. xiii. 22. Similarly Hengstenberg, vol. ii., p. 268. Düsterd. even regards it as singular that Ebrard should yet understand the birds "spiritually." A naïve "yet!" According to Bengel, the "unclean spirits" are departed souls, and "this passage very clearly treats of such spirits as, when they appear to the living, are called ghosts." The reverend divine would, however, surely not transfer Babylon to Wurttemberg! According to Hengstenberg, [also Stuart and Alford,—E. R. C.], the φυλακή denotes a prison—thus: a prison of unclean spirits and unclean birds. The expression, however, when used with reference to a fallen city, is applicable neither to spirits nor to birds. "The law of their essential character banishes them thither." To the desert of pagan Rome? This would be the worst that could possibly be affirmed of Christian Rome! In respect of the birds, Hengstenberg cites Ps. cii. 6; Is. xiii. 21, 22; xxxiv. [11, 13] 14 [15]; Jer. l. 39; Zeph. ii. 14.

Ver. 3. For . . . of the wine, etc.—This is the offence which is judged primarily by a falling under the dominion of demonic powers. Babylon has offended against three classes of men—the nations, the kings, and a middle class, the merchants of the earth. We must again distinguish these merchants of the earth from the specific merchants whom the Woman has raised up for herself from the great of the earth (ver. 23, see SYN. VIEW). If we examine the arrangements of the Seer, we shall find that he has a more general and a more special arrangement. The more general one distinguishes between the kings, or the mighty of the earth, and the nations. The Woman has seduced the former to the fornication of world-deification, and intoxicated the latter with the rage-wine of fanaticism, according to ch. xvii. 2; xviii. 23. The more special arrangement inserts a third class, the merchants of the earth, a transition-form between the kings and the nations, in which the money-agents can become money-princes, and the princes agents of the Woman. But again, the class of mercantile people is, in our chapter, sub-divided into two classes, viz.: [1] the eminent merchants, who, as immediate servants of the Woman, participate in her luxury, and [2] the ordinary tradespeople of the world, here designated by sea-farers, whose interests are likewise, in a more general sense, involved in the luxury of the Woman. It was clear to the Seer that the super-human exaggeration of magnificence, the pomp of world-seeking in the heart of mankind, in the very place whence the forces of world-renunciation, simplicity and simple culture, should go forth, would place the whole organism of worldly life in a condition of morbid bloatedness, and feverishly egoistic agitation. [See NOTE 16 on chap. xiv., p. 274.—E. R. C.]

From the power (or influence) [Lange: mighty operation], etc.—According to Düsterdieck (with Grot. et al.), ἐκ τῆς δυνάμεως τοῦ σπέρματος "refers to the vast wealth [gewaltige Vermögen] of the City, employed in the service of luxury." This would, undoubtedly, be more applicable to pagan than to Christian Rome. Be it well remembered, however, that the "world kingdom" did not become rich through the "world city," but vice versa. It is also better, from philological considerations, to regard δύναμις as the mighty operation of that central luxury. The interpretation: On account of her powerful luxuriousness (De Wette), really involves an obliteration of δύναμις. ["Δύναμις, copia, as Vitringa, who remarks, 'alluditur ad Hebræam voce לחן, cujus hæc significatio vis est, Job xxxi. 6; Ezek. xlviii. 4.' We have πλοῦτον μεγάλου δύναμιν in Jos.: Antl. iii. 2, 4." ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 4. Another voice from the Heaven.—It is noteworthy that the voice from Heaven, speaking from vers. 4-20, is interposed between the two mighty Angels of ver. 1 and ver. 21. In the two Angels, we behold the denouncer and the executioner of God's judgment upon Babylon, as that judgment appears on earth; in the voice from Heaven, we find the cry of the Church Triumphant—the Church not simply in the other world, but also in this world,—addressed to the Church of God on earth. For whilst there is, in the Church on earth, in respect of its individual members, a constant wavering between premature separation from Babylon (by which name even the evangelical Church is designated by sectarian spirits) and a tardy tarrying in the communion of a true Babylon, aggravated by manifold fanatical lapses into the captivitas Babylonica, there resides in the heavenly Church the true sense for the determining of the hour of need when the general exode from Babylon before the judgment shall be as necessary as the exode of the Christians of John's time from Jerusalem to Pella. Too early a departure is opposed to humility and love; too late a departure is hostile to faith and fidelity; both acts, that of precipitancy and that of undue delay, are a fanatical opposition to the truth. According to Bengel, the voice from Heaven is the voice of God or Christ, against which Dürstendieck judiciously remarks that such an origin does not accord with the descriptive tone of its discourse. Mediately, of course, every angelic and every heavenly voice is to be referred to God and Christ.

Come forth out of her, my people.—This can refer only to the complete rupture of religious and churchly fellowship. If we regard the words as having reference to an external departure of the Christians from Rome, all Christian Rome would be a contravention of the heavenly voice. ["In Isa. (xlviii. 20; lii. 11) the circumstances differed, in that being a joyful exodus, this a cautionary one;* and thus the warning is brought nearer to that one which our Lord commands in Matt. xxiv. 16, and the cognate warnings in the O. T., viz., that of Lot to come out of Sodom, Gen. xix. 15–22, when her destruction impended, and that of the people of Israel to get them up from the tents of Dathan and Abiram, Num. xvi. 23–26. In Jer. (i. 8; li. 6, 9, 45) we have the same circumstance of Babylon's impending destruction combined with the warning; and from those places probably, especially Jer. li. 45, the words here are taken. The inference has been justly made from them (Elliott IV., pp. 44 sq.), that there shall be even to the last, saints of God in the midst of Rome; and that there will be danger of their being, through a lingering fondness for her, partakers of her coming judgment." ALFORD.—E. R. C.] See Jer. li. 6, 9, 45.

That ye partake not in her sins.—See Gen. xix. 15. This fellowship of sins is to be understood in a peculiar sense as a fellowship in guilt—a view which Dürstendieck combats, but which finds its sufficient explanation in the distinction between the Biblical ideas of sin (Sünde) and guilt [Schuld=reatus].† A fellowship of sins, in the narrower sense (Luthardt), is as little intended as a fellowship in punishment for sins (Dürstendieck) is exclusively meant. A guiltless participation in punishment would certainly be akin to propitiatory suffering. Fellowship with the sinner, however, on an equal moral footing, without the re-action of discipline, chastisement, excommunication, is fellowship in his guilt. Hence the πληγαι are not simply strokes; they are deserved [verschuldete] strokes (see Josh. vii.; Numb. xvi. 21–24).

["It is implied here that by remaining in Babylon they would lend their sanction to its sins by their presence, and would, in all probability, become contaminated by the influence around them." BARNES.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 5. For her sins have heaped together unto the Heaven.—See SYN. VIEW.

Vers. 6, 7. Render unto her.—See SYN. VIEW. Address to those injured by Babylon, as such. [Should we not rather, with Alford, regard these words as "addressed to the executioners of judgment?"—E. R. C.] With the double measure, the qualitative retribution is expressed in quantitative form. See SYN. VIEW. Comp. Is. xl. 2. The expressions ἀπλόωσι, ἀπλά, ἀπλοῦν are, therefore, not simply "rhetorical." The consummation of her punishment is furnished with a three-fold motive, being the punishment (1) Of her evil deeds against the suffering party generally; (2) Of the cup, in particular—by which we are here to understand the cup of bitterness; (3) Of her self-glorification and pride, which involved a like measure of humiliation and oppression for the sufferers. For she saith in her heart.—Even now; so unforbearingly secure is she in face of the signs of the times. A queen.—Isa. xlvii. 7. And a widow I am not.—A widow in the more general sense, as one deserted. See Is. xlvii. 8, 9. Neither is she a bride or a wife any more, but a polyandria. Sorrow I shall not see.—Sorrow, particularly, for her many daughters (which, of course, are not the cities and peoples subject to pagan Rome). Thus she also regards herself as elevated above the universal law of earthly vicissitude, elevated above historic dooms.

[These expressions, in addition to reasons presented in Add. Comm. on ch. xvii. 18, and ADD. NOTE, p. 317, identify the objective of Babylon with that of the Harlot. As in ch. xvii., where the main figure was the Harlot, a portion of the symbolization was drawn from the City—so here, where the main figure is Babylon, a portion of the symbolization is taken from the Woman.*—E. R. C.]

*anima inficitur. Reatus est obligatio ad poenam ex praeiudicio. . . . Duplex oritur reatus; alius qui potentialis dicitur, qui notat meritum intrinsecum poenae, quod a peccato inseparabile est; alius vero actualis, qui per Dei misericordiam ab eo separari potest, etc. As the term guilt is technically employed by a large class of English Theologians as the equivalent of reatus, and as it is the term generally employed in the E. V., where Schuld occurs in the G. V., it is here adopted. It should be carefully noted, however, that it is employed, not in its ordinary meaning, but in the special sense indicated above.—E. R. C.]*

* [The true condition of the Church during the personal absence of her Husband and Head is that of a widow, comp. Matt. ix. 15; Mark ii. 19, 20; Luke v. 34;—she should ever be looking, with longing, for His appearing, Tit. ii. 13. The Am. Ed. cannot resist the thought that these expressions are

* [A cautionary exodus may be a joyful one. The cautioned escapers may rejoice in view of their escape.—E. R. C.]

† [The distinction here referred to seems to be that contemplated by the theologians of the Reformation in the use of the Latin terms macula and reatus potentialis—the former indicating the stain of sin; the latter, the exposure to punishment proper to the persons sinning. Thus Turretin (Vol. I., p. 654), "Macula est pollutio spiritualis et ethica, quae hominibus

Ver. 8. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day.—Precisely therefore (לָכֵן). In antithesis to her pride. Death.—Since death can not come upon her twice, and since the death of her children is expressed by sorrow or mourning [ver. 7], the term doubtless embraces the death-doom in general, coming upon her primarily as a presentiment of ruin, and then developing into mourning, hunger, and fiery death. In one day—in one great catastrophe (see Isa. xlvii. 9). [Without succession through a protracted period—all-together.—E. R. C.] For strong.—The whole omnipotence of God opposes itself in judgment to the haughtiness of Babylon, and this judgment has already begun (κρίσις). The whole Providence of God executes the judgment of the Lord, for it is as such that God has primarily to do with Babylon.

Vers. 9, 10. And there shall weep and wail over her.—In vers. 9-20 [19] are presented the three laments over Babylon, in which the three classes associated in her guilt appear, in antithesis to the people of God, as sharers in the stroke which has fallen upon her. They represent the peripheries of the judgment, forming about its centre. Comp. Ezek. xvi., xvii. The kings of the earth.—Düsterdieck rightly discards the view of Hengstenberg, who finds in the ovai, ovai a reference to “double to her double.” Highly significant is the kings’ standing afar off: they will not be burned up with her, for their friendship with Babylon was based upon egoism. They must, however, together with her, be afflicted by the stroke which has descended upon her. Their lamentation is expressive of two things—on the one hand, that they have been dazzled by the grandeur and power of Babylon, and on the other, that they are aware of her guilt, for they speak of her judgment, although they do not come to the penitent consciousness that they have committed fornication and lived luxuriously with her.

[Standing afar off.—“The general sentiment here is that in the final ruin of Papal Rome the kings and governments that had sustained her, and had been sustained by her, would see the source of their power taken away, but that they would not, or could not, attempt her rescue. There have been not a few indications already that this will ultimately occur, and that the Papal power will be left to fall without any attempt on the part of those governments which have been so long in alliance with it, to sustain or restore it.” BARNES.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 11. And the merchants of the earth.—Second lamentation. Here, egoism is more plainly visible. They weep and sorrow because no one will buy their merchandise any more. The vividness of the description is also augmented by the picturesque present: they weep, etc., and, no less, by the circumstantiality with which their merchandise, the entire exposition of their secularized industry, is described (see SYN. VIEW). No one buyeth their lading any more.—That is, the fall of Babylon is accompanied by a thorough contempt for all splendor and luxury; it ushers in the fashion of simplicity.

Vers. 12-16. The wares are arranged in order (see SYN. VIEW). “The alternation of accusatives and genitives dependent on τὸν γόμον, prevailing till the close of ver. 13, may serve as explanatory of the dubious construction found in ch. xiv. 4” (Düsterd.). The fact that the vision draws the picture of these articles of luxury from the view of antiquity—of ancient Rome for instance—proves nothing for the import of Babylon. On the individual articles comp. the Lexicons. Special consideration, as less known, is demanded by the ξύλον θύιον, ἀμωμον, ὄψαρα. The distinction, ὄψαρα and ψυχὰς ἀνθρώπων, is noted by commentators and differently explained (see Düsterdieck, p. 527); the distinction, at all events, is not a very sharp one, and the second expression is indicative of an augmentation, the extreme consequence of slave-holding. The renewal of these circumstances, even in Christian Babylon, is well known. The strong emphasis laid at the end upon the missing of the favorite fruit* is highly characteristic as an ironical trait. It is well known that fallen great men often grieve most for the loss of the veriest trifles. Conjoined with these delicacies in the way of fruit, are all sorts of delicious things; “τὰ λιπαρά, literally the fat, but its conjunction with τὰ λαμπρά, admonishes us to take the expression in the usual unliteral sense (Is. xxx. 23; comp. Hesych., who explains λιπ. as καλόν, ἐλαφρόν), with Luther, Bengel, Hengstenberg” (Düsterd.). There seems, however, to be a distinction made between articles of gastronomic and æsthetic taste.

Ver. 16. The merchants of these things.—Here the style changes again from a vivid presentation of the Babylonish world-mart to the prophetic future. These merchants [Kaufleute] also bemoan the City in a characteristic manner. For them, the greatness of the City consisted, not, as for the kings, in her power, but in her outward splendor, her beauty of attire.

[Vers. 11-16. “The description . . . is perhaps drawn, in its poetic and descriptive features, from the relation of Rome to the world that then was, rather than from its relation at the future time depicted in the prophecy. But it must not for a moment be denied that the character of this lamentation throws a shade of obscurity over the interpretation, otherwise so plain from the explanation given in ch. xvii. 18 (viz., ‘that the prophecy regards Rome pagan and papal, but from the figure of an harlot and the very nature of the predictions themselves, more the latter than the former’). The difficulty is, however, not confined to the application of the prophecy to Rome Papal, but extends over the application of it to Rome at all. . . For Rome never has been, and from its position never could be, a great commercial city. I leave this difficultly un-indicative of a state of the Church in which she shall believe and assert that the personal absence of Jesus is no bereavement,—that already as a Queen she has entered upon the possession of the promised Kingdom,—that, during Christ’s personal absence, without maternal hindrance, she is to go on to complete supremacy over the nations. Already in Rome, and to a great extent throughout Christendom, is this cry heard.—E. R. C.]

* [On the meaning of ὄψαρα see the TEXT, and NOTE 17, p. 319. The entire clause is probably figurative, declaring that the period of temporal prosperity has passed away.—E. R. C.]

solved, merely requesting the student to bear in mind its true limits, and not to charge it exclusively on that interpretation which only shares it with any other possible one. The main features of the description are taken from that of the destruction of and lamentation over Tyre in Ezek. xxvii., to which city they were strictly applicable. And possibly it may be said that they are also applicable to the Church which has wedded herself to the pride of the earth and its luxuries." ALFORD.—E. R. C.] *

Ver. 17. And every pilot, etc.—Marine affairs are sketched as that form of world-commerce and industry which was, proportionally, most remote from the City. Even this general mercantilism is affected by the fall of Babylon, because the blow inflicted upon the kings and upon the luxury of the great world touches it likewise. From the pilots, who can sail in all directions, are distinguished those who take ship for definite ports—from these latter, all who do business at sea (τῶν θάλασσαν ἐργάζεσθαι). [See TEXT and NOTE 21, p. 819.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 18. The smoke of her burning.—As ver. 9. Not to be confounded with the smoke, ch. xiv. 11. The impression which the City has made on them is, proportionally, the most indefinite: she was incomparable. If a reference to ch. xiii. 4 was intended, it could yet not be satirical in the mouth of seamen (as Ebrard claims). The expression is, besides, the most general and, therefore, most indefinite form of worldly astonishment. It is thus that popular travellers and seafarers have spoken from time immemorial. [At the same time it should be noted that in reference to both Rome actual and Rome symbolical the expression is strictly true. BARNES comments, "What city is like unto this great city?" In her destruction. What calamity has ever come upon a city like this?"—E. R. C.]

Ver. 19. And they cast dust, etc.—A well-known sign of passionate mourning. Hence we need not ask, Whence came the dust at sea? The idea may be, however, that they viewed the conflagration from different ports. The narrative has changed to the preterite. The lamentation of these last is particularly passionate, and the egoistic motive is expressly assigned.

Ver. 20. Rejoice over her.—In face of the threefold lamentation of the world, the heavenly voice (not John himself) expresses the jubilation of Heaven. We might here discover the indications of a three-fold jubilation: that of Heaven, with the Saints—that of the Apostles—that of the Prophets. DÜSTERDIECK claims a distinction betwixt "earthly believers"—as Saints, Apostles, Prophets—and Heaven. But even in Nero's time, there were several Apostles in Heaven, to say nothing of Prophets.

For God hath judged your judgment [Lange: executed your sentence] upon her.—We cannot apprehend the judgment [Crtheilspruch=sentence of judgment], κρίμα, passively, with Hengstenb., De Wette, et al., in the sense: God hath recompensed the judgment which ye suffered as martyrs. For how would that apply to Heaven? The rejoicing in this form would, moreover, express the satisfaction of the desire for vengeance, in a style savoring somewhat too strongly of the Old Testament. The fitting expression for that satisfaction is found in ver. 24, which is a sort of repetition when the above-cited exegesis is adopted. The higher satisfaction, however, which Heaven itself must experience in connection with all the Saints, particularly the Apostles and Prophets, consisted in the fact that their primeval prophetic sentence upon Babylon, accompanying her throughout her historic career, but appearing for so long a mere melancholic fancy, at which the world hooted, has been finally sealed by God Himself through His judgment. The rejoicing over this satisfaction is a rejoicing over the truth and righteousness of God Himself. [ALFORD comments, God "hath exacted from her that judgment of vengeance which is due to you."—E. R. C.]

Ver. 21. And a (or one) strong Angel.—On εἷς see Winer, p. 126. As we shall have occasion to recur to this Angel in ch. xix. 9, 10, we may here refer to the predicates there given by the Angel to himself. DÜSTERDIECK remarks that the strength of the Angel receives mention on account of the action which he is represented as performing. Like a great mill-stone.—See Jer. li. 63, 64. See SYN. VIEW. With violence.—In a catastrophe. And shall be found no more at all.—i. e., as the magnificent City which it had been. That, however, it should continue as a desolate ruin, for a memorial of judgment, is evident from the following context. See Ezek. xxvi. 13; Jer. xxv. 10, et al.

Ver. 22. And a voice of harpers.—Art stood high in Babylon [and in Rome, and in the Visible Church—especially as she increases in worldliness,—E. R. C.]; it was, however, completely under the influence of vanity and in the service of idolatry. With art business vanishes (the mill); with business, family life (the candle); with family life, family festivals [and relationships] (bridegroom and bride).

Ver. 23. For thy merchants were the great men of the earth [Lange: the princes of the earth were thy merchants].—The vision closes, most appropriately, with a brief recapitulation of the guilt of Babylon. For this reason, also, we cannot, with DÜSTERDIECK, Ewald, De Wette and Hengstenberg [also Lillie, Alford, Glasgow, et al.,—E. R. C.], read: thy merchants were the great of the earth.* No leading reproach

* [The Am. Ed. entertains the view that by Babylon is meant the City of Rome, and, still further, that by the City of Rome is symbolized the Visible Church (apostate in the time of the fulfilment of the prophecy). It seems to him that the difficulties suggested by Alford are imaginary rather than real in reference to both these hypotheses. It should be remembered that, in the days of the Apocalypticist, Rome was not only the centre of the Empire, but in a peculiar sense her boundaries were coterminous with those of the Empire; the commerce of the entire State was hers,—at once resulting from, and ministering to, her wealth and power. A peculiar relation of headship continued to be borne by the City to the nation dwelling within the pale of the old Empire, even after that Empire had been shattered into fragments. Even to the present day she is in a sense the capital of Papal Europe. And still further—the relation of Rome to the peoples of whom she was and is the acknowledged capital, well symbolizes the relation of the Visible Church to Christendom. She is its inspiring centre,—the source, and to a large extent a partaker, of its power and splendor. The commerce of the world is, in a peculiar sense, hers. To Rome actual, and Rome symbolical (in the sense set forth), the description of these verses is applicable.—E. R. C.]

* [The order of the Greek requires this translation. The reproach is, not "that some few money-changers became would be involved in the statement that some few money-changers became lords and princes under the influence of absolutist luxury. At all events, we should expect first a repetition of the two leading categories of the transgression of Babylon against the world related to her. The first transgression is the seduction of the kings, or the great, generally, whom she has made her merchants, abettors and brokers (her associates in fornication). The second transgression is against the nations, which she has seduced or intoxicated with her sorcery or poison-mixing (= wine of rage). Düsterdieck interprets φαρμακία as the love-potions of the Harlot; "comp. Is. xlvii. 9, 12 sq.; Ewald, De Wette." Our Seer, however, keeps the two categories separate, ch. xvii. 2; xviii. 8. The nations have not been so much intoxicated by love-potions as by rage-potions (of fanaticism). A connection between the two forms is of course unmistakable. [The objective of φαρμακία may be the instruments of seduction by which she either allures the nations into unholy alliance with herself, or by which she causes them to wander in unrighteous paths. See the TEXT.—E. B. C.]

After the transgression of Babylon against the world, ensues her transgression against the people of God—a transgression still greater than the former, yet connected with it.

Ver. 24. See SYNOPSIS VIEW. Ebrard: "Hengstenberg, who makes the Millennial Kingdom commence with Charlemagne, must, to be consistent with his own view, point out the terrible destruction of Babylon depicted in ch. xviii., as occurring at some period during the time before Charlemagne. Nor does he find this difficult; to be sure, in the City of the Seven Hills the voices of lutenists and pipers have never for one moment been silenced; neither is the City thrown into the sea, or burned, nor has an end been put to her commerce and her magnificence, nor has any one mourned over her downfall—on the contrary, she has quietly continued to subsist in the midst of the billows of national migrations: but—'Rome here comes under consideration solely as the pagan mistress of the world'—and as pagan she is fallen, burned, desolated, etc.: and all this simply inasmuch as at about the time of Constantine she was gradually transformed from a pagan to a Christian City! In ch. xviii., therefore, we have, according to the exegesis of Hengstenberg, an entirely new portrayal of a—conversion."

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON CH. XVIII.]

By the American Editor.

[This chapter, introduced by the disjunctive phrase, Μετά ταύτα εἶδον, and immediately followed by a chapter having a similar introduction, forms, apparently, a supplementary section. In it are set forth events preceding the fall of Babylon. The direct vision of that fall occurred during the outpouring of the vials, ch. xvi. 18.

princes," but that her merchants, her men of business generally, busied themselves with the affairs of this world, became worldlings, and assumed the position of its leaders and great men.—E. B. C.]

19. As, however, that series of visions could not with propriety have been interrupted by the introduction of others descriptive of matters other than the plagues, supplementary visions were vouchsafed descriptive of important matters necessarily omitted, or barely indicated, in the main series. This chapter narrates a series of visions having reference (probably) to "the voices, and thunders, and lightnings, and earthquake" mentioned ch. xvi. 18. It consists of three parts, in which are narrated visions of—I. A glorious, heaven-descended Angel giving a prophetic prediction of the approaching destruction of the City, vers. 1-3. II. A voice from Heaven making a threefold call upon (1) the people of God, who should remain in the doomed City to come out of her, vers. 4, 5; (2) the executioners of judgment to destroy, vers. 6-19; (3) the inhabitants of Heaven to rejoice, ver. 20. III. An Angel giving a symbolic prophecy of the destruction.—An analogue of this section, as to its subject matter, is to be found Jer. l., li., where we have a similar threefold division, viz.: 1. A prophetic declaration of destruction, l. 2. 2. A call upon (1) the people of God to escape, l. 8; li. 6, 45; (2) the executioners of judgment, l. 14 sqq. 3. A symbolical prophecy of the destruction, li. 63, 64.—One great distinction between the two sections should be noted. The one in the Apocalypse is the record of a prophecy of events (including prophecies); that in Jeremiah is simply a record of events (also including prophecies). John prophesied of a Divinely appointed messenger (Angel) who should prophesy. Jeremiah was himself the messenger (Angel) who foretold.

[In the judgment of the writer, the events here symbolized are yet future; nothing in the history of the world has occurred which adequately meets the symbolization. A comparison of this section with the one in Jeremiah, suggests the thought that by the glorious Angel of vers. 1-3 may be symbolized a Divinely called and gifted man, or body of men, who, in the spirit of the old Prophets, shall declare the approaching fall of the spiritual Babylon. By the Voice from Heaven of ver. 4 may be designated the inspired voice of these latter Prophets uttering the calls foretold; or, as the change in figure (another voice) probably indicates a change in instrumentality, by it may be indicated some other Divine influence exerted upon the three classes mentioned. By the strong Angel casting the millstone into the sea, ver. 21, may be symbolized some great catastrophe in history or nature—possibly the destruction of the great City that symbolizes the apostate Church.—An objection to the suggested interpretation may arise in the minds of some from the fact that the Voice of ver. 4 (an influence) and the Angel of ver. 2 (the agent of a catastrophe) are both represented in the context as prophesying. In answer it may be said that it is altogether in keeping with the dramatic nature of the Apocalypse to represent these symbols of Divine instrumentalities as themselves declaring the results of their agency.—E. B. C.]

II. SECOND SPECIAL END-JUDGMENT. JUDGMENT UPON THE BEAST (ANTICHRIST) AND HIS PROPHET. THE BEAST AND THE MARRIAGE OF THE LAMB; THE MILLENNIAL KINGDOM AS THE MON OF TRANSITION FROM THE EARTHLY TO THE HEAVENLY WORLD.

CHAP. XIX. 1—XX. 10.

A. IDEAL HEAVENLY WORLD-PICTURE OF THE VICTORY OVER THE BEAST; AND THE MILLENNIAL KINGDOM.

CHAP. XIX. 1-16.

1. The Harlot and the Bride (Vers. 1-10).

- 1 And [om. And]<sup>1</sup> After these things I heard [ins. as]<sup>2</sup> a great voice of much people, [a great throng (ὄχλου πολλοῦ)] in [ins. the] heaven, saying,<sup>3</sup> Alleluia [Hallelujah]; [ins. The] salvation, and [ins. the] glory, and honour [om. and honour],<sup>4</sup> and
- 2 [ins. the] power, unto the Lord [om. unto the Lord—ins. of] our God: For true and righteous [just] are his judgments; for he hath [om. hath] judged the great whore [harlot], which did corrupt [that corrupted] the earth with her fornication, and
- 3 hath [om. hath—ins. he] avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. And again [a second time] they said, Alleluia [Hallelujah]. And her smoke rose up
- 4 [ascendeth] for ever and ever [into the ages of the ages]. And the four and twenty [twenty-four] elders and the four beasts [living-beings] fell down and worshipped God that sat [who sitteth] on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia [Hallelujah].
- 5 And a voice came out of [or forth from]<sup>5</sup> the throne, saying, Praise [Give praise to] our God,<sup>6</sup> all ye [om. ye] his servants, and ye [om. and ye<sup>1</sup>—ins. those] that fear him,
- 6 both [om. both—ins. the] small and [ins. the] great. And I heard as it were [om. it were] the [a] voice of a great multitude [throng], and as the [a] voice of many waters, and as the [a] voice of mighty [strong] thunderings [thunders], saying,<sup>8</sup> Alleluia [Hallelujah]: for the Lord [ins. our] God omnipotent [om. omnipotent—ins. the All-ruler] reigneth [(ἐβασίλευσεν)—hath assumed the Kingdom]<sup>9</sup>. Let us be glad and rejoice [exult] and [or ins. we will]<sup>10</sup> give honour [the glory] to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come [came], and his wife hath made [om. hath made—ins. prepared]
- 8 herself ready [om. ready]. And to her was granted [given] that she should be arrayed [array herself] in fine linen, clean [bright]<sup>11</sup> and [and]<sup>11</sup> white [pure]<sup>11</sup>: for the fine linen is the righteousness [righteousnesses (τὰ δικαιώματα)] of [ins. the]
- 9 saints. And he saith unto me, Write, Blessed are they which [who] are called unto the marriage [om. marriage] supper [ins. of the marriage] of the Lamb. And

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 1. [Καί is omitted by κ. A. B. C. P., et al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 1. A. B. C. [κ. P.], et al., give ὡς.

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 1. Αἰγόντων. [So Crit. Eds. with κ. A. B. C. P., et al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 1. The readings καὶ ἡ τιμὴ καὶ κυριεῖα are not based upon secure authorities. [Crit. Eds. give ἡ σωτηρία καὶ ἡ δόξα καὶ ἡ δύναμις τοῦ θεοῦ ἡμῶν with preponderating authorities.—E. R. C.]

<sup>5</sup> Ver. 5. [Tisch. (8th Ed.) gives ἐκ τοῦ with κ. P. 1, 31, 32, et al.; Lach., Tisch. (1859), Alf. and Treg. give ἀπὸ with A. B. C., et al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>6</sup> Ver. 5. Τῷ θεῷ ἡμῶν in acc. with A. B. C., et al. [Crit. Eds. give τῷ θεῷ with κ. A. B. C. P., et al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>7</sup> Ver. 5. [Tisch. (8th Ed.) omits καὶ with κ. C. P.; Lach., Tisch. (1859) give it with A. B., 1, 7, 14, 33, et al.; Alf. and Treg. bracket it.—E. R. C.]

<sup>8</sup> Ver. 6. Cod. A. [P.], et al., Lach. and Rec. give Αἰγόντων. [Gb., Sz., Tisch. (1859), Alf. give Αἰγόντες with B.; Tisch. (8th Ed.) Treg., Αἰγόντων.—E. R. C.]

<sup>9</sup> Ver. 6. ["Here is a case where we cannot approach the true sense of the acc. ἐβασίλευσεν but by an English present: 'reigned' would make the word apply to a past event limited in duration: 'hath reigned' would even more strongly imply that the reign was over." ALFORD. Still better is Lange's translation hath assumed the kingdom, presenting the idea of a special reign then begun.—E. R. C.]

<sup>10</sup> Ver. 7. Δώσωμεν in acc. with κ. and A. [Lach., Tisch. (1859), Alf. give δώσωμεν with κ. A. (δώσωμεν) P. 11, 79; Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) δώμεν with κ. B., 1, 7, et al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>11</sup> Ver. 8. [Crit. Eds. give λαμπρὸν καθαρόν with κ. A. P. 7, et al.—E. R. C.]

10 he saith unto me, These are the<sup>12</sup> true sayings [words] of God. And I fell at [before] his feet to worship him. And he said [saith] unto me, See thou do it [om. See thou do it—ins. Take heed] not: I am thy [om. thy—ins. a] fellow servant [ins. of thee], [om. ,] and of thy brethren that have the testimony [witness] of Jesus: worship God: for the testimony [witness] of Jesus is the spirit of [ins. the] prophecy.

2. The Bridegroom as the Warrior-Prince, prepared to do battle with the Beast. (Vers. 11-16).

11 And I saw [ins. the] heaven opened, and behold a white horse; and he that sat upon him was [om. was] called<sup>13</sup> Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge [judgeth] and make war [warreth]. His<sup>14</sup> eyes were as [om. were as]<sup>15</sup> a flame of fire, and on his head were [om. were] many crowns [diadems]; [,] and he had [om. and he had—ins. having]<sup>16</sup> a name written, that no man [one] knew [knoweth] but he [om. he] himself. [,] and he was [om. he was] clothed with [in] a vesture dipped in blood: and his name is [has become to be]<sup>17</sup> called The Word of God. And the armies which were [om. which were] in [ins. the] heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean [pure]. And out of his mouth goeth [ins. forth] a sharp sword (βουβαία), that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule [shepherdize] them with a rod of iron [an iron rod] and he treadeth the winepress [ins. of the wine] of the fierceness and [om. fierceness and—ins. anger of the] wrath<sup>18</sup> of Almighty [om. Almighty] God [ins. the All-ruler]. And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS.

<sup>12</sup> Ver. 9. Οὐ ἀληθεύει: in acc. with A., et al., with the article. [So Lach., Alf., Tisch. (1859); but Lach. (8th Ed.) Treg. omit the article with B*, P., et al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 11. [Treg. and Tisch. give καλούμενος with B; Lach. omits with A P. 1, 4, 6, et al.; Alf. brackets.—E. R. C.]

<sup>14</sup> Ver. 12. [In the original αὐτὸς is followed by δὲ. Alf. remarks, "The δὲ, as often, is best given in English by an asyndeton, marking a break in the sense, passing from the subjective to the objective description."—E. R. C.]

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 12. Ὡς in acc. with A., Vulg., et al.; against it B*, et al. [Lach. gives it; Treg. and Tisch. omit with B*. P., et al.; Alf. brackets.—E. R. C.]

<sup>16</sup> Ver. 12. Ὀδ. B*, et al., have δρόμαρα γυμνασίδας after ἔχων. [So Tisch. (1859); but Tisch. (8th Ed.), Lach., Treg., omit with A. P. 1, 7, Vulg., et al.; Alf. brackets.—E. R. C.]

<sup>17</sup> Ver. 13. Κέκληται with B. A. B*, et al. [So Crit. Eds. generally.—E. R. C.]

<sup>18</sup> Ver. 15. [For this rendering of τοῦ θυμοῦ τῆς ὀργῆς see NORR 29 on Ch. xv., p. 275.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

The first great special judgment upon Babylon, or upon Antichristianity in a hypocritical disguise, is now followed by the second great special judgment, the judgment upon the open, bold and specific Antichristianity of the Beast and the false Prophet. After this Antichristianity has accomplished God's judgment upon Babylon, its hour likewise comes. It comes, because the downfall and disappearance of the Harlot, "the fallen Church," result in the consummation and appearance of the Bride or the pure Church [Congregation] of God. The alternation of these two womanly forms in their visible appearance, is based both upon ethical and historical laws. When the spirit of idolatry, of deifications—in the form of party and sectarian spirit, as well as in other forms—is destroyed in Christendom; when, consequently, all hierarchism and sectism are thoroughly annihilated, then, and not until then, can the Church of Christ appear as a Virgin without spot or blemish—as His Bride.* Until then, moreover, her simple, retired existence had been historically concealed by the gaudy and ostentatious form of the Harlot. Hence, also, the investment of the Bride is prepared by a backward glance at the downfall of the Harlot. But the Virgin Church, having no earthly means of defence, stands, armed only with the weapons of the Spirit, opposed to the terrible power of Antichristianity. The hour of tribulation, therefore, is now come—the hour which occasions the return of Christ. He comes in celestial conquering power—for the rescue and emancipation of His Church. Hence His appearing results first in judgment upon the Beast; this judgment, again, is the preliminary condition of the Marriage of the Lamb, which begins with the Millennial Kingdom.

* [The underlying spirit of idolatry, or spiritual adultery, is worldliness, which manifests itself in a multitude of other, and more obnoxious forms than those mentioned above. Until this spirit be destroyed, together with all the forms in which it manifests itself, the Church will not be, or appear as, a pure Virgin.—E. R. C.]

The heavenly songs of praise, and the pre-celebration of the Marriage, in the description of the Bride and the portrayal of the Bridegroom at the head of His martial train, form the Heaven-picture of the judgment upon the Beast. The heavenly songs of praise are distributed into two choruses. The first chorus, led by the Church Triumphant, finds its lofty finale in the ascent of the twenty-four Elders and the four Living-beings; the second chorus takes an opposite direction, starting from a voice from the Throne, and diffusing itself throughout the spirit-realm. The first chorus is a post-celebration of the downfall of the Harlot; the second chorus is the pre-celebration of the glorification of the Bride.

The Seer has separated the celestial triumph over the judgment of the Harlot from the vision of ch. xvii., in which place we should, in accordance with foregoing analogues, have expected it; he has done this for the following excellent reason—that he may constitute this triumph an introduction to the appearance of the Bride and the Bridegroom. The manner in which he has set forth the antithesis of the Harlot and the Bride—each related to the other, each opposed to the other—leads to very definite conclusions. That the Bride of Christ can be only the true Church of Christ, needs no proof. From this very fact, however, it is evident that she has had a present, but, in her heavenly purity, invisible existence, previous to this—as the invisible Church, therefore. Her false image and counterpart, the Harlot, can, in accordance with this, be only the outward and externalized Church, in the consistency of her fall and decay.

How universal and unceasing is the triumph of all good spirits over the fall of Great Babylon! The hosts in Heaven cry, with the unanimity of one voice: Hallelujah! Their rejoicing has reference, above all, to the fact that the glory of God, which had been increasingly obscured by all idolatry, in MINOREM dei gloriam, is completely restored. Before, at the establishment of the invisible Church in the Heaven of the spirit, the heavenly voice proclaimed: Now is come [ἐνέvero] the salvation, and the power, and the Kingdom of our God, and the authority of His Christ (ch. xii. 10). Now, however, glory supervenes to these; the Kingdom of dōxa is on the point of appearing (ch. xix. 1). Out of the darkness of God's essence-conformed (veritable) and righteous judgments upon the great Harlot, bursts forth the radiance of His glory. The judgment is a double judgment, as a recompense of the great double sin of the Harlot in corrupting the earth with her fornication, i. e., idolatry, and persecuting and slaying the servants of God; on the one hand, it is a judgment of unmasking, and on the other, it is a judgment of avengement of blood. The decisive character of the heavenly sentence is once more expressed in a repeated Hallelujah, based especially upon the fact that the smoke from the burning of Babylon ascends into the mists of the mists. She shall never arise from her ashes. In conjunction with the song of praise of the heavenly hosts, the twenty-four Elders and the four Living-beings utter, worshipping, the Hallelujah, together with an Amen. The four Living-beings are especially called upon to say Amen (see ch. v. 14), because they have been the single factors who have brought about the final result of the judgment, or because the fallen Church was thoroughly at variance with each of these ground-forms of the Divine rule: with ideality (the eagle), humanity (the human image), with alacrity in sacrifice and suffering (the bullock), and with true moral bravery (the lion). Heaven has spoken, but God's servants on earth apparently still forbear to utter their sentiments in regard to the fall of Babylon. In face of the kings of the earth, the merchants or mighty men, the international lords of the sea, who are all still lamenting over Babylon—aye, in view of reminiscences of the apparent holiness, the former merits and proud security of Babylon through many centuries, the servants of God, and the truly pious in general, have become reticent and silent. Therefore must a voice from the throne of God issue the command: Give praise to our God, all His servants [Lange: and] those (in general) that fear Him, the small and the great. For besides believers, the Seer recognizes fearers of God, not only great ones, but also little ones. With this, a storm of praise is loosed on earth also: a voice of a great throng—partly, a voice of many waters or peoples; partly, a voice of strong thunders or prophetic geniuses—repeats the heavenly Hallelujah. But these loosed tongues still seem timidly to pass by the name of the Harlot—and this so much the more since it is the world of the ten horns and the Beast which has destroyed Babylon; they fasten immediately upon the glorious positive result: "For the Lord our God, the All-Ruler, hath assumed the Kingdom." Thus, not the dominion of Christ merely, but the dominion of the Almighty, in the general acceptance of the term, has been obscured by the pseudo-kingdom of Babylon. Let us be glad and exult, say the pious on earth, and we will give to Him the glory which was so long alienated from Him. And they speak not of foreign things when they introduce the Woman, the Bride of Christ—who, like a Cinderella, if we may venture to make the comparison, has so long been retired from sight and sound—into the field of view, with the announcement: The Marriage of the Lamb is come, and His Wife hath prepared herself.

And now the Seer himself takes up the story, speaking first concerning the Woman, and then, in obedience to an angelic voice, concerning her imminent marriage-feast. The appearance of the Woman forms a highly edifying contrast to the appearance of the Harlot. The latter had decked herself with purple and scarlet, and loaded herself with gold and jewels; to the former it is given by God to array herself in the right adornment, and her vesture is snow-white, shining linen, a byssus-robe. The material of her dress, the Seer adds in explanation of its brilliancy and purity, are the δικαιώματα of the saints, their final, eschatological judicial acquittals (Matt. xxv. 34 sqq.) which are grounded upon the principal justification (Rom. v. 1), upon the δικαιώματα of Christ, in the most manifold forms of a now manifestly appearing righteousness of life. For this cause, the Marriage can now begin. The herald of it is an Angel whom the Seer marks, without further explanation, as one already brought upon the scene of action: And he saith unto me. A lack of precision in form which reminds us of similar instances in the Gospel of John. What Angel is meant? This question has been variously answered. Since the reference here is to a personal, and not a symbolical Angel, we do not, with Dürstiedt and others, go back to ch. xvii. 1, as it is one of the seven Angels of the Vials of Anger who there speaks; nor do we think that the Angel of ch. xviii. 1 is referred to; but we hold that the reference is to the Angel who, according to ch. xviii. 21, executed the judgment by a symbolical act, because we here find ourselves in the sphere of the return of Christ, Who is to be surrounded by personal Angels, and also by glorified believers.*

* [The most natural reference most certainly is to the Angel of chap. xvii. 1, of whose withdrawal from the Seer

And such an one [a glorified believer] John here sees in the form of an Angel, according to ver. 10; the other world begins to grow visible, in spiritual shapes, in this world. Again is the Seer commanded to write a grand and inviting word of revelation concerning the blessedness of proved believers, as in ch. xiv. 13. Write: Blessed are they who are called unto the supper of the Marriage of the Lamb. The great beatitude is strengthened by the addition: These are the true (veritable, based deep within the kernel of life) words of God.

John describes the impression which the sublime Gospel of the blessedness of the guests at the imminent Marriage has made upon him: I fell before his feet to worship him. The Seer cannot have erred in his inclination to worship, but he made a mistake in the object of his adoration. It did not seem possible for any but Christ to utter so confident a declaration of so speedy a blessedness. And the Seer was not mistaken in his feeling that the Lord was near. That nearness, however, was announced by a celestial herald; the dividing wall between the hither and the further world [Diesseits und Jenseits] is beginning to fall. The herald of the Marriage reveals himself to the Seer as a glorified saint in angelic form. Take heed not, might be said by an Angel. And so might, I am thy fellow-servant. But the words, I am one of thy brethren who have the witness of Jesus [the true rendering is: I am a fellow-servant of thee and of thy brethren that have the witness of Jesus. See the text, ver. 10.—E. R. C.], could not suitably be uttered by a real Angel in the literal sense of the term. Worship God. This, certainly, is a didactical reprimand and exhortation which is calculated for millions of men; but in the case of John, the words must have reference to something especially calling for worship. And this something is expressed in the words, for the witness of Jesus is the spirit of the prophecy. It might, indeed, likewise be said, The spirit of prophecy witnesses of Jesus; but still something particularly worthy of adoration is here expressed in the idea: The witness of and concerning Jesus in His saints is the spirit of prophecy, which is sure of the imminent Marriage. Living, practical Christianity is prophecy from beginning to end. As a witness concerning Jesus, therefore, the Angel is the bearer of, and voucher for, the glorious promise. Worship God Who has put the certainty of the most glorious future into the kernel of the life of faith.

Did John perhaps think that Peter, his fellow-servant and one of his brethren of the witness of Jesus, would re-appear as the forerunner of the Parousia of the Lord, to execute judgment upon Great Babylon? However this may be, the conversation of the Angel with John is followed by the Parousia itself. We must of course take it for granted that a period intervenes between the judgment upon the Harlot and the judgment upon the Beast—the period of the troubled and waiting Church, the hour of heaviness, depicted ch. xiii. 15-17. But in the prophetic perspective, the period vanishes, as, Matt. xxiv., the period between the destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the world; the second judgment follows quickly after the first.

John sees the Heaven opened. Again the white horse appears, as in ch. vi., now, however, no longer to dominate the course of the world, but to conclude it. The Rider has now, on the one hand, an open name, proved in the history of the world; whilst, on the other hand, the unnamableness of His personality, His mysterious essence, has attained full recognition.* He is called Faithful and True (ἀληθινός), the purest consequence and the innermost kernel of world-history, in personal completion; He is, therefore, entirely the administrator of righteousness in the judgment which He has just executed, and in the war which He is about to begin. With His righteousness corresponds His all-piercing glance; His eyes are as a flame of fire, illuminating the object to which He directs them; as this was formerly the case with regard to the fanatical Church at Thyatira (ch. ii. 18), so it is now the case with regard to the whole world. Issuing from many victories, His head is adorned with many wreaths of victory or diadems, which, in accordance with the textual variation, may be accompanied by many names; but the full import of His essential name is known to Himself alone, in His blissful consciousness. For that which is true of every personality renewed by Christianity—that it has a mysterious, almost anonymous depth (ch. ii. 17)—is true in the highest degree of the Crown of all human personalities. His garment, also, is of the color of blood, like that of the Babylonish woman; in His case, however, it is the pure blood-color, not offensively mixed with the hue of royalty; it is the color of His own blood, for He has not yet waged an external war with His foes—least of all, by means of an external sword—hence the sense is not the same as that of Isaiah lxiii., although the expression is similar, and the bearings of the two passages are kindred.† One with this perfected glory of beauteous humanity, the adornment of self-sacrifice in love, is His mysterious Divine essence which the Church has sought fully to express by the name, THE LOGOS or GOD. John was, doubtless, perfectly aware that He uttered a mystery of unfathomable depth when, in his Gospel, he called Christ the LOGOS. But now the great Bearer and Forbearer [Dulder] comes as a victorious King for judgment upon the world: He has waited sufficiently long to have destroyed every suspicion of passionate reaction [against His injuries]. The world has even accustomed itself to the thought that His crucial passion will never be completely reckoned for. The universal character of His passion and victory appears in His escort—a host of triumphant believers, seated, like Himself, on white horses, and clothed in white and shining linen [Byssus], no mention is made. The implication of ver. 9 seems to be that this Angel had confided with the Seer giving him instruction. The reason assigned by our author for denying that the reference is to him, seems to be without foundation, for most certainly the implication of his coming to John and giving him instruction (xvii. 1, of pass.) is, that he is a personal being.—E. R. C.]

* [See ADD. NOTE, pp. 178 sq.—E. R. C.]

† [Is not the sense in both cases precisely the same? In both cases, the Conqueror, at His first appearance, is dramatically represented as sprinkled with the blood which He shed in the course of His advance.—E. R. C.]

the color of righteousness, like the Bride of Christ.* His weapons of attack are three-fold: first, the two-edged sharp sword which goeth forth out of His mouth, and which is designed to smite the nations (the modern heathen) (Is. xi. 4; 2 Thess. ii. 8; Heb. iv. 12; Rev. i. 16). From the spiritual victory which He gains with this sword, the symbolism of the Seer distinguishes the fact that He will, secondly, shepherdize the heathen [nations] with an iron rod (Ps. ii.). This, doubtless, refers to the dynamical, strict social government which Christianity will exercise from the time of the Parousia of Christ. Again, in relation to Antichrist and his company, Christ will, thirdly, manifest Himself as the Treader of the wine-press Who will tread the press of the wine of the anger of the wrath (wrathful indignation) of God, the All-Ruler (Is. lxiii. 1), i. e. execute the actual reprobation judgment upon Antichristianity in the final catastrophe of the course of the world. It seems enigmatical that He should wear the Name, KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS, on His vesture and on His thigh. The Name is, doubtless, to be apprehended as twice written, not as inscribed simply upon the girdle of the tucked-up garment (as Dürstiedeck maintains). We understand this as intimating that the Seer desired doubly to express the idea that it is a small thing for Him to be KING OF KINGS; He wears this Name, not on His crown, not on His brow, but, as a passing decoration, upon His garment. In this place, however, it has deep significance, inasmuch as it is with the blood of His vesture that He has achieved His dominion over the kings of the earth. But why does He bear the name upon His thigh also? Because the generality of kings wear their names there, upon the hilt of the sword, as a title based, for the most part, upon the right of the sword; at least, it is thus with the titles of the ten kings, who are from the outset designated as democratic violence-kings. In view of all this, we regard the Name of Christ in this place as expressive of a declaration of war preparatory to the conflict which is now to begin.*

[ABSTRACT OF VIEWS, ETC.]

By the American Editor.

[ELLIOTT: Vers. 1-4 are connected with the preceding section, and present the heavenly doxology over the fall of Babylon.—Vers. 5-21 form the concluding portion of the inside-written (see foot-note, p. 281) prophecy of events under the Seventh Vial. The first part of this section contains a hymn of praise, uttered by all God's servants, whose themes are the approaching establishment of Christ's Kingdom and His marriage. (By the establishment of the Kingdom, he understands the introduction of the millennial era; by the Bride, the completed number of the saints of the old and present dispensations; by the righteousnesses of the saints, the badges of their justification; [by the marriage, the glorification of the risen saints with Christ?]). The latter part of the chapter describes the glorious personal appearing of Christ and the destruction of Antichrist; which events are subsequent to the utterance of the hymn, but precede the glorious events pre celebrated therein.

BARNES: "This chapter, as well as the last, is an episode, delaying the final catastrophe, and describing more fully the effect of the destruction of the mystical Babylon." It consists of four parts: I. A hymn of the heavenly hosts in view of this destruction, vers. 1-7. II. The marriage of the Lamb, vers. 8, 9,—i. e. "the Church is now to triumph and rejoice as if in permanent union with her glorious Head and Lord." III. The offered worship of the Seer and the rebuke, ver. 10. IV. The final conquest over the Beast, etc. "The general idea here is that these great Antichristian powers which had so long resisted the gospel . . . would be subdued. The true religion would be as triumphant as if the Son of God should go forth as a warrior in His own might. This destruction . . . prepares the way for the millennial reign of the Son of God."

STUART: Vers. 1-9, an episode (delaying the main action) of praise, thanksgiving, and anticipated completion of victory.—Vers. 11-21, the final contest. (This author, in his concluding remarks on chaps. xiii.-xix., writes: "That Nero is mainly characterized in xiii., xvi., xvii., we cannot well doubt. But in chap. xiii., when the beast out of the sea is first presented, he has seven heads, and each one of these is itself a king or emperor, xvii. 10. Of course, the beast, generally considered, represents many kings, not merely one. Yet as the reigning emperor, for the time being, is the actual manifestation of the beast, or the actual development of it, so the word beast is applied, in the chapters named, mainly to Nero, then persecuting the Church. Insensibly almost . . . this specific meaning appears to be dropped, and the more generic one to be employed again in chap. xviii. sq. . . . That Nero's fall was in the eye of the Apocalyptic here (chap. xvi.), I can hardly doubt. But this was not the end of the Church's persecutions; although a respite of some twenty years or more was now given. Farther persecutions were to arise; and so, a continued war with the beast, and a still further destruction of great Babylon, are brought in the sequel to our view. . . . As soon as the writer dismisses the case of Nero from his consideration, he deals no longer with anything but generic representations. Persecutions will revive. The war will still be waged. At last the great Captain of Salvation will come forth, in all His power, and make an end of the long-protracted war. Then, and not till then, will the millennial day of glory dawn upon the Church. . . . In order to designate the final and certain overthrow of heathenism, as opposed to Christianity, the writer has chosen to represent the whole matter by the symbol of a great contest between the two parties.")

WORDSWORTH: This writer regards the whole section as having respect to the blessed condition of the Church after the destruction of Rome. His comments are of the most general and indeterminate kind.

ALFORD: Vers. 1-10 form the concluding portion of the general section begun ch. xviii. 1, entitled, "The Destruction of Babylon;" vers. 1-8 present "the Church's song of triumph at the destruction of Babylon; ver. 9 sets forth the Bride as the sum of the guests at the marriage feast. Ver. 11 begins a general section extending through ch. xxii. 5, entitled "The End:" the subdivisions of this section are, (1) vers. 11-16, "the triumphal coming forth of the Lord (personal and visible) and His saints to victory; (2) vers. 17-21, the great defeat and destruction of the beast and false prophet and kings of the earth; (3) ch. xx. 1-6, the binding of Satan and the millennial reign; (4) ch. xx. 7-10, the great general judgment; (5) chs. xxi. 1-xxii. 5, the vision of the new heavens and earth, and the glories of the new Jerusalem. (See also in loc.)

* [See ADD. NOTE, p. 336.—E. R. C.]

Lord: Vers. 1-4, the hymn of the heavenly host on the destruction of Babylon. Vers. 5-10, the Marriage of the Lamb, i. e. the literal resurrection of departed saints, and their exaltation to the thrones on which they are to serve Christ throughout their endless existence; (the guests, ver. 9, "are different persons from the raised and glorified Saints who are denoted by the Bride, and are doubtless the unglorified Saints on Earth"). Ch. xix. 11-21 describes "a personal and visible advent" of Christ, accompanied by the raised and glorified saints, and the subsequent destruction of all His civil, ecclesiastical and military enemies who are to be arrayed in organized and open hostility to him (see Abstracts under following sections).

GLASGOW: Vers. 1-10 show us what transpires among the Saints of God in immediate connection with Babylon's fall; they present a vision of the events that are now begun to be developed in the Church and nation. By the "wife," ver. 7, is to be understood the Church, not merely invisible, but visible; henceforward, she, as a whole, will be honorable and pure, acknowledging the sole supremacy of Christ, and altogether Scriptural in her doctrine, discipline and government; by the γάμος is to be understood the marriage festivities. Vers. 11-16. The opening of the heaven took place only once, and at the beginning of the gospel age,—this scene takes us back to the beginning. In the first seal (ch. iv. 2) Christ appears in His sacerdotal character—here is represented as going forth simultaneously in His office as King; the white horse in both appearances is identical and symbolizes the body of Christian teachers; the entire vision represents Him as going on to complete victory and supremacy.—E. R. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

[Vers. 1-8.] Earlier songs of praise may be found chap. iv. 8; v. 9; xi. 15; xv. 3; xvi. 5. ["As each of the great events and judgments in this Book is celebrated by its song of praise in Heaven, so this also; but more solemnly and formally than the others, seeing that this is the great accomplishment of God's judgment on the enemy of His Church." (References as above.) ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 1. I heard as a great voice.—It is, certainly, the voice of a great people, but it is also that of a heavenly people, and hence is to be compared with [as] the tumult of voices of an earthly multitude. This throng is to be symbolically defined in general as the heavenly Church of God, without further random conjecture concerning those from whom the praise proceeds. Hallelujah.—With this specific shout of joy, the song begins. It is thus from beginning to end a song of praise. In Heaven there is no regret for the fall of Babylon. "It is certainly not unintentional that just here, after the complete judgment upon the enemies of God and of His faithful ones has begun, we find the express Hallelujah, which does not appear any where else in the Apocalypse" (Foot-note: "Nor is it found in all the rest of the New Testament"). DUMST. A four-fold Hallelujah appears in the New Testament with reference to the fall of Babylon, and is found nowhere else! (for even the Hallelujah of ver. 6 has reference to the fall of Babylon). In the quaternary of the Hallelujah, Hengstenberg discovers God's victory over the earth, "whose mark is four," in opposition to which Dürst dieck judiciously remarks that it is not a victory over the earth, but one over the Harlot, that is being celebrated. The salvation.—Comp. ch. vii. 10 and xii. 10.

[Elliott infers from the introduction of the Hebrew Hallelujah that at the time contemplated the Jews will have been converted. Wordsworth regards the introduction of the word as "proving that whatever appertained to the devotion and glory of the Ancient People of God is now become the privilege of the Christian Church." The idea of Alford is preferable to either, viz.: "The formula must have passed with the Psalter into the Christian Church, being continually found in the LXX; and its use first here may be quite accounted for by the greatness and finality of this triumph."—E. R. C.]

Ver. 2. For true.—The reason assigned becomes more efficient and solemn when both dr's are coördinated, in accordance with De Wette and others (see ch. xviii. 23; xi. 18).

Ver. 8. And a second time, etc.—We cannot apprehend these words as forming an antistrophe to the foregoing, with De Wette, since a grander antiphony is formed between vers. 1 and 6. Hallelujah.—A Hallelujah based upon the fact that the smoke of Babylon ascends into the sons of the sons! This far surpasses modern sentimentalities. And her smoke, etc.—In ch. xviii. 9 and 18, the reference was to the uprising smoke in a historical sense; here the smoke takes a more æonic and metaphorical import, as chap. xiv. 11. [Into the ages of the ages.—"Another proof that the destruction of the mystical Babylon will be final, and that therefore Babylon cannot be heathen Rome." WORDSWORTH.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 4. And the twenty-four Elders and the four Living-beings fell down, etc.—The four Life-forms are set above the Elders; hence it is here, also, evident that they should not be regarded as types of creature-life. That as ground-forms of the Divine government in the world they, likewise, worship God, occasions no difficulty. The Amen corroborates the truth [Wahrhaftigkeit], the Hallelujah, the Divine authorship of the fact celebrated. [See foot-note †, p. 152, and ADD. NOTES, p. 161 sq.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 5. A voice came forth from the throne.—The first voice proceeded from the experience and conviction of the spirit-world; it went from below upwards. The second song is the more developed Amen to the first; it is begun at the Throne of God, and proceeds from above downwards. The expression, Praise our God, gives the voice the appearance of issuing from the centre of the Church Triumphant; it is more natural, therefore, to think of the twenty-four Elders, with Düsterdieck, than to refer the voice to Christ, with Hengstenberg, or to the four Living-beings, with Bengel. Everywhere, however, where one voice is spoken of, stress is thereby laid upon the unison, the one spirit of a company; here it is that of the highest company, the one nearest to the Throne (comp. ch. v. 9). The αἰνεῖν τῷ θεῷ is the development of the foregoing Hebrew Hallelujah. See Düsterdieck. Comp. Pss. cxv. 18; cxxxv. 1.

Ver. 6. As a voice, etc.—Quite unique is the harmony in the antithesis of many waters and strong thunders (see chapter i. 15, xiv. 2; Ezek. i. 24, xliii. 2; Dan. x. 6). The song of praise, now beginning, passes from the post-celebration of the judgment upon the Harlot to the pre-celebration of the marriage of the Bride. ["The triumphant song being ended, an epithalamium, or marriage-song, begins." M. HENRY.—E. R. C.] The central point of the song lies in the fact that the *Lord our God hath taken to Himself [assumed*] the Kingdom*, i. e., His Kingdom in the hearts of men† (see ch. xi. 17, where, however, the manifest appearing of kingly power in the general judgment is referred to). The Harlot deified herself and robbed God of His glory; the purity of the Bride, on the other hand, consists in the fact that she gives the glory altogether to God.

[The All-Ruler.—See additional comment on ch. i. 8, p. 93.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 7. And we will give the glory to Him.—This is the fountain of the gladness and exultation, aye, it is the preparation for the marriage itself,—which preparation consists in the right fellowship of human souls, in their participation in a faith—ripening to sight—in the glory of God.

Saying (ἀλειτουργεῖς) [Ver. 6].—This grammatical irregularity is based upon the Seer's intention to give prominence to the individual nature of the song of praise, as founded upon subjective heart-truth. It is not merely the jubilation of a sympathetically excited crowd; that which the voice says as one voice, they all say singly likewise.

For the marriage of the Lamb came.—This is proleptical, according to De Wette, Hengstenberg and Düsterdieck. In the sense of the vision, however, the judgment upon Babylon, from the consummation of which the vision starts, coincides with the preparedness of the Bride, and the two items are not only preliminary conditions of, but also indices for, the beginning of the marriage.‡ That the terms, the marriage and the supper of the marriage, although distinct in themselves, coincide in point of time, should be understood as a matter of course. Züllig, in contradistinguishing the millennial Kingdom from the marriage, as a fore-feast of the Messianic marriage, overlooks the fact that even in the Parables of the Lord His Parousia is designated as the beginning of the marriage. The spiritual marriage is characterized by the moment when the ideal Christian view and the outward appearance coincide in perfect oneness. Hence the first appearance of Christ was the fore-celebration of the marriage (Matt. ix. 15). It is taking a contracted view of this marriage, the idea of which runs through the whole of Sacred Writ (Song of Sol., Isaiah, Ezekiel, Hosea, etc.), to understand thereby, "the coming Lord's distribution of the eternal reward of grace to His faithful ones, who then enter, with Him, into the full glory of the heavenly life" [Düsterdieck]. Three elements, above all things, pertain to the constitution of the idea. First, the personal relation between the Lord and His people. Secondly, perfect oneness on the part of His people. Thirdly, their receptivity, conditioned by homogeneity. Hence it is also evident that the marriage must be blessedness, in the reciprocal operation of a spiritual fellowship of love. And His Wife.—The Bride—after the espousal, His Wife (Matt. i. 20; comp. Gen. xxix. 21). Prepared herself.—That is, adorned herself in a spiritual sense. In active self-appointment, as a free Church, that has attained its majority, she has prepared herself; nevertheless, the material of her readiness is given to her by the grace of God. According to The Shepherd of Hermas, the Church, in the form of a woman, undergoes a process of development which is directly opposed to nature. From an aged matron, she is transformed more and more into a youthful appearance. In the end, therefore, when she is free from all spots and wrinkles, she is the perfected Bride of the Lord (Eph. v. 27).

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE MARRIAGE.—Alford most strangely comments in loc.: "This figure of a marriage between the Lord and His people is too frequent and familiar to need explanation." Rather, for the very reason assigned, should an explanation be given. Matters most frequent in the Scriptures are matters most important; and those most familiar are often, because of their very familiarity, least studied, and therefore least understood. There are few phrases more frequently on the lips of Christians than "The marriage supper of the Lamb," and it is probable that there are few utterances with which less definite ideas are connected. At first glance, the most natural hypothesis is, that the reference in this verse is to the manifestation of the New Jerusalem, ch. xxi. 2

* [See TEXT, and TEXT. AND GRAM. note 9.—E. R. C.]

† [See EXCURSUS on the BASILEIA, pp. 93 seq.—E. R. C.]

‡ "In every instance of the word marriage (γάμος) in the New Testament it means the festive, which were sometimes a considerable period after the actual covenant or bond of marriage. 'The wedding day was rather the day when the bride was taken home to her husband's house, than what we should designate the day of marriage' (Fairbairn, Imp. Dict. of Bible). . . . By His incarnation, Jesus became the Bridegroom (νυμφίος), and His Church the Bride (νύμφη). And if it be necessary to distinguish 'wife' from 'bride,' let it be observed that 'wife' (ἡ σύζυγος) is the word employed in the text: 'His wife has prepared herself.' GLASSON. The same comment on ver. 9 the same writer remarks: "The same festive occasion which in ver. 7 is called the marriage is here called the marriage supper (τὸ δείπνον τοῦ γάμου); which shows that not the marriage ceremony, but the joyous festivities, are meant."—E. R. C.]

This reference, however, necessitates one of two subordinate hypotheses,—either (1) that the visions of chs. xxi., xxii. are merely supplementary; that they do not refer to events to occur after the millennium, but are descriptive of some event mentioned ch. xix. 11—xx. 15; or (2) that the song of triumph now under consideration had respect, not to the immediate, but to the entire future. The former of these hypotheses seems to be forbidden by the phraseology of the chapter mentioned, which manifestly contemplates a new order of things (a new Heaven and new earth), in which there shall be neither sin nor death (see EXCURSUS ON THE NEW JERUSALEM, pp. 889 sqq.); the latter is hardly admissible in view of the language of the Song, the marriage is come (ἦλθεν)—something in the present, or the immediate future seems to be contemplated; we can hardly suppose that a space of at least a thousand years should be grasped by such an expression. The foregoing considerations lead us to seek for something in the events represented as immediately following the Song as the event contemplated therein, and this the writer thinks is found ch. xx. 4-6. Whether the first resurrection mentioned in that passage be literal or spiritual (i. e., whether it be a literal resurrection of departed saints, or a more complete deliverance of living saints from the power of sin), it is undeniable that the entire description contemplates the Church as brought into a new condition—a condition of higher spiritual adornment and of closer relation to Christ—one therefore that may be appropriately figured as her marriage to Christ. It is proper here to remark that the writer regards (1) the resurrection as literal, (2) the Bride as the whole body of the saints (the quick and the dead), at the Second Advent of the Lord, and (3) the marriage as the union of this body with a personally present Christ in glory and government (i. e., as the establishment of the Basileia). As to the truth of the first of these hypotheses, see the EXCURSUS ON THE FIRST RESURRECTION, p. 852. The second and third hypotheses best satisfy the elements of the marriage relation so beautifully and justly set forth by Lange in the immediately preceding comment; and they are also in perfect consistency with the normal interpretation of ch. xx. 4-6, and of the whole body of Apocalyptic teaching. It should here be distinctly noted, however, that these hypotheses require that the number of those entering into the constitution of the Bride or the New Jerusalem (their identity is admitted) should be complete at the first resurrection, and consequently that the vision of ch. xxi. 1, 2 should refer, not to the marriage, but to a new manifestation of the Bride. For a discussion of this portion of the subject, see the EXCURSUS ON THE NEW JERUSALEM.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 8. And to her was given.—Her adornment is simply pure and beautiful (cultus gravis et matronæ, non pompaticus, qualis meretricis. Grot.). Byssus [fine linen] denotes the most precious of plain, unostentatious, yet elegant, material; a similar character attaches to its hue, as opposed to scarlet and purple. A species of contrast is, doubtless, indicated by καθὰρος and λαμπρός; the negative purity and positive glory of the new life. For the fine linen [byssus], etc.—Even in describing the simple adornment of the Bride, the Seer is anxious to bring out the spiritual import of the same. The righteousnesses [Lange: Gerechtigkeitsgüter=possessions of righteousness].—Τὰ δικάσματα. The δικασμα is always a means by which justice is satisfied or acquittal [Gerechtersprechung] is obtained, whether it be the performance of the right, or the expiation of the wrong (by undergoing punishment), or atonement, as the concrete unity of the doing and the suffering of that which is right. Reference is not here had “to the white garment of righteousness before God in Christ (as Beza maintained), which garment the Church does not first receive in the last time” (Ebrard). But whether the fulfillment of God’s commandments (De Wette, Ebrard, et al.) or “righteous deeds” (Düsterd.) be intended, is the question. Righteousness of life is itself established by suitable δικασματα and consequent acquittals [or justifications]. Such is the verification of faith treated of Jas. ii. 21 (comp. the Lange Commentary on James, in loc.), which, according to Matt. xxv. 31 sqq., ramifies into a multitude of individual verifications. “A delicate allusion to the grace given by God, as the cause and source of the δικασματα peculiar to the saints, is contained in the ἐδόθη αὐτῇ ἵνα κτλ.” (Düsterdieck). According to Ebrard, it is “thus prophesied that sanctification shall be perfected, that it shall be given to the eschatological Church to put off the last remnant of sin while yet in the flesh.” [“The plural -ματα is probably distributive, implying not many δικασματα to each one, as if they were merely good deeds, but one δικασμα to each of the saints, enveloping him as in a pure white robe of righteousness. Observe that here and everywhere the white robe is not Christ’s righteousness imputed or put on, but the Saints’ righteousness, by virtue of being washed in His blood. It is their own; inherent, not imputed; but their own by their part in and union to Him.” ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 9. An analogue of ch. xiv. 18. The two superscriptions of the everlasting Gospel correspond. The former characterizes the existence of the faithful of the last time, with reference to this world; the latter characterizes it with reference to the other world. These two beatitudes of the eschatological Gospel correspond to the beatitudes of the principal Gospel, Matt. v. They are summed up together in the beatitude and superscription, ch. xxi. 8-5.

And he saith unto me.—What Angel is meant? See SYN. VIEW. They who are called, etc.—The Church in its unitous form is the Bride; in its individual members, it consists of wedding-guests (Matt. xxii. 1; xxv. 1). These are the true words of God.—Since all the words of God are ἀληθινὰ, the saying can mean only: these are the true [or genuine] words of God in the most special sense; or, to be more definite, in these words are concentrated the true [or genuine] words of promise of God, in analogy with the declaration, “On these two commandments hang all the Law and the Prophets.” The highest summit of human consummation-bliss has the highest Divine reality. Different explanations of the sentence, by Hengstenberg (“these words are genuine, are words of God”), De Wette, Züllig, Düsterdieck (the words of revelation from ch. xvii. 1 are intended), see in the latter, p. 537.

Ver. 10. And I fell, etc.—This action of the Seer must be regarded entirely as a procedure taking place within the vision—not, therefore, as a subject for moral criticism. There is as little reason, therefore, for Hengstenberg's praising the Seer, on this occasion, for his humility, as for his blaming him elsewhere for visional actions and charging him with faint-heartedness. These, also, are strange words of Hengstenberg's; "As John here offered (sought to offer) adoration to the Angel, so it befits the Church, that receives this glorious revelation through John, to bow before him [John] because of it, and so, also, it befits John to say to her: Take heed not." See Ebrard against Hengstenberg, p. 499. It is remarked, not without reason, by Düsterdieck, that it is probable "that John regarded the Angel who was speaking with him, not as a fellow-servant, but as the Lord Himself." Take heed not.—Properly, Take heed that thou [do it] not. Apoposy. The whole deliverance is certainly decisive against all angelolatry. A fellow-servant.—A symbolized Angel could in no case become an object of adoration. But neither could a real, personal Angel. The passage may be so understood that the term συνδούλος expresses the common characteristic of the angelic and apostolic functions. I, as an Angel, am a fellow-servant of thee and of thy brethren, etc. So De Wette and Düsterdieck. Or συνδούλος is indicative of the category of believers. I, in angelic form, am a fellow-servant of thee, and one of thy brethren (Eichhorn, Züllig). Against the former apprehension is the consideration that the final sentence, The witness of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy, would be idle in this connection. Opposed to the second apprehension is the fact that it would call for the reading: καὶ ἐκ τῶν ἁδ. We therefore suppose that the meaning of the Angel is as follows: I, who appear to you as an Angel, am thy fellow-servant, and, as such, a fellow-servant of all who cleave to the witness of Jesus.

Worship God.—This does not mean simply, Worship no creature, but also, Thou hast certainly cause to worship God for the revelation that is made to thee, for it is a glorification of the God who has placed the spirit of the prophecy concerning the great marriage-feast of the consummation, in the witness of [concerning] Jesus. The witness of Jesus.—Since the Angel has commenced to instruct the Seer, we cannot see why he should not speak these words also, especially as they are expressive of the profound unity betwixt historical Christianity and the ideo-dynamical development of the world, and characterize Christianity as absolute prophecy. According to Düsterdieck (in opposition to Vitringa, De Wette, et al.), the concluding sentence belongs to John. The declaration contained therein is entirely different from ver. 8. Equally untenable is the assertion of Düsterdieck (in opposition to Vitringa, De Wette, et al.) that the genitive τῷ Ἰησοῦ must be taken only as subjective, signifying the witness proceeding from Jesus. That which constitutes the μαρτυρία a μαρτυρία is the very fact that Jesus is its object

(see ch. vi. 9). According to De Wette, indeed, the concluding words simply mean: He who, like thee, confesses Christ, has also the spirit of prophecy; according to Düsterdieck, the meaning is: When Christ communicates His revelation-witness to a man, He fills him likewise with the spirit of prophecy! According to this latter commentator, an attestation of the prophetic Book of John is contained in these words (and yet he maintains that the Book was not written by John, and that the prophecy is in part an error which has not been fulfilled).*

Vers. 11–16. The Bridegroom in His warlike Forth-going for the Destruction of the Beast, i. e., also, for the Redemption of the Bride.

Ver. 11. The Heaven opened.—According to Düsterdieck, the movement within the visions is very cumbersome. "The Seer was in spirit carried to the earth in ch. xvii. 8 (De Wette)." But in ch. iv. 1 his exaltation to Heaven was identical with his translation into the spirit. A white horse.—As in chap. vi. 2. And He that sat upon him, called—καλούμενος is in apposition [to ὁ καθήμενος κτλ.]. Faithful.—The germ and blossom of all Divine life in the history of the world. True.—The fulfillment of all world-historical prophecies, especially promises and threats (see ch. iii. 7, 14). And in righteousness (Isa. xi. 8, 4) He judgeth and warreth.—He must execute His judgment upon Antichrist in a warlike form.

Ver. 12. His eyes.—See ch. i. 14. Many diadems.—"If the many royal crowns upon His head are regarded as trophies of victories already won (2 Sam. xii. 30; 1 Mace. xi. 13; Grotius, Wetst., Bengel; comp. also Vitringa), we should necessarily have to conceive of kings as conquered—for instance, the ten kings of ch. xvii. (Züllig). But judgment is not yet executed upon these. It might also be said that the Lord Who goes forth as a triumphant Conqueror, Whom, ch. vi. 2, receives a victor's wreath in advance, here appears proleptically decked with the crowns of the kings whom He is to judge. But more obvious is the reference to ver. 16, where Christ is called the βασιλεὺς βασιλέων (Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenb., Bleek, Volkmar, Luthardt"). DÜSTERDIECK. The antithesis thus set forth is based upon deficient, atomistic conceptions. History testifies that Christ, in dynamical operation, has become the King of kings by a grand succession of victories, not necessarily eschatological in form, as was evidenced by Constantine, and even Julian. A name.—A wondrously beautiful designation of the personality of Christ in accordance with its peculiar Divine-human essential name. On the random conjectures concerning this name, see Düsterdieck, p. 542 (it is the name given in ver. 13; the name Jehovah; no definite name. It is placed on the forehead—on the vesture; see also De Wette, p. 179). The mystery, however, is sealed only from a worldly understanding, not from the knowledge of love.

Ver. 13. With a vesture, etc.—The expression of Isa. lxiii. 1, but in a New Testament sense. And His name hath become to be called.—The theological name of Christ, that which marks His Divine nature alone, and which John has also introduced in the most significant manner [in his Gospel?], is therefore in itself more intelligible than the mystery of personal God-manhood. Futile objections to a reference to the Logos, John i. 1, see in Düsterd., p. 75. The Logos is indeed here characterized as τὸν θεόν; but His historical mission is here also referred to.

* [Düsterdieck merely claims that the Book was not written by the Apostle John.—Ta.]

Ver. 14. And the armies in the heaven, etc.—Not Angels simply (Matt. xxy. 81; Hengstenb., Luth.), but also the perfected righteous (Düsterdieck); nay, these pre-eminently, since they are clothed in pure byssus, and since it is not simply the local Heaven that is intended here, but rather the Heaven of perfected spirit-life.—The byssus of their garments is white and pure; they are perfected in innocence and righteousness, and yet their vesture does not shine, like that of Christ.

Ver. 15. And out of His mouth, etc.—Even in the Old Testament the all-conquering power of the word of Revelation is expressed in figurative forms (Is. xi. 4; Jer. xxiii. 29; comp. 2 Thess. ii. 8; Heb. iv. 12; Rev. i. 16). In the last time, the immediate, spiritually dynamical operations of the word of God coincide with its mediate, physically dynamical operations in a unity which is prefigured Acts v. 5. In Ps. ii., also, the iron sceptre has manifestly a symbolical import. And He treadeth the wine-press.—Isa. lxiii. 8. The wine of the anger of the wrath [Lange: wrathful indignation] of God is the historic concrete of the wrath of God, on the one hand, and the wrath of the heathen [nations], on the other hand (chap. xi. 18). The judgment of God, in the uprising of "the heathen" [nations], is brought to a decision by Christ by His appearing. Hengstenberg's explanation—The wine-press is the wrath of God; the wine flowing out of it is the blood of His foes—is marvellously amended by Düsterd.: "The form of the statement, in which the two figures of the wine-press (ch. xiv. 19) and the cup of wrath (ch. xiv. 10) are combined (De Wette), denotes rather that out of the wine-press trodden by the Lord the wine of the wrathful indignation of God streams, which wine shall be given to His enemies to drink."

Ver. 16. On His vesture.—See SYN. VIEW. Comp. Düsterdieck, p. 548.

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE SECTION.]

By the American Editor.

[This chapter, beginning with the strong disjunctive, Μετά ταῦτα ἴκονσα, introduces a new series of visions that flow on in unbroken sequence to the close of the Revelation.

Vers. 1-8 present the heavenly song of triumph over the destruction of the apostate Church, and in prospect of the immediate establishment of the Basileia; it is the hallelujah that marks the beginning of a new æon—the times of refreshing and restitution (Acts iii. 19-21). (See foot-note † in the following column.)

Vers. 11-16 narrate the vision of the SECOND ADVENT of Jesus, the Advent contemplated ch. i. 7. (See the following NOTE.) In the judgment of the majority of interpreters, the Rider here described is the same as the one of the First Seal. For the views of the Am. Ed. on this point see ADD. NOTE, pp. 177-179.—E. R. C.]

[NOTE ON THE FUTURE ADVENT OF CHRIST.]

By the American Editor.

[It is admitted by all that there is to be a visible Advent of the glorified Messiah. Two views divide the Church as to the time of the Advent—some contending that it is to be Pre-millennial; others, that it is to be synchronous with the Consummation, the general Resurrection and final Judgment.

The advocates of the former hypothesis rely principally on two classes of passages: 1. Those which seem to connect the future Advent with the restoration of Israel, the destruction of Antichrist, or the establishment of a universal Kingdom of righteousness on earth, such as Isa. xi.; xii.; lix. 20sq. (comp. with Rom. xi. 25-27); Jer. xxiii. 5-8; Ezek. xlvi. 2sq.; Dan. vii. 9-27; Joel iii. 16-21; Zech. xiv; Rom. xi. 1-27; 2 Thess. i. 1-8; * Acts iii. 19-21.† 2. Those which speak

* [The last clause of verse 2 should not be translated is at hand, but is present. (See LANGE Comm., Am. Ed., p. 124.) The original is ἐντροπικῶς. It is inconceivable that the Apostle should have spoken of the approaching Advent, elsewhere described as the hope of the Christian Church (Tit. ii. 13), as the ground of distress. His object was to warn them against the false idea that the Advent had already taken place—that the hope that once had cheered them of blessings in the future was a vain one.—E. R. C.]

† [The ἀποκατάστασις. It is universally admitted that the rendering of Acts iii. 19-21 in the E. V. is incorrect. The translation as given in the LANGE Comm. is: Repent ye therefore and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, in order that the times of refreshing may come from the face of the Lord, and that He may send the Messiah Jesus who was appointed unto you; whom the heavens must receive until times wherein all things will be restored (times of restitution, χρόνων ἀποκαταστάσεως), which God hath spoken by the mouth of His holy prophets from of old.

It may at once be remarked that the period here referred to is a lengthened one, as is evident from the use of the plural term, χρόνων.

To determine what is meant by times of restitution, our first appeal must be to the Old Testament Prophets. They are times of which God has spoken by the mouth of His Prophets.

The noun ἀποκατάστασις does not occur in the LXX; its verbal root ἀποκαθίστημι appears however in several important passages, and points unmistakably to an off-recurring Hebrew word of which it is the translation; see Mal. iv. 6; Jer. xvi. 15; xxiv. 6; i. 19. In the first three of these passages it is the translation of the Hiph. of שָׁבַע, and in the last of the Piel, which, in this verb, is also causative (see Robinson). The verb also occurs Isa. i. 25, 26; lviii. 12; Jer. xxxiii. 7; xxxii. 37; xxiii. 5-8; xxiv. 6, 7; Joel iii. (iv.) 1. The ἀποκατάστασις referred to in these passages seems to be the only one spoken of by the Prophets. That these prophecies were partially and typically fulfilled in the restoration of Israel from Babylon is admitted. It would seem to be manifest, however, that they did not receive their complete fulfillment in that event. And still further, if they were then fulfilled, there were no unfulfilled prophecies of an ἀποκατάστασις in the days of Peter. (Manifestly connected with the passages quoted above, as the completion of the restitution therein predicted, are Isa. xi.; lxv. 17-1xvi. 24; compare especially Jer. xxiii. 5-8 with Isa. xi. 10-14. So connected are they that they must be regarded as referring to the same event, although the term under discussion does not appear in them.)

The following seem to be the elements of the restitution predicted in the foregoing Scriptures:—1. A restoration of the hearts of the fathers to the children, Mal. iv. 6. 2. The restoration of the rejected seed of Jacob to holiness and the consequent favor of God, Isa. i. 25; Jer. xxiv. 7. 3. The restoration of Israel to their own land, patria. 4. The establishment of Israel, not again to be dispersed, Jer. xxiv. 6, 7. 5. The establishment of the Kingdom of righteousness as a visible Kingdom, in power and great glory, with its seat at Jerusalem, Isa. i. 25, 26 (il. 2, 3); lviii. 12-14; Jer. xxiii. 5-8.

of the coming of the Lord as imminent (in connection with those which declare that there is to be a period of generally diffused peace and righteousness preceding the final consummation), such as Matt. xxiv. 42-44; Mark xiii. 32-37; Luke xii. 35-40; 1 Thess. v. 2, 8; Tit. ii. 11-18; Jas. v. 7, 8.

The upholders of the hypothesis that the Second Advent is not to take place until the final Consummation, base their opinion upon those Scriptures which manifestly connect an Advent with that event. The following is the summation of the argument by Dr. David Brown, one of the most eminent advocates of this view. I. The Church will be absolutely complete at Christ's Coming; 1 Cor. xv. 23; Eph. v. 25-27; 2 Thess. i. 10; Jude 24; Col. i. 22; 1 Thess. iii. 13. II. Christ's Second Coming will exhaust the object of the Scriptures, in reference—(1) to Saints; Luke xix. 18; 2 Pet. i. 19; James v. 7; 1 Pet. i. 18; 2 Tim. iv. 8; Phil. iii. 20; (2) to sinners; 2 Thess. i. 7-10; 2 Pet. iii. 10; Luke xii. 39, 40; xvii. 26, 27, 30. III. The sealing ordinances of the New Testament will disappear at Christ's Second Coming; Baptism; Matt. xxviii. 20: The Lord's Supper; 1 Cor. xi. 26. IV. The Intercession of Christ, and the Work of the Spirit for saving purposes, will cease at the Second Advent—(1) The Intercession of Christ stands intermediate between His first and second Coming; Heb. xi. 12, 24-28; (2) The work of the Spirit is dependent upon the Intercession, and terminates with it; John vii. 38, 39; xiv. 16, 17, 26; xv. 26; xvi. 7, 14; Acts ii. 38; Tit. iii. 5, 6; Rev. iii. 1; v. 6. V. Christ's proper Kingdom is already in being; commencing formally on His Ascension to the right hand of God, and continuing unchanged, both in character and form, till the final Judgment:—(1) Acts ii. 29-36, comp. with Zech. vi. 12, 13; Rev. v. 6; iii. 7, 8, 12; Isa. xxii. 22; ix. 6, 7; (2) Acts iii. 13-15, 19-21; (3) Acts iv. 25-28, comp. with Ps. ii. (4) Acts v. 29-31 (Him hath God exalted to be a SAVIOUR-PRINCE, i.e., a PRIEST upon His THRONE); (5) The Apostolic comment on Ps. cx.-1, viz.: Acts ii. 34-36; Heb. x. 12, 13; 1 Cor. xv. 24-26. VI. When Christ comes, the whole Church of God will be "made alive" at once—the dead by resurrection, and the living immediately thereafter by transformation; their "mortality being swallowed up of life;" 1 Cor. xv. 20-23; John vi. 39, 40; xvii. 9, 24. VII. All the wicked will rise from the dead, or be "made alive," at the Coming of Christ; Dan. xii. 2, with John v. 28, 29; 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52, with 1 Thess. iv. 16; Matt. xiii. 43, with Dan. xii. 8; Rev. xx. 11-15; (He interprets the first resurrection of Rev. xx. 4, 6, as "figurative"—indicating "a glorious state of the Church on earth, and in its mortal state"). VIII. The righteous and the wicked will be judged together, and both at the coming of Christ; Matt. x. 32, 33; Mark viii. 38; Rev. xxi. 7, 8; xxii. 12-15; Matt. xvi. 24-27; vii. 21-23; xxv. 10, 11, 31-46; xiii. 80, 88-43; John v. 28, 29; Acts xvii. 31; Rom. ii. 5-16; 2 Cor. v. 9-11; 1 Cor. iv. 5; 2 Thess. i. 6-10; 1 Cor. iii. 12-15; Col. i. 28; Heb. xiii. 17; 1 Thess. ii. 19-20; 1 John ii. 28; iv. 17; Rev. iii. 5; 1 Tim. v. 24, 25; Rom. xiv. 10, 12; 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10, 12; Rev. xx. 11-15; 2 Tim. iv. 1. IX. At Christ's Second Appearing, "the heavens and the earth that are now," being dissolved by fire, shall give place to "new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness" without any mixture of sin; 2 Pet. iii. 7, 10-18; Rev. xx. 11; xxi. 1.

A careful study of all the passages that have been adduced in support of these hypotheses respectively, has induced in the mind of the writer the thought that two Advents still future are predicted—the one for the establishment of the Basileia (at which shall take place a partial resurrection and judgment); the other at the final consummation, at which time shall take place the general judgment.

It will at once be objected that but one future Advent seems to be predicted in the Scripture. To this it may be answered, first, that, whilst this may be true in reference to the earlier portions of the New Testament, in the Apocalypse a twofold Advent seems to be indicated; comp. xix. 11-16 with xx. 11, 12. And in the second place, it may be remarked, that, in deferring a distinct intimation of a twofold Advent to one of the concluding Books of the Canon, the New Testament follows the analogy of the Old.

It is admitted by all that a twofold Advent of the Messiah, one in humiliation and the other in glory, was predicted in the Old Testament. In the earlier prophecies, however, but one Coming seems to have been contemplated. Even in Isaiah, where the Messiah is in one place spoken of as a Man of sorrows, and in another as appearing in royal glory, but one Advent is, in express terms, referred to. The whole of prophecy seems to be cast upon one plane, without referxxxiii. 7 seq. 6. The gathering of all nations as tributary to Israel or the Church. (For the views of the writer as to the identity of Israel and the Church, see foot-note f, p. 27.) 7. The Palingenesia, Isa. xli. lxx. 17 seq.

In the New Testament the noun occurs only in the passage under consideration, and the verbal root only eight times. Two of these instances, however, are of marked significance. In Matt. xvii. 11 Jesus said: "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things (ἀποκαταστήσει πάντα). That the restoration was future is evident from—(1) the future form of the verb, (2) the fact that the prophecy referred to was not completely fulfilled in the Baptist—he did not restore all things. (The subsequent words of our Lord, ver. 12, are not opposed to this view. They clearly imply that John had not accomplished the work prophesied by Malachi. The Scribes and Pharisees would not receive him as the restorer, Matt. xi. 14; they rejected the counsel of God against themselves, and Elias is yet to come for the fulfilment of the prophecy.)

The verb next occurs Acts i. 6. The disciples asked: "Lord, wilt thou at (in) this time restore again (ἀποκαταστήσεις) the kingdom to Israel?" Now it seems impossible to suppose that, after forty days' converse with the Great Teacher, during which time "he opened their understanding that they might understand the scriptures" (Luke xxiv. 45), and spoke "of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God" (Acts i. 3), the Apostles should have been in ignorance as to the nature of the restoration. It is equally impossible to suppose that if they had been mistaken, He would not have corrected them. So far from correcting mistake, His answer implies the correctness of their view as to the nature of the restoration. At that time their view was, confessedly, the one now characterized as literal or normal. A few days after (and subsequent to the outpouring of the Spirit at Pentecost) Peter speaks, in the passage under consideration, of an ἀποκατάστασις; still future, without the slightest intimation that he had previously been mistaken as to its nature.

The next instance of the occurrence of the term is in the passage now under consideration. The Apostle spoke of a restitutio, foretold by the Prophets and manifestly spoken of by our Lord, which he declared to be then future. It seems most natural to connect that restitutio with the event spoken of by Paul, Rom. xi. 25-27—a glorious ἀποκατάστασις, in the description of which all the Old Testament Scriptures referred to above seem to have been in the Apostle's mind.—E. R. C.]

ence to the succession of those events, which, we now know, were to be separated by millennia. It is only in the Book of Daniel, and there only obscurely, that a twofold Advent is, in terms, intimated; compare ix. 25, 26, with vii. 13, 14. The hypothesis of a double Advent could have been deduced from the Old Testament Scriptures only from the consideration that things were predicted of the coming Messiah, on the one hand humiliation and on the other exaltation, that could not be realized in one visit to earth—and this hypothesis exactly satisfies the obscure intimation in the Apocalypse of Daniel. It will also be observed by the careful student that one and the same prophecy sometimes relates to both Advents, in matters in which the first is typical of the second—as, for instance, the prophecy of Joel (ii. 28-32) which had an initial fulfillment on the day of Pentecost (Acts ii. 16-21), but which is to have another and more complete fulfillment in a day yet future (Matt. xxiv. 29; Luke xxi. 11, 25). So also in respect of the prophecies of the New Testament—things are predicted concerning the coming Messiah which cannot find a fulfillment in one Advent,—as, for instance, that He shall establish a Kingdom of righteousness on earth (Acts iii. 21; see preceding foot-note on the passage), and that He shall terminate the present order of things in a general judgment (2 Pet. iii. 4-13). These two classes of statement find their best reconciliation in the hypothesis of a twofold Advent—and this hypothesis finds support in a comparison of Matt. xxiv. 30 with xxv. 31, and still more clearly in Rev. xix. 11-16 compared with xx. 11-15.

It is impossible to present the details of this scheme in the present Note. It is submitted with the foregoing general remarks, which sufficiently indicate its leading features, to those interested in prophetic studies. It is proper, in addition to what has already been said, to call attention to the probability that, as certain prophecies of the Old Testament have reference to both the acknowledged Advents, finding an initial fulfillment in the one and being completely fulfilled in the other, so will it be in the prophecies of the New Testament.—E. R. C.]

B.—EARTH-PICTURE OF THE VICTORY OVER THE BEAST. THE PAROUSIA OF CHRIST FOR JUDGMENT.

CHAP. XIX. 17—XX. 5.

a. The Judgment upon the Beast.

- 17 And I saw an [one]<sup>1</sup> angel standing in the sun; and he cried with a loud [great] voice, saying to all the fowls that fly in the midst of heaven [mid-heaven], Come and gather yourselves [om. and gather yourselves—ins. , be gathered]<sup>2</sup> together
18 unto the [ins. great]<sup>3</sup> supper of the great [om. the great] God; That ye may eat the [om. the]<sup>4</sup> flesh of kings, and the [om. the]<sup>4</sup> flesh of captains [ins. of thousands], and the [om. the]<sup>4</sup> flesh of mighty [strong] men, and the [om. the]<sup>4</sup> flesh of horses, and of them that sit on them, and the [om. the]<sup>4</sup> flesh of all men [om. men], both
19 [om. both] free and [as well as]<sup>5</sup> bond, both [and] small and great. And I saw the beast [wild-beast], and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make [ins. the]<sup>6</sup> war against [with] him that sat [the one sitting] on the 20 horse, and against [with] his army. And the beast [wild-beast] was taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles [the signs] before him [in his presence], with which he deceived [seduced or misled (ἐπλανήσεν)] them that had [om. had] received the mark of the beast [wild-beast], and them that worshipped his image. [:] These both [the two] were cast alive into a [the] lake of [ins. the]
21 fire burning [that burneth] with brimstone. And the remnant were slain with the sword of him that sat [the one sitting] upon the horse, which sword proceeded [goeth forth] out of his mouth: and all the fowls [birds] were filled [satiated] with their flesh.

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

- <sup>1</sup> Ver. 17. [Crit. Eds. give ins. with A. P. 1, & al.; it is om. by B.*—E. R. C.]
<sup>2</sup> Ver. 17. [Crit. Eds. read συνάγειν with M. A. B*. P., & al., instead of καὶ συναγαγεῖν.—E. R. C.]
<sup>3</sup> Ver. 17. [Crit. Eds. give τὸ δεῖπνον with M. A. B*. P. instead of τοῦ μεγάλου with 1, 36, 49, 79.—E. R. C.]
<sup>4</sup> Ver. 18. [These articles do not occur in any Cod., nor are they required by the English idiom.—E. R. C.]
<sup>5</sup> Ver. 18. [Crit. Eds. generally give ἄνθρ. & καὶ with M. A. B*. P. & al.—E. R. C.]
<sup>6</sup> Ver. 19. [Odd. M. A. B*. give the article before πλάτων. [The reference, doubtless, is to the war predicted chs. xvi. 14; xvii. 14.—E. R. C.]
<sup>7</sup> Ver. 20. [Tisch., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) read καὶ μετ' αὐτοῦ with M. P.; Alf. brackets αὐτοῦ before μετ' with A.; Tisch. (1859) reads καὶ ὁ μετ' αὐτοῦ with B*.—E. R. C.]

b. The Millennial Kingdom. (Chap. xx. 1-5.)

- 1 And I saw an angel come down from [descending out of—ins. the] heaven, having the key of the bottomless [om. bottomless] pit [abyss] and a great chain in [upon] his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon, that [or the] old [ancient] serpent,<sup>8</sup> which [that] is the Devil [or Slanderer], and Satan [or the Adversary]<sup>9</sup>, and bound him
- 3 a thousand years, and cast him into the bottomless [om. bottomless] pit [abyss], and shut him up, and set a seal upon [om. him up, and set a seal upon—ins. and sealed over]<sup>10</sup> him, that he should [might] deceive [seduce or mislead (πλανήσῃ)]<sup>11</sup> the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled [finished]: and [om. and]<sup>12</sup> after that [these] he must be loosed a little season [time].
- 4 And I saw thrones, and they sat [ins. down]<sup>13</sup> upon them, and judgment was given unto them: and I saw the souls of them that were [had been] beheaded for [on account of] the witness of Jesus, and for [on account of] the word of God, and which [who] had not [om. had not] worshipped [ins. not] the beast [wild-beast], neither [nor yet]<sup>14</sup> his image, neither had [om. neither had—ins. and] received [ins. not] his [om. his—ins. the] mark upon their [the]<sup>15</sup> foreheads, or in [om. , or in—ins. and upon] their hands [hand]; and they lived and reigned with Christ a<sup>16</sup>
- 5 thousand years. But [om. But]<sup>17</sup> The rest of the dead lived not again [om. again]<sup>18</sup> until [till] the thousand years were [should be] finished. This is the first resurrection.

<sup>8</sup> Chap. xx., ver. 2. Cod. A. gives the nominative ὁ δράκων ὁ ἀρχαῖος. Codd. B. & al. give the accusative, which is more in accordance with the text. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. give the nom. with A.; the acc. is supported by B., & al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>9</sup> Ver. 2. Lach. [Alf., Treg.] and Tisch. [1859] give ὁ ὄντιν διάβολος καὶ ὁ σατανᾶς in acc. with A. B. & al. Cod. B. gives the article both times with perfect propriety. [Tisch. (8th Ed.) gives ὁ ὄντιν ὁ διάβολος καὶ ὁ σατανᾶς; the pronoun ὁ before ὄντιν, and also the article ὁ before διάβολος, with B.—E. R. C.]

<sup>10</sup> Ver. 3. Codd. M. A. B., & al. omit αὐτόν after ἐκλείπειν.

<sup>11</sup> Ver. 3. The Rec. πλανήσῃ is adopted instead of the reading πλανᾷ. [So read Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.), with M. A.; Gb., Sz., Tisch. (1859) give πλανᾷ with B.—E. R. C.]

<sup>12</sup> Ver. 3. [Crit. Eds. omit καὶ with M. A. B.—E. R. C.]

<sup>13</sup> Ver. 4. [The force of ἐκάθισαν can be presented only by the phrase sat down. Lange translates seated themselves.—E. R. C.]

<sup>14</sup> Ver. 4. [Crit. Eds. read εἰδὲ with M. A. B.—E. R. C.]

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 4. [Crit. Eds. generally omit αὐτοῖς after μέντοις in acc. with M. A. B.—E. R. C.]

<sup>16</sup> Ver. 4. The article καὶ before χίλια should be omitted. [The article occurs in B.—E. R. C.; it is omitted, however, by Crit. Eds. with M. A. & al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>17</sup> Ver. 5. [Lach., Alf., Tisch., omit the copula with A., Clem., Am., Fuld., Tol., Lips.; Treg. reads καὶ ὁ ἄνθρωπος with B.—E. R. C.]

<sup>18</sup> Ver. 5. [Crit. Eds. read εἴπωρ with A. B., Fuld., & al.; ἀνίσταται is without authority.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

a. The Judgment.

The judgment upon the Beast is accomplished, not in a manner purely of this world and in a form purely historical, like the judgment upon the Harlot, but in a more spiritual form, which is based upon the appearance of Christ from the other world, and which introduces the cosmical transition-form between time and eternity, the Millennial Kingdom.

The first point for consideration is that cosmical change itself, which proceeds from the sun and summons all the birds under the Heaven, all the forces of earthly metamorphosis, to consume all the dead flesh, the exanimate materials which shall be the issue of the great defeat of the Antichristian world—to consume them, in order to convert them into new life.

The second point is ethically mysterious. A decisive act of judgment takes the place of the battle contemplated by the Beast and the Kings. The two leaders and misleaders of the infatuated Antichristian host, the Beast and the False Prophet, are seized. That which seizes them seems to be a judgment of madness, for they are cast alive into the lake of fire burning with brimstone. For them, hell begins in this life; the fire of the fuel in which they have wrapped themselves, surrounds them on all sides—a flame of infinitely wild, fanatical agitation, doomed, in consequence of its absolute worthlessness, to form the pool of a mortal and dead stagnation—the unprogressive and eternally monotonous movement in a circle, or the fiery whirlpool of phrases and curses. In the case of the False Prophet, his guilt is once more noted, in explanation of his judgment; the most bitter reminiscences cling to the perfidy of his apostasy.

The third point is the judgment upon the followers of the Beast. They are not immediately cast into the fiery lake, but are for the time only killed. They are killed by the sword issuing from the mouth of Christ. They are morally judged and annihilated. What remains of them is a world of shadows, a sort of realm of the dead on the surface of this earth itself. All the birds become satiated with their flesh; i. e., all their sensuous and earthly possessions have lost their value and are decayed like the flesh strewed over a field of dead bodies. All the birds are satiated with their flesh; i. e., all the forces of metamorphosis are laboring for their transformation into a new shape. The fullness and manifoldness of the flesh to be devoured by the birds is vividly described in ver. 18. A complete end is to be made of all this.

Though it might with reason be said that because the sun is the symbol of the revelation of salvation, the Angel of judgment, standing in the sun as the angel of the whole salvatory development of revelation, indicates the hour when the work of the revelation of salvation is entirely completed, when the world-clock of the history of salvation in this world has run down—we must not overlook the fact that this moment must coincide with the perfect ripeness of our cosmical system, and that, consequently, a catastrophe must start from the centre of our cosmical system, as well as from the focus of our religious moral system. The harvest of the earth and the harvest of the Kingdom of God coincide, in accordance with the parallelism between spirit and nature, as is declared in the Eschatological Discourse of our Lord (Matt. xxiv. 29), although the Day of the Harvest, the Last Day, stretches out into an æon of a thousand years in a symbolical sense.

The birds of the heaven have, in typical preludes, often been invited to similar feasts upon the slaughter fields of history (Deut. xxviii. 26; Jer. vii. 33; xvi. 4; Ezek. xxxix. 17). In this fact there is not only an expression of irony concerning the vanity of earth's glory, but also an expression of the triumph of life over death. The Kingdom of God is acquainted with a transformation of matter; it is, however, of another and higher sort than that of which modern materialists talk; it does not lie under the curse of an eternal rotation, but is, on the contrary, under the law of the highest life, which changes this lower world of becoming into the eternal world of the City of God.

b. The Millennial Kingdom.

The prophecy of the thousand years of Christ's reign on earth is, in and for itself, a true pearl of Christian truth and knowledge, because it throws light upon an entire series of difficult Christian conceptions.

In the first place, it mediates an understanding of the Last Day, in that it shows how the latter expands into a Divine Day of a thousand years, in a symbolical sense, i. e., a specific æon; and thus it also casts light backwards upon the import of the days of creation.

Secondly, it mediates the understanding of a catastrophe which is to divide between this life and the life to come, time and eternity, the world of becoming and the world of consummation, in that it shows how the great and mighty contrast is harmonized by an æonic transition-period, in perfect accordance with the laws of life and vital development, as was clearly explained by Irenæus (see Dorner, Geschichte der Christologie, p. 243).

Especially does it mediate the fact of the resurrection, in that it represents a first resurrection as preceding the general resurrection, in harmony with the Apostle Paul (1 Cor. xv. 23). Thus the resurrection is characterized as an affair of growth or progress, conditioned upon spiritual circumstances. In accordance with this, we apprehend the fact that even in this life the believer advances towards the resurrection (Phil. iii. 11); that a resurrection-germ gradually develops within him (Rom. viii.); that the beginnings of the resurrection commence with his removal into the other world (2 Cor. vi.); that believers, in their ripening towards the resurrection, are, as blossoms of the general resurrection, a whole æon in advance of the rest of mankind—a fact which is also indicative of a higher form of resurrection; and that Christ must needs have been the firstling and the principle of the whole resurrection (Eph. i. 20).

Thus also the great antithesis is explained which must necessarily exist between the original transruption (Durchbruch) of sin or the curse in humanity and the final transruption (Durchbruch) of salvation and blessing. As, in the primitive age, pneumatic corruption was for a long time hindered in its outbreak by the resistance of healthy vital substance in the psychical, somatic and cosmical sphere, so in the New Testament time, pneumatic salvation in humanity has had to struggle long with the resistance of evil in the psychical, somatic and cosmical sphere. With the beginning of the Millennial Kingdom, however, begins the transruption of the blessing, in opposition to the old transruption of the curse.

Whilst, on the one hand, the communication of believing humanity with Heaven and its pure spirit-world is spiritually consummated by the Parousia of Christ, and destined to be also physically consummated, the communication between the spiritual sphere of earth and the Satanic sphere of the abyss, on the other hand, is discontinued;—in the first place, because the organic mediators of Satanic operations, the Beast and the False Prophet, as also Great Babylon, are judged and destroyed. Though at the close of the great transition-æon Satan again obtains a foot-hold on the earth, it is the last convulsive struggle of the serpent-nature manifesting itself in a brutal mutiny, which, for the very reason that it is veiled under no spiritual pretexts, like former Satanic efforts, but is the issue of consummate boldness and insolence, is blasted, not by Christological weapons, but by the fire of the Almighty from Heaven.

But of this great effulgent picture of the Millennial Kingdom, the lack of patience and hope in the Christian sphere (Rom. viii. 24, 25) has made the most manifold caricatures.

We distinguish the caricatures of real so-called Chiliasm; the caricatures of the spiritualistic denial of Chiliasm, even to the misapprehension of its primal type—according to this class, the Apocalypse itself is chiliasm, and the same character is finally attributed to the concrete Christian hope; finally, the caricatures of the Millennial Kingdom which were produced by placing it in the past or the present (see the Introduction).

True Chiliasm existed, so far as its element was concerned, long before the doctrinal forth-setting of the χίλια ἔτη, whence it takes its name. It is based upon the great family failing of all Judaizing Christianity; to such Christianity, the cross of Christ is still, more or less, an offence; to such Christianity, the redemption accomplished in the first Parousia of Christ is unsatisfying, and the centre of gravity of the redemption is consequently regarded as situate in the second Parousia, when Christ shall appear in His glory, and shall also promote His people to the state of glory. This Judaizing Christianity has no understanding of the principal completion of redemption in its depth and inwardness; hence, only in the final, peripheral redemption does it behold the true redemption. According as its ideals of glory are nobler or more base, its eschatological hopes assume a purer or an impurer form, so that a perfect scale of Chiliasms is formed, stretching from an anticipation of the sensuous glorification of Israel to the most carnal orgies in pre-celebration of the return of Christ. This is material Chiliasm proper. It has been rejuvenated in three Anglo-American sects of our own time. The element of truth which is perverted into falsehood and extravagance in it, is the Christian and Biblical expectation of the real, and in a religious sense ever near, coming of Christ.*

But material Chiliasm early sought and found a formal supplement, in that it boldly converted the words of the Apostle Peter (2 Pet. iii. 8)—words which, spoken with reference to Ps. cx. 4, were designed as a counteraction against chiliastic impatience—into a chronological article of doctrine, in which it believed that it had discovered the key to the computation of the time of Christ's coming. A Judaizing presupposition was here involved—viz., that God's historical work of salvation would arrive at completion in a Divine week, reflected in the human week. To this was added later the further assumption, that at the first coming of Christ the world had been in existence for about four thousand years. Upon these bases men reckoned, and determined the time of the second Advent. Here another arbitrary assumption arose, converting the Millennial Kingdom into the real Sabbath of God, though the latter is to last forever, whilst the Apocalyptic æon appears as a mere transition-period. In many respects, this formal Chiliasm, whence the system has its name, was subservient to material Chiliasm; in many other respects, however, especially in more modern Theology, formal Chiliasm, as a theological subtlety, detached itself entirely from material tendencies, although it continued to be afflicted with the material infirmity of a somewhat superficial and extravagant conception of the history of salvation.

In face of all these Judaizing conceptions, the spiritualistic-ethnical conception has always considered itself bound, not only to combat true, sensuous Chiliasm, but also to controvert, or at least cast a shade upon, its assumptions—the expectation of the real coming of Christ, for instance; and it has especially felt itself obliged to cast the reproach of Chiliasm upon the putative originator of the same, the Apocalypse. And this, particularly, on account of the thousand years, the χίλια έτη. The Tales of a Thousand and One Nights might, with about equal justice, be denominated a chiliastic composition.

A turbid mixture of both one-sided views is formed by the placing of the Millennial Kingdom in the course of Church History. In reference to this mixed form, we can distinguish two species. Mediæval Catholicism beheld in the Romish Church the actualized Kingdom of God itself, especially in respect of the papal system. The Old Lutheran orthodox dating back of the Millennial Kingdom into the Middle Ages—a view recently revived by Hengstenberg—was a fruit of the stunting of Eschatology in the era of the Reformation, especially in adherence to utterances of Luther's. We here refer partly to the history of the interpretation of the Apocalypse, as already presented by us, partly to the following exegesis in detail.

The singular opinion of Stier and others, that there is to be a double Parousia, one at the beginning and the other at the end of the Millennial Kingdom, seems desirous of conjoining so-called "Chiliasm" with the older orthodoxy.*

With the judgment upon the spiritual motive powers of the Beast, with the destruction of his powerful lies, Satan has lost his foot-hold within the infatuated human race—his right of naturalization, we might say, in this earthly sphere. He is therefore cast into the abyss. An Angel descends from Heaven to execute God's sentence upon him. The office of this Angel reminds us of the offices of Michael; his name, however, is not mentioned. He has the key to the abyss—not simply to the pit of the abyss; this key he has in order that he may shut the abyss, i. e. entirely shut off Satanic influences from men for the time of the thousand years. This power, however, is connected with the moral fact that all the spiritual pretences contained in the Satanic illusive promise, eritis sicut deus, are destroyed by the beautiful reality of the great appearance of the Kingdom. All that Satan falsely promised concerning the path of impatience and guilt, is here attained in the path of pious patience: fullness of blessing, happiness, glory of life of every sort. Thus Satan has come to the end of his Latin, and needs, agreeably to the serpent's tenacity of life, a thousand years to contrive the last desperate stroke of senseless heaven-storming—a procedure which is reported to have been the first act of the revolted Titans of Grecian story.† And for this last rebellion a further existence is granted him, for the judgment upon him must be complete. His existence during the thousand years, however, consists in a sojourn in the abyss, betwixt death and damnation (the Realm of the Dead [Hades] and Gehenna), fastened to the chain which the Angel brings with him from Heaven. He has now made an open show of his entire nature, and is therefore called by his various forms and titles, except that the appellation of Accuser is no longer given to him—although even this name is contained in the διάβολος. The condemnatory sentence is executed in four acts which follow each other in rapid succession. He is seized, cast chained (not chained to any object external to himself, but hand to hand, 2 Pet. ii. 4) into the abyss, shut in, and sealed. The seal is the symbolic expression for the appointed Divine doom upon him, and is more powerful in its effect than the seal with which the grave of Jesus was sealed. The purpose of all this is that he may not prematurely seduce the heathen, the remnants of heathenism which still constitute the old border of the new world that is in process of becoming.

* [See Note on the Future Advent of Christ, pp. 339 seq.—E. R. C.]

† [The slowness of invention which Lange here attributes to the Devil is more in harmony with the character attributed to that personage in numerous popular German tales,—in which he appears as a sort of Deutscher Michel, being frequently outwitted and imposed upon by sharp practitioners of earth—than with the exalted intellect with which we usually conceive of him as endowed.—Tr.]

* [See foot-notes on pages 3, 58, and 62.—E. R. C.]

This, then, is the negative side of the Millennial Kingdom. The positive side appears in three features: [1] The first resurrection, [2] the first judgment of restitution, [3] the first period of imperishable triumphal rest and rejoicing and unfading glory in the fellowship of Christ. The first resurrection is represented as a special reward of the faithfulness of Christ's martyrs—above all, the martyrs of the last time, who have not worshipped the Beast; hence these latter constitute a particular class by the side of those slain at an earlier period. They stand in the fore-ground, as representatives of the Victorious Church (see 1 Cor. xv. 23); but we must recollect that this Church is itself of greater extent than here appears. For Christ has come with the hosts of Heaven, according to ch. xix. 14; according to the Epistle of Jude (ver. 14). He is to come with His myriads of saints. With the sphere of this resurrection, the full liberation of the life-power on the sanctified earth is expressed (see Is. lxx. 18 sqq.). The second sphere is the sphere of the preliminary judgment. For the Seer, this occupies the foreground, since Christian longing cries for the removal of all the shame and wrong which, in this world, weigh upon the name of Christ and Christians; hence the Seer first sees the thrones of judgment set. If we consider that the judgment upon the Antichristian host has already been held, and that the last judgment upon the last revolt, which is as yet but germinating deep in the darkness, cannot be anticipated, there results, as a middle domain of judgment, an instruction (Pädagogik) and discipline exercised by Heaven upon the human race, as extant at the Parousia, and thus sharing in the cosmical metamorphosis. It is that process of elimination and sanctification which must take place before the perfect appearing of the City of God on this earth; it is a judgment of peace, in accordance with Ps. lxxii. and Matt. xix. 28. The third sphere is the living and reigning with Christ in the glory of a spiritual life which dominates and clarifies all creaturely essence—the organization of earth for its union with Heaven. There is no trace here of an external restoration of Israel in the sense of a privileged people of God, or of a restoration of the Old Testament cultus in an inconceivable New Testament sublimation; unless we should apply the subsequent words, they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and the words the beloved City, to the support of such a theory—in which case the symbolism of the expression must necessarily be discarded. We cannot suppose that there is to be a two-fold heavenly Jerusalem; and the one true Jerusalem is still in Heaven, whence, according to ch. xxi. 2, it does not descend to earth until the end of the thousand years.

[THEORIES CONCERNING THE MILLENNIUM.*]

By the American Editor.

[The word Millennium means, etymologically, a thousand years, and may with propriety be used in reference to any period of that length. By common consent, however, the specific term THE MILLENNIUM is employed to denote the period mentioned in chap. xx. 4–7. The theories on this subject that have been held in the Church are divisible into two classes—the Preterist and the Futurist—the former of which set forth that the origin of the Millennial period was in the past; the latter, that it is in the future. Each of these classes consists of two or three generic theories, the respective upholders of which differ amongst themselves on many specific points. It is proper to remark that in the following statement the writer has been greatly indebted to the work of Elliott.

a. Preterist Theories.

I. The Augustinian. This theory is so styled as it was first propounded by the great Augustine in his Civitate Dei, xx. 7–9. It has been upheld in all ages of the Church since its first promulgation, and in modern times by Wordsworth. Its main elements are—1. The period began at the first Advent, when Satan was bound and cast out of the hearts of true Christians and their reign over him (regnum militie) began: 2. The Beast symbolizes the wicked world, and its image a hypocritical profession: 3. The first resurrection is that of dead souls to spiritual life,† a resurrection continued in every true conversion throughout the period: 4. The thousand years is a symbolical expression of completeness appropriately indicating the entire period of the Messiah's reign:‡ 5. This period to be followed by a new persecution of the Saints under Antichrist; the destruction of whose hosts by fire from heaven would be followed by the universal resurrection of the good and bad, and the general judgment; after which will begin, in heaven, the glorious period of the New Jerusalem.

II. The Grotian. This theory was first propounded by Genebrard in the 16th Century; it found its chief advocates, however, in Grotius and Hammond.§ It differs principally from the preceding in that it makes the reign of Saints to be, not that of the individual Christian in the domain of his own heart, but that of the Church in the world. The elements of this theory are—1. By the Beast is denoted Pagan Rome, whose destruction under Constantine was predicted in chap. xix.: 2. The power of Satan was then broken, as was manifested in the establishment of the Christian religion as the religion of the State: 3. The Millennial period began in that

* [The Am. Ed. deems it inexpedient to continue in this portion of the work his "Abstract of Views."—E. R. C.]

† [Wordsworth explains the ἐκείνη of ver. 4 as the glorified life with Christ after martyrdom, and the ἀδελφοί of ver. 5 as spiritual life begun in baptism and completed at the death of the body.—E. R. C.]

‡ [Augustine himself, probably, held the view that the thousand years were literal, to terminate with the sixth milli of the world's existence.—E. R. C.]

§ [A similar theory, indeed the same with specific variations, was propounded by Prof. Bush in a work on the Millennium published in New York in 1832.—E. R. C.]

establishment, it was continued through a thousand years to the 14th Century, and closed with the attack on Christendom by the Ottoman Turks: 4. Gog and Magog denote the Mohammedan power, at the close of whose gradual destruction is to take place—the universal resurrection, the general judgment, and the eternal blessedness of the Saints in heaven.*

III. The Gipsian. This view, suggested by Mr. Gipps in 1831, makes the beginning of the period synchronous with the rise of Papal Antichrist. It represents (according to Elliott) "those who lived and reigned with Christ to be men endowed with the spirit of the early Antipagan martyrs, now revived, as it were, to testify for Christ: after which, at the end of the Beast's and witnesses' concurrent (!) Millennial reign, the second and glorious resurrection of the rest of the dead is to be fulfilled in the Jews' conversion and restoration."

b. Futurist Theories.

IV. The Pre-Millennial. This theory, as to its general features, is the most ancient. It was held by the primitive Fathers, and has been taught with various specific modifications in all ages of the Church. Amongst its most prominent English speaking advocates, in modern times, are Mede, Caryll, Gill, Noell, Elliott, the Bickersteths, the Bonars, Alford, Lord, etc. The elements are that—1. The Millennium is to begin in a glorious personal advent of Christ, immediately after the destruction of Antichrist: 2. The binding of Satan is to be "an absolute restriction of the powers of hell from tempting, deceiving, or injuring mankind:" 3. The duration is to be one thousand years (literal or symbolical): 4. The resurrection is to be a literal resurrection of Saints of the preceding æon (either the martyrs, or the specially faithful, or the entire body): 5. The entire government of the earth is to be exercised by Christ and His risen and transformed Saints, the latter being ὡς ἄγγελοι (Mark xii. 25): 6. Under this government, all false religion having been put down, the Jews and all nations having been converted to Christ, Jerusalem being made the universal capital, righteousness, peace and external prosperity shall prevail throughout the earth: 7. At the close of this period, Satan having been loosed, there shall be a great apostasy, followed by (1) the destruction of the apostates, (2) the universal resurrection of the remaining dead of all dispensations, (3) the general judgment, (4) the consummation.

The principal variation amongst those who hold this theory are as to—1. The continuance of Christ on earth;—some holding that it is to be only for the establishment of the Kingdom; others that it is to continue more or less uninterruptedly throughout the whole period: 2. The duration, some holding that the thousand years are literal; others that they are symbolic: 3. The subjects of the resurrection;—some holding that they are all the saints; others that they are only the martyrs; others still, that they are the specially faithful, including the martyrs: 4. The relation of the Jews to the other nations;—some contending that they are to occupy a position of superiority; others denying or modifying this opinion.

V. The Post-Millennial. This theory, which is the one most generally adopted by English speaking Protestant Theologians, was first fully developed by Whitby.* Faber, Brown and Barnes have been amongst the most prominent of its advocates. The scheme as set forth by Whitby is as follows:—

"1. I believe that, after the fall of Antichrist, there shall be such a glorious state of the Church, by the conversion of the Jews to the Christian faith, as shall be to it life from the dead; that it shall then flourish in peace and plenty, in righteousness and holiness, and in a pious offering; that then shall begin a glorious and undisturbed reign of Christ over both Jew and Gentile, to continue a thousand years during the time of Satan's binding; and that, as John the Baptist was Elias, because he came in the spirit and power of Elias,—so shall this be the church of martyrs, and of those who had not received the mark of the Beast, because of their entire freedom from all doctrines and practices of the Antichristian Church, and because the spirit and purity of the times of the primitive martyrs shall return. And therefore—

1. I agree with the patrons of the Millennium in this, that I believe Satan hath not yet been bound a thousand years, nor will he be so bound till the time of the calling of the Jews, and the time of St. John's Millennium.

2. I agree with them in this, that the true Millennium will not begin till the fall of Antichrist; nor will the Jews be converted till that time, the idolatry of the Roman Church being one great obstacle of their conversion.

3. I agree both with the modern and ancient Millennarists, that then shall be great peace and plenty, and great measures of knowledge and of righteousness in the whole Church of God.

I therefore only differ from the ancient Millennarists in three things:

1. In denying Christ's personal reign upon earth during this thousand years; and in this both Dr. Burnet and Mr. Mede expressly have renounced their doctrine.†

* [Elliott writes: "Vitringa, however, who alludes to Whitby's as a work just published, makes brief citations from two earlier writers, Conrad of Mantua and Carolus Gallus, as expressive of the same general view."—E. R. C.]

† [Bush judiciously remarks on this declaration of Whitby: "This may be questioned. These writers have modified the creed of the ancients on this subject, without renouncing it." The views of Mede, as expressed by himself, are as follows:

"What the quality of this reign should be, which is so singularly differenced from the reign of Christ hitherto, is neither safe nor easy to determine, further than that it should be the reign of our Saviour's victory over His enemies, wherein Satan being bound up from deceiving the nations any more, till the time of His reign be fulfilled, the Church should consequently enjoy a most blissful peace and happy security from the heretical apostasies and calamitous sufferings of former times; but here (if any where) the known shipwrecks of those who have been too venturesome should make us most wary and careful, that we admit nothing into our imaginations which may cross or impeach any catholic tenet of the Christian faith, as also to beware of gross and carnal conceits of Epicurean happiness misbecoming the spiritual purity of Saints. If we conceit any delights, let them be spiritual. The presence of Christ in this Kingdom will no doubt be glorious and evident, yet I dare not so much as imagine (which some ancients seem to have thought) that it will be a visible converse on earth. Yet, we grant, He will appear and be visibly revealed from heaven; especially for the calling and gathering of His ancient people, for whom in the days of old He did so many wonders." Mede believed that Christ would appear literally and gloriously for the establishment of the Millennium, and that in a special sense He would reign throughout the period. In so believing, he held the essential elements of the pre-millennial hypothesis. —E. R. C.]

* [The elder Turretin, P. Mastricht, J. Marckius, Lightfoot, Brightman, and Usher, all teach that the Millennium is past. The continental Theologians suggest as possible eras of its beginning, without deciding which is correct, the Incarnation, the Crucifixion, the Resurrection, the destruction of Jerusalem, the era of Constantine. Marckius thinks that it may have begun in increased measure at each one of these in succession. These Theologians seem to regard the binding as a general weakening of the power of Satan. Lightfoot adopts the view that the origin is to be placed in the first proclamation of the gospel to the Gentiles by Paul and Barnabas, and that the binding refers, not to the power of Satan over the Church, but to his influence over the nations. He writes: "There is not a word here of the devil's binding that he should not disturb the Church, but of the devil's binding that he should not deceive the nations." These all agree that the duration of the period was (or was about) one thousand literal years.—E. R. C.]

2. Though I dare not absolutely deny what they all positively affirm, that the City of Jerusalem shall be then rebuilt, and the converted Jews shall return to it, because this probably may be collected from those words of Christ, Jerusalem shall be broken down till the time of the Gentiles is come in, Luke xxi. 24, and all the prophets seem to declare the Jews shall then return to their own land, Jer. xxxi. 38-40; yet do I confidently deny what Barnabas and others of them do contend for, viz. that the temple of Jerusalem shall be then built again; for this is contrary not only to the plain declaration of St. John, who saith, I saw no temple in this new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 22, whence I infer there is to be no temple in any part of it; but to the whole design of the Epistle to the Hebrews, which is to show the dissolution of the temple-service, for the weakness and unprofitableness of it; that the Jewish tabernacle was only a figure of the true and the more perfect tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man; and the Jewish sanctuary only a worldly sanctuary, a pattern, and a figure of the heavenly one into which Christ our High Priest is entered, Heb. viii. 2; ix. 2, 11, 23, 24. Now, such a temple, such a sanctuary, and such service, cannot be suitable to the most glorious and splendid times of the Christian Church; and therefore the Apostle saith, The Lord God omnipotent, and the Lamb, shall be their Temple.

3. I differ both from the ancient and the modern Millenarists, as far as they assert that this shall be a reign of such Christians as have suffered under the heathen persecutors, or by the rage of Antichrist; making it only a reign of the converted Jews, and of the Gentiles then flowing in to them, and uniting into one Church with them."

With the above presentation, post-millennarians, in the main, agree. The chief point of difference is as to the return of the Jews to their own land—some holding, with Whitby, that it is to take place; others, denying it. There are also differences as to—1. The nature of the Second Resurrection implied in xx. 5,—some, with Vitrings, identifying it with the general resurrection of vers. 12, 18; others, as Whitby, Faber and Brown, explaining it as the uprising of Antichristian principles in the confederacy of Gog and Magog: 2. The New Jerusalem,—some, with Whitby, regarding it as relating to the Millennial condition of the Church; others, as Brown and Faber, understanding by it the post-millennial condition of blessedness and glory.—E. B. C.]

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ver. 17. One angel standing in the sun.—"In the sun, because from this stand-point, fitted, as it also was, to the glory of the Angel, he can best call to the birds, flying ἐν μεσσημῇ (Ewald I., De Wette, Hengstenberg, Ebrard, Volkmar)." DÜSTERDIECK. If this were the motive for the position of the Angel, he might much better have taken his stand in the moon. His position in the sun has an import relative at once to the Kingdom of God and to the Cosmos. The sun, as revelation, is the principle of the spirit-realm of this present life; the sun, as a celestial body, is the domain of this present Cosmos (see SYN. VIEW; comp. Rev. i. 16; Matt. xxiv. 29). Come, be gathered together.—See the citations above; comp. also Matt. xxiv. 28. According to Düsterdieck, the slain λοιμοὶ of ver. 21 are the whole mass of the inhabitants of the earth. But whence, then, would come the mutineers at the end of the thousand years? The Eastern kings should also be distinguished from the ten kings. Gog and Magog have not yet joined the conflict. The λοιμοὶ are, manifestly, the Antichristian host, from which the mass of earth's inhabitants are still to be distinguished. Unto the great supper of God.—Antithesis to the Marriage-Supper of the Lamb. At the former, all the flesh of the fleshly-minded becomes a prey to the birds; at the latter, believers, as heirs of God, become heirs of all things.

Ver. 18. That ye may eat.—The prospective complete destruction of the hostile host is set forth in detail.

Ver. 19. And I saw the wild-beast.—The war-making, on the part of the Beast, is entirely of this world; it is a march, a drawing up in order of battle, the combatants being provided, perhaps, with the most terrible material weapons. But, opposed to them, stands an army of God, partially and predominantly as a host of spirits. And yet more, the σπάρτυμα of Christ stands contrasted, in its perfect unity, with the internally confused and divided σπάρτυματα of the Beast. The attempt at an external conflict is immediately frustrated. The prophetic chiaroscuro resting upon this double array and battle cannot be brushed aside. It may only be gathered from the nature of the armies, that upon the side of Christ all the dynamic forces of spiritual humanity are concentrated, whilst upon the side of Antichrist demonic excitement may summon to its aid all the contrivances of craft and violence.

Ver. 20. And the wild-beast was taken.—In what way, is reserved for the future to make known. Since there is no mention made of any preceding battle, a spiritual process of dissolution is pre-supposed as taking place in the hostile army—especially a separation between the ring-leaders and the Antichristian host, mediated by Divine terrors. And with him the false prophet.—In the crisis of the disunion between Babylon and the Beast, the False Prophet has espoused the side of the Beast; a view which is prepared by the general description in ch. xiii. It is a result of a failure to distinguish between the general judgment-picture of chap. xiii. and the three subsequent pictures of judgment, when Ebrard seeks to distinguish between the pseudo-prophet "in the sixth world-kingdom" and an analogous lying power in "the eighth world-power" (p. 507).

Cast alive into the lake of the fire.—See chap. xx. 10, 14 and chap. xxi. 8. It is equally incorrect to apprehend Gehenna or the lake of fire as a mere internal condition of the damned, as to apprehend it purely as a cosmical region of punishment. A remark which is true concerning the Apocalyptic Heaven—viz., that it has the import of a spiritual region as well as a corresponding cosmical region—applies also, in antithesis to Heaven, in the first place to Hades, in the second place to the Abyss, and in the third place to Gehenna. Hengstenberg advances a marvellous view. "The term alive, without bodily death (comp. ver. 21), confirms the idea that the Beast and the False Prophet are not human individuals, but purely ideal forms. A human individual cannot enter hell alive." Against which Ebrard: "If the Beast and the lying Prophet be emblems of mere powers, we do not rightly know what the emblematic trait of being cast alive into the lake of fire can mean," etc. "In Rev. xx. 12 (comp. John v. 29) the wicked are raised from their graves and re-united to their bodies expressly to the intent that they may be able to endure the flames of eternal torment (ch.

xx. 15) in their bodily natures as well as in their spirits." But, little congruity as there is between purely ideal forms and the lake of fire and brimstone, there is as little necessity to make the possession of a body a preliminary condition of Gehenna suffering. When the lake of fire is called "the second death" (chap. xx. 14), this fearful conception stretches, on the one hand, beyond ideal forms, and on the other, beyond a corporeal suffering by fire. De Wette judiciously remarks, in respect of the distinctions between the punishment of the two Antichristian forms and the punishment of Satan: "They are judged earlier than Satan—who, chap. xx. 8, is bound but for a thousand years—because their existence and activity have attained their end, whilst, on the other hand, Satan, by virtue of the course of development of things, still has a root in the world and must again make his appearance." De Wette has, moreover, not apprehended the term alive as corporeally as Hengstenberg most strangely takes it in express connection with ideal forms. That the Beast and the False Prophet may be apprehended as collective personalities, is not to be denied; but neither is it to be denied that they converge into symbolically significant units. In the statement that they were cast alive into the lake of fire, it is doubtless intimated that they could fall under the judgment of Gehenna whilst still on earth. "Fire and brimstone," remarks Hengstenberg, "as designations of hell torments, have already appeared in chap. xiv. 10, 11. The lake of fire and brimstone is first mentioned here, and then again spoken of in chap. xx. 10, 14, 15; xxi. 8. As the fire and brimstone are suggestive of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (comp. the remarks on chap. xiv. 10), the inference is obvious that the Dead Sea is referred to as the earthly reflection of hell." The term γέεννα, he further observes, is found neither in the Apocalypse nor the Gospel of John, whilst the first three Gospels have it. Ebrard remarks, in opposition to this, that though the Dead Sea owed its origin to a rain of fire and brimstone, it does not burn with brimstone, but consists of brackish water. As it is as little possible to doubt the identity of the two terms, lake (or, to use a word which seems to us more applicable, pool) of fire and Gehenna, as it is to doubt the distinction between Gehenna and Sheol, our next task must be to inquire into the origin of the idea of Gehenna. See Comm. on Matthew, p. 114 [Am. Ed.]; Mark, p. 90 [Am. Ed.]. If the Dead Sea were the foundation of this figurative principle of doctrine, distinct traces of the fact would necessarily be found in the Old Testament. Besides the fire of Gehinnom, we have, Isa. xxx. 33, a stream of brimstone, equally without reference to the Dead Sea. Comp. the article TOPHER in the Lexicons; also in Winer; see also Ps. xi. 6. The marshes and sloughs by the side of the river of salvation (Ezek. xlvii. 11) have also, doubtless, contributed to the completeness of the image. That the figure as a whole is an original idea of John's, as a pool of fire, is evidenced by the opposite figure of the crystal sea. Moreover, the Dead Sea could not well have been employed as an image of hell, without giving rise to the idea that the people of Sodom fell under the judgment of damnation on the very occasion of their destruction—an idea which the Spirit of Scripture has avoided presenting. Comp. Matt. xi. 23; 1 Pet. iii. 19; see our Introduction, p. 34. [See the Excursus on HADES, p. 364sq.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 21. And the remnant.—The Antichristian host itself—not the whole remaining human race. They were slain—i. e., according to Hengstenberg and Ebrard, they were not cast body and soul into the lake of fire, but they suffered only bodily death, whilst their souls went into Hades. "They are sent into hell," observes Hengstenberg, "only at the universal judgment (comp. chap. xx. 12–15), that is, if they do not in the meantime, whilst they are in the intermediate state, attain unto salvation (1 Pet. iii. 19, 20) as those who have committed only the sin against the Son of Man, and not that against the Holy Ghost." It is questionable, however, whether the slaying of the whole Antichristian host should be apprehended literally or not. They are slain with the sword of the One sitting upon the horse.—As this sword goeth forth out of His mouth, we should, apprehending the words literally, have to assume that they were all stricken down by the word of Christ, like Ananias and Sapphira (Acts v.). But if this were the case, it would be necessary that they should all have passed through the spiritual experiences of those two. This, however, is by no means supposable; on the contrary, great masses of them are seduced, infatuated, pitiable people—portions of them having even been impressed into the service of the Beast and the False Prophet. We therefore assume that they are slain in that they are, in a social respect, rendered absolutely null by that new order of things in the Millennial Kingdom which is instituted by the word of Christ, and, furthermore, that all those properties of theirs 'hat have become utterly valueless (their flesh) become subjects of a metamorphosis in order to their incorporation into the new order of things. According to Düsterdieck, the slaying by the sword of Christ is but significant of a perfectly toil-less conflict [on the part of Christ]. According to Ebrard, the sword slays them as the word of omnipotence.

De Wette remarks on the entire section: "This grand picture of the downfall of Antichristianity has been much weakened by the historical exegeses." Grotius finds here depicted the abolishment of idolatry by the Christian emperors of Rome, and refers ver. 18 to the fall of Julian in the Persian war. The interpretation of Wetstein is the most petty and insignificant: "Vespasianus cum familia in Domitiano extincta, uti prius familia Cæsarum." Ulrich refers this judgment to the unnatural death of persecutors of the Christians. Herder: "The leaders of the insurrection, Simon, the son of Gorion, and John, met with the fate here depicted." For additional particulars see Düsterdieck, p. 645. From amongst other items we quote the following: "Corn. à-Lapide cites authors who relate concerning Luther that he killed himself, and that his funeral was attended not only by a multitude of ravens, but also by devils that came from Holland." .

CHAP. XX. 1-5.

The Millennial Kingdom.

This section is by Düsterdieck assigned to the third judgment. Manifestly, however, the Millennial Kingdom is the result of the second judgment. Apart from this, Düsterdieck has a remark which is well worthy of notice—viz.: that the order of succession of the individual acts of judgment is the reverse of that in which the Antichristian forms appear. Sequence of the manifestations of Antichristianity: Satan, the Beast with the False Prophet, the Woman. Sequence of the judgments: The Woman, the Beast with the False Prophet, Satan himself. This antithetic parallelism must not, however, be reckoned amongst the organic relations of the Apocalypse, unless we behold the revelation of evil in the corruption of the Woman sketched in the features of the False Prophet; a view which does, indeed, pass muster, inasmuch as the False Prophet in the form of a lamb seems to represent the Woman herself.

Ver. 1. I saw an angel descending out of, etc.—Opposed to the spirit-form of Satan there must be a spirit-form from Heaven, just as Christ, the God-man, stood opposed to Antichrist, the Beast. This spirit-form of the Angel has been most diversely interpreted (as Christ; the Holy Ghost; the Apostolate; Constantine the Great; Calixtus II.; Innocent III.; see De Wette, p. 188). As the fallen angel or star of remorse ([Verzweiflungsbüsse] chap. ix.) opens the pit of the abyss, so it is the Angel of consummate evangelic peace, the Angel of the developed bliss of justification, of blessedness in the Parousia of Christ, who, descending from Heaven, can cast Satan into the abyss, because he has destroyed all his points of appliance in humanity, with the exception of the one consisting of the suppressed rancor of mob-nature, which finally breaks out in Gog and Magog. We have here, therefore, an angelic form representative of the polemical victorious operation of the peace of Christ—a Michaelic form. This is evident from the further fact that he has the key of the abyss.—In accordance with chap. i. 18, Christ has the key of death and the realm of the dead [Hades]. We have already seen that the abyss forms the deepest border-region of the realm of the dead; it is contiguous to Gehenna, which latter is not ready for the reception of its guests until the time of the universal judgment. Consequently, Christ possesses the key to the abyss likewise, and hence it is evident that the Angel is significant of a fundamental form of the operation of Christ. And a great chain.—The concrete means of fettering Satan—and that, completely, and for a very long time. This is the power of the Spirit of grace and truth, making the genius of malice and falsehood powerless to injure for a whole æon. The key to the pit of the abyss (chap. ix. 1) must not be confounded with the key to the abyss simply. Nothing is more erroneous than, with Ewald, to identify the fallen star (chap. ix. 1sq.) with this Angel. We translate in his hand, instead of on his hand (ἐν τῇ), for it is not good German to say, a chain on his hand.* As a matter of course, the chain is not all contained within the closed hand.

Ver. 2. And he laid hold on the dragon.—Great and irresistible turn of sentiments in the spirit-world, concretely expressed—the more so since the consummate spiritual operations likewise become real dynamic operations. That [or The] ancient serpent.—See SYN. VIEW. Comp. chap. xii. 9. And bound him a thousand years.—The thousand years are a symbolic number, denoting the æon of transition. The millennial binding of Satan is the preliminary condition of the Millennial Kingdom. Those who deny the demonic origin of sin, deriving sin exclusively from the sensual or material nature of man, here meet with a mighty contradiction to their theory. But, on the other hand, those who refer all evil to Satan cannot explain the loosing of the latter.

Ver. 8. And cast him into the abyss.—Chap. ix. 1; xi. 7; xvii. 8. A more general idea is presented in 2 Pet. ii. 4, where it is declared that the fallen angels have been cast down to Tartarus, in chains of darkness, held fast or preserved unto judgment. For, first, Tartarus is a more general term for the whole sub-terrestrial region; secondly, the term rapaptoiv is indicative of a hurling away with a constant tendency toward Tartarus; thirdly, the bonds of darkness are those self-perplexings, self-enchainings of evil which impel toward Tartarus; fourthly, the judgment is in prospective here only as a certain future. The various statements concerning the abode of the Devil and bad spirits may readily, if pressed as to the letter of the Scripture, be involved in contradictions, as has been evidenced by Strauss, for instance (see the author's Positive Dogmatik, p. 572). But as we must needs distinguish between the dwelling-places and spheres of operation of spirits, so likewise is it necessary to distinguish between the different stages of their history. The abyss may indeed be regarded as the proper dwelling-place of Satan and the fallen angels, inasmuch as it, as the specific region of God-estranged rancor and grief, or despair, denotes the transition from the realm of the dead to hell, or from the sadness of death to damnation. The realm of the dead is only more tormented through the operations of demons than the human world (brooks [E. V.: floods] of Belial [Ps. xviii. 4]); but hell is prepared for the Devil and his angels as the region of final punitive suffering (Matt. xxv. 41). But as Satan is not at home with himself, neither does he stay at home (Jude 6); by nature he is ex-cursive and rambling (Job ii. 2), given to appearing and disappearing, fond of roving about (hence Azazel)—i. e., modes of existence and spheres of operation are to be distinguished especially here. In this relation, Scripture distinguishes Heaven as the pure domain of spirits (Job i. and ii.; Rev. xii.; Luke x. 18); earth, especially the atmospheric sphere, as the sphere of sympathetic and antipathetic world-moods,—and in reference to this sphere of operation, it distinguishes the forms of the serpent, or hypocritical craft (Matt. iv.; 2 Cor. xi. 14),

(ἐν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτοῦ—upon his hand) is preserved. The idea seems to be that the chain was, not held in the hand, but looped over it.—E. B. C.]

* [In the text of the translation, the form of the Greek and the roaring lion of terroristic might (1 Pet. v. 8; Rev. xiii.). The import of the judgment upon Antichrist is that Satan is cast entirely out of the sphere of earth for a thousand years, and shut up in his true home, the abyss.

Shut and sealed over him.—Expressive of the inviolable Divine determination, manifest in the equally unshakable Divine operation. Likewise an antitype of the impotent sealing of Christ's grave on the part of hell and the world.—After these he must be loosed.—This also is a Divine decree—a decree, however, conditioned by the ethical design of causing the remnants of evil, of heathenism, in the sphere of Christ's Kingdom, to appear, and thereby destroying them.—A little time.—Little from the stand-point of triumphant faith. See ch. xvii. 10.

Vers. 4, 5. Fundamental Traits of the Millennial Kingdom.

And I saw thrones.—According to Düsterdieck, the θρόνοι "do not come under consideration as kings' thrones (Eichhorn, Züllig), but only as judges' seats (Heinrich, Ewald, De Wette, Hengstenberg, etc.)," as is shown (he declares) by the prefigurement of Daniel vii. 9,* 22, and the κρίμα, expressly mentioned in our passage also. But what then is the force of the words: They shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him [ver. 6]? Christ Himself also is amongst the sitters on the thrones as their centre. Moreover, the κρίμα can be understood only in the Old Testament sense, as significant of a princely judicial rule, since the special judgment upon the Antichristian world has been previously executed. It is highly characteristic that the thrones constitute the foreground of the picture. They are significant of the beginning of the Church Triumphant in this world—the visible appearance of the Kingdom of God. Distinct as is the presentment of the thrones themselves, of their occupants it is indefinitely said: and they sat down [seated themselves] upon them. Who are meant by they? According to Beza, Eichhorn, Ebrard, et al., the martyrs mentioned further on; this view is opposed by De Wette and Düsterdieck. The context also is against it. First, John saw the thrones and those who seated themselves upon them, and then the beheaded ones who revived and reigned with Christ. We must not forget, however, that Christ has not come alone from Heaven, but that He was accompanied by a chosen army (ch. xix. 14). Without doubt, the occupants of the thrones are those who form the peculiar escort of the Lamb (ch. xiv. 4); who even in this world, as sealed ones, constituted the kernel of the Church of God (ch. vii.), the proper centre of which is formed by God's men of revelation [i. e. God's revealers], particularly the Apostles (ch. xxi. 14). In considering their position toward Christ, however, something more than mere martyr faithfulness or even mere historic dignity as Prophets or Apostles comes in view—namely, the endowment and destination of the Father, the special electness lying at the base of the special glory.

* [The E. V. has here (Dan. vii. 9) "till the thrones were cast down," the Germ. has "bis das Stühle geworfen wurden,"—until seats (or thrones) were cast.—Ta.]

These mysterious co-regents of Christ (comp. also Matt. v. 9) have been very variously interpreted (God and Christ; the Angels; the Apostles; the Martyrs; the saints, Dan. vii. 22; the twenty-four Elders [De Wette and Düsterdieck]; Hengstenberg, "the twelve Apostles and the twelve Patriarchs"). Here, however, we have no longer to do with forms that are partially typical [the Elders]; we will simply say: those who in a special sense have been inwardly endowed as joint-heirs with Christ, seated themselves upon the thrones.

And judgment was given unto them.—This κρίμα cannot possibly refer to vers. 1-3 and ch. xix. 20, 21, as Ebrard maintains, since in those passages the sentence of judgment was decided by war, and the execution of judgment was a very brief process. We should hardly expect that Antichrist or Satan himself would have to be sentenced through a trial by jury.

The judgment may be regarded primarily as a two-fold decision—a decision concerning those who are still living (who were not in the Antichristian army), as to whether their lives shall be preserved throughout the thousand years; and a decision concerning those who were beheaded, as to how far they are worthy of being called to the first resurrection. Nevertheless, the antithesis of life and death is now, in a high degree, dynamically, psychically and ethically modified (see Is. lxx. 20), i. e. dying and reviving are effects which proceed from within. In general, however, the entire son is to be conceived of as an son of separations and eliminations in an ethical and a cosmolical sense, separations and eliminations such as are necessary to make manifest and to complete the ideal regulations of life. Of judgments of damnation between the judgment upon Antichrist and the judgment upon Satan, there can be no question; the reference can be only to a critical government and management, preparatory to the final consummation. The whole son is a crisis which occasions the visible appearance of the Heaven on earth; the whole son is the great Last Day. We may even conceive of the mutiny which finally breaks out as a result of these separations, for a sort of protest on the part of the wicked was hinted at by Christ in His Eschatological Discourse (Matt. xxv. 44), and the most essential element of the curse in hell is the continuance of revolt, the gnashing of teeth. To the degree in which this can decrease, torment can approach indifference. Opinions concerning this judgment are marvellously at variance.

According to Augustine, the reference is to a judgment upon the old earth: Sedes Præpositorum et ipsi Præpositi intelligendi sunt, per quos ecclesia gubernatur. According to Hoë, on the other hand, the judgment relates to Heaven itself, as a theological disclosure as to the fate of the souls of the martyrs and others in Heaven, during the thousand years. According to Piscat., De Wette, et al., "the probable idea is that the judgment now held has to decide as to who are worthy to have part in the first resurrection and the Millennial Kingdom."

And I saw the souls of them, etc.—Two main points modify the entire picture: a. The thrones; b. The souls of the martyrs. As these were cut off from the most lively life by a violent death, they abode nearer to life than other dead persons; their more intimate communion with Christ produced the resurrection principle within them; and as men upon whom the ban of the world pre-eminently fell, they must be pre-eminently honored in the Kingdom of God [als die vorzugsweise Geachteten müssen sie die vorzugsweise Geachteten des Reiches Gottes sein]. As beheaded, they also accompany Christ from the other world, and though it cannot be said that their category precisely coincides with that of the occupants of the thrones, neither can it be affirmed that they may not be amongst those enthroned ones. The Seer distinguishes three categories of the participants in the first resurrection, or those "that are Christ's in His Parousia" (1 Cor. xv. 23). First, the sitters on the thrones; secondly, the martyrs generally, who were beheaded for Christ's sake; thirdly, all the faithful of the last time, who have worshipped neither the Beast nor his image, nor have assumed his mark. These are the macrobi of the last time, who sleep not, but are changed (1 Cor. xv. 51, 52; 2 Cor. v. 4, 5; 1 Thess. iv. 17). Over and above these, as a fourth category, are the remnants of the old humanity that have not belonged to the Antichristian army; the inhabitants of the domain of Gog and Magog, who find themselves only in the periphery of the renewing crisis. It was perhaps on account of the third class that the Seer employed the term ἐγερται. But even if this is, with reason, made emphatic: they revived—lived again (=ἀνέστησαν, De Wette), it does not prove that we should regard the last [third] class (consisting of those who are alive at the time of Christ's appearing), with Düsterd., et al., as having likewise died in the mean time. The expression, [ver. 5] but the rest of the dead, finds its antithesis in the martyrs; and the transformation, as well as the awakening, shall lead to the first resurrection.

Ver. 5. The rest of the dead, etc.—That is, those not pre-eminently animated by the principle of the life of Christ, not led toward the first resurrection (Rom. viii. 17 sqq.; Eph. i. 19; Phil. iii. 11), and therefore a whole æon deeper under the power of death.

This is the first resurrection.—With these words the Seer constitutes that entire resurrection-process which begins with the Parousia of Christ, a distinct dogmatical conception. We have already discussed the gloriousness and naturalness of this conception. The manifold evasions of this idea, this Christian hope, seem like a general horror—not, however, a horror vacui, but a horror vitæ et spiritus.

In regard to the thousand years, the number, as has already been observed, is symbolical, like all other apocalyptic numbers; it denotes an æon, and is specifically the transition-æon between this present world and the world to come. "The Jews indicate the duration of the Messianic Kingdom by different numbers; according to R. Elieser, however, the days of the Messiah amount to a thousand years; this opinion is based upon the statement, Is. lxi. 4, 'the day of vengeance was in my mind' [E. V. is in mine heart], and the further declaration, Ps. xc. 4, 'a thousand years in Thy sight are as yesterday,' etc. The weightier reason of the Ep. Barnab. c. xv. might be added to this, that as God created the world in six days and rested on the seventh day, so in six thousand years all things would be consummated and in the last chiliad a great world-Sabbath would be celebrated." (De Wette.)

The slavish dread of Chiliasm felt by the Old Catholic Church and the mediæval Theology, amounting to an avoidance of the misunderstood Apocalypse itself and a dread of the historical sense of its text, whilst the Old Catholic Church and mediæval Theology were themselves sunk deep in material Chiliasm, has found expression in the most diverse interpretations, from Augustine down to Hengstenberg; there is a maximum of excuse for the beginning of the series, but scarcely a minimum for the end of it. On the course of the exegeses see pp. 63 sqq. Likewise Düsterdieck, pp. 554 sqq. In this exegetical party, the elder Lutheran Theology continues most involved in the toils of mediæval tradition. The slavish Theology of the letter has found a support in the view of John Gerhard in particular (Düsterd., p. 556). The Apocalypse, Gerhard declares, is a deuterocanonical book—the Kingdom of Christ will never on earth, not even at the end of the days, be one of external sovereignty (a sentiment dictated, doubtless, by a misunderstanding of Article XVII. of the Augsburg Confession)—all the dead are to arise in one day—there is to be but one general resurrection of the dead at the Parousia of the Lord. Accordingly, it is further stated, the beginning of the Millennial Kingdom probably falls in the time of Constantine—Gog and Magog are to be regarded as significant of the Turks. A partiality for this prejudiced tradition can in general be regarded only as the sad fruit of partyism. In regard to the view of Hengstenberg in particular, we refer primarily to the notices of Apocalyptic Literature, pp. 69 sq., 71.* The starting point of Hengstenberg's view is by Rinck (Die Zeichen der letzten Zeit, p. 833) declared to be the assumption that the Beast can be understood only as the Pagan, not as the Christian, State. This assumption is a proof that Hengstenberg had no just conception of the idea of Antichristianity—which cannot possibly be a product of pure heathenism†—and no idea of the fall of an external State or Church. And yet according to the same commentator, Satan himself is at last to break forth—or rather has broken forth—immediately, (in a worse mode, therefore, than in the form of the Beast) in the midst of Christendom.

* On Krausold (Das tausendjährige Reich) see Düsterdieck, p. 558. Luthardt, in his work entitled, Die Offenb. Joh., recognizes the futurity of the Millennial Kingdom. Grau, on the other hand, in his lecture on the Contents and Import of the Revelation of John (in Zur Einführung in das Schriftthum N. T.), deals in generalities previous to ch. xx.

† Hengstenberg, it is manifest, has entirely lost the idea of Antichristianity by his Echatology. If Antichristianity is summed up in the Beast, it is also abolished in company with the Beast. Consequently, there can no longer be any Antichristianity. And therefore, according to Hengstenberg, the final outbreak of Satan results in a new heathenism in the original sense of the term. But the world can not fall back into pure heathenism at the end of the days; Antichristianity can be formed only from elements of decomposed Christianity—Christianity that is converted into mighty lies (2 Thess. ii.).

Many arguments employed by Hengstenberg in his article entitled, "The so-called Millennial Kingdom," to be found in the second volume of his commentary, have a very ad hominem sound; for instance, the argument from the inscription on the dome of the royal castle. We are justified in assuming that Hengstenberg was more concerned for the credit of Christian Rome than for the credit of the Christian State (which appears not merely in German, but also in French, Romance, and Slavonic forms), in declaring that the Woman also should be apprehended exclusively as Pagan Rome. Furthermore, the text of the Apocalypse constantly suffers violence at the hands of Hengstenberg. The chaining of Satan (ch. xx. 1-3) ill admits of an assignment to the Middle Ages—hence he explains: "Satan is able to ensnare individual souls during this time, but not the nations as a whole." As if the individual souls of many princes and popes had not had a highly decisive influence in the working of their political and hierarchical systems—Machiavellism, the Inquisition, Dragonnades and the like. Again, the first resurrection, according to the same expositor, can not be apprehended as a bodily resurrection; it merely denotes the translation of the souls spoken of into that glorious intermediate condition in the other world, where they lived and reigned with Christ. 'Εἴησαν, he affirms, is not equivalent to ἀνέστησαν. But, manifestly, this coming to life is distinct from the blessed living-on in the other world (chs. vii. and xiv.), and prominence is given to it as antithetic to the condition of the dead who did not become alive again during the thousand years. Hengstenberg arrived at a much wished-for result by dating the thousand years from Charlemagne; the loosing of Satan might thus be assigned to the time of the French Revolution and the movements connected therewith (see Hengst. ii., pp. 367 and 375 sqq. [Ger.]). A series of kindred and opposite constructions of the Millennial Kingdom see noted in De Wette, p. 189; Düsterd., p. 555.

According to Düsterdieck (pp. 554sqq.), the unbiased determination of the exegetical result of the text, and the theological estimate of it, based upon the analogy of Scripture, are two different things. The Millennial Kingdom falls, according to him also, in the time immediately preceding the universal judgment—but he seems to be unable to reconcile the developed Apocalyptic Eschatology with the less developed Eschatology of the other Scriptures of the New Testament. If, however, the one day of the resurrection be regarded as a literal day, rather than as the symbolical term for a period; if one general resurrection of all the dead, in one day, as an immediate wonder of omnipotence, be regarded as more credible than the profound, organically modified idea of the gradational and hence double resurrection; and if a sudden annihilation of all evil at once be considered more probable than the abolition of it by a succession of judgments;—the same method of interpretation should, if consistency be at all regarded, be employed in the case of the other portions of Holy Writ, though this would involve a reduction of the living Scripture either to the orthodoxy of the Seventeenth, or the rationalism of the Eighteenth Century—or a taking up with a compound of positive elements and ideal descriptions.

[NOTE ON THE FIRST RESURRECTION.]

By the American Editor.

[The writer believes that he cannot better begin this note than by the presentation of the views of two distinguished writers on the subject,—the one advocating the doctrine of a literal resurrection, the other defending the so-called spiritual view.

ALFORD, on xx. 4, 5, thus comments:

"It will have been long ago anticipated by the readers of this Commentary, that I cannot consent to distort words from their plain sense and chronological place in the prophecy, on account of any considerations of difficulty, or any risk of abuses which the doctrine of the Millennium may bring with it. Those who lived next to the Apostles, and the whole Church for 300 years, understood them in the plain literal sense; and it is a strange sight in these days to see expositors who are amongst the first in reverence of antiquity, complacently casting aside the most cogent instance of consensus which primitive antiquity presents. As regards the text itself, no legitimate treatment of it will exhort what is known as the spiritual interpretation now in fashion. If in a passage where two resurrections are mentioned, where certain ψυχαι ἔζησαν at the first, and the rest of the νεκροί ἔζησαν only at the end of a specified period after that first,—if in such a passage the first resurrection may be understood to mean spiritual rising with Christ, while the second means literal rising from the grave; then there is an end of all significance in language, and Scripture is wiped out as a definite testimony to anything. If the first resurrection is spiritual then so is the second, which I suppose none will be hardy enough to maintain;* but if the second is literal, then so is the first, which in common with the whole primitive Church and many of the best modern expositors, I do maintain, and receive as an article of faith and hope."

BROWN, whose work on the Second Advent is, confessedly, one of the ablest that has ever been published on his side of the question, devotes an entire chapter to the discussion of the Millennial Resurrection. It is of course impossible to reproduce the entire argument. The following, *[Whitby, Faber and Brown, all distinguish between the second resurrection implied, ver. 5, in the words the rest of the dead, &c., and the general resurrection brought to view in v. 12, 13. Whilst they admit that this general resurrection is literal, they contend that both the first and second millennial resurrections are spiritual,—the former signifying a resurrection of the martyr spirit at the beginning of the thousand years; the latter, the re-vivification of the spirit of evil in the hosts of Gog and Magog.

Barnes agrees with these commentators save in the last particular. He understands, however, by the rest of the dead the ordinarily pious. He writes: "But the rest of the dead. In contradistinction from the beheaded martyrs, and from those who had kept themselves pure in the times of great temptation. The phrase 'rest of the dead' here would most naturally refer to the same general class which was before mentioned—the pious dead. The meaning is, that the martyrs would be honored as if they were raised up and the others not; that is, that special respect would be shown to their principles, their memory, and their character. In other words, special honor would be shown to a spirit of eminent piety during that period, above the common and ordinary piety which has been manifested in the church. The 'rest of the dead'—the pious dead—would indeed be raised up and rewarded, but they would occupy comparatively humble places, as if they did not partake in the exalted triumphs when the world should be subdued to the Saviour. Their places in honor, in rank, and in reward, would be bestowed that of those who in fiery times had maintained unshaken fidelity to the cause of truth. ¶ Lived not. On the word lived, see Notes on ver. 4. That is, they lived not during that period in the peculiar sense in which it is said (ver. 4.) that the eminent saints and martyrs lived. They did not come into remembrance; their principles were not what then characterized the church; they did not see, as the martyrs did, their principles and mode of life in the ascendancy, and consequently they had not the augmented happiness and honor which the more eminent saints and martyrs had."—E. B. C.]

however, is presented as a perfectly fair synopsis thereof:

"If the question then be, Was this celebrated passage (Rev. xx. 4-6) designed to announce A LITERAL AND GENERAL RESURRECTION OF THE SAINTS? The following appear to me to be strong

PRESUMPTIONS AGAINST IT.

1. It is very strange that the resurrection of the righteous a thousand years before the wicked, if it be a revealed truth, should be directly and explicitly announced in one passage only.
2. If this was to be the chosen place for announcing such a prior resurrection, it is surely reasonable to expect that a clear and unambiguous revelation of it would be made. (Such a revelation he denies was made in the passage.)
3. If a resurrection of the righteous is general—as distinguished from the wicked—be the true sense of this prophecy, the description is very unlike the thing to be described. It is not in the least like any other description of that event in the New Testament. Every other description of the resurrection and glory of the saints as such is catholic in its character, while this is limited.

NINE INTERNAL EVIDENCES THAT THE MILLENNIAL RESURRECTION IS NOT LITERAL BUT FIGURATIVE.*

1. If the first resurrection mean rising from the grave in immortal and glorified bodies, we do not need the assurance that on such the second death hath no power (v. 6), or in other words, that they shall not perish everlastingly. Can it be believed that the Holy Spirit means nothing more than such a truism? But suppose that the first resurrection signifies a glorious condition of mortal men, and the promise becomes intelligible.
2. There are but two alternatives in the prophecy—either to 'have part in the first resurrection,' or to be under the 'power of the second death.' Into which of these classes are we to put the myriads of men who are to people the earth, in flesh and blood during the millennium?
3. The express mention of how long this 'life and reign with Christ' will last, viz., a thousand years, if meant to inform us what a long period of earth's prosperity the Church is yet destined to enjoy, is intelligible and cheering. But to say that the risen and glorified Church is to live and reign with Christ for a period of a thousand years, is totally unlike the language of Scripture in every other place.
4. By making the party that 'live and reign with Christ a thousand years' to be the entire Church of God risen from their graves, we are forced to do violence to the whole subsequent context. Thus—(1) The rest of the dead must be expected to live again in the same bodily sense 'when the thousand years are finished.' But we read of no bodily resurrection at all on the expiring of this period. Satan shall then be loosed out of prison, and when we consider the work he has to do, the little season of his deceiving the nations can hardly be over-stretched by extending it to a century or so. This first millennial period is to be filled up with something else than bodily resurrections. It will indeed be employed in the raising of a wicked party. We read of no bodily resurrection until after its expiration: (2) None but the wicked would remain to be judged in the last judgment, which is inconsistent with the implication of the opening of the Book of Life (v. 12).
5. (This argument is given in the language of Gipsy, substantially as follows): The opening of the Book of Life (v. 12) signifies the manifestation of those who are written in it. It is inconceivable that this manifestation can take place one moment before what is called the opening of the Book of Life. But the manifestation of the Sons of God will take place at their (bodily) resurrection, Rom. viii. 19, 23. Their bodily resurrection, therefore, will not take place until the general resurrection of v. 12.
6. (Also in the language of Gipsy): The omission of any declaration as to the sea, death and the grave, giving up the dead at the first resurrection, and the making such a declaration respecting 'the dead' in ver. 13, convinces me that 'the first resurrection' is not that of the Saints, and also that the 'dead' in vers. 12, 13, include all mankind, both the saints and the ungodly. In every other part of the Word of God the information given concerning the resurrection of the saints is not only much more frequent, but also much more explicit, than concerning the resurrection of the ungodly. I feel convinced, therefore, that in this portion of the Scripture, if it were intended to foretell a resurrection of the saints distinct from that of the ungodly, much more explicit information would be given concerning the former than concerning the latter.

7. The clause 'This is the first resurrection' (ver. 6), which is thought to prove it literal, seems to me, if it prove anything, to prove the reverse. It is reasonable—say the premillennialists—to suppose that if the second or last resurrection be literal, the first will be so also—differing from the second only in time. Unfortunately for this way of reasoning, what is said in the verse immediately following contradicts it: 'Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power' (ver. 6). Here 'the first resurrection' and 'the second death' are intentionally brought together and contrasted. Is the first death, then, of the same nature with the second? Does one merely precede the other? No: the first death is that of the body, the second that of both body and soul; the first death is common to the righteous and the wicked, the second is the everlasting portion of the wicked and of them alone. To suffer the first death for Christ is made the ground (not, of course, the meritorious ground) of exemption from the power of the second death (see ch. ii. 10, 11). Now as exemption from the power of the second death is here made to rest upon a certain character, namely, fidelity to Christ even to death, and in our millennial chapter exemption from the power of the same second death is made to rest upon participation in the first resurrection, is it not reasonable to conclude that this 'first resurrection' is meant to signify a certain character in the present life, and not the possession of bodily resurrection and glory? . . . To my mind this view of the first resurrection is put beyond doubt by the following words: 'Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection.' I cannot see what important information is conveyed by these words if 'the first resurrection' mean a restoration to bodily life. To tell us that saints risen from the dead, and reigning in glorified bodies with Christ, are holy, seems to me to be very unlike the language of Scripture every where else, and very superfluous.

8. It is a fatal objection to the literal sense of this prophecy, as announcing the bodily resurrection of all dead, and the change of all living saints, that it is exclusively a martyr-scene—the prophet b-holding simply a resurrection of the slain, whereas this very circumstance eminently favors the figurative sense. The literal sense is utterly inadequate to express the resurrection of the whole Church of God bodily from the grave; the figurative sense is in consonance with the figurative language of Scripture (comp. Rev. xi. 11; Ezk. xxxvii. 12-14; Hos. vi. 2; Isa. xxvi. 19, 24), with that of the best writers in every language and age, and expresses a conception worthy of the Spirit of God to dictate.

9. The literal sense offers no consistent explanation of the 'judgment that was given unto' the slain martyrs. This judgment was clearly that referred to in ch. vi. 9-11.* If this be correct, of course the slain and those who slew them, must be taken in the same sense. If the judgment is to be given to the martyrs personally at the millennium, their blood must also be personally avenged on them that dwell on the earth. If the martyrs are to rise bodily from their graves in order that judgment may be personally given to them, then their persecutors must be raised that vengeance may be rendered to them."

The writer adopts the view of this celebrated passage that is advocated by Alford—the view that has been held in the Church from the earliest ages. It seems to be undeniable that this is the view that results from the normal interpretation of the passage,—a view that should not be set aside but for most cogent reasons. Whilst it is admitted that there is much apparent force in many of the considerations urged by Brown, it is submitted that they are not of sufficient force to overthrow the normal interpretation.

In continuance it should be remarked that the normal interpretation is in line with, and gives special and beautiful significance to, many otherwise inexplicable declarations in the word of God. An anonymous writer in a work entitled CREATION AND REDEMPTION (Edinburgh: Thomas Laurie, 1866. Second Ed.) thus comments:

"It is incumbent on us here to say a few words on the

* [Is it not rather probable that ἐπίμα was used in the sense in which it was employed, Mart. vii. 2; John ix. 39; Rom. ii. 2, 3; and that the sentence means, that to the saints, as kings, was given the authority to judge?—E. R. C.]

* [Brown thus disposes of a common objection (first urged by Whitby) to the literal view: "It is frequently urged that because 'souls' (ψυχαί) were seen in this vision, and no mention is made of bodies, it cannot be a bodily resurrection that is meant. But this is to mistake what the Apostle saw in the vision. He did not see a resurrection of souls. He saw the souls of them that were slain; that is, he had a vision of the martyrs themselves in the state of the dead—after they were slain, and just before their resurrection. Then he saw them rise: 'They lived'—not their souls, but themselves."—E. R. C.]

subject of the First Resurrection, for there is a general impression that the belief in it rests solely upon this passage, (Rev. xx. 6). But this is a great mistake. The truth of a resurrection of some at a different time from that of the general resurrection, is evident from Scripture, independent of this passage in the Apocalypse. Omitting the passages from the Old Testament Scriptures, sustained by the promises of which the Old Testament worthies, as St. Paul says, suffered and served God in the hope of obtaining 'a better resurrection' (Heb. xi. 35), we will state as briefly as may be the conclusion to which we are led by the words of the Lord and His Apostles.

Our Lord makes a distinction between the resurrection which some shall be counted worthy to attain to, and some not, Luke xx. 3, 5. St. Paul says there is a resurrection 'out from among the dead' (ἐκ νεκρῶν) to attain which he strove with all his might as the prize to be gained, Phil. iii. 11. He also expressly tells us, that while as in Adam all die, so in Christ shall all be made alive; yet it shall not be all at once, but 'every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterwards they that are Christ's at His coming.' It is particularly to be remarked, that wherever the resurrection of Christ, or of His people, is spoken of in Scripture, it is a 'resurrection from the dead'; and wherever the general resurrection is spoken of, it is the 'resurrection of the dead.' This distinction, though preserved in many instances in the English translation, is too frequently omitted; but in the Greek the one is always coupled with the preposition ἐκ, out of, and the other is without it; and in the Vulgate it is rendered by à mortuis or ex mortuis, as distinct from resurrectio mortuorum. In Rom. viii. 11, 'The Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead,' it is ἐκ νεκρῶν, à mortuis. So in Rom. x. 7; Eph. i. 20; Heb. xiii. 20; 1 Pet. i. 3, 21. So Lazarus was raised ἐκ νεκρῶν, John xii. 1, 9. Our Lord, in His reply to the Sadducees, made the distinction between the general resurrection of the dead, and the resurrection which some should be accounted worthy to attain to. The children of this age (αἰῶνος) marry, but they who shall be accounted worthy to attain that αἰών, and the resurrection from the dead (ἀναστάσεις τῶν ἐκ νεκρῶν), shall not marry (Luke xx. 34, 35). St. Paul, when he spoke of a resurrection to which he strove to attain (Phil. iii. 8, 11), and to which he was with all his might pressing forwards, as the high prize to gain which he was agonizing, and for which he counted all else loss, as if one preposition was not enough to indicate his meaning, uses it doubled, ἐκ τῶν ἐκ νεκρῶν τῶν ἐκ νεκρῶν. 'Si quomodo occurrat ad resurrectionem, quæ ad ex mortuis.' If St. Paul had been looking only to the general resurrection, he need not have given himself any trouble, or made any sacrifice to attain to that; for to it, all, even Judas and Nero, must come; but to attain to the First Resurrection he had need to press forward for the prize of that calling. And thus in his argument for the resurrection in 1 Cor. xv. (vers. 12, 21), when he speaks of the resurrect on generally, he speaks of the resurrection of the dead, (ἀναστάσεις νεκρῶν); but when he speaks of our Lord's resurrection, it is ἐκ νεκρῶν, from the dead. And he marks the time when Christ's people shall be raised from the dead, namely, 'at Christ's coming,' 'every man in his own order': 1st, Christ; 2d, Christ's people; 3d, all the remainder, at some other period, which he terms 'the end,' when the last enemy, death, is to be destroyed, put an end to (vers. 23-26). And it follows as a matter of course, that if those who are Christ's are to be raised from the dead at His coming, and if He comes previous to the destruction of Antichrist, and to the millennium, this first resurrection must be at least a thousand years before the general resurrection."—E. R. C.]

III. THIRD OR GENERAL END-JUDGMENT. JUDGMENT UPON SATAN AND ALL HIS COMPANY. THE SECOND DEATH.

CHAPTER XX. 6-10.

A.—HEAVENLY PROGNOSIS OF THE LAST GENERAL JUDGMENT.

CHAP. XX. 6-8.

- 6 Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on [over] such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ,
7 and [ins. they] shall reign with him a [the] thousand years. And when the thousand years are expired [finished], Satan shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive [seduce or mislead (πλανῆσαι)] the nations which are in the four quarters [corners] of the earth, Gog and Magog, to gather them together to [the] battle [war]: the number of whom is as the sand of the sea.

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 6. [Tisch. (8th Ed.) inserts the article in accordance with K. B*; Alf. brackets it; Lach. and Tisch. (1859) omit with A.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 8. τὸν πόλεον, according to Codd. A. B*, et al.

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

The prophecies relative to the three judgments here taper, so to speak, to a point. The most detailed of these prophecies was that which concerned the Harlot; the prophecy concerning the Beast was couched in less ample terms; and this last prophecy of judgment is concentrated in a very little sketch, so that we can scarce perceive the articulations which separate one cycle from another, and divide the heavenly prognosis from the earth-picture. Nevertheless, the breaks in question are still to be found. The words of ver. 6 do indeed glance back to the thousand years; but this is, manifestly, in order to the introduction of the last judgment, which brings with it the second death. Even within this diminutive judgment-picture, the antithesis is unmistakable. Vers. 7 and 8 speak of the loosing of Satan and the seduction of Gog and Magog in the future tense. But with ver. 9 the Seer makes a historic presentation, in the prophetic preterite, of the fact which he has before predicted. The plan of the whole Book is, therefore, retained in this case also. The perspective brevity of this section testifies unmistakably to the canonical truth and chasteness of the description. For an apocalyptic fiction, the elaboration of this sombre picture of the last revolt of the heathen, the fiery judgment upon Satan, and the second death in the lake of fire, would have possessed the greatest charms. Our Prophet, however, gives only the few features that he has seen—gives them as he has seen them, darkly, in well-nigh figureless language. It cannot be said, however, that he is wearied, for soon after follows the picture of the perfected City of God, magnificently developed and vividly distinct.

With a beatitude relative to the sharers in the first resurrection, the perspective of the last judgment is opened. The participants in this resurrection are called blessed, as those whose lot is absolutely decided, who have passed their judgment and come forth from it as holy ones, forever consecrate to God. This retrospect is occasioned by the prospect of the second death as the doom of the third and last judgment. Over such the second death hath no authority. The second death (δευτερος θάνατος) is damnation in the pool of fire, according to ver. 14 and ch. xxi. 8; not gradual dissolution and annihilation (Rothe). The term eternal death [Düsterdieck] is less explanatory of this mysterious judgment than the figurative expression, the pool of fire. It is a fellowship with all those who are in that condition of absolute irritation which is at the same time absolute stagnation, in endless ethical self-consumption and annihilation as a punishment for the persevering negation of God and the personal Kingdom of love. The opposite of this death-peril consists in the fact that the sharers in the first resurrection will be priests of God and of Christ. This priesthood, as absolute submission to God in blessedness in Him, stands contrasted with the unblest madness of the pool of fire; and, furthermore, it is perfect submission in reference to the economy of the Father as well as to the economy of redemption. They offer the whole creation, they offer the whole Church, with all the good things of them both, evermore to God and to Christ; and this is the condition whereby an eternal and ever-better possession of these good things is secured—a participation in the dominion of the Lord. Even in the Millennial Kingdom they shall reign with Christ.

Not in the vision form, but in prophetic discourse the Seer now announces the loosing of Satan after the thousand years. He shall be loosed out of his prison—not break out of it. In accordance with the determination of God, Satan, and with him all evil, must be thoroughly and completely judged. Hitherto judgment has been predominantly accomplished through instrumentalities. The historic judgment upon the Harlot was executed by the Beast, i. e., the preliminary hypocritical instance of evil has been judged by the perfect consistency of evil, in accordance with a very general historic law;—half-way-ness succumbs to consistency. Anti-Christian evil, as a spiritual power, has been judged by the spiritual effect of the personal appearance of Christ, by the terror of His δόξα and by the sword out of His mouth. In the end, however, Satan employs the means of resistance still afforded him by his creaturely strength, reviving in a convulsive struggle, in rebellion against God; and with the brutal opposition of consummate Satanity, corresponds the savage sense of strength of the heathen [nations] in the corners of the earth, who have withdrawn themselves from the sanctifying process of the eschatological economy (the new οικουμένη), aye, have hardened themselves under it, and have become, especially in their resentment against that heavenly order of things which overpowers them, kindred in mind to Satan. It has been asked: whence come these countless heathen, since, according to ch. xix. 21, Christ has slain the Antichristian host? But apart from the fact that He slew them with the breath of His mouth, i. e., morally annihilated them, which might not prevent a continuance of physical vegetation on their part, the terms employed, the heathen [nations] in the four corners of the earth, Gog and Magog, afford sufficient explanation. Ezekiel prophesied that the people of God should, long after the more familiar anti-theocratic assaults, have to sustain an attack from the circle of the remotest barbaric Orient (Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix.). This eagle-glance at the future, whose significance trains of Huns, Mongols, Tartars and Turks have already confirmed, could not be missing from our Apocalypse. The present prophecy is heralded in ch. xvi. 12. But whilst Ezekiel, in prophesying of Gog in the land of Magog, referred to distinct Asiatic peoples (see Düst., p. 552), John employs the terms as a universal symbol, in designation of all the barbarous peoples in the corners of the earth—so, however, that the distant Orient plays the principal part. The idea of these last heathen is precisely analogous to the churchly idea. In the earlier days of Christianity, the inhabitants of the villages (pagani) or of the heaths, far remote from the great centres of civilization, formed the remnants of the old world—remnants which were both unconverted and difficult of conversion. Thus the entire old world will leave its remnants in a moral, symbolical heathenism, which will surround the Kingdom of Christ not merely as a terrestrial, but also as a spiritual boundary. But the idea that Evil shall at last break out and incur judgment in such a final heathenish mutiny, in a brutal revolt, the stupidity of which is veiled by the innumerable force of the hosts therein concerned, is characteristic of the great Prophet, who sees far above and beyond the learning of the schools.

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ch. xx. 6. Blessed and holy is he, etc.—As in the process of the formation of Christian character, the beatitudes of the righteousness of faith condition sanctification or the becoming holy, so in the condition of consummation, blessedness is still more decidedly the eternal source of the renewal of holiness. It is a remarkable fact that even Spinoza had a dim idea of this, that blessedness is itself a virtue and a condition of virtue. Even civic contentment has, in a limited degree, an ennobling influence. By holiness, eternal and complete consecratedness to God is here expressed.—Over such the second death, etc.—They are beyond temptation, and cannot relapse into sin, and hence cannot fall under the fearful dominion of the second death.—The second death is, ver. 14, declared to be the judgment in the pool of fire: eternal agitation amidst the eternal frustration of plots and attempts: the specific demonio and Satanic suffering. "A dying and an inability to die," ancient expositors were wont to say. The fact is here expressed that the Millennial Kingdom forms only a heavenly circle of culture of the new world within the old earth—in other words, that the heathen [nations], from whom the last rebellion proceeds, form an antithesis to God's people of the first resurrection. The remains of the old humanity will occupy very much the same relation to the new humanity which the remains of the pre-Adamite creation occupy to the human world; although a general recognition of Christ, and, to this extent, the beginning of Christianity amongst all these peoples, is induced by Christ's victory over Antichrist (ch. xix.). The general conversion of the heathen even precedes the Parousia of Christ. They shall be priests of God and of Christ.—Because they shall be priests, they shall also be co-regents with Christ, and being both throughout the thousand years, they appear unconditionally elevated above the perils of the last Satanic assault.

Ver. 7. And when the thousand years are finished.—When the destination of the thousand years is fulfilled (ὅταν τελευτήσῃ). Satan shall be loosed.—The obedience of the heathen [nations], their Christianity, their faithfulness, must finally undergo a fiery test, after they have long enough been spectators of the Heaven on earth, and enjoyed, in nature and grace, the blessings of the Parousia of Christ. For a similar purpose Satan was permitted to exercise his arts in the first Paradise, to tempt Job, Christ Himself, and His Apostles. Such is the Divine method for the testing and perfecting of the elect, the purification and sifting of the churches, the unveiling of the wicked in order to their judgment, and the inducement of the self-judgment of Satan, resulting in his dynamical destruction. Under this Divine economy, evil in abstracto is permitted fully to develop, as is also evil in concreto, in wicked individuals, in the fellowship of the wicked, in the father of liars.

Ver. 8. And shall go out to seduce [or mislead] the nations [Lange: heathen].—"The difficulty occasioned by the statement that heathen peoples are here once more represented as going up to battle against the saints, after the destruction (ch. xix. 21) of all peoples and kings that worshipped the Beast" (Düsterd.), is very simply solved by a distinction between the Antichristian host and the remaining world of peoples, particularly those under the Eastern kings—irrespective of the fact that it is doubtful whether the killing of the rest (ch. xix. 21) should be taken literally. Vitringa calls attention to the fact "that the ἔθνη, Gog and Magog, dwell in the uttermost ends of the earth (Ezek. xxxviii. 15 and ver. 9)." * Another difficulty, according to Düsterdieck, consists in the fact that foes belonging to this earthly life fight against the faithful who have part in the first resurrection. This will undoubtedly be a very foolish proceeding, but it will not on that account be improbable, as those who have passed through the resurrection dwell upon earth in bodily form. Dogs attack lions, beasts attack men, barbarians and savages attack civilized nations, the foes of Christ attack the Church of God;—all these are wars from motives of sheer instinct, the rationality of which we have not to take upon ourselves to prove. In the antithesis of Cain and Abel, it was, in reality, the mortal who assaulted the immortal. Consider further "that these heathen peoples are seduced to battle against the saints by Satan himself directly." Ch. xvi. 13, it is affirmed, militates against this idea. That passage, however, rather gives an explanation of the manner in which we should conceive of the agitation of Satan. At first, as the red Dragon (ch. xii.), he had no such definite organs as at a later period (ch. xiii.), and yet even then he could work by spiritual influences. And even though the Beast and the False Prophet are destroyed, the frogs which went forth from their mouths as well as from the mouth of the Dragon, reminiscences of rancor, resentment and rage [Groll, Gram und Grimm], can be made effectual for the seduction of the heathen, primarily through their leaders. In the four corners of the earth.—Hengstenberg, in the interest of his exegesis, has very ingeniously taken the edge off of the four corners of the earth by striving to prove that the corners comprehend that which lies within them, and that hence the four corners of the earth denote the same ground as τὸ πᾶς τῆς γῆς (see his citations, vol. ii., 868sq. [Eng. Trans.]). But allowing that the four corners might denote, by synecdoche, the complete totality of the land or the people, such a use of the term is entirely different from the present statement, that Satan shall go out to seduce the heathen in the four corners; and from the further statement that they went up upon the breadth of the earth. Gog and Magog.—The following questions arise here: 1. What ethnographical sense did the theocratic world attach to Gog and Magog? 2. How did Gog and Magog become, in the Old Testament, the symbol of the last foes of the theocratic Church of God? 3. How has the Apocalypse taken up this symbol and applied it in manifold forms? 4. How is the same idea reflected in Jewish tradition? [1.] In respect to Biblical ethnography, the name of Magog appears, by the side of Gomer, amongst the sons of Japhet, Gen. x. 2; see Comm. on Genesis, p. 348 [Am. Ed.]. Josephus explains Magog as indicative of the Scythians. "Magog seems to be a collective name, denoting the sum of the peoples situate in Media and the Caucasian Mountains, concerning whom a vague report had reached the Hebrews, etc." See Winer, Title Magog: Düsterdieck, Note on p. 552. Gog, according to Uhlemann, as there quoted, and others, means mountain; Magog the dwelling-place, or land of Gog. According to Ezekiel, ch. xxxviii. 2, the prince or the nation is called Gog, the land of the same being denominated Magog, which embraces Rosch,* Meshech and Tubal (see the table of nations). [2.] In the Apocalypse of Ezekiel,

* [The G. V. reads here (Ezek. xxxviii. 15): "Thou shalt come out of thy place, namely, from the ends against the north."—Ta.]

* [The LXX. has Ρῶς, but neither the Vulgate, nor the German, nor the English Version, gives it.—E. R. C.]

the spirit of prophecy has, in accordance with a distinct ethical pre-supposition, arrived at the idea that the people of God shall, after all its conflicts with familiar anti-theocratic enemies, after its complete restoration, re-instatement and renewal, have to undergo one more last assault from the rude and brutal enmity of Eastern barbarian nations. These enemies are introduced by Ezekiel under the names of Gog and Magog. Hitzig (Commentar. zu Ezech., p. 288) thinks that the Prophet chose the name Gog, the Scythian, on account of its being the name of the most remote peoples; and adds that the Scythians had appeared in Palestine not so very long prior to the time of Ezekiel's prophecy—two explanations which invalidate each other. On the question as to whether the Scythians had been in Palestine previous to the prophecy, comp. Winer, Titel SCYTHIANS. We behold in the name the symbolic term for the rudest and most savage heathenism as contrasted with the perfected Theocracy. Jehovah will curb, subdue and destroy Gog like a wild beast. [3.] In harmony with the same eschatological idea, the Apocalypse took up the symbolical announcement, and to its representation of Gog and Magog as two collateral powers the inducement was given by Ezekiel, in his designation of Magog as a complex of different peoples. In the general judgment picture (Rev. xvi.) these enemies appear as the kings of the east, who come from the region of barbarism beyond the Euphrates. [4.] "In Jewish Theology, also, the two names, of which the first denotes in Ezekiel l. c., the king of the land and people of Magog, are found in conjunction as the names of nations: In fine extremis diebus Gog et Magog et exercitus eorum adscendent Hierosolyma et per manus regis Messias ipsi cadent, et VII. annos dierum ardebunt filii Israelis ex armis eorum (Targ. Hieros. in Num. xi. 27, etc.)." DÜSTERDIECK. Comp. De Wette, p. 191. Ibid., singular interpretations of the names by Augustine, Jerome et al.; application to the Goths, Saracens, Turks, all enemies of the Church, Antichrist. "The sorriest interpretation is that of Bar Cochab (Weist.)." Hengstenb. (ii. p. 869 [Eng. Tr.]) seems to find a significance in Brentano's initial juxtaposition of Gog, Magog and Demagog. A witty reply to the perhaps only seeming desire to discover Gog and Magog in the demagogues of the 19th century, see in Ebrard, Note, p. 517. To the war.—That last great war, foretold for ages by Prophecy. The number of whom is as the sand of the sea.—According to Ezekiel even, Gog leads with him a mixture of eastern nations (as did, in reality, Attila, Genghis Khan and Timur). At the same time, the figure employed is expressive, on the one hand, of the multitude of sordid human natures, and on the other hand, of a blind trust in this multitude. The salvability of the Scythians, however, is expressly declared by the Apostle Paul, Col. iii. 11.

In the coalition of Satan with the mob of Gog and Magog, the combination of demon and beast, serpent and swine, formed by the dragon figure, is completely realized.

B.—EARTH-PICTURE OF THE LAST JUDGMENT.

CHAP. XX. 9, 10.

- 9 And they went up on [om. on—ins. upon] the breadth of the earth, and compassed [encompassed] the camp [army or fortification (παρεμβολή)] of the saints about [om. about], and the beloved city: and fire came down from God [or om. from God]<sup>1</sup> out of 10 [ins. the] heaven, and devoured them. And the devil that deceived [seduceth or misleadeth] them was cast into the lake of [ins. the] fire and [or ins. the]<sup>2</sup> brimstone, where [ins. also are] the beast and the false prophet are [om. are], and [ins. they] shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever [into the ages of the ages].

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 9. "Ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ" is supported by Codd. N. B., et al., but is not firmly established. [Treg. inserts; Lach., Alf., Tisch., omit with A.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 10. [Tischendorf (8th Ed.) inserts this article with N.; Lach., Tisch. (1859), Treg., Alford, omit with A. B. P., et al.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

By the prophetic preterite, as well as by the brevity of the description, the Seer expresses the vanity of this last rebellion, which is aimed directly against God in His people, and which, notwithstanding its terrifically mighty development, is instantaneously annihilated. These enemies, with their creaturely forces, stand opposed, as they think, merely to a city of the children of peace, whilst in reality they are drawn up against all the cosmical powers of Heaven. And they went up upon the breadth of the earth. The idea is that they come from the low-lands of the corners of the earth—to destroy the City of God upon the more central, elevated plain of the earth. But that the words are intended to convey the precise idea of a going up against Jerusalem, is difficult to suppose, because for the Seer the true Jerusalem, according to chap. xxi., comes down from Heaven, and here only the beloved city is spoken of, which, as well as the camp of the saints—who are drawn up before the city, in order to its protection—the enemies encompass. It cannot be without reason that the Seer has here avoided the name of Jerusalem (although for an Israelitish heart it might be paraphrased by the expression, the beloved city), whilst in chap. xxi. he uses the name in the same sense in which it is employed by the Apostle Paul, Gal. iv. 26. At this moment, when the last and, apparently, the most fearful crisis of the world's history is close at hand—a crisis which is all the more fearful, or, we might say, the more demonically unnatural, if we conceive of the glorified Christ as shut in, together with the saints, by the hostile host—there falls from Heaven a fire which consumes the foe. An exegetical reading, with the confident feeling that this direct war against God must likewise be put down by God, has added the words, from God; viewed in another aspect, however, the brief term from Heaven is more effective; Heaven itself, the whole Cosmos, against which they finally rage, must now, for God's sake, react against them, in destroying might, with its fire. And now Satan himself, who seduceth the nations, is cast into the pool of the fire and brimstone, whither the Beast and the False Prophet have preceded him. This view, like the discourse of Christ (Matt. xxv.), is at variance with the mediæval idea that Satan, as a fire-demon and prince of hell, torments souls in hell. They shall, it is declared, be tormented day and night into the wons of the wons. To the essence and spiritual condition of the prince of darkness and his consorts, their sphere and external mode of existence shall correspond. There are in their character no motives for a change; except that through the consummate stagnation of their condition, their consummate irritation must be more and more neutralized.

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Chap. xx. 9. And they went up.—Hab. i. 6. "The term ἀναβαίνω, usual where military marches are spoken of (1 Ki. xiii. 4; Ju. i. 1), because the position of the attacked is naturally conceived of as on a height (Hengstenberg), is the more fitting here, since the march of the heathen is really directed upward against Jerusalem." DUKSTERDICK. The primary statement is rather, however, that they go up upon the breadth of the earth, the symbolic elevated plain of the earth, which, as such, forms the specific antithesis to the symbolic four corners of the earth; it is the highland of the spirit. The object of the attack is then, certainly, defined in accordance with an Old Testament conception (see Zech. xii. 7, 8; comp. Köhler, Sacharja, p. 185). The saints have encamped about the beloved city to protect it. All the forces of the Kingdom of Heaven form the defence for all its possessions. If we glance once more at the passage cited [Zech. xii. 7, 8], Zech. xiv. 1, 2 might seem to afford an explanation as to wherefore the Seer did not call the beloved city Jerusalem. Grotius apprehended the Seven Churches by the camp of the saints, and Constantinople by the beloved city. Others (Augustine, Vitringa, Hengstenberg) have regarded the city as the Church; Bengel and most moderns, as Jerusalem.

And fire came down.—Ezek. xxxix. 6; xxxviii. 22; Gen. xix. 24; Lev. x. 2; Num. xvi. 35; Luke ix. 54. See SYN. VIEW. The fire catastrophe shows that the universal judgment of the world is at hand—the fiery metamorphosis of the earth. And consumed them.—To be understood of the destruction of their life in this present world.

Ver. 10. And the devil that seduceth (or misleadeth) them.—Πλανῶν, as the present participle, denotes the continuance of sin under punishment. And they shall be tormented.—Namely, the Devil, the Beast, and the False Prophet. A preliminary general presentment, see in chap. xiv. 11; the final presentment, chap. xx. 14, 15; xxi. 8.

SECTION SEVENTH.

The New Heaven and the New Earth. The Kingdom of Glory.

CHAP. XX. 11—XXII. 5.

A.—IDEAL, HEAVENLY WORLD-PICTURE OF THE CONSUMMATION—ABOUT TO CHANGE TO THE REAL WORLD-PICTURE OF THE NEW EARTH.

CHAP. XX. 11—XXI. 8.

1. The End of the World; the Resurrection; the Judgment.

11 And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on [the one sitting upon] it, from whose face the earth and the heaven fled away [om. away]; and there was 12 found no place [place was not found] for them. And I saw the dead, small and great [the great and the small],<sup>1</sup> stand [standing] before God [om. God—ins. the throne];<sup>2</sup> and the [om. the] books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those [the] things which were [om. which were] written in the books, according to their works. And the sea gave up [forth] the dead which were in it; and death and hell [hades] delivered up [gave forth] the dead which were in them: and they were judged every man [each] according to their works. And death and hell [hades] were cast into the lake of [ins. the] fire. This is the second death<sup>3</sup> [ins., the lake of the fire].<sup>4</sup> And whosoever [if any one] was not found written in the book of life [ins. he] was cast into the lake of [ins. the] fire.

2. The New Heaven and the New Earth. The Clarified World and the Kingdom of Glory.

CHAP. XXI. 1–8.

And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away [departed];<sup>5</sup> and there was no more sea [the sea is no more].<sup>6</sup> And I John [om. John]<sup>7</sup> saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God [om. from God] out of [ins. the] heaven [ins. from God], prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven [om. heaven—ins. the throne]<sup>8</sup> saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell [tabernacle] with them, and they shall be his people [peoples],<sup>9</sup> and God himself shall be with them, and be their God [or om. and be their God].<sup>10</sup> And God [God or om. God]<sup>11</sup> shall wipe away all tears [every tear] from their eyes; and there shall be no more death [death shall be no more], neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain [nor shall sorrow, nor crying, nor pain, be any more]: for the former [first] things are passed away [departed]. And he that sat [the one sitting] upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said [saith] unto me [or om. unto me],<sup>12</sup> Write: for these words are true and faithful [faithful and true].<sup>13</sup> And he said unto me, It is [They are] done [or fulfilled].<sup>14</sup> I am [or am]<sup>15</sup> [ins. the] Alpha and [ins. the] Omega, the beginning and the end. I will give unto him that is athirst [thirsteth] of the fountain of the water of life freely. He that overcometh [or conquereth] shall inherit all [om. all—ins. these]<sup>16</sup> things; and I will be his [om. his—ins. to him a] God, and he shall be my [om. my—ins. to me a] son. But [ins. to] the fearful [cowardly], and unbelieving, and<sup>17</sup> the [om. the] abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers [fornicators], and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all [ins. the] liars, shall have [om. shall have] their part [ins. shall be] in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: [.] which is the second death.

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

- <sup>1</sup> Ver. 12. The Receipts invert the order, giving "small and great."
- <sup>2</sup> Ver. 12. Codd. A. B*, et al., give θρόνον; the Rec. gives θρόνου.
- <sup>3</sup> Ver. 14. A. B*, et al., give οὗτος ὁ θάνατος ὁ δεύτερός ἐστι.
- <sup>4</sup> Ver. 14. This clause is omitted by the Rec. [Crit. Eds. insert it in acc. with N. A. B*. P.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>5</sup> Chap. xxi. 1. N. A. B* give ἀπῆλθεν instead of παρήλθε.
- <sup>6</sup> Ver. 2. "The words ἡνὶ Ἰωάνν. were interpolated from the Vulgate by Erasmus." (DELIVERSON.)
- <sup>7</sup> Ver. 3. [Tisch., Treg., Alf. give θρόνον with N. A., Vulg., et al.; B* P. give οὐρανοῦ.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>8</sup> Ver. 3. Cod. A. and Lachmann [Tisch., Treg., Alf.] give λαοί; Cod. B*, Vulg., et al. give the singular, which his more in accordance with the symbolical expression.
- <sup>9</sup> Ver. 3. [Tisch. (8th Ed.), Treg. omit with N. B.* et al.; Lach., Tisch. (1859), Alf. give it with A. P., Vulg., et al.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>10</sup> Ver. 4. [Tisch., omitting the last clause of ver. 3 inserts merely a comma between αὐτὸν and καί. The rendering of his reading is—God himself shall be with them, and shall wipe, etc.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>11</sup> Ver. 5. [Crit. Eds. generally omit μοι with A. B*.; it is given by N. P.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>12</sup> Ver. 5. A. B*, et al., give πιστοὶ καὶ ἀληθινοί; the Rec. reads inversely.
- <sup>13</sup> Ver. 6. There are three readings here: A., et al., give γέγοναν; B* gives γέγονα ἡνὶ ἐμοί, etc.; the Rec. takes its reading from chap. xvi. 17. [Lach., Tisch. (8th Ed.), Treg. give γέγοναν; Alf. brackets the ν.—E. R. C.]
- <sup>14</sup> Ver. 6. [Tisch. (8th Ed.) omits εἰμι with N. B* P.; Lach., Treg., Tisch. (1859) insert it with A., Vulg., et al.; Alf. brackets. The reading of the entire passage from γέγονα (ν) is exceedingly uncertain. The possible renderings as given by Alford are: "They (viz. those words or all things) are fulfilled. I am the Alpha and the Omega," or "I am become the Alpha and the Omega."—E. R. C.]
- <sup>15</sup> Ver. 7. The reading ταῦτα, in acc. with Codd. A. B*, et al., is given instead of the Rec.
- <sup>16</sup> Ver. 8. Cod. B., et al., insert καὶ ἀμαρτωλοῖς. Since ἀνίσταται is given in a more special sense, ἀμαρτ. might be given in a more special sense also. On account, however, of the significant totality of terms, it seems to be an addition.

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

Two points must here be established at the outset. First, the detachment of the section ch. xx. 11–14 from the foregoing last special judgment, the judgment upon Satan. Secondly, the distinction, which is carried out here also, of a predominantly heavenly-ideal and a predominantly terrestri-real vision-picture, or the distinction of the sections ch. xxi. 1-8 and ch. xxi. 9-xxii. 5. In respect to the first point, with the judgment upon Satan the last part of the world-judgment internal to this present world and life, or the outpouring of the Vials of Anger, is accomplished. Though the universal end-judgment is, by the Scriptures and the Church, pre-eminently denominated the Dies Irae, it lies beyond the proper department of the Vials of Anger, since it introduces the eternal dooms, and is a judgment unto life for the blessed, as well as a death-judgment upon the damned; irrespective of the fact that the term of the end-judgment is, in Eschatology, summed up together with the foregoing special judgments in one great Day of Wrath, whose prelude is to be beheld in the day of wrath upon Jerusalem. In respect to the second point, we must not overlook the fact that the two finales contained in ch. xxi. 6, 7 and ch. xxii. 4, 5 would, as tautologies, obscure the text, if they were not to be regarded as parallels, in perfect analogy with the parallels ch. xii. 6 and xii. 14. The antithesis does here, indeed, issue in a point in which the two lines are not so strongly distinguished—Heaven descends to earth: earth becomes Heaven—; still, the pause between the visional Heaven-picture and the appearance of the City of God upon earth is distinctly perceptible (chap. xxi. 10).

The present Section A branches into the great antithesis of the end of the old world and the appearance or, primarily, the heavenly development, of the new world.

The centre and causality of the end of the world is the great white throne and the Judge enthroned thereon. The adjectives great and white manifestly denote the majesty and holiness of the Judge and His judgment.

In harmony with the universalism of the judgment and in accordance with vers. 4 and 5, God Himself is to be understood by the Judge; not, however, to the exclusion of the fact that Christ is the appearance of the great judging God (Tit. ii. 18), and thus His Parousia has here mediated the Last Judgment. With the great appearance of God the Judge, a complete subversion of the old form of the world takes place:—the corporeal world becomes nothing; the spiritual world becomes all. From His face the earth and the Heaven fled: and fled without a goal—they vanished. This cannot be apprehended as a real annihilation of the world, as the ancient orthodoxy maintained. And though the idea does essentially coincide with the fiery metamorphosis of 2 Pet. iii. 10-18, it was not the intention of the Seer hyperbolically to express that fact [of the fiery metamorphosis]. Rather, in the antithesis, The corporeal world vanishes, the spiritual world appears, is contained the strongest expression of the thought that at last, under the almighty operation of the absolute personality of God, personal relations, as the true life-principles of the world, must become perfectly manifest. Above all, the old antithesis between Heaven and earth is hereby removed. But as decidedly as worldly relations withdraw, spiritual relations come into prominence. The Seer beholds the dead standing before the throne;—the great, because even the greatest is subject to this judgment, and the small, because even the smallest shall have perfect justice done him here. And with this the general resurrection is expressed; emphasis is not laid upon it, however, in the same manner as upon the first resurrection, because it is not specifically a resurrection to life. Clearly and positively as personalities themselves appear before the throne, just so distinctly are all the works of all individuals—works which bear the impress of their characters and which have fixed their destinies—in everlasting remembrance. There are the books, which are opened for the revelation of these works, in the unitous character of which latter the judicial sentence is, de facto, already extant (Matt. xii. 37). From the books the Seer distinguishes the book, the book of life, as the book καρ ἐξοχης, the Bible of eternity set forth in living Divine images. In this book, that sum total is already made up, for which the books in the plural contain, amongst other things, the material. Those who are written in this book have already, in spirit, passed the judgment (John v. 24; Rom. vi.; Gal. ii. 19). The result of the life of other men is contained in the books, but is also summed up in the brief epitome presented in the statement that they have fallen under judgment if their names are not found in the book of life. The following antitheses should be noted: 1. The books and the book; 2. The works and the names; 3. The lostness of the names of the lost in the confusion of their works; and the concentration of the works of faith in the names of the faithful, the perfected characters. Formally, therefore, the judgment is general; all stand before the throne. And it must all the more be general, since the very separation of the righteous from the mass of the unrighteous is itself the expression and illustration of the judgment. In a material aspect, however, the general judgment, with this very separation of the righteous, brings in view the special judgment of damnation; the more, since the truly perfected Christians, the eschatological Christians, we might say the approved ones of the end-time, with all the martyrs, who represent a spiritual end-time through the entire course of the world's history (scarcely those also who have become believers during the thousand years), are already, through the first resurrection, not only exempted from the judgment, but also called to share in its administration.

This general description of the judgment is followed by a specialization which goes back to the beginning. And first in regard to the dead. They come back from every direction out of the condition in which they have been hitherto; through the medium of the general resurrection they are placed before the throne of God. Not even into the abyss could they have sunk so deep as not to appear again. We, therefore, apprehend the detailed description as a gradation. That they are given back by the earth is assumed by the Seer as a matter of course. But also by the sea, in whose depths they seemed to have vanished forever; by death, by the power of death itself; and by the realm of the dead [Hades]*—are they given up. So far as the immortality of the soul is concerned, these categories are all alike: in whatever way they [as to body] perished, they all [as to soul] live on. Again, so far as death is concerned, they are all dead and in the realm of the dead [Hades]. But in respect of the relation of these categories to a bodily appearance before the throne of God, gradual distinctions are formed. They vanished in the depth of the ocean;—they are here again. They seemed long since a prey to the power of death;—they are living again. They seemed to be floating away as shades in the gloomy land beyond the portals of death;—here they come as entire men in the reality of earthly life, summoned before the judgment throne of God. So they are judged, each one according to his work. The judgment is thus thoroughly general and thoroughly individual, and likewise, as the final judgment, characterized as in accordance with the works of those judged (Matt. xxv.). The judgment makes a thorough end of the old form of the world. Death itself is cast into the pool of fire. As the natural life of the blessed is swallowed up in the spiritual life, so the natural death is merged into the spiritual death. The natural death appertains to the region of becoming; with the abolition of this region, it is itself abolished. What remains of it is the sense of continual self-annihilation in the region of an absolutely indifferenzed [neutralized] self-tormenting existence. The whole institution of the realm of the dead [Hades], so far as its dark side is concerned, passes into the pool of fire, into the condition of a death multiplied into itself, and yet a conscious, living death. Again, together with death and Hades, the spiritually dead incur the judgment of the pool of fire. Life, life, life, to infinitude, is denoted when it is said: the name is found in the book of life. The contrast is death, death, death, to infinitude. Middle positions, uncertain, wavering forms, have ceased to be, for it is the harvest of the world.

The pool of fire, or the pond-like, stagnating lake of fire, denotes the entire precipitate of the world and worldly history; hence the new world can unfold itself, over against it, in all its glory. The Seer first beholds the new world in the antithesis of the new Heaven and the new earth, for the old Heaven and the old earth have departed, and the sea is not any more. The sea is the womb of shapeless life, as the nutriment of life that is in process of shaping, and in this respect it is an attribute of the region of becoming, but not of the region of being. It will be understood that Heaven and earth are intended not in the cosmical sense merely, but also in the spiritual sense, and this may be true of the sea also. For the sea of nations is, in common with the mundane sea, a womb—a womb of characters, as the latter is of creatures. That which is to unite Heaven and earth is the Holy City, the New Jerusalem, prepared in Heaven by God as a bride adorned for her husband.

Our first business here is to reconcile this Parousia of the perfected Church of God with the Parousia of Christ and His escort (ch. xix.

14). It is impossible to accept the confused notion that another Parousia of Christ from Heaven must ensue here. Consequently, we must distinguish the train of His elect, which has accompanied Him to earth, and has here compacted itself into a whole, from the general constituents of the Church Triumphant; a distinction which was suggested in chs. vii. and xiv. The Church Triumphant in the other world does not consist purely of warriors of God [Gotteskämpfer] in the narrower sense of that term, and it has found a new home in that other world. Therefore the barrier between Heaven and earth must be in the act of vanishing, if the new earth is to be raised to the dignity of becoming the mother-country of the new Church of God. This, however, seems to be a polar vital law: Principal consummation bears upward from earth to Heaven; the consummate appearance of life brings back again from Heaven to earth. This may be otherwise expressed as follows: Redemption, as principal, first conducts the redeemed from without inwards; next, as eschatological, from within outwards.

Thus ensues the heavenly consummation of God's Kingdom upon earth. It is proclaimed by a great voice from the Throne—hence by a solemn declaration in the name of the Divine government—in a progressive series of theocratic items.

First, the theocratic cultus shall find its fulfillment in the consummation of the Kingdom of glory. Behold, the Tabernacle of God is with men. That which was typically heralded by the Jewish tabernacle, and, later, by the Temple; that which the Church principally realized,—attains now its consummate and visible appearance: a Congregation of God, in which man's communion with God is completely realized.

Secondly, the visible appearance of the full harvest of all pious tear-seed sown throughout the history of the world. God will wipe away every tear from their eyes. An image which might have been drawn from the nursery is employed to express the sublimest thought—the transmutation of all the earthly sufferings of the pious into heavenly bliss, through the sensible presence of Divine love and faithfulness. We may also say—the perfect transfiguration of the cross. For the first things have departed. A second, imperishable Kingdom of Life has arisen, in contrast to the second death.

Thirdly, the visible appearance of the renewal of the earth, or rather of the whole earthly Cosmos,—relatively, of the whole universe itself. Behold, I make all things new. This promise, too, must be written; it becomes, in pursuance of the Divine order, a written bond for the hope of mankind, like the promises in ch. xiv. 13 and ch. xix. 9.

Fourthly, the full realization of all the promissory words of God. And He said unto me: They are fulfilled. Namely, the words of which it is declared: They are trustworthy and true [veritable]. They have become realized in the new earth, as words creative of God's second, new and eternal world. The surety for them is given by the same God Who must be the Omega of all life, because He is its beginning (see Rom. xi. 36).

* [See Excursus at the end of this Section.—E. R. C.]

Fifthly, together with the universal destiny of the world, all individual destinies are fulfilled. For the men of longing, all longing for the eternal will be satisfied. The fountain of the water of life—highest life and sense of life, springing forth to infinitude from the depths of the God-head—is offered for the free enjoyment of all who have thirsted for it.

But as the highest need of the soul, the longing for its true element, has made the thirsters warriors, combatants against all illusions of false satisfaction, and since victory has crowned the constant conflict, the second individualization of the promise runs thus: He that conquereth [or the conqueror] shall inherit these things—namely, the fulfilment of all these promises. And that which constitutes the centre, the sum and substance of this inheritance, is expressed in the words: I will be his God, and he shall be My son (1 John iii. 2).

Because the reference is to a conquest and a fulfilment conditioned entirely upon ethical grounds, an antithesis is once more employed.

It is highly significant that the lost are designated, above all, as cowards. In respect of the measure and vocation of man, in face of eternity and its revelations, faith is, in the first place, heroic bravery and gallantry; on the other hand, unbelief, in its fundamental form, is faint-heartedness, cowardice, despair as to the high calling of God and the high vocation of human nature. Under this characterism, therefore, the unbeliever comes, with his timorousness in view of Divine truth; the sinner, in the narrower sense of the term, as one who is timorous in regard to the worth of righteousness; * the murderer, who was timorous at the calling of love; the fornicator, who was timorous at the law of spiritual liberty and purity of life; the sorcerer, who was timorous at the sanctity of Nature's laws; the idolater, who, in his timorousness, surrendered the glory of the knowledge of God; also the liar, who despaired as to the good in truth;—they all cowardly despaired of the Life in life, the Divine word, law and Spirit—hence their portion shall be in the pool of fire. Their tendency led, in a straight line, to the perturbation of their being in absolute irritation.

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ch. xx. 11. The pause between the foregoing section and the present one is marked by the announcement of a new vision: καὶ εἶδον.

Ver. 11. A great white throne.—The greatness and whiteness are indicative of the glory and holiness of the throne (Düsterd.).

And the One sitting upon it.—Who is this? Answers: 1. The Messiah (Bengel et al.; Matt. xxvi. 31 [64?]); 2. God (De Wette, Hengstenb., Düsterd.; see chap. i. 8; iv. 8; xxi. 5, 6; Dan. vii. 9); 3. God and Christ, "the Two forming One, in perfect undividedness" (Ewald). With this modification, the visible appearance of God in Christ, No. 3 is entirely correct (Tit. ii. 13; 1 John v. 20).—The earth and the heaven fled (see chap. xvi. 20; xxi. 1).—The antithesis between the appearance of God and the disappearance of the world as world, is represented under the figure of an antagonism and conflict. Before the God Who maketh all things new the old form of the world takes to flight.—And place was not found for them.—The renewal pervades everything.

Ver. 12. And I saw.—The dead have once more taken visible shape.—The great and the small (see chap. xi. 18; xiii. 16).—The perfect equality of men before the judgment seat of God is repeatedly declared. The 12th verse, as Düsterdieck judiciously remarks, closes with a general description; ver. 13th then reverts to special items, as in ch. xv. 1 and 6. Bengel and Hengst. apprehend the relation as a continuous unitous description: in that case, the νεκροί of ver. 12 would necessarily be those who are transformed, who have lived to see the day of the Parousia, in contrast to those who are really raised from the dead. Such a view does violence to the text.—Books were opened.—(Dan. vii. 10). As there is repeated mention of books in the Apocalypse, so likewise is there in the Gospel of John (the Scriptures); see especially ch. xxi. 25. The book of life is but one; it is the book of the life of mankind in a concentrated form. Whilst the books seem to be journals concerning the works of all, the book contains the heavenly result of the history of the world, a register of the treasure, the κλῆρος, the harvest of God, in the names of the blessed. Since the entire decision is briefly contained in the question: Is the name of such and such a man in the book of life, or not? the books occupy the place of vouchers. Thus in Matt. xxv. the one book is illustrated in the statement that Christ places the sheep on His right hand, and the goats on His left hand; the ensuing discussion of the works of the righteous and the wicked, however, is suggestive of the books.

Ver. 13. And the sea.—The sea cannot here be understood directly as the sea of nations, although it is thus that Hengstenberg defines even this declaration, maintaining that the reference is to those who have perished in the battles of the nations. According to this, the literal form of the passage would be: the battle-fields gave back their dead. In this case, in the subsequent sentence where it speaks of death as giving up its dead, we should have to understand those who had fallen on those fields of battle, rather than, with Hengstenberg, unblest dead ones. However, the reference is rather to different conditions of the dead. Personalities of all sorts (ver. 12) must re-appear out of mortal conditions of all sorts (see SYN. VIEW). In regard to the sea, De Wette, after Weinstein, groundlessly cites a pagan idea here, according to which those who had been swallowed up in the sea did not enter Hades. According to Düsterdieck, this second presentation [ver. 13] embraces only such as incur the punishment of the second death or the lake of fire. This assumption is based upon the false hypothesis that, according to ver. 5, all believers rose from the dead at the beginning of the Millennial Kingdom. In that case the beginning of the Millennial Kingdom would really have constituted the judgment itself. Any blessed effects of the * See TEXT. AND GRAM. NOTES.

Parousia upon the world of nations would then have been out of the question.

Ver. 14. And Death and Hades, etc.—“Death and Hades,* presented in ver. 18 (comp. ch. i. 18) as localities, here appear (comp. ch. vi. 8) personified, as demonic powers” (Düsterdieck). The Apocalypticist, however, would probably not father this conception. The inference is, rather, that the pool of fire must not be understood in a purely ethical sense, but that it has also its physical side. And this declaration doubtless imports that the two ground-forms of the old mortality—first, dying itself, and secondly, the mode of existence of the dead—are merged in their consummation-form, in which nothing remains of them but the second death, the æonic suffering of the lost (see Is. xxv. 8; 1 Cor. xv. 26).

Ver. 15. And if any one was not, etc.—Literally apprehended, this seems very hard; ideally apprehended it means, where the second, higher life is utterly wanting, there is the second death; the essential and proper fulfillment of death; the natural, and therefore the positive consequence.

Ch. xxi. 1. And I saw.—Picture of the consummation—first, as a Heaven-picture. The final goal of the history of the old world; therefore, the final goal of all the longing of all the pious (Rom. viii.), of all revelations of salvation and prophecies, of all the forms and operations of the redemption and of the Kingdom of God, and hence even of all judgments, which at last, in the concentration of the final judgment, were obliged to make room for the eternal City of God. “Augustine (De Civ. Dei xx. 17) apprehends what follows de seculo futuro et immortalitate et æternitate sanctorum, and this opinion of his has, with more justice than others pronounced by him upon the Apocalypse, become authoritative.” De WETTE. Even Hengstenberg, with a salto mortale, touching lightly the last period of the rebellion of Gog and Magog, has leaped from the mediæval Kingdom into the consummation-time of the new Jerusalem. Grotius, on the contrary, keeps to the period subsequent to Constantine, and Vitringa conceives of the time as still prior to the universal judgment (comp. Düsterd., p. 562, but particularly De Wette, p. 194). From the stand-point of a conception of heavenly felicity as abstractly spiritual, many have been unable to reconcile themselves to this descent of Heaven to earth, in antithesis to a rising of earth to Heaven. “The idea of the Church Triumphant is not that which precisely corresponds with the idea presented here: the conception here presented is that of the Kingdom of God in its consummation—a Kingdom for which Christ has, in His Church, broken the way—a Kingdom which has been gradually actualized—the Kingdom of the whole of redeemed and blessed humanity; the dominion of Christ is merged in that of God, Who is present (ver. 11), and shares His Throne with the Lamb (ch. xxii. 1).” De WETTE.

A new Heaven and a new earth (Is. lxi. 17; lxi.; Psalm civ. 80). “The theological question as to whether the old world is to pass away in such a manner that the new world will arise from it as from a seed, or whether an absolute new creation, following upon the complete destruction of the old world, is to be assumed, can be decided least of all by the Apocalyptic description; this description, however (comp. also 2 Pet. iii. 10 sqq.), is not opposed to the former view, which has greater Scriptural probabilities in its favor than the latter (1 Cor. xv. 42 sqq.; Rom. viii. 21; Matt. xix. 28).” DÜSTERDIECK. On the contrary, the Apocalypse alone sets forth the true mediation of the last metamorphosis of the old world, in the Millennial Kingdom. The idea of the antithesis of an absolute destruction and new creation belongs only to the half-spiritualistic, half-materialistic letter-theology of orthodoxism.

And the sea.—Why is it no more? The following answers to this inquiry are presented by Düsterdieck: 1. Navigation is no longer necessary (Andr.); 2. It is dried up by the universal conflagration (Bede); 3. As the old world arose out of the water, so the new has arisen out of the fire (De Wette); 4. A horror of the deep sea (Ewald); 5. There was no sea in Paradise either (Züllig); 6. Connection of the sea with the infernal abyss (Ewald II.); 7. The sea as a constituent part of the old world. “The text does not forbid the idea of a new sea accompanying the new earth” (Düsterd.). For our explanation see the SYNOPT. VIEW.

Ver. 2. The holy City.—New Jerusalem.—It is related to the ἡνὶ Ἱερουσαλὴμ (Gal. iv. 26) as the resurrection is related to the principle of the new life; or the Palingenesia to the ἀναγέννησις; as the end to the harvest (1 Cor. xv.). The heavenly essence of the Church of God, possessed by it even upon earth, here arrives at a heavenly manifestation.

Coming down from God.—For a kindred rabbinical conception, cited by Wetstein on the passage in Galatians, see Düsterdieck, p. 563. Prepared.—See ch. xix. 7, 8; 2 Cor. xi. 2; Eph. v. 27; 1 Pet. iii. 8. The new Jerusalem, as the sum of perfected individuals, is the City of God; in its unity, it is the Bride of Christ. The consummate manhood of all the citizens of the City of God is conditioned by their consummate receptivity, which extends even to perfect unanimity.

Ver. 3. Behold, the tabernacle of God.—See Is. ii. 8; iv. 6; Ezek. xxxvii. 27; xliii. 7; 1 Cor. iii. 9; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. ii. 19–22.

Ver. 4. God shall wipe away, etc.—See Ps. cxxvi. 5, 6; Is. xxv. 8; lxi. 19. Death.—See ch. xx. 14. Sorrow.—Mourning for the dead, especially. Nor crying, nor pain.—Κραυγή is the acute form of sorrow (“vehement outcry,—for instance, at the experience of such acts of violence as are indicated in ch. xiii. 10, 17; ii. 10. [Bleek, Ewald; comp. Ex. iii. 7, 9; Esther iv. 8.]” DÜSTERD.). The πόνος, pain, or painful labor, is the chronic form of the same. For the first things.—To be taken in an emphatic sense, like the first man (1 Cor. xv. 4, 5 sqq.)—the present æon. In accordance with the entire mass of Holy Scripture, the world is designed to be a succession of two worlds.

Ver. 5. And the One sitting upon the throne, etc.—“That which the heavenly voice [ver. 8], interpreting the vision of John, had proclaimed, is now confirmed by the One sitting upon the throne (comp. chap. xx. 11), in two speeches.” DÜSTERDIECK. The words, And He saith unto me: Write: for these words, etc., are, according to Bengel, Züllig, Hengst., and Düsterdieck, an interlogue [Zwischenrede=between-speech] on the part of the Angel; these commentators refer to ch. xix. 9 and xxii. 6. Observe, however, the change between ch. xiv. 9 sqq. and ver. 18 [to which also reference is made by Düsterdieck]. There the discourse of the Angel is followed by a speech from Heaven which commands the Seer to write the comforting declaration [ver. 18]. We therefore cannot infer from ch. xix. 9 that an angelic speech here interrupts the voice from the throne. And this inference is the less proper from the fact that it would seem very strange for the speech of an Angel to be made to corroborate the language of God Himself. Moreover, the Divine speech in ver. 6 is too closely connected with ver. 5 for the above-cited view to be tenable.

* [See Excursus at the end of the section.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 6. They are fulfilled.—Comp. chap. xvi. 17. According to Düsterdieck, γέγοναν refers to what John has previously seen. But his visions were sure in themselves. We refer the expression to the ἄλγοι in the sense of highest realization; they have become facts. The words, I am the Alpha and the Omega, etc., contain the proof of the foregoing assertion that the words of God are, on the one hand, words of absolute faithfulness (πιστοί), and, on the other hand, of absolute reality (ἀληθινοί).—I will give unto him that thirsteth, etc.—In the satisfaction of all true human longing, the height of human blessedness is expressed (blessedness = possession of fullness; comp. the Lexicons).

Ver. 7. He that conquereth.—(See the Seven Epistles.) Here, towards the end, we are once more carried back to the beginning. For the nucleus of the Seven Churches, considered in their symbolic totality, is the foundation for the glorious City of God which is now about to appear.—God as the inheritance of man; consummate blessedness: man as the son of God; consummate dignity (Matt. v. 9; Rom. viii. 17).

Ver. 8. But the cowardly.—δειλοί. “In contrast to ὁ νικῶν, those Christians are meant who elude the painful combat with the world by denying the faithfulness of the faith (Bengel, De Wette, Hengst.).” DÜSTERDIECK. This is certainly a much too special and superficial explanation. The category of these cowards, who were cowardly in the highest relation, embraces all the lost: that is, in other words—in view of the high epic goal of humanity, all lagging behind and being lost is traced back to a lack of specific heroic manly courage, to a shameful straggling from the ranks and a desertion of one’s colors. If we apprehend the δειλοί as composing a genus, a significant senary of species is formed: 1. Unbelievers and the abominable (in practice), transgressors against nature (see Rom. i.); 2. Murderers and fornicators (cruelty and sensuality—a well-known pair); 3. Sorcerers and idolaters. Even here the affinity is manifest. Now, however, a seventh sort supervenes, apparently,—liars. But it is not without import that an addition is here made—καὶ πᾶσι—in accordance with which these latter are classed with idolaters. Idolatry is in several instances in the Apocalypse designated as falsity (see ch. xiv. 6; also Grot., ch. xxi. 27; xxii. 15; comp. Rom. i. 25).—Unbelieving.—According to Bengel and Ewald: Apostates from the faith. According to Düsterdieck: Inhabitants of the earth hostile to the Christian faith. In the universal judgment, this distinction is no longer of any importance; the heathen is an unbeliever—the unbeliever is a heathen.—Abominable.—Those who through the working of abomination have made themselves abominable, ἐβδελυγμένοι, flagitiiis fædi.—Their part.—Change of construction. We are not to overlook the fact that they have deserved their lot, i. e., have drawn it upon themselves as the penalty of their sin.

[EXCURSUS ON HADES.]

By the American Editor.

[Concerning the souls of the departed, between the periods of their decease and the resurrection of their bodies, there are two questions of acknowledged interest. The one relates to their moral condition; the other, to their local habitation. The former of these questions it is not intended to discuss at all in this Excursus. The doctrine generally held in Protestant Churches is herein assumed to be true—viz.: that at death the period of gracious opportunity and discipline is brought to a close; that the souls of believers in Christ are at once made perfect in holiness and do immediately pass into glory; and that the souls of unbelievers, having sinned away their day of grace, are left hopeless in their sins, and are reserved in misery for public condemnation and everlasting destruction.

The second of these questions—viz.: that which relates to the local habitation of departed spirits—is one, not only of great interest, but also, in the judgment of all who have given special attention to it, of great difficulty. This difficulty arises, in the judgment of the writer, from three sources. The first and most important of these is the reticence of Scripture on the subject—but little is revealed thereon in the Word of God. More, however, is revealed than is generally supposed.

The second source of difficulty is properly introduced by the preceding remark. Notwithstanding the amount of distinct revelation, the whole matter is obscured to the reader of the English Version of the Bible by the erroneous rendering of the Hebrew term שְׁאוֹל (Sheol) and its Greek equivalent ᾍδης (Hades). These words which in the original Scriptures have a fixed and definite meaning, indicating a place in the Unseen World distinct from both Heaven and Hell (regarded as the place of final punishment), are constantly rendered by either grave or Hell. By this mistranslation an idea proper to the Word of God is completely blotted out from the English Version; and, not only so, but the texts which present that idea are distributed amongst those which set forth two entirely distinct ideas—thus obscuring the teachings of Scripture concerning both the grave and Hell. But the obscuring and confusing influence of this erroneous translation does not terminate upon those who study only the English Version. The first and most enduring conceptions of the doctrines of Scripture are derived from the Version we read in childhood—conceptions which, even when false, subsequent study often fails to eradicate. And beyond this,—every Version, especially the one in common use, is, to a certain extent, a Commentary, and as such exerts a powerful influence over the minds of students of the original Scriptures. Had the word Hades been reproduced in our Version, much of the confusion that now embarrasses this subject could never have found existence. And here it is in place to remark that even though the Greek and Hebrew words were indefinite, synonymous sometimes with grave and sometimes with Hell, it would have been well, since the Holy Ghost inspired synonyms, to have preserved their use in our Version.

The third source of difficulty is the general and almost unquestioned assumption that the dwelling-place of the souls of the righteous dead has been the same since the Resurrection of Christ that it was before that event—an assumption opposed, as the effort will be made to show, to distinct intimations in the Word of God. In consequence of this assumption, there have been two schools in the Evangelical Church, each basing its doctrine on the clear and irrefragable teaching of the Scriptures—the one, in view of the ante-resurrection testimony, affirming the existence of an intermediate place, located in Hades, into which the souls of those who now die in the Lord are carried; the other, in view of the post-resurrection testimony, denying that there is now, or ever has been, such a place.

It is the desire of the writer to contribute something toward the settlement of this interesting question; and to this end he will endeavor to set forth what seems to him, after careful investigation, to be the Scriptural teaching concerning Sheol or Hades. To avoid confusion, the Greek term Hades, which is the Septuagint and New Testament equivalent of the Hebrew Sheol, will be used throughout this article. It may also be remarked that the term Hell will always be employed as indicating the place of final punishment.

It will be proper to say something as to the principles and mode of the investigation as conducted in the study. It was assumed, in the first place, that it should be made entirely within the field of the original Scriptures—the Septuagint being used as a door of communication between the Hebrew of the Old Testament and the Greek of the New. It was also assumed that each expression employed in Scripture to indicate a topic of revelation, should be regarded as maintaining one uniform sense throughout the Word of God,—unless, indeed, the contexts of different instances of its use should require us to put different senses upon it. It is desirable that the limitation of this principle should be distinctly recognized. It was not dogmatically assumed that each expression must, at all hazards, be regarded as having only one sense; but that, until the contrary should appear, each passage should be so regarded. Now, the term Hades (Sheol) occurs sixty-five times in the Old Testament; in thirty-one instances it is rendered in the English Version by grave, in thirty-one by Hell,* and in three by pit. In the New Testament it occurs eleven times; in one of these instances it is rendered by grave, and in ten by Hell. It was not assumed that these renderings, or at least one class of them, must be wrong; on the contrary, it was admitted that the very fact that they had been made by the learned Translators carried with it strong probability of their essential correctness—not so strong, indeed, as to make unnecessary an investigation or to show the impropriety of this assumption in order thereto, yet sufficiently strong to make manifest the importance of the limitation.

As to the mode of the investigation—all the passages in which Hades occurs were tabulated and compared together, with the view of determining whether, consistently with the contextual requirements of each, some uniform meaning might not be given to the term. The experiment was successful beyond most sanguine expectation. It resulted in the conviction that by Hades is designated—I. Not the grave; II. Not Hell; III. Not the Unseen World, including Heaven and Hell; IV. Not the state of death; V. But—(1) a Place in the Unseen World distinct from both Heaven and Hell; (2) having, before the resurrection of Christ, two compartments—one of comfort, the other of misery; (3) to which, antecedent to the resurrection of Christ, the souls of all who died were carried; (4) into which Christ, at His death, descended, delivering the souls of the righteous; (5) to which, since the ascension of Christ, the souls of the wicked, and of the wicked only, have been consigned; (6) in which they are reserved in misery against the day of general judgment; (7) from which they are then to be brought for public judgment previously to their being cast into Hell.

The following argument is designed to commend the foregoing results of private study to others. It will be found to be strictly Scriptural. The truth of the facts on which it is based can be readily tested by any one who has access to the Englishman's Hebrew, the Englishman's Greek, and Cruden's English Concordance.

As a further preliminary it is proper, though scarcely necessary, to state that in conducting the special arguments to prove that Hades is not the grave, is not Hell, etc., it is not designed to assert that in many particular passages the original term cannot bear the meanings denied to them. It is freely admitted that in some instances it may be translated grave, and in others Hell, without destroying the sense. And so in some instances it might be translated house, and in others ship. This is but saying that in every passage the context does not determine the meaning of all the terms employed therein. It is contended, first, that in no passage are these meanings required by the context; and, secondly, that in many they are excluded thereby. It is also claimed that it will become apparent upon a careful examination that, while the one meaning attributed to the term in this Excursus is required by many passages, it is excluded by none—that consistently with the context, it may be put upon it in every instance of its occurrence in the Word of God.

* [In two of these, the Marginal reads grave.—E. B. C.]

It is also proper to mention that independent arguments will not be presented in proof of each one of the points included in the last general topic. It is believed that the truth of each will appear in the course of the general discussion.

I. Hades not the Grave.

This will be argued, in the first place, from data afforded by the Old Testament; and, secondly, from that afforded by the New.

A. That Hades must be regarded as having been used in the Old Testament to designate something different from the literal grave, seems to be evident from the following considerations:

1. It is never construed in the mode, nor with the terms, continually employed in the case of קבר (or קבריה), and which unmistakably mark that term as designating the place of the sepulture of the body. Thus קבר is used in both singular and plural;—it has a territorial location, Ex. xiv. 11; its site is purchased and sold, Gen. xxiii. 4–20; it is possessed by the owner of the soil or by the person buried therein, Gen. l. 5, xxxv. 20; it is dug by human hands, Gen. l. 5; it is connected with the verb signifying to bury, Gen. xlvii. 30;—dead bodies are buried in it by living men, Gen. l. 13;—it is marked by a monument, Gen. xxxv. 20; it may be touched by living men, Num. xix. 16; literal dead bones are in it, 2 Kings xiii. 21;—it may be opened by men and the bones exhumed, 2 Kings xxiii. 16. Hades is always singular; it is never thus construed; it is not in a single instance thus spoken of.

2. It is spoken of with expressions of comparison utterly inconsistent with the idea of the literal grave. Thus we read of—"The lowest Hades," Deut. xxxii. 22, Ps. lxxvi. 18; "The depths of Hades," Prov. ix. 18; "The midst of Hades," Ezek. xxxii. 21.

3. It is in two instances clearly distinguished from the grave. In Gen. xxvii. 35, where it first appears in the Bible, Jacob declares—"I will go down into Hades unto my son;" but from verse 38 we learn that the Patriarch was under the impression that Joseph had not, and could not have, a grave; he is there represented as exclaiming, "An evil beast hath devoured him." And in Isaiah xiv. 15 it is declared that Lucifer shall be "brought down to Hades," who, ver. 19, is represented as being "cast out of his (קבר) grave."

4. It is used in antithesis with Heaven under circumstances which show that the literal grave cannot be intended. "It is as high as Heaven, what canst thou do? deeper than Hades, what canst thou know?" Job xi. 8. "If I ascend up into Heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in Hades, behold, thou art there," Ps. cxxxix. 8. "Though they dig into Hades, thence shall mine hand take them: though they climb up to Heaven, thence will I bring them down," Amos ix. 2.

5. In the poetical Books it never occurs in one of two parallel clauses, answering to קבר in the other; nor under any other circumstances which grammatically require us to regard it as a synonym thereof.

6. It is manifestly used as synonymous with two other terms which cannot be regarded as indicating the literal grave—viz: כור* (pit) and תחתית ארץ neither parts of the earth.

The former of these, כור, occurs fifteen times, and is distinguished from קבר by all the general characteristics by which Hades is distinguished from it. That it is synonymous with Hades, or that it indicates a compartment thereof, is abundantly evident. In Ps. xxx. 3 the words appear in corresponding hemistiches—"O Lord, thou hast brought my soul from Hades; thou hast kept me alive that I should not go down to the (כור) pit." The same occurs in Prov. i. 12, "Let us swallow them up alive as Hades; and whole as those who go down to the pit." It is evident upon bare inspection that in Isaiah xiv. 15—"Thou shalt be brought down to Hades, to the sides of the pit"—the כור of the second clause is synonymous with the Hades of the first; it is also evident that it is synonymous with the Hades of verses 9 and 11, rendered in the former Hell and in the latter grave. That these words are synonymous will be further evident from an examination of Ezek. xxxi. 14–18. In that passage Hades occurs three times,—in ver. 15 it is translated grave; and in vers. 16 and 17, Hell: כור occurs twice, in vers. 14 and 16, and in both instances is rendered pit. The words translated "neither parts of the earth," in vers. 14, 16 and 18, are תחתית ארץ—a compound term manifestly synonymous with the other two.

The phrase תחתית ארץ or ארץ תחתית occurs nine times. In Ezek. xxxi. 14, 16, 18; xxxii. 18, 24; xxvi. 20, it is manifestly synonymous with Hades. In Ps. cxxxix. 15 it is used as a figurative expression for the womb. It also appears in Is. xlv. 28 and Ps. lxxiii. 9 (10). What does it mean in these passages? Dr. Hodge, in his Commentary on Ephesians (iv. 9), remarks concerning this phrase that it "is used for the Earth in opposition to Heaven, Is. xlv. 28; probably for the grave in Ps. lxxiii. 9; as a poetical designation for the womb in Ps. cxxxix. 15; and for Hades or the invisible world, Ezek. xxxi. 24." He gives no reason for any of these interpretations, evidently presuming that their correctness would be manifest upon inspection. No exception can be taken as to the propriety of his opinion in the last two instances, (save as to the judgment concerning the nature of Hades conveyed by the use of the alternative phrase—"or the invisible world"). It should be carefully noted, however, that the phrase appears in Ezekiel, not only in the one passage referred to by him, but in five others,—in all of which it is manifest that it must be synonymous with Hades. This then is not only an established, but it is the leading, sense of the expression; and we must conclude that it has this sense in the other three passages unless the contrary be required by the contexts.

* [This word should not be confounded with טָמָא, also occasionally translated pit, as in Psalm xxx. 3, and which is sometimes synonymous with קבר regarded as the place of physical corruption. The word translated pit in Ps. xxx. is כור as above.—E. B. C.]

Now in Ps. cxxxix. 15 the context requires that we should attach to it a figurative meaning. But what is there in the other passages to make it necessary to depart from the leading sense? Most certainly when the Psalmist exclaimed, Ps. lxxiii. 9, "Those that seek my soul to destroy it shall go into the lower parts of the earth," there is nothing to forbid the idea that he meant they should go into Hades. Nor, on the supposition that Hades was a place of conscious existence to which the souls of the departed good as well as of the evil were carried, is there anything unnatural or improbable in supposing that when Isaiah (xliv. 23) wrote, "Sing, O ye heavens, for the Lord hath done it: shout, ye lower parts of the earth," he intended to call on Hades to rejoice.

7. Those in Hades are spoken of as being in a state of conscious existence, which never occurs in the case of the occupants of קבר. In Is. xiv. 4-17, the chief ones of the earth who are already imprisoned in Hades, are represented as greeting the King of Babylon at his entrance with the words, "Art thou also become weak as we?" Similar teaching is found in Ezek. xxx. 16, xxxii. 21. With this agrees the idea suggested by the phrases, "sorrows of Hades," 2 Sam. xxii. 6, Ps. xvii. 5 (6); "pains of Hades," Ps. cxvi. 8; and with this agree also the facts that the womb (תַּחֲתֵיטִית אִמִּי), Ps. cxxxix. 15, and the belly of the whale in which Jonah (ii. 2) was imprisoned—both places of conscious existence, though of darkness and confinement—were figured by Hades. All this, it is true, may be attributed to poetic license—and so any teaching of the poetic Scriptures may thus be attributed. Nevertheless the fact remains that these declarations are found in the inspired Word of God in connection with Hades, and the further fact that similar expressions are never found in connection with קבר.

In view of all the foregoing considerations it seems rational to conclude that in the Old Testament Scriptures the term Hades was not used to designate the literal grave. Certain exegetical objections to this conclusion, may, however, present themselves to the minds of some. These, so far as they are known, or can be imagined, will now be considered.

(1) It may be urged that the declarations of Jacob and his sons concerning the bringing down of gray hairs to Hades, Gen. xlii. 88, xlv. 29, 31; and the direction of David to Solomon to bring to Hades the hoar heads of Joab and Shimei, 1 Kings ii. 6, 9; seem to imply that Hades was regarded as the resting-place of the body. This might be admitted, and at the same time a valid argument be drawn from other Scriptures requiring us to put another than the apparently normal construction upon the words of the Patriarch and David. We are not, however, driven to such a strait as this. Let it be observed that there is nothing in the form of the expressions to forbid our regarding the phrases gray hairs and hoar heads as indicating men in a state of old age. From this point of view there is nothing unnatural in regarding the Hades to which these old men were to be brought as a place of departed spirits. In the case of Jacob, for a reason already given, we cannot regard him as contemplating under this term the literal grave.

(2) In several passages, it may also be objected, Hades is spoken of under terms proper only to the grave. Ps. vi. 5 (6), "In Hades who shall give thee thanks?" Is. xxxviii. 18, "Hades cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee; they that go down to the pit cannot hope for thy truth;"—Ecc. ix. 10, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in Hades, whither thou goest."* It must be acknowledged that these passages, in themselves, irrespective of the condition of the writers, are consistent with the idea that by the term Hades as employed in them was meant the literal grave. This, however, is not a necessary interpretation—and if it be, let it be observed, these texts must be regarded as affirming that the grave is the end of man, as denying the immortality of the soul. But the passages are also consistent with the idea that by Hades is meant the state of death, or Hell, or a place of gloom in the Unseen World distinct from Hell. In the progress of the discussion each of these hypotheses will be considered.

(3) Again, it may be contended that the ideas of burial and physical consumption, which are ideas proper only to the grave, are presented in the following passages: Ps. xlix. 14 (15), "Like sheep they are laid in Hades, death shall feed on them," etc.; Job xxiv. 19, "Drought and heat consume the snow waters; so doth Hades those which have sinned."

The difficulty in these passages is altogether in the English translation. Dr. J. Addison Alexander translates the former, "Like a flock to the grave (Hades) they drive; death is their shepherd." In Job xxiv. 19, the verb translated consume is properly rendered violently take, as in the margin; the reference is to the rapacity of Hades—not to the consumption of the body. The declaration in the following verse—"the worm shall feed sweetly on him," may refer to the condition of the body when the spirit has been seized by Hades.

(4) It may also be asserted that in the Book of Job, especially in the xvii. chapter, the oneness of Hades with the grave seems to be naturally implied.

In the xvii. of Job, most of the words that have been brought into this discussion are employed: קבר, ver. 1; Hades, ver. 18; חֲסִידָה, ver. 14; and בֹּר, ver. 16. At first glance it would seem as though these terms had been used indiscriminately as synonyms for each other. Careful inspection, however, shows that they may be regarded as indicating the future of the entire man—the body to the grave, the spirit to the place of departed spirits. We, of the present day, sometimes speak of the grave as our place after death, and sometimes of the world of spirits as our place, without intending thereby to imply our belief that they are one and the same. So is language employed in the book of Job; and in chap. xvii. both forms of expression are introduced. Thus, naturally—and only thus—can the phraseology employed in Job be reconciled with itself and with other Scriptures.

* [It is by no means certain that this passage, Ecc. ix. 10, is to be regarded as an inspired utterance.—E. E. C.]

B. The New Testament teaching as to the distinction between Hades and μυρία or μυρμύριον (the grave or sepulchre) is remarkably clear.

The term, as remarked in the Introduction of this Excursus, occurs but eleven times in the New Testament, and in every instance save one it is, in the English Version, translated Hell. The excepted case is in 1 Cor. xv. 55, "O grave, where is thy victory." That in the other instances it will not bear the translation grave is evident upon bare inspection. These are as follows: "And thou, Capernaum, which art exalted unto Heaven, shalt be brought down to Hades," Matt. xi. 23; "The gates of Hades shall not prevail against it" (the Church), Matt. xvi. 18; "And thou, Capernaum . . . shalt be thrust down to Hades," Luke x. 15; "And in Hades he (Dives) lifted up his eyes, being in torments," Luke xvi. 23; "Thou wilt not leave my soul in Hades," Acts ii. 27; "His soul was not left in Hades," Acts ii. 31; "I . . . have the keys of Hades and of death," Rev. i. 18; "His name was Death and Hades followed with him," Rev. vi. 8; "Death and Hades delivered up the dead that were in them," Rev. xx. 13; "Death and Hades were cast into the lake of fire," Rev. xx. 14.

The New Testament idea of Hades as distinct from the grave may be most clearly perceived in the declaration concerning Dives in Luke xvi. 23; and in the didactic teaching of the Apostle Peter, Acts ii. 27-31, concerning the soul of Jesus between His death and His resurrection. The Apostle, manifestly, spoke of both the body and the soul of our Lord (comp. vers. 27 and 31), asserting that the former did not see corruption (although it was placed in a sepulchre), and that the latter was not left in Hades—implying, of course, that it went to Hades. Unless we adopt the conclusion that the soul sleeps with the dead body in the tomb—in the face of the manifest implications of the Apostle and the whole tenor of the Word of God—Hades must be distinct from the tomb. That the soul of Jesus did descend into Hades will, it is believed, more abundantly appear in the course of this Excursus.

Reference has been made to one instance in the New Testament in which the E. V. renders Hades by grave, viz., 1 Cor. xv. 55. In his comment on this passage, Dr. Hodge writes, in immediate continuance of what has already been quoted—"Here where the special reference is to the bodies of men and to the delivery of them from the power of death, it is properly rendered the grave. The Apostle is not speaking of the delivery of souls of men from any intermediate state, but of the redemption of the body." It is indeed true that the special reference is to the glorification of the body. But does this forbid the idea that there should be any reference to the soul, that, in the moment of the body's glorification and in essential order thereto, re-animates that body? If indeed there be, or has been, no place of the soul's imprisonment, then, of course, there can be no reference to such a place; but if, on the other hand, there is, or has been, such a place, what more natural than that, in view of the redemption of the body, which involves the complete deliverance of the soul, reference should be made to that deliverance?*

From all that has been said, it seems evident that the New Testament confirms the teaching of the Old as to the distinction between Hades and the literal grave.

II. Hades not Hell regarded as the Place of Final Punishment.

There are three opinions concerning Hades which it is important should be clearly distinguished from each other: the first, that it is Hell; the second, that it is the Unseen World including both Heaven and Hell; the third, that it is a term having no reference to place, but indicating merely the state of death. The first and second of these are often confounded together, and the second and third. That, however, they constitute three essentially distinct doctrines is evident upon reflection. It is designed in this section to show the fallacy of the first.

1. That Hades cannot be regarded as indicating merely Hell, is manifest from the fact that it is represented as the dwelling-place (antecedent to the resurrection of Jesus) of all the righteous dead.

The Patriarch Jacob declared his expectation of going into Hades, Gen. xxxvii. 35; Job made a like declaration, Job xvii. 13; the inspired David, Ps. xvi. 10, and the righteous Hezekiah, Is. xxxviii. 18, used language which implied that they entertained a similar expectation.

But the location of the spirits of these worthies in Hades locates all the rest of the righteous. Concerning Jacob it is declared, that upon his death he was "gathered unto his people," Gen. xlix. 33. This expression,—and the remark is also true of the similar phrase, "gathered unto his fathers,"—is one having reference to the spirit, and not to the body. That it is not an euphuism, as some contend, for being buried, is evident from three considerations: (1) Concerning Jacob it is declared, that "he gathered up his feet into the bed, and yielded up the ghost, and was gathered unto his people," Gen. xlix. 33. He was "gathered unto his people" immediately upon his death; but he was not buried until long after, Gen. l. 13; (2) Concerning both Abraham, Gen. xxv. 8, 9, and Isaac, Gen. xxxv. 29, it is declared that they died, and were gathered unto their people, and were buried; and (3) To Josiah God declared: "I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered unto thy grave (קבר) in peace," 2 Kings xxii. 20. Manifestly, being gathered to one's people (or fathers) was something distinct from both death and burial; and, further, God gathered to the fathers, man buried. The expression could have reference only to the spirit, and indicates the fact that all departed souls were carried to one place.

It may appear to some that Acts xiii. 86 mili-

* [The preponderance of textual authority, as is well-known, favors the reading θάνατος instead of ᾗδε. If this reading be correct, the passage is, of course, removed from the field of the present investigation. In such case, however, it is to be observed that there is not a single instance in the New Testament in which the context even apparently favors the rendering of Hades by the (literal) grave.—R. E. C.]

tates against the preceding explanation. It is therein declared, that David "fell on sleep, and was laid to his fathers, and saw corruption." The Greek words translated "laid to his fathers" (προσέτεθῃ πρὸς τοὺς πατέρας αὐτοῦ) are those used in the Septuagint to translate that oft-recurring Hebrew phrase which is rendered in the English Version: "gathered to his fathers." It must be acknowledged that in this passage, at first glance, the phrase seems to be an euphuism for buried; and this impression is deepened in the mind of the reader of the English Version by the improper rendering of προσέτεθῃ as laid to, instead of gathered to. The idea of burial is not merely suggested, but is directly presented by the term employed in translation. This is indeed a possible, though a most unusual, rendering of the verb. In this Septuagintal phrase, however, it is manifestly excluded by the fact that in the Septuagint it is the translation of the Hebrew קָבַץ, and consequently can have no meaning that the Hebrew verb has not. Now, whilst προσέτεθῃ may mean laid to, קָבַץ never has that meaning. The verse properly translated reads: "David fell asleep, and was gathered to his fathers, and saw corruption." This declaration, from bare inspection of it as it occurs in the New Testament, may mean either, (1) David died, and his body was buried, and saw corruption—the reference being only to the lower nature; or (2) David died, and his spirit went to the place of departed spirits, and his body saw corruption—the reference being to the whole man. Nor is there anything in the context that will enable us to decide which of these is the correct interpretation. We must be guided in our determination by the usus loquendi of the Hebrews. As we have seen that amongst them that phrase had reference to the spirit, we must place that meaning upon it when employed by the Apostle.

The foregoing argument in proof that the righteous dead were collected in Hades is fully borne out by the parable of Dives and Lazarus, Luke xvi. 19-31. Our Lord does not indeed directly declare that Lazarus was in Hades—concerning Dives only was this declaration made, ver. 23: "And in Hades he lifted up his eyes, being in torments." The whole parable, however, seems to be constructed on the idea that both were there—though in different compartments thereof. The underlying thought seems to be that Hades is a world to which the spirits of all the dead are consigned, having two compartments—one of comfort, and the other of misery—separated by an impassable gulf or chasm, but within speaking distance of each other. That our Lord did not intend to represent Lazarus as in Heaven seems to be evident. The place of his abode is not styled Heaven, but Abraham's bosom; he is not represented as being carried up to it (the general form of expression when Heaven is the terminus), he is simply carried; it is within speaking distance of Dives, being separated from him only by a chasm—but Heaven and Hades are represented as being poles apart: "It is as high as Heaven—deeper than Hades," Job xi. 8; its central figure is not God, but Abraham; God is not there in His glory, nor angels save as ministers of transportation; it is not represented as a place of perfect bliss—Lazarus is merely comforted (παρηλαίεται), a term never used in descriptions of the blessedness of Heaven. The hypothesis that Jesus contemplated Lazarus as in Hades not only gives force and consistency to the whole parable, but is directly in accordance with the natural interpretation of the brief and scattered teachings of the Old Testament concerning the abode of the righteous dead. It presumes that He spoke just as we would suppose that a Jew, acquainted with the sacred Books of his people, would speak. So natural is this hypothesis that there have been interpreters who adopted it, and then attempted to explain our Lord's implied representation of the position of Lazarus as a mere condescension to Jewish prejudices!

In view of all the facts, is it possible to resist the conclusion that in uttering this parable, our Lord recognized the existence of a Jewish belief as to the abode of the righteous in accordance with the natural interpretation of the Old Testament teachings, and that He also recognized the correctness of that belief?*

The fact that the pious dead, as well as the wicked, were in Hades, excludes the idea of its being, in its entirety, Hell regarded as the place of final punishment.

III. Hades not the Unseen World including Heaven and Hell.

The dogma now about to be controverted is to be carefully distinguished from another with which it is too frequently confounded, and which will hereafter be considered, viz. that Hades indicates the state of death. In the view now before us, it is a place; in the other, a condition.

If Hades be the Unseen World—a Place including the places HEAVEN and HELL, as Europe includes France and Germany—and if there be no other place included therein, then the Hades of the wicked must be Hell, and the Hades of the righteous must be Heaven. The effort will now be made to show that neither of these subordinate hypotheses is scriptural.

1. Hades, as the present abode of the disembodied spirits of the wicked, is not Hell. Throughout the Scriptures it is distinguished from the place of final punishment of devils and men.

In the beginning of this particular investigation, special attention is called to the fact that nowhere in the Bible is it said that fallen angels are in Hades, or that they are to be consigned thereto. The Lucifer, Is. xiv. 15, spoken of as "brought down to Hades," was not the fallen Archangel; but, as we learn from ver. 4 of the same chapter, the King of Babylon. The word translated Hell in 2 Pet. ii. 4: "God spared not angels that sinned, but cast them down to Hell," is not Hades. The whole phrase cast them down to Hell is the translation of the participle ραπαρώσας—i. e. cast them into Tartarus. Devils have another place of punishment than Hades, viz., Tartarus, as in the passage just cited; or the abyss, as in Luke viii. 31, where the legion of unclean spirits cast out from the possessed man in the country of the Gadarenes are represented as beseeching our Lord "that he would not command them to go out into the (ἀβυσσόν) deep." This matter, however, will hereafter be more fully considered.

* [The very parable suggests the idea that the phrase Abraham's bosom might have been a Jewish name for the place of departed Saints in Hades.—J. E. C.]

In the Old Testament there is occasionally and dimly set forth the existence of a place of darkness and woe other than Hades, viz., Abaddon (אבדון), translated in our Version destruction. Thus Job xxvi. 6, "Hades is naked before Him, and Abaddon hath no covering;" Job xxviii. 22, "Abaddon and death (מוֹת) say, We have heard the fame thereof;" Job xxxi. 12, "It is a fire that consumeth to Abaddon;" Ps. lxxxviii. 12, "Shall thy loving-kindness be declared in the grave (קִבְרִים), or thy faithfulness in Abaddon?" Prov. xv. 11, "Hades and Abaddon are ever before the Lord;" Prov. xxvii. 20, "Hades and Abaddon are never full."

As we enter the New Testament, we perceive that what is but dimly adumbrated in the Old, is therein distinctly declared—though concealed from the readers of the English Version by infelicities of translation.

In Rev. ix. 1-3 an angel to whom was given the key of the pit of the Abyss (τὸ φέταρ τῆς ἀβύσσου)—incorrectly translated bottomless pit—opens the pit whence come out locusts. These locusts are described, verse 11, as having "a King over them, who is the Angel of the pit of the Abyss, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon." Now, be it remembered that Abaddon is the name of that place of woe mentioned in the Old Testament other than Hades—of which term ἀπόλεια (Apoleia) is the Septuagint translation. Does not the name given to this leader beget, to say the least, the suspicion that either the pit whence he comes, or the place of woe to which he is to be consigned, should it prove other than the pit, may be the Abaddon shadowed forth in the Old Testament?

In Rev. xvii. 8 reference is made to a Beast that ascends out of the pit of the abyss and who is to go into perdition (ἀπόλεια); in xix. 20 he is represented as being cast "into the (not a) lake of fire burning with brimstone"—manifestly he meets his foretold doom, this lake of fire is the Apoleia, the Abaddon, into which he was to go. In Rev. xx. 3 Satan is represented as being shut up in the Abyss for a thousand years; after his imprisonment he is loosed again for a little season, and then, ver. 10, is cast into "the lake of fire and brimstone where the Beast and the False Prophet are"—he also is cast into APOLEIA. Then follows the account of the general judgment (vers. 11-13), after which (vers. 14, 15) "death and Hades" (or those detained by them) were to be cast into the same lake. This is declared to be the second death. It seems unquestionable that this "lake of fire" (Apoleia=Abaddon), from which both Hades, and the pit of the Abyss seem to be distinguished, as jails from the penitentiary, is Hell regarded as the place of the final and everlasting punishment of devils and ungodly men.

With the instruction thus gathered from the Apocalypse, agree the teachings elsewhere scattered through the New Testament. It is a well known fact that there are two words in the Greek Testament which in the English Version are rendered Hell—Hades and Gehenna. Our Lord is represented as employing the former of these only three times—in reference to the humiliation of Capernaum, Matt. xi. 23; Luke x. 15; to the deliverance of the Church from its power, Matt. xvi. 18; and to the imprisonment of the disembodied spirit of Dives, Luke xvi. 23. When he uttered His fearful threatenings concerning the casting of both body and soul into Hell, into unquenchable fire, the term employed by him was Gehenna; see Matt. v. 22, 29, 30; x. 28; xviii. 9; xxiii. 15, 33; Mark ix. 43-47; Luke xii. 5. These passages, especially Mark ix. 43, where Gehenna is described as the place of "the fire that never shall be quenched," immediately connect themselves with Matt. xiii. 42 and xxv. 41, and show that this place of torment is "the furnace of fire"—the "everlasting fire prepared for the Devil and his angels," into which at "the end of the world"—after the judgment—the wicked are to be cast. And these passages are manifestly parallel with Rev. xx. 10-15—"the furnace of fire" and the "everlasting fire prepared for the Devil and his angels" are "the lake of fire" into which the Devil and those delivered up by Hades for judgment shall be cast.

Directly in line with the teachings thus developed are those of the Apostles. Peter and Jude (2 Pet. ii. 4; Jude 6) agree in declaring that the angels who kept not their first estate are "reserved in everlasting chains under darkness unto the judgment of the great day." Are they not in the pit of the abyss (with the exception of those permitted for a season to come forth with their leader), reserved for that awful day when, with Satan, they shall be cast into that "everlasting fire prepared for the Devil and his angels?" The "everlasting destruction" threatened in 2 Thess. i. 9, is to be inflicted after Jesus has come in flaming fire taking vengeance—after His advent for judgment. Until that time also, when "the Lord cometh with ten thousand of His saints to execute judgment upon all," "is reserved the blackness of darkness forever" which the Apostle Jude teaches us is reserved for the ungodly, Jude 11-15. That the ungodly are in Hades all admit, but they are not yet in their place of final and everlasting punishment—they are not yet in Hell.

Another line of thought bearing on this special subject will now be presented, rather by way of question than of argument. In view of the use of apoleia (abaddon) in the Old Testament and in the Book of Revelation, may there not be some reference to the place of final punishment when it is employed by Jesus and His Apostles—especially when the article is expressed, as is frequently the case? Our Lord declares, Matt. vii. 13, "Broad is the road that leadeth to τὴν ἀπόλειαν. He describes Judas, John xvii. 12, as "the son of τῆς ἀπόλειας. The Apostle Paul, 2 Thess. ii. 3, speaks of the revelation of "the son of τῆς ἀπόλειας. See also Rom. ix. 22; Phil. iii. 19; Heb. x. 89; 1 Tim. vi. 9; 2 Pet. ii. 1, 3; iii. 7.

But whatever may be the force of this last consideration, it seems impossible to avoid the conclusion from those previously presented that Hades, so far as it is the prison of the ungodly dead, is not the same as Hell regarded as the everlasting prison of devils and men; as before remarked, it bears to that place of woe a relation similar to that of the jail to the penitentiary.

2. The Hades of the good is not Heaven. This is evident from the following considerations:

(1) God, angels, Jesus Christ (save during the time between His death and resurrection), are never represented as abiding therein. This is scarce explicable on the hypothesis that Hades is a general term for the Unseen World. It may be said, however, that the term is employed only in reference to the spirits of deceased men. This answer, it will be observed, exceedingly limits the hypothesis we are considering.

(2) Hades, as an entirety, is distinguished from Heaven. This is done in two distinct modes. (a) By being placed in antithesis therewith, as in Job xi. 8, "It is as high as Heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than Hades; what canst thou know?" See also Ps. cxxx. 8, Amos ix. 2. (b) By being localized as beneath the surface of the earth. Thus it is described by the synonym "nether parts of the earth;" and approach to it is universally described as a descent—thus, Num. xvi. 33, Korah and his company are described as going "down alive into Hades" through the opening earth.

(3) Not only is the idea of situation beneath the earth presented when the wicked are spoken of, but also when the entrance thereto of the righteous is described. Not only is it declared that Korah and his company "went down alive into (the pit) Hades;" but, also, Jacob exclaimed, Gen. xxxvii. 35, "I will go down into Hades unto my son." Not only did Saul ask the witch of Endor "to bring up Samuel," (1 Sam. xxviii. 8), thus testifying to the popular belief as to the descent of the spirits of the good; and not only did the terrified woman exclaim, (ver. 13) "I saw gods ascending out of the earth," but the spirit of Samuel (unquestionably his spirit, raised, not by the incantations of the woman, but by the power of God) is represented as saying to the King, (ver. 15) "Why hast thou disquieted me to bring me up?" Of Elijah alone of all the Old Testament saints is it said that he ascended, and of him alone it is said that he went into Heaven (עָלָה). Unquestionably the idea of the Hades of the good presented in the Old Testament, is that of a subterranean place, distinct from Heaven. In strict accordance with the usus loquendi of the Old Testament, our Lord when he referred to His own abiding in Hades spoke of it as remaining "three days and nights in the heart of the earth," Matt. xii. 40; and the Apostle Paul in referring to the same event, Eph. iv. 9, wrote of Jesus as "descending into the lower parts of the earth"—but of this hereafter.

(4) That the Hades of the good is not Heaven, is evident from the fact that it is always spoken of as a place, at the best, of imperfect happiness—a place to be delivered from. The pious writer of the xlix. Psalm exclaimed (ver. 15 [16]) "God will redeem my soul from the power of Hades"—as of deliverance from a prison. David, who had bright visions of a future glory after he had seen the face of the Deliverer (Ps. xvii. 15), wrote, not only prophetically concerning the Messiah, but also concerning himself, Ps. xvi. 10, "Thou wilt not leave my soul in Hades." In strict accordance with the idea set forth in these passages that Hades was a prison, are the words in Hosea xiii. 14, referred to by the Apostle Paul in 1 Cor. xv. 54, 55, "I will redeem them from the hand of Hades, I will ransom them from death. O death, I will be thy plagues; O Hades, I will be thy destruction." Here the separation of soul and body seems to be set forth by the appropriate term מָוֶת; the imprisoned condition of the separated soul, by the phrase hand of Hades. The promise is of a deliverance of the soul from its prison, and of a re-union of soul and body; or, in other words, of a resurrection of the body.

David also wrote concerning the Hades to which he was about to depart, but from which he was assured that he was in due time to be delivered, Ps. vi. 5 (6), "In Hades who shall give Thee thanks?" Dr. J. A. Alexander in his comment on these words writes: "In Sheol, the grave, as a general receptacle, here parallel to death, and like it meaning the unseen world or state of the dead, who will acknowledge or give thanks to Thee? The Hebrew verb denotes that kind of praise called forth by the experience of goodness.—This verse does not prove that David had no belief or expectation of a future state, nor that the intermediate state is an unconscious one, but only that in this emergency he looks no further than the close of life as the appointed term of thanksgiving and praise. Whatever might eventually follow, it was certain that his death would put an end to the praise of God, in that form and those circumstances to which he had been accustomed." The last remark is certainly true; and yet, is it conceivable that David could have written thus, on the supposition that the departing spirits of the righteous went immediately to Heaven? Could one about to depart immediately to the glorious praises of the land of glory, have penned, under the inspiration of the Spirit, the words "In Hades who shall give Thee thanks," on the supposition either that the Hades of the good was Heaven, or that the term indicated merely the state of death? Let one imagine, if possible, the Apostle Paul thus writing! The very explanation given by Dr. Alexander, requires that the Hades to which the Psalmist felt that he was to depart should have been a place either of unconsciousness, or of darkness and gloom. The only escape from this conclusion is in the hypothesis, not only that he was not inspired in this utterance, but also that he was in positive error as to the condition of departed saints. It is not enough to suppose that he was in ignorance or doubt as to his own spiritual condition—as to whether he was a saint. The implied assertion of the exclamation is universal—"In Hades who shall give Thee thanks?"

In manifest accordance with the teaching of the Old Testament on this subject, is that of the

New. When our Lord referred to the condition of Lazarus, Luke xvi. 25, he did not speak of him as enjoying the fullness of his Father's house, but as being "comforted;" a term, as before remarked, never used in reference to the joys of Heaven. And when the Apostle Paul spoke of the condition of the Old Testament worthies, he makes manifest reference to the incompleteness of their blessedness antecedent to the Christian dispensation. He wrote, Heb. xi. 39, 40, "And these all, having received a good report through faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Dr. Owen rejects this view, affirming, "the Apostle treats not here at all about the difference between one sort of men and another after death, as is evident from the very reading of the Epistle." With the highest reverence for the memory of that great man, the writer would remark that the very reading of the Epistle has led him to the opposite conclusion. The special section which includes the words quoted above, begins immediately upon the close of ch. x. 84. In the latter clause of that verse the Apostle had referred to the heavenly inheritance of those to whom he was then writing. The mention of this calls for a special section in which he may incite them to faithfulness in order to the obtaining of that inheritance. He therefore writes, vers. 35, 36, "Cast not away, therefore, your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward; for ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." What promise? Manifestly that of the heavenly inheritance. He then proceeds to set forth the life of faith, which is in order to this inheritance, by the example of the Old Testament saints who had lived it in the midst of trials and afflictions. The natural apodosis of the recitals of chap. xi. would seem to be, 'These all, having received a good report through faith, having finished the race set before them, received the promise;' but not so—"They received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Is it not manifest that the Apostle asserts that the old Testament worthies did not receive their heavenly inheritance until the Christian dispensation, and that the implied instruction to Christians is, 'You, who are called to earthly patience like theirs, run under better auspices than was vouchsafed to them, even the sure hope of immediate blessing?'

(5) The great argument, however, in proof that the Hades of the righteous was not Heaven, is to be found in the fact of their deliverance therefrom at the Resurrection of our Lord. The consideration of this topic, however, more appropriately belongs to the concluding section, in which the effort will be made to establish the affirmative proposition that Hades is a place in the Unseen World distinct from Heaven and Hell.

IV. Hades not the State of Death.

The opinion that Hades indicates (at least frequently) a state and not a place, is one to a great extent entertained in Protestant Churches.

This opinion appears to the writer to be unsupported by a single Scriptural passage, the context of which requires us to put such an interpretation upon it. The only texts that with apparent plausibility can be cited as teaching this doctrine are Ps. vi. 5 (6), "In Hades who shall give Thee thanks?" Isa. xxxviii. 18, "Hades cannot praise Thee;" Eccles. ix. 10, "There is no work, nor device, nor wisdom in Hades." These passages, so far as the immediate contexts are concerned, are certainly consistent with the idea now under consideration, even as they are consistent with the opinion that by Hades the literal grave is intended. But they are also consistent with the idea that by the term is represented a place of gloom; and this idea, as we saw in the preceding section, the spiritual condition of the Psalmist requires us to put upon it.

The opinion, thus unsupported by a single unambiguous Scripture, stands opposed to that vast multitude of passages in which Hades is manifestly referred to as a place. Many of these texts have already been quoted, and it is unnecessary to re-cite them.

The real grounds of the opinion that Hades is a state, and not a place, are, as it seems to the writer, philosophical and theological, and not exegetical.

There are those whose psychological views cause them to shrink from any localization of a pure spirit, and who therefore affirm that Hades must indicate a state. The same views, it may be remarked, should lead, and in many cases do lead, to the affirmation that the terms Heaven and Hell are indicative, not of places, but of mere conditions of the soul.

Another ground is what may be styled the pseudo-scientific. It seems plain that if the language of Scripture is to be interpreted normally, the location of Hades is in the heart of the earth. There are many who shrink from this opinion as though it must be false. Why false? If Hades be a place, it must be somewhere; and if somewhere, why not in the centre of the Earth as well as elsewhere? True science, which confesses its ignorance concerning the internal condition of our globe, can, on this question, neither affirm nor deny.

Others, still, deny because of their pre-formed opinion that the righteous Patriarchs did depart to perfect blessedness. But manifestly if the Hades of the Old Testament was a place, it was a place of gloom, even in the case of the pious. The only refuge from this conclusion is in the opinion that the term has reference merely to the state of the soul separated from the body.

The main ground of the opinion, however, is, in the judgment of the writer, the manifest difficulty of harmonizing those texts in the Old Testament which speak of righteous Abraham and Jacob and David, as being in Hades, with those in the New Testament, which on the one hand declare that the righteous are taken to Heaven, and those which on the other hand declare that Hades shall be cast into the lake of fire. The very difficulty naturally suggests the hypothesis that Hades may be an indefinite term, meaning sometimes the state of death and sometimes the place of the lost—an hypothesis, however, utterly inconsistent with that mass of Scriptures which require us to define it as signifying a place. It may further be remarked that if there are intimations in Scripture that, at the Resurrection or Ascension of our Lord, a change was made in the place of abode of the souls of the righteous dead—that a new place in Heaven was prepared, to which those who had previously been consigned to Hades were removed, and to which the souls of those who now die in the Lord are carried—this ground of the hypothesis now contended against, is removed. The attempt will be made in the following section to show that there are such intimations.

V. Hades a Place in the Unseen World distinct from Heaven and Hell.

That HADES is such a place logically follows if there has been no fatal mistake in any of the preceding arguments. If it be not the literal Grave, nor Hell, nor the Unseen World including Heaven and Hell, nor the State of Death, then it must be a third place in the Unseen World. The truth of this conclusion would at once be invalidated if a single text of Scripture could be cited which clearly teaches that there are but two places in the Unseen World. No such text, however, has been, or, it is believed, can be, adduced. The position of Protestant Theologians who have denied the existence of a third place, so far as is known to the writer, never has been that the Scriptures directly assert that there are but two places, but that they recognize the existence of only two. In this view of the state of the question, the conclusion that the Word of God does teach the existence of a third place might be left to the judgment of the reader without further remark.

There is, however, another argument bearing on the point that should not be omitted, viz. that arising from the fact that Christ, between the periods of His death and resurrection, delivered from Hades a captivity detained therein. If it be true that our Lord did perform such a work, then is it evident that Hades is a place distinct from both Heaven and Hell. The fact that He did so, the writer believes to be referred to in several passages of Scripture, and directly taught in Eph. iv. 8, 9: "When He ascended up on high, He led captivity captive, and gave gifts unto men. Now that He ascended, what is it but that He also descended first into the lower parts of the Earth."

That the place to which our Lord ascended, leading "captivity captive" (whatever this phrase may mean), was Heaven, none deny. That the place to which He descended was Hades, and that the "captivity" consisted of the pious dead, seem to the writer to be the natural and legitimate meanings of the terms employed.

That our Lord did at His death go into Hades (whatever Hades may be) is admitted by all. But the phrase, in the passage now under consideration, translated "lower parts of the earth" (τὰ κατώτερα μέρη τῆς γῆς) is, as we saw in Section I. of this Excursus, the Greek equivalent for one of the Hebrew synonyms for Hades. Is it not natural to conclude that the Apostle Paul, in using this well-established Old Testament synonym for Hades, had in his mind the same fact to which the Apostle Peter referred when in his Pentecostal sermon he declared

(Acts ii. 31): "His soul was not left in Hades?"

It also seems clear to the writer that, in accordance with Scripture usage, the phrase "led captivity captive" must have reference to the deliverance of captured friends. This phrase, unqualified, occurs but twice in the Old Testament—once in the Psalm from which the Apostle quotes it, Ps. lxxviii. 18; and again in the Song of Deborah and Barak, Judges v. 12: "Arise, Barak, and lead thy captivity captive, thou son of Ahinoam." Regarded merely as a phrase, it may mean either of two things: (1) to lead as prisoners a number of enemies, or (2) to lead as re-captured a number of friends previously captured by an enemy. The latter seems to be its most natural interpretation,* and this manifestly is its meaning in Judges v. 12, the only passage in which the context determines the meaning. It is clearly implied, Judg. iv. 16, that Barak took no prisoners, in the words: "All the host of Sisera fell upon the edge of the sword, and there was not a man left." The captivity that Barak led captive must have been captured Israel. As this interpretation is manifestly the meaning of the phrase in one of the two instances of its occurrence in the Old Testament, it is but logical to conclude that it is its meaning in the other also. This conclusion is strengthened by the considerations, first, that there is nothing in Ps. lxxviii. to forbid our putting this interpretation upon it; and, secondly, that the Song of Deborah and Barak was manifestly in the mind of the inspired writer when he penned the Psalm. This is evident from a comparison of the two passages of Scripture.

This, then, is not only the natural, but the scripturally suggested interpretation of Eph. iv. 8, 9,—that Christ descended into Hades, and then ascended into Heaven (above all Heavens), leading a multitude whom He had delivered (captured) from captivity.

As against the interpretation that by "the lower parts of the earth" the Apostle meant Hades, Dr. Eadie, in his Commentary on this Epistle, queries: "Why not use ᾗδης, when it had been so markedly employed before, had he wished to give it prominence?" It might be retorted: Why use "the lower parts of the earth"—an Old Testament synonym for Hades—if he meant simply the earth? His own explanation that by the descent of Christ into "the lower parts of the earth" is meant that He was born in a low condition—"born not under fretted roofs and amidst marble halls," etc., is manifestly untenable. The Greek phrase will not bear that interpretation. Two reasons for the Apostle's selection of the phrase, however, may be given—(1) Had he used Hades, the idea of His life on earth would have been obscured; by the phrase, "lower parts of the earth," not only is its O. T. synonym Hades suggested, but also the idea of a descent to earth and through earth is preserved. (2) A second reason may be that on this subject, as on the whole subject of eschatology seems to be the case, it was the design of the Spirit to give an indefinite revelation. A preceding question of Dr. Eadie appears to the writer to be without force. This question is—"Why, if Hades was intended, should the comparative κατώτερος and not the superlative have been used?" In answer it may be said that the idea of the Hebrew is as well expressed by the comparative as by the superlative; and further, to have written that Christ went into the lowest part would have implied that He went into the prison of the wicked—the lowest Hades, which it was foreign from the intention of the Apostle, most certainly in this connection, to teach. Another objection of Dr. Eadie to the view presented in this Excursus is—"Those who suppose the captives to be human spirits emancipated from thralldom by Jesus, may hold the view that Christ went to hell (?) to free them, but we have seen that the captives are enemies made prisoners on the field of battle." On turning to the comment on the passage referred to, we find that the reason for this opinion is nothing but an unsupported assertion; he writes: "'Thou hast led captivity captive.' The meaning of this idiom seems simply to be—thou hast mustered or reviewed thy captives, Judges v. 12." The reference, as is manifest on examination, refutes the assertion,—for Barak captured no enemies.

* [The words translated "lead captive a captivity" occur a third time in the Scriptures, Num. xxi. 1, under circumstances which show that the captivity consisted of the enemies made prisoners. At first glance this fact may seem to militate against the position taken as to the natural force of the phrase—a closer examination, however, tends rather to confirm the view of the writer. The phrase in Num. xxi. 1 is not the same as that in the other passages; it is qualified by the introduction of the term כַּפְּזִים (a parte ejus) the whole clause reads וְיָשָׁב כִּפְזֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל. This term limits the captivity taken by the Canaanites to have been of (the number of) Israel. Its very introduction seems to indicate that without it the clause could not have been thus limited.—E. R. C.]

The other objections of Dr. Eadie are involved in the following three presented by Dr. Hodge in his Commentary on the Epistle to the Ephesians.

(1) "In the first place, this idea (the descensus ad inferos) is entirely foreign to the meaning of the passage in the Psalm on which the Apostle is commenting." With the greatest veneration for the distinguished and beloved Commentator, it may be asked: In what respect is it more foreign than the idea adopted by himself? It is to be observed that there is no expressed reference in the Psalm to Christ. Dr. Hodge remarks on Eph. iv. 8: "... Psalm lxxviii. is not Messianic. It does not refer to the Messiah, but to the triumph of God over His enemies." From this point of view, manifestly, any idea as to the terminus ad quem of the Messiah's descent may be said to be foreign to the meaning of the Psalm; and from this point of view alone could the criticism now under consideration have proceeded. The learned Commentator, however, justifies the application of the Psalm to Christ on three principles which he rightly declares "are applicable not only to this, but also to many similar passages." He writes: "The first is the typical character of the old dispensation. . . . Thus the Psalm quoted by the Apostle is a history of the conquests of God over the enemies of His ancient people, and a prophecy of the conquests of the Messiah. The second principle applicable to this and similar cases is the identity of the Logos or Son manifested in the flesh under the new dispensation with the manifested Jehovah of the old economy. . . . There is still a third principle to be taken into consideration. Many of the historical and prophetic descriptions of the Old Testament are not exhausted by any one application or fulfillment. . . . The predictions of Isaiah of the redemption of Israel were not exhausted by the deliverance of the people of God from the Babylonish captivity, but had a direct reference to the higher redemption to be effected by Christ. . . . It is, therefore, in perfect accordance with the whole analogy of Scripture that the Apostle applies what is said of Jehovah in Psalm lxxviii. as a conqueror, to the work of the Lord Jesus, who, as God manifested in the flesh, ascended on high, leading captivity captive and giving gifts unto men." It is on the platform of these manifestly correct principles that Dr. Hodge declares in his comment on vers. 9, 10: "... the Psalmist must be understood as having included in the scope of his language the most conspicuous and illustrious of God's condescensions and exaltations. All other comings were but typical of His coming in the flesh, and all ascensions were typical of His ascension from the grave." But is it not evident that, on this platform, what must be understood as having been "included in the scope" of the Psalmist's language, in reference to any Divine descent subsequent to the writing of the Psalm, must be determined, not from the language of the Psalm alone, but from that language in connection with those Scriptures which describe the descent? If those subsequent Scriptures teach that the descent was merely to the literal grave, then a descent to the literal grave and an ascent therefrom are all that can be regarded as included within that scope; but if they teach that the descent was to Hades, then a descent thereto must be understood as included. Dr. Hodge has concluded from an examination of the New Testament that Christ's descent was only to the grave; others, from a similar examination, have concluded that it was ad inferos. Both these ideas are "foreign" to the language of the Psalm literally interpreted; that one, however, is to be regarded as within "the scope" of its language, which the event, as described by the New Testament writers, shows to have been within the view of the inspiring Spirit, who knows the end from the beginning.

(2) "In the second place," continues Dr. Hodge, "there (in the Psalm) as here, the only descent of which the context speaks is opposed to the ascending to Heaven." This may be freely admitted—although in point of fact the Psalm does not speak of a descent at all; it merely implies one. But what was the terminus ad quem of the descent? This the Psalm does not declare. It can be determined only from the Apostle's comment, who declares it to have been the lower parts of the earth.

(3) "In the third place this is the opposition so often expressed in other places and in other forms of expression." The writer cannot perceive that the position here assumed is supported by the passages cited. These passages, with the remarks of the Am. Ed. upon them, are as follows: "John iii. 13" ('No man hath ascended up to Heaven, but He that came down from Heaven, even the Son of Man who is in Heaven.') Manifestly there is no allusion here to the bodily ascension of our Lord. Jesus was not, in this passage, prophesying to Nicodemus that He was to ascend; He was giving a reason why He could instruct concerning heavenly things as no other man could. It was as though He had said, 'No man hath ascended up to Heaven and thence descended to teach; only He can teach you who descended from Heaven, who is still in Heaven' "John vi. 38" ('I came down from Heaven'). Most true. But is this inconsistent with his going still further—into Hades? "John viii. 14" ('I know whence I came and whither I go'). A remark similar to the preceding might here be made. "John xvi. 28" ('I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world; again, I leave the world and go to the Father'). Is there aught here inconsistent with the idea of His going, before His return, to the subterranean world? Because, when on the earth, our Lord spake of a descent from Heaven, are we debarred from supposing that He contemplated descending still further to a place whence also He must ascend?

As before remarked, if the interpretation which the writer contends is the natural one, viz., that Christ went into Hades and delivered captives therein held, be the true one; then, manifestly, Hades as the dwelling-place of the pious must have been a third place in the Unseen World, and not that World itself in its entirety, nor Heaven, nor Hell, nor the State of Death.

But whilst the interpretation given by the writer is the most natural, it is admitted that other interpretations may be put upon the passage that has been under discussion. It is not, therefore, contended that by itself, unsupported by other Scriptures, it will establish the doctrine it apparently presents. That the natural interpretation is the true one appears from the facts (1) That the doctrine thereby presented brings into perfect harmony two apparently discrepant classes of Scriptures; and (2) That it sheds light on several obscure passages of the word of God, bringing them, in their natural interpretation and with all their logical implications, into perfect harmony with each other and with the rest of revealed truth.

1. As to the former of these facts.

On the one hand, it cannot be denied that the apparent teaching of many passages of Scripture, written antecedent to the resurrection of Christ, is that Hades is a place distinct from Heaven, to which the souls of the righteous as well as of the wicked were consigned; and, on the other hand, it is clear that all the post-resurrection teachings of the word of God are, not merely that "the souls of believers at their death do immediately pass into glory," but even more specific—that they do immediately pass into Heaven.

It is in place here to consider somewhat at length the latter class of Scriptures. That the post-resurrection teachings of the New Testament are that the souls of believers do immediately pass into Heaven, is evident from the following considerations:

(1) It is implied in all that is said as to the souls of believers going, at their death, to the place where the Lord is, John xiv. 2, 3; "I go to prepare a place for you, and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also." John xvii. 24, "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory." 2 Cor. v. 8, "We are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord." Phil. i. 23, "To depart and be with Christ." Now, Christ is in Heaven—Him "the Heaven must receive (hold) until the times of the restitution of all things," Acts iii. 21. Believers therefore, who are with Christ, must be in Heaven. It is vain to object to this, that believers in Hades may be said to be with Christ, since He is everywhere and He may manifest Himself anywhere. True. As God, He is everywhere; on earth, in Hades, in Hell: and He may make a spiritual manifestation of Himself anywhere. He cannot, however, make a physical manifestation of Himself (and it is such a manifestation that the texts quoted call for) where He is not, and the Scriptures teach us that He is physically in Heaven. True, He has power to convey His human nature anywhere, but the declaration that "the Heaven must receive Him until the times of the restitution of all things," conveys the assurance that He does not and will not convey Himself to Hades. He is in Heaven; the souls of believers are with Him; therefore they are in Heaven—i. e., in one of its "many mansions."

(2) The same doctrine is directly taught, or implied, in such passages as the following: "We know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens," 2 Cor. v. 1. Whatever this heavenly house may be (and that question need not now be discussed) we know that it is in the Heavens. Those, therefore, who inhabit it, must be in Heaven, "with the Lord," as we learn from ver. 8; and thus this verse, which directly teaches that departed believers are in Heaven, by its contextual arrangement confirms the preceding argument that those who "are with the Lord" are in Heaven.

(3) This also is the natural explanation of the record concerning Stephen. Just before his execution he saw "the Heavens opened and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God," Acts vii. 56. Shortly after, in the act of dying, he exclaimed: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit," as though he still gazed on Him whom a short time before he had been privileged to see at the right hand of the throne of God, Acts vii. 59. The implication of the whole passage is that Jesus, in accordance with His promise—"I will come again and receive you unto Myself," John xiv. 2, revealed Himself unto this dying saint as about to take him into Heaven—to the place in His Father's house He has prepared for His loved ones—that where He, the Saviour, was, there might he, the believer, be.

(4) Is not the same also implied in Heb. xii. 22–24, where, not to seek after the whole meaning, the teaching seems to be that not only are "the spirits of just men" now "made perfect" (comp. xi. 80); but that all such are with angels, and with God the Judge of all, and with Jesus, in the heavenly Jerusalem.

In view of all these Scriptures, the doctrine of the post-resurrection teachings of the New Testament seems to be that the spirits of the just do, on their death, immediately pass into Heaven.

This class of Scriptures seems to present a doctrine in irreconcilable contradiction with that set forth by the former class, on the assumption that each class presents an original and constantly enduring fact in God's treatment of the spirits of the departed dead. In view of the former class there have been many Protestants, as is well known, who have set at naught the manifest teachings of the New Testament on this subject—contending that a soul may be in the place Hades, and yet with the Lord; and in view of the latter class, many have utterly ignored the force of Old Testament language, ascribing it (on a matter of pure revelation) to an accommodation to Jewish superstition. Neither of these positions is consistent with due regard to the inspiration of the Word of God. The very conditions of the problem suggest the hypothesis that, at some time about the period of the Resurrection and Ascension of our Lord, there was a change in the condition of the spirits of the righteous dead. This hypothesis receives confirmation from the fact that it is the natural interpretation of Peter's declaration that Christ, between His Death and Resurrection, descended into the place where the Old Testament teaches us that the departed righteous were; and does it not spring to the dignity of an established doctrine upon the discovery of a text which, taken in its literal and most natural sense, teaches that Christ did descend to Hades and thence deliver those therein confined? The text in Ephesians taken in its natural sense brings into perfect and beautiful harmony two apparently conflicting doctrines of the word of God.

2. And more. It sheds light on many detached portions of the Scripture, and brings them, and all their implications, into full harmony with each other, and with the whole body of revealed truth.

(1) The first of these passages that will be noticed is John xiv. 2, "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." The implication here is that the future place of His disciples was not then prepared. This is inconsistent with the doctrine that the place of the pious dead has always been in Heaven, or that Hades continues to be their place. The implication calls for a change in the place of the pious dead synchronous with our Lord's Ascension.

(2) A second Scripture is Heb. xi. 40, compared with Heb. xii. 23. These passages occur in the same section of the Epistle—that which exhorts Believers to patience that they may obtain the promise, i. e., heavenly blessedness. In the former, the spirits of just men who were not made perfect (i. e., who did not receive the promise) until the present dispensation, are spoken of. In the latter, these same spirits are manifestly amongst the spirits of just men made perfect. The passage in Ephesians throws beautiful light on both these Scriptures, brings them into harmony with each other, and into perfect and enlightening harmony with the whole section that includes them.

(3) A third passage is the declaration of our Lord to the dying thief: "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise," Luke xxiii. 43; compared (a) with those texts that declare he went into Hades, and (b) with 2 Cor. xii. 4, and Rev. ii. 7, which place Paradise in Heaven. The first comparison would seem to indicate that Paradise was a Jewish name for one of the compartments of the place Hades; the second, that it was a name for Heaven, or one of the many mansions thereof. If the natural interpretation of the passage in Ephesians be the true one, then the apparent discrepancy is at once harmonized; at least a mode of reconciliation is at once suggested. If Paradise were the name for the abode of the righteous in Hades, then on their removal to Heaven, to the new place prepared for them, the name of their abode might naturally be transferred to their new home.

(4) The interpretation given to the passage in Ephesians throws light upon, and is supported by 1 Pet. iii. 18-22.

The writer is unable to adopt the common English Protestant view concerning this passage, viz., that the preaching mentioned was by the Holy Spirit through Noah to the Antediluvians in the flesh, for the following reasons:

a. On this ground the consistency of the whole passage is destroyed. The Apostle was exhorting believers to the patient endurance of wrong; and he enforces his exhortation by a reference to the case of the God-man, Who by His endurance became a benefactor unto others, and won for Himself a reward of exaltation. Consistency requires that the preaching should follow the death.

b. The modern view requires us to regard the Holy Ghost as indicated by πνεῦμα, notwithstanding the absence of the article, and the manifest antithesis between that term and σάρξ.

c. The use of πνεύματα in this connection requires that we should regard disembodied spirits as the objects of the preaching—the disembodied πνεύμα (the person dead ἐν σάρτι) preached to πνεύματα.

d. The collocation of the words τοῖς ἐν φυλακῇ πνεύμασι requires us to regard the spirits as in prison when addressed.

e. The term προφθιῖς of ver. 19 is manifestly parallel with the same term in ver. 22. The implication of the entire passage is that the same person first went to the prison, and then went to Heaven.

f. The position of πῶτε forbids this interpretation. Thus Bengel writes: "Si sermo esset de præconio per Noë rō aliquando aut plane omitteretur aut prædicavit conjungeretur."

g. The natural interpretation of the passage, so far from teaching a doctrine at variance with other Scriptures, is manifestly in accord with what is elsewhere taught.

The writer would present the following translation: "For Christ also once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, in order that He might lead us unto God, being put to death as to flesh, but quickened as to spirit, in which (spirit) also having journeyed, He preached (ἐκφύσεν = made proclamation) to the spirits in prison, etc."

The passage in Ephesians calls for a φωλαχὴ in which the spirits of the departed, as captives, were held, to which, after His death, Jesus descended, performing a mission of mercy. The passage under immediate consideration represents our Lord as, after His death, journeying to a φωλαχὴ, and there making proclamation to the prisoners detained therein. The former passage states nothing as to the mode in which His mission was executed; the latter teaches us nothing as to the results of the proclamation. But in the confluent light of the two passages can we doubt, not only that they have reference to the same event, but that the mode in which the mission was executed (at least in part) was by proclamation, and that at least one result of that proclamation was the deliverance of those who had been ransomed by the Lord's death?

This interpretation does not require, as some object, that an offer of salvation should have been made to the departed such as is now made to the living, that the gospel should have been preached to them as it is preached to men in the flesh. The term translated preach is κηρύσσω, which means simply to proclaim as herald. Dr. Mombert, in the EXCURSUS ON THE DESCENSUS AD INFEROS, published in connection with his translation of Frommüller's Commentary (Lange Series) on 1 Peter, remarks, "it (κηρύσσω) is never used in the sense of judicial announcement, and N. T. usage clothes it with the meaning 'to preach the gospel.'" It is true that it is never used to designate judicial announcement, and that for the sufficient reason that it has reference to heraldic announcement, which is an essentially different thing. It is also true that the New Testament (E. V.) usage of the word preach is almost invariably "to preach the gospel." This however is not the case in reference to the use of the Greek word κηρύσσω, as is evident from an examination of Mark i. 45; v. 20; vii. 36; Luke viii. 39; Acts xv. 21; Rom. ii. 21; 2 Cor. iv. 5; Gal. v. 11; Rev. v. 2. All that the use of κηρύσσω calls for is the proclamation of a fact or facts. These facts, in the case before us, may have been the completion of the work of atonement, and the consequent deliverance of those who had accepted of Christ under the types of the old oecomy. Such an announcement would have been a word of life to those who had accepted while in the flesh. In this connection it is proper to remark that if the preaching of the Gospel to the dead (εὐηγγελισθὴν) of 1 Pet. iv. 6, has reference to the same event as that recorded in the passage under immediate consideration, it would not require us to regard the preaching of the Gospel (glad tidings) as the same as that to men in the flesh—as an offer of salvation. The nature of good tidings has respect to the condition of the hearers. To us, sinners in the flesh, the offer of salvation through a Redeemer is good news. To captives in Hades who had already performed the conditions of salvation, the announcement of the completion of the atonement and of deliverance consequent thereupon, would be glad tidings.

Nor are we forbidden to suppose that the preaching was to those who had already trusted, by the fact that all who were the objects of address are described as "once disobedient" (ἀπειθήσαντι = unbelieving). It is to be carefully noted that in this portion of the passage the Apostle is laboring to set forth the gracious effects of the sufferings of Christ. He suffered, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us (the unjust) unto God. It was only consistent that the inspired penman should describe the Old Testament recipients of His grace as sinners.

It may also be remarked that an objection that may arise in some mind—viz., Why should the Apostle have made special reference to the Antediluvians? presses with equal force upon every conceivable hypothesis of interpretation. Probably the reason of the special reference was that it gave opportunity for the presentation of the Deluge as the type of Baptism. On this point, however, the writer will not enlarge. He does not claim that the hypothesis presented by him explains every difficulty of this most difficult passage of the Word of God. Probably there are allusions therein, as in other Scriptures, to mysteries which will never be understood save in the light of the world to come.

(5) The passage in Ephesians, in connection with the one just considered, throws light on certain expressions in the Old Testament prophecies, especially the following:

Isaiah xlv. 23: "Sing, O ye heavens; for the Lord hath done it; shout, ye lower parts of the earth, etc." Not only does it enable us to take the phrase lower parts of the earth in its established sense, by showing us that Hades might have cause for rejoicing, but it preserves the antithesis manifestly presented in the passage.

It enables us to translate Hosea xiii. 14 (the first clause) literally, and manifests the beautiful propriety of the Hebrew term employed: "I will deliver (not ransom) them from the hand of Hades." The verb translated, in the English Version, ransom, is פָּדָה which followed by לָן, as in this case, means (see Gesenius) to let go free—to set free.

In conclusion of this portion of the Excursus, it may be said, that the proposed interpretation of Eph. iv. 8, 9, which, on the one hand, is manifestly natural; and which, on the other hand, brings into perfect harmony two apparently conflicting classes of Scriptures, and also sheds on many obscure passages a light that brings them into harmony with the whole body of revealed truth—such an interpretation, in the judgment of the writer, must be regarded as the true one.

And in conclusion of the whole subject, it may further be remarked, that the passage in Ephesians, interpreted as above, forms the cap-stone of the complex argument which demonstrates that the term HADES indicates a Place (and not a mere state) distinct from the grave, from Heaven, and from Hell; into which the souls of the righteous were conveyed antecedent to the death of Jesus; but from which they were delivered on His descent thereto, after the completion of His sacrifice on earth.—E. R. C.]

[NOTE ON THE GENERAL RESURRECTION AND JUDGMENT.]

By the American Editor.

[The Resurrection described in this section is that which is to take place at the close of the Millennium—the Resurrection referred to by the Apostle Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 24, and implied by our Lord in Matt. xxv. 31. The subjects of this Resurrection are the unraised of all dispensations preceding the Millennium (the λοιποὶ τῶν νεκρῶν of ver. 5); together with all who shall have lived in the flesh during, and subsequent to, the Millennial period—both the good and the bad.]

This Resurrection is immediately to precede, and to be in order to, the General Judgment, when—(1) the present order of things shall pass away, 2 Pet. iii. 10–12; 1 Cor. xv. 24–28; (2) the entire course of human history shall be made manifest to all, Ecc. xii. 14; Matt. xii. 36; Luke xii. 2; Rom. ii. 16; 1 Cor. iii. 18; iv. 5; (3) each (unjudged) individual of the human race, and each fallen spirit, shall be publicly acquitted or condemned, Matt. xxv. 31–46; 2 Cor. v. 10; Jude 6, etc.

It is admitted that the majority of the texts bearing on the subject seem to contemplate but one future Resurrection and Judgment. Remarks similar to those on the Future Advent of Christ (see Note on THE FUTURE ADVENT OF CHRIST, pp. 389 sqq.) may here be made. The earlier prophecies of the O. T. were cast on one plane, apparently contemplating but one Advent, the later prophecies, however, adumbrated two Advents; which adumbrations, all now admit, foreshadowed the reality. So with the prophecies concerning the Resurrection and Judgment. In the majority of instances, the prophecies seem to contemplate but one; there are other declarations, however, which demand the hypothesis that there are to be two. (See the Note on THE FIRST RESURRECTION, pp. 352 sqq.)

It may present itself as a difficulty to some minds that the Judge described ver. 11 seems to be God the Father, and not the Son. Alford, who adopts the view that the phrase τὸν καθήμενον ἐπ' αὐτοῦ refers to the Father (see chs. iv. 8; xxi. 5), thus comments: "Be it remembered, that it is the Father who giveth all judgment to the Son: and though He Himself judgeth no man, yet He is ever described as present in the judgment, and mankind as judged before Him. We need not find in this view any difficulty or discrepancy with such passages as Matt. xxv. 31, seeing that our Lord Himself says in ch. iii. 21: 'I . . . am set down with my Father in His Throne.' Nor need we be surprised at the sayings of our Lord, such as that in ch. xxi. 6 (6), being uttered by Him that sitteth on the Throne. That throne is now the throne of God and of the Lamb, ch. xxii. 1. Comp. also ch. xxi. 22."

It is sometimes objected to the doctrine of a General Judgment at the close of the present order of things that it is superfluous, since each individual is judged as he leaves this world. In a sense, it is true that each individual is judged immediately upon death; and yet, this should not militate against our reception of the doctrine of a final and general Judgment, so clearly revealed in the word of God. In the first place, our ideas of what may be right or necessary should never lead us to set aside a clear revelation. But, secondly, even on the platform of human reason, such a general Judgment cannot be regarded as superfluous. The objects of public trials by human judges are two: first, to determine the guilt or innocence of the prisoner; and, second, to make manifest the justice of the Judge in acquittal or condemnation. The first of these objects can have no existence where God is the Judge; the second, calls for a public trial before the assembled universe when the present order of things has reached its conclusion. Then, shall all things be discovered, and the righteousness of the Judge be made manifest before all created intelligences.—E. R. C.]

B.—THE HEAVENLY-EARTHLY, IDEO-REAL PICTURE OF THE NEW WORLD. THE KINGDOM OF GLORY.

CHAP. XXI. 9—XXII. 5.

1. The City of God as the Heavenly Jerusalem.

- 9 And there came unto me [om. unto me]<sup>1</sup> one of the seven angels which [that] had the seven vials [ins., that were]<sup>2</sup> full of the seven last plagues, and talked with me, saying, Come hither, I will shew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife [wife of the 10 Lamb].<sup>3</sup> And he carried me away in the [om. the] spirit to a great and high mountain, and shewed me that great [om. that great—ins. the holy] city, the holy [om. the

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

<sup>1</sup> Ver. 9. [Crit. Eds. reject this clause with κ. A. B. P., et al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>2</sup> Ver. 9. [The Angels, not the vials, are, grammatically, represented as being full of the plagues; the original is καὶ ἔδωκεν ἐς ἐκ τῶν ἐντὶ ἀγγέλων τῶν ἔχόντων τὰς ἐντὶ φιάλας τὰς ἑπτὰ πλῆγας τῶν ἐσχάτων.—E. R. C.]

<sup>3</sup> Ver. 9. We give the reading τὴν νύμφην τὴν γυναῖκα τοῦ ἀρνίου.

11 holy] Jerusalem, descending out of heaven from God, having the glory of God: and [om. and]<sup>4</sup> her light [light-giver (φωστήρ)]<sup>5</sup> was like unto a stone most precious, even like [as to] a jasper stone, clear as crystal; And [om. And] had [having] a wall great and high, and had [having] twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels, and names written thereon [inscribed], which are the names [or the names]<sup>6</sup> of the twelve tribes of the children [sons] of Israel: On the east three gates; on the north three gates; on the south three gates; and on the west three gates. And the wall of the city had [having] twelve foundations, and in [upon] them the [om. the—ins. twelve]<sup>7</sup> names of the twelve apostles of the Lamb. And he that talked [spake] with me had [ins. a measure,]<sup>8</sup> a golden reed to [om. to—ins. that he might] measure the city, and the gates thereof [her gates], and the wall thereof [her wall]. And the city lieth foursquare [four-cornered], and the [her] length is [is]<sup>9</sup> as large [much] as the breadth: and he measured the city with the reed, [ins. to] twelve thousand furlongs [stadia]. The length and the breadth and the height of it [her] are equal. And he measured the wall thereof [her wall], [ins. of] a hundred and forty and four cubits, according to [om. according to] the measure of a man, that is, [om. that is,—ins. which is that] of the [an] angel. And the building [structure] of the wall of it [her wall] was of jasper: and the city was pure gold, like unto clear [pure] glass. And [om. And]<sup>10</sup> The foundations of the wall of the city were garnished [adorned] with all manner of [every] precious stones [stone]. The first foundation was jasper; the second, sapphire; the third, a [om. a] chalcedony; the fourth, an [om. an] emerald; the fifth, sardonyx; the sixth, sardius; the seventh, chrysolite; the eighth, beryl; the ninth, a [om. a] topaz; the tenth, a [om. a] chrysoprasus; the eleventh, a [om. a] jacinth; the twelfth, an [om. an] amethyst. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls; every several gate [each one severally of the gates] was [ins. out] of one pearl: and the street [broad-way (πλατεία)]<sup>11</sup> of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent [translucent] glass.

2. The City of God as the Holy City of all Believing Gentiles.

22 And I saw no [not a] temple therein: for the Lord God Almighty [, the All-Ruler,<sup>12</sup>—ins. is the temple of her,] and the Lamb are the temple of it [om. are the temple of it]. And the city had [hath] no need of the sun, neither [nor] of the moon, to shine in [that they should shine for (φαίνωσιν)]<sup>13</sup> it [her]: for the glory of God did lighten it [lightened her], and the Lamb is the light thereof [and her lamp was the Lamb]. And the nations of them which are saved [om. of them which are saved]<sup>14</sup> shall walk in [by means of] the light of it [her light]: and the kings of the earth do [om. do] bring their glory and honor [om. and honor]<sup>15</sup> into it [her]. And the gates of it [her gates] shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there [for night shall not be there]. And they shall bring the glory and [ins. the] honor of the nations into it [her]. And there shall in no wise enter into it [her] anything that defileth [om. that defileth—ins. common], neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie [and that worketh (or the one working) abomination and a lie]: but they which [who] are [have been] written in the Lamb's [om. Lamb's] book of life [ins. of the Lamb].

3. The City of God as the New Universal Paradise—Glorified Nature. (Chap. xxii. 1–5.)

1 And he showed me a pure [om. pure]<sup>16</sup> river of water of life, clear [bright] as 2 crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of

<sup>4</sup> Ver. 11. [Crit. Eds. omit the copula with  $\kappa$ . A. B\*. P.—E. R. C.]
<sup>5</sup> Ver. 11. [The true meaning of φωστήρ is that which gives light.—E. R. C.]
<sup>6</sup> Ver. 12. [The second ὄνόματα is omitted by the Rec. [Lange retains. It is given by Lach., Tisch. (1850), with A. B\*, Vulg., Cop., Syr.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.; it is omitted by Tisch. (8th Ed.) with  $\mathcal{A}$ . P.; it is bracketed by Alf. and Treg.—E. R. C.]
<sup>7</sup> Ver. 14. [Crit. Eds. give ὁνόματα with  $\kappa$ . A. B\*. P., Vulg., Cop., Syr.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.—E. R. C.]
<sup>8</sup> Ver. 15. Codd. A. B\*. [ $\mathcal{A}$ . P.] give μέτρον
<sup>9</sup> Ver. 16. Τοσοῦτον ἔστιν before ὅσον should be omitted. [So Crit. Eds. with  $\kappa$ . A. B\*. P.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.—E. R. C.]
<sup>10</sup> Ver. 19. A. B\*. [ $\mathcal{A}$ . P.],  $\mathcal{A}$ l. omit καί.
<sup>11</sup> Ver. 21. [See foot-note †, chap. xi. 8, p. 231.—E. R. C.]
<sup>12</sup> Ver. 22. [See Add. Comm. on chap. i. 8, p. 93.—E. R. C.]
<sup>13</sup> Ver. 23. Codd. A. B\*. [ $\mathcal{A}$ . P.],  $\mathcal{A}$ l. omit ἐν after φαίνωσιν.
<sup>14</sup> Ver. 24. The Rec. gives καὶ τὰ ἔθνη τῶν σωζομένων; a reading concocted, most probably, in explanation of the word ἔθνη. [Τὸν σωζομένων is omitted by  $\kappa$ . A. B\*. P., Vulg., Cop., Syr.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.—E. R. C.]
<sup>15</sup> Ver. 24. The Rec. adds καὶ τὴν τιμὴν. [This clause is given in B\*, Vulg., Cop., Syr.; but is omitted in  $\kappa$ . A. P.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.—E. R. C.]
<sup>16</sup> Chap. xxii. 1. Καθάρων is unauthorized. [It does not appear in  $\kappa$ . A. B\*. P., Vulg., Cop., Syr.,  $\mathcal{A}$ l.—E. R. C.]

the street of it [her broad-way], and on either side [om. on either side] of the river [ins. on this side and on that side,<sup>17</sup>] was there the [om. there the—ins. a] tree of life, which bare [bearing] twelve manner of [om. manner of] fruits, and [om. and] yielded her fruit every month [according to each month yielding its fruit]: and the leaves of the tree were [are] for the healing of the nations. And there shall be no more curse [And nothing cursed<sup>18</sup> shall be any more<sup>19</sup>]: but [and] the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it [her]; and his servants (δοῦλοι) shall serve 4 (λατρεύσουσιν) him: and they shall see his face; and his name shall be in [upon] 5 their foreheads. And there shall be no night there<sup>20</sup> [and night shall not be any more<sup>21</sup>]; and they [ins. have (or shall have) no]<sup>22</sup> need no candle [om. no candle—ins. of light<sup>23</sup> of lamp], neither [om. neither—ins. and of] light of the [om. the] sun; for [because] the Lord God giveth them light [shall shine upon them]<sup>24</sup>: and they shall reign for ever and ever [into the ages of the ages].

<sup>17</sup> Ver. 2. Kal ixeivon. [Crit. Eds. read ἐκείθεν καὶ ἐκείθεν with A. B*, et al.—E. R. C.]

<sup>18</sup> Ver. 3. Karathena; comp. Delitzsch, p. 51. [Crit. Eds. so read with A. B*. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>19</sup> Ver. 3. [Crit. Eds. give the reading ἵνα ἔτι with A. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>20</sup> Ver. 5. 'Erei is unfounded.

<sup>21</sup> Ver. 5. 'Erei is supported by A., et al.; Tischendorf [1859] omits with B*. [but gives it in the 8th Ed. with A. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>22</sup> Ver. 5. Tischendorf [1859], with B*, gives ὅτι χρεία, etc., which differs from the readings of Lachmann and the Rec. [Lach. and Alf. read ὅτι ἔχουσιν χρεία with A., Vulg.; Tisch. (8th Ed.) and Treg. give ὅτι ἔχουσιν χρεία with A., Mamph. Syr.; P. also gives ἔχουσιν—E. R. C.]

<sup>23</sup> Ver. 5. [Lach., Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.) give φῶς with A., Vulg., et al.; Tisch. (1859) omitted with B*. P.—E. R. C.]

<sup>24</sup> Ver. 5. We give the reading [φῶς] ἐν αὐτοῖς. [So read Alf., Treg., Tisch. (8th Ed.); φῶς with A. B*, et al.; ἐν αὐτοῖς with A. Lach. gives φῶς with A. P. 'Er' is omitted by B*. P.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

As one of the Angels of Anger, or of the Vials of Anger, showed the Seer the wicked world-city under the figure of the Harlot, so it is now again one of the same Angels who shows the Seer the City of God under the name of the adorned Bride. And it seems as if the Spirit of prophecy would hereby illustrate the fact that the anger of God is a flame, divisible into the lightning of righteousness and the light of love.

The great vision-picture which the Angel exhibits to the contemplation of the Seer, after transporting him to a great and high mountain, the lofty stand-point of a perfected gaze into the region of perfection, is, primarily, the appearance of the new creation, the glorified world of eternal being, which has taken the place of the first creation, the world of temporal becoming. It is, in the next place, that perfected union between Heaven and earth with which the antithesis of life between Heaven and earth, as in accordance with Gen. i., has become the antithesis of a perfected spiritual communion in love. Even this antithesis, the plastic image of religion, finds its fulfilment here. Heaven has assumed the full, fresh, warm and home-like aspect of a familiar and attractive earth; earth is radiant in the heavenly glory of that Throne of God which has now become visible. The new creation is, further, also the new universal Paradise, which has bloomed from the seed of the first Paradise, buried in the soil of the world's history. On this very account this new world is no less the realization of the Great City of God, which, first in the camp of Israel and again in the city of Jerusalem, in typical fore-exhibition became a subject of human admiration, longing and hope, and which was subsequently heralded from afar in so many New Testament preludes.

But its most glorious name is contained in the title of The Bride; for thereby not only the supremacy of personal life in this new world, not only the perfect unanimity of all blessed spirits, not only their perfect receptivity for the entire self-communication of God, are expressed, but also their Divine dignity, liberty and blessedness in love.

We find in the grand transfiguration-picture of the vision a trilogy, the elements of which are distinctly present even in the Gospel of John: a. Transfiguration of the Theocracy, represented by the heavenly Jerusalem (vera. 9-21); b. Transfiguration of the believing Gentile world or the universal new humanity (vera. 22-27); c. Transfiguration of all nature, or the appearance of the new Paradise (ch. xiii. 1-5). The first section justly forms the foundation of the whole, and is therefore the most detailed; it, again, divides into three parts.

The first part of the first section exhibits the holiness of the City of God. In the Doxa of God, or the Shekinah, which diffuses its radiance over the whole City, because it is omnipresent throughout it, the Holy of holies is reflected (ver. 11).* In the high wall of the City, the economical barrier of the Theocracy is reflected; and the true spirit of that barrier, designed, as it was, to mediate salvation to the whole world, finds its expression in the twelve gates, at which Angels are posted, symbolical here, doubtless, of true messengers of salvation; for the gates are open by threes toward all the four quarters of the world. Thus a two-fold effect of holiness is expressed—repulsion of everything unholy by the wall—free ingress for all that tends to holiness, by the gates (vera. 12-14).

The second part gives, in the magnitude of the City, an image of the magnitude of the Kingdom of God (vers. 15-17). This magnitude is exhibited throughout in forms of perfection. The City has the form of a perfect cube, like the Holy of holies, and appears in this equality of measurement as an expression of the perfect heavenly world.

* [See additional comment on chap. xxi. 22, p. 387.—E. R. C.]

The third part of the first section unfolds the riches of the City of God in splendor consisting of the most precious materials; these riches, as ideal and spirit-clarified, being exhibited through the medium of precious stones, pearls and shining gold (vers. 18-21).

The second section, likewise, is divisible into three parts. The first part is expressive of the absolute spirituality of the new cultus. Since the City has itself become a Holy of holies, a Temple within it would, in comparison with itself, seem like a thing of inferior sanctity—a remnant of the old world. Nevertheless, it has a spiritual Temple which surpasses even the City. God, as the All-Ruler, is the infinitude of this Temple; the Lamb is the present definitude of it (vers. 22, 23). The second part of the second section characterizes the City as the great, universal, holy World-City, the City of all redeemed nations and kings, the City of sanctified humanity and of all its moral and eternal properties, yea, the City of the whole heavenly spirit-world and of the eternal radiance of day (vers. 24-26). The third part represents the separation between the sanctified heathen-world and true heathenism throughout the world, here portrayed by the three characteristics: commonness (bestiality), abominableness (transgression against nature), and falsehood (embracing both the former attributes). There is no longer any question of persons here; they have become neutra through the obliteration of their personality in their vileness (ver. 27). The Lamb's Book of Life has, from the beginning, comprehended this universality of the sphere of salvation.

The third leading section is an unmistakable antitype of the first Paradise. Its general character consists in the fact that all its holiness [Heiligkeit] has become pure health [Heil] and health-productiveness [Heilswirkung].—an infinitely multiplied life-creating, life-renewing and life-preserving Divine life-power. The river of life forms the first fundamental feature. It does not issue merely from an Eden, or land of delight, such as encircled the first Paradise (Gen. ii.); nor does it flow merely from the new Temple of Jehovah, like Ezekiel's river of salvation [or healing], (Ezek. xlvii.); it pours forth from the throne of God and of the Lamb (Rev. xxii. 1). The second fundamental feature is formed by the trees of life which are on both sides of the river, making an avenue with an interminable perspective; fruit-trees of life, so intensively salubrious that they bear new fruits every month, and that even their leaves serve for the healing (deparerea) of the heathen [nations]. So absolute is the health-bringing operation of the trees of life in the City, that in this new Paradise nothing banned can arise—much less shall the new humanity here itself be banned, as were its first parents, through the deceit of the serpent and Satan, in the first Paradise (vers. 2, 3). In the third fundamental feature, the eritis sicut deus is fulfilled in a Divine sense. That which Adam would fain have become, that which he lost in the path of impatience and sin, is now regained in the path of redemption and infinite patience. Now, it is the blessedness of all, that they serve [dienen] God as His servants [Knechte] whilst they see His face as His blessed children, and are able to look upon His face without being terrified like Adam. Again, this blessed relation has become an eternal condition; their holiness has the character indelebilis, the indestructible fixedness of true priests of God.* Whilst the abolition of night is again announced here, as ch. xxi. 25, the announcement has here a new significance. In ch. xxi., the reference is to the day of the blessed in a predominantly spiritual aspect and considered in the abstract; here, however, the unfadingness of this day is intended, pre-eminently, in the sense of the eternal day of the glorified world. That, therefore, which is expressed by the name of God on the foreheads of the blessed—viz., imperishable knowledge of God and consecrateness to God—is supplemented by this declaration. Never again does night come to them, nor any deficiency of light, for God Himself shineth upon them for ever. This, again, is the eternal basis upon which they shall reign as kings, in and with the governance of God, in union with His will, and as organs of His will, eternally free in Him from all the world, for all the world, into the sons of the sons.

The magnificence of the entire picture of the new creation, a magnificence which strikes the taste of ordinary humanism as so peculiar, attains for us its entire significance when we look at it in connection with the whole of Sacred Writ—especially that of the Old Testament—as the lofty corona upon the stem of all Biblical typicism.

Our vision, then, is primarily the picture of the consummation and fulfillment of the whole Theocracy.

The revelation of salvation came down from Heaven in many individual items—in voices, in angels, in Theophanies, and lastly in Christ. The fulfillment finally consists in the descent of the entire City of God from Heaven.

The Congregation of God, called into life by the revelation of salvation, was from the beginning destined to be the Bride of God. Now, it is perfected in this destiny.

The high Mountain, upon which the City of God is situate, was prepared by Mount Zion, and imported the wide, overtowering and firm order and might of the Divine Kingdom. Now, this Mountain of the eternal order and fastness of God, in spirit beheld by the Prophets (Is. ii. 2; Ezek. xl. 2), towers over the whole world.

The city of Jerusalem, after its building and consecration as the royal residence and Temple-city, inherited the ancient typical honors of the previous cities of God, from the camp-city in the wilderness to Shiloh. It was the residence of the Jehovah cultus and of the theocratic constitution. Now, its archetype exists in visible presence—the City in which cultus and culture, in their perfection, have attained their complete union.

* [See additional comment on ch. xxii. 3, p. 388.—E. R. C.]

The glory of God, the Shekinah, manifested itself of old only in transient appearances. The central place of its manifestations was the Holy of holies. Now it spreads, in eternal radiance, over the whole City of God.*

It was formerly exhibited through typical mediums, through visional angelic forms, through the pillars of cloud and of fire, through the cherubim. Now it beams forth from a permanent nucleus of light (φωστήρ). The Parousia of Christ is the Epiphany of God, in brilliancy like the most precious jewel.

Israel, in order to the securement of its holy destiny, was encircled by a hedge, which was designed to separate from it every common thing of heathenism [or the Gentile nations], and by this very process to mediate the future bringing again of the Gentiles through the blessing of Abraham. This barrier—first, theocratic law—then, churchly confession—here appears ideally realized in the high wall, which, by means of its insurmountableness, excludes everything common, and by means of its twelve gates, kept by Angels, invites and receives all that is akin to God, i. e., all that is akin to God in the twelve-fold character-form of the Twelve Tribes of Israel.

The Tribes of Israel were designed to represent in theocratic ground-forms, the fullness of the different human dispositions for the Kingdom of God. These ground-forms are now all fulfilled in the perfecting of the spiritual Israel. Therefore, the gates are adorned with the names of the Tribes of Israel; they are indicative of the ground-forms of the people of God in the interior of the City, as well as of the ground-forms of the people of God entering into the City of God from all the quarters of the world.

In so far as the restoration of the people of Israel itself is concerned, a restoration of its kernel, on the platform of perfect Christian equality and liberty, is simply expressed with the typical import of its Tribes; any renewal, however, of Old Testament legal prerogatives is precluded by this same typical import. The same remark applies to the description of the Sealed (chap. vii.). The sealed ones would not be called after Israel, if Israel were not to form a dynamical power amongst them; the same sealed ones would preclude the idea of elect Gentiles, if they were not to be typically understood.

The gates of the cities of Israel, especially Zion, were, even under the Old Covenant, open to the stranger, if he left his heathen practices without. They became the symbols of ingress into the holy City, into the sanctuary, into the fellowship of the saints (Ps. c. 4), as well as the symbols of egress, in order to the conversion of the world (Isa. lxii. 10), and in order to the bringing in of the King of Glory through its gates (Ps. xxiv. 7; comp. Gen. xxii. 17 [Comm., p. 468, Am. Ed.]).—The new City of God has twelve of these gates, in accordance with the sacred number of completeness. She is lacking in no gate of ingress or of egress.

The stone at Bethel on which Jacob slept when a wanderer, and where he beheld, in a dream, the heavenly ladder, was consecrated as a monument and altar; the prelude of the foundation stones of the House of God (Bethel, Gen. xxii. 22), and of Christ the Corner Stone (Ps. cxviii. 22; Isa. xxviii. 16; Eph. ii. 20). This stone is, in the consummation, divided again into the twelve foundation stones of the wall of the holy City, marked with the names of the Twelve Apostles.

The ground-forms of Christ's mission to the world, the Twelve Apostles, denote, as Apostles of the Lamb, also the ground-forms of the world-conquering cross, and, as such, the foundations of the City of God.

Sacred measure has, in the history of the Temple, an import similar to that possessed, in the Greek view of the world, by the Platonic Idea or the Aristotelian Form; except that the first unitously represents both the latter in the form of practical energy, as real power (Wisd. xi. 20; comp. the Pythagorean system; Job xxviii. 25-27; Isa. xl. 12).—This power of Ideal Form pervades, in perfect supremacy, all the parts of the City of God,—the City and its gates and its walls.

The form of the perfect geometric square or cube was the form of the Holy of holies. Now, this same form appears as the symmetry of the City of God. Of old, the Holy of holies was a well-nigh inaccessible sanctuary, guarded by terrors. Here, the great City of God has become a manifest and open Holy of holies.

The magnitude of the City exhibits it, in its length and breadth, as a World-City; in its height, as a Heaven-City.—As the corona of the Temple, the City is the phenomenal image of the Kingdom of God, and thus, at the same time, of the glorified universe.

The holy wall which, as a theocratic and a churchly barrier, is an odium of all philosophy of wildness, commonness and indiscipline—here appears in its consummation, built of the material of the most precious jewel, a fact recognized afar off by the Spirit of Prophecy (Isa. liv. 11).

The covering of the Ark of the Covenant, which was, so to speak, the most Holy in the Holy of holies, was of pure gold (Ex. xxxvii. 6). Now, the whole City is constructed of pure gold so pure that it glitters like crystal. The City is thus, in an unapproachable exaltedness of thought, signalized as God's Sanctuary.

The jewels worn by the High Priest in his breast-plate, were significant of the idiocrasies, the charismatic aptitudes of the Tribes of Israel; of their value, spiritual and affectional, for the heart of God, Whom the High Priest represented. Such a Divine heart-affection, in the perfection of the ground-forms of human charisms, is now reflected in all the jewels which form the foundation-stones of the City-wall. The whole City is founded, as it were, upon the breast-plate of the real High Priest.

As the precious stone was early constituted a symbol of a personal life, consecrate to God, so the pearl was made a symbol of Divine vital wisdom, of that piety which is concentrated in the knowledge or the righteousness of faith. Thus the value of wisdom exceeds that of pearls (Job xxviii. 18; Prov. iii. 15, [viii. 11]);* wisdom, however, is also symbolized by pearls and is divided, in its individual traits, into a plurality of pearls (Matt. vii. 6), whilst, in its consummate spiritual phase, it is concentrated in the One Pearl of great price, whose value surpasses that of all single pearls (Matt. xiii. 46). But how does the pearl enter into a relation to the gate? In Isaiah liv. 12, we read (in accordance with De Wette's translation): "I make thy battlements of rubies and thy gates of carbuncles (!) and thy whole circuit of costly (precious) stones." The Septuagint distinguishes jasper for the battlements or parapets, crystals for the gates, precious stones for the walls. As the stone for the gates, קִרְיָן, is one that does not elsewhere appear, and takes its name from the radiance of fire, but is assuredly not a carbuncle, if it be true that the ruby is of like significance with the carbuncle, we might suppose that John apprehended it as a pearl. The generation of the pearl from a wound in the pearl-oyster, its lodgment in the deep, the rarity and difficulty of obtaining it, are obvious symbolical motives for the use of it. The subsistence of each gate in one pearl is a speaking image of that heavenly simplicity which alone finds entrance to the eternal City of God.

* [See additional comment on ch. xxi. 22, p. 387.—E. B. C.]

* [In Job, i. e., the G. V. reads: "Ramoth and Gabis are not thought of. Wisdom is of higher value than pearls. In the

In the golden pavement of the streets of the City, the gold of the buildings is raised to an even higher power. Gold like translucent crystal. How far is it from the streets of Jerusalem—consecrated though they were—through Christian city streets and alleys—in which morals and cultivation often, even to this day, carry on a conflict with barbarism—to this goal! Here the lanes and streets are clean; the citizens walk on a pavement of gold, eternally clear and bright as a mirror.

The points which have reference to the perfection of the Theocracy, are followed by the fundamental features of the perfected, believing Gentile world.

As the most pious of the heathen discovered lively signs and traces of the Unknown God, not in their temples, but outside of these, and as the worship of God in spirit and in truth has in all time formed a contrast to the purely local worship on Gerizim and in Jerusalem, so, in accordance with these preludes, a perfect consciousness of the omnipresence of God in His Spirit has been formed. The obscure feeling of God's omnipresence has continually developed more and more, both outside of the revelation of salvation and within it (comp. Gen. xxviii. 16 and Psalm cxxxix. 7sq.). Here this feeling is exchanged for the constant contemplation of the presence of God, or, rather, for the perfect manifestation of God.

The universal natural revelation of God (Rom. i. 20) was always, for the heathen, in respect of its fundamental traits, a revelation through the medium, particularly, of the great celestial lights—the sun and the moon. This revelation is now restored and perfected—sun and moon are outshone by the glory of the Lord. In the spiritual radiance which proceeds from God, through Christ His Light-bearer, the lights of Heaven seem, as such, to vanish, because they are for the first time effectual in Him in their full import.

The heathen [or Gentiles] have, in the light of salvation, become nations in the purest sense, —types of peoples, which, in their sanctified idiosyncrasies, conjoin to form the Kingdom of God. In the blessing of Noah, the first sketch of the various destinations of the tribes of man appeared; at the foot of the tower of Babel, mankind was divided into gentilisms. The higher charismatic destination of humanity was, however, not only typically symbolized by the Twelve Tribes of Israel and expressed by the idea of the seventy nations and the number of the seventy disciples, but, moreover, it was the constant task of the Christian Church to work out, from the heathen confusion of peoples, the one people of God; but also, however, to work out from the one Christendom the heavenly family of peoples. Here, this heavenly family has attained a visible existence. The nations walk through the light-stream of the Kingdom of God as though they were bathing themselves therein.

Again, that which has ever been represented by kings—that of which bad kings were significant as symbolical figures, and which good kings, heroes, approximately realized, in company with the kingly spirits who ruled right royally, though possessing neither crown nor sceptre (Matt. v. 19), potentiated men, as central points of the social organization of humanity—is likewise now fulfilled. The kings of the earth bring all the glory of the earth, their possessions brought under the service of spirit, into the City of God (Isa. xlix. 23; lx. 16).

Furthermore, the security which man has now and then enjoyed under the protection of the law, in circles of civilization and on the heights of peace, in the bright day-time in antithesis to the night-time, has always been promoted by the Kingdom of God. Here, at last, in the consummation, the "superb repose of Heaven" prevails, secured by the light of eternal day, in the region of eternal sunshine. The gates of the City of God are not shut, because the day-time is permanent.

As the entire net value of the good things of earth is appropriated to the City of God, so also is the entire net value of humanity, in the glory of the peoples, their manifold and various gifts, the whole treasure of human culture. Israel was chosen to be the people of God, in order that it might make the peoples appear again as peoples, in the blessing of Abraham. It is the task of Christianity to this day to take away the covering of sin, of national corruption, from the beauty of the peoples (Isa. xxv. 7). Here is the fulfillment. In contemplating the one glory of Christ, they all come forth in their glory—the treasure, the harvest of God, the triumphal spoils of Christ.

Real heathenism, however, such as disfigured even Judaism (see Rom. ii.), is then eliminated forever from the pure Church of God. Its characteristics are commonness [or profaneness, as opposed to consecrateness to God], rudeness, and uncultivation, on the one hand, and, on the other, abomination, transgression against nature, including the perverted forms of mis-culture and over-culture; and the common ground-tone is falsehood—the falsification of the high and holy reality of God, the production of mask-like shadows, which in part appear as rude caricatures of reality, in part as caricatures which ape beauty and holiness. At this process of elimination, humanity, in its higher tendency, has labored, by Jewish laws of purification, Græco-Roman justice and police, and by the Christian administration of the keys [Schlüsselamt], often amid great and gross distortions of the idea of the ban. Here, however, the City of God has attained to an eternal power of purity, in which, with twelve open gates, it still, in dynamical operation, for ever keeps everything common or ban-laden afar off.

two passages in Proverbs above cited, the word which the E. V. renders rubies, is, in the G. V., translated pearls.—T.M.]

As the circle of the Theocracy is surrounded by the circle of holy humanity, so the latter is surrounded by the circle of glorified nature.

Paradise was lost. Lost, however, only as to its visible appearance, and to the world. The grace of God secured the seed of Paradise, and Christ regained that seed for humanity. It lay under the snow, it burst forth again in foretokens and signs in the Promised Land and in Christian civilization.—Here, Paradise is extant again, and how it has grown under the snow! The mysterious garden in Eden has become a glorified universe.

Yonder river of Paradise went out from Eden, the land of delight, and divided into the main rivers of earth. How soon it gathered earthly hues and fell under the doom of transitoriness! And even in Paradise it was no river of life. Gradually, indeed, a fountain of salvation burst forth in humanity—burst forth out of the depths, out of the rock of salvation (Ps. xli. 5; Is. xii. 8; Jer. ii. 13, et al.), being prefigured by the wells of the Patriarchs and the wells of the desert (Ex. xv. 27, et al.). Gradually, also, sacred brooks and rivers, Shiloah and Jordan, became streams of blessing, and a great river of life was predicted by Ezeiel.—But here, the mighty, shining river of life bursts forth; it comes from the throne of God and of the Lamb, having, even in this present life, been heralded and opened as a fountain (John iv. 7); it abides pure as crystal, it pours forth into infinitude through its one deep channel, and is adorned on either side with trees of life.

The one tree of life in Paradise speedily vanished, like a figure in a dream, a celestial apparition. Here it is again. It has become an endless avenue, a glorious grove, and in the plenteousness of its fruits and the healing virtue of its leaves a power of life is expressed which far exceeds all the conceptions of mortal pilgrims. It is the view of a nature completely elevated to the service of spirit, love and life.

Whilst there is here another reference to the fact that nothing banned [cursed] has existence in the City, this is certainly not a repetition of the idea set forth in ch. xxi. 27. We are rather reminded, within the domain of glorified nature, that, by virtue of patriarchal custom and Mosaic food-laws, a rigorous ban rested upon a large portion of nature. Christianity paved the way for the acknowledgment that every creature of God is clean that is (and can be) partaken of with thanksgiving. Here, there shall evermore be nothing banned (literally, set aside, κατάθεμα, a term which it has been deemed necessary to interpret into καταβάθεμα, leaving out of consideration the textual reference). Paradise itself, in whose first rudiment God did, of old, but walk in mysterious appearances, has become a throne of God and of the Lamb. The Word once became flesh, that all nature might be spiritualized.

And because there is question here of the holy tillage of the eternal garden, as Adam was called to till the garden of Paradise, and because the task of tilling the field was resumed by the Theocracy and by civilization, Christianity next mediating the holy cultivation of the earth, the sons of God can here once more appear in the most dignified form. But as they shall serve [dienen] their God as His active servants [Knechte], so they shall rest in the contemplation of His face and bear His name on their foreheads as a people of high-priests, being ever newly energized by Him through the contemplation of His glory (1 John iii. 2).

And whilst the cessation of the night-time is again mentioned here, as in ch. xxii. 23, 25, let us recollect that even this semblance of tautology is done away with by a discrimination of the fact that in ch. xxi. the reference was to glorified humanity, but here it is to glorified Nature. The night side of Nature, diminished by the most manifold torches, lights and inventions for the obtaining of light, is here abolished.

And because God will Himself be the eternal Day-Light of the blessed, they need no more be continually sinking back into the bosom of night. Even under the Old Covenant, the prelude of a holy spirit-life, often emblemized by festal illuminations, flashed through the night-times of nature. The holy birth-night [Weihnachts-Christmas] of Christ laid the foundation for the bringing in of eternal day. The Holy Supper became the pre-celebration of the morning of that day. As Christianity is in constant combat with ethical night, so Christendom is in constant combat with the uncomfortable features and distresses of physical night. Here, the eternal Day has dawned in the presence of God; therefore do the blessed reign,—royally free, without ever losing their consciousness in night,—into the sons of the sons.

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ch. xxi. 9. Comp. ch. xvii. 1. Ewald and Dürstendieck have also pointed out the contrast of our passage to that cited, which is couched in similar terms. The Bride.—On the change of designations, see Dürst., p. 565.

Ver. 10. He carried me away.—See ch. xvii. 3 (Ezek. iii. 12; xxxvii. 1; xl. 2; Acts viii. 39; 2 Cor. xii. 2). In accordance with the passages mentioned, we have to distinguish between purely spiritual transports and such as are also followed by a corporeal removal, accomplished, as it were, in a dream. To a great and high mountain.—According to Dürstendieck, the Seer is taken to this mountain in order that he may obtain a free view of the City. The same exegete remarks that the mountain must be so great in order to be so high. The Seer, therefore [as Dürstendieck maintains], stands on the mountain and looks down upon the City. A splendid view, it is true, but too modern. The symbolical expression points, according to Hengstenberg, et al., back to the fundamental passages in the Old Testament, especially Ezek. xl. 2; xvii. 22, 23; xx. 40; Ps. xlviii. 1, 2; also, particularly, Is. ii. 2. Descending.—See Rev. xxi. 2. The difficulties which Hengstenb. and Düsterd. discover in the apparent repetition of ver. 2 vanish when we consider the parallel relation between the Heaven-picture and the Earth-picture.

Ver. 11. Having, etc.—Or, possessing. The dim radiance in which a large city is always enwrapped at the beginning of night may, on the one hand, have mediated this view; but, on the other hand, it is based upon the idea that the Shekinah no longer hovers over the holy Temple-mountain alone, according to the words of the Prophet (Isaiah iv. 5; xl. 5), but shines over the entire Holy City. Her light-giver (φωστήρ—light-bearer).—Düsterdieck opposes the assumption of Züllig, that the Messiah is intended by the φωστήρ, and cites ver. 23 in support of such opposition; that verse, however, is favorable to Züllig's view—as is also Heb. i. 8. Like unto a stone most precious.—Comp. ch. iv. 8. A Jasper stone, clear as crystal.—See pp. 20 and 151. “Comp. Psellus (in Wetstein): ἡ Ἰασπις φέσει κρυσταλλοειδής.” DÜSTERDIECK.

[“φωστήρ, from verse 23, is the effect of the Divine glory shining in her: see (also) Gen. i. 14, 16, (LXX.), where it is used for the heavenly bodies.” ALFORD.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 12. Having a wall great and high.—The measure of the wall, the gates and the City is qualified throughout by the duodecenary; not, therefore, by the number of complete worldly development, ten, but by the number of perfection of the people of God. Twelve is the number of theocratic perfection; hence it is the number of the Twelve Patriarchs, the Twelve Tribes of Israel, the Twelve Apostles, the perfected Church or heavenly Spirit-World (see p. 15). Here, therefore, there is repeatedly reflected, in all the duodecenaries of the City of God, the quantitative number of completeness and the qualitative perfection of the glorified Church of God. It, however, crosses and blends with the number of the world, the quaternary, and indeed is itself composed of three times four, i. e., the God-hallowed world-number. Moreover, the quaternary, as it here appears, continually branches into threes. Thus, we read of twelve gates, distributed by threes on the four sides of the City. And again, the City itself, in its quadrangular form, is thrice quadrangular—in length, breadth and height—and is thus a cube. The duodecenary is repeated a thousand times in the qualification of the stadia. The height of the wall is defined by the number twelve times twelve, or a hundred and forty-four. Even from these numeric proportions alone, the thoroughly symbolic nature of the whole picture of the City is manifest, and the same fact is further evident, in particular, from the height of the City.

And at the gates twelve angels.—“Bengel judiciously remarks: ‘They keep watch and serve as ornaments.’ We are not authorized to seek for a knowledge of any more definite relations which they may sustain to the City. So soon as we reflect that the new Jerusalem is no longer menaced by enemies, and that it consequently stands in need of no watchmen at its gates, explanations like that of Hengstenberg arise—viz., that these Angels symbolize the Divine protection against all foes ‘of which the imagination, filled with the terrors resting upon the Church Militant, can conceive.’” [DÜST.] A most marvellous imagination, truly! As if the blessed inhabitants of Heaven were timid children, or were threatened by empty terrors of the fancy! But even the idea of Angels standing always upon the gates for ornament has a singular aspect, and as watchmen—who, however, would be superfluous after the final judgment—they would be obliged to stand in the gates. We have characterized them above as symbols of the destination of Jerusalem to be the medium of salvation to all the world, to all the four quarters of the world (see Is. xliii. 5; xlix. 6; Matt. viii. 11). De WETTE: “Guards, probably after Is. lxii. 6 and after the type of the Levitic temple-guards [or ‘porters’] (2 Chron. viii. 14).” From this point of view, these Angels would symbolically represent the eternal security and inamissibility of heavenly prosperity or salvation.*

And names inscribed.—The twelve names upon the twelve gates, as the names of the Twelve Tribes of Israel, denote the whole manifoldness of the idiocrasies of the totality of God's people. The typical fore-image is to be found Ezek. xlviii. 80 sqq. Jewish Theology has drawn from this rich symbolism the absurd idea that every Israelitish Tribe of the new Jerusalem shall be permitted to go in and out only of that particular gate which is appointed for it (see De Wette, p. 198). If we were to interpret the sealed out of the Twelve Tribes (ch. vii.) literally, as Jewish Christians, we should here be obliged to go on to the tremendous deduction that the entire heavenly City is to be inhabited solely by Jewish Christians.

Ver. 13. On the east.—See the above-cited passage in Ezekiel, ch. xlviii.

Ver. 14. Twelve foundations [Lange: foundation-stones].—The twelve gates give rise to twelve sections of the wall, amongst which De Wette and Düsterdieck distribute the foundation-stones. In accordance with this disposition, four are “to be conceived of as mighty corner-stones.” Symbolical descriptions, however, should not be pushed beyond the idea which they are designed to convey. It may, at all events, be taken for granted that the twelve foundation-stones are open to view, like corner-stones in the ancient sense of the term. As the whole fullness of the theocratic natural disposition was set forth in the Twelve Patriarchs, so the whole fullness of Christ's Spirit and salvation was manifested in the Apostles. The Apostle John could not, in modesty, have written this, is the cry of an idea-less, snarling criticism. The symbolic expression of the truth, that the celestial City of God is grounded upon the evangelic foundations of the twelve Apostles, can, however, no more lose its ideal value through the one consideration that the name of John is pre-supposed to accompany the names of the other Apostles, than through the other consideration that the name of Paul seems to be omitted from the group; nor is it a necessary inference from the citation of the Twelve Tribes of Israel in our passage, that the modifications in their names (ch. vii.) are to be abolished. Comp. Eph. ii. 20, where a freer apprehension of the symbolic idea already appears: "built upon the foundation of the Apostles and Prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the corner-stone."

* [The cul bono argument, if injudiciously pressed, might lead to the conclusion that there are no Angels at all. Angels are described as “ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation.” ‘But,’ it may be asked, ‘what is the use of them under the government of an infinite God? Are they ought else than symbols of the watchful guardianship which God exercises over His children?’ Angels may be unnecessary as watchmen and guards at the gates of the heavenly Jerusalem, and some may object to them as “ornaments;” and yet veritable Angels ministering at the gates of that glorious abode would add to its glory, and might perform other offices that in our present condition it is impossible for us to conceive.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 15. He that spake with me (see ver. 9) had a measure.—Comp. Ezek. xl. 8, 5. The fact that the discourse occurring in symbolical representations must be determined by the fundamental thought thereof, is evidenced by Zech. ii. 3 sqq. "The angel who shows John the City (comp. ver. 9) gives him a perfectly distinct idea of its dimensions by actually measuring it before the eyes of the Seer (Bengel, Ewald, De Wette)." DÜSTERD.—The measure (see ch. xi. 1; Ezek. xlii. 16) denotes the ideality of the eternal Church, the Divine knowledge and appointment of it—qualities which are expressed also in John xvii.; Rom. viii.; Eph. i. The measure is golden: through the Divine faithfulness, the ideal Church has become the actualized eternal Church. The Angel performs the measurement in the true sequence: first, the City is defined, with reference to the fullness of its inhabitants; next, the proportion of the gates and the wall.

Ver. 16. And the City lieth.—"The fact (ver. 16 a) that the City lies (kelei; comp. ch. iv. 2) four-cornered (like ancient Babylon and the new Jerusalem of Ezekiel), rectangular, and with equal length and breadth, and that therefore the ground-plan of it forms a perfect square (comp. Ezek. xlviii. 16), is recognized by John even before the Angel begins to measure." DÜSTERD.—Twelve thousand stadia, i. e., 800 geographical [German (1884 Eng. statute)] miles. It is a question whether the 12,000 stadia qualify the whole area of the City, so that the dimensions of each side amount to 3,000 stadia (in accordance with Vitringa, et al.), or whether the 12,000 stadia are to be taken as applying in their entirety to each of the four sides, and as referring also to the height (Bengel, Züllig, et al.). In regard to the former hypothesis, the further question arises, whether the height also is stated at 3,000 stadia, like the length and the breadth. De Wette opposes the idea that the height of the City amounts to 12,000 stadia. The conception would, in such case, he declares, be that of a lofty fortress, whilst it is manifestly a city that is represented, as mention is made of streets (ch. xxii. 2); he even maintains that the height is determined only by the wall.* DÜSTERDIECK, on the other hand, finds in the 12,000 stadia the measure alike for length, breadth and height (with Bengel, Hengstenberg, et al.). Whilst the idea is a prodigious one, we must recollect that we have to do with a thoroughly symbolical description. A height of even 3,000 stadia far exceeds that of the loftiest steeples. If, however, we keep strictly to the text, we find that the measure of the entire square in respect of length and breadth, as the measure of the City, is 12,000 stadia; and, accordingly, the height of the City is to be determined by the quarter of this, as 3,000 stadia. The fact that the wall will then be considerably lower than the height of the City itself, should not occasion any difficulty. The height of the Kingdom of God towers far above the theocratic barrier. Here, therefore, the typical cube-form of the Tabernacle is realized in the highest sense; and the breadth, length, depth and height of the Divine dispensation of salvation (Eph. iii. 18) are embodied in symbolical significance, in analogy with the incarnation of the Word. (The Word became flesh [John i. 14].)

Ver. 17. Her wall.—"The height of the City is not the height of the wall, as Bengel also assumes, and therefore maintains that the 144 cubits are equivalent to the 12,000 stadia." DÜSTERD.—The measure of a man.—"The additional clause: which is that of an angel, occasions difficulty. De Wette: The Angel has made use of human measure. Ebrard: The measure of glorified men is like the measure of the Angel. Hengstenberg (and DÜSTERDIECK): The measure of the Angel, who makes his measurement for men, is like the measure of men. A reminder of the symbolic import of the act of measuring is probably contained in our passage:—the human measure with which the Sanctuary was measured, is here an angelic measure, i. e., it has a symbolic, higher import. The Seer frequently inserts similar reminders of the symbolic nature of his forms of speech; see especially chs. i. 20; xiii. 18; xvi. 14; xvii. 9. Now if the wall denotes the security of the City of God, and the cubit the measure of the Sanctuary, the height of 144 cubits is expressive of the perfect measure of heavenly confirmation or verification: the theocratic twelve of the plan of the Kingdom multiplied by the apostolic twelve of the consummation of the Kingdom in the fullness of the Spirit of Christ. This symbolical nature of the cubit-measure is expressed in the prophecy of Ezekiel by the fact that every cubit there spoken of is a hand-breadth longer than a common cubit. The figure of the wall approaches the idea of Zechariah (ch. i. 5): "For I, saith the Lord, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her;" [LANGS (not G. V.): "and will manifest my glory in her"]. The prodigious extent of the City is also expressive of an idea—or, rather, of the ideal fact that it extends, with unseen limits, through the universe, and towers up into the height of eternity; that it belongs to Heaven, whence it has descended to earth. A discussion of the relative lowness of the wall in proportion to the height of the City, see in Düsterdieck, p. 568.

* [De Wette interprets the low, ver. 16, in reference to the height,—viz.: of the wall, as he falsely assumes—as uniform, because the wall is everywhere 144, i. e. 12 x 12, cubits high. Altered from DÜSTERDIECK.—T.]

Ver. 18. And the structure of her wall.—The materials. On the rare word ἐνδόμους, comp. the Lexicons. Jasper.—See above, p. 20. The material of the wall is thus of like import with its height,—infinite value in infinite duration, qualities which both appertain to the most precious of precious stones. The city was pure gold.—The material of the houses is absolutely pure gold, similar, in consequence of this purity, to pure crystal or glass.

This may be understood as referring either to the transparency of glass, or to the mirror-like brightness of crystal. We adopt the latter signification, retaining it also when διανύς is predicated of the golden street-pavement [πλατεία] (ver. 21). According to Ebrard, there is a prospect that gold itself will really be translucent in the world to come. The genuine heavenly purity and faithfulness of the inhabitants of the City shall, therefore, be reflected in the golden brilliance of their dwellings.

Ver. 19. The foundations of the wall. etc.—The meaning is, that the foundations or foundation-stones of the City consist of precious stones, as is clearly evident from the following verse (comp. Is. lii. 11). "As the twelve στέλλαι have nothing to do with the number of the Israelitish Tribes (comp. ver. 14), that artificial mode of interpretation by which the stones (ver. 19 sq.) are brought into an assumed relation to those worn by the High-priest in his breast-plate (comp. especially Züllig, Excursus II., pp. 456 sqq.; also Ewald II., Luthardt, Volkmar), is to be discarded as decidedly as the vain attempt to assign individual jewels to individual Apostles (Andr., Bengel, et al.). DÜSTERDIECK. If it be proved that a relation exists between the Twelve Tribes of Israel, whose names the High-priest wore in his breast-plate, and the Twelve Apostles,—a relation as between the theocratic plan and the apostolic development,—a general relation will also be assumable between the jewels in the breast-plate and the jewels which constitute the foundations of the Holy City. But if an individual combination of the Twelve Tribes and the Twelve Apostles is impracticable, it will be still less possible to make out a concordance of the stones in the high-priestly breast-plate and the foundation-stones of the New Jerusalem. The general symbolic significance lies in the nature of the precious stones, and also, particularly, in their colors, in the grouping of which they appear as a symbolism of eternal individualities, all, in equal purity, brilliant with the same light, which they reflect in the most diverse rays (see Introduction, pp. 20 sq.; Lange's Miscellaneous Writings, vol. i. p. 15). The first . . . jasper.—Comp. pp. 20sq. and 151, and ver. 11. Sapphire.—Ex. xxiv. 10; xxviii. 18; Ezekiel xxviii. 18; see Winer, Title, PRECIOUS STONES; [also Kittó's Cyclopædia and Smith's Dictionary of the Bible]. "Our sapphire is sky-blue (comp. Ezek. i. 28), translucent, and harder than the ruby. That which the ancients so denominated, must, according to Pliny (37, 89) and Theophr. (ch. vi. 23, 37), have been the lapis lazuli," etc. Winer remarks, in conclusion, however, that we must suppose the Hebrew word to denote the true sapphire, as is clearly evident from the passages cited from Exodus and Ezekiel. The opinion of Düsterdieck, therefore, who assumes the lapis lazuli to be intended, is incorrect. Chalcedony.—Not the agate, precisely. WINER: A chalcedony-agate. Emerald.—Grass-green, not very hard, translucent, with double refraction (see Winer, PRECIOUS STONES, No. 8).

Ver. 20. Sardonyx.—See Winer, No. 16; comp. No. 1: "Consisting of a combination of onyx and carnelian." Sardius.—Or carnelian: it is striped with brown and is not very sharply distinguished from the preceding stone. Chrysolite.—See Winer, No. 10: "Pale-green, perfectly translucent, with double refraction. According to Pliny, it is of the color of gold, and hence the topaz has been understood by it." Beryl.—Winer, No. 11. Topaz.—Winer, No. 2. This seems to have been frequently confounded with the chrysolite. Chrysoprasus.—Winer, No. 15: "Pale green, shading into yellowish and brown—translucent." Jacinth [Hyacinth].—Winer, No. 7. Amethyst.—Winer, No. 9.

In respect of color, we distinguish blue stones: Sapphire, chalcedony, amethyst (violet-blue); Green: Emerald, beryl, and, more or less, chrysoprasus; Golden or yellow: Chrysoprasus (see above), chrysolite, topaz; Red: Hyacinth [jacinth], sardonyx, sardius (carnelian). The jasper is, most probably, as a diamond, of the pure hue of light; as an ordinary jasper, it would be non-translucent and of various colors. It is evident from chs. iv. 8, xxi. 12, as well as from the fact that in accordance with New Testament order it stands at the beginning, and in accordance with Old Testament order at the close, that it is to be regarded as the chief or most precious stone. Of the jewels in the breast-plate two names are absent from our catalogue, viz., the ruby and the agate, whilst, on the other hand, the names chalcedony and chrysoprasus are wanting in the breast-plate (comp. Introduction, p. 20). For a comparison of the lists, see Ebrard, pp. 588 sqq.; Hengstenberg, vol. ii., pp. 417 sq. [Eng. Trans.]; De Wette, p. 200.

Ver. 21. Of one pearl.—Düsterdieck quotes the Jewish tradition from Bava Bathra: "Deus adducet gemmas et margaritas, triginta cubitos longas, totidemque latas." There is, however, a heaven-wide distinction between a great pearl as modified by Christian symbolism, and a great pearl as modified by Jewish Chiliasm. The broad-way of the city.—Πλατεία [i. e., the flat, as opposed to the elevated, the buildings]. Doubtless significant of the pavement or ground of all the streets and alleys; not merely the market-place (Bengel) or principal street (Züllig). [See foot-note †, chap. xi. 8, p. 231.—E. R. C.]. As it were translucent glass.—We apprehend this not literally, but poetically, of the mirror-like brightness.

Ver. 22. "The peculiar glory of the City is further described." DÜSTERDIECK. That is, the pause is unobserved by him.

[In the old Jerusalem the Temple was at once the dwelling-place and the concealer of Jehovah. Though present, He was not visibly present—in a sense He was sheltered by the Temple. The new Jerusalem shall have no place for the shelter of the Lord, for she shall be sheltered by Him. He shall tabernacle over her, ch. vii. 15. Her inhabitants shall dwell under His manifest and sheltering light. He shall be her Temple.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 23. The glory of God lightened her.—See Is. lx. 19. On the distinction between this passage and ver. 11, see above.

Ver. 24. And the nations (Is. ii. 8; lx. 11; Ps. lxxii. 11) shall walk by means of [Lange: through] her light.—Significant future. "This description, drawn from the declarations of the old Prophets, does not justify the idea of those expositors who conceive of the heathen [nations] and the kings as dwelling outside of the City (Ewald, De Wette, Bleek et al.), or who would even attempt to determine what moral condition the heathen [nations] now admitted into the new Jerusalem, occupied during their earthly life (Storr, etc.)." DÜSTERDIECK. Their glory.—That is, that which the kings possessed of glory. The Apocalyptist knows no political partyism. He recognizes a glory of the kings and also a glory of the peoples (ver. 26).

[ALFORD: "If then the kings of the earth, and the nations bring their glory and their treasures into her, and if none shall ever enter into her that is not written in the book of life, it follows that these kings, and these nations, are written in the book of life. And so perhaps some light may be thrown on one of the darkest mysteries of redemption. There may be,—I say it with all diffidence,—those who have been saved by Christ without ever forming a part of His visible organized Church."]

The conclusion may be granted without recognizing the force of the argument. The distinguished commentator takes for granted that the kings and nations are those that lived before the Millennial period, or at least before the great consummation. Is it not rather probable that the great truth is adumbrated in this revelation (see also ch. xx. 2, last clause), that, even after the new creation, the human race is to be continued (ever propagating a holy seed, such as would have been begotten had Adam never sinned) under the government of the glorified Church?—E. R. C.]

Ver. 25. Her gates shall not be [Lange: do not be] shut.—They stand open uninterruptedly, for the bringing in of all the glory of the kings and the peoples (Is. lx. 11).

Ver. 26. And they shall bring.—"An impersonal subject should be supplied to οἱ ἄγιοι (comp. chap. xii. 6; x. 11 [the reading ἀγίων]; Luther, Bengel, De Wette, Hengstenb., Ew. II., et al.), not οἱ βασιλεῖς (Ew. I., Züll.)." DÜSTERD.

Ver. 27. Anything common.—See ch. xxi. 8; xxii. 15; Acts x. 14. The elevation of the Apocalypse above Judaistic views is sufficiently evident from this passage alone, which, in connection with the preceding context, thoroughly distinguishes between believing ethnics and the essence of ethnoicism, determining the πάν κοινόν purely in accordance with moral characteristics.

Chap. xxii. 1. A river.—The water of life is not to be taken here in a purely spiritual sense, at least not, primarily, as in John iv. 14 and vii.

38. It denotes the stream of spirituo-corporeal life-power which, as an eternal renewing power, ensures the imperishability and vital freshness of the new world (see Ezek. xlvii. 1; Zech. xiv. 8; comp. 1 Pet. i. 4). The unitous spirituo-corporeal operation is especially expressed in the fact that the river proceeds from the throne of God and of the Lamb—from the living God, through the glorified Christ, in accordance with the heavenly species of His resurrection-life. The properties of the river of Paradise, which operated as a purely natural blessing (Gen. ii.), and those of the spiritual fountain of healing, first promised by the Prophets and subsequently opened in Christ, are united in this river. As a river, it is cosmically permanent, and as a river that proceeds from the throne of God, it is absolutely permanent. Its source is not situate under the Temple-mount or under the Temple itself, but in the depths of the Divine revelation of love and life, in the profundities of the Divine government consonant with that revelation. As the trees of life are ensured by this eternally clear river, so the river is ensured by the Divine throne itself.

Ver. 2. In the midst of her broad-way.—Düsterdieck, with Ewald, refers ἐν μέσῳ τοῦ ποταμοῦ also; but how this view can be accompanied by the conception "that the trees stand on both sides of the river," is not clear (see Ezek. xlvii. 7, 12).

A tree [Lange: Gehölz=wood] of life.—ξύλον=a wood, a collection of trees, having the common character of trees of life (see ch. ii. 7), "generically denotes the entire mass of trees (Bengel, De Wette, Ewald, et al.)." DRESE. De Wette gives: the tree [Baum] of life, and adds: "Which produces twelve fruits, bringing forth its fruit every month (Ezek. xlvii. 12);" this, however, can only mean twelve fruit-harvests or fruit twelve times. "Twelve kinds of fruits" (Lutheran Version; ["twelve manner of fruits," E. V.]) are, at all events, not intended. All the fruits are fruits of life.

And the leaves, etc.—These words contain, first, an expression of the highest vital efficacy. Even all the leaves of all these trees possess a vital energy which can be conducive, as a healing power, to the health of even the heathen or nations. As extreme views, are opposed the interpretation of Bengel, who holds that reference is had to the conversion of the heathen to whom in this life the Gospel has not been preached; and the interpretation of Hengstenberg, who thinks that the vital forces of the heavenly Jerusalem are intended, as serving in the present age (!) for the conversion of the heathen (Hengst., vol. ii., p. 433 [Eng. Trans.]). It is not necessary, through fear of an apocatastasis, either to do violence to the text, or to place the hope of an infinite healing operation in the leaves of the tree of life—an operation which is expressed by the river, but does not coincide exactly with the restoration-theory. Another contrast is presented in the inclination of Bleek and De Wette, with Ewald and Züllig (also Ebrard), to find a reference to heathen [nations] dwelling outside of the City, and the view of Düsterdieck, who holds that simply the eternal refreshment and beatification of believing heathen [nations] is made prominent. According to Ebrard, the fruits manifestly serve as food for the inhabitants of the City, and the leaves for the healing of the ἐθνὴ without the City; the latter, he continues, do not need such a θεραπεύα as to be healed of godlessness and converted therefrom, "but they must be brought from the condition of undeveloped and weak faith and dawning knowledge, to the ripeness of the full stature of men in Christ." It might be queried, how does this interpretation correspond with the distinction of milk and strong meat [food]? Taken literally, the leaves might be reckoned as strong meat. But let us recollect that we are at present in the third sphere of our description, in which the transfiguration or heavenly glorification of nature is spoken of. Here the expression denotes the highest sanative operation of nature—even the leaves of the trees whose fruits are the vital nourishment of God's people, serve for the healing [Therapie] of the heathen [nations]. We apprehend the word [healing] in the wider sense, and observe, with Düster., that these heathen [nations] have been mentioned before in ch. xxi. 24. The remark of Düsterdieck, that the heavenly enjoyment of life is contrasted with the lack of vital power under which those referred to labored in this present life, is not in itself incorrect, but it gives rise to the question: wherefore are the leaves mentioned? As the river of life cannot be restricted to the City, so, also, the trees of life, with their fruits and leaves, can be regarded only as a health-giving blessing, stretching out into infinitude; and thus the passage coincides in general with analogous utterances of Paul (1 Cor. xv. 26–28). [See additional comment on chap. xxi. 24, p. 388.—E. R. C.]

Ver. 3. And nothing cursed shall be any more.—See SYN. VIEW; comp. Zech. xiv. 11.* Ebrard traces the κατάθεμα directly back to the cherem, distinguishing, however, as cherem, persons and things (in accordance with Lev. xxvii. 28 and other passages). There is yet another distinction to be made, however, between the cherem and the κοινόν.

And His servants shall serve Him.—The idea of religious service presented by λατρεῖν does not preclude the idea of a service rendered in the heavenly culture of the new Paradise, because, in the glorified world, cultus and culture shall have become one.

[There seems to be a great and blessed truth conveyed by the conjunction of δούλοι and λατρεύουσιν. His slaves (δούλοι) shall be elevated to the dignity of temple-servitors. The idea is akin to that presented by our Lord, John xv. 15: "Henceforth I call you not servants (δούλοι=slaves), but I have called you friends."—E. R. C.]

Ver. 4. His face.—Matt. v. 8; 1 Cor. xiii. 12; 1 John iii. 2.—His name.—See ch. iii. 12; xiv. 1.

Ver. 5. And night shall not be any more.—This is simply a repetition, according to De Wette, Ebr., Düster. (see SYN. VIEW). Hengstenb. discovers here an antithesis harmonizing with the Gospel of John, to wit, the antithesis of day as the time of safety and good, and night as the time of peril and evil (?); he remarks, by way of illustration: "Any one who has lived with a wakeful eye through the year '48 is acquainted with this distinction of day and night." It might be replied: Any one who has become acquainted with it only under such a date, knows it but very imperfectly, to say the least.

And they shall reign.—"In a still higher sense than in ch. xx. 4, 6, says De Wette." To which we query: in what respect? We would remind our readers that reference is here had to the relation of the blessed to the celestial spheres of nature; this fact endows the expression with the import that all dependence upon the power of nature shall be done away with.

Into the ages of the ages.—The antithesis see in ch. xx. 10.—In the region of the damned there continues, according to the same passage, the antithesis of day and night. The sons of the blessed are raised above the vicissitudes of temporality, because in God is eternity, the inexhaustible fountain of holy, festal seasons; and Christ has, in reality, freed even time from the curse of temporality, and made it the rhythmic succession of the fullness of eternity, the development-form of eternal life.

[NOTE ON THE NEW JERUSALEM.]

By the American Editor.

[It was the design of the American Editor to prepare an extended Exkursus on this subject. Circumstances, however, over which he has no control, prevent his doing more than present a brief sketch of the views of representative commentators, afterwards indicating those points of his own hypothesis that he did intend thoroughly to discuss.

a. Sketch of Views.

So many and variant have been the opinions on this subject that it seems impossible to classify them: The following extract from Elliott will be regarded as a fair exposition of the views of those mentioned by him.

"It has long been a disputed question amongst prophetic expositors, where precisely the New Jerusalem of the xxi. and xxii. chapters of the Apocalypse is to have position; whether during or only after the Millennium; and if synchronous with it, whether as identical or not with the glorified Jerusalem prophesied in the Old Testament. Of the older Fathers alike the pre-millenarian TERTULLIAN, and the anti-pre-millenarian AUGUSTINE, explained the glorified Jerusalem of O. T. prophecy as identical with that of the Apocalypse; the one (TERTULLIAN) however, as symbolical of the risen saints' millennial glory, the other (AUGUSTINE) of their heavenly and everlasting blessedness. Again, of the moderns . . . WHITBY and VITRINGA, whilst also identifying the two figurations, did yet explain them to signify the millennial earthly blessedness of the still living Christian Church. . . . FABER would separate the two, and make Isaiah's Jerusalem of the latter day, with its new heaven and earth, alone millennial, that of the Apocalypse post-millennial; to which I may add that some expositors, while explaining one or both to pre-figure earthly glories destined for God's people, make the restored and converted Jews nationally, not the Church Catholic generally, the grand object and chief intended recipients of the coming glory."

* [The G. V. reads here: "und wird kein Bann mehr sein" (and there shall be no more ban).—Ta.]

ELLIOTT himself (5th edition) "supposes the New Jerusalem to have existence from the commencement, and throughout the progress, of the millennial period." With this opinion the majority of pre-millenarians probably agree, though with vast differences as to particulars. Elliott argues his position from—(1) a comparison of ch. xix. 7, 8, with ch. xxi. 2, 9; (2) a comparison of xix. 10, with xxii. 8, 9, inferring from the co-incidence that the same event must have been referred to; (3) what is said concerning the nations, chs. xxi. 24; xxii. 2, manifesting that there will be men in the flesh during the New Jerusalem, which, he assumes, could not be, after the General Resurrection; (4) a comparison of Dan. vii. 18 (where the saints' everlasting reign dates from the fall of Antichrist) with Rev. xxii. 5. He supposes (after Mede and several of the Ancient Fathers) that the entire millennial period constitutes the day (period) of Judgment; that at the beginning of this day, the great White Throne is set up, at which time occurs a partial conflagration; that at the close shall be the casting of death and Hades into the lake of fire, the great conflagration, the new heaven and earth, and the more complete and perfect establishment of the Kingdom.

ALFORD writes: "The whole of the things described in the remaining portion of the Book are subsequent to the General Judgment, and descriptive of the consummation of the triumph and bliss of Christ's people with Him in the eternal kingdom of God. This eternal kingdom is situated on the purified and renewed earth—become the blessed habitation of God with His glorified people."

BARNES (and with him probably the majority of post-millenarians) looks upon chaps. xxi. 1—xxii. 5, as descriptive of the heavenly state of the entire body of the redeemed. He writes: "The whole of ch. xxi., and the first five verses of ch. xxii., relate to scenes beyond the judgment, and are descriptive of the happy and triumphant state of the redeemed Church, when all its conflicts shall have ceased, and all its enemies shall have been destroyed. That happy state is depicted under the image of a beautiful city, of which Jerusalem was the emblem, and it was disclosed to John by a vision of that city—the New Jerusalem—descending from heaven. Jerusalem was regarded as the peculiar dwelling-place of God, and to the Hebrews it became thus the natural emblem or symbol of the heavenly world. The conception having occurred of describing the future condition of the righteous under the image of a beautiful city, all that follows is in keeping with that, and is merely a carrying out of the image. It is a city with beautiful walls and gates; a city that has no temple—for it is all a temple; a city that needs no light—for God is its light; a city into which nothing impure ever enters; a city filled with trees, and streams, and fountains, and fruits—the Paradise Regained."

b. Hypothesis of the American Editor.

I. The period of the New Jerusalem will be subsequent to the General Resurrection and Judgment of ch. xx. 11-15, and the new Creation of ch. xxi. 1. This is, manifestly, the normal sense of the connection between verses 1 and 2 of ch. xxi., and is not to be set aside but for most cogent reasons. This view involves no real difficulties; and, still further, the entire description forbids the thought that the even partial sinfulness that will exist in the subjects of the Millennial Kingdom should have existence under the light of the New Jerusalem, or that its glories should be dimmed by the assaults of Satan and the rebellion of Gog and Magog.

II. Its seat will be the New Earth (comp. xxi. 1, 2, 24). It is vain for us to speculate as to whether that New Earth will be identical as to substance with the present, or whether it will be different. It is impossible for us to determine whether the present abode of the human race will be simply regenerated by fire, or whether from the universal chaos into which all things may be reduced (2 Pet. iii. 10; Rev. xx. 11) some entirely new Earth, or dwelling-place for man, may not be brought forth.

III. It will exist—1. As a real City—the glorious home and capital of a glorified Community (the Bride). 2. As a Material Symbol of that Community, its order and glory.*

From the admitted fact that what the Apostle saw was a Symbol, many leap to the conclusion that a real city, or place of abode, could not have been symbolized. It is admitted by all that that which John beheld was a simulacrum. He did not directly look upon that which was not to exist for at least three thousand years—he beheld, merely, a VISIONAL SYMBOL. But what was the nature of that Symbol? Was it immediate? i. e., did it symbolize a City that is yet to come into existence—or was it mediate? i. e., did it symbolize something else than a City, namely (in this instance), a glorified community? In the judgment of the writer it performed the double office set forth in the last paragraph on p. 146. Primarily it was an IMMEDIATE SYMBOL symbolizing a material City; but, secondarily, as the City was itself to be a MATERIAL SYMBOL, of the inhabiting Community, it was a MEDIATE (Aberrant) SYMBOL of that Community.

This double use of the Symbol should occasion no surprise. For, in the first place, it is most common in all languages to denote by the same term, as London, sometimes the City, sometimes the mass of its inhabitants, and sometimes the complex of the two. This was common amongst the writers of the Scriptures—the Scriptural uses of Zion, Babylon, Tyre, will present themselves as illustrations to the minds of all. And, secondly, a material City is frequently a type of its inhabitants, or of the State of which it is the Capital. No one can visit Rome without being impressed with the fact that, in its combined ruin and grandeur, its death and life, the existing City is itself the type of the existing Roman Church. This in old times was true of Babylon, of Athens, of Tyre, of Rome, and especially of Jerusalem. And, doubtless, it is in great measure owing to this fact that a City and its inhabitants are so generally designated by one and the same name. In the judgment of the writer, as the old Jerusalem symbolized the Israel of which it was the Capital, so the New Jerusalem will symbolize the glorified Community* of whom it will be the abode and Capital.

* [In order to the understanding of this point, the writer would refer the reader to his PRELIMINARY NOTE on THE SYMBOLISM OF THE VISION, pp. 145 seq.—E. E. C.]

Concerning the hypothesis that the New Jerusalem will exist as a great City, it may be said: 1. There are many things in the description that have their most natural (their normal) application to such an abode, as is evident upon the bare perusal. 2. This application is supported by the following considerations: (1) A material dwelling-place is as necessary for resurrected saints as was Eden for Adam, or Canaan for Israel. (2) It should occasion no surprise if the same loving care that will raise and glorify the body should prepare a fitting and glorious abode for it. (3) It should be regarded as no strange thing if He who prepares for the body should grant us an inspiring, though general, description of its future abode. (4) On the contrary, the giving of such a description would be but in accordance with Jehovah's dealing with Israel before leading them into Canaan, and in continuance of the information given us by the Prophets concerning the Palingenesia, and especially by the Apostle Paul, Rom. viii. 20, 21.

As to the hypothesis that a glorified Community was in some sense symbolized, it may also be said that while there are many things in the description that find their most natural objective in a material City, there are others that cannot be so regarded; as, for instance, that the New Jerusalem is the Bride of the Lamb. We are shut up to the conclusion that a glorified people were contemplated in the exhibition of the Symbol.

In conclusion of this whole matter it may be remarked that the double hypothesis announced by the writer best satisfies the conditions of the problem; is in accordance with the ordinary and Scriptural use of the names of Cities, especially of Capitals; and is precisely analogous to the Divine declarations concerning the old Jerusalem.

IV. We should distinguish between the Material City and the New Earth. The former has its situation in the latter, as London in England. We should also distinguish between the citizens of the City and the nations (xxi. 24). The former are risen and glorified Saints, who constitute the Bride (ch. xxi. 9), the governors (ch. xxii. 5, last clause) of the New Creation (see below in V., VI.). The latter are (probably) men in the flesh, who walk in the light of the City, who bring their glory and honor into it, and who are healed (or kept in health) by the leaves of its tree of life (chs. xxi. 24-27; xxii. 2), i. e., who are under its instruction and government (see below in VII.).

V. The term The Bride probably identifies the citizens of the New Jerusalem with the subjects of the First Resurrection (see the ADD. NOTE ON THE MARRIAGE, pp. 386sq.). This body, the Bride (identical probably with the 144,000 of ch. xiv. 1), will probably be completed at the time of the Marriage, chap. xix. 7-9. Into that glorious company it is probable that only those who have been partakers of Christ's humiliation and suffering (either personally in company with Him, or throughout the present æon, the period of the humiliation of His body, the Church, Col. i. 24) shall be received (comp. Luke xxii. 28-30; Phil. iii. 10, 11; 2 Thess. i. 5; 2 Tim. ii. 12; Rev. ii. 10, 26; iii. 12, 21; vi. 9-11; xix. 4-6; see also the ADD. NOTE ON THE MARRIAGE, as above.* These are they who sit on Christ's Throne, who are united with Him in authority,—who, as related to Him constitute the Bride; as together with Him constitute the Kingdom, i. e., the governing power (see EXCURSUS ON THE BASILEIA, II. 1 (4), p. 99).

VI. Chap. xxi. 2, 9, 10, does not refer to the Marriage—that took place at the beginning of the Millennial period (see NOTE ON THE MARRIAGE, pp. 386sq.), but to a new manifestation of the prophetic Bride, the Wife. Doubtless before, or at the very moment when, “the earth and the heaven fled away” (chap. xx. 11), she was rapt away to the secret place of Jehovah. These verses describe her as descending from the bosom of her God, out of the New Heaven, clothed in new beauty, upon the New Creation, over which she is to dominate.

VII. The nations (see above in IV.) will consist (probably) of men in the flesh, freed from sin and the curse, begetting a holy seed, and dwelling in blessedness under the government of the New Jerusalem. They will be, not the offspring of the glorified Saints, who “neither marry nor are given in marriage” (Matt. xxii. 30), but the descendants of those who live in the flesh during the period of the Millennial Kingdom. Brown triumphantly asks, “How ‘the inhabitants of the heavens and earth that now are,’ are tided over this (the) all enveloping, all reducing deluge of fire, into ‘the new heavens and the new earth’?” In answer it may be said, The same Almighty power that conveyed Noah and his family across the waters of the first deluge, can bear other families across the fiery floods of the second, to be the progenitors of the continued race. It may be retorted that there is no promise of such a miracle. That there is no expressed promise is admitted—but the Divine prediction of an event ever implies the promise of a sufficient cause.

VIII. Although the New Jerusalem state is not to be confounded with the Millennial Kingdom, nor to be regarded as a simple continuance thereof, it is to be looked upon as the antitype of that Kingdom. In a sense, it is that Kingdom

*[As an Immediate Symbol, the simulacrum of the New Jerusalem was probably to a large extent ideal. This, doubtless, was the case in the simulacra of Angels. We can hardly suppose that the simulacrum beheld by John was in all respects similar to the City that is to be, and yet it may have been so to a greater extent than we are now prepared to admit. It should here be distinctly noted, what was set forth with great care in the Note on Symbolism, that there is a great difference between an Immediate ideal and a Mediate Symbol. The former always represents something similar in (apparent) kind to the simulacrum, although with differences as to particulars; the latter always represents something different in (apparent) kind, as the simulacrum of a Lamb to represent Christ, and that of a City to symbolize a Church or people.—E. R. C.]

*[The writer expresses no decided opinion as to whether the Bride, the subjects of the First Resurrection, shall consist of the martyrs; or the whole body of the redeemed; or a select portion, including the martyrs—the ἀρχαί (see p. 193). He inclines, however, to the last mentioned view.—E. R. C.]

raised to a higher plane—completely freed, in its territory and its subjects, from all remains of the curse. The Millennial Kingdom is the reign of the Saints over a race and earth freed indeed from the assaults of Satan, but still, in measure, in sin and under the curse; the New Jerusalem period is that of the reign of the Saints over a race and earth perfectly purified.

IX. The City itself, as it will have placed in it the Throne of God and the Lamb (xxii. 3), will become the noblest of the many mansions of Heaven. Neither it, however, nor the New Earth on which it is situate, including it, will be the totality of Heaven. John saw the Bride descending out of Heaven (xvi. 2). The New Earth will be one of the loyal provinces of Heaven, under the light of Heaven, governed by the citizens of Heaven; but it will be the abode of men in the flesh. May it not bear to Heaven a relation similar to that borne by Eden before the fall? Although in it there will be no death, possibly from it will be transported to other scenes its blessed inhabitants, when they have passed through their painless, ennobling pupilage. Possibly, its inhabitants may pass away to other mansions in the Father's House, where dwell, it may be, the Angels who kept their first estate, and the glorified subjects of the Millennial Kingdom, and others glorified who did not attain to the first Resurrection.

X. The prophecies of the Restoration and the Palingenesia (like those of the Advent) have probably a double application. Initially and typically they may refer to the Millennial Kingdom, which is a type of the New Jerusalem. Ultimately and completely, they have respect to the latter, the Kingdom of the Perfect Restoration.

XI. In conclusion, the writer would remark that he feels most keenly that speculation on this subject is dangerous. Speculation, however, to some degree there must be, if there be study,—and study there must be, if we be obedient to the command implied in the benediction, "Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy" (chap. i. 3). It may also be remarked that those who hold the current opinion as to the New Jerusalem, speculate as really as does the writer. The study of the Divinely given Revelation has convinced him of certain facts concerning this great and glorious subject. These facts, together with certain probable implications, he has stated with trembling, and he trusts with becoming modesty. He now submits them to the considerate construction of his readers.—E. B. C.]*

* [The hymnology connected with the New Jerusalem is exceedingly rich. A small work entitled O MOTHER DEAR, JERUSALEM, by William C. Prime (A. D. F. Randolph, New York, 1865) gives the entire Poem so named; its history, several of its versions, and also several of the ancient hymns, in Latin and English, whence its sentiments, and in many instances its language, were drawn. To these hymns, embodying as they do the opinions of many of the sainted fathers of the Church, and sung in every land, is due, more than to aught else, the prevalent interpretation of the Apocalyptic description. The original English form of the hymn as it exists in a small volume of poetry, professedly of the age of Queen Elizabeth, in the British Museum, was some years ago published by Dr. Bonar. Modernised by Barnes as to its spelling, it is as follows:

A SONG MADE BY F. B. P.

To the tune of "Diana."

Jerusalem! my happy home!
When shall I come to thee,
When shall my sorrows have an end,
Thy joys when shall I see?

O happy harbor of the saints,
O sweet and pleasant soil,
In thee no sorrow may be found,
No grief, no care, no toil.

In thee no sickness may be seen,
No hurt, no ache, no sore;
There is no death, no ugly deal,
There's life for evermore.

No dampish mist is seen in thee,
No cold nor darkness night;
There every soul shines as the sun,
There God Himself gives light.

There lust and lucre cannot dwell,
There envy bears no sway,
There is no hunger, heat, nor cold,
But pleasure every way.

Jerusalem! Jerusalem!
God grant I once may see
Thy endless joys, and of the same,
Partaker aye to be.

Thy walls are made of precious stones,
Thy bulwarks diamonds square,
Thy gates are of right orient pearl,
Exceeding rich and rare.

Thy turrets and thy pinnacles
With carbuncles do shine,
Thy very streets are paved with gold,
Surpassing clear and fine.

Thy houses are of ivory,
Thy windows crystal clear,
Thy tiles are made of beaten gold;
O God, that I were there!

Within thy gates no thing doth come
That is not passing clean,
No spider's web, no dirt, no dust,
No filth may there be seen.

Ah, my sweet home, Jerusalem!
Would God I were in thee,
Would God my woes were at an end,
Thy joys that I might see.

Thy saints are crowned with glory great,
They see God face to face,
They triumph still, they still rejoice,
Most happy is their case.

We that are here in banishment
Continually do moan;
We sigh and sob, we weep and wail,
Perpetually we groan.

Our sweet is mixed with bitter gall,
Our pleasure is but pain,
Our joys scarce last the looking on,
Our sorrows still remain.

But there they live in such delight,
Such pleasure, and such play,
As that to them a thousand years,
Doth seem as yesterday.

Thy vineyards and thy orchards are
Most beautiful and fair,
Full furnished with trees and fruits,
Most wonderful and rare.

Thy gardens and thy gallant walks
Continually are green;
There grow such sweet and pleasant flowers
As nowhere else are seen.

There's nectar and ambrosia made,
There's musk and civet sweet,
There many a fair and dainty drug
Are trodden under feet.

There cinnamon, there sugar grows,
There nard and balm abound,
What tongue can tell or heart conceive
The joys that there are found!

Quite through the streets, with silver sound,
The flood of life doth flow,
Upon whose banks, on every side,
The wood of life doth grow.

There trees for evermore bear fruit,
And evermore do spring;
There evermore the angels sit,
And evermore do sing.

There David stands with harp in hand
As master of the choir;
Ten thousand times that man were blest
That might this music hear.

Our lady sings Magnificat,
With tune surpassing sweet,
And all the virgins bear their parts,
Sitting above her feet.

To Dum doth Saint Ambrose sing,
Saint Augustine doth the like;
Old Simeon and Zachary
Have not their song to seek.

There Magdalene hath left her moan,
And cheerfully doth sing,
With blessed saints whose harmony
In every street doth ring.

Jerusalem, my happy home!
Would God I were in thee,
Would God my woes were at an end,
Thy joys that I might see!—E. R. C.]

THE EPILOGUE.

CHAP. XXII. 6-21.

1. The Angel and John; or the Mediators of the Apocalypse.

- 6 And he said unto me, These sayings [words] are faithful and true: and the Lord God of the holy [om. holy—ins. spirits<sup>1</sup> of the] prophets sent his angel to shew unto his servants the [what] things which [om. which] must [ins. come to pass] shortly be done [7 om. be done]. [ins. And]<sup>2</sup> behold, I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the 8 sayings [words] of the prophecy of this book. And [ins. it was] I John [ins. who heard and] saw these things, and heard them [om. , and heard them]. And when I had [om. had] heard and seen [saw]<sup>4</sup>, I fell down to worship before the feet of 9 the angel which [who] shewed me these things. Then saith he [And he saith] unto me, See thou do it [om. See thou do it—ins. Take heed] not: for [om. for] I am thy [om. thy—ins. a] fellow servant [ins. of thee], and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which [those who] keep the sayings [words] of this book: 10 worship God. And he saith unto me, Seal not the sayings [words] of the prophecy 11 of this book: for<sup>5</sup> the time is at hand [near]. He that is unjust, let him be unjust [Let him that doeth injustice, do injustice] still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy [and let the polluted<sup>6</sup> pollute himself] still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous [and let the righteous work righteousness<sup>7</sup>] still: and he that is holy, let him be holy [and let the holy (ἅγιος) sanctify himself (ἁγιασθήτω)] still.

2. Jesus, the Author of the Apocalypse; the Spirit; and the Bride.

- 12 And, [om. And,<sup>8</sup>] Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according [om. every man according—ins. render to each] 13 as his work shall be [om. shall be—ins. is].<sup>9</sup> I am [am—ins. the] Alpha and [ins. the] Omega, the beginning and the end, [om. the beginning and the 14 end,] the first and the last [ins. , the beginning and the end]<sup>10</sup>. Blessed are they that do his commandments [om. that do his commandments—ins. wash their robes]<sup>11</sup>, that they may have [ins. the] right to [or authority over (ἡ ἐξουσία

TEXTUAL AND GRAMMATICAL.

- <sup>1</sup> Ver. 6. We give the reading καὶ πνεύματα γ. γ., in accordance with M. A. B<sup>2</sup>. [P., Vulg. except Am.,] & al.
<sup>2</sup> Ver. 7. Kai, in accordance with A. B<sup>2</sup>. [M. Vulg., Syr., & al.]
<sup>3</sup> Ver. 8. [Gb., Sz., Lach., Tisch. (1859), Alf., Treg., give βλέπων καὶ ἀκούων with A. B<sup>2</sup>. Vulg., Syr., Arm., & al.; Tisch. (8th Ed.) reverses the order with M.—E. R. C.]
<sup>4</sup> Ver. 8. B<sup>2</sup> gives καὶ ἔρε ἰδόν. [So Tisch. (1859).] There are several unimportant variations here. [Lach., Tisch. (8th Ed.), Alf., Treg., read βλέπων with M.—E. R. C.]
<sup>5</sup> Ver. 10. M. A. B<sup>2</sup>. Lachmann [Alf., Treg., Tisch.], insert ὑπὸ τοῦ αἰσίου.
<sup>6</sup> Ver. 11. We give the reading ὁ ἡμαρτωλὸς. [So Crit. Eds. with M. B<sup>2</sup>.—E. R. C.]
<sup>7</sup> Ver. 11. δικαιοσύνην ποιήσας, in acc. with M. A. B<sup>2</sup>.—an important reading as contrasted with δικαιοσύνην.
<sup>8</sup> Ver. 12. The καὶ before ἰδοὺ is unauthorized.
<sup>9</sup> Ver. 12. M. A. & al. give the reading ἐν τῷ αἰῶνι.
<sup>10</sup> Ver. 13. The sequence of the Rec., which places ἡ ἐξουσία, etc., first, is unauthorized.
<sup>11</sup> Ver. 14. An important variation occurs here. The reading of M. A. [7, 38, Vulg., Arm. mg., & al., is ἐκδοῦντες τὰς ἐσθλὰς αἰσίου; that of B<sup>2</sup>, & al., ἐκδοῦντες τὰς ὑποκατα αἰσίου. Lachmann and Tischendorf give the former. Düsterdieck, with De Wette, prefers the latter reading, because he thinks that it may have been rejected in order to avoid the interruption to Jesus' discourse. The context also is, therefore, in favor of No. 1.

- ἐπι], the tree of life, and may enter in through [om. in through—ins. by] the gates into the city. For [om. For]<sup>15</sup> Without are [ins. the] dogs, and [ins. the] sorcerers, and whoremongers [the fornicators], and [ins. the] murderers, and [ins. the] idolaters, and whosoever [every one that] loveth and maketh a lie. I Jesus have [om. have] sent mine [my] angel to testify unto you these things in [concerning] the churches.<sup>16</sup> I am the root and the offspring of David, and [om. and] the bright and [om. and—ins., the] morning star. And the Spirit and the bride say, Come.<sup>17</sup> And let him that heareth say, Come.<sup>18</sup> And let him that is athirst [thirsteth] come.<sup>19</sup> And whosoever [om. And<sup>15</sup> whosoever—ins. : he that] will, let him take<sup>20</sup> the water of life freely.

3. Testimony to the Sanctity of the Apocalypse.

- 18 For [om. For]<sup>17</sup> I testify unto every man [one] that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man [one] shall [om. shall] add unto these things [om. these things—ins. them], God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book: And if any man [one] shall [om. shall] take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of [om. out of—ins. from] the book [om. book—ins. tree<sup>18</sup>] of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things [om. and from the things] which are [have been] written in this book.
20 He which [who] testifieth these things saith, Surely [Yea,] I come quickly: [.] Amen. [.] Even so, [om. Even so,<sup>19</sup>] come, Lord Jesus.

Conclusion.

- 21 The grace of our [om. our—ins. the<sup>20</sup>] Lord Jesus Christ [om. Christ<sup>21</sup>] be with you [om. you<sup>22</sup>] all [or ins. the saints—or om. all and ins. the saints]<sup>23</sup>. Amen [or om. Amen].<sup>24</sup>

<sup>15</sup> Ver. 15. [Crit. Eds. omit the copula with M. A. B.* Vulg., et al.—E. R. C.]
<sup>16</sup> Ver. 16. We give the very weighty reading, ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις, in accordance with M. B.* [So Alf, Treg., Tisch.; Lach. gives ἐν with A., Vulg., et al.—E. R. C.]
<sup>17</sup> Ver. 17. [Crit. Eds. give ἀρχὸν twice and ἀρχίσθε with M. A. B*, et al.—E. R. C.]
<sup>18</sup> Ver. 17. Omit καὶ before ὁ δίδωκεν.
<sup>19</sup> Ver. 17. [Crit. Eds. give λαβέτω with M. A. B*,—E. R. C.]
<sup>20</sup> Ver. 18. [Crit. Eds. omit the copula with M. A. B*,—E. R. C.]
<sup>21</sup> Ver. 19. [Crit. Eds. read ἐλθὺν with M. A. B*, et al.—E. R. C.]
<sup>22</sup> Ver. 20. A. B*, et al. omit καὶ [and also val of the Rec.] before ἀρχων.
<sup>23</sup> Ver. 21. Codd. A. B*. [M.] give ἐν σοὶ without ἡμῶν.
<sup>24</sup> Ver. 21. Codd. A. [M.] give Ἰησοῦ alone; B*. gives Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. [Lach., Tisch., Alf, Treg., give Ἰησοῦ alone.—E. R. C.]
<sup>25</sup> Ver. 21. Ὑμῶν is supported by minuscules.
<sup>26</sup> Ver. 21. [Lach. and Tisch. read πάντων with A., Am.; Alf. and Treg. read πάντων with M., Gb., Sz.; and Lange, πάντων πάντων with B*, Cop., Syr., Arm., et al.—E. R. C.]
<sup>27</sup> Ver. 21. [Lange reads Ἀμὴν with M. B*, Vulg., Cop., Syr., Arm., Eccl., et al.; Lach., Tisch., Treg., and Alf., omit with A. Alf. gives the subscription Ἀποκάλυψις Ἰωάννου with M. A.—E. R. C.]

EXEGETICAL AND CRITICAL.

SYNOPTICAL VIEW.

The Epilogue of the Apocalypse is strongly suggestive of the Epilogue of the Johannine Gospel, just as the Prologue of the Apocalypse forms a pendant to the Prologue concerning the Logos. In the one case as in the other, the Coming of Christ is a fundamental thought. In the one case as in the other, the Scripture closes with a reflection relative to the Book itself; and in both cases, a mysterious, clare-obscure mode of expression is spread, like a veil, over the whole. The intimate connexion of the Apocalyptic Epilogue and Prologue is evident upon the most cursory comparison.

Here, again, we distinguish three main divisions. The first, which may be superscribed with the title of the Angel and John, reverts, in vers. 6-11, to the mediators or instrumentalities of the Apocalypse, and accordingly forms a parallel to vers. 1-6 of the Prologue. In the second division Jesus appears, as the Author of the Apocalypse, and over against His revelation is set the longing of the Spirit and the Bride for His Advent (vers. 12-17). The parallel passage in the Prologue is found in vers. 7-10. The third division is formed by the testimony to the inviolable sanctity of the Apocalypse (vers. 18-20). Then follow the closing words—a prayer to the Lord and a wish for a blessing upon all readers.

[Ver. 6.] And he said unto me. The conclusion reverts to the beginning. The series of visions is closed—hence, the mediators of the vision once more make their appearance. First, mention is made of the Angel of this Revelation (ch. i. 1). According to De Wette, Bleek, Dürstiediek et al., this is the same Angel who speaks in ch. xxi. 9. In other words, the Angel of the entire Revelation is accounted a special Angel from the group of the seven Angels of the Vials of Anger, and we are outside of the visions and yet, again, within them. Thus, too, the incident related ch. xix. 10, is held to be repeated here—either the incident itself or the account of it. The former hypothesis would cast a shade upon the Apostle's aptness to learn; the latter would implicate his ability as a writer. Neither the one nor the other assumption is admissible. In the scene portrayed ch. xix. 10, John believed that he recognized the Lord Himself in the form of the messenger of Christ; here, it is the angelic form in which the Lord manifests Himself to him that he, in his profound reverence, identifies, wrongly, with the Person of Christ. Hence the deprecating words of the two Angels are very different. "I am thy fellow-servant and one of thy brethren who have the witness of Jesus," says one. "I am thy fellow-servant and one of thy brethren the Prophets and of them who keep the words of this Book," speaks the other. As the Angel of the Revelation, he places himself on a line not only with the Prophets, but also with the pious readers of the Apocalypse; this is, doubtless, owing to the fact that Christ assumes His angelic form in the sphere of prophetic, human spirit-life and pious longing for His coming. We translate here, therefore: Worship not the personal medium of the manifestation of Christ; just as we might say, Do not worship the Bible, though it is the medium of the revelation of God. Therefore the Angel further distinguishes the words of the Revelation, whose certainty and reality he affirms, from his mission from the Lord, Whom he identifies with the God of the spirits of the Prophets. Here, again, the conceptions of God and Christ run into one, as is frequently the case in the Johannine writings.

We apprehend the words ἐν τάχει, here, as in ch. i. 1, as significant of the rapidity of the course of the things predicted, for the things of the thousand years, which form but one section of the whole eschatological time, can not be conceived of as happening soon [or, shortly] in the ordinary sense.

Christ identifies Himself with the Angel in the declaration, Behold, I come soon [quickly], or rapidly, and joins with this declaration the beatitude expressive of the truth that he alone preserves the right position toward the Coming of the Lord, who keeps the words of the prophecy and makes them his guide.

The Seer now seems to come to himself after his grand visional ecstasy, as was the case, after similar ecstasies, with the Disciples on the Mount of Transfiguration, with the Apostle Peter, Acts xii. 11 and Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 2; he is immediately overpowered, however, by a sense of the great grace which he has been deemed worthy to receive with this Revelation. And I John—not any indifferent John—a man by the name of John—am the hearer and seer of these things. And now he would fain fall down and worship before the Angel of the Revelation, as he fell down before him like a dead man at the beginning of this Revelation (ch. i. 17). Upon this he receives the prohibition before referred to, because it is his duty to distinguish between the Lord Himself and His angelic appearance, clothed in the materials of prophetic visions and Christian ideals. On the other hand, he receives the direction not to seal the words of the prophecy. He is to communicate them to the Churches and to stimulate the reading and exposition of them, because the time is near, because they are designed to keep Christians awake, and, if they slumber, to rouse them.

And now follows a saying which is peculiarly suggestive of the Gospel of John, especially of the fearful words, What thou doest [art about to do], do quickly [John xiii. 27]. Let him that doeth injustice [or, unrighteousness] do injustice [or unrighteousness] still. The meaning of this is that the time is great [weighty with import] and swift, and presses to decision; for every development, in evil and in good, the space granted is but short. The ironical tone which pertains to the first two exhortations is limited, first, by the remark that the following two sentences can have nothing of irony in them, and, further, by the earnest consideration that the seed of evil is peculiarly prospered by being brooded over, in the delusion that there is an endless time before the judgment, if, indeed, there be any judgment at all. The style of speech here employed is, doubtless, in general expressive of the following admonition: Consider that your actions are rapidly progressing to their end. The relation of moral development on both sides is pertinently intimated. The commission of unrighteousness courses into filthiness, into a filthy habit of thought and a corresponding mode of conduct; the righteousness of faith, on the other hand, develops, through the practice of right-doing, into a sanctification of life.

In the second division of the Epilogue, Jesus Himself is brought to view, with His immediate words. He announces Himself as the Recompenser, with reference to the proclamation of the Angel that the time is near and presses all men to decision. Behold, I come quickly, and My reward with Me, He says, in the words in which His Coming is announced by the Prophet Isaiah (ch. xl. 10; lxii. 11; comp. Rev. xi. 18). He will appear as Judge, because His life is the principle and ground-law of the history of the world. This He expresses in a threefold manner. Because he is the Alpha, He must be the Omega. Because He is the First, He must be the Last. The first formula characterizes Him as the first, and hence the last, life-idea. The second formula characterizes Him as the first, and therefore the last, ideal life-form. The third formula characterizes Him as the innermost, primarily principal, and therefore, also, final life-power and substance. Because He is the Principle, He must be the Final Goal. The bearing of these words upon the judgment (in accordance with Matt. xxv. and Acts xvii. 31) is plainly manifest in the following beatitude.

In comparison with the reading, Blessed are they who wash their robes, we cannot possibly regard the other reading, Blessed are they who keep His commandments, as correct, although the sense may be the same. We have here to do with a festal symbolic expression, suggestive of the wedding garment and the saying, These have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb (ch. vii. 14). These shall enter into the Holy City, with authority to eat of the trees of life. For upon the perfect appropriation of the cross of Christ, rests the putting on of the snow-white robe of righteousness, and this is the condition at once of an eternal vital development and vital joy, and of entrance into the fellowship of eternal life.

The continued existence of a without, in contrast to an entrance into the Paradise of life, is expressed by an antithesis in the weightiest of words. Those who are excluded are again, apparently, cited in a group of six, but in reality a quinary is probably contemplated, as in the figure of the foolish virgins. The arrangement of individual characters also differs from that observed ch. xxi. 8. In the latter passage, the lost were contrasted with the idea of the bravery of the conquerors; hence the fearful had the precedence. Here they are contrasted with the picture of heavenly purity—the blessed, arrayed in their robes of honor; hence dogs take the precedence, as allegorical figures of spiritual uncleanness and commonness (see Matt. vii. 6; Phil. iii. 2; 2 Pet. ii. 22). Sorcerers have profaned and violated nature; fornicators have profaned and violated the personal and physical life; murderers have profaned and violated the image of God in their neighbor; idolaters have profaned and violated the symbols of the Divine and religion itself; lovers and practitioners of falsehood in general—as a wider class of idolaters—have profaned and violated the consecrated reality and truth of life.

Jesus next definitely distinguishes Himself from the sending of His Angel. He declares that He has Himself sent the Angel to Christians to testify to them of the future in regard to the Churches; the dignity and weight of a testimony is thus assigned to His word. The reading chosen by us [ἐν ταῖς ἐκκλησίαις] we have designated in the TEXT AND GRAM. NOTES as highly momentous. Even in this expression, which has in many instances failed of being understood, the end reaches back into the beginning. The Apocalypse, namely, is in reality the Book of the future of the Christian Churches, symbolically represented, as they are, by the Seven Churches.

In conclusion, Christ places Himself, as the most glorious Man, the Son of man, over against the longing and expectation of the faithful. I am the Root and the Offspring of David, the Kernel in the kernel of the Theocracy, the ideal ground and the ideal blossom of the Davidic line, which rises as prominently in the midst of Israel as chosen Israel amongst the nations. Thus, as the great Promised One, He is the subject of all the longing of Israel, and, no less than this, the bright star which has risen upon mankind as the Morning Star of a new world. And well does He know that the heart of mankind goes out to Him with throbs of expectation and yearning. The Spirit in the Church and the Church as Bride answer Him with the cry, Come! And every one who hears and understands this cry is directed to join in the cry of longing, Come! But all who thirst, that is, all men of longing, must first come to Him on the platform of the spiritual life, and receive of the water of life freely [without price], in order that they may be able to sum up their yearning in that higher eschatological longing which can join in the cry, Come, Lord Jesus!

The third division of the Epilogue is the concluding attestation of the Book, and is suggestive of the attestation of the Johannine Gospel (ch. xxi. 24).

In this attestation we, in company with almost all exegetes, can see the words of the Prophet, only; not, with Ebrard, a remark of the Lord concerning the Book of John. In this severe verdict, reference is had not to readings and variations of opinion, but to augmentations or diminutions of the eschatological view of the world here expressed. It is an inviolable vital law that the fanatic, in the same degree in which he heightens the conceptions of judgment above the Biblical measure, loads himself with the judgment of those torments which he has imagined; thus, e.g., the mediæval exaggeration of the idea of hell brought hell torments in abundance upon the fanatics themselves. And on the other hand, similarly, it is a fact that the denier or diminisher of the prospects of Christian hope impairs his own inheritance of hope and bliss, to the same degree in which he takes away from the fullness of the Christian prospect. Every misdemeanor against the truth falls back upon him who commits it (see Introduction, p. 68, and Matt. v. 19). The reference is not to transient sentiments, but to maxims which become permanent in a conduct consistently regulated by them. Thus, it is beyond question that consummate fanaticism crystallizes into a disposedness for torment; consummate libertinism into a complete incapacity for even the faintest idea of the conditions of a higher human life of blessedness. These thoroughly true thoughts meet us here as warning verdicts [vera dicta], hyperbolically expressed, designed for the protection of this glorious Book, which, in spite of these its guards, has been, and still continues to be, greatly mis-esteemed.

The Seer is sure that, together with himself, Christ attests his Book. He therefore introduces Him also, in the character of a witness, and expresses, in His testimony, the ground thought of his Book: Yea, I come quickly.

Hereupon, giving vent to that which has been the desire of his heart through his whole life, and especially during his old age, he utters the following sentence, by which he takes the Lord at His word in the name of the Church as well as in his own name: Amen, come, Lord Jesus.

In conclusion, he pronounces a benediction upon all who, with himself, are awaiting the coming of the Lord, and who constitute the true Saints of the Latter Days. The benediction is couched in the following grand and worthy terms: The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ be with all saints. With all saints—in this adjunct, the Apocalypse, in its significance, is consistent with itself.

EXPLANATIONS IN DETAIL.

Ver. 6. And he said unto me.—With perfect justice, Ebrard combats the view entertained by most commentators, to the effect that the Angel who is here spoken of is the same who has been the spokesman since ch. xxi. 9; the same exegete maintains that, on the contrary, it is the Angel (of the Revelation) of whom mention is made in ch. i. 1. With this view, however, he conjoins the erroneous assumption that what John here reports, is nothing new, but only a reminiscence of former things; first, of the declaration previously made by the same Angel (ch. xxi. 5) and, secondly, of the certain truth that the entire Revelation is of Divine origin. But visionary conditions do not come to an end suddenly any more than they begin suddenly; they die away gradually, even as they began. The face of Moses was still shining when he went down from the mount into the camp.

These words are, etc.—By this is meant the entire Revelation now concluded, as in verses 7 and 18.

The Lord God of the spirits of the Prophets.—We apprehend these words as referring to Jehovah as the God of revelation, or, in other words, we find here a concrete summing together of God and Christ, as in the concluding words of 1 John v. 20.

The mission of the Angel is from the Spirit of revelation, as the God of the spirits of the Prophets, the Source and Author of all prophecies, hence also of the Apocalypse (John v. 39; 1 Peter i. 10-12).

The spirits of the Prophets.—According to De Wette, reference is had to the inspiration produced by the Spirit of God, in opposition to which Düsterdieck judiciously remarks that the spirits belonging, respectively, to the different Prophets are intended, which spirits God renders subservient to Himself.

His servants.—See ch. i.

Ver. 7. And behold, I come quickly.—Adduction of Christ's word, in corroboration of the expression ἐν τάχει. "As in ver. 6 the Divine authority was cited, so here the main tenor of the Revelation now completed is made prominent. This is effected by the Angel's speaking directly in the name of the coming Lord Himself." DÜSTERDIECK. We cannot perceive why the following parænesis should be regarded as "added by the Angel." The Angel utters the whole,—in such a manner, however, as to introduce the Lord as speaking in ver. 7. It is this very fact that gives occasion to what follows—viz., the error, in the entertainment of which the Seer attempts to worship. Finally, we must again call attention to the subtle distinction that is to be made between the Lord Himself and the form of His revelation; not only personal Angels, but also symbolical ones, are a forbidden object of worship. This is suggestive of the second commandment, "Thou shalt not make unto thee any image," concretely apprehended; it also teaches us how difficult it is for man, in his admiration of the Divine, to leave that and arrive at the perfect worship of God.

Ver. 8. And it was I, John.—The gradual coming to one's self, e. g., out of sleep, out of somnambulic sleep, out of profound contemplation, out of an inspired or demonically excited condition, is a highly interesting phenomenon; its culmination is formed by the gradual return of ordinary consciousness [Tagesbewusstsein = day-consciousness] after the ecstasy of the Prophet.*—And I, John.—See SYN. VIEW; comp. chap. i.

Who heard and saw [ὁ ἀκούων καὶ βλέπων] these things.—On the present form of the participle, see Düsterd. Though the visionary unfolding of the things is over, that which the Seer has heard and seen continues to be ever spiritually present before his eyes.

And when I heard.—The reading which adds and saw, beautifully brings out the continued astonishment of the Seer.

I fell down to worship.—In ch. xix. 10 he was in danger of identifying a personal Angel or beatified saint with the Lord; here he is in the more subtle peril of confounding a symbolical angelic form with the Lord Himself.

Ver. 9. Take heed not.—Ὅρα μὴ (see SYN. VIEW).

Ver. 10. Seal not, etc.—See ch. i. 11, 19; x. 4; Dan. viii. 26; xii. 4, 9. It may be asked, what is the difference between a sealing and a not sealing in the case of two Books which yet have been diffused in an identical or a similar manner. Irrespective of the fact that there is something symbolical in the expression, which declares, on the one hand, that the Book shall for a long time continue to be obscure and uncomprehended, or, on the other hand, that the Book shall be read, the antithesis also contains a distinction for the authors of the Books in question and for the Church. The symbolical mode of presentation is in itself a species of sealing; a reference to the key of symbolism, such as is frequently to be met with in John, is an unsealing (comp. Matt. xiii. 11 sqq.). And thus there is also a difference in the ecclesiastic reservation of the Book and the submission of it for congregational edification. The Hierarchy has sealed the whole Bible; with us, even the Apocalypse is at least freely submitted to the Church for her edification.

For the time is near.—A motive for the diffusion, reading and explanation of the Apocalypse in the Christian Church.

Ver. 11. He that doeth injustice.—This form is elucidated by analogies; not only by the already cited address of the Lord to Judas (John xiii. 27), but also by the following passages: Matt. xxiii. 32; xxvi. 45, and, in a less degree, Ezek. iii. 27. And though there may be something of irony in the first two propositions (De Wette, et al.), there is nought of that character in the last two, viz., and let the righteous, etc.—If we seek for a common fundamental thought that shall lie at the basis of all four propositions, it is contained in the following words: "Since the judgment is at the door, let every one quickly prepare himself for it after his own free choice." That this very idea indirectly offers to the wicked the strongest admonition to repent, is self-evident.

Work righteousness still.—The discarding of the erroneous reading δικαιοσύνην is of recognized importance as bearing upon the discussion relative to the meaning of δικαιοσύνην.

Vers. 12, 13. Behold, I come quickly.—Düsterdieck: "The words of ver. 12 sound like a communication from Christ's own mouth." Most certainly. "Those of ver. 13 (comp. chaps. i. 8; xxi. 5, 6) are as the language of God Himself." But because God calls Himself the Alpha * See Schiller, Die Jungfrau von Orleans, Act IV., Scene IX.

"Die Fühne lieg ich in dem Heiligtum,
Nie, nie soll diese Hand sie mehr berühren!
Mir war's als hätt ich die geliebten Schwedern,
Margot und Louison, gleich einem Traum
An mir vorübergeleit sehen. Ach, Es war nur eine flüchtige Erscheinung."

and the Omega, it does not follow that Christ, the Son of God, may not also so denominate Himself. The Apostle Paul writes concerning God: "Of Him, and through Him, and to Him are all things" (Rom. xi. 36). And again in Colossians i. 16 he writes concerning Christ: "All things were created in Him . . . all things were created through Him and to Him." Because Düsterdieck thinks that this presumed change of speakers must not be hypothesized, he affirms that John speaks these words "after the manner of the ancient Prophets." And yet John here distinguishes his own speech, the speech of the Angel, the express speech of Jesus (ver. 16), and the speech of the Spirit! The motive for this singular retreat upon "the old Prophetic language," (which might itself be called in question, if it were employed with the latitude and inexplicitness which would attach to its use in the present case,) seems to be simply Christ's alleged inability to say: I am the Alpha and the Omega.

Ver. 14. Blessed are they who wash their robes.—See SYN. VIEW. The other reading see discussed in Düsterdieck, pp. [574,] 580.

Ver. 18. Without are the dogs.—Düsterdieck apprehends the words as a command—foras sunt. Out with the dogs! Such a conception, however, does but obscure the clearness of the antithesis; it would be a sort of penal judgment, instead of a representation of the contrast which the region of the lost presents to Paradise—a representation which is a sermon in itself. Be it observed that the term, the dogs, is decidedly favorable to the reading, Blessed are they who wash, etc. Dogs.—"A special reference to sodomites (Eichhorn, who compares Deut. xxiii. 18) is not to be gathered from the context." DÜSTERDIECK.

Ver. 16. I, Jesus.—Even these words, according to Düsterdieck, are spoken by John in the name of Jesus. And it is possible for him to entertain this opinion after all the distinct intimations which have previously been given concerning the speakers!

To testify unto you.—The ἐμὴν relates to the servants of God, as ver. 6 (comp. chap. i. 1). The servants of God are, through the instrumentality of the Apocalypse, constituted watchmen and warners of the Church. In this sense, even the Seven Epistles are not directly addressed to the Churches. Düsterdieck thinks, with Hengstenberg, that ἐμὴν, in case it is to be retained, refers to the Prophets.

The Root and the Offspring [Lange: *Geschlecht=*race].—The antithesis between root and scion—as the human parallel to the Divine antithesis of Alpha and Omega—is obliterated by the following explanation of Düsterdieck: "That which the first term [ῥίζα] declares figuratively and in accordance with Old Testament precedent (comp. chap. v. 5), is more literally affirmed by the second [γένος]: the son (Andr., Ew., et al.)." According to Hengstenberg also, the root of David is significant of the product of the root. The citation of chap. v. 5 proves nothing.

The Bright, the Morning Star.—In meaning, the passage chap. ii. 28, where Christ promises to give the morning star, is entirely akin to this. Christ is the bright Morning Star of the coming day of eternity; He therefore also gives the morning star of a spiritual vision of the future (see above, chap. ii. 28).

Ver. 17. And the Spirit.—These words, according to De W., Hengstenberg, Düsterdieck, et al., are an answer to the foregoing—an answer which the Apocalyptist is represented as speaking in the name of the Spirit and the Bride. But since John utters his own Come, Lord Jesus in ver. 20, we cannot suppose that it was his intention to make so wide a distinction between himself and the Spirit and the Bride; and, moreover; the words, Let him that thirsteth come, etc., are in favor of the assumption that we have here the concluding words of Jesus Himself. A singular view is that of Ebrard, who holds ver. 17 to be a reply to the speech of Jesus, and regards Jesus as again becoming the speaker in ver. 18, with a view to taking the Book under His own patronage.

Let him that thirsteth, etc.—See chap. xxi. 6; Isa. lv. 1; Matt. v. 6; John vii. 37.

Freely [gratuitously].—The last full evangelio tone in the New Testament.

Vers. 18, 19. I testify unto every one, etc.—Testification is a solemn asseveration which binds or makes responsible those to whom it is addressed (Deut. iv. 2; Prov. xxx. 5, 6). We repeat the remark already made by us upon this passage, viz., that, in accordance with the symbolic expression of the Apostle, the reference is not simply to the exegetical treatment of the Apocalypse, as is usually assumed. There are many who add gloom to the Christian view of the world, and many who diminish its depth, without making use of the Apocalypse in thus doing. It is, indeed, also true that any exegetical tampering with the Apocalypse is inadmissible, and the one-sidednesses of exegesis are manifoldly connected with the one-sidednesses of fanaticism or spiritualism [Spiritualismus]. The paronomasia—ἐπιμαρτυροῦμαι, ἀπὸ τοῦ μαρτυρεῖν—is no mere play upon words; it is indicative, rather, of the fact that transgressions against the purport of the Apocalypse are connected with the inner condition of the guilty one, and hence infallibly rebound upon him, or that, as violations of the Divine faithfulness and truth, they are reflected back in violations of self.

Every one that heareth, etc.—That is, every one who is present at the reading aloud of the Book in Church; it is, therefore, designed to be read aloud in Church. According to Vitrings, Bleek, et al., the threat is directed against careless transcribers; according to Ewald and De Wette, against oral inaccuracies of repetition. Düsterdieck justly regards each of these explanations as insufficient, and lays stress upon the keeping of the contents of the Book, the revelation of God, maintaining that it is upon the falsification of that revelation that the curse is laid. Luther's words of censure, contained in his preface of 1522, see cited in Dist., p. 582. Bleek is of opinion that Luther was not entirely wrong in taking offence at the words. De Wette also thinks the threat too harsh. Hengstenberg apprehends the words as referring to such additions and omissions as affect the actual kernel of the Book (p. 462sq. [Trans.]). According to Ebrard, these words are "the seal which Christ Himself impresses upon the Apocalypse."

Ver. 20. He who testifieth these things saith.—Here Jesus is again introduced as speaking. He is brought in, primarily, as a Witness Who supplements the foregoing testimony of John, but at the same time He indirectly appears as a Witness for the whole Apocalypse. He sums up His testimony in the all-corroborating and all-embracing affirmation: Yea, I come quickly.

The Seer replies to the word of the Lord with a grand and simple prayer: Amen; come, Lord Jesus.

Ver. 21. The grace.—See ch. i. 4. The ὑμῶν of the Rec. does, indeed, more nearly agree with ch. i. 4, but it is, on the one hand, not as well supported as our reading, and, on the other hand, the reading with all saints, is in perfect harmony with the solemnity of the conclusion.

[ADDITIONAL NOTE ON THE EPILOGUE.]

By the American Editor.

[There are several matters concerning this conclusion of the Book of Divine Revelation which the writer desires to present for consideration:—

I. The Authorship.

The entire Epilogue is the utterance of Jesus, by the mouth of His representative Angel (the Angel of chap. xxi. 9), to John—with the exception of the second clause of ver. 6, vers. 8, 9, the last clause of ver. 20, and ver. 21. In this proposition there are but three points which need discussion, all of which are opposed to the views of our author.

1. The Angel that addressed John was the Angel of chap. xxi. 9. That Christ spoke through a representative in ver. 7, is admitted by all; that this was the Angel of xxi. 9 is the point to be proved. The καὶ εἰπὲν μοι of ver. 6 shows that the speaker there mentioned must have been the one speaking in the immediately preceding verses—the phraseology forbids the idea that another speaker had been introduced. The καὶ of ver. 7, together with the absence of any introducing clause, requires the conclusion that the same speaker continued his address; and this conclusion is confirmed by the τοῦ δευτέρου of ver. 8—manifestly, the Angel at whose feet the Apostle fell was the one who had been showing him the things previously described. A difficulty in reference to this interpretation may suggest itself to some minds, arising from the generally received opinion that the Angel of chap. xxi. 9 was (as were all the Angels of the Vials) a Symbol; his symbolic character may be regarded as inconsistent with the language of ver. 9, I am thy fellow servant, etc. Possibly he was an Immediate Symbol—i. e., a simulacrum—of a real Angel; possibly, however, real Angels took part in all the scenes described. But however this may have been,—admitting the truth of the first supposition, there was neither impropriety nor incongruity in representing the simulacrum of an Angel as using the language of an Angel.

2. The second clause of ver. 6 is an explanatory remark introduced by John. It seems to the writer inconceivable, that, if the declaration, The Lord God sent His Angel to show, etc., had been made to the Apostle, he should immediately after have offered Divine honors to that creature. The natural hypothesis seems to be that—(1) in ver. 7, the Angel, as the representative of Jesus, spoke in the first person, Behold, I come quickly, and John at once drew the conclusion that the speaker, though in the form of a servant, must be his Lord—a natural mistake and one immediately corrected; and (2) the Apostle in his narrative introduced the explanatory clause of ver. 6.

3. The address of vers. 18, 19, 20 (first clause), is the utterance of Christ through His Angel, and not a declaration of the Apostle. This, in the judgment of the writer, is placed beyond doubt by a comparison of the first words of ver. 18 with those of ver. 20; the One who testifies is the One who says, I come quickly.

II. The Duty of Studying the Apocalypse.

That it is the duty of every Christian to study this Book appears from the following declarations of the Epilogue:—1. The Apocalypse was given for the information of the Saints, vers. 6, 16. 2. It was designed to be read in the congregations, ver. 18 (I testify unto every one that heareth); see also comment on chap. i. 3, p. 90. 3. Its utterances were not sealed, i. e., closed up from individual comprehension (see foot-note*, first column, p. 193), ver. 10. 4. A blessing is to be bestowed upon those who keep the words of the prophecy, ver. 7; which keeping requires, of course, preceding study. 5. A woe shall be visited upon all who add to, or diminish from, the words of the Book, vers. 18, 19.

The Epilogue, in implying the duty of study, agrees with the Prologue; see chap. i. 8, and the additional comment thereon, p. 90.

III. Angel Worship.

The Am. Ed. cannot agree with those who hold that in the incident recorded in ver. 8, and in the similar incident mentioned in chap. xix. 10, the Apostle was guilty of an attempt to worship a creature, knowing him to be such—i. e., that he was guilty of idolatry. Alford, in his comment on chap. xix. 10, takes that position, remarking: "The Angel . . . seems to him worthy of some of that reverence which belongs to God Himself. The reason given by Düsterdieck, that in both cases John imagined the Lord Himself to be speaking to him, is sufficiently contradicted by the plain assertion, here in chap. xvii. 1, and there in chap. xxii. 8 itself, that it was not a Divine Person, but simply an Angel." In answer it may be said—(1) So far as chap. xvii. 1 is concerned, manifestly it is the Apostle's own remark, and probably was not penned until after the incident described in chap. xix. 10, i. e., after he had received the information that the one who spoke to him was a mere Angel; and (2) In reference to chap. xxii. 8, there is nothing in the record to forbid the hypothesis presented above in I. that it was an explanatory clause introduced by the Apostle. It seems utterly inconceivable, first, that John, either as a Jew or as an Apostle of Christ, could have offered worship to a creature, knowing him to be such; and, in the second place, that, if he had done so, he would not have been sharply rebuked for his idolatry. In neither case does the language of the Angel necessarily imply rebuke; in each case it may be interpreted, and most naturally interpreted, as a warning against error in conduct, and a rectification of the mistake whence the error was about to proceed. It may also be remarked that, unless the Apostle had been positively informed to the contrary, he might naturally have supposed that one of the Angels of the Vials was Jesus Himself. Let it be observed that, during the pouring out of the Vials, the words of Jesus, Behold, I come as a thief, had been uttered—by whom we know not, but the context would lead us to suppose that they were spoken from amongst the Seven Angels (chap. xvi. 15). This might naturally have excited the suspicion that Jesus was there. When the Angel who first came to him used the expression, These are the true words of God (chap. xix. 10), it should occasion little surprise that John supposed him to be his Lord. And when another of the Seven, representing Jesus, adopted the language of Jesus, Behold, I come quickly (chap. xxii. 7), can we wonder that the Apostle leaped to the conclusion that Jesus in person was with him?

It is scarce necessary to remark that, whatever hypothesis we may adopt as to the subjective condition of John, the words of the Angels convey most positive condemnation of all creature worship.

IV. The Teaching of Christ as to His Twofold Nature.

The twofold nature of Jesus is most clearly set forth. His humanity in the words, "I am . . . the offspring (τὸ γένος=race, stock, descent) of David" (ver. 16); His Divinity, not less clearly, in vers. 12, 13, 16 (the root).

V. The Time of the Second Advent.

At first glance, the words of Jesus, I come quickly (ver. 7), seem to be inconsistent with the idea that the Advent thus promised is still future. Probably this declaration, more than aught else, has induced the opinion, amongst those who hold it, that the Advent is past.

That the Coming mentioned in ver. 7 is the one foretold chap. i. 7 (and also Dan. vii. 13; Matt. xxiv. 27, 30; xxvi. 64; Mark xiv. 62; Acts i. 9, 11, etc.), seems to be evident upon comparison; and that that Advent has not taken place seems also to be evident upon an examination of the passages referred to, together with their contexts,—there has been nothing in history that satisfies the description of events accompanying the Advent. We must look for an explanation of the quickly (ταχὺ) in the declarations of 2 Pet. iii. 18 and Luke xviii. 7, 8. See also foot-note* (first column), p. 89.

VI. The Final Warning.

ALFORD comments on vers. 18, 19 as follows: "The adding and taking away are in the application and reception in the heart; and so it is not a mere formal threat to the copier of the Book. . . . All must be received and realized. This is at least an awful warning both to those who despise and neglect this Book, and to those who add to it by irrelevant and trifling interpretations."

VII. The Final Prayer.

In the prayer, "Amen; come, Lord Jesus" (ver. 20), the Apostle pours forth the longing of his instructed heart for the realization of "that blessed hope" of the Church—"the glorious Appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ" (Tit. ii. 13). In this prayer is summed up all that the Christian heart can desire—the destruction of the power of Satan; the deliverance of the creature from the bondage of corruption; the banishment of sin and sorrow from the individual heart and from the world; the restoration of all things; the establishment of the Kingdom of righteousness; the beholding by Jesus in fullness of the travail of His soul, the bestowment upon Him in completeness of His promised reward.

Let each member of the Church militant, mourning the absence of her Head, but cheered by the promise that He will come again, unite with the Apostle in the longing cry—AMEN; COME, LORD JESUS.—E. B. C.]

SECOND OR DOCTRINO-ETHICAL AND HOMILETICAL DIVISION.*

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

Since the first thing to be established, in a general work on the Apocalypse, is the EXEGETICAL point of view in which we should regard the Book, it is self-evident that the DOCTRINAL apprehension and the HOMILETICAL application of the Scripture in question are conditioned upon the secure establishment of the Exegetical result. As this result is still, however, to a high degree, a mooted question in Theology, the doctrinal writer cannot, with simple confidence, take his stand upon fluctuating ground; or, to state the case more definitely, he cannot lay the foundations of a structure upon soil that is constantly wavering; and this remark applies with still greater force to the homilist.

It is, for instance, an unquestionable fact that the modern, ostensibly critical, synchrono-historical apprehension of the Book has, in great measure, neutralized and, so to speak, compromised its doctrinal side; thus Schleiermacher, De Wette, et al., assign a very moderate value to this Scripture. This view leaves but a few isolated passages even to Homiletics; and even those passages can be made use of only with a certain inconsistency, the canonical character of the Book being questioned.

The servile adherents of the orthodoxy of the seventeenth century occupy a similar relation toward the Book. According to their assumptions, the idea of a transition-period intervening between the present and the future æon, of a true Millennium, and of a special hope for the return of the people of Israel, is utterly out of the question. The last day must be one single day. In this single day, the whole world must be utterly destroyed and replaced by an entirely new world. A Millennium is regarded as conflicting with the XVII. Article of the Augsburg Confession. Gehenna, it is maintained, coincides with the realm of the dead, and is entirely complete and ready for inmates in the midst of Time. Now when it is seen that these and the like assumptions are, contrasted with a vital conception of Holy Scripture, and especially of the Apocalypse, contracted ideas of a servile letter-faith, or an exegetical tradition-faith, the consequence is self-evident: not much secure ground is left in the Apocalypse for doctrinal arguments and homiletical demonstrations. If, nevertheless, a detailed application of the Apocalypse be made from this stand-point, the result will be a doctrinal and homiletical constriction of this Scripture, similar in degree, though not in kind, to the racking and stretching of the Old Testament in order to make it explicitly declarative of the whole of the New Testament and all the teachings of the Church.

If, again, we consider that more mediate tendency which has viewed the Apocalyptic Book from more liberal stand-points of piety and practice, and has found in it the hope of better times, and even the Millennial Kingdom, we shall find that even here there has not been much doctrinal and ethical ground won, the critics of this school having proceeded upon the platform that the Apocalypse consists of predictions of Church history following each other in chronological succession. Nevertheless, this stand-point is, by reason of the eminent religious appreciation of the Book which it, in comparison with the orthodoxistic and neocritical conceptions of it, manifests, of far greater worth than they.

Even that system of interpretation which professes to regard the Apocalypse as shadowing forth the history of the Kingdom of God, shares in the insecurity of a thorough doctrinal and homiletical application of this Scripture, especially because it has not consistently made the ascertainment of a system of firm Biblico-apocalyptic symbolism its point of departure.

It is our belief that we have labored towards the attainment of this point of view, and we also think that, through the grace of God, our labors have been blessed with some measure of success. But the results which in these pages we offer to our readers are for the present the subject of theological discussion. It will, therefore, be requisite in doctrinal and homiletical comments, to observe caution in making a confident use of even such points as may have been recognized and proved to be true.

We, therefore, do not consider ourselves at liberty to undertake to accompany the whole course of our exegesis with doctrinal and homiletico-practical applications; and we are the more withheld from thus doing by the further consideration, that the object of prime importance at this time is the incitement of our contemporaries to an exposition of the Apocalypse which shall be still simpler and more firmly grounded upon Biblical symbolism than any that have yet appeared. We shall rely upon free citations from authors who admit the allegorical character of the Book, to carry us over the gaps.

* See p. 87.

But notwithstanding all that we have said, there is still so much to be found on the platform of simple belief in the Bible, so much which such belief, in its various modifications, can accept as sure, as common to all stand-points, and as precious, both for doctrine and life, that, with all the restrictions which we have imposed upon ourselves, we hope still to garner a rich harvest of doctrinal and homiletical truths.

The most convenient arrangement of this treasure will be secured by the division of our remarks into a General and a Special Part. The General Part will contain remarks upon leading points of view; the Special Part will contain remarks upon the leading sections of the Apocalypse. Doctrinal and Ethical, and Homiletical and Practical observations will everywhere be presented under a common caption.

PART FIRST.

GENERAL DOCTRINO-ETHICAL AND HOMILETICAL REMARKS UPON THE APOCALYPSE.

SECTION FIRST.

Doctrinal and Ethical Elements of the Apocalypse.

It was the prejudiced opinion of the elder orthodoxistic school that the Apocalypse must, in respect of its doctrinal and ethical elements, be reduced to the stage of development occupied by the earlier Apostolic Theology, or that it must even be corrected to suit that stage. A parallel position is occupied by modern prejudice, as developed in distinct branches. The school of Baur, on the one hand, regards the Book as a genuine writing of the Apostle John, and on that very account also holds it to be the product of an exceedingly contracted and turbid Judo-Christianity; whilst the school of Schleiermacher, on the other hand, maintains that the poverty of the Scripture is connected with its origin from the pen of some non-Apostolic John. The Book is worth little, because it is by the Apostle John—the one class asserts. The Book is of very little value, because it is not by the Apostle John—is the declaration of the other class. Those rude assailments of its dignity in which Volkmar permitted himself to indulge, following the tendency of the school of Baur, were preceded by the following frivolous, yet naïve, deliverance of De Wette: “A book, whole chapters of which we must, after pressing out a few drops of juice, cast aside as empty skins, has, at least, not the character of a popular book.” (Introduction, p. 6.)

On the other hand, some pietisto-chilastic and theosophic schools have maintained the existence of, in many respects, an entirely new and separate Theology in the Apocalypse; of such a school SWEDENBORG was the founder.

In reply to all these misrepresentations of the true state of the case, it must be maintained: 1. That the Apocalypse contains the same doctrine of Christianity as all the rest of the New Testament, and moreover that it contains it in the Johannean type; 2. That it is to be recognized as the most developed phase of the New Testament doctrine bearing upon its theme—the hope of the Kingdom of God, and the advent of that Kingdom into the world—although it is couched in Biblico-artistic, allegorical and symbolical forms.

There are a great number of opponents of Eschatological Dogmatics who yet claim that they stand upon the basis of firm and assured principles of faith. Their objections against eschatological dogmas may be summed up in the following gradation: 1. No dogmas can be drawn from figurative, allegorical or, in general, poetic representations. 2. The deliverances of Christian hope cannot be turned to dogmatic account. 3. The farther removed the historical elements of Christianity are from the historic centre of the life of Jesus, the more problematical do they become.

So far as the first objection against Christian Eschatology is concerned, it is based upon two false hypotheses. The first of these is that allegorical or symbolical representations cannot be reduced to a didactic or distinct doctrinal idea. The second false hypothesis is that there is in the Bible a region of abstract didactic forms, from which it is possible to mark off the region of figurative forms. It is a singular fact that these same objectors are frequently prone to draw their statements relative to the doctrines of the Old Testament concerning the other world, from poetico-pathological expressions in the Book of Job or the Psalms.

Again, in reply to the attempt to rob the truths of Christian hope of true doctrinal evidence, we would state what surely every one should know—that, in a wider sense, the whole Christian faith has the character of hope (Heb. xi. 1); that faith, hope and love substantially coincide with each other (1 Cor. xiii.); and that without doctrines of Christian hope, even in the narrower sense of that term, there could be no doctrines at all.

Finally, when an idealistic or spiritualistic [vom Spiritualismus behaftete] Christology ascribes less importance to the doctrine of Christ's Resurrection than to that of His historic Life and redemptive Death, it is safe to infer that these unsound individual points of belief are but the superstructure which is erected upon an unsound principal foundation; such an unsound foundation is discoverable in the case of Schleiermacher, in his defective recognition of the personality of the Saviour. Where there is a defect in the idea of the Divine personality, on the one hand, and in that of the human personality, on the other, it is impossible that the idea of the God-Man should subsist in its full, historic import.

Persons who accord a less biased appreciation to the doctrinal significance of the Apocalypse, cannot fail to perceive that the Book in question has not obscured the Christian doctrines of the preceding New Testament Scriptures, but, on the contrary, that it has elucidated them and furnished proofs in their support—nay, that its Theology may be regarded as a mediatory Theology in the best sense of the term. This is true, in the first place, of the eschatological doctrines:—the doctrines concerning death, the intermediate state, the Kingdom of God, the Church Triumphant, Antichristianity, the eschatological import of Israel, the Parousia of Christ, the Resurrection, the Last Day, the Kingdom of glory, hell and Heaven. In the second place, the doctrines concerning God, the creation, Christ and His redemptive work, the Christian life in respect of its religious and moral natures, and, finally, Bibliology, are endued with new distinctness.

Let us first examine the first line of dogmas—the eschatological ones.

The doctrine concerning death is, assuredly, not obscured, but, rather, enlightened by the fact that the Apocalypse puts forth the idea of the second death. The first death is thereby, in measure, degraded to a shadow in its relation to believers—as is the case, likewise, in the Johannine Gospel. Here, Christ has the keys of death, the souls of the departed continue to live, and blessed are the dead who die in the Lord. There is here a more distinct sundering of Hades, or the realm of the dead, and hell, or the furnace of fire, than is to be found in any other Scripture. In respect of the blessed dead, the bright department of Hades is set forth as a sojourning with the Lord in Heaven; the place of torment within Hades has assumed the form of the abyss, and the intermediate region—the realm of the dead, in the narrower sense—is even distinguished by still another separate sphere from the idea of Gehenna, which is not yet realized. In the representation of the souls of the martyrs as under the altar and crying to God for recompense, are expressed the facts that they have a right, and a just impulse, to anticipate their future perfect restitution, or the satisfaction of justice on their behalf; that their life, in accordance with the Divine decree, has been, as it were, sacrificed on the altar, and that they, as followers of Christ, are on the sure road from death to a glorious resurrection. Further, in respect of their resurrection, the bestowal of white robes upon them is surely not merely a figure of their justification before God and the world, but is also expressive of the truth that they are developing toward the first resurrection (1 Cor. xv.; 2 Cor. v.).

The end of the world or the Last Day appears, in ultra-supernaturalistic dogmatics—regarded by their holders as orthodox par excellence,—independent, as far as possible, of instrumentality, or, at least, as owning only that of missions and altered ethical conditions; in harmony with the above, the end of the world is its absolute destruction, and the Last Day is really the last of the days in the astronomical sense of a day. How much more life and organism and instrumentality is displayed in the Apocalyptic presentation, connected, as it is, with less developed intimations throughout the Sacred Writings. Here the picture of the apostasy, hinted at by Christ Himself, and more definitely predicted by St. Paul, is completely unrolled; the apostasy is qualified as ripened Antichristianity, whose main figure is a demonic bestial formation of Christian national life, and whose secondary figure, in the form of the False Prophet, the apostate, issues from the theocratico-churchly system, so that the latter itself becomes a pseudo-Christian Church, a Church of apostasy.

With this ripening of Antichristianity for the harvest, the ripening of Christianity is implied, although the maturing of the Church into the Bride—assured, indeed, by the 144,000 sealed ones, and illustrated by the 144,000 triumphant ones—almost vanishes behind the scene, behind the manifest Antichristian world. The Church, by reason of the tribulations which it must needs undergo, becomes almost an exclusively invisible Church. Just this unheard of distress or need, however, is the reason of the appearance of Christ (mediated by the maturity of good as well as of evil) in its wondrous and sudden phase. And what a wealth of mediatory instrumentalities is now presented to our view! The Last Day itself is exhibited as a Divine day of a thousand years (Ps. xc.). The resurrection of the dead is exhibited as a vital process, working from within outwards, through an entire æon, from the first glorious blossoms of the resurrection to the last general resurrection; it is thus possible for it to be accomplished in the form of a transformation (in accordance with St. Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 23, 24 [51]). The judgment is set forth as a distinct series of judgments, reaching from the war-judgment at the return of Christ, through the peace-judgment of the thousand years, to the judgment of damnation at the close of those years. The like is true of the end of the cosmical world. The orthodox school-idea of an actual destruction of the old world and an absolute creation of the new corresponds with the soteriological idea that the new man is the product of an absolute spiritual creation, and as such takes the place of the natural and wholly dead man, which latter is identified with the old man; in other words, the former idea is simply the false consequence of the false principle involved in the latter conception.

The doctrine of Satan is not only considerably developed in the Apocalypse—especially as regards the conception of him as the Accuser—but is also established on a firmer base, inasmuch as Satan enters into the circle of religious experience in this present world by the foundation of Antichristianity.

The end of the world, like the Parousia of Christ, is here exhibited in the light of a moral necessity, ensuing, as it does, in order to the crushing of the last mutinous revolt of iniquity against the Church of God on earth. (The review val of Evil, apparently long since destroyed and abolished on earth, is thoroughly characteristic of its tough serpent-nature. The final stripping of iniquity of all idealistic illusions, such as aided its operation at the time of Antichristianity, is exhibited in its manifestation in the naked conspiracy of the Satanic spirit with human rudeness and brutality. This judgment upon the last revolt is the index for the general judgment, and hence, also, for the general resurrection.

Worthy of note is that ethico-psychological order according to which the Beast, or Antichrist, and the False Prophet are cast a thousand years earlier than Satan into the now ready Gehenna, or lake of fire. This order is in harmony with the idea of life. The Beast and the False Prophet have reached the end of their lives, so far as their powers and arts are concerned, at the Parousia; Satan does not attain the end of his life-term until the completion of the thousand years. It might be said that idealistic evil is judged a thousand years sooner than brutal evil; just as the kernel of humanity as existent at the Parousia is infinitely further developed than the mass of mankind.

So far as it is admissible to speak of an intermediate state between the last judgment and the ideal goal of all things, such a state manifestly appears to be for the wicked a series of æons to which the eye can discover no limit. Whither the river of Paradise goes as it flows out of the City of God, is not declared. The mediæval conception of the endless torment of all who have died out of the Church infringes on the liberty of God; the systems of the absolute restoration of all men infringe on the liberty of man; both occupy too positive a position in relation to the hidden secrets of the æons, behind which the mountains of absolute Eternity stand, radiant with the glory of God.

The Apocalypse, despite its figurative presentation, throws light upon the whole mass of the doctrines of our faith. The doctrines of the Trinity of God and of the relation of God to Christ, are here unmistakably raised above all monophysitism, Arianism, and inner-Trinitary subordination. The creation here appears, in the reflex light of the new Paradise, as the original plan of a world of eternal spirit-life. The human race is represented by a selection of elect ones, not in the least prejudicing the great masses of mankind, but forming the centre, the glory and relative support of these, just as Christ is their absolute centre, glory and support. How fully, furthermore, are the fundamental traits of Redemption, Reconciliation and Salvation portrayed, in contrast to the gloomy night-side of human life and perdition! Here the Baptism of the Church is reflected in a Baptism of blood; the Supper of the Church is reflected in the Supper of the Spirit; legal excommunication is reflected in dynamical excommunication; the righteousness of faith is reflected in righteousness of life. How richly the different phases of the Church are displayed,—the ground-forms of the internal and external history of the Church, the Kingdom of God, and the world—it is need- less particularly to demonstrate, after an earnest consideration of the Revelation.

SECTION SECOND.

Homiletic Application of the Apocalypse.

It must, first of all, be premised that the Apocalypse is not to be laid aside as a sealed Book, but that it is to be treated as an open Book, and is to be made use of for the edification of the Christian churches (see ch. i. 1-4, ii.—iv., xxii. 10, 16; and the interspersed paræneses).

In the use of the Apocalypse, however, the will of the glorified Lord should be observed, as manifested in His confiding of the Apocalyptic treasury primarily to the servants of the Lord; these having to communicate it to the Church—not, indeed, in a tutoring hierarchic spirit, but in pastoral wisdom, with knowledge and understanding. Therefore is the Apocalypse entrusted to the servants (chap. i. 1; comp. chap. xxii. 6, 16).

Hence also the Seer does not write directly to the churches, but to the angels* of the churches.

The responsible nature of this commission is evident from the words of ch. xxii. 18, 19.

The weightiness of these warning words is instanced by the two-fold fact that, despite their stern menace, fanaticism within the Church, and the enthusiastic spirit of entire sects, from the Montanists down to the "Latter Day Saints," have obscured the pure contents of the Revelation by additions, misinterpretations and chiliastic distortions, on the one hand; whilst, on the other hand, spiritualism [= a spiritualizing interpretation] has for ages past not only diminished the effect of the Revelation, through an idle and slavish fear of chiliasm, but has even, in many ways, paralyzed its operations, thus lulling Christian watchmen and Christian vigilance into slumber, and enfeebling the eschatological elements of even the Gospels and the Apostolic Epistles.

It may be laid down as a general principle, that the measure of doctrinal and ethical testimony furnished by the Apocalypse is the index to its homiletic applicability.

In particular, a field for homiletics is afforded by passages whose glory dispels all exegetic scruples; viz., the doxologies, songs of praise, and heaven-pictures in general; the Christological items; the soteriological didactic passages; the emphatic alarm-cries and comforting assurances; and, especially, the Seven Epistles, which have already proved such fertile soil for the homilist (see p. 54).

Literature Relating to the Application of the Apocalypse.

Imm. Nitzsch, Ueber den Kirchlichen Werth und Gebrauch der Apocalypse, Wittenberg, 1822.
Hosse, Der rechte Standpunkt der Betrachtung der Offenbarung Joh. (Monatschrift für die ev. Kirche der Rheinprovinz und Westfalens, 12th annual series. No. 7, 1853).
Christiani (General Superintendent of Livonia), Bemerkungen zur Auslegung der Apok., mit besonderer Rücksicht auf die chiliastische Frage, Riga, Bacmeister. A. F. Schmidt (prebendary deacon in Stuttgart), Ein Votum

* [This would seem to favor the idea, rejected by Lange, that the "angels" are the heads or pastors of the churches. —Ta.]

über die homiletische Behandlung der Apokalypse, Stuttg., 1867. S. Danz, Universal-Wörterbuch, p. 64.

SECTION THIRD.

Starke's Bibelwerk.

We cannot here in silence pass by a Bible-work which, in the continuous influence that it has exerted, impelled us to the preparation of our own; although we must, on account of the already noted limits and the atomistic nature of the work in question, restrict ourselves to a brief notice of it.

We find nothing in the Introduction of a theocratic bearing specially worthy of mention. Starke's position, in maintaining that the Apocalypse is the most important Book of the Scriptures, is equally one-sided with that of older Lutheran theologians, who regard it as a deuterocanonical Book, or that of modern criticism, which looks upon it as an almost worthless pseudo-prophetic fiction. On the other hand, with what may be called a praiseworthy resignation, Starke almost invariably presents two constructions of the Book, styling one "the system of those who explain it as for the most part fulfilled," and the other "the system of those who explain it as for the most part to be fulfilled." In many sections he sets forth the antithesis of these different views without comment on his own part.

We cite here some observations of Starke on the practical importance of the Apocalypse. "This Book, when rightly understood and faithfully applied, is profitable (1) for the confirmation of our faith in the doctrine of the person, natures, estates and offices of Christ, and in the doctrines of justification, sanctification and the Divine inspiration of the Holy Scriptures; (2) for warning against the great and manifold offence which subsists in Christendom, hidden under so many distresses, heresies and other infirmities of the reason, or by the devil covered up with scandals and sects, so that men stumble against it, or pass false judgment, and thus lose faith in that article of the Christian creed which declares: I believe in one Holy Christian Church; (3) for the powerful arousing of the soldier of Christ to the faithful maintenance of the conflict against sin and the kingdom of darkness within and around him, and to the prosecution of this conflict until the victory is gained;—so often is the admonition given: He that hath ears, let him hear what the Spirit saith to the churches; so often do we meet with the words: He that conquereth, he that conquereth, etc.; (4) for consolation in suffering, especially that which comes from without, that which the Christian undergoes in and from this wicked world, for the sake of the name and the following of Christ. Of this consoling nature are, especially, those most precious promises which are contained in the Seven Epistles, and which relate to the great and glorious reward which God graciously holds out to the faithful in tribulation; (5) for affording a prospect of troublous times still in the future, in order to the composed awaiting of them in the strength of God, and to encouragement in view of the great decadence of the Church—in face of which the individual believer may feel himself uplifted and supported by the lively hope of the imminent real exchange of darkness for light, which is no small thing to loyal servants and children of God; (6) for the elucidation of the prophetic Scriptures of the Old Testament: for as the Prophets afford us the best key to the Revelation of John, so the latter, viewed in the right light, affords the best key to a true understanding of the Prophets."

SECTION FOURTH.

Literature on the Doctrinal and Ethical and, especially, the Homiletical side of the Apocalypse.

Besides the lists already given in this Commentary (pp. 72 seq.), and in the Comm. on John (p. 47 [Am. Ed.]), there is noted in Starke's Bibelwerk at the close of Revelation, under the caption: Continuation of the list of exegetical works begun in the first part of this book, a considerable number of writings on the Apocalypse; most of these, however, are somewhat antiquated.

Of recent works demanding mention here, as bearing upon Apocalyptic dogmatics and homiletics, as well as pertaining to the general literature on the Apocalypse, we name the following: Münchmeyer, Bibelstunden über die Offenb. Joh., Hanover, 1862. Das Ende der Zeiten, Vorträge über die Offenb. des h. Joh., by Emil Steffann, Berlin, 1870. Kienlen, Commentaire historique et critique sur l'Ap. de Jean, Paris, 1870 (synchrono-historical, but opposed to Volkmar). O'Sullivan (Rector of Killyman), The Apostasy predicted by St. Paul, Dublin, London, 1842 (learned, ingenious, evangelic, anti-papistic: on the Apostasy as set forth 2 Thess. ii.). Thomas Newton (Bishop of Bristol), Dissertations on the Prophecies which have been remarkably fulfilled, and at this time are fulfilling in the World. Revised by Dolson, London (a work of interest, evidencing deep reading on the part of its author, who occupies a world and Church-historical stand-point). Garratt, Commentary on the Revelation of St. John, considered as the Divine Book of History, in which God has delineated what is now past, present and to come and decided beforehand, London, 1866 (Church-historical and original. By the figure of the Beast, the author understands a council, still future (in 1866), of the united Orient and Occident).

There is a very extensive minor Apocalyptic literature in England, even appearing in the form of periodical papers. The eschatological anticipations of that practical nation have, in many cases, a strong chiliastic flavoring, as is evidenced by Darbyism, Irvingism and similar phenomena.

PART SECOND.

SPECIAL DOCTRINO-ETHICAL AND HOMILETICAL NOTES.

SECTION FIRST.

Prologue (Chap. i. 1-8).

General.—Of God.—Of Revelation.—Of witness [Martyrium].—Of visions.—Of Divine service.—Of the Church.—Of the Trinity.—Of salvation.—Of the destination of Christians.—Of the Coming of Christ, in order to the complete revelation of God.

Special.—[Ver. 1.] Revelation as the Apocalypse, the end and crown of revelations.—The end and crown of the Biblical Books.—The end and crown of the doctrines of the Christian faith.—The end and crown of paræneses.

[Ver. 2.] The Apostles as the great martyrs or witnesses of Christ:—Of His past, present, future [or coming].—John, in respect to his import in a doctrinal and a homiletical point of view.—John as the Seer of spirit in realities (the Gospel) and of realities in spirit (the Apocalypse).—The vision as a sign of the depth of the inner human life, and the height of the ripened Christian life.—[Ver. 3.] Blessedness of the Christian in anticipation of the Coming of Christ.—The always certain nearness of the last time in the rapid course and change of Christian times.—The Coming of Christ in every Christian age.—Christian worship in the simple ground-form of readers and hearers.—Common blessedness of the leading and the led in a true cultus.—[Vers. 4, 5.] As the all-embracing idiocracy of Christ is divided and reflected in the Apostles, so the idiocrasies of the Apostles are divided and reflected in those of the Church.—The Seven Churches in the deepest reality One Church.—The Trinity of God in the glory of its revelation: The Father, as the Primal Source of grace and peace—Who is, Who was, and Who cometh; The Holy Ghost in the manifestations of the Seven Spirits before the Throne of the Divine Rule; The Son of God, as the Faithful Witness, the First-born from the dead; as the Prince of the kings of the earth; as He Who hath loved us and washed us from our sins in His blood.—The grace which is upon Christians, and the peace which is in them, an eternally new benedictive greeting from the Triune God.—[Ver. 6.] The high calling of Christians, by which they are made a kingdom of priests; how this calling is realized for them, and how it becomes realized in them.—Kings and priests considered in respect of their connection: 1. Kings and priests, in the sense of their degeneracy, alternately war and conspire against each other; 2. Kings and priests, in the sense of the worldly order of things, mutually balance and limit each other; 3. Kings and priests, as servants of God, in the sense of the spiritual life, are one, and mutually condition each other.—A man becomes a king, in the service of God, only when he continually sacrifices or surrenders all things to Him in pure self-renunciation, as a priest.—A man becomes a priest of the Eternal Spirit only when he can administer kingly possessions in kingly freedom.—The first doxology: 1. Glory; 2. Dominion; 3. Both to continue into the æons.—Whereby can I perceive that God is glorified on earth? 1. When no earthly glory obscures, like a cloud, this heavenly Sun. 2. When His glory is duly seen and appreciated in the reflected lustre of all that is holy and glorious on earth.—In God's Kingdom, His dominion is based upon His glory, as is His glory upon His dominion.—What is the meaning of eternities [æons? the G. V. has: von Ewigkeit zu Ewigkeit—from eternity to eternity]? Infinite revelation of the Divine Essence. Infinite unfolding of a blessed life. Infinite development and unveiling of the world.—The Biblical Amen: The perfected Personality of Christ; Perfected phase of the Kingdom; Perfected certitude of prayer.—[Ver. 7.] The Theme of the Book: He cometh.—Also the theme of worldly history; of religious presentiments; of science and of art.—With the clouds. As high and free as are the clouds as they emerge to view out of the depths of Heaven; as hidden and as manifest as the lightning in the cloud; as elevated above the earth, and as surely destined for the earth.—And every eye shall see Him. One day these eyes of ours shall show to each and all of us the Lord.—How this announcement finds its incipient fulfilment in every act of worship that we perform: We look up to Him. We perceive ourselves to be guilty in respect of the cross of Christ. We celebrate His Passion and His Death with sacred lamentations for the Dead.—This prophecy shall one day become a completed reality.—With Christ's Coming Sunday comes; true and unceasing worship comes; the word of revelation comes upon the whole earth.—Even His enemies must see Him; must recognize their guilt in respect of Him in their guilt in respect of their inmost selves; must join, in one way or another, in the last lamentation over Him.—[Ver. 8.] In the Coming of Christ, God shall perfectly manifest Himself as Jehovah, the Covenant God:—faithful to Himself—faithful to His people—faithful to His justice toward all.—Alpha and Omega; or the most profound idea elementarily illustrated. As the whole expression embraces the entire spirit-world, so the Spirit of God comprehends the beginning, the middle, and the end of things.—Import of the fact that God will not perfectly manifest Himself until the end of the course of this world; that He is utterly distinct from (1) fate, (2) despotism, (3) arbitrariness, (4) chance.—On the Martyrs.—On Divine Service.—On the Feast of Trinity.—On Confirmation.

Comp. Ex. xix.; Isa. vi.; Ezek. i.; Dan. vii.; Zech. xii.; Matt. xxiv. 30, et al.

STARKE: All revelations of God come to us through Christ.—The most eminent function of an Apostle or Teacher is to testify of Christ.—Such a reading and hearing of Holy Scripture as is pleasing to God, confers blessedness.—The wish: [1] The utterer of the wish; [2] The objects of the wish; [3] The subject of the wish; [4] The One to Whom the wish is addressed.—CRAMER: The condition of a Christian a noble condition.—Nal, ἀμὴν est gemina confirmatio, una græca, altera hebraica.

SANDER ("Versuch einer Erklärung," 1829, see p. 73): If the Revelation of John be compared with the rest of the Sacred Writings, especially those of the Prophets, it will be found that John uses scarce any image that is not contained in these and that might not be explained through them. Compare Rev. i. and Ezek. i. 26; Isa. vi., etc. (Moreover, the homogeneousness of the images presupposes the homogeneousness of the facts.) Only in John's writings all those things which in the other Prophets are more scattered, are concentrated; he catches, as it were, in the focus of a burning-glass all the rays of individual Prophets, so that it is not to be wondered at that the brightness thence resultant dazzles many.

WAECHTLER (see p. 74): A knowledge of the Revelation of St. John is highly important for all Christians (Rev. i. 1-3).—Grace and peace from God, the inexhaustible Fountain of all comfort (ch. i. 4-6).

BÖHMER (see p. 73): In the Christian creed, the Holy Ghost is placed after the Father and the Son, as proceeding from Them both. John, however, is writing, not a system of divinity, but a sacred history, in which the general point of departure is the all-sovereign eternal God; next are revealed the powers which prepare the way for the fulfillment of His counsel of salvation, and last comes Christ Himself—first, as the true and highest Prophet, the "faithful Witness," then as the "First-born of the dead," and finally as the "Prince of the kings of the earth."

[BARNES: Ver. 7. And every eye shall see Him. Every one has this in certain prospect, that he shall see the Son of Man coming as a Judge.]

On the literature (see above, p. 74). LILIENTHAL, Bibl. Archivarius, p. 808.—DANZ, p. 57 and Supplement, p. 6.

SECTION SECOND.

First Vision. Heaven-picture of the Seven Churches (Ch. i. 9-20).

General.—The pastoral fidelity of man here appears in reciprocal action with the pastoral fidelity of God. John on Patmos thinks of his seven churches in the spirit of prayer. But the Lord, through the Spirit of revelation, changes his glance at the seven churches into a vision of the whole future of the Church.—Heavenly blessedness in the midst of earthly martyrdom.—The prophetic visions as the theocratic higher reality of the Platonic ideas, the lofty mysterious source-points of all fundamental spiritual currents, or of the stream of salvation in the history of the world.—Preliminary conditions of prophecy—external affliction, internal solemn joy, loneliness, prayer.—Forms of revelation.—Development of revelation from the auricular to the ocular wonder.—Appearance of Christ in His glory in respect of its fundamental features. Christ, the Son of God, also eternally the glorified Son of Man.—The shock experienced by the Seer at the appearance of the Lord in His revelation, a species of death, and hence a source of new, high life. How this shock—a. In its original form runs through the history of the prophetic callings (Ex. iii. 6; iv. 24; xxxiv. 30-35; Isa. vi. 5; Jer. i. 6; Ezek. iii. 14, 15; Dan. x.); b. Is reflected in Jewish tradition (Ju. xiii. 22) and in Greek manticism, in which the manticist himself represents death, whilst the priest who expounds his oracle is representative of new life; c. Is shadowed in the history of apostate prophets, especially in that of Balaam (Num. xxiv. 4); d. Is crystallized in the fundamental forms of regeneration; repentance and faith—death of the old, resurrection of the new, man.—Doctrine of the kingdom of the dead, and of death.—Hades is to be distinguished from Gehenna.—The appearance of Christ, deadly for the moment, conferring life for ever.—Sacred literature (verse 19).—Key of symbolism (verse 20).

Special.—[Ver. 9.] John, an exile on earth, at home in Heaven.—The great Prophet, a brother and companion [fellow-partaker] of all Christians, (1) in tribulation, (2) in the glory of the Kingdom, (3) in the endurance of Jesus.—Patmos, so poor in geography, so glorified in the Theocracy, like Bethlehem and Nazareth. The like is true of Palestine and the earth itself. [Ver. 10.] Sunday in its apostolic radiance: The day of the spirit; of transport; of complete revelation.—Sunday quiet, absorption of life in its profoundest depths, and thereby, at the same time, in the richest retrospect, and the clearest fore-view.—The sacred voice.—[Ver. 11.] The sacred Book.—The Bible reposing upon Divine voices and trumpets.—The Christian who, through deep absorption of spirit, finds the three times [the past, present and future] in the present, thereby learns to know God as He Who is, Who was and Who cometh.—The seven churches or representatives of all churches—primarily, of all those in Asia Minor—or the one Church in its seven-fold form.—The sacred septenary of the churches, founded upon the septenary of the Spirits of God, and ever recurring in the subsequent sevens.—[Vers. 12, 13.] Christ is, therefore, here in the midst of the candlesticks, as well as in the other world. The same hierarchism which sunders doctrine and life, belief and morale, clergy and laity, spirit and nature, faith and culture, body and soul, also tears earth and Heaven apart. As the deist confines God to the other world, so the Hierarchy banishes the Lord Jesus Christ thither.—Christ is the living unity of the seven individual golden candlesticks, and through this unity alone is the type of the one seven-branched candlestick fulfilled (Ex. xxv. 31-37).—[Vers. 14-16.] The form of Christ, considered in regard to its attributes; or the difference between theocratic symbolism and humanistic æsthetics.—[Ver. 17.] Fear not, a ground-word of Christianity from beginning to end (Luke ii. 10; Matt. xxviii. 5; see the Concordances, Title, Fear not).—The history and operation of the Death and Resurrection of Christ lift all fear from all believers.—[Ver. 18.] Christ, the Living One, (1) in respect of His spiritual essence and mission (the First, the Last, the Life of life); (2) in respect of His history (having been dead, and having become alive forever); (3) in respect of His power (having the keys of Death and Hades).—[Ver. 19.] "Write what thou seest." All Scripture a copy of Divine reality.—[Ver. 20.] The key of symbolism must form the starting-point for the disclosure of all Apocalyptic mysteries.—The Angels of the churches, neither presbyteries, nor bishops, nor preachers, but the spirit of the churches in symbolic personification—the spirit which, undoubtedly, should be represented by the heads of the churches, but which is very frequently not represented by them. This spirit represents their idiocracy, their ideal, the quality of their spiritual life, and is the local invisible church.—The churches as candlesticks.—Celebration of Sunday.—Bible festivals.—Celebration of Easter.—Festival of the dead.—Celebration of church consecration (or consecration of the angel of a church).—Celebration of the ministry.—See the succession of the visions, ch. iv. 2 (individual items) chap. xvii. 8 (individual items).—Parallels: Acts x. 10sq.; xx. 7; Zech. iv. 2; Dan. vii.; Dan. x.; Isa. xli. 10; xlvi. 12; Mal. ii. 7.*

STARKE: A man is in the Spirit (1) ordinarily, when he permits himself to be governed by the Spirit of God (Rom. viii. 9; Gal. v. 5†); (2) extraordinarily, by transport and a Divine revelation of things to come (Matt. xxii. 43).—Christ is always present with His Church, to enlighten, sanctify and defend it (Eph. v. 26).—He has, therefore, no need of any vicar.—The Church has for its foundation-pillar the invincible power and strength of Christ.—Christ's servants are in His hand, honored by Him and assured of His help.

RICHTER (see p. 73): In vers. 17 and 18, Jesus declares, in different words, the same thing that is expressed in Matt. xxviii. 18, "All power [authority] is given unto Me in Heaven and on earth," and the same that is expressed in that other saying of His, "I and the Father are one" [John x. 30]. After the lapse of nearly two thousand years, we find ourselves in a different posture toward this saying—so far as belief in it is concerned—from that occupied by the Church in John's time. Has there not been a considerable progress in the setting up of Christ's Kingdom? (It is true that we must not overlook the fact that, together with the furtherances of faith during the course of the centuries, there has been a constant new formation of apparent hindrances.)

GAERTNER (see p. 73): With the trumpet sound of the voice of Christ, the Revelation was opened for the ear;—with the seven candlesticks, it was opened for the eye.—These seven candlesticks precisely correspond to the seven lamps on the seven-branched candlestick in the Holy Place of the Tabernacle. The independent candlesticks, having each one its own standard, denote the greater perfection of the New Testament Church; furthermore, the Lord walks in the midst of them, which would be impossible, so far as the figure is concerned, in the case of the one seven-branched candlestick (rather, this fact is declaratory that there shall be, in the New Covenant, no external visible hierarchic unity of the churches). What is there more beautiful and more cheering than a bright light upon a candlestick in a dark and gloomy night! So the Church is a light in the darkness of this world, shining into the gloom and obscurity of mankind. Where there is a church that has the pure word of God and acts in accordance therewith, there is a golden candlestick; just so the faithful Church in Israel was a light to the Gentiles throughout the whole of the Old Testament time. The seven candlesticks are indicative of a perfect Church, into which the Holy Spirit from God's inner world streams seven-fold (seven-fold, and yet singly, through Christ).

[BONAR (Ver. 17): And when I saw Him, I fell at His feet as dead. O sinner, learn to know this Christ now as the Saviour, ere the day arrives when you shall see Him as the Judge! His love would save you now; His majesty will crush you then.]

SECTION THIRD.

Earth-picture of the Seven Churches. The Seven Epistles. (Chs. ii., iii.)

General.—The seven Churches as real portraits and at the same time as typical pictures of the whole Church, as regards (1) local extension and (2) chronological development.—The seven Churches as the centre of the seven loosed Seals or unveiled worldly history; as the occasion for the seven penitential Trumpets for the world in the Church and the Church in the world; as the organ of the seven Thunders of awakening and reformation; as the object of the enmity of the kingdom of darkness in the seven Heads of Antichrist; purified and saved by the hardening judgments of the seven Vials of Anger which are poured out upon the Antichristian world, in order to the mediating of Christ's appearing and His union with the Bride, in that one Spirit in Whom the Seven Spirits are united.—The seven Epistles as the all-sided sum of all messages of the heavenly Head-Shepherd to the shepherds and congregations of the Church; as the all-sided ensample of pastoral ministry on the part of the shepherds; and, at the same time, as prophetic alarm voices from the Spirit of the Church to the flocks themselves.—The Johannine Theology.—The Johannine Church.—Its historic continuance within Church History.—Its abiding fundamental features.—Its future.

The seven Churches as the seven candlesticks of the earth:—As portraits of the manifold configurations of Christianity.—Parallels and antitheses: Ephesus and Smyrna. Smyrna and Pergamus. Pergamus and Thyatira (Balaam and Jezebel). Thyatira and Sardis. Philadelphia and Laodicea.—Lights and Shadows: 1. The Metropolis: Growing churchliness, decreasing Christliness. Increased external works at the expense of inwardness—the first love. 2. Smyrna, the Martyr-Church, in conflict with a Judaizing, orthodoxistic tendency. 3. Pergamus, the confessing Church, lax in the exercise of church discipline towards antinomianism. 4. Thyatira, the enthusiastic Church, spotted with immoral fanaticism. 5. Sardis, the Church with a show of churchly life, but spiritually dead. 6. Philadelphia, small and pure—hence also a mission Church. 7. Laodicea, the lukewarm.—How the Lord's threats and promises to the seven Churches have been fulfilled. Historic life-pictures.—The manifold forms of Christ in relation to the seven Churches. All agreeing with individual traits of His total appearance (ch. i.).

* [The G. V. here reads "Angel"—angel, instead of the "messenger" of the E. V.—Tr.]

† [The G. V. here reads "in Christ"—in the Spirit, instead of "through the Spirit," as the E. V.—Tr.]

Special.—To avoid repetition, we here simply refer to the exegetical department.

1. Ephesus. The Mother-Church externally and legally faithful, but gathering inward and spiritual darkness.

How Christ presents Himself to this Church, the metropolis, in accordance with its need (ver. 1). Commendation of the Church: its many virtues (vers. 2, 3). In contrast to these, the one great, threatening want (ver. 4). Corresponding admonition, warning, threat (ver. 5). A hopeful sign, limiting the censure of Christ. In the Church's hatred of Nicolaitanism there remains a trace of the first love (ver. 6). Alarm cry and ethically conditioned promise, in harmony with the Church's stand-point. Ephesus the metropolis, and metropolises in Church History (Jerusalem, Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, etc.).

2. Smyrna. The Martyr-Church persecuted by Judaism.

Picture of Christ, in conformity to the needs of this Church (ver. 8). Praise of the Church (ver. 9). Its tribulation in the present and in the future, and the Lord's word of encouragement (vers. 9, 10). The great promise (ver. 10). The alarm cry and the glorious goal, in harmony with the conflict of the Church (ver. 11). Smyrna and other martyr-churches in conflict with the various forms of Judaism and orthodoxism (with the false and the great ban). The synagogue of Satan.

3. Pergamus. The Martyr-Church persecuted by Heathenism.

Proclamation: Christ as the possessor of the two-edged sword (ver. 12). Praise of martyr faithfulness in external conflict (ver. 13). Censure of false endurance when there was a call to spiritual conflict (vers. 14, 15). Admonition to repentance and threat of the judicial interference of Christ (ver. 16). Peculiar promise, referring to the relations of the inner, spiritual life (ver. 17). Pergamus, or the libertine Church, defective in the observance of church-discipline towards Nicolaitans and Balaamites. Balaam, the type of the false prophet or apostasy. The first Old Testament Judas (followed by Ahitho-phel and others), a prelude of the last Judas, the false prophet (Rev. xiii.).

4. Thyatira. The excited Church stained with antinomistic spiritual fanaticism.

Announcement of the Searcher of hearts and reins in His holy motion (ver. 18). Commendation of the Church's zeal (ver. 19). Censure of its toleration of Jezebel and the antinomistic extravagances of which she is the instigator (vers. 20, 21). Terribly earnest threat of punishment, in perfect harmony with the sin committed (vers. 22, 23). Limitation of the threat by a promise to spare the guiltless (vers. 23-25). Promise of the spirit of holy discipline and of true progress in antithesis to a false advance—in harmony with the situation of the Church (vers. 26-28). The alarm cry comes at the end, instead of preceding the promise, as heretofore. The same change of position between the conditional promise and the alarm cry obtains in the following Epistles. The architectonic distinction hence arising between the first three and the last four Churches may at the same time be suggestive of the antithesis of their geographical position. Smyrna and Pergamus lie to the north of Ephesus; Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia and Laodicea, to the south of Pergamus.—Phases of Jezebel in Church History, or the manifold re-appearance of fanatical and immoral sects and schools. Corrupting women in ancient and modern Church History, contrasted with the line of pious women.

5. Sardis. The Church for the most part spiritually dead.

Christ addresses Himself to this Church—in which there is a lack of the Spirit—in His whole general sovereignty over the entire Church and in the fullness of His Spirit. He begins by bringing against it the heavy charge of deadness—doubly a crime, since it has the name of living (ch. iii. 1). Alarm cry, in reference to the still extant remnants of life (vers. 2, 3). Recognition of the few innocent ones, conjoined with a promise corresponding to the fact that they have not defiled their garments (vers. 4, 5). Alarm cry (ver. 6).—Sad instances of dead or dying congregations, and even whole Churches.

6. Philadelphia. The pearl among the Churches.

Christ in the solemn aspect of the Administrator of the keys of David, i. e. true communion (ver. 7). Great recognition of the Church's faithfulness, and great promise—both in lively alternation (vers. 8-10). Encouragement and extraordinary final promise (vers. 11, 12). Alarm cry (ver. 13).—Characteristic of living Christian Churches and communities: An open door. Open outwardly for missions; open inwardly for communion.

7. Laodicea. The lukewarm Church—nigh unto reprobation.

The view which we take of Laodicea—viz., that it has fallen into lukewarmness in consequence of its spiritualistic [spiritualistisch] tendency—is supported by the characteristic announcement of Christ. He appears here entirely as the historic Christ, and characterizes Himself in this very peculiarity as identical with the ideal primal principle of the creation (ver. 14). The censure of the Church's lukewarmness is immediately conjoined with the threat of the judgment of reprobation (vers. 16, 16). The Lord then discovers the source of the lukewarmness of the Church to be, pride in its supposed spiritual riches, whilst it is, in reality, in a state of inexpressible spiritual necessity (vers. 16, 17). With this condition, correspond Christ's searching counsel (ver. 18), the expression of His love and compassion in the censure which He administers (ver. 19), and His peculiar admonition to repentance (ver. 20). The ethically conditioned promise is of as concrete a character as the self-presentation of Christ at the beginning, in perfect accordance with the needs of a church dissolved in spiritualism ([Spiritualismus], vers. 20, 21). The closing paragraph concludes both the seventh Epistle and all the foregoing Epistles (ver. 22).—Spiritualistic [spiritualistisch] back-ground of the lukewarm Church. An idealistic dream-life as unbelief in the historic power of ideas, or, rather, in the Incarnation of the Word.

Upon glancing over the entire group, we behold in most of the Churches a juxtaposition of light and shade—yet in very different proportions; only Laodicea incurs blame alone, and only Philadelphia is entirely free from censure. This contrast is explained by the spiritual pride of the one, and the humility and modesty of the other. Christ is different and yet the same in His posture toward each individual Church.—The celestially perfect Shepherd of the flock and Physician of the soul.

The wealth of homiletical works upon the Seven Epistles is so immense, and the works in question are so accessible, that, instead of attempting to augment this treasure, we shall refer to what is already extant. Even in more ancient times the Seven Epistles have afforded inducement to manifold dissertations on them, as is evident, e. g., from the list of productions relative to them in Lillenthal's Biblischer Archivarius, pp. 811–819. We have cited on p. 74 of the Introduction the special works of MEISTER, WICHELHAUS, HEUBNER, ZORN, VAN OOSTERZEE. We have still to mention, among others, Lisko, Christenspiegel, Betrachtungen über die sieben Sendschreiben der Offenb. Joh., Berlin, 1837.—To the above may be added the numerous homiletical or generally edifying works upon the whole Apocalypse (see the Int.), especially those of Bengel, Hahn, Schulthess, Roos, Wächter, et al. The Sermons of Wichelhaus made considerable impression in their time; Wächter's Sermons are energized by study, spirit and fervor; the Sermons of Van Oosterzee are especially distinguished by a plenitude of spirit and a grand play of oratory.

STARKE: The title of Christ at the opening of every letter is taken from the vision and description of Christ in ch. i. 11–18; it is, however, not always the same, but varies, on the contrary, in each epistle, corresponding in purpose and appearance with the contents of the epistle and the state of the Church addressed. The promise which in every epistle is given to the conqueror is adapted to the condition of each Church and to the evil that must be overcome.—The first love. The expression is drawn from the first love of married persons, which is wont to be pure and fervid, Jer. ii. 2. (This first love is, therefore, the pure bridal phase of religious consciousness—i. e. its receptivity, purity [in the sense of being without admixture of foreign or contaminating elements], freedom, warmth and devotion; in one word, genuine earnestness and depth [wahrhaftige Innigkeit und Innerlichkeit]).—As common traits of the Old Testament Balaam and the New Testament Nicolaitans may be mentioned: 1. Boasting; 2. Covetousness; 3. Seduction to apostasy; 4. Bringing under judgment.—Warm or cold. Warmth is positively wished for; coldness is desired only inasmuch as it is accompanied by less danger and responsibility than lukewarmness.—(Starke allegorizes the names of all the seven Churches—a procedure to which the name of Philadelphia might offer special inducements.)

LAVATER: Jesus Messias, oder die Zukunft des Herrn nach der Offenb. Joh. (a poetical work). SMYRNA: Und der Herrliche rief mir: Schreibe dem Engel in Smyrna: Also der Erste, der Letzte, der todt war und ewiglich lebet: Ich weiss deine Werke, etc. [And the Glorious One cried unto me: Write to the angel in Smyrna: Thus (saith) the First and Last, Who was dead and eternally liveth. I know thy works, etc.]

THE KREUZRIETER ([Knight of the Cross] Von Meyer, Schlüssel zur Offenb. St. Joh.; see p. 73). "Be faithful unto death and I will give thee the crown of life." Wreath or crown, it is all the same—except that the crowns of victors were wont to be made of living foliage. The Lord over death and life here demands of His followers such faithfulness and steadfastness as shall go with them even to a violent death. He Himself has won the wreath of victory and the highest crown of eternal life, and His first martyr, Stephen (i. e. wreath, crown), in the name that he bears, exhibits, as it were, to all martyrs their heavenly reward.

VAN OOSTERZEE: Let us, then, contemplate the Revelation of the glorified Christ on Patmos: as, for John, never to be forgotten—full of significance for all the centuries of the time following it—rich in instruction for each one of us.—Christ stands before you as the Image of the invisible God, the priestly King of the Kingdom of God, the faithful Friend of His servants, the Lord and Judge of the future.—Smyrna: Poor Smyrna enriched; calumniated Smyrna honored; threatened Smyrna ensured; militant Smyrna faithful; triumphant Smyrna crowned.

Literature: TRENCH, Comm. on the Epistles to the Seven Churches in Asia, 1867 [New York, 1872].

[From M. HENRY: Ch. ii. 1. He that holdeth the seven stars in His right hand. The ministers of Christ are under His special care and protection.—He walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. Christ is in an intimate manner present and conversant with His churches, and knows the state of each one of them.—Ver. 2. I know thy works and thy labor. Those that are stars in Christ's hand had need to be always in motion, dispensing light to all about them.—Thy patience. It is not enough that we be diligent, but we must be patient, and endure hardness as good soldiers of Christ.—Thou canst not bear them that are evil. It consists very well with Christian patience, not to dispense with sin, much less allow it.—Ver. 4. Nevertheless, I have somewhat against thee. Those that have much good in them, may have something much amiss in them; and our Lord Jesus, as an impartial Master and Judge, takes notice of both.—Thou hast left thy first love. Observe, (1) The first affections of men toward Christ, and holiness, and heaven, are usually lively and warm. (2) These lively affections will abate and cool, if great care be not taken, and diligence used, to preserve them in constant exercise. (3) Christ is grieved and displeased with His people when He sees them grow remiss and cold toward Him, and He will one way or other make them sensible that He does not take it well from them.—Ver. 5. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works. Observe, 1. Those that have lost their first love must remember from whence they are fallen; they must compare their present with their former state, and consider how much better it was with them then than now. 2. They must repent; they must be inwardly grieved and ashamed for their sinful declining, and humbly confess it in the sight of God. 3. They must return and do their first works; they must, as it were, begin again, go back step by step, till they come to the place where they took the first false step; they must endeavor to revive and recover their first zeal, tenderness, and seriousness, and must pray as earnestly, and watch as diligently, as they did when they first set out in the ways of God.—Or else I will come unto thee quickly, etc. If the presence of Christ's grace and Spirit be slighted, we may expect the presence of His displeasure.—Ver. 7. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches. Observe, 1. What is written in the Scriptures is spoken by the Spirit of God. 2. What is said to one church, concerns all the churches, in every place and age. 3. We can never employ our faculty of hearing better than in hearkening to the word of God.—To him that conquereth. The Christian life is a warfare against sin, Satan, the world, and the flesh. It is not enough that we engage in this warfare, but we must pursue it to the end; we must fight the good fight till we gain the victory; and the warfare and victory shall have a glorious triumph and reward.—To eat of the tree of life, etc. They shall have that perfection of holiness, and that confirmation therein, that Adam would have had. If he had gone well through the course of his trial, then he would have eaten of the tree of life which was in the midst of paradise, and that would have been the sacrament of confirmation to him in his holy and happy state. So all who persevere in their Christian trial and warfare, shall derive from Christ, as the Tree of Life, perfection and confirmation in holiness and happiness in the paradise of God; not in the earthly paradise, but the heavenly (ch. xxii. 1, 2).—Ver. 8. Christ was dead, and by dying purchased salvation for us; He is alive, and by His life applies this salvation to us.—Ver. 9. I know thy tribulation.

They who will be faithful to Christ, must expect to go through many tribulations; but Jesus Christ takes particular notice of all their troubles.—Thy poverty (but thou art rich). Poor in temporals, but rich in spirituals; poor in spirit, and yet rich in grace; their spiritual riches are set off by their outward poverty. Many who are rich in temporals, are poor in spirituals. Some who are poor outwardly are inwardly rich. Spiritual riches are usually the reward of great diligence; the diligent hand makes rich.—I know the blasphemy. He knows the wickedness and falsehood of the enemies of His people.—Ver. 10. He foreknows the future trials of His people, forewarns them of them, and forearms against them. Forearms them, 1. By His counsel. 2. By showing them how their sufferings would be alleviated and limited: (1) They should not be universal; (2) They should not be perpetual; (3) It should be to try them, not to destroy them. 3. By promising a glorious reward to their fidelity. Observe, 1. The sureness of this reward: I will give thee. 2. The suitability of it: (1) A crown, to reward their poverty, fidelity and conflict. (2) A crown of life, to reward those who are faithful even unto death, are faithful till they die, and who part with life itself, in fidelity to Christ.—Ver. 11. He that overcometh, shall not be hurt of the second death. Observe, 1. There is not only a first, but a second death; a death after the body is dead. 2. This second death is unspeakably worse than the first death, both in agony and in duration—it is eternal death, to die, and to be always dying. 3. From this hurtful, this destructive death, Christ will save all His faithful servants.—Ver. 13. I know where thou dwellest, etc. Christ takes notice of the trials and difficulties His people encounter.—Ver. 14. Observe, 1. Corrupt doctrines and a corrupt worship often lead to corrupt conversation. 2. To continue in communion with persons of corrupt principles and practices is displeasing to God, and causes those who thus do to become partakers of other men's sins. Though the Church, as such, has no power to punish the persons of men, either for heresy or immorality, with corporal penalties, yet it has power to exclude them from its holy communion; and if it do not so, Christ will be displeased with it.—Ver. 19. It should be the ambition and earnest desire of all Christians that their last works may be their best works.—Ver. 21. Observe, 1. Repentance is necessary to prevent the sinner's ruin. 2. Repentance requires time. 3. Where God gives space for repentance, He expects fruits meet for repentance. 4. Where the space for repentance is lost, the sinner perishes with a double destruction.—Ver. 23. All the churches shall know, etc. God is known by the judgments that He executeth. Note here, 1. His infallible knowledge of the hearts of men. 2. His impartial justice.—Ver. 28. Christ is the Morning Star; He brings day with Him into the soul; the light of grace and of glory.—Ch. iii. 3. I will come unto thee as a thief, etc. Observe, 1. When Christ leaves a people as to His gracious presence, He comes to them in judgment; and His judicial presence will be very dreadful to those who have sinned away His gracious presence. 2. His judicial presence to a dead declining people will be surprising; their deadness will keep them in security, and, as it procures an angry visit from Christ to them, it will prevent their discerning it and preparing for it. 8. Such a visit from Christ will be to their loss; He will come as a thief, to strip them of their remaining enjoyments and mercies, not by fraud, but in justice and righteousness, taking the forfeiture they have made of all to Him.—Ver. 4. God takes notice of the smallest number of those who abide with Him; and the fewer they are, the more precious in His sight.—They shall walk with Me in white, for they are worthy. In the stole, the white robes of justification, and adoption, and comfort; or in the white robes of honor and glory, in the other world. This is an honor proper and suitable to their integrity and fidelity, and no way unbecoming Christ to confer upon them, though it is not a legal, but a gospel worthiness that is ascribed to them; not merit, but meetness.—Ver. 5. He that overcometh shall be clothed in white raiment. The purity of grace [ver. 4] shall be rewarded with the perfect purity of glory.—I will not blot his name, etc. Observe, 1. Christ has His book of life, a register and roll of all who shall inherit eternal life: (1) the book of eternal election; (2) the book of remembrance of all who have lived to God. 2. Christ will not blot the names of His chosen and faithful ones out of this book of life. 3. Christ will produce this book of life, and confess the names of the faithful who stand there, before God, and all the angels; this He will do as their Judge, and as their Captain and Head.—Ver. 7. He that is holy, He that is true, He that hath the key of David. Note here Christ's personal, and His political character.—Observe the acts of His government: 1. He opens—a door of opportunity to His churches, a door of utterance to his ministers, a door of entrance, the heart, a door of admission into the visible Church, laying down the terms of communion, and the door of admission into the Church triumphant, according to the terms of salvation fixed by Him. 2. He shuts the door; when He pleases, He shuts the door of opportunity, and the door of utterance, and leaves obstinate sinners shut up in the hardness of their hearts; He shuts the door of church-fellowship against unbelievers and profane persons, and He shuts the door of heaven against the foolish virgins who have slept away their day of grace, and against the workers of iniquity, how vain and confident soever they may be.—Ver. 10. Observe, 1. The gospel of Christ is the word of His patience; it is the fruit of the patience of God to a sinful world, it sets before men the exemplary patience of Christ in all His sufferings for men, it calls those who receive it to the exercise of patience in conformity to Christ. 2. This gospel should be carefully kept by all who enjoy it. 3. After a day of patience we must expect an hour of temptation; a day of gospel-peace and liberty is a day of God's patience, and it is seldom so well improved as it should be, and therefore is often followed by a day of trial and temptation. 4. Sometimes the trial is more general and universal; it comes upon all the world. 5. They who keep the gospel in a time of peace shall be kept by Christ in an hour of temptation.—Ver. 15. Lukewarmness or indifference in religion is the worst temper in the world. If religion be a real thing, it is the most excellent thing, and therefore we should be in good earnest in it; if it be not a real thing, it is the vilest imposture, and we should be earnest against it.—I will spew thee out of my mouth. As lukewarm water turns the stomach and provokes to a vomit, lukewarm professors turn the heart of Christ against them. . . . They shall be rejected, and finally rejected; far be it from the holy Jesus to return to that which has been thus rejected.—Ver. 17. Here observe what a difference there was between the thoughts that the Laodiceans had of themselves and the thoughts that Christ had of them.—Ver. 19. Sinners ought to take the rebukes of God's word and rod as tokens of His good-will to their souls, and should accordingly repent in good earnest, and turn to Him that smites them.—Ver. 20. Observe, 1. Christ is graciously pleased by His Word and Spirit to come to the door of the heart of sinners. 2. He finds this door shut against Him. 3. When He finds the door shut, He does not immediately withdraw, but He waits to be gracious, even till His head be filled with the dew. 4. He uses all proper means to awaken sinners, and to cause them to open to Him; He calls by His word, and He knocks by the impulses of His Spirit upon their conscience. 5. They who open to Him shall enjoy His presence, to their great comfort and advantage; He will sup with them, He will accept of what is good in them, He will eat His pleasant fruit, and He will bring the best part of the entertainment with Him; He will give fresh supplies of graces and comforts, and thereby stir up fresh actings of faith, and love, and delight.—Ver. 21. It is here implied that notwithstanding the lukewarm and self-confident character of this Church, it was possible that by the reproofs and counsels of Christ they might be inspired with fresh zeal and vigor, and come off conquerors in their spiritual warfare. 2. That if they did so, all former faults should be forgiven, and they should have a great reward.—Those who are conformed to Christ in His trials and victories, shall be conformed to Him in His glory.

FROM THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY: By a frequent Scripture metaphor a person, living in the defilements of this world, and neglectful of preparation for another, is said to be "dead while he liveth," while he who meets death in the discharge of his Christian duty, is pronounced "living though he die," John xi. 25, 26; 1 Tim. v. 6; 1 John iii. 14; Jude 12. (WOODHOUSE.)

BARNES: Chap. ii. 10. Ye shall have tribulation ten days. Affliction in this life, however severe, can be but brief; and in the hope that it will soon end why should we not bear it without murmuring or repining? . . . Be thou faithful unto death, etc. It is true of every one who is a Christian, in whatever manner he is to die, that if he is faithful unto death, a crown of life awaits him.—Ch. iii. 8. It is always well for Christians to call to remembrance the "day of their espousals," and their views and feelings when they gave their hearts to the Saviour, and to compare those views with their present condition, especially if their conversion was marked by any thing unusual.—Thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee. Every man who is warned of the evil of his course, and who refuses or neglects to repent, has reason to believe that God will come suddenly in His wrath and call him to His bar. Prov. xxix. 1.—Ver. 15. I would thou wert hot or cold. Any thing better than this condition, where love is professed, but where it does not exist; where vows have been assumed which are not fulfilled.—Ver. 20. If any one hear My voice. Any one, of any age, and in any land, would be authorized to apply this to himself, and, under the protection of this invitation, to come to the Saviour, and to plead this promise as one that fairly included himself.—Chaps. ii., iii. Though the churches to which these epistles were addressed have long since passed away, yet the principles laid down in them still live, and they are full of admonition to Christians in all ages and all lands.—From TREXCH: Ch. ii. 2: I know thy works. These are words of comfort and strength for all who, amid infinite weakness, are yet able to say, "Search me, O Lord, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts, and see if there be any wicked way in me" (Ps. cxxxix. 23, 24), or with St. John, "Lord, Thou knowest all things, Thou knowest that I love Thee" (John xxi. 17); but words of fear for every one who would fain keep back any thing in his outer or inner life from the Lord.—Ch. iii. 4. Observe the gracious manner in which the Lord recognizes and sets His seal of allowance to the good which any where He finds.—From VAUGHAN: Ch. ii. 10. Christ says to each one of us, Be thou faithful: use well the talent that I have given thee; forget not Who gave it; forget not Who will call for an account of it.—From BONAR: Ch. iii. 7: He that hath the keys of David. The key (1) Of David's house, (2) Of David's castle, (3) Of David's city, (4) Of David's treasure-house, (5) Of David's banqueting-house.—Ver. 20. Note here (1) the love of Christ: in the message as addressed to Laodicea, the unloving and unlovable; (2) the patience of Christ: I stand at the door; (3) the earnestness of Christ: I knock; (4) the appeal of Christ: If any man will hear my voice and open the door; (5) the promise of Christ: I will come in to him and will sup with him, and he with Me.—Ver. 21. We have here—I. The battle; II. The victory; III. The reward. I. The battle: The Christian's life in this world a warfare: (1) Inner warfare; (2) Outer warfare; (3) Daily warfare; (4) Warfare not fought with human arms; (5) Warfare in which we are sharers with Christ. II. The victory: multitudinous as is the battle. Sure through Him Who Himself overcame. Individual. III. The reward: (1) A throne; (2) Christ's throne.]

SECTION FOURTH.

Second Grand Vision. Heaven-picture of the Seals. (Chs. iv., v.)

General.—a. Translation of the Seer to Heaven. A vision within a vision, at the same time denoting a momentary translation into the light of the consummation.—The import of Heaven in the whole of Sacred Writ, from Gen. i. 1 through-out, is at once cosmical and spiritual. Heaven is, so to speak, the plastic symbol of religion, and especially of Christianity. God's Kingdom, a Kingdom of Heaven.

b. The Throne, the Sitter thereon, and His Government. The Throne indescribable. The figure of the Enthroned One is—and justly—not depicted, but only symbolized, approximately, by precious stones, having the hue of light and life.—The rainbow, or the glory of the Godhead, visible, in the chromatic, seven-fold radiance of revelation, to the spirit-world.—The twenty-four Elders on their thrones, or the elect in the lustre of perfect fellowship with God.—The white robes of consummation.—The ground-forms of Divine revelation: Lightnings, voices, thunders; see EXEG. NOTES.—The Seven Spirits of God, under the figure of eternally burning Lamps [Torches], symbols of the eternal living unity of light, life and love.—The glassy sea and the four Life-forms; see EXEG. NOTES.—God's governance under the figure of these Life-forms.—The second doxology (ver. 11) a development of the first (chap. i. 6)—an expression of the ever richer revelation of God.

c. The Sealed Book of the Course of the World. Lamentation and Consolation. The course of the world as a completed book, or the counsel of God. As a sealed book, or the nocturnal gloom of worldly history. As a terrible book, in the apparent impossibility of unsealing it. As a book full of wonders of salvation, destined to be opened by the Lion of Judah in His victory. Christ the Crucified and Risen One, the Opener, Explainer and Transfigurer [Erklärer und Verkürer] of the book with seven seals. The seals of guilt [Schuld=indebtedness to justice], of imputation of guilt, of judgment, of the curse, of death, of the fear of death, and of despair—how Christ looses them and resolves them all into deliverance and mercy, through His redemption. Even the Gospel is to the unenlightened world a dark book of fate, but through the enlightenment which proceeds from Christ, even the dark destiny of the world shall itself become a Gospel.

d. The Lion as the Lamb. The unity of Lion and Lamb, or the absolute victorious power of perfect love and suffering. Divine omnipotence and Divine endurance in their general unity as exhibited in the history of the world, and in their concentrated unity as exhibited in Christ. The Lamb, the centre of all life, (1) of the Throne of God, (2) of the four ground-forms of His governance, (3) of the chosen presbyters of the Old and the New Covenant.—The symbolical appearance of the Lamb, see EXEG. NOTES.—As it had been slain, or the infinite import of the historic phase of Christ and Christianity. Christ has taken the office of solving the riddle of worldly history from the hand of the Father.

e. The Cultus of the Lamb. The third doxology, or the New Song: the type of Christian cultus. An antiphony between the beatified human world and the holy angel-world; a symphony of all good spirits and all creatures, to the praise of the Lamb and the glorification of the all-ruling God.

Special.—[Chs. iv.—v.] The great vision of the Providence of God.—[Chap. iv. 2, 3.] The power of Providence: God on His Throne; [ver. 4.] the aim of Providence: consummation of the spirit-world, represented by the twenty-four Elders; [ver. 5.] operations of Providence: manifestations of the Spirits of God; [ver. 6.] the work of Providence: the glassy sea, the billowy and yet transparent history of the world; [vers. 6-8.] the organs of Providence: the four Life-forms, or ground-forms of the Divine governance; [vers. 8-11.] gloriousness of Providence: its result a continuous doxology; [chap. iv. 1] idea of Providence: the sealed book. [Vers. 2, 3.] Terrors and obscurities of the government of Divine Providence.—[Ver. 4.] The weeping geniuses of humanity.—[Ver. 5.] Weep not. How many times these words appear in the New Testament, like fear not, or be of good cheer, and similar heavenly words of encouragement.—[Vers. 5, 6.] The light and all enlightening centre of Providence: Christ as the Lamb and the Lion.—Christianity, or the Death and Resurrection of Christ in their infinite operation.—The Redemption [Erlösung] as the solving [Lösung] of all riddles of worldly history, of humanity and of the world.—The Elders, appearing, in their attributes, as heirs of perfect communion with God, as the trusted witnesses of His rule.—A Presbytery of God: Christological idea of men who are in affinity with God, and who, through Christ, are elevated into the position of heirs of God—[Vers. 8-14.] Third and completely developed doxology.—Every delineation of the Lion is false, which does not, at the same time, permit the Lamb to be clearly recognized. Every delineation of the Lamb is false, behind which the Lion vanishes. Only the Spirit of Christ can grasp this great contrast as a living unity. As so entirely a unity, that the Lion were not without the Lamb's nature, or the Lamb without the Lion's nature.—How Holy Scripture is reflected in the ideal Books which we meet with in the Apocalypse. There are few essential relations at the basis of the Bible which do not here appear in the form of Books.—The Christian cultus, reposing in its truth upon the heavenly cultus of all beings.—Sacred songs and new songs.—All sacred songs are outgushes of the one celestial New Song.—To the song of praise of creation and providence (ch. iv. 11) is added the song of praise of redemption (ch. v. 9).—The ground-form of worship an antiphony, in which spirits occupying different stand-points exchange their blessed views.—The Amen in the synagogue and in Christian worship.

STARKE: QUESNEL: One who would know the mysteries of Heaven, must be free from earth.—The Elders: This figure here, as in the whole of this vision, is taken from the Temple at Jerusalem, David having instituted twenty-four orders of priests; these held their councils in the outer court of the Temple, the High Priest sitting in the midst upon his seat, and the four and twenty priests or elders sitting in a half-circle around him and before him on their seats. (The Seer has himself, ch. xxi., suggested, as the import of the Elders, the twelve heads of the Tribes of Israel and the twelve Apostles; the appointment of the orders [or courses] of priests, however, is itself connected with the original duodecenary.)—The office of the Elders—nay, of all believers—is to comfort the mourning from God's Word and not to leave them without encouragement (Is. xl. 1). He who would emphatically comfort another, must have sufficient grounds for his consolation to rest upon (John xvi. 33).

THOMAS NEWTON, Dissertations on the Prophecies, London, Dove (p. 528): Most of the best commentators divide the Apocalypse or Revelation into two parts—the book, βιβλίον, sealed with seven seals, and the little book, βιβλαπίδιον, as it is called several times. But it happens, unluckily, that according to their division the lesser book is made to contain as much as, or more than, the larger; whereas, in truth, the little book is nothing more than a part of the sealed book, and is added as a codicil or appendix to it.

DE ROUGE-MONT, La Révélation (see p. 73): Le trône était environné d'un arc-en-ciel, qui avait la couleur de l'émeraude. L'arc-en-ciel est le signe de l'alliance de Dieu avec l'humanité tout entière, issue de Noë, et il annonce ici que les révélationes subséquentes auront pour objet l'histoire future des nations. L'émeraude est verte, et le vert est la couleur de l'espérance.

H. W. RINCK (see p. 73): Die Zeichen der letzten Zeit.—And I wept much, etc. John had a priestly heart, he was a fellow-partaker in the Kingdom of Christ (chap. i. 9); the Kingdom of God was more to him than his life—"If I forget thee, let my right hand be forgotten" (Ps. cxxxvii. 5 [G. V.]) was the key-note of his soul more truly than it was that of the Babylonish captivity;—he longed for the establishment of Jesus' Kingdom on earth more than did Daniel for the re-establishment of Jerusalem and Israel (Dan. ix.). Such being his feelings, we can understand the tears that he wept because none was found worthy to open the Book of the Future.

LITERATURE. ROFFHACK, Schöpfung und Erlösung nach Offenb. 4 u. 5., Barmen, 1866.

[From M. HENRY: Chap. iv. 1. Those who well improve the discoveries they have had of God already, are prepared thereby for more and may expect them.—Vers. 8, 9. Note here the object of adoration: 1. One God, the Lord God Almighty, unchangeable and everlasting; 2. Three Holies in this one God, the Holy Father, the Holy Son, and the Holy Spirit.—Vers. 10, 11. Observe, 1. The Object of worship—the same as in the preceding verses. 2. The acts of adoration: (1.) They fell down before Him that sat on the Throne; they discovered the most profound humility, reverence, and godly fear. (2.) They cast down their crowns, etc.; they gave God the glory of the holiness wherewith He had crowned their souls on earth, and the honor and happiness with which He crowns them in Heaven. (3.) The words of adoration: Thou art worthy, etc.; a tacit acknowledgment that God was exalted far above all blessing and praise; He was worthy to receive glory, but they were not worthy to praise, nor able to do it according to His infinite excellences. 4. The ground and reason of their adoration, which is three-fold: (1.) He is the Creator of all things, the first Cause. (2.) He is the Preserver of all things, and His preservation is a continual creation. (3.) He is the final Cause of all things; for Thy pleasure they are and were created.—Chap. v. 5, 6. Christ is a Lion, to conquer Satan; a Lamb, to satisfy the justice of God.—He appears with the marks of His sufferings upon Him, to show that He intercedes in heaven in the virtue of His satisfaction.—Vers.

8-14. It is just matter of joy to all the world, to see that God does not deal with men in a way of absolute power and strict justice, but in a way of grace and mercy through the Redeemer. He governs the world, not merely as a Creator and Lawgiver, but as our God and Saviour.—Here observe, 1. The object of worship—the Lamb. It is the declared will of God that all men should honor the Son as they honor the Father; for He has the same nature. 2. Posture of the worshippers—they fell down before Him; gave Him not an inferior sort of worship, but the most profound adoration. 3. The instruments used in their adoration—harps and vials; prayer and praise should always go together. 4. The matter of their song. (1.) They acknowledge the infinite fitness and worthiness of the Lord Jesus for the great work of opening the decrees and executing the counsel and purposes of God; Thou art worthy, etc; every way sufficient for the work and deserving of the honor. (2.) They mention the grounds and reasons of this worthiness—Ver. 9. Christ has redeemed His people from the bondage of sin, guilt, and Satan; redeemed them to God; set them at liberty to serve Him and to enjoy Him—Ver. 10. He has highly exalted them: When the elect of God were made slaves by sin and Satan, in every nation of the world, Christ not only purchased their liberty for them, but the highest honor and preferment, making them kings, to rule over their own spirits, and to overcome the world and the evil one; and priests, giving them access to Himself, and liberty to offer up spiritual sacrifices. And they shall reign on the earth; they shall with Him judge the world at the great day.—From THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY: Ch. iv. The Lord Jesus, “having overcome the sharpness of death, hath opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers;” and if we look unto Him by faith, and obediently attend to His voice, whilst He calls us to “set our affections on things above,” we shall, by the teaching of the Holy Spirit, behold the glory of our reconciled God on His “throne of grace;” be encouraged by the engagements of His everlasting covenant, and draw nigh in humble boldness with our worship; notwithstanding the terrors of His justice, and the awful curses of His broken law. (SCOTT.)—Chap. v. 9. Redemption by the blood of Christ (mark it well, O my soul!) is the ground-work of the majestic, triumphant song of praise in heaven; and a disposition to join in it, our chief capacity for, and actual happiness in, time and eternity. (ADAMS.)—From VAUGHAN: Chap. iv. We may learn hence the reality of a heavenly world, and of its concern and connection with this;—facts full of confusion and discomfiture to the worldly and sinners, but of comfort and encouragement to the Christian.]

SECTION FIFTH.

Earth-picture of the Seven Seals. Their opening.
(Ch. vi.)

General.—The course of the world in its totality—considered with reference to its predominantly external and predominantly internal phases. Sublime picture of the Four Riders. The cry, as with a voice of thunder, Come and see! Come and see that Christ, upon the white horse, precedes the three dark riders, that He has dominion over them, and that He has brought them into His service, into the service of His Kingdom. Come and see: the bright fundamental thought of world-history, so dark in respect of its predominant visible aspect. The four Horses, or world-history a course, in eternal onward motion. Each horse has its rider, i. e., its idea; its conduct and tendency, regulated by that idea; its goal and purpose. The main tendency of all, however, is regulated and defined by the tendency of Christ. The group of four Riders may be classified under two heads, viz., Christ or personal Victory, contrasted with impersonal War, the desolator of personal life. For as Christ constitutes the three dark Riders His followers and presses them into His service, so the second Rider may regard the third and fourth as his esquires, War being attended by Dearth, in the first place, and secondly by Pestilence.

1. History of the world in its predominantly human aspect. First Seal. Christ, as the Logos, also the dynamic Force, the fundamental and leading Power of worldly history—a Power victorious in holy suffering. The great Victor in all the wars of worldly history—(1.) He has conquered, (2.) He is conquering, (3.) He will conquer.—Second Seal. War. Its dark side or abnormality. Its light side in the train of Christ. Comp. the author's pamphlet: Vom Krieg und vom Sieg.—Third Seal. Dearth. Terrestrial sufferings. Social sufferings. Wealth and poverty. Usury and pauperism. Care of the poor. Socialistic projects. Infinite increase of pauperism through the luxury of those that are at ease; infinite decrease of it through the plainness and simplicity of Christian sentiment and classical culture.—Fourth Seal. Death. Circumstances of mortality. Pestilences. Poisons. Wild beasts. Suicides. Lust and cruelty in their reciprocal action. Death of children. Offerings to Moloch. Macrobiotic counter-agencies.—2. History of the world in its predominantly spiritual aspect. Fifth Seal. The Martyr-history of the Kingdom, as the kernel of the history of the world: the suffering Christ. The martyrs, beginning with Abel. In respect of human wickedness, slain on the field of the curse, without the sacred camp, on the Place of a Skull; in respect of the Divine counsel, sacrificed on God's altar, buried beneath the altar. Connection of all martyr-sufferings with the holy sacrifice and expiatory sufferings of Christ in the centre. All martyr-sufferings for the sake of God's Word (or for the sake of truth, in the heathen world), cleansed from sin, purified and perfected through the sufferings of Christ. The blood of the heavenly-minded, shed by the earthly-minded, animated by the spirit of intercession, and yet a real historic impulse after justice, demanding recompense. Old Testament martyrologies (Matt. xxiii.). Apostolic martyrologies. Old-Catholic martyrologies. Mediæval Protestant martyrologies. Evangelical martyrologies. The grand history of spiritual martyrdoms. Even John and all like-minded with him, though they died a natural death, are true martyrs. True martyrdom, faithfulness in confession, enduring unto death. Witness as confession. There are none save persecuted confessions—no persecuting ones. Christianity itself a confession. Consolation concerning all martyr suffering, and pacification of all martyrs. Pacification in view of the whole matter: a. The great company of sufferers; b. The Divine counsel concerning the completion of their number; c. Rest in patience and in the hope of perfect retribution; d. The white robes beyond this life, glistening ever clearer in historic lustre even in this present world. The memory of martyrs is revived even through the canonization of their murderers. The terrors of the Inquisition are, from the fact of their becoming more and more an object of detestation to mankind, also a precursory rehabilitation of the slain.—Sixth Seal. The triumphant Christ. Symbolic presages of the Coming of Christ, spiritual and cosmical: the great earthquake. Darkening of the sun and moon (Matt. xxiv.). The sun of the spiritual life veils itself in black; the moon of the natural life becomes as red as blood. The stars of Heaven fall, i. e., our old cosmical system is dissolved. The old Heaven and the old earth-phase (mountains, islands) vanish in the process of metamorphosis. Dissolution of the old social order of things: the kings, etc., are afraid (ver. 15). The Coming of the Lord to judgment; a coming to the terror of all the earthly-minded (ver. 16). The great Day of Wrath (see Zeph.). Its convulsing effect. The great Day of Wrath also, however, the great Day of final Redemption. The Seventh Seal, yet to be opened, the envelope of all those Trumpets calling to conflict and repentance which, as judgments of God, complement and transrupt the course of the world.

Special.—[Ver. 2.] Attributes of the First Rider, or the individual traits in His appearance.—[Ver. 4.] Symbolic traits of the Second Rider; [ver. 5] of the third; [ver. 8] the fourth.—[Ver. 4.] War as a Divine ordinance; to him it was given to take peace from the earth. To him a great sword was given.—[Ver. 5.] Famine or Dearth on earth, a distressful state with which the celestial ones are acquainted (ver. 6), which they modify, limit, and direct.—[Ver. 8.] Death as a judgment; as a judgment transformed into a blessing. The Death of Christ, the death of Death.—Hades also in the service of Christ.—[Vers. 9-11.] The souls of the martyrs: they are all in existence still, and visible to the eye of the Seer.—How their faithfulness to the Word of God and their witness of Jesus were imputed to them as a crime.—Their common character.—As the avengement of blood contains a germ of righteous retribution, so the judgment of God is a great and holy analogue of unholy avengement of blood.—White robes: a favorite image of John; a favorite adornment of the Church.—Wait a little while. Sadness and peace in the consolatory assurance that the sufferers for Christ's sake constitute a great company.—The anxious question of the weak human heart as to how God the All-Ruler, in His holiness which hates evil and in His truth whereby He is the Covenant-God of the pious, can suffer His children, servants, and witnesses to be slain by His enemies—suffer them to be slain for His name's sake, and even make them wait so long for His retribution.—The heavenly answer to this question.—[Ver. 17.] The Day of Wrath, in relation to its appearances in the Scriptures (or as predicted) and in the history of the world (or as presaged).—The Day of Wrath in its effects.

STARKE: The Rider on the white horse is Christ; this is clearly manifest from ch. xix. 11-16. A white horse was held in particular esteem by the heathen; when the kings of Persia wished to sacrifice to the sun, they offered up a white horse to that luminary. It gave prestige to generals to ride before their armies on white horses; victors used white horses in celebrating their triumphs, and the Romans had their triumphal chariots drawn by white horses.—Red is a sign of war; hence the Persians and Lacedaemonians wore red garments when they went to war.—The color of the horse in ver. 5 is indicative of hunger, which makes people look black and parched (Lam. iv. 2, 7, 8).—A balance in his hand. Such as spices were weighed with. Indicative of want is the fact that provisions are not measured, as usual, by the bushel, but weighed by the scale (Lev. xxvi. 26); not the greatest want and famine are indicated, however, for where it is necessary to weigh out grain, there is, indeed, scarcity, but not yet famine.—Χλωρός, pale, sallow, betokens the pale yellow hue of dry and withering herbs and leaves of trees; thus Constantius was called Chlorus, on account of his paleness. Because Death is commonly called pale, and makes men of a clayey hue, yea, turns them to clay, this figure of a pale horse is most appropriate.—On the Fifth Seal. QUEST: The saints pray for the second Coming of Christ just as patriarchs and righteous men of old sighed for His first Coming (Ps. xiv. 7; Luke x. 24).—The expressions relative to the occurrences under this Sixth Seal are taken from Isa. ii. 19-21; xlii. 9, 10; xxiv. 23; xxxiv. 2, 4; Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8; Joel iii. 15, 16; Matt. xxiv. 29; Luke xxi. 25.

The exposition of the Seals is placed by Starke on the Church-historical platform, and the alternative is discussed as to whether the first five Seals are already fulfilled, or whether the fulfillment of all the Seals is still future. Starke gives the grounds for (and therefore, relatively against) each hypothesis.

GRAEBER, Versuch einer historischen Erklärung, etc. (see p. 73): First Seal. A white, shining horse, and he that sat upon it had a bow, and there was given unto him a crown [Kranz=wreath], and he went forth conquering, and that he might (or should) conquer. This first image exhibits to our view not a pagan, but a Christian Victory—to this effect is the super-scription which we must give to this picture. The Rider is himself first described, and then his work is set forth. His work is victory. He went forth conquering and to conquer, i. e., he went from one victory to another. His victory was a triumphal procession through the world. How sublime and how comfortable is it that the first thing revealed to us concerning the government and dominion of Christ on earth, is His victory. His first procedure is victory, and He goes from one victory to another, and ends with victory! According to this, all that He does is victory. He cannot do otherwise than triumph. Fortune changes not under His government, as it does in the wars of earthly kings, nor are His victories purchased at great expense, like those of earthly sovereigns, but He conquers always—absolutely. Whoso in these wars will not suffer himself to be gained over to Christ's side as His friend, is judged as His foe. Every one is conquered—these to enjoy everlasting felicity, those to suffer the penalty of eternal damnation.—The bow (Ps. vii. 12, 13). He is armed, not with the sword, but with the bow, because the short sword puts the combatant in great danger of being wounded himself, whilst the bow, on the other hand, strikes from afar. (What relation does the "sword in His mouth" bear to the "bow in His hand"? The sword is, assuredly, His word; the bow, doubtless, is the operation of His Spirit, in its awakening as well as its judging power.)

POLLOCK, [The Course of Time]. Der Lauf der Zeit, ein Gedicht in zehn Gesängen, übersetzt von Hey. Hamburg, Perthes, 1830. On the Sixth Seal. An attempt to depict the cosmical crisis. ["Meantime the earth gave symptoms of her end; and all the scenery above proclaimed that the great last catastrophe was near. The sun at rising staggered and fell back, etc."] (The idea that in decaying cosmical nature extremes constantly become more sharply prominent, is suggested, but not worked out with sufficient clearness. According to Scripture, moreover, the cosmical convulsion is first perceptible in earthly life.)

VAN OOSTERZEN, De Oorlogsbode (the messenger of war): Tijdsprek in Augustus 1870. 's Graevenhage. On ch. vi. 1-8. The theme: De Oorlog en zijne ellenden, beschouwd in het licht der christelijke Heilsopenbaring. "Op de tweede vraag, wie hem beschikt, dezen rustverstoorder, antwoordt onze tekst veelbeteekenend, dat hem deze macht is gegeven.

On the seven Seals, and particularly the four Riders, there is a variety of special literature. See LILIENTHAL, Archivarius, p. 822. See Introduction, p. 74.—L. HOFACKER, Ueber das weisse Pferd, etc. Tübingen, 1830.—CUNNINGHAM, Dissertation on the Seals, etc. London.

[From M. HENRY: Ver. 16. The wrath of the Lamb. Though Christ be a Lamb, yet He can be angry, even to wrath, and the wrath of the Lamb is exceeding dreadful; for if the Redeemer, that appeases the wrath of God, Himself be our wrathful enemy, ("through our rejection of His atonement,") where shall we have a friend to plead for us? They perish without remedy, who perish by the wrath of the Redeemer.—Ver. 17. As men have their day of opportunity, and their seasons of grace, so God has His day of righteous wrath; and when that day comes, the most stout-hearted sinners will not be able to stand before Him.—From BOHMER: Ver. 10. How long? These words occur frequently in Scripture, and are spoken in various ways: 1. As from man to man; 2. As from man to God; 3. As from God to man. Passing by the first mode of their usage—comp. Job viii. 2; xix. 2; Ps. iv. 2; lxix. 3—we come to the other two. 1. The Words as from man to God; comp. Ps. vi. 8; xlii. 1; xxxv. 17; lxxiv. 10; lxxix. 5; lxxxix. 46; xc. 13; xciv. 8, 4; Hab. i. 2; Rev. vi. 10. In these passages they are the language, (1) Of complaint. Not murmuring or fretting, but what the Psalmist calls "complaining," an expression of weariness under burdens. (2.) Submission. (3.) Inquiry. (4.) Expectation. 2. The words as from God to man; comp. Ex. x. 3; xvi. 28; Josh. xviii. 3; 1 Kings xviii. 21; Ps. lxxxii. 2; Prov. i. 23; vi. 9; Jer. iv. 14. Taking up these words of God as spoken to different classes, we would dwell on the following points: (1.) Long-suffering. It is this that is expressed in the passage in Jeremiah. (2.) Expostulation. How long halt ye between two opinions? (3.) Entreaty. God beseeches man. (4.) Earnestness. (5.) Sorrow. (6.) Upbraiding. (7.) Warning.]

SECTION SIXTH.

Ideal heavenly World-picture of the Seven Penitential Trumpets. (Ch. vii.)

General.—The Invisible Church here and beyond; here, the sealed—militant conquerors; beyond, blessed conquerors. The Sealing, and its doctrinal import (δοκιμή characterized by James as δικαιοσύνη; Rom. v. 4; James ii. 21). The neglect of the distinction between justification and sealing has resulted in a sad obscuration of the evangelic fundamental doctrine of justification, especially in three great theological school-circles. According to the idea of the Apostle James, Abraham was justified, Gen. xv., and sealed, Gen. xxii. Since justification always takes place in a forum of justice, and since there are different sorts of forums (see the Art. by TERSTEGGEN in Herzog's Encyclopädie), James could speak of justification as an imputation of faith as righteousness, and apply the term of δικαιοσύνη to sealing. In the one case, the court of conscience was intended, in the other the forum of the Church was contemplated ("and he was called the friend of God"). See the Lange Com. on James ii. [and on Rom. v.].—The Sealing has reference not solely to the last time, but, through the whole succession of the New Testament time (which is, indeed, in a general sense denominated the last time), to the assurance of saints in face of the temptations of this world. That is, the Sealing in ch. vii. relates to the Trumpets in ch. viii. That which the four Angels are stationed on the four corners of the earth to accomplish—namely, to loose the four winds of the earth, the spirit of the world in all its ground-forms, upon the earth and the sea, to injure them: upon the theocratic Divine institution, or the Church, and upon national life, to purge them through great temptations—this, we repeat, is fulfilled in the judgments of the Trumpets. In reference, however, to these temptations, which shake and imperil the visible Church, the invisible Church is represented as assured—assured, partly through the sealing effected here and partly through the entry of the blessed into the Church Triumphant beyond. When it is declared that the Angels may not loose the winds of temptation until the sealing is consummated, in the priority of the time of the sealing the priority of strength in the sealed is expressed. They are established through the gift of the grace of steadfastness. In chap. xiv. we learn that their approval was conditioned by uprightness, purity, and the avoidance of falsehood, but we must first know that their sealing is entirely a work of grace.—On the import of the four winds from the four corners of the earth, the earth itself, the sea, the trees, the rising of the sun, the injuring, the number 144,000, see the EXEG. NOTES.

We have already demonstrated that the literal interpretation of the twelve Tribes of Israel as having reference to the Jewish nation in the last time, is utterly untenable. The symbolic designation of the chosen servants of God by the name of the spiritual Israel, is, however, sufficient guaranty for the fact that the Apostle has in view the general hope of a restoration of Israel at the same time that he contemplates a more extended class of elect persons. For as the symbolic name of Israel does not exclude believers from the Gentiles, neither does it shut out believing Jews, or the hope that Israel, as a people, will yet exercise faith in their long neglected Messiah. The well-known Judaistic apprehension of the Sealing—discussed by us in the Exegetical Division—bears upon it not only the exegetical stain of gross literalness, but also the blot of dogmatical error, in maintaining that in the end of the times Israel could again possess national prerogatives in the Kingdom of God, when it was precisely on account of its pretensions to such prerogatives in the midst of the ages that the nation incurred rejection.

Furthermore, the architectonics and symmetry of the table of the sealed plead for its symbolical character. The special duodecenary, running through the general duodecenary and multiplied invariably by the monic number 1000, is the ever recurring expression of sacred fullness, sacred completeness. Again, the free arrangement and modification of the list of the twelve Tribes (see EXEG. NOTES) are in favor of this symbolical character; and it is no less supported by the perfect coördination of individual Tribes in respect of the number selected from each. We must here repeat the statement previously made elsewhere, namely, that the selection does not exclude further circles of blessed ones. The same literal exegesis which, on the one hand, so exceptionally favors Judaism, would, on the other hand, inflict most serious detriment upon it if it were proposed to apprehend the text as declaring that many Jews should, in the last times, become believers, but that their number, however, should not exceed 144,000. The sealed are the true stand-holders of the living Church throughout the ages of the Church, the pillars, against which many who are weak lean for support.

This truth is immediately expressed by the second part of the vision, the vision of the innumerable throng of blessed ones. These are characterized by the following items: 1. They form a countless throng; in antithesis to doctrinal particularism. 2. They are from all nations and tribes and peoples and tongues; in antithesis to exegetical particularism, which stamps the Apocalypse with a Judaistic tendency. 3. They are perfected: they stand before the Throne of God and the Lamb, clothed in white robes—the adornment of holiness—and palms—as tokens of victory, peace and festival—in their hands; in antithesis to hierarchic particularism, which treats of an immediate entry into blessedness in conformity with mediæval ideas (confining the privilege to martyrs, monks, priests, ascetics who have built up a holiness of works, and calendar saints). 4. Their cry: The salvation is with our God, etc.;—thoroughly evangelic; it is even a protest against all righteousness of works and doctrine. With our God and the Lamb: in antithesis both to pietistic-exclusive and deistic-exclusive forms of belief. 5. The Amen and the song of praise of the whole angel or spirit world.

The great Heaven-picture of the perfected is accompanied by heavenly instructions concerning the origin of the blessed, their endless train, their character and destiny. Even the faith of a John failed to grasp the origin of these innumerable throngs of blessed ones and the height at which they had arrived. But one of the Elders, to whom the depths of the history of the Kingdom are no secret, vouchsafes him an explanation: He explains (1) whence they have come—viz. out of great tribulation. All come from unknown depths of suffering, of conflict—not simply from visible martyr-sufferings (see Rom. vi.). They have all washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. With the depth of their experience of suffering, corresponds the depth of their experience of salvation: they all recognize and confess the world-reconciling Atonement. But, again, with these depths, corresponds the height of their goal. Thus we have (2) an explanation as to whither they have arrived—viz. before the Throne of God, to a blessed priestly service, after the type of life in the Temple; to the perfect satisfaction of every longing, and to freedom from all heat, after the image of a life of business, toil and wandering (Ps. xlii.); to the full and comfortable discovery of the joyful harvest of the seed of tears, yea, to the discovery of the heavenly pearl to which every tear has turned (see EXEG. NOTES).

Special.—[Ver. 1.] Various forms of the spirit of the world and its temptations.—Temptations as Divine dispensations.—Limited as to time, place and degree.—Their design.—[Vers. 2, 3.] Different moments in the development of salvation—especially sealing.—The awakened may fall; but it is the distinction of the sealed that they have made good their faith in the battle of life, particularly in moments of great sacrifice.—Men in Christ.—[Vers. 4-8.] The heroes of Israel, the heroes of David, as types of God's heroes.—Chosen stones, flowers, animals, men, Christians.—The Twelve Tribes as types of the charisms.—Consecration of a natural gift to a gracious gift, through the gift of the Spirit.—Both gifts are gifts of grace in the broader sense of the term—the first as a gift of unmerited creative favor, the second as a gift of unmerited redemptive salvation.—The Twelve Tribes types of the fullness of the charisms in the Kingdom of God.—The choice of them, a type of the personally and historically chosen.—The number 1,000 as a figure of the continual presence of Christ in His Church through the whole mon.—Comparison of particular characteristic Tribes: Judah and Joseph; Simeon and Levi; Joseph and Benjamin.—[Ver. 9.] The visible and the invisible Church.—The two spheres of the invisible Church, in this world and in the Beyond.—In the visible Church, the visible appearance of the Church may be greatly obscured. If the visible Church becomes invisible as the Church, the invisible Church emerges into visibility. This remark applies to every time, but is particularly true of the last time.—The heavenly Festival of Palms.—[Ver. 10.] The heavenly confession of the blessed.—Their song.—[Vers. 11, 12.] The song of praise of all spirits concerning the consummation of the blessed.—Doxologies of men and angels.—[Ver. 13.] The catechism of John which the Elder institutes, compared with the catechism of Peter (John xxi.).—[Ver. 14.] Humility of the great Apostle as manifested in his answer to the question of the Elder.—The great, eternal, pilgrim and festal procession of blessed souls from earth to the heavenly Home.—[Ver. 15.] The Throne.—Service in the Temple.—The glory of God over them.—Analogous passages: Is. xxv. 4 sqq.; xlix. 10; Pss. xxiii., xci., cxvii.; Is. lxvi. 13.

STARKS: God has numbered His elect, but their number is known to Him alone. If He has counted the hairs of the faithful, He has surely counted their persons.—The same number in each Tribe, when there were some Tribes that were more numerous than others, shows that God bears the same gracious will to all believers, of whatsoever race or people they be. (The text, however, has reference to sealed persons, and the numbers are symbolical.)—Ver. 13. The best and fittest mode of instruction—especially for those who are young and simple—is by question and answer, Gen. iii. 9; Luke ii. 46, 47 (!).

A. H. W. BRANDT, Anleitung zum Lesen der Offenb. Joh. (see p. 78): The sealed. John does not see them even in spirit; much less are they to be seen with the bodily eye in their substantiality on earth. Nevertheless they are a people of God on earth, having His Spirit, and numbered by Him, in the sense of Matt. x. 30. They are described, in prophetic wise, by their Old Testament type, whose names and Tribes are presented not in the single 12, but by  $12 \times 12$ , and multiplied by thousands. It is the true Israel, baptized with the Spirit and consisting of all (?) the servants of God who are born of the Spirit.—Vers. 9-12. And behold! A great multitude. This excites the astonishment of the Seer, which was not the case with the preceding occurrence; he, indeed, did not see the sealed, but this multitude visibly appears in Heaven. (A highly significant contrast. Concerning the sealed on earth he learns only the tribal characters and numbers by an auricular wonder; the blessed, on the other hand, are presented to his contemplation in personal distinctness by an ocular wonder.)

[From M. HENRY: Ver. 8. God has particular care and concern for His own servants in times of temptation and corruption, and He has a way to secure them from the common infection: He first establishes them, and then He tries them; He has the timing of their trials in His own hand.—Ver. 9. Before the throne, and before the Lamb. In acts of religious worship we come nigh to God, and are to conceive ourselves as in His special presence; and we must come to God by Christ; the throne of God would be inaccessible to sinners, were it not for a Mediator.—Vers. 13-17. Here we have a description of the honor and happiness of those who have faithfully served the Lord Jesus Christ, and suffered for Him. Note, 1. The low and desolate state they had formerly been in. The way to heaven lies through many tribulations; but tribulation, how great soever, shall not separate us from the love of God. 2. The means by which they had been prepared for the great honor and happiness they now enjoyed; they had washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. It is not the blood of the martyrs themselves, but the blood of the Lamb, that can wash away sin, and make the soul pure and clean in the sight of God. 3. The blessedness to which they are now advanced, being thus prepared for it. They are happy. (1) In their station, for they are before the throne of God night and day, and He dwells among them; they are in that presence where there is fullness of joy. (2) In their employment, for they serve God continually, without weakness, drowsiness, or weariness; heaven is a state of service, though not of suffering; of rest, but not of sloth; it is a praising, delightful rest. (3) In their freedom from all the inconveniences of this present life; a. From all want, and sense of want; They hunger and thirst no more. b. From all sickness and pain; they shall never be scorched by the heat of the sun any more. 4. In the love and conduct of the Lord Jesus; He shall feed them, He shall lead them to living fountains of waters. (5) In being delivered from all sorrow, or occasion of it; God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.]

SECTION SEVENTH.

The Seven Penitential Trumpets. Earth-picture.
(Chaps. viii. 1—ix. 21.)

General.—Since there is an increase of disagreement in the different expositions of this eighth chapter, and, by consequence, an augmented insecurity attaching to any exposition of it hitherto offered, there is an increased demand for caution in the theoretic and practical application of it.

Many, for instance, consider ch. vii. as an episode, and affirm an immediate connection of ch. viii. with ch. vi. We, on the contrary, regard ch. vii. as the heavenly phase of the Earth-picture which follows it in the vision of the Trumpets. Or, in other words, the Seven Trumpets are a loosing of the four winds from the four corners of the earth, in order to the injury of the Church and national life (earth and sea). In accordance with this view, we have to do altogether with darkenings of the visible Church, with spiritual occurrences presented under cosmical forms. These darkenings are, agreeably to the conditions of the Church, judgments; for individual Christians, they are temptations [or testings]; as dispensations of the Lord, they are admonitions and arousing summonses to repentance and to combat—and, hence, Trumpets.

The silence in Heaven for the space of half an hour denotes that heavenly bracing and arming for which the whole great hour of temptation [chap. iii. 10] gives occasion.

Even the Seven Angels with the Trumpets must restrain themselves and wait for the right moment, like the Four Angels in the preceding chapter. Their waiting has a common purpose with that of the Four Angels. The latter waited for the accomplishment of the Divine work of sealing; the former wait for the consummation of the human prayers of the saints, which correspond with the work of sealing. Thus the spirit of prayer must constitute the Church's defence against the coming temptations. The prayers which ascend from earth must, however, be completed in Heaven. Their purification from earthly passion—i. g., of confessionism or nationalism—is first represented in the form of a supplementing with incense, which an Angel with a golden censer, in which much incense is given him for the heavenly altar of incense, adds to the prayers of the saints. In accordance with Scripture, this figure can be understood solely of the heavenly intercession of the Spirit of Christ. Next the other function of the Angel is represented—the emptying of the censer, previously filled with fire from the altar, upon the earth. This is indicative, without doubt, of the missions of the high-priestly Spirit of Christ from Heaven, the effects of which missions are figuratively represented in voices, thunders, lightnings, and earthquake (see the EXO: NOTES). The two-fold continuance of Christ's work, in His eternal Spirit, consists in a direction towards God in intercession, and a direction towards the Church on earth in the outpourings of His Spirit, accompanied by the glowing coals of His high-priestly temper of love and sacrifice.

The First Four Trumpets (see EXO: NOTES). [Ver. 7.] The first darkening of the Church owes its origin to fanaticism; this appears as a judgment upon the lack of inward devotion and sincerity.—[Vers. 8, 9.] The second great temptation [or trial] is the spread of fanaticism, in which a great mountain, a theocratic, ecclesiastico-political institution, begins to burn and plunges into the sea—Christian national life.—[Vers. 10, 11.] This calls forth the reactions of embitterment—deviations [or dissents], apostasies, indicated by the burning star which falls upon the rivers and fountains.—[Ver. 12.] A result of these three destructive and corruptive agencies, which, with all their contrasts, work together, is the great spiritual diminution of the sunlight of revelation, the moonlight of natural revelation (which, amid all the advances of natural science, may still become obscured), and the light which proceeds from spiritual stars in the Church.

The Last Three Trumpets. These are distinguished from the first four Trumpets and raised above them, primarily in that they are heralded by an Eagle, which flies through the midst of Heaven and proclaims their approach, and secondly by the Eagle's designation of them as three woes upon those who dwell on the earth. We remark here, by way of addition, that the scope of the first woe is accurately defined as the sphere of the Fifth Trumpet (ch. ix. 1-11). No less definite is the determination of the sphere of the second woe as the sphere of the Sixth Trumpet (ch. ix. 12-21). As chs. x. and xi. 1-14 relate to the seven sealed Thunders, and in a sense form a real episode between the Trumpets, it might be as well to regard the second woe under a formal aspect, as closed with ch. ix. 21, as to conceive of it as continued through ch. x.,—in accordance with the material point of view to which we adhered on p. 226, to the adoption of which we were particularly influenced by ch. x. 4. The lack of precision in the construction of this portion of the Apocalypse is owing to the fact that the Apocalyptist was in the main desirous of depicting, under the cycle of the Seven Thunders, only the activity of the Two Witnesses, but found occasion to communicate the issue of their history as well.

From the material point of view, the incipient apostasy, depicted ch. xi. 1-14, certainly forms a supplement to the judgment of the Sixth Trumpet.

The Eagle's cries of Woe upon the dwellers on the earth, are expressive of the fact that the Spirit of prophecy now, in lofty majesty, announces three universal temptations [trials] which are to come upon all men, and which shall be so mighty as to make it manifest from the outset that the majority will fall when exposed to them, whilst the minority, constituted by the sealed, will have to undergo the sorest afflictions and persecutions.

In respect of the Fifth and Sixth Trumpets, we refer to the EXEGETICAL NOTES. Although, for our own part, we regard our view as thoroughly grounded (especially by the circumstances that the locusts of the Fifth Trumpet so torment men as to plunge them in despair, without killing them, and that the fiery horses of the Sixth Trumpet kill men—which must, doubtless, be understood as significant of a spiritual killing), it is requisite that the security of the foundation of this exegesis should be additionally manifested before any superstructure is erected upon it. The founding of homiletical and practical applications upon the traditional Church-historical exposition, i. g., upon the hypothesis that the locusts are Mohammedans and Apollyon the caliphs, and that the horses of the Sixth Trumpet are the second deluge of Mohammedans—the appearance of the Turks (Sander; according to Von Meyer, the locusts denote the mediæval priesthood, the horses being Oriental barbarians in general)—has, like kindred expositions, not such evidence in its favor as evangelical preaching and instruction demand.

Especially noteworthy, in our eyes, is the fundamental thought that the destructive agencies depicted in the Seven Trumpets, are set forth in plastic figures of disturbed nature—in part, of the most horrible unnaturalness. A rain of hail and fire, mingled with blood; a great mountain, plunging, burning, into the sea; a star falling from Heaven, and burning like a torch, poisoning many rivers and fountains; sun, moon, and stars, shorn of a third of their brightness—all consternating images of a disturbance of nature. Under the Fifth Trumpet, however, the most terrific contradictions of nature are exhibited: locusts that eat no green thing, but, on the contrary, sting men after the manner of scorpions; having hair like the hair of women, and teeth like lions' teeth, etc.; these make their appearance as a mere prelude to the fiery horses of the Sixth Trumpet, which seem to drag their riders along with them, which bite with their snake-like tails as with mouths, and vomit from their mouths fire, smoke and brimstone. But not until the Seventh Trumpet is the contradiction of nature consummated in the figures of the Dragon, the Beast, and the Woman who rides upon the Beast. With a master-touch at which we can but marvel, evil is here throughout delineated in extravagant contradictions, as unnaturalness.

Special.—We note only such items as appear to us to be more or less firmly established.—Darkenings of the Church, judgments of God.—The Trumpets of God—Divine judgments upon the unfaithful—as summonses of the faithful to battle, and as calls to awakening and repentance for all.—[Ver. 1.] The silence in Heaven a sign of the great sympathy of the heavenly Church in its foreview of the trials of the Church on earth.—[Vers. 3, 4.] Completion of the prayers of believers by the intercession of Christ in Heaven.—[Ver. 5.] The fire of the health-bringing Spirit, falling from Heaven in order to the vitalizing of the Church, that the fire of judgment may not in the end fall upon her from Heaven.—[Ver. 6.] The series of Trumpets of judgment and repentance, a continual climactic succession, in accordance with the increasing development of mankind.—[Ver. 7.] Fanaticism, a mixture of frost and fire (icy coldness of heart and carnal heat of the imagination), mingled with blood.—[Ver. 8.] What can be understood, in a spiritual sense, by a burning mountain, falling into the sea?—[Vers. 10, 11.] Since Satan has been styled a star, falling from Heaven, we may designate the falling star called Wormwood, apostasy, that has its origin in embitterment.—Intellectual or spiritual rivers, currents and fountains in humanity; their destinations and manifold empoisonment.—[Ver. 12.] Darkening of intellectual or spiritual lights of Christendom, and the sins which must have preceded such darkening.—[Ver. 13.] The Eagle of prophecy.—Warning cry of the Spirit of prophecy, concerning the whole earth.—As a woe-cry, it has reference to the earthly-minded.—The great dispensations of woe upon the earth are, incontrovertibly, great general temptations (no cry of woe was heard at the forthgoing of the three sombre horsemen).—[Ch. ix. 1.] The abyss, as the middle region between Hades and hell.—[Vers. 2-11.] The soul-sufferings of humanity, accompanying its development, through the medium of Christianity, in the sphere of all spiritually unsound life.—Allspiritual manifestations which, by reason of great internal contradictions, assume a monstrous character, judge themselves. They are, however, the means of the spiritual ruin of the blinded individuals who yield themselves up to them. Examples of such contradiction may be given in abundance, and consist, especially, of pretensions to high spiritual life, conjoined with enslaving ordinances (Montanism); pretensions to high Christian sanctity, conjoined with pitiless severity (Novatianism); pretensions to purity from the influence of world and state, conjoined with a system of robbery (Donatism), etc.—[Vers. 13-19.] Manifestations of unnaturalness in the religious and moral world are armies of corruptive and destructive agencies slaying spiritually and, indirectly, also physically.—The horses of corruption and destruction run away with their riders.—[Vers. 20, 21.] Impenitence under the judgments of God, considered under the antithesis of bigotry and the service of sin (see chs. xx. and xxi.). Bigotry and sensuality are prominent features of the most modern forms of corruption.

STARKE: This author gives a singular interpretation of the silence in Heaven as a time immediately succeeding the great judgment and destruction of the Antichristian kingdom, viz. the thousand years (a half hour!). In commenting on the consecutive Trumpets, Starke cites, as usual, two adverse explanations, the one class given by those who regard the Trumpets as fulfilled, the other by those who look upon them as to come.

CHRISTOPH PAULUS, Blicke in die Weissagung, etc. (see p. 73): Only the first judgment at the time of the first Trumpet, and the last at the time of the seventh Vial of Anger are accomplished by hail; they alone, therefore (because hail comes from above?), appear as a result of immediate Divine interference, as an immediate demonstration of Divine power. All the other judgments, from the second to the last, bear the stamp of historical occurrences (?).—Judgment of the fourth Trumpet. No remarkable occurrence on earth, no historical event distinguishes the time of the fourth Trumpet; nothing of importance happens, but a condition is gradually brought about in which the brightness of all Divine authority on earth is obscured: Church, laws and magistrates lose a considerable portion of their reputation and influence.

Literature.—VETTER, Die sieben Posannen, Breslau, 1860 (see p. 75).

[From M. HENRY: Ch. viii. 8 5. Observe, 1. All the saints are a praying people; 2. Times of danger should be praying times, and so should times of great expectation; 3. The prayers of the saints themselves stand in need of the incense and intercession of Christ to make them acceptable and effectual, and there is provision made by Christ to that purpose; 4. The prayers of the saints come up before God in a cloud of incense; no prayer thus recommended was ever denied audience and acceptance; 5. These prayers that were thus accepted in heaven produced great changes upon earth in return to them.—Vers. 7-12. Note, 1. When the gospel is coldly received and not permitted to have its proper effect upon heart and life, it is usually followed by dreadful judgments. 2. God gives warning to men of His judgments before He sends them; He sounds an alarm by the written word, by ministers, by men's own consciences, and by the signs of the times; so that if a people be surprised, it is their own fault. 3. The anger of God against a people makes dreadful work with them; it embitters all their comforts, and makes even life itself bitter and burdensome. 4. God does not in this world stir up all His wrath, but sets bounds to the most terrible judgments. 5. Corruptions of doctrine and worship in the Church are themselves great judgments, and the usual causes and tokens of other judgments.—Ch. ix. 2. The Devil carries on his designs by blinding the eyes of men, by extinguishing light and knowledge, and promoting ignorance and error; he first deceives men, and then destroys them; wretched souls follow him in the dark, or they durst not follow him.—Ver. 16. He Who is the Lord of hosts has vast armies at His command, to serve His own purposes.

[From VAUGHAN: Ch. ix. 2. If men will not have heaven open to them, if they will break off the connection between earth and heaven, they must expect to have that between earth and hell opened.]

SECTION EIGHTH.

Veiled Heaven—Picture of the Seven Thunders. (Ch. x. 1-11.)

General.—Here the mystery of prophecy is raised to a higher power within the mysterious Apocalypse itself. A contrast even is presented consisting in the fact that the Seven Thunders are to be specially sealed (ch. x. 4), whilst the Revelation in general is not to be sealed (ch. xxii. 10). We have already endeavored to explain the motive of this special sealing, and have at the same time set forth the hypothesis that the Seer has in a correspondent exoteric form furnished a sketch of the sealed esoteric contents of the Seven Thunders (ch. xi. 1-14). For Christianity can in no point be absolutely esoteric. It may also safely be assumed, that the elements of the Seven Thunders are to be found in the Apostolic Epistles and even in the Gospels. There is, e. g. (if we regard thunder as the symbol of a spiritual purification of the atmosphere and refreshment of life), an oppugment of orthodoxistic legality in the Epistle of James; a reform of unfree chiliastic externality in the first Epistle of Peter and in both the Epistles to the Thessalonians; libertinism is opposed by the second Epistle of Peter and the Epistle of Jude; the Pauline Epistles reform, in rich gradation, the faith, the Church, Christology, etc.; and beyond them there is yet another Johannine reform of Christian gnosis. John not only knew that the Law, as the first reformation of Israel, was given amid thunder and lightning, that the fiery chariot of Elijah had formed a turning-point between the legal and the Messianico-prophetic period, but he had also himself been present when Christ's prayer for the glorification of His Father's name was answered with a word of assent that sounded like thunder. And it was in harmony with the development of revelation that thunder, which in the Old Testament was a symbol of the Law, should become for the Son of Thunder, under the New Covenant, a symbol of the Gospel and its seven-fold holy evolutions. In respect of the beautiful, elevated and elevating aspect of thunder, even the Scandinavian mythology is in advance of the standpoint of popular terror, so largely occupied in Christendom with regard to this phenomenon (comp. also Sophocles, Edipus at Colonus).

In referring, at this juncture, to our EXBO. NORÆ, it will be understood, as a matter of course, that it is the part of Homiletics to treat the present section of the Seven Thunders with especial caution, although, of course, the phenomena accompanying the voices of the Thunders are not sealed. As to the sealing itself, the expression is to be taken in its broader sense. In a literal sense, written matter is sealed; but here the command is: write not.

Special.—a. [Vers. 2, 3.] The Angel of the End-time. A presage and symbol of the Coming of Christ. 1. His appearance; 2. The little book in his hand relating to the end-time; 3. His dominion and power: his feet planted on the land and the sea; 4. His cry as the roaring of a lion—the awakening call to the awaking seven Thunders. The word of Christ, the eternal source of all spiritual operations in the Church.—b. [Vers. 3-7.] The Seven Thunders as mysterious mediations of the end-time. As sealed mysteries. The more complete their sealing as canonical and doctrinal certainties of prophecy, the more powerful their operation upon the religious presentiment, the feelings, the spirit of prayer. The Seven Thunders in nature (Ps. xxix.), emblems of the Seven Thunders of the Kingdom of God.—The mysteries of Christianity, prefigured by the mysteries of the Theocratic Sanctuary; manifest in the facts and fundamental doctrines of Christianity (1 Tim. iii. 16); mediated by the evangelic form of mystery (Matt. x. 27), by mysteries sacramental, Church-historic (disciplina arcani), especially those pertaining to the mediæval period of Church-history, and by eschatological mysteries.—The sealing of the Thunders, the mystery of mysteries.—The certainty of certainties, or the solemn oath of the Angel concerning the approaching end.—The oaths of God recorded in Holy Writ are Divine assurances which re-echo in the surest certainty of elect human hearts.—How is this to be understood—to wit, that the time of Christ's coming is unknown, that it may, in a chronological sense, still be distant, and yet that it is emphatically near? 1. We are in the midst of a constant, uncheckable movement toward that goal; 2. The movement is continually increasing in rapidity, and the catastrophe of this periodic course will come, at all events, more suddenly than we think. The motives of this catastrophe are to be found in the depths of the religious and moral world (where the carcass, etc.). Every great event has, from time immemorial, taken men by surprise, like a sort of Last Day.—The time of the Seventh Trumpet, the time of the end.—The blessed secrets entrusted to the servants of God, contrasted with the unblest secrets of the children of wickedness.—c. [Vers. 9-11] New and second calling of the Seer.—Command to the Seer to eat the little book. The act itself, and its import. The hearty reception of the prophecy of the last time in its sweet charm and its convulsing and painful effect. (Anguish and terror, especially the terrors of war, not only attack the heart, but are frequently the occasion of cholera-like epidemics.)—The converse orders of the operations of the book, as presented by the Angel and by the Seer. Joy and sorrow, says human feeling; sorrow and joy, says the heavenly Spirit.—Thou must prophecy again, or the commission to publish the tidings of the last time in the midst of the course of the world, as an imminent Divine doom upon the whole world, peoples and kings.

STARKE: The Lion roareth—who shall not fear, examine himself, and truly repent (Amos iii. 8)? He that dwelleth in Heaven may keep silence for a while, but in His own time He shall speak so that both our ears shall tingle (Ps. ii. 5; 1. 21; 1 Sam. iii. 11).—Some commentators think that they (the Seven Thunders) discovered the saddest fortunes of the true Church.—Here, also, Starke presents the antithetic view of “those who regard this as fulfilled” and “those who deem it to be still future."—The Prophets and Apostles did not write down all things that they saw and heard, but only so much as was necessary for us and as the Holy Ghost commanded them to write.—Although the prophetic predictions remain for a time sealed, when the time of their fulfillment and dénouement arrives, all becomes intelligible and manifest (Dan. xii. 9).

JUNG STILLING, Die Siegesgeschichte der christl. Religion in einer gemeinnützigen Erklärung der Offenb. Joh. (Sämmtliche Schriften, Vol. III. Stuttgart, 1835. On ch. x. 1): His countenance shineth like the sun, for He dwells in the light and enlightens all things that He looks upon; since His appearance until now it has been growing brighter and brighter. About His head the rainbow gleams; for He is a Messenger of the Covenant,—a Messenger Who is to proclaim the unveiling of the mystery of God, in which mystery God's covenant with Noah and all His promises are to be fulfilled. He is clothed with a cloud—which is the chariot and travelling apparel of Him Who is to come in the clouds (Rev. i. 7; Dan. vii. 13). And His feet are like pillars of fire; for where He stands, He stands firm; the gates of hell cannot move Him from the spot, and whoso thinks to drive Him away, burns his own fingers. All this is surely to us for the validity of His embassy, for the truth of the little book that He has in His hand, and which John now communicates to us.

RIEMANN, Die Offenb. St. Joh. (see p. 78): Every word of God, as heavenly food from the tree of life, is sweet when we first receive it in faith, but afterwards, though the sweetness does not cease, it becomes bitter also, as a judge of the thoughts and intents of the heart, when the old Adam must sink in death under the sharpness of this two-edged sword: again, this word is doubly sweet when it proclaims the final triumph of Christ over the kingdom of darkness, and yet at the same time it is bitter, for with this proclamation it conjoins lamentation and mourning and woe that sorely come upon the Messianic Church through the last desperate conflict of the prince of darkness with the Kingdom of God.

[FROM THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY: Vers. 9-11. It becomes God's servants to digest in their own souls the messages they bring to others in His name, and to be suitably affected therewith themselves; also, to deliver every message with which they are charged, whether pleasing or unpleasing to men. (M. HENRY.)]

SECTION NINTH.

Exoteric Intimations from the Earth-picture of the Seven Thunders. (Chap. xi. 1-14.)

General.—The remarks made by us in reference to the preceding section, apply with equal force to this. The exegetical foundation is not yet sufficiently sure, clear and firm to warrant the erection of a doctrinal and homiletical superstructure. We must distinguish, here as well as elsewhere, between our own firm conviction and the conventional status of exegesis in the Church, which it is not admissible to leave entirely out of consideration in an official undertaking.

We must, first of all, settle the relation which this section bears to the preceding one. It is not difficult to perceive that the Seven Thunders are recognizable in the procedures of the two Sons of Oil, since fire goes forth from their mouths and they can shut and open Heaven like Elijah.

Another unmistakable fact is that we have here to do with a sketch of those Church-historical circumstances which form a transition to the time of the end.

It is equally certain, furthermore, that in the provision concerning the Temple, vers. 1, 2, we have a picture of the Christian Church, and not a prophecy relating to the Temple at Jerusalem, to be apprehended literally and, in such case, manifested to be erroneous. In regard to the Temple and the subsequent history of the Two Witnesses, as well as the judgment at the close of the section, we refer to the EXEG. NOTES. A cautious treatment of the subject might base itself upon the following fundamental lines: The inner and outer (or invisible and visible) Church (vers. 1, 2); the New Testament order of God's Kingdom in the antithesis of Church and State (vers. 3-7); the grave prospect that the hemming in of Antichristianity will at some future day be done away with (vers. 7-10; 2 Thess. ii.); the certainty that the forms of Church and State, though suffering a temporal extinction, will celebrate their resurrection in the consummation of the Kingdom of God (vers. 11, 12). Finally, the social earthquake connected with the preceding events, which shakes the New Testament City of God of externalized Christian order and, by a precursory judgment, calls many to repentance, whereby such as comply with the call withdraw themselves from the consummate apostasy of the time of the Feast, and are preserved from the final judgment at the Parousia of Christ.

Special.—[Vers. 1, 2.] The Temple arrangements of the Old Covenant, in their symbolical import for the Christian Church. (a) The priestly Sanctuary, which has become one with the Holy of Holies; (b) the Altar; (c) the Worshipers; (d) the outer court of the Gentiles.—Import of the outer court: a figurative testimony (1) against that view which reckons the outer court as forming part of the Sanctuary; (2) against the other idea which denominates the outer court the world, simply.

[Ver. 8.] The two ground-forms of witness concerning Christ in the Christian age: The Churchly communion, and the Christian and humane social morals and manners which it inculcates.—[Ver. 4.] The olive trees, by which the life of the sons of oil, Christians, is, not generated, but mediated.—Olive trees and candlesticks [lamp-stands] at once; i. e., on the one hand, gifted with a source of spiritual life (John iv.), and, on the other, elaborated into a form favorable for the mediation of the Spirit to men.—The whole Christian age, a time of the one Spirit of Christ in the change of different temporal forms. In the main, the olive trees are at the same time candlesticks [lamp-stands], and the candlesticks [lamp-stands] olive trees: i. e., spiritual life and formal organization, knowledge and practice, run together, in parallel development, through the ages. In individual cases, however, the candlestick [lamp-stand] that should stand beside the olive tree is occasionally missing, and still more frequently the candlestick [lamp-stand] lacks the accompaniment of the olive tree.—[Vers. 6, 6.] Competition of the mediæval Church and State in the training of Christian humanity. Their union. Their terrible severity. Their strainings of authority and their gradual loss of the sympathy of Christian popular life.—[Ver. 7.] The Beast out of the abyss as the prelude of Antichristianity or the Beast out of the sea, or how demonic Antichristian dispositions precede the final Antichristian figurations in human characters.—Dying and dead forms of the old order of things (ver. 9).—The Antichristian feasts of the future (ver. 10).—[Vers. 11, 12.] The time of three days and a half, or the time of the apparent downfall of the Kingdom of God, always, at the same time, the time of a glorious exaltation of it.—Prospect of the final fulfillment of all Churchly and Stately foretokens in the unity of a heavenly Kingdom.—[Ver. 18.] The Apocalyptic earthquakes in their grand significance: (1) In their spiritual import; (2) In their social import; (3) In their cosmolical import.—Fall of the external historic City of God.—Twofold effect of the judgments and terrors of God: Many are killed, the rest are affrighted and give glory to God.

STARKE: The true Church should not be judged by its magnitude and visibility, because (just as) the outer court many times surpasses the Temple in length and breadth.—The teachers of the Christian Church must, internally, resemble olive trees, and be filled with the oil of the Holy Spirit, whilst outwardly they must shine as lights, with an irreproachable life.—QUESNEL: When God has used His servants for the sanctification of others, He uses the wicked to purify those servants themselves by suffering and martyrdom.—The world is to be deplored, in that it celebrates its sins with rejoicings, as a public festival.

LÖWE, Weissagung und Geschichte in ihrer Zusammenstimmung (see p. 73): [Ver. 8 sqq.] This twofold number, doubtless, denotes a twofold, Divinely commissioned ministry, but not an external condition; thus there are always in existence some few powerful witnesses—testifying of repentance and faith—of ecclesiastical and secular office and vocation, in order to the support of Christ's spiritual Kingdom in the world.

WILHELM FRIEDRICH RINCK, Apokalyptische Forschungen, Zürich, 1858 (see p. 72): As the Lord sent out His disciples by twos, thus the many witnesses and servants of Christ are here introduced as two messengers (?). Their ministry lasts as long as Jerusalem (the outer court) is trodden down by the Gentiles; the whole time, consequently, from the destruction of Jerusalem to the end of the world.—Two olive trees and two lamp-stands. Oil and lamp-stands belong together.—The city. Neither Jerusalem nor Rome is intended, but an allegorical great city, which lays violent hands on the messengers of God, and even on His own Son. It is impossible that it can be any particular single city when they of the peoples, tribes, tongues and nations are to see the bodies of the slain witnesses. Constance is a part of that great city.*

[From M. HENRY: Ver. 1. Observe, 1. The temple was to be measured; the gospel-church in general; whether it be so built, so constituted, as the gospel rule directs. 2. The altar. That which was the place of the most solemn acts of worship may be put for religious worship in general; whether the Church has the true altars, both as to substance and situation: as to substance, whether they take Christ for their Altar, and lay down all their offerings there; and in situation, whether the Altar be in the holiest; that is, whether they worship God in the Spirit and in truth. 3. The worshippers. Whether they make God's glory their end, and His word their rule, in all their acts of worship; and whether they come to God with suitable affections, and whether their conversation be as becomes the gospel.]

SECTION TENTH.

Heaven-picture of the Manifestation of Antichristianity on Earth. (Ch. xi. 15—xii. 12.)

General.—The present section, and also the subsequent chapters, xii. 18—xiii. 18, are peculiarly adapted to illustrate and confirm the construction of the Apocalypse as presented by us. Our section is not readily intelligible without a definite reference to the subsequent Earth-picture, and the development of Antichristianity brought to view in that picture can be apprehended only as illuminated by our Heaven-picture:—as a judgment foreseen in the counsel of God; as an apparent domination of Antichristianity, completely overruled by the victorious power of Heaven, by the triumph of Christ and the victory of His heroic spirit over Satan in the spirit-sphere.

Here, as elsewhere, the heavenly celebration of victory (ch. xi. 15-19) precedes the earthly judgment (ch. xiii. 1 sqq.). The Woman clothed with the sun, the Divine Congregation of the Kingdom, appears conformably to her heavenly phase, in full splendor (ch. xii. 1-6); high above her fugitive phase, menaced with mortal peril, on earth (ch. xv. 13-17). The true offspring of her heart (ch. xii. 2-5) is a holy counterpart of the wicked False Prophet, who, in the guise of a lamb, comes forth from her terrestrial order, the earth. The great red Dragon who appears in Heaven, the region of spirit, with great seductive power; whose intention it is to destroy the male Son and conquer His spirit-host, but who here makes an utterly fruitless attempt against that Son, Who is caught up to God,—an utterly abortive attack upon Michael and his angels—and is, in consequence, cast down to earth,—subsequently appears on earth as a terrible persecutor of the Woman: he vomits forth his water-floods, i. e., masses of peoples, against her; he wars against her individual children; he incarnates himself, with his seven heads, in the seven-headed Antichrist; he helps the horrid Beast, after it has been wounded to death, to an apparent healing; he institutes, by the semblance of demonic omnipotence, devil worship and blasphemies on earth; he draws the False Prophet, with his delusive works, into his service, and attains, for the time being, to a dominion on earth which is, to all appearance, legally organized through the medium of social symbols.

* [It was at the Council of Constance (A. D. 1414-1418) that Huss and Jerome of Prague, the forerunners of the Reformation, were condemned and martyred.—E. E. C.]

According to the Heaven-picture, the Woman is sheltered in the wilderness, whither she herself has fled, by a place prepared for her by God ("A stronghold sure"), and there finds food and maintenance through her whole trial-time of a thousand two hundred and sixty days and days' works. According to the Earth-picture, the two wings of the great Eagle must be given her for her flight; in the place of refuge to which she has fled, she is sustained through the same period that was before indicated, which, however, is here designated by the ominous number a time, (two) times and a half—whereby a great, sore and apparently endless time of temptation [trial] is expressed, a period which seems to continue even to hopelessness; she is, moreover, oppressed in a twofold manner by the Serpent. To save herself from being drowned and carried away by the water-floods, the sun-woman must accept the aid of the earth, by which acceptance her visible existence is itself made dependent upon the earth; and after the abortive attack upon the kernel of her totality, war is waged against her in the remainder of her seed, her individual children.

The high import of the seventh Trumpet, which continues from now to the seven Vials of Anger or to the judgment, is first expressed by a great celebration in Heaven. There is a sublime paradox in the fact that the beginning of Satan's apparent rule on earth is celebrated in Heaven by great voices saying: The kingdom of the world is become our Lord's and His Christ's, and He shall reign from eternity to eternity. This epoch of heavenly victory is so completely decided with the appearance of Antichristianity that the heavenly Elders can make the festival already one of thanksgiving. There is a grandeur in the intuition or deduction by which they recognize in the very wrath of the nations the forth-breaking of the Divine anger (with its Vials of Anger); in the death-time of those who live in and for this world, a new life-time of the [blessed] dead in the world beyond—the beginning epoch of their restoration, which, in accordance with its nature, brings with it destruction for the destroyers of the earth.

Upon this festal antiphony between the heavenly voices and the thanksgiving of the Elders, follow the opening of the heavenly Temple, and the events connected therewith. The full revelation of Satan is anticipated by the perfect revelation of revelation, if we may thus speak. For those who will see with the Seer, the Temple is opened; the idea of the Kingdom of God becomes generally intelligible; the Ark of His Covenant becomes visible: i. e., the profoundly dark mystery of reconciliation and grace is converted into the clear light of knowledge for all those who see; and the effect of this glorious development of the life of the Church of God cannot fail of supervention; viz., lightnings of particulars of revelation, voices of proclamation, thunders of preaching, earthquakes of mental convulsions, and a great hail storm of fanatical sentiments originating in the commingling of sultry heat and icy cold.

Together with the glory of revelation, the glory of the Congregation of the Kingdom becomes manifest,—the Woman clothed with the sun, in the astral adornment of the terrestrial cosmos.

All the pangs [woes] of earth appear, in connection with the Woman's pangs, as travail-pangs, birth-pangs of the Messiah.

Next appears the enemy, the great red Dragon. He is a union of serpent and swine, "Spottgeburt von Dreck und Feuer," resplendent in the gloomy radiance of his fiery nature and blood-guiltiness; he has seven mock-holy heads instead of the one holy head, and there attaches to him the contradiction of the ten horns of his authority, expressive of the fact that that authority reposes entirely upon the decenary of the world, whilst the crowns upon his seven heads indicate a legal power falsely gained by the semblance of the sacred seven. Not, however, by the lustre of his crowns, but by the terrible lashings of his tail—apparent power—does he cast the third part, or a spiritual third, of the stars, the geniuses of the spirit-world of Heaven, down to earth, into the earthly service of the ecclesiastico-worldly order of things. The frustration of his plans, however, is expressed in a series of defeats: 1. Christ, in the light of eternity, is caught up as the Male into Heaven, to the Throne of God; 2. The Woman is made secure in her place of refuge, and provided for; 3. The Dragon, with his angels, is, by Michael and his angels, precipitated from Heaven to earth, from the sphere of pure spirit of the inner Church to the external Churchly and Stately ordinances; 4. Even in this world an invisible Church Triumphant has been establishing itself, and is as deep and high, as wide and broad, as the perfect joyousness of faith extends in its two fundamental features; faith-righteousness in the Reconciliation, and martyr-faithfulness unto death.

A transition to the Earth-picture is formed by the following thought: The highest weal of the heavenly-minded becomes a woe upon earth and sea, the Hierarchy and popular life.

Special.—Reciprocal action betwixt the development and consummation of the kingdom of darkness, on the one hand, and the Kingdom of God on the other.—[Ch. xi. 17, 18.] Heavenly rejoicing over earth's last time of need.—Judgment of the wrath of God in the wrath of the nations.—The end-time, a joyful celebration of the justification of all God's witnesses.—[Ver. 19.] Transfiguration of the whole revelation of salvation in knowledge and life: a sure hope of Christendom.—Great effects of this ever more manifest revelation, [Ch. 12,] ver. 10.—[Ch. xii. 1.] The Woman clothed with the sun, or the glory of the eternal Congregation of God's Kingdom.—[Ver. 2.] Birth-pangs of the Church of God: 1. The Martyrs of Israel; 2. Christ, the Great Martyr; 3. The Martyrs of the Christian Church.—Christ, even as the universal, eternal Christ, issues from the travail-pangs of the Church of God in Time.—All the sufferings of this present time are not to be compared with the eternal glory.—[Vers. 8, 4.] The doctrine of Satan, perfected in the Apocalypse. The great red Dragon (1) as a figurative representation of Satan; (2) of Satanic or demonic evil; (3) of evil in general. Unbelief has advanced from a denial of Satan to a denial of Satanic evil; from the denial of the latter to a denial of evil in general. The knowledge of faith must advance through a deeper-going doctrine of evil to an apprehension of Satanic evil, and through the latter to an insight into Divine revelation relative to the existence of Satan and his kingdom.—Evil in the figure of the Dragon: 1. Absolute hideousness, the Dragon, the monstrous shape, in its hypocritical pretension to beauty, in the pomp of fiery red, and with its seven crowns; 2. Absolute falsehood in the contradiction of horns and crowns, with its hypocritical pretension to holy intelligence in its seven heads; 3. Absolute badness in its conduct toward the “stars” or spirits of Heaven, toward God and Christ, toward the Woman and the destiny of humanity, with the hypocritical pretension to the founding of a free spirit-kingdom (of fallen stars).—Satanic evil, or conscious enmity to God and Christ.—Satan and his kingdom. The doctrine respecting these has, by reason of the medieval classifications of it, which, in manifold ways, continued to obtain even in Protestant orthodoxy after the Reformation, called forth a reaction similar to that induced by the gross enhancement of the doctrine of election, by the fearful exaggeration of the power of excommunication, of Church discipline, clerical authority and letter-faith. This doctrine has hence become a difficult, and, more or less, an esoteric, subject for homiletics. It, nevertheless, must not be dropped, and still less should it be denied; its true treatment, however, is conditioned (1) by a prominent setting forth of that spirit-world which pervades the universe; (2) by the maintenance of the fact that the origin of sin consists not in animal sensuality, but in a spiritual abuse of liberty; that a fall of spirits is assumable neither as having taken place on our earth alone nor throughout the universe; and that from the earthly fall of spirits, we are, according to Scripture, to infer a previous fall of spirits, forming the centre and back-ground of the evil of this world.

The scattered manifestations of evil on earth, notwithstanding their plurality, constitute, in their opposition to the Kingdom of God, a unitous power as the Kingdom of Darkness. A unitous power against the Kingdom of God they are, but not a united power in themselves, as is evident from the monster with the seven heads.—Antitheocratic manifestations in the Old Testament as foreshadowings of Antichristian manifestations in the New Testament and in Church history.—Satan's work in the invisible world becomes manifest here in Antichristian facts, and must be brought to view by means of these.—The enemy of man, according to John viii. 44, as a seducer (to spiritual pride, Gen. iii.; to fanatical fleshly lust, Num. xxv., etc.); as an accuser (Job).—Types of Antichrist: Balaam; Goliath; Abithophel; Antiochus Epiphanes; Judas.—[Ver. 5.] Satan's plot for the destruction of Christ defeated by Christ's resurrection and ascension.—[Ver. 7.] The battle between light and darkness on earth is, in its decisive centre, a conflict of spirits in the spirit-realm (see Comm. on John, ch. xiii. 81).—[Ver.

9.] The casting of Satan out of the pure sphere of the Christian spirit into the sphere of earthly ordinances, (a) in the life of Jesus (Matt. iv.; Luke x. 18; John, I. c.); (b) in the sphere of the Church through the medium of the Spirit of Christ.—Song of triumph over the accuser, ver. 10 (see EXEG. NOTES).

STARKE (LÖSCHEK): “It is a noteworthy circumstance that there is here (ch. xi., vers. 15, 16) no mention of the four Beasts, which elsewhere throughout the Book precede the Elders in praising and thanking God (ch. v. 14; vii. 11). The reason of this seems to be that at this time the true public ministry of preaching, represented by the four Beasts (?), will be suppressed to such a degree as to be neither visible nor appreciable any more.” (A little problem lies before us, but the solution offered is a failure. Possibly the four Life forms [Living-beings] are omitted because they denote the fundamental forms of the Divine Governance in the economy of salvation, whilst here an exercise of judicial power is celebrated.)—Ver. 19. And there occurred lightnings and voices and thunders: the promulgation of the Law and the Gospel was set in motion again.—And an earthquake: great commotions arose.—And a great hail: with this, the judgments of God burst upon the Antichristian kingdom. [And the Temple, etc.] The things concerning which there has been so much strife shall be clearly shown and known—to wit, the Person, nature and attributes of Christ, the satisfaction made by Him, the whole nature of the covenant of grace and of Christ's Kingdom on earth. After the offence has been taken away, God will yet give to all nations on earth free access to His Church and Throne of Grace.—(Ch. xii. 3. “Dragons are said to be the largest of all serpents and beasts, some of them attaining the length of forty or fifty cubits. Alexander the Great is said to have had one shown him that was five hundred feet long.”)—Ver. 4. And his tail, wherein were his greatest power and cunning, drew, subdued by cruelty, torture, artifice, flattery, the third part of the stars, a great part of the teachers of mankind.—Ver. 11. This is the wondrous victory of Christians—to conquer through tribulation and death, to gain in losing (Rom. viii. 37).—QUENNEL: The nearer we come to the end, the more earnestly does the devil strive to ruin us, and the more ought we to watch, pray and work.

N. VON BRUNN, Blicke eines alten Knechts, der auf seinen Herrn wartet, in die Offenbarung, etc. (see p. 78): To us mortals, because of the limitations of our vision, much appears as in process of coming to pass, which, by celestial spirits, with sight unhindered by a veil of flesh, is seen to be already accomplished. (The Church-historical system of interpretation is pursued in this work. The practical remarks are significant and edifying.)

GRANBER (see above): “The positions of Hengstenberg are as untenable with regard to ch. xi. 19 as in relation to ch. viii. 1. Suppose, for instance, that the Revelation really definitively closed here, which, according to Hengstenberg, is assumable. What! is the entire development of God's Kingdom on earth to close with a ‘great hail!’—The wilderness (ch. xii.). Thus says Thomas à Kempis: 'If thou wouldest know and learn somewhat that will be useful and profitable to thee, learn what so few know or are able to do—to be willing to be unknown and to be accounted as nought.' The wilderness, then, is self-renunciation; not simply barrenness, want, poverty, or the concealment of the Kingdom of God in the Middle Ages.) The Lord withdraws His people from the turmoil of the world: a Moses He buries, as it were, for forty years in the wilderness with Jethro; an Elijah He conceals by the brook Cherith, and entombs a Luther in the narrow cell of a cloister, etc."

[From M. HENRY: Ch. xii. 10. The accuser, etc. Though Satan hates God's presence, yet he is willing to appear there, to accuse the people of God. Let us therefore take heed that we give him no cause of accusation against us; and that when we have sinned, we presently go in before the Lord, and accuse and condemn ourselves, and commit our cause to Christ as our Advocate.—Ver. 11. The servants of God overcame Satan, 1. By the blood of the Lamb, as the meritorious cause, Christ by dying destroyed him that hath the power of death, that is, the Devil. 2. By the word of their testimony, as the great instrument of war; the word of the Spirit, which is the word of God; by a resolute, powerful preaching of the everlasting gospel, which is mighty, through God, to pull down strongholds; by their courage and patience in sufferings; they loved not their lives unto the death, when the love of life stood in competition with their loyalty to Christ; they loved not their lives so well, but they could give them up to death, could lay them down in Christ's cause.—From BARNES: Ch. xi. 15. A time is to come when, in the proper sense of the term, God is to reign on the earth; when His kingdom is to be universal; when His laws shall be everywhere recognized as binding; when all idolatry shall come to an end; and when the understandings and the hearts of men everywhere shall bow to His authority.—From VAUGHAN: Ch. xii. 11. The three weapons by which the Christian victory is won: The atonement made for all sin in the death of Christ; the word or message of God, to which all true Christians bear in act and in endurance a firm and intelligible testimony; and that spirit of entire self-devotion and self-surrender which perseveres even unto death, and stops not short (if God so require) of the sacrifice of life itself for Christ.]

SECTION ELEVENTH.

Earth-picture of Antichristianity. (Chap. xii. 18—xiii. 18.)

General.—The climax manifest in the development of Antichristianity on earth, is signalized by the names: the Dragon, Antichrist, and the False Prophet, added to which, as a sort of supplement, is the dominant Antichristian congregation, with its Antichristian symbols of fellowship.

At first, the Dragon has no conscious organs on earth; he does but vomit forth the water-floods, as will-less or unfree masses of peoples, against the Woman, to cause her to be carried away. Nor can he, after this attempt, at first do more than direct his temptations, in single demonic attacks, against individual believers or isolated communities.

Subsequently, however, he procures a conscious human organ: the Beast which rises out of the sea of national life, and in which he himself vanishes for a long time. In Antichristianity, which is at first a fellowship of Antichristian sympathies, but which finally becomes personal in geniuses of wickedness who attain their meridian in the Man of Sin, the Satanic essence is reflected in heightened potency. It appears as the consummate compound of all demonic and antitheocratic world-powers, or the four Danielic Beasts. The names of blasphemy, visible on its head, must, doubtless, be regarded as indirect blasphemies; it assumes many attributes of a blasphemous nature, e. g. absolute authority as a ruler and teacher, and the like. With these names are also connected the direct blasphemies which are providentially permitted him by the gift of the mouth speaking great things and blasphemies; aye, which must aid in the execution of judgment upon God-estranged Christendom. That, however, which is in the highest degree conducive to the dominion of Antichristianity, is the apparent perfect revival of it in its ungodly, worldly essence, after the mortal wound dealt to it by Christianity in one of its heads (in a special world-power).

Thus are the outward victory of the kingdom of darkness over the saints, and its temporary public rule over the nations, brought about; assuredly, under forms of subtle worldly refinement and by means of the sympathy of infatuated millions. Nor is the devil-worship which is established in the same manner to be regarded as a rude shamanism. The whole submission and homage of the nations arise from a cowardly recognition of the apparently invincible power of falsehood, hate and violence.

Violence exercised in the sphere of religion shall, however, meet its judgment; and the more consummate will be that judgment, the more thoroughly the faithful learn, themselves to abstain from all violence contrary to the dictates of conscience and the provisions of justice.

Antichristianity attains its full power, however, only through the medium of the False Prophet, who, at all events as such, proceeds from the Church in its external constitution. That he does not conduct the entire institution over to the hostile camp, is evident from the subsequent fact that the Harlot is killed by the Beast; nevertheless, he denotes the true essence of its worldly spirit, the turning-point, subsequent to the appearance of which the familiar relationship between the Woman and the Beast, in which the Beast was at first subservient to the Woman, changes its character, and the Woman is brought into subjection to the Beast. We are thus furnished with a picture of the most disgraceful apostasy, first appearing in back-sliding sympathies, next exhibited in prominent examples of defection, and finally reaching its climax in a perfect genius of perfidy.

The consummate hypocrite then establishes the consummate Antichristian congregation, which exhibits the complete counterpart of the true Church, in that it, like the true Church, has its wonders of revelation, its symbolic cultus, its symbolic marks, and its ban of excommunication. Its wonders of revelation, however, are delusions; its cultus is a worship of the Beast's Image; its marks are brands of spiritual slavery; and its ban is more than the great ban—it is a social outlawry of the faithful.

The very mark, however, by which the Antichristian is to be recognized, presupposes the continuance of a quiet Church of God in this troublous time, for the benefit of whose members the mark is designed.

Special.—[Chap. xii.] The Beast and the False Prophet, or the relations, antipathies and sympathies between the secular and the spiritual Babylon.—[Chap. xii. 13.] The Satanic power, the woe-engendering spirit on earth. Also in the domain of the symbolic earth, the institution and order of Church and State.—The spirit of the kingdom of darkness, a spirit of persecution.—[Ver. 14.] The safety of God's Church on earth, ensured by the wildernesses of poverty and renunciation.—Holy dwellers in the wilderness: Moses, Elijah, John the Baptist, Christ.—Churches of the wilderness.—The blossoming wilderness.—Borne away on eagles' wings from the persecutors of earth: 1. Israel; 2. The Christian Church; 3. All believing souls.—Preservation and nourishment of the Church even through times of sorest distress.—[Ver. 15.] And the serpent cast out of his mouth, etc. The dragon now becomes a serpent, and again the serpent becomes a dragon.—The river [water as a river] in its symbolical import, in respect of its bright and its dark side.—[Ver. 16.] The earth under the same aspects.—Historic dependence of the Church on the earth. Her apparent mergement in the earth. Her solicitude for the earth.—[Ver. 17.] Isolated temptations [trials] of the true children of the Church and witnesses of Jesus. By isolated attacks, it is true, the power of faith is divided, but so, likewise, is the power of evil.—Satan seeks Christians. But for what reason?—[Chap. xiii. 1.] The Beast out of the sea. His dark intent. His horrible and monstrous appearance. His business (the bringing into vogue of a worship of the Dragon, blasphemy against the Holy One and holy things, and the conquest of holy men [the saints]). His history. His success.—His blasphemy, (a) indirect, (b) direct. Against (1) the Name of God, (2) His Tabernacle, (3) them that dwell in Heaven (see EXO. NOTES).—The great world-monarchies depicted, as regards their bright side, in the human figure of Dan. ii.; as regards their dark side, in the bestial figures of Dan. vii.—Concentration of all ungodly and antidogmatic principles in the last Antichristian world-power.—The nature of the Wild-beast, nay, of consummate bestiality, in the semblance of, and with the claim to, consummate civilization. The Beast in the antithesis of (1) sensuality and blood-thirstiness; (2) stupidity and an absolute lack of appreciation of the Divine, and deviceful animal cunning; (3) a lust for prey and an impulse to destruction.—The Apocalyptic Beast, in its elegant, spotted body resembling the leopard; in its heavy and clumsy paws resembling the bear; in its heads, horns and crowns perfect monstrosity and deformity.—In what respect may we speak of a conquest of the saints by the Beast, and in what respect is the expression an improper one?—Universalism, or the international power of Antichristianity.—Devil-worship in its gross, subtle and extra-subtle forms.—The heavenly Book of Life.—Watchword of the Church of God under the persecutions of this world (ver. 10).—[Vers. 11-17.] The False Prophet: 1. His types in Holy Writ; 2. His examples in Church History; 3. His fundamental traits at all times.—Apostasy is a twofold hypocrisy, just as hypocrisy is a twofold apostasy (perfidy at once toward Heaven and hell).—Hypocrisy, the mother of apostasy.—Perfidy, or specific depravity, the brand of apostasy.—Distinction between sinners who are only wicked [Böse] and those who are depraved [Schlechte].—Satan, because he finds his tools in the depraved, calumniate all men as depraved, but in this supposition he is put to shame (see Job; Zech. iii.; Matt. iv.).—All tyrants are put to shame when they make the assumption that humanity is rotten and depraved at the core.—God has placed a rock in the midst of the way of worldly history upon which all godlessness must be confounded.—The mock character and work of the apostate. His mock-holiness (like the Lamb); his mock-miracles; his mock-cultus; his mock-church.—Horrid picture of the church of Satan.—Horrible opposites in the nature of evil: in the nature of the Beast; in the nature of the False Prophet; in the nature of the Antichristian community.—Outlawry of believers in the time of the perfect dominion of unbelief: (1) subtle; (2) universal.—[Ver. 18.] The mysterious number. Taken as a riddle, it is infinitely obscure (the most diverse interpretations of it have been given). Taken as a symbol, it is clear enough. The Antichristian signature of a life full of endless, vain and frustrated plots, toils, malignities and intrigues.—The mysterious description of the Beast, a great warning for faith—not a great problem for curious investigation.—The grand combinations of the hellish spirit are always confounded by reason of one mistake in his calculation: 1. He holds all to be as depraved as himself; 2. He says: there is no God (Psalm xiv. 1), and he regards the holy and excellent ones that are on earth (Ps. xvi. 8) as chimeras.

STARKE, CRAMER: God has many ways and means of preserving His Church, and can quickly give her wings, that she may easily escape the malice of tyrants—for the Church is to endure forever.—However long or short a space the tribulation of God's faithful ones is to continue, God has beforehand decreed and meted it out.—Ver. 16 (Ps. cxxiv. 1-5). This style of expression is drawn from the natural shutting up of waters in the earth (Ps. xciii. 3, 4).—QUESSEL: No one who is of the true seed of the Church escapes the temptation and persecution of Satan (2 Tim. iii. 11, 12).—A worldly kingdom is called a Beast because its government is often conducted with bestial irrationality, tyranny, unrighteous violence and brutish lusts (Dan. vii. 4, 23).—Worldly kingdoms are subject to many and great vicissitudes, for God setteth up and removeth kings (Dan. ii. 21; v. 25-28).—As lions are of great courage, and very strong and cruel, so the kings of Assyria and Babylon were very haughty, powerful and cruel. As bears are indeed very fierce, and yet have something in common with men, in that they eat all sorts of food, and are especially fond of honey, and can be tamed so that they will dance to our music, so certain kings of Persia were very cruel, whilst others, again, were very amiable toward the people of God. As leopards are spotted, wily and swift, thus was the Grecian monarchy (ch. xiii. 2).—The Spirit of God speaks in His children, the spirit of the devil speaks, likewise, in his members.—The multitude and high position of those who profess a false religion do not convert error into truth.—The patience of believers in their affliction is their great crown.—The shape of a lamb and the heart of a dragon.—As the Egyptian sorcerers counterfeited some miracles, etc.—False religions are set up by violence and cruelty; the Gospel, by humility and patience. We should bear in our bodies the mark of Christ, but not that of the beast (Gal. vi. 17).—The Antichrist practices two kinds of violence; he deprives true believers of life and (or) of freedom, which is as dear as life.—As the Beast is not some individual person, but a fellowship of men, so the name of the Beast cannot be the name of a prince, etc. The name Adonikam would be quite suitable for Antichrist (Ezra ii. 13, etc.), since there were 666 of the family of Adonikam that returned out of captivity to their own land. (It is doubtless from this source, or from the still earlier one of Vitringa, that Hengstenberg derived his explanation.)—True wisdom consists in knowing how to distinguish the Spirit of God from the spirit of darkness.

LEMMERT, Babel, das Thier und der falsche Prophet (see p. 74): Chap. xiii. 1-7. After John has seen the pure Church of God and the Dragon which persecutes her, he is made to behold the Beast out of the sea, the Dragon's representative on earth. This connection obliges us to revert to ch. xii.

H. W. RINCK, Die Lehre der Heiligen Schrift vom Antichrist (see p. 73): Interesting communications and dissertations on the subject of the spiritists [Spiritisten]. The False Prophet is here regarded as the representative of false science, and is distinguished and separated from the great Harlot Babylon.

SECTION TWELFTH.

Heavenly World-picture of the Seven Vials of Anger, or the Judgment of Anger in its General Form (embracing the Three Special Judgments upon Babylon, the Beast and Satan.) (Chs. xiv., xv.)

General.—The peculiar sublimity of this section is thoroughly manifest only when it is regarded as representative of the heavenly celebration of God's anger-judgments on earth, and when its relation to these is recognized in the treatment of it. The dreadful darkness of these judgments, as they here appear, is pure light above,—aye, it is there resolved into festal radiance. Above, the measures of Divine anger, ruling, as a holy anger of united love and righteousness, over the wrath of the heathen [nations], and, by its ruling, conducting the latter to the judgment of self-annihilation, are recognized and magnified, in their holiness and gloriousness, to the glory of God and the Lamb.

In the foreground of the whole festal scene stands the Lamb, on the Mount Zion, surrounded by the 144,000 elect, who represent the Church Triumphant. Herein two grand ideas are involved. On the one hand, the Lamb has lifted His heavenly Congregation high above the sphere of anger; and, on the other hand, it is the very righteousness and privilege of the Lamb and His companions by which the wrath of the heathen [nations] is excited, and the holy anger of God at that wrath is superinduced. Here lies the causality of the Vials of Anger.

Next follows a description of the perfect heavenly consciousness of the necessity for these judgments, as well as of the ideal import of them—that at the right time they must needs come as the harvest of the earth, now that the earth is ripe for harvest,—ripe for a judgment which will be the final redemption, in virtue of its separation betwixt the wheat and the chaff. This entire description is presented in the form of a grand transaction between six Angels, three of whom are charged with the proclamation of the judgment, whilst the three others have the symbolic execution of it. The two divisions are separated by an intervening voice from Heaven, declaratory of the blessedness of the dead who die in the Lord. The first herald of the judgment proclaims throughout the universe that the imminent judgment will be an eternal Gospel, a Gospel of eternity, for all who give glory to God. As a death-judgment, the judgment is divided into two sections, the first consisting of the judgment upon Babylon the Great, and the second composed of the judgment upon the Beast and its worshippers. These two judgments form two sides of the one general judgment (vers. 19, 20). The transactions of the three executive Angels likewise fall into two divisions. At the head of the three executive Angels appears the seventh, or rather the first, figure of the entire group, the Man on the white cloud, or the Lamb, again, in another form. As the Father has reserved to Himself the time and the hour of the final judgment, an Angel represents this reservation on the part of the Father, by summoning the One on the cloud to the harvest of the earth. Christ casts His sickle upon the earth, and thus ensues the harvest in the truest sense of the term—the harvest of redemption, of the redeemed. This is followed by the harvest of anger. Thus is unfolded the perfect heavenly consciousness concerning the idea, the purpose, the time and the hour of the judgment of anger.

Next follows Act the Third, the representation of the holy order of the judgment of anger, and its sacred heavenly measures. The Divine clemency which characterizes the judgment itself is expressed first by the fact that it is septenariouly divided; secondly, by the execution of the judicial decrees by seven Angels of God; and, thirdly, by the circumstance that the result of the judgment once more appears,—the crystal sea, the eternal, new humanity,—and that this result is celebrated by a song, in which the song of Moses, or the song of anger, and the song of the Lamb, or the song of love, are united. Worthy of special prominence is the further fact that the Angels go forth from the Temple of the tabernacle of the witness, and thus accord with the ideality of the Divine Law—a truth which is likewise expressed in their holy adornment [clothed in pure and white linen], and in the committal to them of the dispensation of the Divine anger in golden vials—in heavenly measures, determined by Divine faithfulness (see EXO. NORRIS).

Special.—[Chs. xiv., xv.] Pre-celebration of the anger-judgment in Heaven.—[Ch. xiv. 1-5.] The Church Triumphant: (a) Her stand-point, (b) her centre, (c) her characteristics, (d) her song.—Relation of the 144,000 triumphant ones to the 144,000 sealed ones (ch. vii.).—The end-judgment as the harvest of the earth.—The new song: (1) its newness, (2) its melodies, (3) the singers, (4) the hearers.—[Ver. 6.] The eternal [everlasting] Gospel as the Gospel of eternity. Or as the eschatological phase of the one principal Gospel.—[Ver. 8.] Pre-celebration, in Heaven, of the judgment upon Babylon.—[Vers. 9-11.] Pre-celebration of the judgment upon Antichristianity.—[Ver. 12.] The patience of the saints, (1) as endurance in persecution, (2) as forbearance from persecution.—Great warning against Antichristianity (vers. 9-11).—[Ver. 13.] Blessed are the dead, etc., or the heavenly peace-bell, pealing amid the thunders of judgment.—[Vers. 14-20.] God's double harvest on earth: 1. The proper harvest (the sickle); 2. The improper harvest (the wine-press).—Ch. xv. The heavenly equipment of the seven Angels of Anger in its grand significance: 1. What they effect (ver. 2); 2. What they glorify (ver. 8); 3. What they bring about (ver. 4).—[Ver. 6.] Forth-going of the judgments of God out of His Temple.—The judgments of God in their beauteous heavenly aspect (vers. 6, 7).—[Ver. 8.] Sublime veiling of the majesty of God during the time of His judgments on earth, and the import of that veiling.

STARKE (Chap. xiv.): Christ stands in the midst of His Church, over against Antichristian abominations and cruelties, as a Conqueror (Ps. c. 2), and is ready to help His people (Acts vii. 56).—CRAMER: The holy Christian Church is not founded upon the sand, but upon a mountain (Ps. lxxviii. 16), aye, firmer than the seven mountains on which the great city lies (ch. xvii. 9).—Ver. 2. This is to be understood of the true confessors of the Church's doctrine, in which doctrine they, in reference to the corruption of the spiritual Babylon, are emphatic and unanimous. Hence there is ascribed to them a voice of great waters, because with their doctrines they instituted many movements; a voice of a great thunder, which penetrates and shakes all things, indicates the mighty preaching of the Gospel, Mark iii. 17; and a voice of harmonious music teaches that all their doctrines beautifully harmonized in Christ, Col. iii. 16. (All this is, indeed, not yet fulfilled in Protestant theology or the ecclesiastical structures of the Reformation, so far as their outward form is concerned.) This picture is drawn from the service of the Levites in the Old Testament (Ps. cxxxiv.).—Ver. 3. It sounded entirely new (as when we hear a new and unknown song, set to a strange and unaccustomed tune), because the faithful bring it with new hearts, and because it tells of new benefits, etc.—It is called new in antithesis to the old.—God's praise must be sung in the Church.—He who would sing the Gospel song aright, must have a new heart and must have his face set toward God and His Throne.—Ver. 6. The Angel with the everlasting Gospel. Those who regard this as fulfilled, explain it as follows: This has reference to a remarkable teacher who should reform the Church and purify it in the time of Antichrist; by this Angel, Luther and his associates, who began the Reformation, are intended. Those who regard it as future, explain as follows: The voices of these three Angels pertain to the very last time, etc.—Ver. 8. This expression is taken from the philters or love-potions of abandoned women, etc.—Ver. 9. This proves clearly that the Beast cannot be the Harlot, or the Papacy.—Ver. 13. The ancients carefully distinguished between dying for the Lord and dying in the Lord; the former is peculiar to martyrs, the latter is common to all true Christians. (The distinction, becomes false, however, so soon as it is pressed.)—The voice of the Lord which gives command to write, also commands men to read.—The tears which flow at the departure of pious persons may be wiped away by the diligent contemplation of the bliss to which they have attained.—The Holy Scriptures know of no purgatorial fires; those who have died in the Lord they place, immediately upon their death, in Heaven.—Ver. 15. And another Angel. Some understand, by this other Angel, the Holy Ghost, Who is sent into the hearts of men and, with strong crying, makes the distress of the faithful known unto Christ.—Ver. 18. Some regard the Angel mentioned here, as the Holy Ghost.—Ver. 20. In the grain harvest there is no sign of anger, but, on the contrary, there is mercy in it, for believers who have remained faithful to Jesus under the domination of the Beast, are then gathered into God's garner because the judgment upon the wicked is at hand (Matt. xiii. 30). The vintage is a harvest of anger, for there is express mention of anger in this connection (ver. 19).—Chap. xv. 8. Some apprehend the song of Moses as the Law and the song of the Lamb as the Gospel (in contra-distinction to those who regard the song of Moses as the song of the physical redemption, by means of the passage through the Red Sea, and the song of the Lamb as the song of the spiritual redemption from the spiritual Egypt). True servants of God must unite the song of Moses and that of the Lamb—the old and the new.

SABEL (see p. 73): Ch. xiv. 1. He is called the Lambkin [ῥὸ ἀρνίον] in antithesis to the great red Dragon (chap. xii. 8) who gave his great authority to the Beast (ch. xiii. 2), and in antithesis to the Beast itself, which speaks great things and blasphemies (chap. xiii. 5).—Ver. 3. No one could learn the song, etc. There are, then, lessons to be learned even in Heaven. That learning will, however, be something different from our more mechanical, discursive learning. Even [in this mortal life] we know the difference between this latter learning and the being taught of God (John vi. 45).—Ver. 4. Even on the basis of the Apocalypse a literal interpretation of this passage would be productive of great embarrassment. Such an interpretation would exclude from the 144,000 the Apostles themselves—a thing inconceivable according to Matt. xix. 28; the brethren of the Lord—of whom it is related, I

Cor. ix. 5, that they carried their wives with them on their missionary journeys; and also Philip, one of the deacons, the father of four daughters (Acts xxi. 8, 9). There is, moreover, not the slightest indication to be found in the Old Covenant, from the participants in which the nucleus of the heavenly congregation of the first fruits had been gathered, that celibacy was regarded with any favor in Israel. On the contrary, no eunuch, no impotent man, could enter into the congregation of God (Deut. xxiii. 1), and only of the future system of salvation was it prophesied that not even the eunuch should be shut out from it (Isa. lvi. 8; see Gen. ii. 18; Matt. xix. 4, 5; Eph. v. 23; 2 Cor. xi. 2; 1 Tim. iv. 1-3).—The Angel with the everlasting Gospel. This is the Angel of missions, the representative of all missionary labor, both within apostate Christendom and in heathen lands. (Missions are good and great; but the reference here is to a time when missions must have completed their work, and to a new fact, the end-judgment, in its character of a gospel of a blessed eternity, for believers.)

[From M. HENRY: Chap. xiv. 13. Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth, etc. They are blessed, 1. In their rest; they rest from all sin, temptation, sorrow, and persecution. 2. In their recompense, their works follow them; they do not go before them as their title or purchase, but follow them as their evidence of having lived and died in the Lord. 8. In the time of their dying, when they have lived to see God's cause reviving, the peace of the Church returning, and the wrath of God falling upon their idolatrous, cruel enemies.—From THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY: Chap. xiv. 4. They follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. Through persecutions and tribulations, into obscurity, or into prisons, with self-denial, obedient faith, and patient hope; "taking up their cross," and copying His example of meekness, purity and love. (SCOTT.)—From BARNES: Ver. 3. To appreciate fully the song of Zion; to understand the language of praise; to enter into the spirit of the truths which pertain to redemption, one must himself have been redeemed by the blood of Christ.—Ver. 11. And they have no rest, day nor night. It will be one of the bitterest ingredients in the cup of woe, in the world of despair, that the luxury of rest will be denied forever, and that they who enter that gloomy prison sleep no more; never know the respite of a moment—never even lose the consciousness of their heavy doom.—Ver. 13. Blessed are the dead. We should be grateful for any system of religion which will enable us thus to speak of those who are dead; which will enable us, with corresponding feeling, to look forward to our own departure from this world.—Which die in the Lord. Not all the dead; for God never pronounces the condition of the wicked who die, blessed or happy. The declaration is confined to those who furnish evidence that they are prepared for heaven. "To die in the Lord" implies, 1. That they who thus die are the friends of the Lord Jesus. 2. It would seem also to imply that there should be, at the time, the evidence of His favor and friendship. This would apply (1) to those who die as martyrs; and (2) to those who have the comforting evidence of His presence and favor on the bed of death.—That they may rest from their labors. In view of such eternal rest from toil, we may well endure the labors and toils incident to the short period of the present life, for however arduous or difficult, it will soon be ended.—Their works do follow them. Note here, 1. That all that the righteous do and suffer here will be appropriately recompensed there. 2. This is all that can follow a man to eternity. He can take with him none of his gold, his lands, his raiment; none of the honors of this life, none of the means of sensual gratification. All that will go with him will be his character, and the results of his conduct here; and, in this respect, eternity will be but a prolongation of the present life. 8. It is one of the highest honors of our nature that we can make the present affect the future for good; that by our conduct on earth we can lay the foundation for happiness millions of ages hence.—Ver. 15. For the time is come for Thee to reap. That is, "the harvest which Thou art to reap is ripe; the seed which Thou hast sown has grown up; the earth which Thou hast cultivated has produced this golden grain, and it is fit that Thou shouldst now gather it in."—From VAUGHAN: Chap. xiv. 7. Till a man fears, he can never know hope. The first call of the everlasting Gospel itself is to fear God and to worship the universal Creator.—Ver. 11. Some rest not day nor night from praise (Rev. iv. 8); others rest not day nor night from suffering.—Ver. 15. As there is a harvest of the earth for good, so also there is a harvest of the soul, an immaturity and a ripeness of the individual Christian.—Ver. 18. So also there is an individual ripening for the vintage of wrath and judgment.—From BONAR: These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth. We follow Him here in suffering and service, as we shall follow Him hereafter in glory and joy.]

SECTION THIRTEENTH.

Earth-picture of the Seven Vials of Anger, or the End-judgment in its general aspect. (Ch. xvi.)

General.—The special homiletical treatment of this section is, like that of others, made more difficult by the disagreement of exegeses. According to Hengstenberg, for instance, the earth denotes the earthly-minded; the sea, the sea of nations, the unquiet wicked world (in antithesis to the earthly-minded!); the fountains of waters, the sources of prosperity; the sun, that luminary in its burning quality, the type of the sufferings of this life; the throne of the Beast, the government of the Roman emperors; the Euphrates, the hinderance to the advance of the God-opposed world-power into the Holy Land, against the Holy City, against the Church.

According to Brandt, the earth is the Holy Land, which has become the scene of the world-kingdom of the Dragon; the sea is the mass of peoples united under the sceptre of the Beast; the rivers and fountains are the peoples and families in their still subsistent sunderment; the sun is the glowing sun and nothing more; the throne of the Beast is the sovereign power of the Beast; the Euphrates is the Beast out of the Earth, or Babylon.

The exposition of Sabel is in part better; The earth denotes the positive foundations of State and Church; the sea, the Gentile-Christian world of nations. Next, however, come some abortive interpretations: The waters of life [rivers] are the refreshing truths of salvation, and the fountains of waters are the schools at which they are taught; the sun is the Church of Jesus Christ; the throne of the Beast is the Antichristian world—its darkening is the confusion and shattering of that world—The Euphrates is well characterized as emblematic of the boundary line of the civilized world: the drying up of it betokens a change in political wisdom resulting in a new migration of nations, as it were.

The Vials of Anger should, above all, be compared with the Trumpets; and the antithesis between the Trumpets calling to repentance and the judgments of hardening, should be noted. The judgments of hardening may be elucidated by the Egyptian plagues, Isa. vi. 10 and analogous passages. They are indicative of such judgments as ripen corruption—when it has come to be past healing—into its final development and consummation, thus resulting in blasphemy, which in itself is damnation (vers. 9, 11, 21), whilst the Trumpets were designed to produce repentance. The first Vial of Anger readily suggests examples of the moral corruption and dissolution of individual states and communities (Babylon, Jerusalem, Rome, etc.) as warning signs.

In treating the second Vial of Anger we may touch upon the symptoms of the empoisonment of popular life by writings, tendencies, conspiracies. The symbolic import of the rivers is sufficiently attested by Scripture—the Nile, the Euphrates, the Jordan, the brook of Siloah; the same remark applies to the fountains. A consideration of poisoned and poisoning, death-dealing currents and fountains or fountain minds, would be appropriate here. The transformation of the sun of revelation into a glowing and scorching mass, by human fanaticism, negative as well as positive, is easily intelligible. The darkening of the throne and kingdom of darkness may be explained by the crumbling of the power of falsehood into contradictions, partyisms and suicidal complots. The drying up of the Euphrates, as the abolition of the boundary line between the civilized and the barbarian world, has a rich significance. Abolition of the distinctions of religions, stations, culture, of the sexes (emancipation of women), etc.—Symbolic import of the frogs.—The dissolution and decomposition of the common spiritual vital air must be a presage that the common existence of those who breathe it is drawing to a close.—The downfall of things in the evening of the world will be, first, a downfall of the spirit-world (ver. 19); secondly, a downfall of nature; thirdly, a downfall of the relation between the human world and the life of nature.

Special.—[Chap. xvi.] The Vials of Anger in comparison with Christ's Cup of Suffering: 1. The similarity; 2. The contrast.—[Ver. 2.] The noisome sore in a social and a spiritual sense: Deficit; corruption of morals; mortality, etc.—[Vers. 8, 4.] Transformation of the waters into blood, as a retribution for the nefarious and mock-holy shedding of blood (vera. 5-7).—Apology for the avenging righteousness of God.—The blasphemies (vers. 9, 11, 21). How are they punished? Primarily, through themselves, (1) their madness, (2) their impotence, (3) their torment.—[Ver. 12.] The dangers to Christian humanity lying dormant in the Orient. An Orient of mischief over against the Orient of salvation.—[Ver. 13.] The three frogs. Even in respect to the terrors of the last time, a sacred irony of the Spirit is manifested, testifying to the freeness of the Spirit.—[Ver. 14.] Enthusiasm of those inspired by the frogs.—[Ver. 15.] The Coming of the Lord compared with the coming of a thief: 1. Strangeness of the figure; 2. Design of this strangeness.—[Ver. 16.] Armageddon, or the theocratic battle-fields.—Battle-fields of the world, from their dark and their bright side.—The last battle-field: Armageddon, the scene of a conflict between the world and the spirit-realm.—[Ver. 17.] It is done!—The last glorious revelation of Christ's Spirit in His Church (ver. 18).—[Ver. 19.] The falling of great Babylon into three parts, the announcement of the three judgments.—Crisis of nature in the evening of the world (vers. 20, 21).

STARKE: (This expositor continues his presentation of opposite views.) Ver. 2. Those who regard this as already fulfilled, explain it mystically thus: The sors is the manifestly shameful and hurtful condition of the whole papistic Church. (In contrast to this view, there is a literal exposition of the empoisonment of earth and of life, and also an allegorical interpretation, referring the passage to the bad conscience and anguish of soul of the wicked.)—The wrath of man is greater than his power, but God has power to carry out His wrath (1 Ki. xix. 2, 3).—Ver. 4. Those who regard this plague as fulfilled see in it the blood-thirsty doctrines and counsels of the Pope.—Ver. 6. God, in proportioning His punishments to the sins which have provoked them, teaches us that we should proportion our penitence to our sins.—The blood of saints is precious in God's eyes; He forgetteth it not, but recompenseth it with righteous vengeance.—Ver. 8. Interpretations of the sun: [1] The natural sun; [2] A mighty king; [3] The Beast (! Reinbeck).—Ver. 9. Application to the wars of Charles VIII. and subsequent French kings in Italy.—As all things work together for the good of the pious, so all things, even the beams of the sun, work evil to the wicked (Rom. viii. 28).—QUESTIONS: The scourgings of God discover the heart; out of a perverse heart they bring forth blasphemies, out of a penitent heart they bring praise, humility and love.—Ver. 10. Even thrones and majesties are not secure from the chastisement of God. He can in His wrath destroy entire and flourishing kingdoms.—DIMPEL: Misuse not thy tongue for the flattery and excessive exaltation of the lofty, the distinguished and the rich, that thou mayest not afterwards, when God taketh such idols from thee, have to moan and lament, aye, and gnaw thy tongue for vexation; but let thy tongue daily tell of God's righteousness.—Ver. 10. Singular interpretation: The darkening of the Beast's kingdom is the revelation, reaching far and wide, of all the abominations and vices of the Pope and the whole Roman clergy. Opposite (?) interpretation: The kingdom of the Beast despised by men.—Ver. 12. Some: The drying up of the Euphrates is yet to come, although it might seem to be partially fulfilled in the kingdom of France, that being the most powerful kingdom of Europe, and the one that has afforded most protection to the Beast, in the persecution of the Huguenots, etc.—A great religious war is in prospect, the issue of which is greatly to be desired for the true Church.—Ver. 13. The frogs: considered in respect of the Antichristian hellish trinity in which they originate—viz., the Dragon, the Beast and the False Prophet. Many a one who has a horror of the Devil when Scripture calls him a Dragon, listens to him with complacency when he speaks by the mouth of an unchaste woman, or a false teacher or godless babbler. The Devil has his apostles, as well as the Lord.—QUESNEL: Satan has his designs when he assembles armies, men have theirs, and God has His, to the realization of which last all things must conduce (Is. x. 6, 7).

QUESNEL: [Ver. 17.] There is a seventh and last Vial for every individual sinner, but who knows it?—Ver. 18. Some apprehend this mystically as referring to the Church: there shall be voices, open preaching of the Gospel, the thunder of the Divine word, and lightnings, the bright light of the Gospel, shall break forth again with power, and a remarkable movement of men's souls shall be the result.—Ver. 20. How foolish it is to attach ourselves to a world that fleeth away, and, like our desires, vanisheth.—Ver. 21. God's chastisements do not always make men better—they sometimes have a directly opposite effect.

BENGEI, Sechzig erbauliche Reden. The Trumpets make a wide circuit in a long time, but the Vials make quick work of it.—The four holy Beasts [Living-beings] are nearer to the Throne than the Angels in general, and these seven Angels in particular (recte!) [ch. xv. 7].—The earth is Asia, the sea Europe, the rivers Africa (which contains the two principal rivers, the Nile and the Niger, etc.). The sun is the whole surface of the earth (partly, therefore, Asia, Europe and Africa again).—Ver. 10. They still think that the Beast is right, and they become none other than they were, either internally or externally.—Ver. 21. The whole creation is like an organ with many stops, and when one stop after another shall be drawn out as a plague upon the wicked, scorners shall learn somewhat that they look not for.

Briefe über die Offenb. Joh. Ein Buch für die Starken, die schwach heißen (PRENNINGER).—Vers. 1, 2. An evil and poisonous ulcer came upon the men who had the mark of the Beast and who worshipped his image. Another wonderful and repentance-preaching sparing of Christians.—Vers. 8, 9. How strong must be our conviction of the immeliiorability of these men.—Vers. 17-21. The great earthquake, greater than any that had ever been, will, judging from ver. 20, bring about those great changes in the shape of the earth, whose embellishment is in prospect, which must precede the time of the Messiah's government.—[Ver. 21.] The last hail: I, for my part, confess that as often as I think of a violent—nay, of the most violent—fever of earth, I can never picture to myself all the symptoms, in their great variety and contrast, in sufficient grandeur and extraordinariness.

[From M. HENRY: Ver. 15. When God's cause comes to be tried, and His battles to be fought, all His people should be ready to stand up for His interest, and be faithful and valiant in His service.—Ver. 21. Note here, 1. The greatest calamities that can befall men will not bring them to repentance without the grace of God working with them. 2. Those that are not made better by the judgments of God, are always the worse for them. 3. To be hardened in sin and enmity against God by His righteous judgments, is a certain token of utter destruction.—From THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY: Vers. 9, 11, 21. Without the special, preventing grace of God . . . the more men suffer, and the more plainly they see the hand of God in their sufferings, the more furiously they often rage against Him. Let then sinners now seek repentance from Christ, and the grace of the Holy Spirit, or they will hereafter have the anguish and horror of an unhumiliated, impenitent and desperate heart, burning with enmity against God, as well as tortured by the fire of His indignation; and thus augmenting guilt and misery to all eternity. (SCOTT).—Ver. 15. These will be times of great temptation; and therefore Christ, by His apostle, called on His professed servants to expect His sudden coming, and to "watch," that they might retain, and be found in, the garments of salvation, and not "walk naked," and so be put to shame, as apostates or hypocrites; for the blessing would belong only to the watchful. (SCOTT).—From WORDSWORTH: Vials are holy vessels. . . . Wherever means of grace are not duly used, they recoil on those to whom they have been offered, and become means of punishment.—From VAUGHAN: Ver. 15. The garments of the watcher must not be laid aside; he must have his loins girded about (for action), as well as his lights burning (Luke xii. 35).—The peculiarity of Christ's coming is that everything which seems to defer really brings it near; everything which seems to make it improbable is an argument of its certainty and of its approach. Behold, I come as a thief.—Awake, then, thou that sleepest! Be not found of Him, when He cometh, drowsy and stupefied, overcharged with cares and riches and pleasures of this life; the lamp of grace expiring, or the garment of holiness laid aside.—From BONAR: Ver. 15. These are words for all time, but specially for the last days. They (1) warn, (2) quicken, (3) rouse, (4) comfort. Note here, 1. The coming. Christ comes (1) as Avenger, (2) as Judge, (3) as King, (4) as Bridegroom. "As a thief;"—at midnight; when men are asleep; when darkness lies on earth; when men are least expecting Him; when they have lain down, saying: "Peace and safety." Without warning, though with vengeance for the world in His hand: when all past warnings of judgment have been unheeded. Without farther message; for all past messages have been in vain. Like a thief to the world, but like a Bridegroom to the Church. 2. The watching. Not believing, nor hoping, nor waiting merely; but watching. Watch upon your knees. Watch with your Bibles before you. Watch with wide open eye. Watch for Him Whom not having seen you love. 8. The keeping of the garments. Do not cast off your raiment either for sleep or for work. Do not let the world strip you of it. Keep it and hold it fast. It is heavenly raiment, and without it you cannot go in with your Lord when He comes. 4. The blessedness. It is blessed (1) because it cherishes our love; (2) it is one of the ways of maintaining our intercourse; (3) it is the posture through which He has appointed blessing to come, in His absence, to His waiting Church. 5. The warning. Adam was ashamed at being found naked when the Lord came down to meet him; how much more of shame and terror shall be to unready souls at meeting with a returning Lord! O false disciple, come out of your delusion and hypocrisy, lest you be exposed in that day of revelation! O sinner, make ready, for the day of vengeance is at hand!]

SECTION FOURTEENTH.

First Special End-Judgment: The Judgment upon Babylon, as a Heaven-picture.

(Ch. xvii.)

General.—Babylon, in the wider sense of the term, is the entire anti-Godly world, conceived of in its concentration; Babylon, in the narrower sense of the term, is the secularized, ungodly and anti-Godly, external Church; a birth-place of Antichristianity, in which the Antichristian essence often appears very undisguisedly, though the Beast, Antichrist himself, does not manifest himself therein. Here, the reference is to Babylon in the narrower sense, and primarily in respect of the heavenly appearance of her judgment.

According to this Heaven-picture of the judgment, the horrible appearance of the Woman is itself the judgment. Conformably to her general appearance, she is the great Harlot (vers. 1, 2), i. e. the object and subject of idolatry, the patroness of, and seducer to, apostasy from the living God. Her appearance is presented in abominable contradictions: 1. A Woman in the wilderness of a seemingly holy renunciation of the world and asceticism, and yet riding, like an Amazon, upon a royally decorated Beast, a many-headed monster, marked with names of blasphemy. 2. The Woman in magnificent princely attire, with the golden cup in her hand—and yet in, and together with, the cup, abominations and uncleannesses of idolatry, and even bearing on her forehead, for all who are acquainted with spiritual characters, the following title: Babylon the Great, the mother of the fornications and abominations of the earth. 3. The Woman, claiming the purest womanliness, in the religious sense of the term (see ch. xiii.), drunken—with the blood of the saints; with the blood, even, of the martyrs of Jesus—of Jesus, Whose mother, sister, bride, she would fain be called.

The Beast on which she rides has also great contradictions attaching to it. 1. It was and is not. The ungodly world-power was and is not—is in principle annihilated by Christianity. 2. It is not, and it will ascend out of the abyss, to a new development of ungodly worldly glory in face of Christianity. 3. It will ascend, to the end that it may go down into perdition. 4. It is the hardest riddle to all the pious, the admiration of all the earthly-minded. 5. Its seven heads are seven mountains, which, however, are in reality identical with many ebbing and flowing waters. 6. It goes to destruction in the consecrated septenary of its kings, only to revive again in the profane decenary of kings. 7. It has long borne the Woman on its colossal body, and will at last destroy her with its ten horns. 8. The monstrous dividedness of the Beast is transformed into perfect unitedness in the warfare against the Harlot. 9. The Woman goes to destruction through the contradiction of her similarity to the Lamb and her affinity to the Beast.

Special.—[Ver. 1.] Come, I will show thee the judgment of the great Harlot. Her appearance itself, therefore, is, primarily, her judgment. We are not to shun speaking of this judgment; but we must not interpret it rudely, in a manner offensive to the legal system of faith and worship. We have, therefore, to distinguish (1) between the Woman and the Beast which bears her; (2) between the symbolic form of the Woman, which embraces a symbolic Babylon, and her historic and most prominent organs and central points; (3) at the same time we are to recognize the fact that the corruption of the Church converges, more or less, to historic nodes, and is therein consummated. Babylon is everywhere in the Church, and yet is nowhere perfectly palpable; it, however, has its historic zenith-points. (Who, for instance, could refuse to reckon consummate Byzantinism, Mormonism and other sects based upon a pretension to inspiration, as forming portions of Babylon?)—As many Antichrists appear in the fore-ground of Antichristianity (1 John ii. 18), so in the foreground of the consummate Babylon of the last time there are many Babylons, especially predominantly spiritual and predominantly secular figures of Babylon.—A leading mark of Babylon is the universal ruinous effect which proceeds from the very city which pretends to be and once was a teacher and educator of the nations; this effect is two-fold and in many respects antithetic: the seduction of kings to fanatical worldliness, and of nations to fanatical mock-holiness.—[Ver. 2.] With whom the kings of the earth committed fornication. An old and yet in many respects new story. History points to a whole series of dynasties which have been ruined by fanaticism, or have at least been brought to the very verge of ruin.—History tells us of nations that have been made drunk, and that have, more or less, sunk into national ruin. Fallen or sunken Christian kingdoms in the East and West.—[Vers. 3, 4.] The similarity and the difference between the picture of ch. xiii. and that of the present chapter: 1. Between the phases of the Woman; 2. Between the phases of the wilderness; 3. Between the relative positions of the Woman and the Beast.—Contrast between the wilderness abode of the Woman and her luxury.—Contrast between her perilous equestrian seat, figuring a taming of the Beast, and her festal attire. (There is also a distinction between war-boots—Eph. vi. 15—and slippers.)—Contrast between the golden cup and the abominations contained in it.—[Ver. 5.] The name on the forehead—manifest and yet a mystery.—The old antithesis: Babylon and Zion.—[Ver. 6.] Amazement of John (see EXEG. NOTES).—Horror of the holy mind at a caricature of the holy.—Strange manifestation of unnaturalness in the corruptions of the Church.—Ver. 8. How the earthly-minded are, by the terrible aspect of the Beast, kept in a state of dependence upon the Woman, as long as the latter sits upon the Beast.—Ver. 9. Hither an understanding that hath wisdom. Profane learning can only misinterpret this enigmatical phenomenon.—The world-monarchies, see EXEG. NOTES.—Waverings of unredeemed humanity between the false unity of the world-monarchy and a dissipation into heathenism, barbarism, savageness.—Continuance of this wavering in the antithesis of the Hierarchy and separatism, absolutism and radicalism.—[Ver. 12.] The ten horns: Or the fall of religious absolutism is followed by the rule of an irreligious radicalism.—[Ver. 13.] Demoniac union of the ten horns. The principle of this union is to be found in their hatred of the Lamb, whose shadow they still persecute in the Woman.—Ver. 14. The Lamb shall conquer them. Find the agreement between this and ch. xiii. 7. Of a conquest through [seeming] defeat, and a defeat through [seeming] conquest. What contrasts between the inner and the outer world, between the passing moment and the future, between seeming and being, are contained in the preceding paragraph.—The Beast as the conqueror of the Harlot, conquered by the Lamb.—Comp. the Old Testament prophecies against Babylon, especially Jer. li.—Fearful mission of the ten kings (ver. 17).—[Ver. 18.] Threefold judgment upon the Woman.—[Ver. 12.] The Antichristian power lasts but one hour, i. e., a short time; but it is an hour in the theocratic-religious sense, a sore and painful hour of temptation [trial]. The union of the wicked occurs only in special moments of judgment and never, through an abolition of their inner egoistical division, attains to the oneness of the saints.—Ver. 18. in relation to ver. 7. In Heaven, the unnatural appearance of the Woman is itself, already, “the judgment of the great Harlot.”

STARKE: Application of the judgment upon Babylon to the “idolrous Church of the Papacy.” Reasons for this application: “the great magnificence and ostentation of this Church in the external worship of God; the blandishments and flatteries which it employs to draw people to itself, etc.” Fornication is interpreted as spiritual adultery, apostasy from Christ, the Husband of the Church. It is easy to learn who this Harlot is, from the description of her, and from her antithesis, the Bride of the Lamb. Her equestrian posture indicates that she derives her might and authority from the Beast and that she rules over it;—that she has arbitrarily subjected the Roman Empire to herself, has placed herself above emperors and kings, and has instated and deposed them. The crimson and bloody hue [of the Beast] is indicative of the bloodthirstiness excited in it by the persuasions of the Harlot.—[Ver 4.] Arrayed in purple and scarlet: purple, to indicate her usurped royal exaltation and pre-eminence above all potentates; and scarlet, to indicate her thirst for the blood of the saints. The true Church is resplendent only in the robe of Christ. There is nothing so abominable and unclean that it cannot be disguised and decorated with a tinsel of this world.—Ver. 5. The whole essence of false religion is a mystery, but a mystery of iniquity and all godlessness (2 Thess. ii. 7). As the mystery of Christ passes all understanding and incites to godliness, so the mystery of iniquity is conceived by pure serpent-cunning and contains nothing but deception; note, e.g., the miraculous power resident, as the Church of Rome pretends, in certain pictures and images, etc.—[Ver. 6.] A leading mark of the false Church: pagan Rome, in the three centuries [of her existence subsequent to the Christian era], shed less blood, by far, than so-called Christian Rome. (Starke adduces the example of France, in particular).—Ver. 8. And yet is: This is not to be understood as referring to Antiochus himself or to such Antichristian regents as stood in the fiercest spirit of Antiochus (Hoffmann's view?).—Ver. 9. Understanding and wisdom are two different things. There may be understanding without wisdom, but there can be no wisdom without understanding.—(Starke mentions the seven mountains of Rome; he remarks, however, that the Apocalyptic seven mountains have also been interpreted as seven famous Popes).—Ver. 12. Marginal gloss, (Luther): These are the other kings,—for instance, of Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, France (!).—QUESNEL: The Lamb suffers and succumbs in His members, and the members, whilst they are oppressed, conquer in the Lamb (Rom. viii. 37).—Ver. 16. This verse is entirely subversive of the opinion that the Beast denotes the Pope.—Great cities, great sins; and by the example of such cities, whole countries are seduced (Jer. xxiii. 15).

AUBERLEN (p. 817 [Eng. Trans.]): The fact that the Harlot is judged first, is not only in harmony with the general principle, that judgment must begin at the house of God (Jer. xxv. 29; Ezek. ix. 6; 1 Pet. iv. 17), but a restoration of actual truth is also designed. The object which, in effect, alone continues to exist—is recognized as existing—at the time indicated [the time of the judgment of the Harlot], is the world; for even the Church now courts only its favor, even for the Church it is the only reality. Against such a Church, the world must carry the day; and therefore the Harlot is not judged by the Lord Himself, but by the Beast and its kings.

GRABER: [Ver. 5.] A mother of harlots is one who brings up others to harlotry.—Ver. 6. It must needs be a subject of highest amazement that Christians, or those who pretend to be Christians, can reach such a pass.—[Ver. 16.] The Catholic States will in great part themselves accomplish the work of the destruction of the papacy.

LAEMMERT (Das Thier und der falsche Prophet, p. 86): “The origin of Babel [Babylon] is related, Gen. xi. (comp. with ch. x. 8-12). This [Gen. xi.] is the same chapter which, in its second part, gives the genealogy of the chosen Shemite, Abraham, and closes by describing the exode of Terah and his family from Chaldea and their entrance into Canaan. Here, therefore, we already have the foundation and beginnings of that grand dualism which runs through the whole of the Sacred Writings and the entire history of mankind down to the consummation. The founder of Babel was a grandson of him who scoffed at his father, and his name was Nimrod, i. e., rebel. Human arrogance built the city and the tower, to make itself a name—not to the honor of God's name; of its own strength and will—not at the behest of God. The inner motives were thoughts of arrogance, of the deification of man and of self."

CHANTEPIE DE LA SAUSSAYE, De Toekomst, p. 117. Man kann zeggen, dat de grond der tegenstelling der beide rijken reeds ligt in de paradijs-beloofte. Doch wat daar nog slechts in het algemeen genœmd wordt het zaad der slang, etc., verkrijgt immer meer kleur en gestalte.

[From THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY.—The Lord takes pleasure in satisfying His people concerning the reason and equity of His judgments on His enemies; that they may not be intimidated by the severity of them, or fail to adore and praise Him on that account.—Great prosperity, pomp and splendor, commonly feed the pride and lusts of the human heart; yet they form no security against Divine vengeance.—Those who allure or tempt others to sin, must expect more aggravated punishment, in proportion to the degree of the mischief done by them. (SCOTT.)]

SECTION FIFTEENTH.

First Special End-Judgment; Judgment upon Babylon. Earth-picture. (Ch. xviii.)

General.—That essential judgment of Babylon which lies in her very appearance, and has been manifested in the light of Heaven, is here unfolded on earth in a distinct series of evolutions.

The first Act of the judgment, as executed by the Angel from Heaven, consists of the verdict upon Babylon, the sentence of Divine justice.

The second Act is the incipient execution of the judgment in the social sphere of justice. It is divided into two actions: (1) The people of God go out of Babylon (vers. 4, 6), and (2) the world is commissioned to react against Babylon in pursuance of the same law of violence which she herself has exercised (vers. 6, 8). The universality of her judgment is expressed in the despair and lamentation of all her allies, who are too cowardly to take her part, but yet are stricken with her. The third Act is the complete historic repudiation of Babylon, executed by the strong Angel with a millstone, in a symbolic act.

The whole constitutes the greatest tragedy of the world, complete in three or five Acts, according to the greater or less prominence bestowed upon the middle items:

1. The guilt of Babylon towards humanity;
2. The exode of the people of God from her;
3. The reaction of the hostile world against her;
4. The lamentation of her friends—a prelude to the final catastrophe;
5. The final catastrophe.

The Angel who, descending from Heaven, lightens the earth with his radiance, and proclaims the fall of Babylon, is also, without doubt, the actual spiritual author of her judgment. For he has great authority, and transports her judgment from Heaven to earth. That is, that judgment which is already declared in the sphere of the celestial Spirit, with the delineation of the character of Babylon, now, through the heavenly illumination proceeding from the Angel, becomes a subject of the universal consciousness of mankind. We hold that the Angel represents evangelical Christianity in the full development of the beauty of its moral and humane principles. For Babylon has outraged all these principles, from liberty of conscience to the recognition of public law. She has perverted her claim to be the educator of mankind into the exact opposite, having become the seducer and destroyer of humanity.

The cry of this Angel is followed by the voice from Heaven, the sentence of the heavenly Spirit, the law of the Kingdom of God—declaratory, on the one hand, of the right of the Church (come forth out of her) and, on the other hand, of the right of the State (recompense to her), and expressing itself, thirdly, as the spirit of history and poetry, in the portrayal of the great lamentations. The tragic coloring of this entire judgment-scene is distinctly brought out in all this; it is particularly prominent, however, in the symbolic execution of the final catastrophe.

Special.—[Ver. 1.] Who is the Angel who comes down from Heaven, and whose glory lightens the earth?—[Ver. 2.] The mighty cry over Babylon. Fallen! fallen! or the perfect certainty that Babylon will fall on earth, even as she has already fallen in the sight of God.—Contrast betwixt what Babylon should be and what she has become.—[Ver. 3.] Babylon's transgression against mankind: (1) against the nations, (2) against the kings, (3) against the rich and great.—[Ver. 4.] Call to the people of God, to come out from Babylon: 1. Meaning of the call; 2. Motive of the call; 3. Neglect of the call (latitudinarianism); 4. Misinterpretation of the call (separatism).—[Vers. 4, 6.] Diverse conduct of the Church and the world toward guilty Babylon.—Retributory right of the world. This remains pure only in so far as it remains an execution of the right and keeps itself free from fanaticism.—[Ver. 8.] Recompense of corporal fiery judgments by a social and spiritual judgment of fire.—[Vers. 7, 8.] Contrast between the haughty self-blinding of Babylon and her imminent and great day of judgment.—The City of the Seven Mountains: yesterday and today.—[Vers. 9-19.] The three lamentations of the world over the fall of Babylon. Common characteristics of them: 1. A view of her fall; 2. A standing afar off and refraining from taking her part; 3. A participation in the stroke that has fallen upon her—but in the sorrow of this world, with no recognition of the justice of the blow, of its nature as a judgment, or of the Judge Who has inflicted it.—Heaven's judgments, earth's tragedies.—[Vers. 9, 10.] Lamentation of the kings (see EXEG. NOTES).—[Vers. 11, 15-17]. Lamentation of the great, the supporters of the luxury of the earth.—[Vers. 17-19]. Lamentation of the pilots as tradesmen.—Community and division of egoistical interests in the lamentations over the fall of Babylon.—Ironical enumeration of the depreciated goods of Babylon (vers. 12-14).—As the Church in its way, and the State in its way, so science and art in their way are concerned in the judgment upon Babylon.—The unspiritual lamentation of the world over the fall of Babylon contains the germ of that judgment which is later to descend upon the world.—[Ver. 21.] The symbolic act of the strong Angel, a representation of the grand final catastrophe itself.—[Vers. 22, 23.] Babylon's desolation. Her spiritual desolation shall be followed by an æsthetic desolation, and to this a desolation of business and of home life shall succeed.—Ver. 24. The summit of Babylon's guilt: she is the murderess of the prophets and saints.—This verse is supplemental to ver. 3.

STARGES: Ver. 2; comp. Is. xxi. 7; Jer. li. 8. The repetition of the word [fallen] is indicative of the greatness and certainty of the fall.—Ver. 4. This exode is based upon a gracious leading out on the part of God. There are certain grades in the execution of it, and it is performed as follows: 1. With the heart, by a right belief and acknowledgment of the truth, and hatred of false doctrine; 2. With the mouth, by a public confession of the truth, and rejection of errors; 3. With the body, by a going away from those places in which Babylon has its throne and superstition.—God's people and Church are, partially, still in Babylon, although hidden; otherwise God could not command them to come out.—[Ver. 5.] Sins that cry unto Heaven (Gen. iv. 10), whose measure is full, and upon which final ruin follows.—Ver. 7. These words are taken from Isa. xlvii. 5-10. The greater the security and pride of the wicked, the more terrible is their punishment.—Ver. 8. As Babylon burned innocent martyrs with fire, so shall she herself be burned with fire.—Ver. 10. The fear of torment may cause us (outwardly) to remove far from those with whom we have sinned, but love to God alone can make their sin odious to us.—Ver. 12. QUESNET: Let us gather treasures that will endure to eternity; nought is eternal save that which is done with a view to eternity. Ver. 16. The world does not mourn over the loss of eternal salvation, but over the loss of riches and external magnificence.—Ver. 20. It is at the downfall of evil, and at Divine vengeance that the pious rejoice; not out of a carnal mind and self-love, but by the ordinance of God and from the love of righteousness (Ps. xci. 8).—Ver. 21. The wicked fall into the abyss of perdition as stones fall into the abyss of the sea. That which the world regards as highly exalted finally meets with the deeper fall (Ezek. xxi. 26).—Ver. 24. The slaughter of true believers under the papacy is like the murder of the saints in the beginning of the world.—Great cities are destroyed on account of the many and enormous sins that are committed in them.—God reckons to the charge of the wicked all the sins of their ancestors, because they tread in their foot-steps (and the guilt of their ancestors attains its consummation and meridian in them).

Schlüssel zur Offenb. Joh. durch einen Kreuzritter (p. 289): The most terrible thing for a human community is when the salt of the earth, that should preserve it from corruption, is taken out of it by death or emigration, when the props of the rotten building give way, when Lot is led forth from Sodom, because there are not even ten righteous men therein.

[From M. HENRY: Ver. 4. Those that are resolved to partake with wicked men in their sins must receive of their plagues.—Ver. 5. When the sins of a people reach up to heaven, the wrath of God will reach down to earth.—Ver. 7. God will proportion the punishment of sinners to the measure of their wickedness, pride and security.—Vers. 9-19. The pleasures of sin are but for a season, and they will end in dismal sorrow.]

SECTION SIXTEENTH.

Second Special End-Judgment, or the Judgment upon the Beast (Antichrist) and his Prophet. a. Heavenly World-picture of the Victory. (Ch. xix. 1-16.)

General.—The heavenly post-celebration of the judgment upon the Harlot issues in a pre-celebration of the marriage of the Bride. For the Harlot and the Bride bear toward each other the indissoluble relation of a contradictory antithesis. Heaven, or the Church Triumphant, and not God's Church on earth, celebrates, pre-eminently, the judgment of the Harlot; for an exalted stand-point is requisite for this celebration, and with lesser spirits, vulgar minds, it might easily degenerate into fanaticism. Even in the Heaven of consummate spiritual life, the positive result of that judgment is the thing which is first rejoiced over. The salvation and the glory and the power are our God's. Not until after this, is the satisfaction of justice touched upon (ver. 2). The perfect fixedness of the judgment is next set forth (ver. 8). The whole heavenly post-celebration of the judgment is completed in an antiphony, in which the natural relations seem to be inverted, in that the twenty-four Elders and four Life-forms utter the Amen, which is supplemented by the third Hallelujah. Thus a three-fold heavenly Hallelujah is devoted to the rejoicings over the judgment. The Church of God on earth is now commanded to join in the celebration, and her rejoicing assumes the form of a pre-celebration of the marriage of the Bride. The delineation of the simple, yet august, adornment of the Bride, and the glorification of the imminent marriage, are followed by the appearance of the Bridegroom, coming from Heaven, on His warlike and victorious march against the Beast.

Special.—[Vers. 1-4.] Three-fold Hallelujah of the Church Triumphant over the fall of Babylon. This feature is the more significant, since it is here only that the Hallelujah appears in the Apocalypse. The Hallelujah is also philologically significant; Jehovah, the Covenant-God, is glorified, because Babylon obscured His glory and power to the uttermost through her idolatry; in that she, on the one hand, corrupted the earth with her idolatry, and, on the other, killed the servants of God, who sought His glory. The rising of the smoke of her torment becomes a Hallelujah as an eternal visible assurance that the salvation and the glory and the power of God, in redeemed souls, are established forever.—[Ver. 5.] The heavenly order for a general song of praise.—[Vers. 6, 7.] The song of praise: 1. The sound of it; 2. The contents of it.—The marriage of the Lamb. It will essentially consist in the fame of God's glory.—The beholding of the glory of God constitutes the bliss of the beatified. The bliss of the beatified is the highest glorification of God.—Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God.—[Ver. 8.] The Bride in her adornment.—In antithesis to the Harlot in her gorgeous, but blood-colored, attire.—[Ver. 9.] Blessedness of those who are called to the marriage of the Lamb.—Every previous beatitude has this for its end and aim. This is true, above all, of the beatitudes in Matt. v.; and also of that in Rev. xiv. 13.—God's words, pure essential facts: They will be manifested to be the most real realities.—[Ver. 10.] Repeated repudiation of the worship offered by John to angelic beings—comp. chap. xxii. 9.—The measure of inward devotion is the measure of the purity of the worship which we offer to God. This inward devotion, however, is not to be defined simply in accordance with our feeling; least of all, as a mere ecstatic sentiment; but also intellectually, and as an ethical readiness.—The witness of (concerning) Jesus, the real prophecy of this world's history.—[Vers. 11-16.] The Bridegroom, in His going forth for the final redemption and emancipation of the Bride: 1. His forth-going from Heaven; 2. His character; 3. His appearance; 4. His title; 5. His army; 6. His power (ver. 15); 7. His right.

STARKE (ver. 1): Hallelujah. There is here, probably, an allusion to the six Psalms, from the cxiii. to the cxviii., which were called the great Hallelujah, and were sung at high festivals, especially at the Feast of Tabernacles (Ps. civ. 86).—Ver. 2, from Deut. xxii. 43. Splendor, power, sublimity, adherents—all cannot save when God wills to punish. He fears none of them.—Ver. 3, from Is. xxxiv. 10.—Ver. 4. The praise of God that issues from a heart that is full of God, fills and kindles other hearts to His praise.—Ver. 6. (This verse Starke interprets as holding forth the prospect of the conversion of the Jews.) Although there are diverse voices and powers, there is yet one Spirit, one faith, one consonance of the whole Church.—Ver. 7. The preparation of the Bride consists in her constantly becoming more qualified for the reception of all the treasures of salvation acquired by her Bridegroom.—Ver. 9. [Write.] The Divine authority of the matter to be recorded and of this entire Book is the more strongly indicated, the more frequent the occurrence of this expression (ch. i. 11, 19; ii. 1, 8, 12, 18; iii. 1, 7, 14; xiv. 13).—[Ver. 10.] John was not mistaken in the person of the Angel, for he well knew that he was no Divine person. (Starke here wrongfully assumes that not worship, but only an humble expression of reverence, is here denoted).—Ver. 11. Heaven opens before Christ, both in the condition of His humiliation and in that of His exaltation.—Ver. 12. Christ has, not one, but many crowns, because He has gained many victories, and is the King of kings.—Ver. 14. [In heaven] the faithful are resplendent in white linen, though here they may bear the cross.—Ver. 16. Kings cannot be happier than in yielding themselves subjects of Christ.

SPURGEON, Stimmen aus der Offenb. Joh., p. 132. [Ver. 12. And on His head many crowns.] The Saviour's many crowns. Oh, ye well know what a Head that is; its wondrous history ye have not forgotten. A Head that once reclined, lovely and infantine, on the bosom of a woman. A Head that bowed meekly and willingly in obedience to a carpenter. A Head that in later years became a well of weeping and a fountain of tears (Jer. ix. 1; Heb. v. 7). A Head whose sweat was as it were great drops of blood, falling upon the earth (Luke xxii. 44). A Head that was spit upon, whose hairs were plucked out. A Head which at last, in the fearful death-struggle, wounded by the crown of thorns, gave utterance to the terrific death-cry (Ps. xxii. 1): Lama Sabachthani! (The death-cry was: Father, into Thy hands, etc.) A Head that afterwards slept in the grave; and—to Him Who liveth and was dead, and behold, He is living now forevermore (Rev. i. 18), be glory!—A Head that rose again from the grave, and looked down, with beaming eyes of love, upon the woman who stood mourning by the sepulchre.

[From M. HENRY: Ver. 10. This fully condemns the practice of the papists in worshipping the elements of bread and wine, and saints, and angels.—From THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY: Vers. 1-4. All heaven resounds with the high praises of God, whenever He executes His "true and righteous judgments" on those who corrupt the earth with pernicious principles and ungodly practices, and when He avenges the blood of His servants on their persecutors. Who then are they that throw out insinuations, or openly speak of cruelty and tyranny, on hearing of these righteous judgments, but rebels who blasphemously take part with the enemies of God and plead against His dealings towards them? (SCOTT).—Ver. 10. If the highest of holy creatures greatly fear and decidedly refuse undue honor, how humbly should we sinful worms of the earth behave ourselves! (SCOTT).—From BARNES: Ver. 1. All that there is of honor, glory, power, in the redemption of the world, belongs to God, and should be ascribed to Him.—From BONAR: Ver. 10. The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. The theme or burden of the Bible is Jesus. Not philosophy, nor science, nor theology, nor metaphysics, nor morality, but Jesus. Not mere history, but history as containing Jesus. Not mere poetry, but poetry embodying Jesus. Not certain future events, dark or bright, presented to the view of the curious or speculative, but Jesus; earthly events and hopes and fears only as linked with Him.]

SECTION SEVENTEENTH.

Second Special End-Judgment. D. Earth-picture of the Victory over the Beast. The Parousia of Christ for Judgment. The Millennial Kingdom. (Ch. xix. 17—xx. 5.)

General.—We must distinguish here: 1. The premise of the last time, the features of which are to be gathered from other passages; 2. Christ's war, in His Parousia, with the Beast and the False Prophet, and the judgment upon them and their Antichristian kingdom; 3. The chaining of Satan, and the Millennial Kingdom thus introduced.

The features of the last time, corresponding to its character as here pre-supposed, are visible throughout the eschatology of the Scriptures. See Matt. xxiv. 22 sqq.; Mark xiii. 21 sqq.; Luke xiii. 26 sqq.; xxi. 26 sqq.; Rom. xi. 1; 2 Thess. ii. 7 sqq.; 2 Tim. iii. 1 sqq.; 2 Pet. iii. 1; 1 John ii. 18; Jude 14, 15. Compare especially the terminal points in the cycles of the Apocalypse itself: ch. iii. 20; vi. 12 sqq.; x. 7; xi. 7; xiii.,—beginning, particularly, with ver. 11; xvii. 16. These traits are incipiently set forth in the Old Testament; comp. Is. lxiii. sqq.; Ezek. xxxvi. 33; xxxvii. 21; Dan. ix. 2; Hosea xiv. 6; Joel iii. 1; Zephaniah; Hag. ii. 6; Zech. xii. It should be noted, that in Zechariah as well as in Ezekiel two judgments upon the nations are distinguished: viz. a more special one, followed by the restoration of Israel, and a general one, with which the end-time closes. Comp. Zech. xii. and xiv., and also Ezek. xxxvi. with xxxviii. and xxxix.

The spiritual situation which superinduces the symptoms of the last time consists in the complete secularization of the Church—the carnal security of Christians, the spiritual lukewarmness of congregations, an extinction of the old foci of Christendom, and a corresponding extension of the Kingdom of God amongst heathen and Jews.

The actual date at which the last time begins corresponds with the fall of Babylon. The consummate Antichristianity of the world has executed judgment upon the wavering Antichristianity in the Church; the former has, however, drawn an apostate of the Church—the False Prophet—into its service, and with his help it obtains a social victory, in that τὸ κατὰ ἄνθρωπον is taken away (2 Thess. ii. 6), or in that the two Sons of Oil (Rev. xi.) are killed.

Antichristian pseudo-Christianity, expressing itself not only in hierarchical, but also in sectarian announcements of Here is Christ and There is Christ, has turned into pseudo-Christian Antichristianity; practical atheism, or the negation of all faith, has begotten a lying positivism which prosecutes human deification even to the production of the deified man, the culmination point of the Antichristian tendency. For human deification is at this juncture no longer a "worship of genius," but the deification of the masses—nay, more, of the Beast, of the brutal power and carnal self-seeking of the masses, and this fundamentally depraved generalization must necessarily, through the worship of agitators, turn into the worship of the agitator kar' ἐξουίαν.

The actual mark of the last short, but grievous time, is a social terrorism which develops in company with the principles of Antichristianity. The perverted congregation of the Beast seeks to give itself a dogmatical and symbolical shape by its sign of recognition, the mark of the Beast: the faithful fall under the subtle social excommunication of the last time. The characteristics of this grievous time are: a great testing, a great temptation, a great trial of endurance, a great purging, all of which, however, result in a great development of the sealed. The traits of the oppressed Widow thus develop into the traits of the Bride, and the cry of the oppressed forces its way to Heaven (Luke xviii. 1-7).

The Parousia of Christ for war and victory is here, as in the Gospels, heralded by signs in Heaven and earth. With the cosmical sign of the Angel standing in the sun and proclaiming the approaching judgment, the cosmical signs in the Eschatological Discourse of the Lord correspond. The ethical sign on earth is the consummate conspiracy of the kings, i. e., the supporters of Antichristianity, and their preparation for battle against Christ. Comp. Ps. ii. In respect of the day of rebellion, the following declaration holds good for ever: To-day have I begotten Thee—i. e., set Thee in royal dominion.

As to the battle itself, the Seer intimates that the same turn of affairs takes place here as in the building of the tower of Babel and in the Crucifixion of Christ, and, it might also be said, in the great persecution of the Christians under Diocletian. The point of an external combat is not reached; the Antichristian army seems to be smitten with absolute confusion (ch. xvi. 10). For the Beast is taken, like an individual malefactor; with him the False Prophet is seized, and both are cast into the lake of fire. That the slaying of the Antichristian army is expressive of a spiritual annihilation, is evident from the fact that they are slain with the sword which proceeds from the mouth of Christ.

In respect to the chaining of Satan and to the Angel who accomplishes it, we refer to the EXEGET. NOTES. We make the same reference in regard to the Millennial Kingdom. The idea of the coming of this pervades the whole of Sacred Writ (see Ps. lxxii.; Isa. lxx., etc.).

The First Resurrection, as the blossom of the resurrection time, as the result of the resurrection of Christ (1 Cor. xv.), as the foretoken of the general resurrection, is also a time of great spiritual awakening and resurrection; to this period, doubtless, belongs the prospect of a more general restoration of Israel, for it occurs between the penultimate judgment upon the heathen ([nations] (the οἰκουμένη) and the last judgment (upon Gog and Magog).

With the first resurrection, the first new heavenly order of things is connected: the rule of Christ, in the midst of His people, over the world—a spiritual and social governing and judging as a foretoken of the last judgment.

The abyss of the curse shut, the Heaven of blessing wide open: these are the characteristics of the great crisis which makes the συντομία visibly manifest throughout an entire æon.

Special.—The appearing of Christ in its two aspects: 1. The war (ch. xix. 17-21); 2. The victory (ch. xx. 1-5).—[Vers. 17, 18.] The Angel in the sun, and the meaning of his outcry.—[Ver. 19.] The Antichristian revolt against the Lord and His army.—The spiritual combat in its form and results.—[Chap. xx. 1-3.] The Angel who chains Satan (see EXEGET. NOTES).—Satan shall receive his full dues when he shall be let loose again at the end of the thousand years. In other words, evil must live itself out, or completely accomplish its self-annihilation.—[Vers. 4-6.] Import of the first resurrection.—Traits from the picture of the Millennial Kingdom.

STARKE (Chap. xix. 18): Those who apprehend this mystically, interpret thus: That ye may spoil the goods, etc.—Ver. 20. Those who apprehend this mystically, explain thus: The others, who were seduced [by the False Prophet], were more gently dealt with; they were either conquered and overcome by the sword of Christ's mouth, His word, and willingly subjected their life and possessions to Christ, or they lay prostrate, proscribed and despised, as dead bodies. Those who, like birds of prey, have impoverished and devoured others, shall themselves be devoured (2 Sam. xii. 9-11).—Chap. xx. 8. Marginal note by LUTHER: The thousand years must have begun at the time when this Book was written. STARKE, on the other hand: The thousand years are not past, but to come.—Satan has his certain time to be bound and to be loosed.—Ver. 4. Those who regard the thousand years as having already expired, apprehend the resurrection spoken of here as a spiritual resurrection. (Starke adduces another explanation, according to which the resurrection is a physical one, but the life of the risen is in Heaven [2 Tim. ii. 11, 12]. The difficulty here originates, probably, in a fear of the ill-understood Seventeenth Article of the Augsburg Confession. The Seventeenth Article, however, negatives the assumption of a millennium (a) before the Parousia of Christ and the resurrection of the dead; (b) as a secular kingdom of the righteous, based on the oppression and subjection of the wicked.)

RIEMANN, Die Lehre der Heiligen Schrift vom tausendjährigen Reiche oder vom zukünftigen Reiche Israel (in opposition to J. Diedrich, Schönebeck, 1858). It is only by caprice that the Millennial Kingdom can here be styled the future kingdom of Israel.—FLÜCKE, Die Lehre vom tausendjährigen Reiche (Marburg, 1859). "Our view (of the Millennium) has its point of departure in a difference with the Augsburg Confession." (On this misunderstanding, see the remark in the preceding paragraph.) STEFFANN, in his work entitled: Das Ende der Zeiten, Vorträge über die Offenb. des heil. Joh. (Berlin, 1870), also controverts this misunderstanding and Hengstenberg's interpretation: "Ebrard is right in saying that, in drawing up this Article, the Reformers rejected their own view of the Millennial Kingdom and thereby opened the way for a future correct view, etc. The rôles are changed, therefore; not those who reject the Millennial Kingdom on the basis of this Article, but we, who teach it in accordance with the permission given us in this Article, stand on the platform of the Augsburg Confession" (p. 336). MUENCHMEYER, on the other hand, intimates with sufficient plainness, in his Bibelstunden über die Offenb. Joh. (Hanover, 1870, p. 186), that orthodoxistic exegetical tradition and the ill-understood Seventeenth Article have induced him to place the Millennial Kingdom in the past. He, however, does not reckon the thousand years from the time of John to Gregory VII., with Luther, nor, with others, from the time of Constantine, but from the conversion of Germany—"according to which interpretation the thousand years are now approaching their end, if we have not already entered upon the little time" (in which view he resembles Hengstenberg).

HEBART, Für den Chiliasmus (Nuremberg, 1859), points to the profitableness of the doctrine of the Millennial Kingdom (p. 24).—Die christliche Doktrin und ihr Verhältniss zur christlichen Glaubenslehre, by Dr. JOHANN NEPOMCK SCHNEIDER (see p. 73).—Das tausendjährige Reich (in opposition to Hengstenberg), Gütersloh, 1860, p. 98. In Ezek. xxxvii. 1-14 the house of Israel is spoken of in precisely the same manner (as in chap. xxxvi.), and there is nothing in the chapter which could indicate that in this section the house of Israel is not to be apprehended as the natural Israel, but that the prophecy relates to the Church. (See the further remarks on the subject, p. 99. Emphasis is judiciously laid upon the fact that the part which treats of Gog and Magog follows this promise.)

CHRISTIANI, Bemerkungen zur Auslegung der Apokalypse (Riga, Bacmeister, p. 28). "Empirical ecclesiasticity must be highly overrated by those who ascribe to such a Church-historical event as the constituting of Christianity the state-religion of the Roman world-kingdom, so high an import in the history of salvation [as to date the Millennial Kingdom therefrom], notwithstanding that the benefits of this event were accompanied by many evils attendant upon the externalisation of the Church" (in opposition to Keil).

RINCK, Die Schriftmässigkeit der Lehre vom tausendjährigen Reiche (in opposition to Hengstenberg, Elberfeld, 1866, p. 35). This expositor places the transformation of the faithful in this time. He also assigns the fulfillment of the following prophecies to the same period: Micah iv. 1-4; Isa. xi.; lxx. 17-25; Acts iii. 19-21; Rom. xi.; Amos ix. 9-15. Rinck likewise places the people of Israel at the head of the nations in the Millennial Kingdom, and makes them the leading missionary people of the earth. The Judaizing anticipations of Baumgarten, et al., do not, however, appear with any greater distinctness than attaches to them in the view just stated. It is in any case as one-sided to drop the symbolic element in favor of the historic, as to surrender the historic in favor of the symbolic element. Can the following words be understood of the Jewish people in the historical sense: "When the multitude of the sea is converted unto him?" Israel has already, in the person of the historic Christ, taken the leading place amongst the nations, and in the persons of the Apostles it has become the principal missionary people on earth—this might suffice. According to Rom. xi., all Israel is to be saved, after the fullness [full number] of the Gentiles has come in. In the end, only dynamical distinctions can be of weight, and when Christ comes to earth with all the elect Gentile Christians of all ages, an external preponderance of the newly converted Jewish people is out of the question. The prospect of the more general conversion of Israel is, doubtless, rightly assigned to the Millennial Kingdom. A Christ in glory will remove the last hindrance of faith for all who have failed to accommodate themselves to the offense of the cross, not out of malice, but through weakness and an obedience to Jewish traditions. For the Israelitish view, moreover, the expectation of a time of the glorification of the Theocracy on earth lay at the door, although this did not involve an approximation to the Christian modification of this doctrine. Yet even Isaiah, viewing the power of evil in the light of the Spirit, perceived that a chasm would intervene between the time of the Messiah's humiliation and sufferings and the time of His glorification. Again, Ezekiel, in distinguishing between the corruption of the central civilized world and that of the remote barbarian world, arrived at the foreview that the victory over anti-Messianism and Israel's restoration should be followed by a late conflict with Gog and Magog.

VOLCK, Der Chiliasmus, seiner neuesten Bekämpfung (KEIL, Kommentar über Ezechiel) gegenüber (Dorpat, 1869). "It may now be seen what importance should be attached to the position of Lünemann, who affirms (commenting on 1 Thess. iv. 14) that the idea of an intervening space between the resurrection of believers and that of other men (Rev. xx.) is entirely foreign to the mind of the Apostle Paul. Precisely the contrary is true. That idea is perfectly familiar to him—a fact which is admitted by Meyer, who remarks on 1 Cor. xv. 24, that Paul, following the example of Christ Himself, has bound up the doctrine of a two-fold resurrection with the Christian faith. Meyer here alludes to the ἀνταρτία τῶν θανάτων, mentioned by the Lord in Luke xiv. 14."

LAVATER, Aussichten in die Ewigkeit. Our Lord replies to the question of the Sadducees (Luke xx.) in the following terms: "Those who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of [E. V.: from] the dead, can die no more," etc. From this it is evident that our Lord, in this passage, speaks of the resurrection of the righteous as a felicity which pertains exclusively to them.

[From M. HENRY: Chap. xx. 1. Christ never wants proper powers and instruments to break the power of Satan, for He has the powers of heaven, and the keys of hell.]

SECTION EIGHTEENTH.

Third or General End-Judgment. Judgment upon Satan and all his Associates. The Second Death. a. The Heavenly Prognosis. (Ch. xx. 6-8.)

General.—As we must distinguish between the elect, who have part in the first resurrection, and the general throng of the blessed, we have also to distinguish between the blossom of the earth and of the nations, constituting the Millennial Kingdom, the eschatological οἰκουμένην, and the terrestrial orb in general and its masses of peoples. It is a prophecy corresponding with the most profound anthropology that the rudest constituents of humanity shall at last, at the instigation of Satan, instinctively band themselves together for an assault upon the City of God. The lineaments of this anticipation are distinctly expressed in the passages quoted from Ezekiel. From an ethical point of view, it is the fundamental idea of this anticipation that evil shall, after the annihilation of all its idealistic illusions, make one last attack upon the Kingdom of God, with the convulsive movement of pure brutality, savageness, hostility to, and rebellion against, the holy. From an ethnographical point of view, the remoter heathen Orient appears, in antithesis to the nearer theocratic Orient, as the natural lodgment of the elements for such a final struggle. Already the East has frequently threatened the civilized world of anterior Asia and Europe with its terrors, by its great military incursions. There fanaticism slumbers in millions,—in the diverse forms of Græco-Catholicism, Mohammedanism, and Paganism, the latter of which is further sub-divided into the opposite ground-forms of Brahmanism and Buddhism. Imagine a gigantic Oriental coalition, equipped with the most modern military instruments of the European world, its leaders inspired with the magic song of the three Apocalyptic frogs. In such a case, the ethically monstrous assault against the Church of God must have the aspect of a Titanic cosmical power;—the Divine cosmos, however, must also, infallibly, take upon itself an annihilating counter-agency.

Special.—[Ver. 6.] Glory of the first resurrection. The summit of life is the first resurrection; the summit of death is the second death.—The true priestly domination in the Millennial Kingdom: 1. A domination of all the elect; 2. A domination with Christ.—[Ver. 7.] Sublimity of God's power in the final loosing of Satan.—Last form of evil on earth.—Ver. 8. 1. The absolute majority in conflict against Christ; 2. Rude violence [might] in conflict against the consummate right of His Church; 3. The brutalized power of earth in an assault upon the spirit-kingdom of God from Heaven. Consummate irrationality in its hatred of the consummate Kingdom of light, love and life.—The serpent nature of evil in its last struggle.—The last struggle itself, the foretoken of its destruction.

STARKE (ver. 8): Satan is the greatest rover; he goes to and fro, in order to seduce men and to do harm. (Job i. 7. In other words: Demonic evil ever and anon issues forth from its dark nothingness, without rule or system, but yet sympathetically, or rather in sympathetic antipathies, and consistently. Oneness in the Kingdom of God is based upon harmony in the Spirit; oneness in the kingdom of darkness is based upon a conspiracy for Antichristian purposes.)

GRAEBER (p. 357). [Ver. 9.] And fire came down from Heaven. This figurative expression indicates that their ruin is brought about by a special event, sent by God, the saints themselves having no hand in the matter. This is described with more particularity, Ezek. xxxviii. 21-23.

[From M. HENRY: Ver. 6. None can be blessed but they that are holy; and all that are holy shall be blessed.—From BONAR: Ver. 6. The First Resurrection. 1. When is it to be? When the Lord comes the second time. (See 1 Cor. xv. 23; 1 Thess. iv. 16; 2 Thess. ii. 1.) 2. Whom it is to consist of. This passage speaks only of the martyrs and the non-worshippers of the Beast; but other passages show that all His saints are to be partakers of this reward. Oneness with Christ now secures for us the glory of that day. 3. What it does for those who share it. It brings them (1) Blessedness. God only knows how much that word implies, as spoken by Him who cannot lie, who exaggerates nothing, and whose simplest words are His greatest. (2) Holiness. They are consecrated to God and purified, both outwardly and inwardly. (3) Preservation from the second death. Their connection with death, in every sense, is done forever. (4) The possession of a heavenly priesthood. They are made priests unto God and Christ—both to the Father and the Son. Priestly nearness and access; priestly power and honor and service; priestly glory and dignity;—this is their recompense. (5) The possession of the kingdom.—Sinner, what is resurrection to bring to you?]

SECTION NINETEENTH.

Third or General End-Judgment. b. Earth-picture of the Last Judgment. (Ch. xx. 9, 10.)

General and Special.—Brief history of the great war. 1. The war: (a) they went up; (b) they surrounded the camp of the saints and the beloved city. 2. The defeat: (a) fire from Heaven devoured them; (b) Satan is cast into the lake of fire.—Great Heaven as an ally of this little earth.—The Kingdom of the Lord must always be victorious.—The greater the danger which menaces the people of God, the more wondrous their preservation.—The last victory, in its magnitude: Most wonderful (apparently without a weapon of defense), most mysterious (from Heaven), most glorious (destruction of Satan forever).

STARKE: Those who regard this vision as, in part, fulfilled, apprehend it as relating to Turks, Tartars, Scythians and Mohammedans, etc. Those who take it, in company with the thousand years, as still future, etc. (Confused mingling of the most diverse periods!)—DIMPFL: O wretched hellish trinity! The Beast, the False Prophet and Satan, are tormented in the fiery lake to all eternity.

H. BÖHMER (p. 293): The fact here presented, to wit, that Satan, after having been bound, shall at last be loosed again for a short time, seems to us to constitute a deep and weighty truth; not because sin can be traced only to a seduction through Satan, but because we must naturally suppose that God will, at some future day, permit all who set Him at defiance to unite themselves for the last possible battle against Him and thus prosecute their abuse of liberty to the climax of self-inflicted judgment. We hold this final emergence of Satan to be necessary, because without it there would be no real finale to that conflict which was begun in apostasy from God, and, consequently, no full victory.

[From M. HENRY: God will, in an extraordinary and more immediate manner, fight this last and decisive battle of His people, that the victory may be complete, and the glory redound to Himself.—From VAUGHAN: Upon this gathering, this confederation of infidelity, of ungodliness, and of atheism, will burst the light of Christ's coming, and the devouring fire of God.]

SECTION TWENTIETH.

The New Heaven and the New Earth. The Kingdom of glory. a. Heavenly World-picture of the Consummation. (Ch. xx. 11—xxi. 8.)

General.—We here refer to our detailed treatment of the subject in the EXEGET. NOTES (p. 368 sqq.).

Special.—The end of the old world, the natal hour of the new world. This truth is (1) prefigured by life in nature (out of death, life); (2) grounded in the antithesis between the old and the new life of the Christian (the dying of the old man, the rising of the new man); (3) mediated, in its realization, by the verbal prophecies of Scripture and the real prophecies of the development of the Kingdom of God (every apparent down-going, the condition of a glorious resurrection).—The end of the world, a presentiment of all creature-life.—The new world, an object of the aspiration of all the pious.—[Vers. 11–15.] Individual features of the end of the world: The Judge; the down-going [of the old world]; the resurrection; the judgment; the Book of Life; the lake of fire.—[Ch. xx. 1 sqq.] The new world: A consummate reality; a new Heaven and a new earth; the new Jerusalem; the new habitation of God (ver. 8); the new existence (ver. 4); the new creation (ver. 5).—The Word of God, the foundation of the first world (John i. 1 [–3]);—in the explication (and world-historic operation) of His words, the foundation of the second world.—Certainty of the new world, (1) in respect of its Founder (ver. 6); (2) in respect of the heritage which it shall afford to the conquerors [ver. 7]; (3) in respect of the certainty of its antithesis [the lake of fire, ver. 8].—The second death? Infinitely mysterious in its nature. On the other hand, exceedingly clear as the final consequence, and hence the final punishment, of consistent sin. The second death, the last consistent result of the first beginnings of evil.—The contradiction immanent in the figure of the lake of fire, in perfect accordance with the essence of godlessness: 1. Extreme agitation and motion; 2. In perfect aimlessness; 3. Hence ethical self-consumption on the basis of physical indissolubleness.—Significant character-portrait of the lost under the superscription of the fearful. True heroic courage in the light of eternity; and its aim.

STARKE: There are two lines of opinion as to the vision set forth in chs. xxi. and xxii. Some consider that whilst it presents, chiefly, the condition of the Church on earth during the thousand years, a picture of the glorious state of the Church in Heaven is commingled with the former view; others hold that the contents of these two chapters refer particularly to the glorious state of the Church Triumphant in Heaven.—QUESNEL: (Comp. ch. xxi. 4 and John xvi. 20.) O precious tears of penitence and grief shed by the righteous and accounted worthy to be wiped away by the hand of God Himself. (Ver. 6.) God will yet manifest Himself to His Church as Alpha and Omega, and prove that the promise which He gave in the beginning, He will emphatically fulfill in the end.—QUESNEL [ver. 8]: There is a fearfulness which can condemn us equally with any misdoings.

CLAUS HARMS, Die Offenb. Joh. gepredigt (Kiel, 1844; p. 183): The New Jerusalem. I. It has its name and form from that Jerusalem in Israel. II. But the glory of the new is far greater than the glory of the old. III. Greater, even, than anything the Prophets have predicted in regard to it. IV. Yes, the new Jerusalem surpasses even Heaven and eternal blessedness. V. Christians, have we this glorious city before our eyes? VI. And in our hearts?

HAKEN, Kosmische Bilder, Riga, 1862 (p. 190): The new Heaven and the new Earth. Ps. cii. 25, 26; Heb. i. 10. In both passages the terms pass away [perish] and change are promiscuously employed; the Heavens pass away only so far as they are changed.

[From M. HENRY: Vers. 11-15. Observe, 1. The throne and tribunal of judgment, great and white, very glorious, and perfectly just and righteous. 2. The Judge. 3. The persons to be judged. 4. The rule of judgment settled; the books were opened. The book of God's omniscience, and the book of the sinner's conscience; and another book shall be opened—the book of the scriptures, the statute-book of heaven, the rule of life. This book determines matters of right; the other books give evidence of matters of fact. 5. The cause to be tried; the works of men, what they have done, and whether it be good or evil. 6. The issue of the trial and judgment; and that will be according to the evidence of fact, and rule of judgment.—Ch. xxi. 8. The presence of God with His people in heaven will not be interrupted as it is on earth, but He will dwell with them continually.—The covenant interest and relation that there are now between God and His people will be filled up and perfected in heaven. They shall be His people; their souls shall be assimilated to Him, filled with all the love, honor and delight in God that their relation requires; this shall be their perfect holiness, and He will be their God; His immediate presence with them, His love fully manifested to them, and His glory put upon them, will be their perfect happiness.—Ver. 4. Note, 1. All the effects of former trouble shall be done away. God Himself, as their tender Father, with His kind hand, shall wipe away the tears of His children; and they would not have been without those tears when God shall come and wipe them away. 2. All the causes of future sorrow shall be forever removed; There shall be neither death nor pain; and therefore no sorrow nor crying; these are things incident to that state in which they were before, but now all former things are passed away.—Vers. 5, 6. We may and ought to take God's promise as present payment; if He has said, He makes all things new, it is done.—Alpha and Omega, the Beginning and the End. As it was His glory, that He gave the rise and beginning to the world, and to His Church, it will be His glory to finish the work begun, and not to leave it imperfect.—The desires of His people toward this blessed state [vers. 1-4] are another evidence of the truth and certainty of it; they thirst after a state of sinless perfection, and the uninterrupted enjoyment of God; and God has wrought in them these longing desires which cannot be satisfied with anything else, and therefore would be the torment of the soul if they were disappointed; but it would be inconsistent with God's goodness and His love to His people to create in them holy and heavenly desires, and then deny them their proper satisfaction; and therefore they may be assured when they have overcome their present difficulties, He will give them of the fountain of the water of life freely.—Vers. 6-8. The greatness of this future felicity is declared and illustrated, 1. By the freeness of it. 2. The fullness of it; inherit all things. 3. By the tenure and title by which God's people enjoy this blessedness; by right of inheritance, as the sons of God. 4. By the vastly different state of the wicked.—Ver. 8. Observe, 1. The sins of those who perish. The fearful lead the van in this black list; they durst not encounter the difficulties of religion, and their slavish fear proceeded from their unbelief. They, however, were yet so desperate as to run into all manner of abominable wickedness. 2. Their punishment. This misery will be their proper part and portion, and what they have prepared themselves for by their sins.—From THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY. Ch. xxi. 8. There is then a fearfulness which alone is sufficient to cause our condemnation, as well as the other crimes here mentioned. It is not only that fear which causes us to deny and abandon the faith; but that also which causes us to be wanting to important and essential duties, through fear of hurting our fortunes, our ease, and even our temporal and spiritual interests, and of creating ourselves enemies. True courage is, to fear nothing but God and displeasing Him. Real cowardice is, not to have courage to overcome self, nor renounce the creature, through the hope of enjoying the Creator. (QUESTNEL.)—From VAUGHAN: Ch. xxi. 8. To have God with us is to be perfectly safe: to have God for our God is to be perfectly happy.—Ver. 8. The fearful. O terrible end! O fatal compromise carried on too long and too far with sinners and with sin! O spirit of oversensitiveness, of dislike to trouble, of dread of isolation, of inability to judge decisively and to act courageously, which has brought you, by slow stages, by easy descents, to a level so vile, and a companionship so horrible!—From BONAR: Ch. xi. 12. Books are opened—books probably containing God's history of the sinner's life, His record of the sinner's deeds. . . . The Divine version of human history . . . how unlike all earthly annals! Most of the leading facts the same, yet how differently told . . . and interpreted. . . . Alongside of these is another book, called the book of life—the register of those whose portion is LIFE eternal.—Ver. 18. Judged every man according to his works. God keeps His diary of every soul's doings and sayings and thinkings.—Ver. 14. Of the old prediction in Hosea (ch. xiii. 14): "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction," John here records the awful (and glorious) fulfillment.]

SECTION TWENTY-FIRST.

Heavenly-Earthly Picture (Earth-Picture) of the New World. The Kingdom of Glory. (Chap. xxi. 9—xxii. 5.)

General.—The Kingdom of glory is the Kingdom of consummation; of the consummate development of all the human capabilities of mankind, as born again through Christianity, together with the consummate development of the renewed cosmos of mankind; the Palingenesis of the human world, founded on the holy Birth and Resurrection of Christ—His Primogeniture from the dead—and mediated by the regeneration and resurrection of the faithful.—Relation of the human cosmos to the universe in general.—This relation is modified by the absolute priority of Christ, resting upon His Divine-human nature, the ideal perfection of His life, the holiness of His cross, the glory of His victory. The consummation itself, however, as eternal, is based upon the super-creaturally, God-related, æonic nature of humanity; upon the eternal foundation, the eternal aim, and the eternal value of the life and work of Christ; and upon the covenant-faithfulness of God and the sureness of His promises.

The promises of God, as real prophecies, in nature and in the development of life, as well as in those verbal prophecies of the Kingdom of God which hover above this life, have all aimed at that glorious consummation, at the eternalization of the Christian life and its sphere, the eternal City of God. Hence, the domain of the consummation is at the same time the domain of all fulfillments; it is both of these as the Kingdom of glory, the blessed realm of spirits, filled with the life of the Eternal Spirit.

The Kingdom of glory unfolds in three spheres, appearing (1) as the consummation and fulfillment of the Theocracy, or as the heavenly Jerusalem, the City of God (vers. 9-21); (2) as the consummation and fulfillment of all the truth and all the longing contained in the religious history of mankind, or as the holy Home-City of all believing Gentiles [nations] (vers. 22-27); (3) as the consummation and fulfillment of all the prophecies of nature, or as the Home-Country of all souls, the universal, new Paradise (ch. xxii. 1-5).

Special.—The perfected Kingdom of God, in respect of its different designations and imports: Historic form of the Kingdom of God (ch. xxi. 9-21); the City of God; the heavenly Jerusalem; the Bride.—Blessed prospect of the City of God. Most glorious of all prospects. "Jerusalem, du hoch gebaute Stadt," etc. ["Jerusalem, thou city fair and high"]. "Ich hab' von ferne, etc."—Procession of the City of God: 1. From Heaven to earth; 2. From earth to Heaven; 3. Back again, from Heaven to earth.—[Ver. 10.] The descending City of God, or perfected communication between Heaven (the starry world) and earth.—Description of the City of God (vers. 11-21). Its source of light; its walls; its gates; its dimensions and fundamental forms; its fundamental materials.—Spiritual, universal form of the Kingdom of God (vers. 22-27). Its spiritual Temple. Its spiritual Sun. Its spiritual Church. Its spiritual liberty. Its spiritual fullness. Its spiritual purity and consecratedness.—The new Paradise (ch. xxii. 1-5). The river of life: 1. Where does it appear? 2. Whence does it come? 3. Whither does it flow?—The river of life: 1. In respect of its name; 2. In respect of its beauty (like crystal); 3. In respect of its products.—The trees of life—the manifestation of highest life: 1. From the Fountain of life to the River of life; 2. From the River of life to the Trees of life; 3. From the Trees of life to their fruits; 4. From the fruits to the health-producing leaves.—The perfected, pure, consecrated creature (ver. 3).—The laws of purity for creaturely life: a prophecy of the future glorification of the world.—Activity and rest in the Paradise of God (vers. 3, 4).—Perfect union of culture and cultus in the Paradise of God.—The service (ver. 3).—The blessed rest (the beholding of God [ver. 4]).—The region of eternal sunshine [ver. 5].—The new world shining in the radiance of the glory of the Lord.—The glorious liberty of the children of God (Rom. viii.), in its eternal duration and renewal.

STARKE: [Ch. xxi. 12.] God is a fiery wall and protection to His Church (Zech. ii. 5).—Ver. 18. Entrance into the Church is free to all people, in all corners of the world, who will but come to the fellowship of the Church (1 Tim. ii. 4).—Ver. 14. The one true Foundation of the Church and of eternal blessedness is Christ alone (1 Cor. iii. 11). This Foundation is laid solely through the Apostles (Eph. ii. 20). (The reconciliation of the apparent contradiction is to be found in the fact that Christ has organically unfolded His fullness in the twelve Apostles.)—On ver. 28. comp. Is. lx. 19, 20—On ver. 24, comp. Is. lx. 8; see ch. xlix. 23; ii. 2 sq.; Ps. lxxii. 10, 11; also Is. lii. 1; lx. 21; Ezek. xlv. 9.—Ch. xxii. 2. A contrast to ancient Babylon is here presented. As the Euphrates flowed through the midst of Babylon, and as the river of Babylon dried up (ch. xvi. 12), so, on the other hand, the spiritual Jerusalem has the river of the Holy Spirit, which brings water through the midst of the City and which shall never dry up.—Christ is the Tree of life, which has life in itself.—On ver. 3, comp. Zech. xiv. 11.

W. HOFFMANN, Maranatha (Ruf zum Herrn), Vol. VIII. Sermon on 2 Pet. iii. 13, 14. P. 180). We shall speak of the new world of the redeemed, as described in our text in the following words: "But we wait for a new Heaven and a new earth." For the first word of revelation from God's mouth runs: "In the beginning God created the Heaven and the earth," and the last word of prophecy is that which we have just read. Thus, between the first coming into existence of Heaven and earth and the last everlasting being of Heaven and earth, all the Divine economy moves.

[From M. HENRY: Ch. xxi. 10. They who would have clear views of heaven must get as near heaven as they can, into the mount of vision, the mount of meditation and faith, from whence, as from the top of Pisgah, they may behold the goodly land of the heavenly Canaan.—Ver. 11. Having the glory of God; glorious in her relation to Christ, in His image now perfected in her, and in His favor shining upon her.—Ver. 12. Note, 1. The wall. Heaven is a safe state. 2. The gates. It is accessible to all those that are sanctified.—Ver. 22. There the saints are above the need of ordinances, which were the means of their preparation for heaven. Perfect and immediate communion with God will more than supply the place of gospel-institutions.—Ver. 28. God in Christ will be an everlasting Fountain of knowledge and joy to the saints in heaven.—Ver. 27. The saints shall have (1) no impure thing remain in them, (2) no impure persons admitted among them.—Ch. xxii. 1. All our springs of grace, comfort and glory are in God; and all our streams from Him, through the mediation of the Lamb.—Ver. 3. And there shall be no more curse. Here is the great excellency of this paradise—the Devil has nothing to do there; he cannot draw the saints from serving God to be subject to himself, as he did our first parents, nor can he so much as disturb them in the service of God.—Vers. 4, 5. Note, 1. There the saints shall see the face of God; there enjoy the beatific vision. 2. God will own them, as having His seal and name on their foreheads. 3. They shall reign with Him forever; their service shall be not only freedom, but honor and dominion. 4. They shall be full of wisdom and comfort, continually walking in the light of the Lord.—From THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY. Ch. xxi. 9-27. “Glorious things are” indeed here “spoken of the City of God” (Ps. lxxxvii. 3); and the whole is well suited to raise our expectations and enlarge our conceptions of its security, peace, splendor, purity and felicity; but, in proportion to our spirituality, we shall be more and more led to contemplate heaven as filled with “the glory of God,” and enlightened by the presence of the Lord Jesus, “the Sun of righteousness,” and the Redeemer of lost sinners, knowing that “in His presence is fullness of joy, and pleasures at His right hand for evermore.” (SCOTT.)—As nothing unclean can enter thither, let us be stirred up, by these glimpses of heavenly things, in giving diligence to “cleans[e] ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God;” that we may be approved as “Israelites indeed, in whom there is no guile,” and have a sure evidence that we are “written in the Lamb’s book of life.” (SCOTT.)—Ch. xxii. 5. In that world of light and glory there will “be no night,” no affliction, or dejection, no intermission of service and enjoyments; they will “need no candle;” no diversions or pleasures of man’s devising will there be at all wanted; and even the outward comforts which God has provided, suited to our state in this world, will no longer be requisite. (SCOTT.)—From VAUGHAN: Ch. xxi. 22. The Lord God and the Lamb are the Temple of it. The worship of heaven is offered directly, not only to God, but in God. It is as if God Himself were the shrine in which man will then adore Him. . . . The blessed will be so included in God that even when they worship, He will be their temple.—If we would hereafter worship in that temple which is God Himself, Christ Himself, we must know God now by faith; we must have life now in Christ.—Ch. xxii. 8. If in heaven we would serve God, we must begin to be His servants here.—From BONAR: Chs. xx., xxi. What a termination to the long, long desert-journey of the Church of God, calling forth from us the exulting shout which broke from the lips of the Crusaders, when first from the neighboring height they caught sight of the holy city: “Jerusalem! Jerusalem!”]

SECTION TWENTY-SECOND.

The Epilogue. (Ch. xxii. 6-21.)

General.—The Johannean character of the Epilogue of the Revelation has already been dwelt upon. A depth of meaning and a festalness of mood, conjoined with a somewhat indefinite expression, or a mysterious form, are peculiar to this section as well as to the Epilogue of the Gospel; and the fundamental thought which animates them both is an earnest longing for the Coming of the Lord. In regard to the construction, comp. the EXEG. NOTES.

Special.—The pureness of the Revelation (ver. 6) corroborated by its Author. By its intimate connection with the whole of Holy Writ. By its fulfillment hitherto.—(Ver. 7.) Behold, I come quickly. 1. How this saying is misunderstood when it is interpreted in the sense of a secular computation of time. 2. How, for the standpoint of religious sentiment and Christian expectations, it always retains its truth, and, 8, continually gains in weight.—Blessed is he that keepeth the words of the prophecy.—Vers. 8, 9. What is the significance of the distinction between the Angel of Christ and Christ Himself (see EXEG. NOTES)?—[Ver. 10.] Seal not the words of the prophecy of this Book. Why not? The time is at hand.—Earnest and grand character of the course of the world to its end.—Seal not the Book; not even by false interpretations—especially, chiliastic darkenings and rationalistic volatilizations.—Seal not even the Apocalypse with hierarchic seals, much less than the whole of the Bible.—Ver. 11. Lofty import of these words: What thou doest (wilt do), do quickly! (See EXEG. NOTES.)—Christ’s word concerning His Coming (ver. 12). He announces Himself as the righteous Recompenser.—His reward according to men’s works: 1. The reward not as the wages of hired service, but an honorarium of love; 2. Not for works of hired service, but for those of the service of love.—Christ as the Alpha and Omega. Some say: Omega, but not Alpha. Others: Alpha, but not Omega. Whoso, however, rightly says the one, says also the other.—Antithesis of blessedness and damnation (vers. 14, 15).—Without—its import (ver. 15).—Who is without? Note the pure and purely moral character of these traits.—Christ’s testimony regarding His Coming: A testimony to the Church (ver. 16).—Christ in His human and Divine glory (I am the Root, etc.).—How His human and Divine glory guarantees His Coming.—[Ver. 17.] The three-fold Come—of the Spirit, the Bride, the individual Christian.—He who would greet the Lord with a Come! must first hearken to the Lord’s call: Come!—Our Welcome to the Advent of Christ must be based upon His Welcome to the reception of salvation.—The clear sound of the Gospel may still be heard at the very close of the Revelation. Here, also, the declaration is: Take freely.—[Ver. 18.] The Apostle’s warning in regard to the Apocalypse: It is no subject for haughty cavil, but an enigma for humble meditation.—The mysteries and enigmas of Scripture concluded with a final enigma.—Whoso occupies a wrong position in regard to the future, occupies also a wrong position in regard to the present and the past.—[Ver. 20.] Briefest and most sublime dialogue between the Lord and His people. 1. He says: I come quickly. 2. We say: Amen, yea, come, Lord Jesus.—Who can, with a good courage, say Amen to the announcement of His Coming?—

The sum of all human longing, all Christian hope, all Divine promise, in the cry: Come, Lord Jesus!—The Apocalypse, a Book of faith; of love; of hope; of longing; of patience; of comfort; of investigation; of knowledge. Of sacred awe, of blessed vision.—Ver. 21. The benediction. Benedictions from the beginning to the end of the Scriptures: In respect (1) of their purport; (2) of their rich development; (3) of their conditionedness; (4) of their glorious operation.

STARKE (ver. 10): No man should be prohibited from reading the Holy Scriptures.—Ver. 11. If the wicked wilfully refuse to follow, God at last suffers them to go their own way (Prov. i. 24 sqq.).—Ver. 12. Comp. Is. xl. 10.—Ver. 17. Because many souls should yet be drawn to Christ—among other things, by the testimonies of this Book concerning the glorious Coming of Christ—John adds these words: let him that heareth, say, Come.—Ver. 19. O awful punishment of those who falsify God's word! There is nothing more precious [than the word of God]—hence it needs no addition of worldly eloquence, there is nothing more pure—hence we must take nothing from it.—Ver. 20. Let us say Amen and Yea to the promises of our Saviour, although as yet we see nothing (?) of their fulfilment.

CALWEE Handbuch der Bibelerklärung. [Ver. 10.] Although much in the Revelation was not intended to be understood until the times of fulfilment, yet this Book is not a shut (sealed) Book, but a Revelation [Offenbarung].

LISKO (Bibelwerk): [Ver. 16.] He [Christ] is also the bright morning-star, Who caused the day, the whole period of Divine life in mankind, to arise, and issue forth from Himself, and Who now beams upon us from the other world (as the morning-star of the Day of Eternity).

GERLACH (Bibelwerk): Ver. 17. To inflame the longing of the faithful for the return of their Saviour, is one of the principal designs of this Book.

[From M. HENRY: Ver. 20. Christ will come quickly; let this word be always sounding in our ear, and let us give all diligence, that we may be found of Him in peace, without spot, and blameless.—Surely I come quickly.—Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus. What comes from heaven in a promise, should be sent back to heaven in a prayer.—Ver. 21. Nothing should be more desired by us than that the grace of Christ should be with us in this world, to prepare us for the glory of Christ in the other world.—From THE COMPREHENSIVE COMMENTARY: Ver. 16. The bright and morning star. Christ's rising, in His incarnation, introduced the gospel-day; His rising in power introduceth the millennial day; His rising in the saving influences of His Spirit introduceth the spiritual day of grace and comfort; and His appearance to judge the world will introduce the eternal day of light, purity and joy. (BROWN.)—"The Spirit," by the sacred Word, and by His convictions and influence in the sinner's conscience, says "Come" to Christ for salvation; "the Bride," or the whole Church militant and triumphant, says "Come," and share our felicity. It therefore behooves every man who hears the invitation to call on others to "come." (SCOTT.)—From BARNES: Ver. 11. There is nothing more awful than the idea that a polluted soul will be always polluted; that a heart corrupt will be always corrupt; that the defiled will be put forever beyond the possibility of being cleansed from sin.—Ver. 16. The bright and morning star. (Let that star remind us that the Saviour should be the first object that should draw the eye and the heart on the return of each day.—Ver. 17. And let him that is athirst, come. Whoever desires salvation, as the weary pilgrim desires a cooling fountain to allay his thirst, let him come as freely to the gospel as that thirsty man would stoop down at the fountain and drink.—From VAUGHAN: Ver. 7. A special blessing is pronounced by our Lord Jesus Christ upon those who prize, and keep as a precious and sacred deposit, this particular portion of His revealed truth.—Ver. 11. There will come a time to each one of us, when, whatever we are, that we shall be; when the seal of permanence will be set upon the spiritual condition; when the unjust man shall be unjust forever, and the righteous man shall be forever righteous.—Ver. 12. To give back to each one as his work is. That is the judgment. It is the reaping of the thing sown. It is the receiving back the things themselves that were once done in the body (2 Cor. v. 10); receiving back the very acts and deeds themselves, only developed, full-grown, full-blown, ripened unto harvest.—From BONAR: Ver. 14. Blessed are they that keep His commandments. It is to a life of such keeping that we are called. By such a life, we partake of blessedness as well as glorify God—Enter in through the gates into the city. (Enter) not over the wall; not by stealth; but as conquerors in triumphal procession, their Lord, as King of glory, at their head.—Ver. 17. Note here, 1. The cry for Christ's advent. 2. The invitation to the sinner. Observe (1) The inviter; Christ Himself. He invited once on earth; He now invites from heaven with the same urgency and love. (2) The persons invited; a. The thirsty. They who would fain be happy, but know not how; who are seeking rest, but finding none; who are hewing out broken cisterns; betaking themselves to dried-up wells. b. Whosoever will. A wide description. It shuts out none. (3) The blessings invited to; The water of life. "Water," that which will thoroughly refresh you and quench your thirst; "water of life," living and life-giving. . . . This water is the Holy Ghost Himself, Who comes to us as the bringer of God's free love, with all the joy which that love introduces into the soul. (4) The price. Freely. Free to each one as he is; though the chief of sinners, the emptiest, wickedest, thirstiest of the sons of men.—Vers. 18, 19. Note here, 1. The perfection of God's word. 2. The honor God puts on it. 3. Our responsibilities in regard to it. 4. The sin and danger of tampering with it.]

INDEX

TO THE

TEN VOLUMES OF LANGE'S COMMENTARY

ON

THE NEW TESTAMENT.

I. GREEK. II. TOPICAL.

BY

JOHN H. WOODS, A. M.

---

NEW YORK:

SCRIBNER, ARMSTRONG & CO., 654 BROADWAY.

1874.

GREEK INDEX.

NOTE.—The Numerals refer to the pages of the Commentaries on the Books mentioned—which are paged separately in each Volume.

- 'Αββᾶ, Rom. 261, Gal. 98.
'Αγαθός, Rom. 164 sq.
'Αγαπάω, Matt. 404, John 638, 639, 1 Cor. 861.
'Αγάπη, 1 Cor. 266, 267.
'Αγαπητός, Matt. 77.
'Αγαπεύω, Matt. 118, 519, Luke 869.
'Αγγαρία, Matt. 118.
'Αγγαρος, Matt. 519.
'Αγγελος, Acts 229.
'Αγιασμός, Rom. 209, 218, 2 Cor. 120.
'Αγιοι, Thess. 58.
'Αγιος, Philem. 14, Rev. 128.
'Αγιότης, Rom. 209, 2 Cor. 120.
'Αγιωσύνη, 2 Cor. 120.
'Αγνίζω, Acts 390, 1 John 195.
'Αγνόητης, 2 Cor. 109.
'Αγορά, Acts 302 sq.
'Αγοραίος, Acts 817, 859.
'Αγοραίος, Acts 859.
'Αδελφός, Matt. 256, 1 John 54.
'Αδμονεύω, Matt. 477, 479.
'Αιδής, Matt. 114, 210, 211, 226, 298, 298, Luke 254, Rev. 864.
'Αδιαλείπτως, Thess. 15.
'Αδικία, Rom. 118.
'Αδόκιμος, Rom. 88.
'Αδρότης, 2 Cor. 145.
'Αδέμτος, Acts 201.
'Αθεος, Eph. 91.
'Αθετέω, Mark 58.
'Αγαλός, Acts 460.
Αίμα, Matt. 295, John 68, Acts 825.
Αίματεκχυσία, Heb. 161.
Αίνετας, Acts 186.
Αίρεσις, 1 Cor. 238, 2 Pet. 25.
Αίρω, Matt. 240, Mark 162, John 83.
Αίών, Matt. 225, 228, 422, 450, 1 Cor. 200, 2 Cor. 87, Eph. 73, 183, Heb. 48.
'Ακαθαρσία, Thess. 29.
'Ακανθα, Matt. 144.
'Ακαταστασία, 2 Cor. 109.
'Ακέραιος, Matt. 188, Rom. 450.
'Ακοή, Rom. 849, Gal. 62.
'Ακούω, Acts 164.
'Ακρασία, 1 Cor. 141 sq.
'Ακράτεια, Matt. 889.
'Ακρίς, Matt. 70.
'Αλεκτοροφωνία, Matt. 478.
'Αλγεία, 1 Cor. 116.
'Αλγείω, Eph. 154.
'Αλγής, John 68, 460, Rev. 128.
'Αλγινός, John 66, 460, Rev. 128.
'Αλγίδας, Matt. 109.
'Αλισιγέω, Acts 281.
'Αλίσγημα, Acts 281.
'Αλλά, Acts 848.
'Αλλάσσω, Rom. 84.
'Αλληγορία, Matt. 234.
'Αλλοτριωπέσκοπος, 1 Pet. 81, 82.
'Αλλότριος, Matt. 817 sq.
'Αμαρτάνω, Matt. 501, 504.
'Αμαρτία, John 294.
'Αμαρτολός, Luke 121.
'Αμήν, Matt. 109, John 96, Philem. 23.
'Αμφοδος, Mark 110.
'Αμωμος, Eph. 82.
'Ανάγαιων, Mark 140, Luke 833.
'Αναγέννησις, John 125.
'Ανάγω, Acts 228.
'Ανάθεμα, Acts 414, Rom. 802 sqq., 1 Cor. 248, 861, Gal. 19.
'Ανάκειμαι, Matt. 467, John 207.
'Ανακεφαλαίωσις, Eph. 40 sq.
'Ανακλίνω, Matt. 150, 467.
'Αναμένω, Thess. 28.
'Αναπίπτω, John 207.
'Αναπληρώω, Matt. 240.
'Ανασκενάζω, Acts 288.
'Ανάστασις, Phil. 55.
'Αναστρέφω, 2 Cor. 19.
'Ανδρέας, Ανδρείος, Ανδριάς, Matt. 182.
'Ανειρεύω, Acts 119.
'Ανετάζω, Acts 404.
'Ανεψιός, Matt. 256, Acts 295.
'Ανθύπατος, Matt. 501.
'Ανοια, Luke 92, 94.
'Αντάλλαγμα, Matt. 804, Mark 79.
'Ανταναπληρώω, Col. 84.
'Αντί, John 76, Note.
'Αντίτυπος, Rom. 182.
'Αντίχριστος, 1 John 74.
'Αντήλημα, John 149.
'Ανώγειν, Luke 838.
'Ανώθεν, John 122, 125.
'Απαίρω, Luke 89.
'Απαρχή, Rom. 274, 288, 866.
'Απείπον, 2 Cor. 65.
'Απειραστός, Jas. 49.
'Απεκδόμαι, Col. 47.
'Απέχω, Matt. 121 sq.
'Απιστέω, Rom. 116.
'Απιστία, Rom. 116.
'Απλότης, 2 Cor. 138, Eph. 216.
'Απλούς, Matt. 182.
'Απλώς, Jas. 38.
'Από, Matt. 208.
'Απογράφω, Luke 80.
'Αποκάλυψις, Matt. 25, Rev. 88 sq.
'Αποκαταδοκία, Rom. 269.
'Αποκατάστασις, Matt. 849, Acts 68, Rev. 389, Note.

- Ἀποκρίνομαι, Matt. 122, 212.
 Ἀπῶλλυνμι, Matt. 195.
 Ἀπολλίων, Matt. 195.
 Ἀπολίτρωσις, Eph. 86.
 Ἀπὸστολος, Matt. 181, Heb. 67, 68.
 Ἀποστερέω, Mark 100.
 Ἀποσυνάγωγος, John 810.
 Ἀρα οὖν, Thess. 82.
 Ἀργίριον, Matt. 818, Acts 854.
 Ἀρίσκια, Col. 18.
 Ἀριστον, Matt. 889.
 Ἀρπάζω, Rev. 16.
 Ἀρράβων, 2 Cor. 24, Eph. 45.
 Ἄρτος, Matt. 121 sq., 128.
 Ἀρχαίους, Matt. 112, 118.
 Ἀρχή, John 53, Rom. 285, Rev. 185.
 Ἀρχηγός, Acts 99.
 Ἀρχιερεῖς, Matt. 68.
 Ἀρχισυνάγωγός, Matt. 95, 178.
 Ἀρχιτεκνίκος, John 107.
 Ἀρχων, Matt. 178.
 Ἀσελγεία, Eph. 161.
 Ἀσθενής, Acts 875.
 Ἀσκός, Matt. 171.
 Ἀσάριον, Matt. 195, 196.
 Ἀστασίω, 1 Cor. 97.
 Ἀσωτία, Eph. 191.
 Ἀτάκτος, Thess. 89, 91.
 Αἰθή, Matt. 459, 491, 497.
 Αἰζάνω, Eph. 99.
 Ἀρανίζω, Matt. 127.
 Ἀφένδρος, Matt. 278.
 Ἀφένδρων, Matt. 278.
 Ἀφesis, Rom. 128, 184, Eph. 87.
 Ἀφύρασις, Eph. 238 sq.
 Ἀρήμι, Matt. 164.
 Ἀριξίς, Acts 874.
 Ἀσφρίω, Matt. 70.
 Ἀσφομή, 2 Cor. 94.
 Βαπτίζω, Matt. 555, Luke 57, Rom. 201.
 Βαπτισμός, Mark 64 sq.
 Βάρβαρος, Acts 466, Rom. 70, Note.
 Βαρθολομαῖος, Matt. 182.
 Βασανιστής, Matt. 834.
 Βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, Matt. 69.
 Βασιλεῖς, Matt. 48, Acts 817.
 Βασιλείω, Rom. 215.
 Βασκάνω, Gal. 62.
 Βαστάζω, John 371.
 Βατταρίζω, Matt. 128.
 Βαττολογίω, Matt. 128.
 Βδύλλυμα, Matt. 424 sq., Luke 251 sq.
 Βδελίσσω, Rom. 109.
 Βεελζεβοὺλ, Matt. 198.
 Βελίαι, 2 Cor. 116, 118.
 Βῆμα, Acts 230, 2 Cor. 85.
 Βιάζω, Matt. 205, 206, Rev. 96.
 Βιβλία, Matt. 10.
 Βίος, John 57.
 Βλασφημέω, Acts 257.
 Βλασφημία, Matt. 224.
 Βλέπω, 1 Cor. 43.
 Βοήθεια, Acts 457.
 Βουλή, Eph. 42.
 Βούλομαι, Eph. 42, Col. 85, Note, Philem. 18.
 Βριμάσθαι, John 858.
 Βρώσις, Matt. 182.
 Γάγγραινα, Tim. 46.
 Γάδαρη, Luke 135.
 Γαδαρανός, Matt. 164, Luke 135.
 Γαζοφυλάκιον, John 279.
 Γάμος, Rev. 836, Note.
 Γέεννα, Matt. 114, 210, 211, Luke 254, Rev. 848.
 Γενεά, Matt. 429, Eph. 111.
 Γενέσια, Matt. 262.
 Γένσις, Matt. 52, 566.
 Γεννάω, John 122.
 Γεννησαρέτ, Matt. 98.
 Γέννησις, Matt. 52, 566.
 Γερασηνός, Matt. 164, Luke 135.
 Γεργεσηνός, Matt. 164, Luke 185.
 Γίγνομαι, John 78.
 Γλώσσα, Acts 84.
 Γλωσσόκομον, John 871.
 Γνώμη, 1 Cor. 28.
 Γνωρίζω, 1 Cor. 308, 2 Cor. 137.
 Γνώσις, 2 Cor. 109.
 Γνωστός, Rom. 79, 82.
 Γολγοθάς, Matt. 519, 520, John 582.
 Γράμμα, Rom. 222, 228.
 Γραμματεῖς, Matt. 58, 251, Acts 861.
 Γυμνιτεῖω, 1 Cor. 97.
 Γυμνός, Acts 853.
 Γύναι, John 102, 105.
 Γυνή, Matt. 158, Note.
 Δαιμονίζομαι, Matt. 96.
 Δαιμόνιον, Matt. 166, Acts 144, 1 Cor. 212.
 Δακρύω, John 855.
 Δειλάω, John 446, Note.
 Δείπνον, Matt. 889, John 870.
 Δεισιδαιμων, Acts 824, 485.
 Δεκτός, Acts 205.
 Δεσπότης, Eph. 216, Note.
 Δεξιοβόλος, Acts 415.
 Δεξιολάβος, Acts 415.
 Δευτερόπρωτος, Luke 92 sq.
 Δημιουργία, Acts 846.
 Δηνάριον, Matt. 862, Luke 122, John 206, 870.
 Διά, Matt. 275.
 Διαβάλλω, Matt. 81.
 Διαβόλος, Matt. 81, 801, John 299, 1 Cor. 212, Eph. 170.
 Διαγρηγορέω, Luke 152.
 Διαδέχομαι, Acts 129.
 Διάδημα, Rev. 118.
 Διαθήκη, Matt. 13, 467, 1 Cor. 237, Gal. 75, Heb. 161.
 Διακονία, Rom. 885.
 Διακόνισσα, Rom. 446.
 Διάκονος, Rom. 446, Eph. 118, Phil. 12, Thess. 96, Rev. 189, Note.
 Διακρίνομαι, Jude 80.
 Διάκρισις, Rom. 416.
 Διακωλύω, Matt. 77.
 Διαλάσσω, Rom. 166.
 Διαλλάγή, Rom. 166.
 Διαλογισμός, Rom. 416.
 Διάνοια, Matt. 404, Eph. 75, Col. 25.
 Διασιέω, Luke 56.
 Διασπαρά, John 252.
 Διαφίρω, Rom. 107.
 Δηγκνέω, Matt. 86.
 Διδάσκω, Acts 219.
 Δίδυμος, Matt. 182.
 Δίδραχμον, Matt. 817 sq.
 Διέξοδος, Matt. 885.
 Δικαιοκρασία, Rom. 96.

- Δίκαιος, Acts 400, Rom. 74, 164 sq.
 Δικαιοσύνη, Matt. 102, 118, John 475, 476, Rom.
   74 sq., 118, Note, 184, 188 sq., 2 Cor. 155 sq.,
   Eph. 164 sq., 2 Pet. 11.
 Δικαίω, Rom. 74, 76, 100, 108 sq., 117, 122 sq., 180 sq., 185, Jas. 85.
 Δικαίωμα, Rom. 74, 89, 184 sq., 250, 254, Rev.
   837.
 Δικαίωσις, Rom. 74, 181, 144, 154 sq., Gal. 55.
 Διοπετέρις, Acts 361.
 Διορτίσω, Matt. 421.
 Διότι, Rom. 79, 118.
 Διστάζω, Matt. 272.
 Διχοτομέω, Matt. 435, Luke 208, 205.
 Δοκιμάζω, Rom. 107, Thess. 29.
 Δοκιμή, Rom. 162, 2 Cor. 84, 188.
 Δόκιμος, Rom. 88.
 Δοκός, Matt. 188.
 Δοξάζω, Rom. 84.
 Δόσις, Jas. 62.
 Δούλος, Rom. 58, Rev. 188, Note.
 Δραχμή, Matt. 338, Luke 285, Acts 354.
 Δύναμις, Matt. 164, 210, 255, John 108, 1 Cor.
   106, 2 Cor. 202, Rev. 825.
 Δύμα, Acts 194.
 Δώρημα, Jas. 52.
 Ἐάν, Acts 97.
 Ἐβραῖος, Heb. 10.
 Ἐγγαστρίμυθος, Acts 805.
 Ἐγείρω, Matt. 316.
 Ἐγκαίω, 2 Cor. 64, 65, Thess. 156.
 Ἐγκομβόδομαι, 1 Pet. 89.
 Ἐγκοπή, 1 Cor. 184.
 Ἐγκόπτω, Acts 420, Gal. 128, Note.
 Ἐγκρατέω, 1 Cor. 142.
 Ἐθνη, Rev. 280.
 Ἐθνος, John 364, Rev. 230.
 Ἔθος, Acts 108.
 Εἰ, Matt. 218, Luke 217, Acts 97.
 Εἰ γε, 2 Cor. 81, Note.
 Εἰδέναι, Thess. 90.
 Εἰδωλεῖον, 1 Cor. 174.
 Εἰδωλόθυτον, Rev. 120.
 Εἰδωλόλατρες, 1 Cor. 117.
 Εἰκοή, Matt. 112 sq., 1 Cor. 309.
 Εἰληκρίνεα, 1 Cor. 116.
 Εἰλικρινέω, Phil. 16.
 Εἰ μή, Matt. 258.
 Εἰμί, Matt. 145, John 78.
 Εἰρήνη, Luke 39, Rom. 57, Eph. 22, Thess. 11.
 Εἰς τό, Matt. 555, 557 sq., Rom. 80, 88.
 Εἰσέρρω, Matt. 126.
 Ἐκατόνταρχος, Matt. 151.
 Ἐκβάλλω, Matt. 179, 221.
 Ἐκδιώκω, Thess. 42.
 Ἐκζιθεν, Acts 249.
 Ἐκθαμβέω, Mark 143.
 Ἐκκακέω, 2 Cor. 64, 65.
 Ἐκκλησία, Matt. 298, 298, 828, 829, Acts 56, 86,
   185, Eph. 68, Thess. 12, Rev. 117.
 Ἐκλάμπω, Matt. 244.
 Ἐκλεκτός, Matt. 420, Rom. 64.
 Ἐκλυγή, Thess. 17.
 Ἐκλύω, Matt. 178.
 Ἐκπόμενοι, John 469.
 Ἐκτενής, Acts 226.
 Ἐκτενώς, Acts 226.
 Ἐλαφρία, 2 Cor. 21.
 Ἐλαφρός, Matt. 214.
 Ἐλέγγω, John 460, 473, Rev. 188.
 Ἐλεος, 2 John 188, Heb. 98.
 Ἐλεώ, Rom. 813, Note.
 Ἐλκίω, John 220 sq.
 Ἐλλην, Acts 215.
 Ἐλληνίς, Mark 67.
 Ἐλληνιστής, Acts 215.
 Ἐλλογέω, Rom. 180.
 Ἐλπίζω, Matt. 220.
 Ἐμβριμάομαι, Matt. 176, John 358.
 Ἐμπαίζω, Matt. 63.
 Ἐν, Heb. 24.
 Ἐνδεγμα, Thess. 115.
 Ἐνεός, Acts 164.
 Ἐνθύμησις, Acts 326.
 Ἐννεός, Acts 164.
 Ἐνοχος, Matt. 114.
 Ἐν ταχεί, Rev. 89.
 Ἐντός, Rev. 97, Note.
 Ἐντρέπω, 1 Cor. 100.
 Ἐντοπαρξίς, John 384.
 Ἐξανάστασις, Phil. 55.
 Ἐξηγέομαι, John 78.
 Ἐξηγήσεις, John 78, Note.
 Ἐξηγητής, John 78, Note.
 Ἐξηχέω, Thess. 22.
 Ἐξίστημι, Acts 142.
 Ἐξομολογέω, Matt. 70, 218, Acts 354, Rom. 419.
 Ἐξουσία, Matt. 181, John 67, 1 Cor.
 Ἐπαρχία, Acts 480.
 Ἐπειδήπερ, Luke 11.
 Ἐπηρεάζω, Matt. 118.
 Ἐπηρεία, Matt. 118.
 Ἐπί, Matt. 552, Eph. 56, Note.
 Ἐπιβαίνω, Acts 480.
 Ἐπίγαμος, Matt. 126, Note.
 Ἐπιγινώσκω, Matt. 218.
 Ἐπιδόρπιος, Matt. 126.
 Ἐπιεικεία, 2 Cor. 168.
 Ἐπιζητέω, Matt. 184.
 Ἐπιώδοος, Matt. 122.
 Ἐπίσποτος, Matt. 122.
 Ἐπίορκος, Matt. 122.
 Ἐπίουρος, Matt. 122.
 Ἐπιούσιος, Matt. 121 sq., 126, Luke 179.
 Ἐπίσημος, Matt. 510.
 Ἐπισκευάζω, Acts 883, 884, 887.
 Ἐπισκοπή, Acts 18, Tim. 86.
 Ἐπίσκοπος, Acts 222, 374, Eph. 150, Note, Phil.
   12, Thess. 96.
 Ἐπισταθμία, Matt. 118.
 Ἐπίσταμαι, Acts 345.
 Ἐπιστήθιος, Matt. 182, John 5.
 Ἐπιτήδειος, Matt. 126, Note.
 Ἐπίτροπος, Matt. 501, 508.
 Ἐπιφανής, Acts 39.
 Ἐπιχορηγία, Eph. 155.
 Ἐποπτος, Matt. 122.
 Ἐπουράνιος, Eph. 61.
 Ἐποιῶσα, Matt. 126.
 Ἐργον, Matt. 164, John 185, Thess. 15.
 Ἐρευνάω, John 195.
 Ἐρίθεια, Rom. 98, Gal. 188, Note.
 Ἐρχομαι, Matt. 202 sq., 312.
 Ἐρρήθη, Matt. 112 sq.
 Ἐρωτώ, Thess. 61.
 Ἐσοπτην, 1 Cor. 272.
 Ἐταῖρος, Matt. 207, 352.
 Ἐυαγγελίζω, Matt. 94, 96, 1 Cor. 80.
 Ἐυαγγέλιον, Matt. 94, 96, Rom. 59.

Εὐδία, Matt. 286.
 Εὐδοκία, Luke 39, Rom. 341, Eph. 34.
 Εὐθείως, Mark 2, 17, 28.
 Εὐλόγῳ, Eph. 27.
 Εὐλογητός, Rom. 86, 144, Eph. 27.
 Εὐλογία, Eph. 27.
 Εὐνους, Matt. 114.
 Εὐνουχίζω, Matt. 339.
 Εὐνούχος, Acts 155.
 Εὐοδόω, Rom. 69.
 Εὐπερίστατος, Heb. 198.
 Εὐπράττω, Acts 289.
 Εὐρακίλων, Acts 457.
 Εὐσεβεία, Acts 66.
 Εὐσχημων, Acts 318.
 Εὐχαριστίω, Rom. 84.
 Ἐυχαριστία, Matt. 470.
 Ἐυχαριστος, Col. 70.

 Ζηλωτής, Matt. 182.
 Ζημιόω, Matt. 303.
 Ζητέω, Matt. 134.
 Ζιζάνιον, Matt. 243, 244.
 Ζυγός, Rev. 173.
 Ζύμη, Matt. 245.
 Ζωή, John 57, Rom. 343, Note, 352.
 Ζώνη, Matt. 184.

 Ἦ, Matt. 109.
 Ἠγεμών, Matt. 188, 501, 503.
 Ἠλικία, Matt. 134, Luke 48, Eph. 152.
 Ἠπιος, Thess. 30.
 Ἠτοί, Rom. 211.
 Ἠττημα, Rom. 364 sq., 1 Cor. 124 sq.

 Θαδδαῖος, Matt. 182.
 Θάλπω, Thess. 30.
 Θαρσέω, Matt. 173.
 Θαύμα, Matt. 154.
 Θανμάσιον, Matt. 378.
 Θεάδομαι, Matt. 205.
 Θεόκλητος, Rom. 80, 83.
 Θέλημα, Eph. 42, Col. 35, Note.
 Θέλω, Eph. 42, Col. 35, Note.
 Θεός, 2 Cor. 67.
 Θεοστονυγής, Rom. 80, 88.
 Θεότης, Rom. 80, 83.
 Θεραπεύω, Acts 324.
 Θηρίον, Rev. 174, Note.
 Θλίψις, Phil. 21.
 Θρηνέω, Matt. 208.
 Θρησκεία, Jas. 67.
 Θρήσκος, Jas. 66 sq.
 Θραμβεύω, 2 Cor. 39 sq., 40, Note.
 Θρόνος, Col. 22.
 Θουρβέω, Acts 368.
 Θυγάτηρ, Matt. 166.
 Θυμομαχίω, Acts 230.
 Θυμός, Matt. 481, Rom. 98 sq., 275 sq.
 Θυσία, Eph. 177.
 Θωμάς, Matt. 182.

 Ἰάκωβος, Matt. 182.
 Ἰδιος, 1 Cor. 140.
 Ἰησοῦς, Luke 42.
 Ἰκανός, Acts 179.
 —ικος, 1 Cor. 8, Note, 69, 2 Cor. 46.
 Ἰλάσσομαι, 1 John 44.
 Ἰλασμός, Matt. 336, 1 John 44 sq.
 Ἰλαστήριον, Rom. 128, 182 sq., Heb. 152.

Ἰλεως, Matt. 302.
 Ἰμάς, Matt. 512.
 Ἰμάτιον, Matt. 118, John 404.
 Ἰνα, Acts 349, Rom. 118, Eph. 56, Note.
 —ινος, 1 Cor. 8, Note, 69, 2 Cor. 46.
 Ἰουδας, Matt. 182.
 Ἰσκαριώτης, Matt. 182.
 Ἰσόψυχος, Phil. 45.
 Ἰστημι, Matt. 462.
 Ἰχθύς, Luke 83.
 Ἰωάννης, Matt. 182, John 98, Note.
 Ἰωνά, John 98, Note.

 Καθαρίζω, 2 Cor. 119.
 Καθηγητής, Matt. 410 sq.
 Καθιστάνω, Rom. 187 sq.
 Καθιστάω, Rom. 187 sq.
 Καθίστημι, Rom. 187 sq.
 Καθολικός, Matt. 23, 27.
 Καθοράω, Rom. 80.
 Καινός, Eph. 163.
 Καιρός, Matt. 165, 286, 2 Cor. 108, Rev. 90.
 Κακία, 1 Cor. 116.
 Καλέω, Rom. 152.
 Κάμηλος, Matt. 845.
 Κάμιλος, Matt. 845.
 Καμνίω, Matt. 240.
 Καναναῖος, Matt. 180, 182.
 Κανανίτης, Matt. 180, 182.
 Κάπηλος, 2 Cor. 41.
 Καρδία, Matt. 404, 1 John 123.
 Καρπός, Matt. 144.
 Κάρφος, Matt. 138.
 Καταβραβεύω, Col. 54.
 Καταγεγνώσκω, 1 John 124.
 Καταδυναστεύω, Acts 202.
 Κατακλῆρονομέω, Acts 247.
 Κατακρίνω, Matt. 138.
 Κατακυριεύω, Matt. 364.
 Καταλαμβάνω, John 59, Acts 202.
 Καταλλάγῃ, Matt. 366, Rom. 166, 167.
 Καταλλάσσω, Rom. 166, 2 Cor. 98.
 Κατάλυμα, Luke 333.
 Κατάλω, Matt. 109 sq.
 Καταναρκάω, 2 Cor. 181.
 Κατανοέω, Heb. 67.
 Κατάνυξις, Rom. 868.
 Καταξίδω, Luke 326.
 Καταποντίζω, Matt. 322.
 Καταποντισμός, Matt. 324.
 Καταρτισμός, Eph. 151.
 Καταρτιστήρ, 1 Cor. 28.
 Κατασκήνωσις, Matt. 159 sq.
 Καταβίβλω, Matt. 485.
 Κατείδωλος, Acts 322.
 Κατέναντι, Rom. 151 sq.
 Κατεξουσιάζω, Matt. 364.
 Κατέχω, Acts 73.
 Κατισχίω, Matt. 293.
 Κατοικέω, Acts 33.
 Κατοπτρίζω, 2 Cor. 58, 60.
 Καίτσω, Matt. 354.
 Κανχάομαι, Rom. 108, Note.
 Καίχημα, Rom. 135, 144.
 Καίχησις, Rom. 135, 144.
 Κασαρνανίμ, Matt. 90.
 Κέλεγμα, Thess. 75.
 Κεραία, Matt. 109.
 Κεράννυμι, Matt. 188.
 Κεράτια, Luke 239.

Κερδαίνω, Acts 458.
 Κεφαλαῖω, Mark 117.
 Κήνος, Matt. 819.
 Κηρίσω, Rev. 377.
 Κῆτος, Matt. 225.
 Κῆφος, Matt. 182, 298.
 Κινύρα, Matt. 437.
 Κλαίω, John 855.
 Κλάσμα, Matt. 266.
 Κληρονομέω, 1 Cor. 125.
 Κληρονομία, Acts 115.
 Κλήρος, Eph. 41, 1 Pet. 86.
 Κληρώ, Eph. 41.
 Κλήσις, 1 Cor. 152.
 Κληρός, Rom. 64, 1 Cor. 19.
 Κλωπά, John 585.
 Κοδράντης, Matt. 114, 195.
 Κούλια, John 255, Phil. 61.
 Κοινωνία, 1 Cor. 210, 2 Cor. 139.
 Κόπος, Rev. 115.
 Κόπτω, Matt. 208, 428.
 Κορυφή, Matt. 84.
 Κόσμος, Matt. 85, 422, 2 Cor. 67, Eph. 73, Heb. 48, 1 John 63.
 Κόφινος, Matt. 266, 289, 290.
 Κράββατος, Mark 27, John 184.
 Κράζω, John 71.
 Κράσπεδον, Matt. 275, 406, 410.
 Κρέας, Rom. 232.
 Κρίμα, Rom. 118, 1 Cor. 125.
 Κρίνω, Matt. 118, 138, Luke 105.
 Κρίσις, Matt. 113, 412.
 Κριτήριον, 1 Cor. 122.
 Κρυπτή, Luke 187.
 Κρυφαῖος, Matt. 127.
 Κτίζω, Rev. 155.
 Κτίσις, Rom. 269 sq., 2 Cor. 98.
 Κυλλός, Matt. 284.
 Κυρήνιος, Luke 81.
 Κυρία, 2 John 136 sq.
 Κυριακόν, Matt. 293.
 Κύριος, Luke 36, Rom. 62, Eph. 216, Note, Thess. 12.
 Κωφός, Matt. 222.

Ααλίω, 1 Cor. 138, 2 Cor. 184.
 Ααλία, John 166, Note, 291.
 Ααμπάς, Rev. 153, Note.
 Αατεινός, Rev. 260.
 Αατρεύω, Rom. 69, 86.
 Αεββαῖος, Matt. 182.
 Αέγω, 1 Cor. 183.
 Αειτουργέω, Acts 289, Rom. 69.
 Αειτουργία, 2 Cor. 157, Note, Phil. 49.
 Αεπίς, Acts 169.
 Αέπρα, Matt. 150.
 Αεπτόν, Mark 127.
 Αηνός, Matt. 387.
 Αικμάω, Matt. 388.
 Αίθος, Matt. 293.
 Αίτρα, John 371, Note.
 Αογία, 1 Cor. 855.
 Αόγιος, Acts 845.
 Αόγος, John 52, 54 sqq., Acts 147, Rom. 299, 323, Note, 324.
 Αουτρόν, Eph. 199.
 Δούω, Rev. 92.
 Δυπέω, Rom. 420 sq.
 Δύπη, 2 Cor. 80.
 Διτρον, Matt. 365.
 Δυχνία, Matt. 104.

Δύχνος, Matt. 104.
 Δύω, Matt. 110, Rev. 92.
 Μαγαδά, }
 Μαγδαλά, } Matt. 236.
 Μαγδαλάν, }
 Μαθητένω, Matt. 555.
 Μακάριος, Rom. 86, Note, 144.
 Μακροθυμία, 2 Cor. 109 sq.
 Μαμωνάς, Matt. 138.
 Μαστιγώ, Matt. 512.
 Μαστίζω, Matt. 512.
 Μάστιξ, Matt. 512.
 Ματαίωτης, Rom. 84, 271.
 Μάτην, Matt. 277.
 Ματθαῖος, Matt. 182.
 Μάχαира, Rom. 400.
 Μεθύσκα, John 102.
 Μέλλω, Acts 221.
 Μέλος, Jas. 112.
 Μεριμνάω, Matt. 138, 189.
 Μέρος, Acts 256, 348.
 Μεταμέλεια, 2 Cor. 129, Note.
 Μεταμέλομαι, Matt. 501, 2 Cor. 129, Note.
 Μετανοέω, Matt. 69, 78, 91, 322, 501, Mark 19, 2 Cor. 129, Note.
 Μετάνοια, 2 Cor. 129, Note.
 Μεταξύ, Acts 257.
 Μετρωρίζω, Luke 194, 201.
 Μετρητής, John 106.
 Μετριοπαθές, Heb. 102.
 Μή, Matt. 223.
 Μή γένοιτο, Rom. 112, 117, 200, 201, Gal. 49.
 Μήτι, Matt. 223, Rom. 118, Note.
 Μικρότερος, Matt. 206 sq.
 Μνημονεύω, Thess. 15.
 Μογιλάλος, Mark 69.
 Μονή, John 484.
 Μονογενής, John 74.
 Μορφή, Rom. 382, Phil. 33.
 Μόρφωσις, Rom. 108 sq.
 Μόσχος, Rev. 148.
 Μοσχοποιέω, Acts 125.
 Μυριάς, Acts 389.
 Μυστήριον, Rev. 107, 318.
 Μωρός, Matt. 114.
 Νέος, Eph. 163.
 Νεωκόρος, Acts 361.
 Νή, 1 Cor. 330.
 Νομίζω, Matt. 108.
 Νομικός, Matt. 251, 403.
 Νομοδιδάσκαλος, Matt. 251.
 Νόμος, Matt. 109, Rom. 121.
 Νοσώδης, Matt. 132.
 Νουθετώ, 1 Cor. 101.
 Νούς, Rom. 233, 241, 1 Cor. 28, 63, 287, Eph. 125, Note, 164, Thess. 95, Tit. 10.
 Νυχθήμερον, Matt. 226, Luke 187.
 Ξέστης, Mark 65.

Όδός, Matt. 386, Acts 162.
 Οικέτης, Rom. 417.
 Οικημα, Acts 228.
 Οικονόμος, Luke 205.
 Οικτείρω, Rom. 313, Note.
 Οικονομική, Rev. 181.
 Οικωδομή, Eph. 99.
 Οινοπότης, Matt. 208.

- Ὀλιγόψυχος, Thess. 90.
 Ὀλόκληρος, Matt. 182, Thess. 94 sq.
 Ὀλοτελής, Thess. 94.
 Ὀμειρομαί, Thess. 81.
 Ὀμιλία, 1 Cor. 881.
 Ὀμοίω, Matt. 145.
 Ὀμολογία, 2 Cor. 157.
 Ὀνομα, Rev. 119, Note.
 Ὀνος, Matt. 870.
 Ὀπία, Rom. 210, 215.
 Ὀπώρα, Jude 22, Rev. 819, Note.
 Ὀπως, Rom. 118, 124.
 Ὀραμα, Matt. 808, Luke 154.
 Ὀργή, Rom. 80 sq., 98 sq., Thess. 24, Rev. 275 sq.
 Ὀρίζω, Rom. 56, 59, 60, 61.
 Ὀρμάω, Matt. 166.
 Ὀρμή, Acts 262.
 Ὄσιος, Matt. 71, Acts 247, Rev. 128, 299, Note.
 Ὄσιότης, Eph. 164 sq.
 Ὄσμή, 2 Cor. 40.
 Ὄστρακον, 2 Cor. 74.
 Ὄσις, Matt. 122, 126.
 Ὄυτος, Heb. 67.
 Ὄυτως, Matt. 124.
 Ὄφειλημα, Matt. 126.
 Ὄφελον, Rev. 186.
 Ὄχλος, Matt. 173.
 Ὄψάριον, John 210.
 Ὄψέ, Matt. 544.
- Παιδερασία, Rom. 87.
 Παιδεύω, Rev. 188.
 Παιδίσκη, Acts 805.
 Παῖς, Acts 67.
 Παλιγγενεσία, Matt. 849, John 125.
 Παντοκράτωρ, Rev. 93.
 Παράβασις, Matt. 172.
 Παραβολή, Matt. 234, Luke 284, John 817, 818.
 Παραδίδωμι, Matt. 90.
 Παράδοξος, Matt. 154.
 Παράδοσις, Gal. 24, Thess. 144.
 Παράκλησις, Acts 292, 298, Thess. 29.
 Παράκλητος, John 482, 440 sqq., 1 John 48 sq.
 Παρακολουθεῖν, Luke 11.
 Παράλυσις, Matt. 152, Luke 86.
 Παραλυτικός, Matt. 96, 152.
 Παραλύω, Luke 86.
 Παράπτωμα, Matt. 126, Rom. 172, 182.
 Παράσημος, Acts 470.
 Παρασκευή, Matt. 455, 535, 587, John 569.
 Παρατηρήσεις, Matt. 96, Note.
 Παρατίθημι, Acts 272.
 Πάρεσις, Rom. 128, 184, Eph. 37.
 Παρθένος, John 12, 1 Cor. 159.
 Παροιμία, Matt. 238, John 817, Note, 818.
 Παροργισμός, Eph. 170, Rev. 11 sq.
 Παρουσία, 2 Pet. 18.
 Παῖρησία, Eph. 117.
 Πάσχα, Matt. 455, 459.
 Πατρίς, Matt. 255.
 Παῦλος, Acts 174, Rom. 58.
 Παχύνω, Matt. 240.
 Πειθός, 1 Cor. 52.
 Πειράζω, Matt. 81, 82.
 Πειρασμός, Thess. 64, Rev. 180 sq.
 Πέλαγος, Matt. 322.
 Πένης, Matt. 102, 2 Cor. 155.
 Περιέργος, Acts 354.
 Περικάθαρμα, 1 Cor. 97.
 Περιέκμαι, Acts 474.
- Περιπίπτω, Jas. 37.
 Περιουσία, Jas. 63.
 Περιουσίω, Matt. 118.
 Περιχώρησις, John 884, Note.
 Περιψήμα, 1 Cor. 97.
 Περπερεύω, 1 Cor. 269.
 Πέτρα, Matt. 182, 293, 296 sqq.
 Πέτρος, Matt. 182, 293, 296.
 Πηγή, John 149.
 Πηλίκος, Gal. 157.
 Πινυκίδιον, Luke 26.
 Πίναξ, Matt. 261.
 Πίπτω, Rom. 864.
 Πιστικός, Mark 188.
 Πίστις, Matt. 412, Rom. 63, 385, Note, 415, Gal. 27, Phil. 18 sq.
 Πιστός, Eph. 21.
 Πλεονεξία, Eph. 162, Col. 64, Thess. 80.
 Πληρώ, Matt. 53, 109, Acts 26, Col. 17, Rev. 125.
 Πλήρωμα, John 76, Rom. 369 sq., Eph. 39, 64.
 Πληροφού, Luke 11.
 Πληφορία, Luke 11.
 Πλούτος, Rom. 95.
 Πνεῦμα, Matt. 480, Rom. 61 sq., 222, 223, 223 sqq., 1 Cor. 62, 283, 287, Gal. 142, Eph. 125, Note, 164, Thess. 95, 98.
 Πνευματικός, Eph. 28, Note.
 Ποιμαίνω, Matt. 59.
 Ποιμήν, Matt. 95.
 Ποίεω, Matt. 225.
 Πολιτάρχης, Acts 817.
 Πολίτευμα, Phil. 61.
 Πολυνάνδιον, Matt. 164.
 Πολυμερῶς, Heb. 28.
 Πονηρία, 1 Cor. 116.
 Πονηρόν, Matt. 126.
 Πονηρός, Matt. 117, 126, 182.
 Πορνεία, Gal. 188, Note.
 Πόρω, Rom. 362.
 Ποταπός, Matt. 159.
 Πραγματεύομαι, Luke 290.
 Πραιτώριον, Matt. 510, Phil. 19, 20.
 Πράκτωρ, Luke 209.
 Πράδτης, 2 Cor. 168.
 Πρασία, Matt. 266.
 Πρεσβεύω, 2 Cor. 100.
 Πρεσβύτερος, Matt. 95, Acts 222, Eph. 150, Note, Thess. 96.
 Πρεσβύτερος, Philem. 17.
 Προαιτιόδομαι, Rom. 120.
 Προαύλιον, Matt. 491, 497, 498.
 Προβιβάζω, Matt. 261, 268.
 Προγιγνώσκω, Rom. 278 sq.
 Πρόγνωσις, Rom. 279, Note.
 Πρότρω, Rom. 118, 120.
 Πρόθεσις, Rom. 278, 289.
 Πραθεσμία, Gal. 96.
 Προσρίζω, Rom. 279.
 Προσάββατων, Matt. 455, 535.
 Προσαγωγή, Rom. 160 sq.
 Προσενχή, Matt. 95, Acts 304.
 Προσήλυτος, Matt. 151.
 Πρόσκαυρος, Matt. 241.
 Προσκληρόν, Acts 817.
 Προσκοπή, 2 Cor. 108.
 Προσκυνέω, Matt. 58, 85, Rev. 267.
 Πρόσδος, Rom. 160 sq.
 Προσποιέω, Luke 392.
 Προσφάνιον, John 681.
 Προσφορά, Eph. 177.

Προτίθημι, Rom. 182.
 Πρόφασις, Thess. 80.
 Προφήτης, Matt. 109.
 Προφθάνω, Matt. 818.
 Προτείνω, Col. 24.
 Πρώτος, Matt. 180, 182.
 Πρωτοστατής, Acts 420.
 Πρωτοτόκος, Matt. 52, 566, Luke 84, John 74.
 Πταίω, Rom. 864.
 Πτερύγιον, Matt. 84.
 Πτωχέω, 2 Cor. 142.
 Πτωχός, Matt. 102.
 Πυγμή, Mark 64.
 Πίθων, Acts 802, 805.
 Πυλόν, Matt. 491, 497, 498.
 Πυρώ, 1 Cor. 142.
 Πύρωσις, Eph. 161, Note.
 Ραπίζω, Matt. 490, 494.
 Ρεφάν, Acts 124.
 Ρήτωρ, Acts 419.
 Ρίπτω, Matt. 178.
 Ρίνομαι, Matt. 126.
 Σαβαθανί, Matt. 526.
 Σαββατισμός, Heb. 84, 87.
 Σάββατον, 1 Cor. 855.
 Σαδδουκαίος, Matt. 71.
 Σαίνω, Thess. 51.
 Σανδάλιον, Matt. 185.
 Σαπρός, Matt. 144, Eph. 171.
 Σαργάνη, 2 Cor. 190.
 Σαρκικός, Rom. 287, 1 Cor. 69, 2 Cor. 46.
 Σάρκινος, Rom. 287, 1 Cor. 69, 2 Cor. 46.
 Σάρξ, Matt. 295, 480, John 72, 128, 228, Rom. 61, 232 sq., 285, 408, Gal. 142, Philem. 20, Thess. 95, 98.
 Σάρων, Acts 186.
 Σάτον, Matt. 245.
 Σαῦλος, Rom. 58.
 Σεβάζομαι, Rom. 86.
 Σέβασμα, Acts 322, 824.
 Σεισμός, Matt. 161, Luke 188, Rev. 177.
 Σεληνιάζομαι, Matt. 96.
 Σημαίνω, Rev. 89.
 Σημείον, Matt. 154, 210, John 108, 2 Cor. 202, Rev. 270.
 Σίκλος, Matt. 818, 464.
 Σιμεών, Matt. 182.
 Σιμκίνθιον, Acts 358.
 Σίμων, Matt. 182, Acts 280.
 Σίναπι, Matt. 245.
 Σινιάζω, Luke 842.
 Σκανδάλιστρον, Matt. 808.
 Σκανδαλίζω, Matt. 114, 241, 1 Cor. 175.
 Σκάνδαλον, Matt. 241, 808, Rev. 119 sq.
 Σκεῖνος, Matt. 222, 224, 2 Cor. 74, Thess. 61 sq., 1 Pet. 53.
 Σκηή, Acts 180.
 Σκηνοπηγία, John 289.
 Σκηνοποιός, Acts 384 sq.
 Σκήνος, 2 Cor. 79.
 Σκηνός, John 71, 78, Note, Rev. 192.
 Σκῆνωμα, Acts 180.
 Σκόλοψ, 2 Cor. 200.
 Σκορπίζω, 2 Cor. 155.
 Σκύβαλον, Phil. 54.
 Σκύλλα, Matt. 178.
 Σουδάριον, Luke 290, Acts 858.
 Σπείρα, Matt. 518 sq., John 544.
 Σπεκουλάτωρ, Matt. 58.

Σπερμολόγος, Acts 322, 828.
 Σπιλάς, Jude 21.
 Σπλάγχα, 2 Cor. 116, Philem. 18.
 Σπλαγχνίζομαι, Mark 72.
 Σπόριμος, Matt. 216.
 Σπυρίς, Matt. 226, 285, 289, 290.
 Στάδιον, John 214.
 Στατήρ, Matt. 817.
 Στέγω, 1 Cor. 184, Thess. 51.
 Στέλλω, 2 Cor. 145.
 Στέφανος, Phil. 62, Rev. 118.
 Στιβάς, Mark 110.
 Στοιχείον, Gal. 96, Col. 44.
 Στρατηγός, Acts 806.
 Στρέφω, Matt. 322.
 Στρούβιον, Matt. 196.
 Στυγνάζω, Mark 101.
 Συγγενής, Matt. 256.
 Συγκατάθεσις, 2 Cor. 118.
 Συγκλείω, Rom. 859, 872, Gal. 86.
 Συγκρίνω, 1 Cor. 61.
 Σύνυγος, Phil. 65.
 Συκοφαντέω, Luke 56.
 Συμβιβάζω, Acts 179, 1 Cor. 63 sq.
 Σύμβολον, Matt. 234.
 Συμεών, Matt. 182, Acts 280.
 Σύμμορφος, Rom. 279, 280.
 Συμπαρακαλέω, Rom. 67.
 Συμπολίτης, Eph. 97.
 Σύμφυτος, Rom. 200, 202.
 Σύμφωνσις, 2 Cor. 118.
 Συνάγω, Matt. 95, Acts 218.
 Συναγωγή, Matt. 95, Rev. 117.
 Συναλίζω, Acts 12.
 Συνειδήσις, 2 Cor. 18 sq., 66, Tit. 10, 1 John 128.
 Συνθρόνιστος, Acts 884.
 Συνήμι, Matt. 241, Rom. 120, Note.
 Συνίστημι, Rom. 113, 118.
 Συνπολίτης, Eph. 97.
 Συντέμνω, Rom. 824.
 Συντηρέω, Matt. 170.
 Σύντλημα, Rom. 121.
 Σύντροφος, Acts 238, 239.
 Σφραγίζω, Eph. 44.
 Σχήμα, Rom. 882, Phil. 85.
 Σώμα, Rom. 282 sq., 1 Cor. 62, Thess. 95, 98.
 Ταλαίπωρος, Rom. 242.
 Τάλαντον, Matt. 838.
 Ταμείον, Matt. 128, 126.
 Ταρταρώ, 2 Pet. 27.
 Τάσσω, Acts 258.
 Τέκνον, Matt. 166.
 Τέκτων, Matt. 255, Mark 58.
 Τέλος, Matt. 191, 819.
 Τελώνης, Matt. 118, 170.
 Τελώνιον, Matt. 170.
 Τέρας, Matt. 154, 210, John 108, 2 Cor. 202.
 Τετράρχης, Matt. 262.
 Τόκος, Matt. 442.
 Τοῦ, Acts 119, 201.
 Τηρέω, Jude 11.
 Τραχηλίζω, Heb. 94.
 Τρίβολος, Matt. 144.
 Τροφή, Matt. 186.
 Τροφός, Thess. 80.
 Τροχός, Jas. 96 sq.
 Τρώγω, John 224, 227.
 Τύμβος, Matt. 164.
 Τύπος, Matt. 234, Rom. 181.

Τυφικόν, Acts 457.

Υβρις, Acts 458, 456.

Υγιής, Matt. 182.

Υδρία, John 149.

Υιοθεσία, Rom. 260.

Υιός, Matt. 152.

Υάγω, Matt. 85.

Υπανδρος, Rom. 218, 219.

Υπερορά, Acts 826.

Υπερών, Matt. 123, 140, Luke 388.

Υπηρέτης, Matt. 95, 1 Cor. 87.

Υπόδημα, Matt. 67, 184, 185.

Υπόδικος, Rom. 121.

Υποζύγιον, Matt. 870.

Υποκρίνουαι, Matt. 122.

Υποκριτής, Matt. 122.

Υπολήριον, Matt. 387.

Υπομένω, Rom. 392, Note.

Υπομονή, Luke 320, Rom. 162, 275, Jas. 37, Rev. 108, 130.

Υπόστασις, Heb. 26.

Υπωπιάζω, Luke 271, 1 Cor. 193, 195.

Υστερέω, John 102.

Φανέρωσις, Matt. 25.

Φαντασία, Acts 485 sq.

Φάντασμα, Matt. 272.

Φθάνω, Matt. 228, Rev. 96.

Φθινοπωρινός, Jude 22.

Φθίνω, Jude 22.

Φιλέω, Matt. 404, John 638, 639, 1 Cor. 861.

Φίλημα, Thess. 102.

Φίλιππος, Matt. 182.

Φιλοτιμέω, 2 Cor. 84, Thess. 68.

Φοβέω, Matt. 195.

Φραγελλώ, Matt. 512.

Φρίσσω, John 149.

Φρήν, 1 Cor. 290.

Φυλακή, Matt. 114, Acts 228.

Φυλακτήριον, Matt. 410.

Φωνή, Acts 82, 83.

Φωστήρ, Rev. 878, 884.

Φωτισμός, 2 Cor. 68.

Χαλακός, Mark 58.

Χαλκολίβανον, Rev. 105.

Χάραγμα, Acts 826.

Χάραξ, Luke 298.

Χαρακτήρ, Heb. 26.

Χάρις, Acts 258, Rom. 57, 68, 1 Cor. 21, 23, Eph. 22, Thess. 11, Heb. 98, 2 John 188.

Χάρισμα, Rom. 69, 182 sqq., 1 Cor. 23, 142.

Χαριτών, Luke 19.

Χάσμα, Luke 255.

Χειμών, Matt. 286.

Χειροτονέω, Acts 272.

Χιτών, Matt. 118, John 585.

Χλωρός, Rev. 416.

Χολή, Matt. 522.

Χορηγέω, 2 Cor. 156.

Χρηματίζω, Matt. 59, Acts 195, 219.

Χρηματισμός, Rom. 861.

Χρηστεύω, 1 Cor. 269.

Χρηστολογία, Rom. 444.

Χρηστός, Matt. 214.

Χρηστότης, 2 Cor. 110.

Χριστός, Matt. 48, John 93, Acts 46.

Ψαλτήρ, Matt. 437.

Ψαλτήριον, Matt. 437.

Ψεύδω, Acts 85.

Ψυχή, Matt. 183, 198, 308, 404, Rom. 233, 1 Cor. 62, Thess. 95, 98, Jude 28.

Ψυχικός, 1 Cor. 62, 69, Jude 28.

Ψωμίς, 1 Cor. 268.

Ψόδις, Matt. 423, Acts 46 sq.

Ψς, Rev. 308, Note.

Ψαυάν, Matt. 371, 378, John 377, Note.

TOPICAL INDEX.

NOTES.—The Numbers refer to the pages of the Commentaries on the Books mentioned—which are pagged separately in each Volume.

- AARON, relation of Christ and Melchisedek to, Heb. 106; jewels in the breast-plate of, Rev. 20; priesthood of, Heb. 104.
- ABADDON, Rev. 35, 199, 209, 370.
- Abba, Mark 14; Rom. 261, Gal. 98.
- ABEL, blood of, Matt. 414; death of, 1 John 115, 119.
- ABIA, Luke 15.
- ABIATHAR, Mark 32.
- Abomination of desolation, Matt. 424sq., Mark 135.
- ABRAHAM, meaning of the name, Rom. 151, Note; "history of, Acts 113sq.; his character as shown by Paul and James, Rom. 145; children of, Matt. 72, 75, John 290, 300, Rom. 149sq.; Gal. 75sq.; Christ's existence before, John 298, 300; God's covenant with, Rom. 149sq., Gal. 75sq.; descent from the boast of the Jews, Luke 56, John 288; his faith, Matt. 50, 51, 53, John 297, Acts 117, Rom. 137, Note, 145sq., 162sq., Gal. 66sq., 70sq., Heb. 138, James 86; called "the friend of God," John 7; James 86; compared to John, John 7; justification of, Rom. 145sq., Gal. 66sq., 70sq., James 85; rejoicing of, John 297, 300; righteousness of, Rom. 145sq., 153; seed of, Gal. 75sq. (see children of); trial of, Heb. 188; his wives and sons, how typical, Gal. 113sq., 121sq., Note.
- "Abraham's bosom," Luke 254.
- Abolition in the Church, Matt. 168, 332sq., John 617, 2 Cor. 34sq.
- Abstinence from food, Acts 281, Rom. 414sq., Tim. 49, 50.
- Abys, Luke 136, Rev. 30, 198, 241, Note, 349, 370.
- Acceptance with God, Acts 204sq.
- Acco, Acts 383.
- Accommodation to circumstances, 1 Cor. 190, Thess. 53.
- Accursed, see Anathema.
- Accidama, Matt. 505.
- Achab, 2 Cor. 9, 153, Thess. 18.
- Acra, Acts 383.
- Activity, Christian, Matt. 355, 442sq., Mark 90, Luke 106, 169, 291sq.
- Acts of the Apostles, Book of the, its author, Acts 2, 3; arrangement, Matt. 28, Acts 4sq.; chronology, Acts ix.; credibility, Rom. 7; date of composition, Acts 3; peculiar features, ib. 1sq.; genuineness, ib. 2sq.; connection with Luke's Gospel, ib. 1; contrasted with the four Gospels, Matt. 25; central idea, Acts 2, 4; MSS. of ib. 7; object, ib. 295; interpolations in the text, ib. 341; works on, Matt. 26, Acts 3sq.
- ADAM, compared with Christ, Rom. 173, 178, Note, 181sq., 196, 1 Cor. 339; the representative head of the race, Rom. 173sq.; sin of, ib. 173sq., 191sq., 1 Cor. 839, Tim. 34.
- ADAM OF ST. VICTOR, quoted, John ix.
- Additions to Scripture, Mark 32.
- Adjudication, Matt. 492.
- Admonition, private, Matt. 323sq.
- ADONIKAM, Rev. 429.
- Adoption, consciousness of, Gal. 100; its nature, Rom. 260, 306, Eph. 33sq., 1 John 92, 96sq.; spirit of, Rom. 260sq.; works on, ib. 295sq.
- Adoration of Christ by the Magi, Matt. 59sq.; final and universal, Phil. 36, 38.
- Adramyttium, Acts 454.
- Adria, Acts 458.
- Adultery, commandment respecting, Jas. 77; condemnation of, Heb. 213; a ground for divorce, Matt. 115, Luke 256; Jewish law respecting, Matt. 114, 115, John 289, 271; its punishment by the early churches, John 270, Note; symbolical use of the term, Matt. 225, Jas. 114, Rev. 29; Christ's judgment of the woman taken in, John 267sq.
- Advent of Christ, Second, predicted by Him, Matt. 192, 304, 431, Luke 150, 291, 321, 323sq., 326, John 436, 2 Pet. 22; expected by the apostles, Matt. 422, 429, 431, Rom. 406, 408sq., 1 Cor. 24sq., Tim. 73sq., 114, 1 Pet. 76sq.; hope of, a source of consolation, 1 Pet. 79; importance of the doctrine, ib. 18; its relation to the millennium, Thess. 73; order of, ib. 73sq.; Paul's hope of, Rom. 406, Thess. 70sq.; readiness for, 1 Cor. 24, 26, Thess. 23sq., 70sq.; signs of, Matt. 422, 430sq.; time of, 1 Cor. 517sq., Thess. 78sq., Jas. 135, 144, Rev. 339sq.
- Adversary, Satan an, 1 Pet. 30, 90, 92.
- Adversity, need of wisdom in, Jas. 44.
- Advocate, Christ our, 1 John 44, 46.
- ENEAS—see ENEAS.
- Aenon, John 141.
- Aeon, Matt. 225, 246.
- ÆSCHINES, offering of, Luke 516.
- Afflictions of Christians, their necessity, Acts 273sq.; their value, Rom. 162, 168, 2 Cor. 75, 78sq., 86sq., 204, Thess. 37, 53, 116, 121; national, a source of blessing to the Church, Acts 225.
- AGABUS, predictions of, Acts 221, 284.
- Agape, John 405, 416.
- Age of Christ, Luke 62, John 293; of priests, Matt. 67, Luke 16, 62; of scribes, Luke 62.
- Agnosticism, Mark 133.
- Agonies of the Cross—see Cross.
- Agony of Christ—see JESUS CHRIST.
- Agony at Athens, Acts 322.
- AGRIPPA—see HEROD AGRIPPA.
- AIHMELECH, Mark 32.
- 'Ain at Tin, Matt. 91.
- Air, powers of the, Eph. 78; symbolism of the, Rev. 18.
- Alabaster, Luke 121.
- ALEXANDER, an apostate, Tim. 26.
- _____ the coppermith, Tim. 117.
- _____ of Ephesus, Acts 360.
- _____ the Great, Luke 296.
- _____ son of Simon the Cyrenian, Mark 151.
- Alexandria, Acts 345; number of Jews in, ib. 109.
- Alexandrians, synagogue of the, Acts 109.
- Alijah, the, Mark 14.
- Allegorism of the Scriptures, Rev. 11sq., 204, Note.
- Allegorizing Scripture, Luke 334, Gal. 122.
- Allegory concerning Abraham's wives, Gal. 114sq., 120sq.
- All things, possessed by Christians, 1 Cor. 83, 84sq., 2 Cor. 111.
- Alms, derivation of the word, Matt. 152.
- Alms-giving, a token of piety among the Jews, Matt. 122; commended by Christ, Luke 190; example of Cornelius in, Acts 192, 196; blessings of, 2 Cor. 161; motives of, Matt. 122, 1 Cor. 268; discrimination in, Thess. 159. See Beneficence.
- Aloes, Matt. 536.
- Allogi, sect of the, John 28, Note.
- Alpha, name applied to Christ, Rev. 93, 364.
- ALPHÆUS, father of James and Joseph, Matt. 255sq., John 586, Jas. 12sq., 26; assumed to be identical with Clopas, John 283, Jas. 20.
- Altar, symbolical meaning of the term, Rev. 28, 300.
- Altar of incense, Heb. 150sq., Rev. 203.
- Altars at Athens, Acts 324, 327.
- Amen, import of the word, Matt. 126; use of, by Christ, ib. 109; various uses of, John 96, Rom. 433, 1 Cor. 289, 2 Cor. 22, Rev. 29, 133, Note, 135; an addition to several epistles, 1 Cor. 361, Philom. 23.
- Amenites, sect of, John 96, Note.
- Amethyst, Rev. 367.
- Amphipolia, Acts 316.
- Amusements, duty of Christians with respect to, 1 Cor. 177, 178.
- Anabaptists, sect of, their error in respect to oaths, Matt. 116.
- Anacephalalosis, Eph. 40sq.
- ANANIAS, sin and death of, Acts 84sq.
- _____ of Damascus, Acts 168sq., 400.
- _____ the high-priest, Acts 408, 411.

- Anathema, John 310, Acts 414, Rom. 302 sqq., 331, 1 Cor. 248, 361, Gal. 19; excommunication, Rom. 302 sqq.
- ANDREW, Matt. 93, 158, 182, 184, Mark 130, Luke 96, John 7; meaning of the name, Matt. 93, 182; compared with John, John 7.
- Angel, appearance of an, to Moses, Acts 122 sq.; to Zacharias, Luke 16; to Mary, Luke 19 sq.; to Christ at Gethsemane, Luke 346 sq.; to Cornelius, Acts 192; to Peter, Acts 228 sq., 232, 234, 236 sq.; Herod Agrippa smitten by an, Acts 230, 232, 237.
- Angel of the Apocalypse, Rev. 89; of the Covenant, of Jehovah, of the Lord, of the Presence, Matt. 52, 53, 325, John 50, Acts 122, Rev. 89, Note.
- Angels, the agents of God, Acts 232, 234, 237, Heb. 38, 41; in the Apocalypse, Rev. 38 sqq.; appearances of, Matt. 647; appearances of in Christ's history, Luke 60, John 611; at His birth, Luke 38 sqq.; at His sepulchre, Matt. 647, Mark 156 sq., Luke 386 sq.; attendants of Christ at the judgment, Matt. 448, Theos. 58; Christ superior to, John 611, Eph. 61; appearances of, under the Old Covenant, John 611; character of, Heb. 40; the six chief, Rev. 91, Note; present with Christian assemblies, 1 Cor. 226; of the seven churches, Rev. 107 sq.; classes of, Luke 16, Rom. 285, 291, Tim. 66, Heb. 29; not employed to convert souls, Acts 192; elect, Tim. 64, 66; their employments, Heb. 40, Rev. 211, Note, 385, Note; proofs of their existence, Matt. 400, Luke 17, 309, 311; fallen, 2 Pet. 27, 29 sq., Jude 18, 25; good and evil, Rev. 241, Note; guardian, Matt. 325, Acts 229, 232, Heb. 54; to be judged, 1 Cor. 123, 125; their co-operation at the giving of the law, Acts 131, Heb. 44; their interest in life, Acts 94; of light, 2 Cor. 183; ministry of, Acts 94; nature of, Eph. 66; numbers of, Matt. 448; their power, Heb. 48, 54; their interest in man's redemption, Luke 40, Eph. 120, Tim. 66; not subjects of redemption, Heb. 60 sq.; guardian of the temple, Matt. 415; why popularly supposed to have wings, Acts 192; our witnesses, 1 Cor. 98 sq.; worship of, Rom. 288, Col. 64, 68.
- Anger, how far allowable, Matt. 118 sq., Eph. 169 sq., 178 sq., 179, Jas. 62, 68; of Christ, Mark 34, Luke 192, John 853; of God, Luke 229, Eph. 178 sq., Rev. 277, 291, 293 sqq., 304, 429.
- Animals, kindness to, 1 Cor. 183 sq.; symbolic significance of, Rev. 21 sq.
- Annihilation of the world, Heb. 41.
- ANNA, Luke 45 sq.
- ANNA'S, the high-priest, Matt. 385, 490, Luke 55, 353, John 552 sqq., 556.
- Anointing, custom of, Matt. 127, 463, John 93, 371, 1 John 77; of Christ, Matt. 462 sqq.; Mark 138, Luke 120 sqq., John 870 sqq.; of the sick, Mark 56, Jas. 188 sqq.
- Anomianism, false conclusion of, Rom. 206.
- ANTICHRIST, Theos. 108, 127, 183 sqq., 1 John 74 sq., 87, Rev. 283, Note, 404; representation of in the Apocalypse, Rev. 36 sqq.; various views of, Acts 66; Waldensian view of, Acts 227, Note; works on, Theos. 133, 1 John 87.
- Antichristianity, Matt. 431, 466, Rev. 427; stages of, Rev. 225, 237.
- ANTIGONUS, Matt. 56.
- Antinomianism, Rom. 139.
- Antioch, Acts 216; disciples first called Christians at, Acts 219; benevolence of the Christians at, Acts 221 sqq.
- , in Pisidia, Acts 248.
- ANTIOCHUS EPIPHANES, Theos. 128.
- ANTIPAS—see HEROD ANTIPAS.
- , of Pergamus, Rev. 119.
- ANTIPATER, Matt. 56.
- Antipatris, Acts 416.
- Antonia, tower of, Luke 359.
- ANTONY OF EGYPT, Matt. 346.
- APELLES, Rom. 448.
- APIA, Acts 125.
- Apocalypse, meaning of the word, Rev. 4; distinguished from prophecy, Acts 6 sq.; design and motive of, Acts 44.
- Apocalypse of John, its allegorical meaning, Rev. 204, Note; analysis of, Matt. 28, Rev. 82 sqq.; its antitheses, Rev. 1; its authenticity, Acts 1, 56 sqq.; its clearness of development, Acts 52; construction of, Acts 80 sq.; the crown of all Apocalypses, Acts 52 sqq.; compared to Daniel, Acts 89; dogmatic elements in, Acts 54; doctrines of, Acts 402; history of its exegesis, Acts 63 sqq.; an exemplar, Acts 10; its form, Acts 1; compared with Genesis, Acts 55 sqq.; Goethe's opinion of, Acts 76; compared with John's Gospel, John 148 sq., 30, Rev. 58 sqq.; its historical basis, Rev. 79; homiletical elements in, Acts 54; fundamental idea of, Acts 81; import of, Acts 61 sqq.; rules for its interpretation, Acts 77 sqq.; various interpretations of, Acts 63, 68 sqq., 66, 402; introduction to, Acts 1 sqq.; Luther's opinion of, Acts 76; misconception of, Acts 6; origin of, Acts 1; place of composition, Acts 60 sqq.; not popular, Acts 63; prejudice against, Acts 58; a revelation, Acts 77 sqq.; symbols in, Acts 79; time of composition, Acts 59 sqq.; its uniqueness, Acts 1; wealth of, Acts 56; works on, Acts 63 sqq., 72 sqq., 75, 168 sqq., 404, 405, 407, 410.
- Apocalypse, Old Test., Rev. 7 sq.; Jewish-Christian, Acts 10.
- Apocalyplical composition, Rev. 43 sq.
- Apocalyphtical writings, classes of, Rev. 6, 7.
- Apocalyphtics, import of the name, Rev. 4; newness of the science, Acts 4, Note; its origin, Acts 2 sqq.; figurative form of, Acts 11 sqq.; Judaistic, Acts 8; works on, Acts 6 sq.
- Apocatastasis—see Restoration.
- Apocrypha, the, their relation to the other Scriptures, Matt. 13, 14, 209.
- Apocryphal gospels, Luke 26, 50, 377.
- , gospel, of Nicodemus, Matt. 124; of St. Thomas, Acts 207.
- , miracles, Matt. 320, Luke 50 sqq.
- , writings, Rev. 8 sqq.; list of, Acts 10 sqq.
- APOLLOS, Acts 345 sqq., 1 Cor. 8 sqq.; Paul's regard for, Acts 347; his teachers, Acts 346; his seal, Acts 6; party of, in the Corinthian Church, 1 Cor. 8, 23; authorship of Epistle to the Hebrews ascribed to, Acts 23, Heb. 9, 10.
- Apollonia, Acts 316.
- APOLLYON, symbolic significance of, Rev. 35, 199, 209.
- Apostasy, in the primitive Church, Gal. 18, 20; its consequences, Heb. 114 sqq.; hopelessness of the state, Rom. 126, Note; illustrated by Judas Iscariot, Mark 138; predicted by Paul, Theos. 127, 137 sqq.; possibility of, Rom. 421, Eph. 50, Heb. 116 sqq.; warning against, Heb. 113, 177 sq.
- Apostle, meaning of the term, Luke 96, Rom. 59, Eph. 20.
- Apostles, who are called, 1 Cor. 257, Eph. 149.
- , the twelve, choice of, Matt. 180 sqq., Mark 36 sqq., Luke 95 sqq., Acts 240, Gal. 13 sqq.; names of, Matt. 181 sqq., Mark 37, Luke 96; sent forth by Christ, Matt. 185 sqq., Mark 65 sqq., Luke 143 sqq.; His instructions to, Matt. 186 sqq., Mark 56, Luke 143; place of Judas among, how filled, Acts 19 sqq.; Paul's relation to, Acts 171, Eph. 23; pre-eminence of three, Luke 97, Rom. 184; their authority, 1 Cor. 239, Tim. 16; bigotry, Mark 80, 91, Luke 158 sqq.; honor, Luke 20; humility, Acts 111, 144, 289; inspiration, Acts 282, 273, 290, Theos. 43; their relation to Judaism, John 11; division of labor among, 2 Cor. 170, Note; miracles of, Mark 161 sqq., John 428, Acts 57, 63, 68, 90, 187 sqq., 262, Phil. 49, Tim. 119, Heb. 45; their piety, 1 Cor. 103; power given to, Matt. 181; preaching of, 1 Cor. 68, Theos. 43 sqq.; preparation for their work, Luke 97 sqq.; their qualifications, Matt. 183, Eph. 149, Note, 1 Pet. 11, 13; relationships among, Matt. 184; their unbelief and dilineas, Mark 62 sqq., 87, 169 sqq., 163; their writings, Theos. 43; works on, Luke 96.
- Apostolic age, the, works on, Matt. 6.
- Apostolic office, the, call to, Gal. 13 sqq., Note; unique in its character, Eph. 23; not distinct from the church, Matt. 560; perpetuated in the Church, Acts 299; its essential elements, Eph. 149, Note; institution of, Matt. 335; its nature and extent, 1 Cor. 20, Tit. 6; qualifications for, Eph. 149, Note, 1 Pet. 11, 13.
- Apostolic succession, Matthew 299, 569, Gal. 14, Note, Eph. 23.
- Apparel, royal, of Herod, Mark 81, Acts 230; of Solomon, Mark 81.
- Appeal, Roman right of, Acts 431.
- Appearances, duty of attending to, 1 Cor. 221.
- , of Christ after His resurrection, Matt. 540 sqq., 545 sqq., Mark 169 sqq., 163, Luke 390 sqq., 396 sqq., John 630 sqq., 1 Cor. 810 sqq.
- APPIA, Philom. 12.
- Appii Forum, Acts 470.
- Approval, Rom. 162, 168.
- AQUILA, Acts 384, 341, 346, Rom. 446, 447, Note, 1 Cor. 7 sqq., Tim. 118.
- Arabia, meaning of the term, Acts 179; Paul's abode in, Acts 178 sqq., Gal. 25 sqq.
- Aramaic words in Mark's gospel, Mark 50.
- ARATUS, the poet, quoted by Paul, Acts 325.
- Archæology, Biblical, list of works on, Matt. 7, 17.
- Archangel, Michael, the, Theos. 75, Jude 19, 25.
- ARCHELAUS, Matt. 63 sqq., Luke 48 sqq., 291.
- ARCHIPPUS, Philom. 12.
- Areopagus, the, Acts 323; Paul's address on, Acts 323 sqq.; court of, Acts 328.
- ARETAS, king of Arabia, Matt. 262, Acts 180, 1 Cor. 190.
- Arianism, John 447, Rom. 86.
- Arimatea, Matt. 635, Luke 368.
- ARISTARCHUS, Acts 360, 367, 454, Col. 84, Philom. 24.
- ARISTOBULUS, Rom. 448.
- ARISTOTILE, quoted, Matt. 512, Rom. 184; Paul's acquaintance with writings of, Rom. 184, Note.
- Ark of the covenant, Heb. 151 sqq., Rev. 203, 245.
- ARMAGEDDON, Rev. 32, 296, 302.
- Arminianism, Rom. 194 sq., 245, Note.
- Armor, Christian, Eph. 222 sqq., 223; of light, Rom. 407, 410 sqq.

Art, its relations to Christianity, Acts 327, 328; sacred, Rev. 43; worship of, Acts 385; works of, representing, the Annunciation, Luke 40; the Nativity, ib. ib.; the Madonna, ib. ib.; the Holy Family, ib. ib.; the Presentation in the Temple, ib. 47; the Temptation, ib. 69; the Transfiguration, Matt. 315, Luke 155; Christus Consolator, Luke 103; the Magdalene, ib. 125; Christ and Pharisees, ib. 306; the Cleansing of the Temple, ib. 293; Christ and four Apostles, ib. 318; the Last Supper, ib. 333; Christ in Gethsemane, ib. 340; Peter's denial, ib. 358; Christ bearing the Cross, ib. 370; the Moment before the Crucifixion, ib. 370; the Crucifixion, ib. 374; the Descent from the Cross, ib. 384; the Viewing the Grave, ib. ib.; the Resurrection, ib. 388.

ARTEMIS, Acts 360.

ASAPH, Matt. 246, 249.

Ascension of Christ, the, various accounts of, Mark 165 sq., Luke 401 sq., Acts 14, 16 sq.; silence of Matthew and John respecting, Matt. 569, 561, Luke 403; locality of, Luke 402, Acts 18 sq.; its relation to Christ's resurrection, Mark 166, Luke 402, Acts 8; its value, Luke 408 sq., Acts 8; taught by Paul, Tim. 46, 47; by Peter, 1 Pet. 66, 67; time of, Acts 8; Festival of, Matt. 562, Mark 163, Acts 9.

Ascension of Moses, Book of the, Rev. 10.

Ascetics, Jewish, Rom. 414 sq.

Ashdod, Acts 156.

Ashes, used by mourners, Matt. 211.

Asia, name of a province of Asia Minor, Acts 34, 298, 1 Pet. 12.

—, the seven churches of, Matt. 237, Rev. 23, 90, 104, 108, 113, 132.

Asmoneans, see Maccabees.

Assurances of Paul, Rom. 68 sq.

Assumption day, see Ascension, Festival of the.

Assurance of faith, see Faith.

— of immortality, 1 Cor. 332.

— of truth, Thess. 97.

Astrology, Matt. 67 sq.

Astronomy, its relation to religion, Matt. 58.

Atheism the essence of heathenism, Eph. 91.

Athen, Acts 322 sq., 328; altars at, ib. 324, 327; number of idols at, ib. 322, 326; market-place at, ib. 322; Paul's visit to, ib. ib.; characteristics of the people, ib. 323 sq.

Attonement of Christ, the, benefits of, Col. 111 sq.; complete, Luke 347; effect of, Heb. 166, 1 John 46; true idea of, Rom. 140; its relation to justification; ib. 135, 138, 139, 156; nature of, Matt. 158, 543, Rom. 166; parable of Prodigal Son used against, Luke 242; Paul's belief in the doctrine, Tit. 17, 18; distinguished from reconciliation, 1 John 45; one element in the work of redemption, Matt. 366; attempts to refute the doctrine, Rom. 140; statement of the doctrine, 1 John 147 sq., 162 sq.; universal, John 134, 1 John 45; vicarious, Matt. 366, 2 Cor. 96, 101 sq., 1 Pet. 49.

Attalia, Acts 272.

ATTILA THE HUN, Rev. 206, Note.

Attributes of God, Col. 27; revelation of, Rom. 188; manifested in sending of Christ, Luke 83.

AUBERLEN, C. A., biographical notice of, Thess. vii.

Augsburg Confession, Luke 200.

AUGUSTINE, mother of, 1 Pet. 54; conversion of, Rom. 409; his appreciation of John's Gospel, John vii.; his theory of original sin, Rom. 192, 194 sq.; his theory of sin and grace, ib. 155.

Authority of the Apostles, 1 Cor. 229, Tim. 16; civil, not to be assumed by the church, Matt. 366; civil, obedience to, Rom. 398 sq., 401 sq., 1 Pet. 40, 42; of ministers, 1 Cor. 92.

Avarice, Luke 200, Tim. 70, 71.

AVE MARIA, Luke 19 sq.

Avotus, Acts 156.

BABAL, Rom. 361.

Babylon, 1 Pet. 95; symbolical significance, Rev. 26, 278, 285, 303, 306, 314, 319 sq., 328, Note, 434 sq.

Backsliders, Heb. 110; see Perseverance.

BALAAAM, character and sin of, 2 Pet. 34 sq., 37; his history a test of faith, Matt. 230; his prophecy, ib. 60, Rev. 8, Note; doctrine of, Rev. 119.

Balaamite, Rev. 116, 120.

Band of soldiers, Matt. 513 sq.

Banias, village of, see Caesarea Philippi.

Banishment of Christians in early times, Rev. 59.

Bankers, ancient, Matt. 442, 444.

Baptism, Jewish, Matt. 68, Heb. 112; John's, Matt. 68, 70, 73 sq., Mark 16, Luke 69, Acts 349 sq.; by disciples of Christ, Luke 69, John 141, 146, 151; by Paul, 1 Cor. 30; of Christ, by John, Matt. 76 sq., Luke 87, 59, 60, 62, John 87 sq., 1 John 190 sq.; of believers, on the day of Pentecost, Acts 53, 56; of the sunnuch, by Philip, ib. 156; of Paul, ib. 170, 400, 402; of Cornelius, ib. 208; of Lydia, ib. 305, 308; of the jailer, at Philippi, ib. 307 sq.; for the dead, 1 Cor. 328 sq.; with fire, Matt. 72, 74, Luke 57; with the Holy Spirit, Matt. 72, 74, Luke 56, Acts 12, 14, 206; its relation to circumcision, Matt. 557, Luke 42, Acts 3, 5, Rom. 114, 123, Col. 49; formula of, Matt. 537 sq.; its relation to the gift of the Holy Spirit, Acts 53, 148, 171, 203, 206; interrogatories used in the ceremony of, 1 Pet. 60; mode of, Matt. 63, 70, Luke 56, Note, Acts 807, Rom. 202, Note, Col. 46, 49; subordinate to preaching, 1 Cor. 30; its relation to regeneration, Matt. 557, Mark 161, 163, John 126 sq., 462, Acts 159, Rom. 114, 126, Note, 201, 206 sq., 1 Cor. 33, Eph. 142, 199, sq., 207, Titus 20, 22, Heb. 175, James 58, 1 Pet. 23, 65 sq.; Roman Catholic rite of, Mark 70, 1 Cor. 33; significance of, Matt. 557 sq., 561, Mark 161, John 136, Acts 52, 53, 400 sq., 402, Rom. 201, 206 sq., Gal. 57, 90; subjects of, Matt. 187, 342, 557, 560, Mark 85, 91, Luke 276, Acts 159 sq., 305, 308, 350, Rom. 201, 1 Cor. 39, 149, Gal. 90, Eph. 207, 212, Col. 148, Tit. 23; works on, Matt. 560.

Bar (son), Matt. 292, 295, Note.

BARABBAS, Matt. 511, Mark 149, Luke 367 sq., John 566.

BARACHIAH, Matt. 414 sq.

Barbarians, application of the term, Rom. 7, 1 Cor. 286.

BAR-JESUS, Acts 212, 245. See ELYMAS.

BAR-JOANNA, Matt. 295, Note.

BAR-JONA, Matt. 292, 295, Note, John 83, Note.

Barley, John 210.

BARNABAS, Acts 81; sent on a mission to Antioch, ib. 218 sq.; preaching of, ib. ib.; sent to Jerusalem, ib. 221 sq.; sent on a mission with Paul, ib. 228 sq.; his disagreement with Paul, Mark 5 sq., Acts 218, 295 sq., Gal. 46; mentioned by Paul in his epistles, 1 Cor. 183, Gal. 48; last mention of, Acts 235; Epistle of, quoted, 1 Cor. 13; authorship of Epistle to the Hebrews ascribed to, Heb. 4 sq., 9.

BARBARAS, Joseph, Acts 21.

— Judas, Acts 288.

BARTHOLOMEW, Matt. 108, Luke 96, John 94.

BARTIMEUS, Mark 108.

Basket, Matt. 266, 285, 289, 290.

Bath, a measure, Luke 246.

Bath Kol, Rev. 42.

BATHSHEBA, faith of, Matt. 49, 51.

BAUR, F. C., criticisms of, Rom. 14 sq.

Bay, St. Paul's, Acts 460.

Beam, Matt. 138.

Beast, image of the, Rev. 31.

Beasts, taming of, Jas. 98; of the Apocalypse, Rev. 21, 154, 161 sq., 404.

Beatitudes, the seven, Matt. 99 sq., Luke 101 sq.; arrangement of, Matt. 101, 105 sq.; based upon the Old Testament, ib. 102; not in the same category with the ten commandments, ib. 105; contrasted with the seven woes, ib. 411, 416; mount of the, ib. 100, 105.

Beauty and goodness, Hebrew ideas of, Matt. 324.

BEELZEBUB, see

BEELZEBUL, Matt. 193 sq., 223, Luke 183.

Beginning, the, 1 John 20, Rev. 135 sq.

Beginnings in Christian life, Mark 90.

BELIAL, see

BELIAR, 3 Cor. 116, 118.

Believers, see Christians.

Ben (son), Matt. 292 sq.

Benedictus of Zachariah, Luke 25, 27 sq.

Benedicence, acts of in the early church, 1 Pet. 78; should be joined with benevolence, Thess. 69 sq.; a duty, Acts 225, Eph. 174, 1 John 118 sq., 1 Pet. 79; examples of, Luke 286 sq., Acts 186, 188, 192, 199; inducements to, 2 Cor. 147, 151; measure of, 1 Cor. 362; Paul's directions respecting, ib. 355 sq.; reward of, Luke 247; its scope, 1 Cor. 361, Thess. 159; its source, 1 Cor. 361; proper spirit of, Matt. 449, 451 sq., 2 Cor. 159; should be systematic, 1 Cor. 362, 364; its power in promoting Christian unity, 2 Cor. 159. See Almsgiving.

Berea, Acts 17; its people, ib. ib. sq.

BERENICE, Matt. 294.

BERNICE, Acts 435.

BERTHOLDT the Franciscan, 1 Cor. iv.

Beryl, Rev. 386.

Bethabara, John 85.

Bethany, Matt. 371, Mark 110, Luke 293 sq., John 85, 339 sq.; meaning of the name, John 85, 340; symbolical adaptation of the name, Matt. 479, Note; description of, ib. 371, John 339 sq.; the anointing at, Matt. 462 sq., Mark 137 sq., John 370 sq.

Bethel, John 366.

Bethesda, pool of, John 181.

Bethlehem, Matt. 65 sq.; symbolical adaptation of the name, ib. 479, Note; children of, ib. 63.

Bethphage, Matt. 371, 479, Note, Mark 110, Luke 293 sq.

Bethsaida of Galilee, Matt. 210 sq., Mark 62, John 94.

— Julius, Matt. 210, Mark 76, Luke 146, John 212.

Bibelwerk, Lange's, Matt. viii. sqq., xiv. sqq.
 —, Starke's, Rev. 405.
Bible, signification of the word, Matt. 10; introduction to the, ib. 1 sqq.; accessible to all, ib. vi; its divine authority, Luke 60; characteristics of the, Matt. v. sq., 11, 13; commentaries on, ib. vi. sq., xxi. 19; dictionaries of, ib. 19, Rom. 8 sq.; editions of, Matt. 18; exegesis of, ib. vi. sq.; its frankness in regard to the faults of good men, Acts 236, 297; history of, Matt. 12 sq.; import of, ib. 15; its influence, John 654; inspiration of, Matt. 11 sq., Luke 13, John 334, Rom. 116, 1 Cor. 61, 143, 2 Cor. 108, 128, 133, Thess. 122, Tim. 107, 109, 110, 2 Pet. 21 sq.; compared with the Koran, Matt. 15; Lange's Commentary on, ib. viii. sqq., xiv. sqq.; languages of, ib. 7; as a literary production, ib. v.; love for, a measure of love for God, 1 Pet. 36; its relation to the sacred records of other nations, Matt. 15 sq.; as a book of religion, ib. v. sq., 11; use of, in schools, Tim. 109 sq.; study of, Matt. vii., Acts 187; translations of, Matt. 18 sq.; works on, ib. 10, 19, Rom. 431 sq.; writers of, Matt. 13. See also Scriptures.
Bigotry of the apostles, Mark 89, Luke 158.
Binding, power of, Matt. 238 sq.
Biography, Christian, Tim. 89.
Birth, the new, John 125 sqq., 136, Rom. 245, 2 Cor. 98.
Birthdays of kins, Matt. 262.
Bishops in the primitive church, Acts 222, 274, Thess. 95 sq., Tim. 39 sq.
Bitumina, 1 Pet. 12.
Black, symbolical significance of, Rev. 17.
Blame, right and duty of, 2 Cor. 37.
Blasphemy, against Christ, Matt. 177, 224, 227 sq.; Christ accused of, ib. 196, Mark 27, John 187; against the Holy Spirit, Matt. 224, 227 sq., Luke 197, 198; names of, Rev. 234, 363, 313, 427.
Blessed, the, an appellation of God, Mark 146.
Blessedness, gradations of, Heb. 89.
Blessing of children by Christ, Matt. 342, Luke 276 sq.; of food by Christ, Matt. 266, 268, Mark 72; hereditary, Matt. 50, 60; at meals, Jewish custom of, ib. 266.
Blessings, spiritual and temporal, 2 Cor. 169, Eph. 28, 51; pronounced by Christ, see Beatitudes.
Blind, the, healed by Christ, see Miracles of Christ.
Blindness, common in the East, Matt. 176; of Didymus, John 313, Note; of Milton, ib. ib.; of Paul, Acts 167.
Blindness, spiritual, Matt. 135, 369, Luke 283, John 312 sqq., 397, 402, Rom. 373, 2 Cor. 66 sq., 71 sq.
Blood, use of in sacrifices, Heb. 152, 159, 163, 1 Pet. 12; field of, Matt. 505, 507, Acts 20; issue of, Matt. 174, Mark 50, Luke 140; symbolism of, Rev. 197, 204 sq.
 — of Christ, drinking the, John 223 sq., 227 sq.; an expiation, Eph. 36, Heb. 158 sq., 1 Pet. 49; flow of, on the cross, John 597 sq.; purifying effect of, Matt. 472, Heb. 144, 158, 1 Pet. 12, 1 John 32 sq., 35, Rev. 185; a ransom, Heb. 159, 1 Pet. 23, 25; symbolised in the Lord's Supper, Matt. 471 sqq., 1 Cor. 236 sq.
Blood-money, Matt. 507.
Blue, symbolism of, Matt. 410, Rev. 17.
BOANERGES, Mark 37, Luke 96.
Boasting, true and false, Rom. 110; of Paul, 2 Cor. 186 sqq.
Bodies, celestial, 1 Cor. 337.
Body, the, use of the term in the New Testament, Rom. 232, sq.; teaching of Christianity respecting, 1 Cor. 136; death of, Rom. 176; deeds of, ib. 259; its destination, 1 Cor. 132; its dignity, ib. 134, 186 sq.; its true position, ib. 135; how maintained, ib. ib.; redemption of, Rom. 274 sq.; its nature after the resurrection, ib. 274 sq., 288, 1 Cor. 336, 338, 342, 2 Cor. 80 sqq., Phil. 62 sq., Heb. 55; the seat of sin, Rom. 207, 209, 215; social orders compared to, ib. 384, 388; its relation to the soul and spirit, Matt. 479, Rom. 232 sqq., 1 Cor. 62, 2 Cor. 205, Thess. 95, 98; natural and spiritual, 1 Cor. 336, 338.
 — of Christ, symbolic of his church, 1 Cor. 285, 287, Eph. 64, 66; symbolised in the Lord's Supper, Matt. 471 sqq., Luke 337, John 227, 1 Cor. 236 sq.; after his resurrection, Luke 398 sq.
 — of death, Rom. 242 sqq.
 — of sin, Rom. 208 sq., 206 sq.
Boldness of the Christian, Eph. 117, 120, Heb. 174, 175; in preaching the gospel, Eph. 227, Thess. 85, 37.
Bondage to fear of death, Heb. 60, 63 sq., 65 sq.; of the law, 2 Cor. 47, 61 sq., 60; of sin, John 288 sq., 299, Rom. 211, 215 sqq., 237 sqq.; spirit of, Rom. 260; works on, ib. 295 sq.
BONIFACE VIII., Pope, Luke 344.
Book, in the angel's hand, Rev. 217, 219, 221 sq.
 — of life, Phil. 65 sq., Rev. 25, 127, 360, 362.
 —, the sealed, Rev. 165 sq.
Books, ancient, Rev. 176; bad, destruction of, Acts 357 sq.
Borders of Jewish garments, Matt. 173, 174, 275, 410.
Bottles of skins, Matt. 171.
Bow, the, Rev. 80.
Bowels, figurative use of the term, 2 Cor. 116, Phil. 15, 31, Col. 60.

Branches, Jews symbolized by, Rom. 386 sq.
Bread, use of in the East, Luke 254; breaking of, ib. 362, 1 Cor. 210; effect of Christ's blessing on, Matt. 286; daily, petition for in the Lord's Prayer, ib. 121 sq., 128, Luke 179; of life, a title of Christ, John 207 sq., 211, 229; use of in the Lord's Supper, Matt. 470 sq., 474, Luke 336 sq., 338, 1 Cor. 210, 236 sq.; unleavened, see Passover.
Brethren, misuse of the term, Matt. 231.
Bribery used by the Sanhedrin, Matt. 562.
Bride, the church symbolized by, a, John 143.
Bridegroom, Christ called a, Matt. 170, 172, 437 sqq., John 143.
Brooks, symbolical meaning of, Rev. 18 sq.
Brotherhood of Christians, Col. 10, Thess. 63, 69 sq.
Brotherly love, Thess. 67, 69 sq., Heb. 212, 1 Pet. 27, 29, 1 John 54, 56, 118 sqq.
Brothers, use of the term in the Bible, John 114.
 — of Christ, Matt. 53, 182, 231 sq., 255 sqq., Luke 24, 128 sqq., John 115, 240 sqq., Acts 19, 1 Cor. 182, Gal. 26 sq., 38 sqq., Jas. 10 sqq., 18 sqq., Jude 5 sq., 12.
Building, church of Christ compared to a, 1 Cor. 74, 78, 2 Cor. 167, Eph. 98 sqq., Col. 43, 1 Pet. 32 sq.
Bullock, symbol of Matthew's Gospel, Matt. 39.
Burdens, imposed by the Pharisees, Matt. 409 sq.; of others, to be borne, Gal. 149, 154.
Burial, Jewish customs of, Matt. 160, 536, Mark 154, Luke 112; of Christ, Matt. 536 sq., Mark 154, Luke 83 sq., John 599 sq., Rom. 207.
Bushel, Matt. 104.
Butterfly, the, as a symbol of immortality, John 390.
Bysas, a kind of linen, Luke 283, Rev. 337.

CAESAR, AUGUSTUS, Luke 54.
 —, CLAUDIUS, Acts 221.
 —, JULIUS, incident in the life of, Acts 463.
 —, TIBERIUS, Luke 54.
 —, rendering tribute to, Matt. 396 sq., Luke 206 sqq.; saints in the household of, Phil. 76.
Caesarea, Palestine, Acts 191; Paul's visits to, ib. 182, 383, 384, 416; its distance from Joppa, ib. 156, 194; from Jerusalem, ib. 156; road from Jerusalem to, ib. 416; palace at, ib. ib.
Caesarea, Philippi, Matt. 294.
Caesarea, Stratonis, see C. Palestine.
CAIAPHAS, JOSEPH, the high priest, Matt. 335, 460, 460, Luke 54, 353, John 363 sq., 366, 562.
CAIN, Jude 20.
CAIUS, see GAIUS.
Calf, golden, made by the Israelites, Acts 135.
CALIGULA, Thess. 108.
Call of the apostles, see Apostles; of four disciples, Matt. 93, Mark 20 sq., Luke 81, 83; of Paul, Acts 230 sq.; of Matthew, Luke 88, 90; to the ministry, Acts 239 sq., Gal. 18 sq., Heb. 106.
Called, distinguished from chosen, or elect, Matt. 352, 354 sq., 391, Rom. 64, 278, Note, 280 sqq., Heb. 74.
Calling, use of the word, 1 Pet. 35, Heb. 74; of Christians, its nature, Rom. 278, 280 sq., 290, 328 sqq., 1 Cor. 26, 43, 49; who are included in the, 1 Cor. 43 sqq., 48 sq.; its requirements, Phil. 30; of the Jewish nation, Rom. 309 sq., 328 sqq.; effectual, its relation to faith, John 221, Note. See Election.
Calling in life, proper estimate of, 1 Cor. 158.
Calmness of Christ, Matt. 174, 451, Luke 74, 328, 334.
Calumny among Christians, Jas. 118 sq., 122.
Calvary, Mount, Matt. 519, 520 sq., John 582 sq.
CALVIN, JOHN, on baptism, Rom. 206; on the Gospel of John, John vii.; on original sin, Rom. 192, Note.
Calvinists, New School, their theory of original sin, Rom. 194.
Camel, rich men compared to a, Matt. 345 sq.; swallowing a, ib. 413.
Camel's hair, Matt. 70.
Cana, John 103; miracle at, ib. 102 sqq.
Canaan, the woman of, Matt. 281 sqq.; the earthly and the heavenly, Rom. 157.
Cananites, see Canaanites.
CANANITES, Matt. 281.
CANANITE, SIMON THE, Matt. 180, 182, Mark 37, Luke 98.
CANDACE, Acts 165.
Candia, Tit. 8.
Candle, Matt. 104.
Candlesticks, symbolical significance, Rev. 28, 104.
Candor of the sacred historians, Acts 212 sq.
Cannon, use of among the Turks, Rev. 210, Note. 215.
Canon, the Scriptures as the, Matt. 13 sq.; of the Old Testament, Jas. 4; of the New Testament, Matt. 22 sq., Jas. 4.
Capernaum, site of, Matt. 90 sq., John 114; Christ's residence at, Matt. 166, Mark 28, Luke 77; symbolic adaptation of the name, Matt. 479, Note.
Capital punishment, Jews deprived of the right of, Matt. 455, 503; sanctioned, ib. 494, 497, Rom. 400, 402.

Cappadocia, 1 Pet. 12.
CARACALLA, edict of, Rev. 173, Note.
 Care, of God for His work, Matt. 65; for earthly things reproved, ib. 133 sqq.; Luke 201 sq.; to be cast upon God, 1 Pet. 90.
 Carnality, of the Corinthian church, 1 Cor. 10 sq.; in the nature of man, ib. 69 sqq.
 Carnal affections, mastery of the, 1 Cor. 135.
 — mind, works on, Rom. 256.
 — security, fatal, 1 Cor. 201.
 Carpenter, trade of, among the Jews, Matt. 255, Mark 63.
 Carrae, see Haran.
 Carriages, Acts 383.
CASTOR AND POLLUX, Acts 469 sq.
 Casuilla, Matt. 32.
 Casuistry, of Pharisees, Matt. 412.
 Catechism, The Heidelberg, Rom. 148.
 Catechising, Luke 11, 12.
 Catholic Epistles, the, Jas. 1 sqq., 9.
 Catholicity, true, Matt. 330.
 Causes and effects in Christ's kingdom, Acts 346.
CERIANO, THOMAS A., author of "Dieu Ira," Matt. 452, Note.
 Cellibacy, argument against, Luke 311; Christian, Matt. 340, 341; occasion of, 1 Cor. 144, 145; not sustained by the Old Testament, Matt. 259, Rev. 431; Paul's view of, 1 Cor. 139 sq.; how far praiseworthy, ib. 139 sq., 144, 145; in the Roman Catholic Church, Matt. 339 sq., Luke 79 sq., 311, 1 Cor. 144, 165.
 Cenchrea, Acts 341, Rom. 447.
 Census, of Judea, Luke 31 sqq.; of the Roman Empire, ib., ib.
 Centurion, of Capernaum, Matt. 151 sq., Luke 110 sq.; at the cross, Matt. 528, Mark 154, Luke 381 sq.
CEPHAS, a name of Peter, John 93 sq., 1 Cor. 28.
 Ceremonies, reliance on, Theas. 44; Jewish, their object, Matt. 105.
CERINTHUS, heresy of, 2 Pet. 29, 1 John 13.
 Chalcedony, Rev. 386.
 Change, God not subject to, Jas. 56 sq., 60.
 Character, independence of, Theas. 71; of Christ, see Jesus Christ.
 Charitable funds, management of, 2 Cor. 148.
 Charity, misuse of the term, 1 Cor. 266; works of, see Beneficence.
CHARLEMAGNE, empire of, Rev. 261, Note.
CHARLES V., Interim of, Mark 30.
 Charran, see Haran.
 Chastisement, Divine, Heb. 201 sq.
 Cherubim, over the ark of the covenant, Heb. 151 sq., 1 Pet. 18; the four named by Ezekiel, symbolical of the four Gospels, Matt. 25 sq.; symbolism of, Rev. 19, 38, 161.
 Chests in the temple, for offerings, Luke 315.
 Childhood, innocence of, Rom. 230.
 Children, guardian angels of, Matt. 325; baptism of, see Baptism, subjects of; blessed by Christ, Matt. 342, Mark 99, Luke 276 sq.; His notice of, Matt. 323, Mark 99, Luke 117, 276 sq.; Christians compared to, Matt. 323, Mark 89, 91, 99; Luke 158, 159, 277, 1 John 68; in the church, Matt. 342; to be dedicated to God, Luke 47; dreams of, Matt. 66; future state of, Rom. 196; Gerson's delight in, Matt. 323; Jews compared to, ib. 208, Luke 211; lies to, Eph. 173, Note; their duties to parents, Eph. 210, 212 sqq., Col. 76; duties of parents to, 1 Cor. 165, Eph. 212 sqq., Col. 76; blessed through parental faith, Mark 85; may sing God's praises, Matt. 379; in the temple, ib. 378; Christian training of, ib. 327 sq., 557, Eph. 213 sq., 2 John 193; first mention of, in Acts, Acts 385; of Abraham, Mark 72, Rom. 149 sq.; of Bethlehem, Matt. 63; of God, John 74, Note, Rom. 259 sq., 263, 272, 287, 311, Note, Heb. 55; Jewish, instruction of, Luke 48; of ministers, Acts 356.
 Chillsam, Rev. 3, 53, 62, Note, 342 sq.
CHLOE, 1 Cor. 28.
 Chorasin, Matt. 210.
 Chosen, the, see Elect.
 Christ, 1 John 77, 88.
CHRIST, see JESUS CHRIST.
 Christianity, its relations to art, Acts 327 sq.; its teachings respecting the body, 1 Cor. 135 sq.; Christ the centre of, Acts 220; concealment of, Matt. 248, 252; a conquest of evil by good, Rom. 395; compared with culture, Eph. 175; not declining, Rom. 373; defence of, Luke 311; development of, Matt. 248, Mark 43, Rom. 374; its dominion over nations, Matt. 272; its duties compatible with every station, 1 Cor. 165; effects of, Matt. 248, Acts 41; subjective elements of, Eph. 67; union of enemies against, Luke 363; its ethical character, Acts 150; externalism in, Matt. 127, 138, Rom. 128; a series of facts, Luke 13; false and true, contrasted, Matt. 134; its relation to the family, John 102, 104, Rom. 447, Note; the occasion of family separations, Matt. 191; Gentile, its relation to Jewish, Gal. 39 Note; its relation to civil government, Rom. 398 sqq.;

superior to heathenism, 1 Cor. 259; early history of, Matt. 248, Note; based on humility, ib. 65, 93; idealism in, 1 Cor. 98; individualism of, Acts 376; its relation to Judaism, John 161, Acts 422, 2 Cor. 61; the development of law, Matt. 119; a new life, John 136, Rom. 207; relation of literature to, Tit. 11; in harmony with nature, 1 Cor. 229; outward and inward, Rom. 128; divine philosophy in, 1 Cor. 64; its relation to philosophy, Acts 327, 1 Cor. 42, 46, Note, Col. 49; its relation to poetry, Matt. xl sq.; practical, Tit. 15; proofs of, Luke 404, Rom. 59 sq., Theas. 34; propagation of, Heb. 45; realism in, 1 Cor. 98; differs from other religions, Luke 13; the absolute religion, 1 Cor. 154; the final stage of revelation, Heb. 30; opposed to everything revolutionary, 1 Cor. 152; not schismatic, Acts 354; social element in, ib. 369, 376; spread of, Matt. 248, Luke 215 sq., 344, 352; its relation to slavery, 1 Cor. 155, Eph. 218, Tim. 68, 70, Philom. 29, 1 Pet. 50; its relation to society, 1 Cor. 156; system of, Acts 206; a treasure, Matt. 252; its truth suited to all capacities, 1 Cor. 70 sq.; types of, John 648; its universality, Acts 14, 277 sq., 446, Gal. 91; its benefits to woman, Matt. 341, Mark 51, Acts 41, 308, Tim. 35, Jas. 89; the world's judgment of, Matt. 209; its yoke, ib. 214.
 Christianisation of the world, Matt. 447.
 Christian life, see Liberty.
 Christian liberty, the, alternation in, 1 John 128; beginning of, Eph. 165 sq.; characteristic of, 1 Pet. 24; proper conduct of, Rom. 391 sqq., 1 Cor. 219 sq.; development of, Rom. 274, 288; ground of, Col. 27; ideal of, 1 Cor. 118; the divine judgment of, Theas. 49; love the principle of, Eph. 177; many-sided, 1 John 55; necessity of leading, Luke 232; newness of, Rom. 250 sqq.; perseverance in, Luke 232; requirements of, ib. 232, Eph. 187; a continual service, 1 Cor. 220; social requirements of, Eph. 187; relation of speech to, ib. 174, Col. 81; a constant strife, Luke 230 sqq., Rom. 215, Eph. 180 sqq.; success in, 1 Cor. 362; the world's opinion of, Luke 231 sq.
 Christians, should be active, Matt. 355, 442, Mark 90, Luke 108, 159, 291 sqq.; afflictions of, see Afflictions; all things theirs, 1 Cor. 83 sqq., 2 Cor. 111; blessedness of, 1 John 98, Rev. 131, blessings pronounced by, Heb. 190; boldness of, Eph. 117, 120; brotherhood of, Col. 10, Theas. 53, 69 sqq.; nature of their calling, Rom. 278, 280 sq., 290, 328 sqq., 1 Cor. 26, 43, 49, Phil. 30; the children of God, John 74, Note, Rom. 259, 263, 272, 287, 311, Note, Heb. 55; their duty to contribute to support of the church, Matt. 320; their citizenship in heaven, Phil. 61, 63; communion among, 2 Cor. 144, 147 sq.; their duty of consecration, ib. 120; constancy of, Rom. 162, 168, 175, Col. 86; contentions among, Matt. 521 sq., Acts 213 sq., Rom. 444, 448, 454 sq., 1 Cor. 27 sqq., 31 sq., 35, Heb. 204, Jas. 111; conversation of, Eph. 174, 181, 187, Col. 81, Jas. 103; grounds for courage, 1 Cor. 332; death of, Heb. 189; their conduct toward enemies, Matt. 120, Rom. 394 sqq.; equality of, Acts 41, 2 Cor. 147; evil speaking among, Jas. 118 sq., 122; their example, 1 Cor. 103, Theas. 19; faults of, Acts 213 sq., Jas. 102, 2 Pet. 26; fellowship of, Acts 58, 420, Rom. 433, 435, 2 Cor. 15, 147 sq., Gal. 152, 154, Eph. 103, Col. 10, Phil. 26, 42, Heb. 72 sqq.; their fellowship with God, 2 Cor. 11, Eph. 128, 1 John 83; flight of, when allowable, Matt. 192 sq., Acts 263; forbearance of, Matt. 117 sq.; friendship of, Phil. 46, Col. 10; Gentile, Rom. 427, Theas. 44; glory of, Rom. 272, 1 Cor. 83 sqq.; their certainty of future glory, Rom. 268 sqq.; glorifying of, ib. 168; gospel doctrine food for, 1 Cor. 72; effects of the gospel upon, ib. 37 sqq.; should labor to advance the gospel, Theas. 65; grumbling of, Rom. 278; high priest a type of, ib. 168; honor among, ib. 443; humility of, 1 Cor. 99, 2 Cor. 205, Phil. 36 sqq.; compared to infants, 1 Pet. 31; their inheritance on earth, 1 Cor. 219; Jewish, Rom. 427, Theas. 44; joys of, Rom. 436, 2 Cor. 26; final judgment of, Matt. 451; kingship of, Rev. 92; labors of, Heb. 88; their relations to the law, Rom. 218 sqq.; law-suits among, 1 Cor. 121 sqq., 127 sqq., Jas. 78; lukewarmness of, Rev. 133 sqq., 136; marriage of, 1 Cor. 228; origin of the name, Acts 219, 224 sqq.; use of the name in Acts, ib. 444; various names of, ib. 219; nominal and real, ib. 349; the true people of God, Heb. 208; priesthood of, Rev. 92; security of, Rom. 288 sqq.; sins of, 1 John 101 sq., 105, 109; social relations of, Acts 369, 376, Eph. 187 sqq.; sonship of, Gal. 100 sqq.; sufferings of, see Sufferings; compared to a temple, 1 Cor. 134, 136 sqq.; unfaithfulness of, Luke 206; not to be united with unbelievers, 2 Cor. 120; union of, Rom. 202, 207, and see Unity; union with Christ, Matt. 232, Acts 166, Rom. 168, 1 Cor. 26, 83 sqq., 2 Cor. 15, Theas. 12, Heb. 55, 63; as warriors, 1 Cor. 201; the work to be tried, ib. 76, 78; relation to the world, John 444, Jas. 122, 1 John 67 sqq.; worthiness of, Rev. 127.

Christmas, origin of, Luke 36.

Christology, province of, Matt. 214;—Old Testament, Luke 28.

Chronological order, of books of the New Testament, Matt. 21 sq.; of events in religious history, ib. 3 sq.; of events in the Gospel narrative, ib. 65, 86, 90, 150, 216, 220, 223, 261 sq., 276, 316, 318, 336, 368, 454, 490, 510, 540 sq., Mark 64, 69, 86 sq., 88, 112, Luke 46, 72, 85, 92, 120, 127, 161, 217, 283, 293, 336, 353, 398, John 184, 208, 370, Acts ix., 1, 98, 221, 231.

Chronology, works on, Matt. 6.

Chrysostom, Rev. 386.

Chrysoprasus, Rev. 386.

CHRYSOSTOM, on John's Gospel, John vi. on persecutions, 1 Pet. 62.

Church, The, use of the term, Matt. 293, 298, 329, 1 Cor. 20, 233, 235, Thess. 12; who constitute, Matt. 330, Eph. 234; abolition in, Matt. 168, 298 sq., 332 sq., John 617; authority in, Rom. 386 sq., 2 Cor. 28 sq.; Pentecost the birthday of, Acts 63; internal afflictions a blessing to, ib. 225; one body, ib. 166; represented as a building, 2 Cor. 167, 1 Pet. 32 sq.; the body of Christ, 1 Cor. 255, 257, Eph. 64, 66; its relation to Christ, Matt. 389, 3 Cor. 190 sq., Eph. 202 sq., Col. 28; his care for, Matt. 330, Acts 232; Christ the head of, Acts 166, Eph. 63 sq., Matt. 293 sq.; His by redemption, Acts 377; its readiness for his second coming, Matt. 439 sq.; children in, ib. 342; its jurisdiction in civil affairs, 1 Cor. 125, 127, 130; mutual concurrence in, ib. 302; contentions in, Acts 213 sq., Rom. 444, 448, 454 sq., 1 Cor. 35, Jas. 111; discipline in, see Discipline; seven epochs in its history, Rev. 317, Note; extent of, Eph. 66; externality of, Rev. 116; its relation to the family, John 102, 104, Rom. 447, Note; distinctive features of, 1 Cor. 22; a fellowship, Gal. 14, Eph. 103; God's field, 1 Cor. 78; foundation of, Matt. 293, 296 sq., 299, 1 Cor. 75, 78, 106, Eph. 103; freedom in, Matt. 366; government of, Rom. 346, Note, 387, Tit. 11; growth of, Acts 58, 1 Cor. 106; identified with the Kingdom of heaven, Matt. 299; history of, ib. 8, 439, Acts 9, 1 Cor. 40 sq., Rev. 317, Note; God's house, 1 Cor. 78; true idea of, Eph. 120; ideal, Rev. 24 sq.; institution of, Matt. 561; instruction in, Acts 58; judgments by, 1 Cor. 90; legacies to, Matt. 411; its duty in reference to marriage, 1 Cor. 145, Eph. 206, Note; members of, Matt. 326, 1 John 83, 1 Cor. 255; midnights in its history, Matt. 439; mutual dependence of its members, 1 Cor. 255; officers in, Phil. 12; apostolic offices perpetual in, Matt. 299; offices in, ib. 326, 366, 1 Cor. 290, Eph. 156 sq.; principles of order in, Matt. 326; an organism, 1 Cor. 253, Col. 58, Thess. 49; organization of, Tim. 4; party spirit in, 1 Cor. 30, 71, 80 sq., Phil. 37; peace in, Thess. 91; not perfect, Acts 213; polity of, Rom. 387; God's purchased possession, 1 Cor. 136; primitive condition of, Acts 56 sq.; property in, Matt. 345 sq.; prosperity of, 1 Cor. 26; purification of, ib. 118; purposes of, Luke 233; rank in, Matt. 366; built on a rock, ib. 293, 296 sq.; its sacredness, 1 Cor. 80 sq., 84 sq.; sects in, 2 Cor. 190; separation from, ib. 120 sq.; spiritual and temporal interests united in, Acts 111; its relation to the state, Matt. 299, 320, 397, 514 sq., Luke 307, John 565, 572, Acts 337, Rom. 402, 1 Cor. 113, 127; conditions of its success, 1 Cor. 220; its sufferings the sufferings of Christ, Col. 37; support of, Matt. 320; symbols of, Luke 270, 272, 1 Cor. 255, 257, 2 Cor. 167, 178, 190 sq., 193, Eph. 64, 66, Rev. 243, 245; the synagogue the germ of, Matt. 95; relations to its teachers, 1 Cor. 87 sq.; triumphant, Rev. 184; true, characteristics of, Luke 268, 1 Cor. 265, Eph. 133; unity of, Acts 187, 1 Cor. 31, 32, 253 sq., 264, Eph. 142, Phil. 36, Thess. 12; universal, 1 John 26; objective and subjective view of, Eph. 24; woman in, Luke 126, Acts 190, 346, 1 Cor. 224, 296 sq., 302, Tim. 33, 35; its relation to the world, 1 Cor. 119; worship of, Matt. 127; an object of worship, Acts 133.

Church, the primitive, first mention of, in Acts, Acts 86; charity of, 1 Pet. 78; community of goods in, see Communism; condition of, Acts 80; internal dangers of, ib. 105 sq.; development of, ib. 106; elders in, see Elders; its growth in faith, Eph. 157; its firmness in persecution, Matt. 145; government of, Rom. 384 sq., Eph. 156, Note; growth of, Acts 58, 72, 1 Cor. 106; means of, grace employed by, Acts 58; hospitality of, 1 Pet. 78; formed on the model of a household, Rom. 447; officers in, Thess. 90, 96; officers in, Rom. 384 sq., Eph. 156, Note, Tim. 42, 1 Pet. 87; unity of, Acts 82, Eph. 157; the word of God employed by, Acts 108.

Church history, works on, Matt. 6.

Church visitations, model of, Acts 295.

Church year, the, Matt. 31.

Churches, primitive, independency in, Eph. 232, Col. 87; relations of, 1 John 12.

Churches, the seven of Asia, compared with the seven parables, Matt. 237; messages to, Rev. 90, 104, 108 sq., 113 sq., 132, 407, 408 sq.; symbolic significance, ib. 28.

CHUZA, Luke 136.

CINEAS and PYRRHUS, anecdote of, 1 John 70.

Circumcision, origin of, Luke 26; antiquity, Rom. 123; its correspondence to baptism, Matt. 557, Luke 42, Acts 305, Rom. 114, 123, Col. 49; Jewish opinions concerning, Rom. 114, Note; its significance, Luke 28, John 248 sq., 252, Acts 115, Rom. 115, 123 sq., 126 sq., 149, Eph. 89; its abolition by Christ, Luke 42, 333, Rom. 123; of Christ, Luke 42; of Timothy, Acts 298 sq.; dispute at Antioch concerning, ib. 276 sqq.

Citizens, Roman, Acts 307.

City, the heavenly, Heb. 186, Rev. 385; symbolic use of the word, Rev. 26.

Civil affairs, church jurisdiction in, 1 Cor. 125, 127, 130.

Civil rights to be valued by Christians, Acts 405 sq.

Civilisation, history of, works on, Matt. 6, 7.

Claims of Christ, extraordinary, Matt. 198.

Clairvoyance, 1 Cor. 300 sq.

Classical writers, their view of a future life, Thess. 77.

Claudia, Acts 457.

CLAUDIUS, the Emperor, Acts 221; famine during the reign of, ib. 6; Jews expelled from Rome by, ib. 334, Rom. 31 sq., 398, Rev. 59.

CLAUDIUS LYSIAS, Acts 394.

CLAUDIUS, M., quoted, John ix.

Clay, use of in eye diseases, John 307.

CLEANTHES, quoted by Paul, Acts 325.

CLEMENT, see CLEMENT.

— ALEXANDRINUS, hymn of, Luke 88.

— FLAVIUS, Phil. 6, 65.

— ROMANUS, quoted 1 Cor. 13.

CLEMENT, associate of Paul, Phil. 6, 65.

CLEOPAS, Luke 390.

CLEOPHAS, see CLOPAS.

Clergy, see Ministers.

Clericalism, Luke 314.

CLOPAS, Matt. 255 sq., 259, John 585, Jas. 13 sq., 20.

Closet, a place of prayer, Matt. 123.

Cloud, symbolical import, Rev. 19, 219; at the Transfiguration, Matt. 308 sqq.

Clouds, coming of Christ with, Rev. 93.

Cnidus, Acts 456.

Coals of fire, Rom. 394 sq.

Coasts, Acts 256, 348.

Coat, the holy, Luke 374.

Cock-crowing, Matt. 478, 498, Luke 354.

Codex Sinaiticus, Matt. xx., 665, Acts vii.

Codex Vaticanus, Acts vii., Note.

Cohort, Matt. 514, John 544, Acts 454.

COLERIDGE, S. T., quoted, Gal. 62, Note.

Collections, charitable, Acts 223 sqq., Rom. 443, 1 Cor. 354 sq., 2 Cor. 148.

Colors, symbolism of, Rev. 16 sq.

Colosse, Col. 5; church at, ib. 5 sq.; false teachers at, ib. 7.

Colossians, Epistle to the, its author, Col. 3 sq.; its character and significance, ib. 2 sq.; synopses of contents, Rom. 21 sq., Col. 1 sq.; date of composition, Col. 8; compared with Epistle to the Ephesians, Rom. 21, Col. 3; place of composition, Col. 8; works on, ib. ib.

COLUMBANUS, Matt. 268.

Comfort, spiritual, need of, Thess. 58; afforded by the gospel, 2 Cor. 11, 15, Thess. 146 sq., 148.

Comforter, the office of, John 428, 432, 440 sq., 2 Cor. 11.

Coming to Christ, John 90.

Commandment, the great, Matt. 402 sqq., Mark 122 sq.; the fifth, Eph. 211, sqq.

Commandments, great and small, Matt. 403, Mark 122 sq.; the seven Noachic, Matt. 151; the ten, division of, ib. 344; keeping of the, 1 John 49 sq., 158 sq., 167.

Commentaries on the Bible, see Bible.

Commentary, Lange's, history of, Matt. viii., sq.; plan of, ib. vii. sqq., xiv. sqq.; Anglo-American edition of, ib. xvi. sq., Luke vi., vii., viii.

Commentators, English and American, Matt. xvi.

Commission, Apostolic, Matt. 557, 567, Mark 161 sq.

Common things, value of, Mark 68.

Communicatio idiomatum, Heb. 73.

Communication of the truth, Heb. 109 sq.

Communion, the Holy, see Lord's Supper.

— with God, 2 Cor. 120, Heb. 175, 1 John 23, 26 sq.

— of the Holy Spirit, 1 Cor. 254, 2 Cor. 217, 219, 230, Philom. 26, 31.

— open, Rom. 435.

— of saints, John 522 sq., 1 Cor. 259.

Communism, Christian, Acts 57, 59, 80, 83, 2 Cor. 143 sq., 147 sq., 159.

Compassion of God, illustrated in parables, Matt. 235 sq., Luke 241 sq.

Compulsion of heretics, Luke 228.

Concessions to opinions of others, 1 Cor. 180, Thess. 11.

Concordances of the Bible, list of, Matt. 32 sq.

Conduct, Christian, 1 Cor. 219 sq., Phil. 30, Col. 72; rules for, Rom. 391 sqq.; toward the State, ib. 398 sqq.

Confession of Christ, made at baptism, Tim. 73; Christ the centre of, Rom. 352; by the early church, Acts 81; its relation to faith, Rom. 347, 352, 353 sq.; Heb. 75, 99; nature and grounds, Matt. 197, 299; necessary to salvation, 1 John 136, 147; a test of saints, ib. 138 sq.; its worth, Heb. 73, 99.

Confession of sins, a condition of forgiveness, 1 John 40; mutual, James 140, 144 sq.; nature of, 1 John 42; by Paul and others, Tim. 24; the result of repentance, Acts 355, 357, 1 John 37, 40, 62; varieties of, 1 John 37.

Confession, auricular, Jas. 141, 146, 1 John 37 sq., 40.

Confessions of faith, historical necessities, 1 Cor. 31 sq.

Confessors of Christ, Matt. 358.

Confidence in God, Thea. 153.

Confirmation, rite of, Acts 149, 151.

Conflict, the Christian life a, 1 Cor. 194 sqq., Eph. 220, 227, Tim. 75, Heb. 196.

— between Kingdom of God and of Satan, Matt. 294.

— of truth with error, 2 Cor. 172, 175.

Congregations, early Christian, Philom. 12.

Conscience, approval of, Rom. 104, 1 John 128 sqq.; paramount authority of, 1 Cor. 177; a good, an evidence of Christianity, Acts 422, 424; relation of faith to, Tim. 26; power of the gospel over, Acts 437; not to be interfered with, Jas. 123; a law to the Gentiles, Rom. 101 sq.; liberty of, Acts 319; possessed by all, Rom. 104; of others, regard for, 1 Cor. 177, 179, 230; rule of, Rom. 429, Jas. 123; not to be trifled with, Rom. 429; voice of, Eph. 102; witness of, 1 John 128 sqq.; sermons on, ib. 131.

Consciousness, Christ's, John 233; human, opposes the law of gravity, Matt. 271; of sin, Eph. 120; two-fold form of, Rev. 41.

Consecration to God, a duty, Rom. 386, 2 Cor. 120.

Consistency of God, Rom. 314, 331.

Consolation of the Gospel, Thea. 146 sqq.

Constancy, Christian, Rom. 162, 168, 175, Col. 86.

CONSTANTINE, the Emperor, vision of, Acts 470.

Contentions among Christians, Acts 213 sq., Rom. 444, 454 sq., 1 Cor. 35, Heb. 204, John 111.

Contentment, 1 Cor. 255, Phil. 72, 75, Tim. 70, 71.

Continence, praised by Paul, 1 Cor. 139 sq.

Contrasts, in the life of Christ, see Jesus Christ; shown by the parables of Christ, Matt. 236; between the hierarchical and evangelical church, Mark 108.

Contributions, method in, Rom. 443; to the support of the church, Matt. 320.

Controversies, among Christians, Matt. 521 sq.; concerning the Lord's Supper, ib. 475, Luke 338, John 222; of the Jews, Christ's conduct in reference to, Luke 200.

Convenient, meaning of the word, Rom. 80, Note.

Conversation, Christian, Eph. 174, 181, 187, Col. 81, Jas. 103.

Conversion, divine and human agency in, Rom. 329 sq.; 1 Cor. 102 sq., 128; a condition of church membership, Matt. 328; delay of, Luke 377; means employed in, ib. 287; does not merit God's favor, Jas. 122; nature of, Matt. 323, Luke 241, 355, John 123; distinguished from regeneration, John 68, 123, 1 Pet. 29; results of, Heb. 180.

Converts, training of, Matt. 326, Mark 91; temporary, Luke 130.

Conviction, certainty of, Rom. 418.

Co-operation of God with Christ, Matt. 214.

Corian, Matt. 277, Mark 65.

Corinth, Acts 334, 1 Cor. 6; church at, 1 Cor. 6 sqq.; Paul's visits to, Acts 334, 1 Cor. 7, 30, 2 Cor. 7, 212; his letters to the church at, Rom. 20, 1 Cor. 7 sq., 2 Cor. 7.

Corinthians, Paul's Epistles to the, analysis of, Rom. 20 sq.; characteristics of, 1 Cor. 6 sqq.; their position and significance, ib. ib. 7 works on, ib. 12.

— Paul's First Epistle to the, analysis of, 1 Cor. 15 sqq.; its genuineness, ib. 13 sq.; occasion and design of, ib. 14; its style, ib. 15; time and place of composition, ib. 14.

— Paul's Second Epistle to the, analysis of, 2 Cor. 5 sq.; its genuineness, ib. 1 sqq.; importance, ib. 5 sq.; occasion and design, ib. 3 sqq.; style, ib. 5; time and place of composition, ib. 3; unity, ib. 2 sq.

Corn, plucking of by the disciples, Matt. 216 sq., Mark 31 sq., Luke 92 sq.

CORNELIUS, Acts 191 sqq.

Corporality of Christ in heaven, Acts 165 sq.

Corpus Christi, Festival of, John 137, Note.

Corpus, symbolical meaning, Rev. 23.

Corruption, of human nature, Rom. 327 sq., Eph. 165; of the Jews, Rom. 328; of the world, ib. 327.

Cos, Acts 383.

Council, of the church, the first, Acts 285 sqq.; of seven, Matt. 113; of seventy, see Sanhedrin; of Trent, decree of quoted, Acts 355.

Councils, Papal, Rev. 260.

Counsels of God, Acts 69.

Courage, Christian, grounds for, 1 Cor. 332.

Court of the Gentiles, see Temple.

Court of justice in every Jewish city, Matt. 113, John 185.

Courts, ecclesiastical, 1 Cor. 125, 127, 130.

Cousins of Christ, Matt. 254.

Covenant of God, Rom. 307, Gal. 75 sqq.; always perfect, Rom. 124; the law not the complement of, Gal. 77; the Old and the New contrasted, Matt. 106, 166, 171, 472, Luke 23, 89 sq., 2 Cor. 61, Gal. 123, Heb. 134, 146 sq., 206; with Abraham, Rom. 149 sqq.

Covetousness, the sin of, Rom. 229, 246; dangers of, Tim. 70, 71; called idolatry, Col. 64, 66; its connection with licentiousness, ib. 64, 66, Thea. 65, Heb. 213.

COWPER, WILLIAM, quoted, Gal. 74, 131.

CRASHAW, RICHARD, quoted, John 80, Note.

Creation, the Christian doctrine of, John 59 sqq., 63, Acts 327, 329; its connection with redemption, John 59, Eph. 66, 120; threefold, John 59; the history of, works on, Matt. 6.

Creative miracles not performed by Christ, Matt. 267 sq.

Creator, God the, Acts 327, 329.

Creature, deification of the, Acts 269; groaning of the, Rom. 270, 286 sq.; a new, 2 Cor. 98, Gal. 160.

Credibility of the Gospels, proof of the, Luke 355.

Creed, the Apostles', Matt. 396, Tim. 73.

Creeds, origin of, Jude 14.

Crete, Tit. 8.

Crimson, symbolical import, Rev. 17.

CRISPUS, Acts 635.

Criticism, Biblical, works on, Matt. 7 sq., 18; principles of, ib. 7 sqq.

Cross, the, agonies of, Matt. 523; bearing, ib. 303, Mark 79, Luke 149, 152; carried by Roman criminals, Matt. 198; form of, ib. 523 sq., John 584; symbol and emblem of the Gospel, Matt. 531, John 554, Acts 94, 216, 239; Greek, Matt. 522 sq.; St. Andrew's, ib. ib.

Cross of Christ, the, use of the expression, 1 Cor. 34; the touchstone of Christianity, Gal. 159 sq.; glorying in, ib. 158 sqq.; mystery of, Mark 87, 1 Cor. 40; an offence, 1 Cor. 40, 41; the power and wisdom of God, ib. 40; preaching of, ib. 37, 41; reconciliation through, Eph. 64 sq., 102.

Crosses, blessing of, Phil. 25.

Crown, use of the word in the Bible, 1 Pet. 87; of life, Jas. 44, 47, 1 Pet. 87, Rev. 29, 118.

Crucifixion, the worst punishment known, Matt. 199, John 564, 583; agonies of, Matt. 523; modes of, ib. 522 sq., 536, John 583 sq.; abolition of, Matt. 522, Note, John 584.

Crucifixion of Christ, the Gospel accounts of, Matt. 519 sqq., Mark 161, Luke 373; date of, Matt. 368, 454 sqq., Luke 332 sq., John 583, 589 sq.; locality of, Matt. 520 sqq., John 583; the act of the people, Acts 46; illustrated by poetry, Luke 374; the fulfilment of prophecy, Gal. 70.

Crowned, Matt. 139, 521.

Cubit, Matt. 134.

Culture, authority of, Rev. 179; its benefits to Christianity, Acts 347; compared with Christianity, Eph. 175; not the salvation of the world, Luke 269.

Cup, symbolical use of the word, Matt. 363, Mark 106, Luke 348; use of the, in the Lord's Supper, Matt. 470 sqq., Luke 336 sq., 1 Cor. 209, 237; withheld from the laity in the Rom. Cath. Church, Matt. 472.

Curiosity in reference to Scripture prophecy, Matt. 430.

Curse, hereditary, Matt. 50, 60; of the law, Gal. 68, 71 sq.; invoked on themselves by the Jews, Matt. 512, 515.

Curtain, see Vail.

Custom, payment of, Rom. 405.

Customs, Oriental, of anointing the head, Matt. 127, 463, John 93, 371, 1 John 77; of kissing the feet, Luke 122; of washing the feet, Matt. 463, 533, John 371, 407, 415; of places of honor, Matt. 363; of reception of kings, ib. 373; of marriages, ib. 170, 208, 390 sq., 399, 434 sq., John 143; of meals, Matt. 389, Note; of position at table, ib. 170, 410, 467, 469, Luke 335.

Cyclical view of prophecy, Matt. 431, Rev. 47 sqq.

Cymbal, 1 Cor. 267.

Cyprus, government of, Acts 243; visited by Paul and Barnabas, ib. 242.

Cyrenians, synagogue of the, Acts 109.

CYRENIUS, see QUIRINIUS.

Dalmanutha, Matt. 266, Mark 74.

Dalmatia, Tim. 116.

AMARIS, Acts 326.

Damascus, Acts 162; rivers of, ib. 170; Paul's escape from, 2 Cor. 190.

Dan, town of, Matt. 294; tribe of, Rev. 30, 163, 189.

Dancing, at heathen festivals, 1 Cor. 198; at marriages, Matt. 206; of Salome, ib. 263.

DANIEL, book of, its leading idea, Rev. 9, 10; its eschatology, ib. 44, 48 sq.; his prophecy of the Messiah, Matt. 161.

- DANTE, the poet, Luke 256; quoted, Heb. 89.
- Darkness, at the crucifixion, Matt. 525 sq., 530, Luke 378 sq.; figurative use of the term, John 61, Acts 443; spiritual and mental, Thess. 56; symbolical import, Rev. 19; works of, 1 Cor. 90.
- DAVID, his relation to Christ, Matt. 51, 176, Mark 135, Luke 313, John 99, Acts 81, Rom. 60, Rev. 157; his justification, Rom. 148, 155; key of, Rev. 22, 129; his prophecies, Acts 20, 22, 47, Heb. 25 sq.; Psalms of Matt. 404, Rom. 363; restoration of his house, Acts 282.
- Day, meaning of the term, Rev. 260, Note; symbolical meaning, ib. 19; figurative use of the term, John 307, 313, 343.
- , Jewish, Matt. 353, 454, Note; of judgment, see Judgment; of the Lord, Acts 40, Thess. 83, 86, 2 Pet. 46, 50, Rev. 301; of preparation, Matt. 455 sq., 537, Luke 363, John 569; works of the, Rom. 409.
- Days, holy, Rom. 414, 418; last, Acts 41, Tim. 103, 104, Heb. 24 sq., Jas. 129; observance of, Rom. 418, Gal. 106, 109, Col. 53, 57.
- Days and nights, three, Matt. 226, Note.
- Deacons, seven appointed, Acts 104, 106; office of, Phil. 12; qualifications of, Tim. 41 sqq.
- Deaconess, Rom. 446, 450, Tim. 58 sq., 61.
- Dead, the, baptism for, 1 Cor. 328 sq.; burial of, practised by the Jews, Matt. 150; Jewish lamentation over, Mark 50; Jewish law respecting, Matt. 413; raised to life by Christ, Luke 113 sq., 141 sq., John 357 sq.; number of, raised to life, John 359; monument to, Matt. 413; God's power displayed in raising of, Rom. 152; the place of, Christ's abode in, Acts 49; prayer for, Tim. 31, 90; realm of, Rom. 346; resurrection of, see Resurrection; sorrow for, Thess. 73 sq., 77.
- Dead Sea, contrasted with the Sea of Tiberias, Matt. 211; symbolic import of the, Rev. 348.
- Deaf and dumb, schools for the, Mark 70; healed by Christ, see Miracles.
- Death, Rev. 165, 173.
- Death, various meanings of the word, Rom. 176, 2 Pet. 37, Rev. 125; doctrines of the Apocalypse concerning, Rev. 403; of believers, Heb. 189; body of, Rom. 242 sq.; an introduction to Christ's presence, Phil. 26; overcome by Christ, Tim. 86, 90, Heb. 63; with Christ, Rom. 205, 220 sq.; eternal, Rom. 176, Phil. 26, Tim. 86, 2 Pet. 37; fear of, Rom. 285, Thess. 77; its relation to life, Rom. 285; ministry of, 2 Cor. 48; probation after, Matt. 224; the second, Rev. 28; its relation to sin, Rom. 176, 180, 196, 257, 283, 1 Cor. 332 sqq., Heb. 63; a release from sin, Rom. 204; compared to sleep, Matt. 175, Luke 142, John 314, Thess. 77; state of the soul after, Luke 256, Phil. 26, Thess. 78; symbolized, Rev. 173 sq.
- Death of Christ, symbolized by baptism, Rom. 207; physical causes of, Matt. 523, 537, John 588, 597; certainty of, Luke 384; its character, Heb. 63, 1 Pet. 63, 1 John 33; date of, Matt. 454 sqq., Luke 332 sq., John 563, 569 sq.; effects of, Matt. 540, 548, Mark 152, 154, Rom. 106, 1 Cor. 83 sqq., Tim. 30, Heb. 63, 139, 159, 175; various opinions concerning, Matt. 537; predictions of, 6. 302, 394, 318 sq., 360 sq., Mark 103 sq., Luke 150, 521 sq., 281 sq.; vicarious nature of, Matt. 366, 2 Cor. 98, 101 sq., 1 Pet. 49; voluntary, John 324; witnesses of, Luke 381; works on the subject, Matt. 523, 537, Luke 333.
- Debt of love, Rom. 405, 408 sqq.
- Debtors, Roman law in reference to, Matt. 333 sq.
- Decalogue, the, divisions of, Mark 123; harmony of, Rom. 138, Note.
- Decapolis, Matt. 96.
- Decree of God, Matt. 239, 415, Note, Rom. 333.
- Dedication, feast of, John 330; of a church, gospel for, Luke 287.
- Defence of Christianity, best method of, Luke 311.
- Degrees of rewards and punishments, 2 Cor. 85 sq.
- Delicacy of the creature, Acts 289.
- Delism refuted, John 61.
- Delity, names of, 1 Cor. 21.
- Delay in receiving the Gospel, danger of, 2 Cor. 112 sqq.]
- Deliverance, from the power of sin, Heb. 63; from the wicked, Thess. 163; from this evil world, Gal. 15.
- Deluge, the, traditions of, 2 Pet. 43; works on, Matt. 6.
- Delusions, sent by God, Thess. 141.
- DEMAS, Tim. 116, 119, Philom. 24.
- DEMETRIUS, a disciple, 3 John 199.
- , the silvermith, Acts 360, 362 sq.
- Demons, see Devils.
- Demoniacs, Matt. 96; nature of their affliction, 6. 6. 164 sq., 314, Luke 77 sq.; healed by Christ, Matt. 96, 164 sqq., 177, 223, 281 sq., 314 sq., Mark 22, 46 sq., 67 sq., 83 sqq., Luke 77 sqq., 135 sqq., 157 sq., 183 sqq.; healed by Philip, Acts 144.
- Denarius, Matt. 332 sq., 352 sq., 463, Mark 60, Luke 122, John 206.
- Denial of Christ, by his people, Matt. 197; by Peter, 6. 497 sqq., Mark 146 sq., Luke 353 sq.
- Dependence of Christians on Christ, John 480, 1 Cor. 228 Jas. 122; of woman on man, 1 Cor. 228.
- Depravity of man, Rom. 120 sq., 124, 247 sqq., 255 sq., 264 sqq., 1 Cor. 128, Gal. 138 sqq., 142 sqq., Eph. 16, 52, 53 sq., 161 sq., 166 sq.
- Derbe, Acts 202.
- Descent of Christ into Hades, 1 Pet. 63 sq., 66, 67 sqq., 75.
- Desert of Ephraim, Mark 103.
- Deserta, the habitation of devils, Matt. 226.
- Desire for things forbidden, Rom. 229, 246.
- Development of Christian life, Rom. 274, 288; of mankind, Rev. 3.
- Devil, the, see SATAN; characteristics of, John 299; children of, 1 John 106 sq.; condemnation of, 2 Pet. 29 sq.; present condition and future destiny, 2 Pet. 29 sq.; contest with, Eph. 170, 221; fall of, John 293, Tim. 3, 40; relation of heathendom to, 1 Cor. 212; a murderer, John 292; how resisted, 1 Pet. 91.
- Devils, belief of, Jas. 84, 89; cast out by Christ, see Demoniacs; present condition and destiny, 2 Pet. 29 sq.; dwelling in deserts, Matt. 226; existence of, 1 Cor. 172; legion of, Matt. 47; no power over life, Mark 85; mention of, Rev. 36; heathen sacrifices to, 1 Cor. 212; the seven, parable of, Luke 184, 185; worship of, Rev. 30.
- Diaconate, the, Acts 111, Rom. 385. See Deacons.
- Dialect, Aramaean, Mark 50, Acts 395; Galilean, Luke 364; Hebrew, Acts 395.
- Dialogus, didactic, use of by Christ, Matt. 234.
- Diana, Acts 360; temple of, at Ephesus, Acts 353, 360, Eph. 12, Note.
- Dictionaries of the Bible, Matt. 19.
- DIDYMS, of THOMAS.
- , blind man, John 315, Note.
- "Disa Irm," Matt. 452, Note, Luke 327, John 204.
- DIOCLETIAN, Rev. 177, Note, 259, Note.
- DIONYSIUS the Areopagite, Acts 326.
- DIOSCURI, Acts 470.
- DIOTREPHES, 3 John 198, 200.
- Disciples of Christ, the, see Apostles; call of, Matt. 93, 101, Mark 20 sq., John 91 sq.; their bigotry, Mark 91; Christ's regard for, Matt. 232; their dependence on Christ, 6. 314; disputes among, 6. 365 sq., Luke 346, 343; their counts respecting Christ, Matt. 302, 556; their incapacity to understand Christ, 6. 290, 302, 314, 326, Mark 45, Luke 283; meeting of, at Pentecost, Acts 27 sq.; unbelief of, Mark 159 sq., 163; secret, John 136; their fanatical zeal, Matt. 342, Mark 91.
- Disciples of John, Matt. 170 sqq., 203, Luke 89, 115 sq., John 13, 99, Acts 348 sqq.
- Discipleship, true, character of, John 287, 299.
- Disciplines, church, exercised by the Apostles, 1 Cor. 106, Thess. 159 sq., Tim. 26, 64; proper ends of, 1 Cor. 111 sq., 120, 2 Cor. 35, Thess. 159 sq., 162, Tim. 26; extent of, 1 Cor. 90, 110 sqq.; to be maintained, 6. 90, 118 sqq.; its neglect lamented, Thess. 161 sqq., Tim. 26, 66; rules for, Matt. 328 sqq., Thess. 159 sqq.; to be exercised in the proper spirit, 2 Cor. 217.
- Discourses of Christ, John 215 sqq., 422 sq., 433, Acts 9; eschatological, Matt. 418 sqq., 430, Mark 129 sqq., Luke 208, 317 sqq., 323, 326; works on Matt. 421, Mark 130.
- Discrepancies in the Gospel narratives, alleged in reference to the blind men at Jericho, Matt. 369, Mark 106, Luke 282; the woman of Canaan, Mark 68; appearances of Christ, 6. 159; Christ's entry into Jerusalem, Matt. 371; resurrection of Christ, 6. 541; the great commandment, 6. 402, Mark 122; plucking of the corn, Mark 32; hour of the crucifixion, Matt. 525, Mark 132; demoniacs at Gadara, Matt. 164, Luke 135; calling of disciples, Luke 81; sending them forth, Mark 56; Herod and John, 6. 68; the Passover, Matt. 454 sqq., 468, John 562 sq., 569 sq.; Peter's denial, Matt. 488, Mark 146, Luke 354; preaching to the Samaritans, Matt. 185, John 168; stilling of the tempest, Luke 132.
- , in the Acts, concerning Judas, Acts 8, 20; Thess. 4, 98; in Paul's address, 6. 249.
- Diseases, our, borne by Christ, Matt. 158.
- Disinterested affection, Rom. 205, Note.
- Disobedience, the mother of sin, Rom. 187; its relation to unbelief, Rom. 353, Eph. 74.
- Dispensation, see Covenant.
- Dispersion of the early Christians, Acts 216; of the Jews, 6. 37.
- Diversity of calling, Gal. 41; of gifts, Acts 225, 1 Cor. 249, 257, 260, 263, Thess. 53.
- Divination, arts of, Acts 308.
- Divine nature, 2 Pet. 12.
- Divine things, familiarity with, Mark 54.
- Divinities, heathen, 1 Cor. 212.
- Divinity of Christ, the, proofs of, Matt. 168, 382, 408, Luke 52, 86, 316, John 54 sqq., 397, Acts 134, 170, 188, Rom. 64, 307 sqq., 331, 347, 419, Note, 427, 1 Cor. 21 sq., 58, 2 Cor. 103, Thess. 12, 59, Tim. 31, 45, Tit. 16 sq., Heb. 41, 74; declared by Him, Matt. 560, Luke 170, 326, John 190,

- 215, 332, 335, 447; proclaimed by Paul, Acts 180; Peter's testimony to, ib. 48 sq., 305; importance of the doctrine, Tim. 16; list of passages relevant to, Rom. 331.
- Divinity of the Holy Spirit, Acts 87, 1 Cor. 86.
- Divisions, among Christians, Acts 263, Rom. 448, 454 sq., 1 Cor. 32 sq., and see Contentions, Christians; in the family, Matt. 191.
- Divorce, Christ's views respecting, Matt. 115, 340, Mark 96 sq., Luke 256; evils of, Eph. 208, Note; grounds of, Matt. 115, Luke 256, 1 Cor. 144 sq., 149 sq.; Mosaic law of, Matt. 52, 115, 339 sq., Mark 96 sq.; Rom. Cath. law of, Matt. 115, 339, 340, Luke 256; its wrong and its right, 1 Cor. 144 sq., 149 sq.
- Djerach, Luke 135.
- Docetism, Matt. 271, 2 Pet. 29.
- Doctrine of divinity, title of, Matt. 410.
- Doctrines, Gospel, food for Christians, 1 Cor. 72; importance of, Tit. 9; intended for mature minds, 1 Cor. 56; test of, John 246 sq., 252; condition of understanding, ib. 246.
- Dogs, in the East, Matt. 282, Luke 254; unclean by the Mosaic law, Matt. 139; ideas attached to the term, Phil. 62; name given to the heathen, Matt. 282; symbolical import, Rev. 22.
- "Dolores M. edue," Matt. 58, 422, Rom. 273.
- Donatism, Matt. 247, Mark 29, Luke 268 sq.
- Door, of Jesus, Jas. 17, 136; Christ the, John 317 sq.; the open, Rev. 29.
- DORCAS, Acts 185.
- Dort, Synod of, Rom. 329, Note.
- Doubt, of the disciples, Matt. 556; not evidence of humility, Rom. 154, Note.
- Dove, descent of Holy Spirit like a, Matt. 77, Luke 58, John 87 sq.; symbolical idea of, Matt. 78.
- Doves, the apostles to be like, Matt. 188; offering of, ib. 375.
- Doxology, an import of, Rom. 86; use of, Mark 70, Rom. 308, 331, 375, 433.
- Doxology to the Lord's Prayer, not authentic, Matt. 122, 125, 567; use of, by Paul, Phil. 69.
- Drachma, Matt. 317 sq., Luke 235, Acts 354.
- Dragon, Rev. 237, 240 sq., 246, 258 sq., 425, 428.
- Dreams, a mode of Divine revelation, Matt. 53, 64 sq., Acts 40, 43; of children, Matt. 66; of Joseph, ib. 63, 63 sq., 65; of Pilate's wife, ib. 611; works on, ib. 66.
- Dress, of Christian women, 1 Tim. 33, 35, 1 Pet. 62, 66; regard for, Tim. 35; a symbol, 1 Cor. 228 sq.
- Drinking deadly things, Mark 162.
- Drinks given to the condemned, Matt. 522; offered to Christ, ib. 522, 527, 529.
- Drunkennes, Luke 325, John 111, Gal. 144, Eph. 191, 194, 196.
- DRUSILLA, Acts 426.
- Dust of the feet, shaking off the, Matt. 187.
- Duties, conflict of, Acts 75, 77.
- Dumviri, Acts 306.
- "Dying daily," 1 Cor. 332 sq., 334.
- Dynamical view of the world, John 652.
- Eagle, symbolical import, Rev. 9 sq., 22, 198, 207, 4 eagles, Matt. 426; saints compared to, ib. ib., Note.
- Earnest of the Spirit, 2 Cor. 24 sq.
- Earnestness, see Zeal.
- Earth, creation of the, 2 Pet. 41; a new, ib. 48, 50, Rev. 363, 442 sq.; symbolical use of the term, Matt. 104, 198, 226, 410, John 137, Rev. 18 sq., 33 sq., 182, 197.
- Easter, derivation of the word, Matt. 542 sq.; festival of, ib. 543, 1 Cor. 119.
- Eat, use of the term, Rev. 221.
- Ebionites, in the early church, Rom. 414, Col. 7; omissions in their Gospel of Matthew, Matt. 55, 60; their heresy, John 33, 2 Pet. 29, 30; their contempt for riches, Matt. 102, Luke 247, 279.
- Ecclesia, 1 Cor. 20, 22.
- Ecclesiastical, leading thought of, Rom. 396.
- Ecclesiasticism, false estimate of, John 199.
- Economy taught by Christ, Matt. 226.
- Eden, John 547.
- Edification, Christian, Acts 187, Rom. 422, 430, 1 Cor. 171, 2 Cor. 167, Thess. 87.
- Edify, use of the word, 2 Cor. 167.
- Edomites, conquests of, Rom. 311 sq. See Idumeans.
- Education, of children, Matt. 327; Christ's, John 246, 252; Christian, Eph. 213; of ministers, Acts 346, Jas. 102.
- Egypt, historical importance of, Matt. 63, 65; desire of the Israelites to return to, Acts 124 sq.; symbolical use of the name, Rev. 225, 231.
- Egyptian magicians, Tim. 105; sorcerer, Acts 385.
- Egyptians, the, idol-worship of, Rom. 84 sq.; wisdom of, Acts 119.
- Eight, symbolism of the number, Rev. 15.
- Elders, Jewish, Matt. 277, 385, 502, 1 Pet. 85.
- Elders, in the primitive church, Acts 221 sq., 272, 273, Rom. 386, Note, 387, Thess. 96 sq., Tim. 63 sq., Tit. 8, Jas. 138, 1 Pet. 85, 87; the same as bishops, Acts 374.
- the twenty-four, Rev. 152, 244, 414.
- ELEAZAR, Matt. 385.
- Election, the, Matt. 355, 391, 426, Col. 69, 1 Pet. 11, 13, Rev. 184, 190, 418, 419. See Election.
- Election lady, the, 2 John 186 sq.
- Election, defined, Thess. 17; exposition of the doctrine, Rom. 278 sq., 289 sq., 327 sq., Thess. 18, Eph. 29 sq., 46 sq.; assurance of, Eph. 50, 2 Pet. 14 sq.; a consolation, Luke 202; unlimited differences in, Matt. 445; eternal, Thess. 145, 147; a fact, Col. 72; final, Matt. 391; its relation to human freedom, ib. 387, Luke 232, John 331 sq., Note, Acts 252, 258, 268 sq., Rom. 278, 329 sq., 332, Eph. 48, 50, Thess. 19, 43, Heb. 80; freeness of, Rom. 313; to life, not death, Matt. 325, Acts 260, Rom. 328, 451, Eph. 47, Thess. 19; its relation to predestination, Eph. 33; to restoration, Rom. 374; importance of the doctrine, Eph. 46, Tit. 6; references to, 1 Pet. 11, 13; works on, Rom. 327.
- Eleven, symbolism of the number, Rev. 15.
- El-Ghuweir, Matt. 276.
- ELLJAH, parallel between Christ and, Matt. 279, 282, Mark 67; contrasted with Elijah, Matt. 73; the prototype of John, ib. 69 sq., 73, 263, 266, 312, Luke 18, John 84; legend of, Heb. 77; prayers of, Jas. 142; prophecy of Malachi respecting, John 84; his appearance at the Transfiguration, Matt. 307.
- ELISHA, a type of Christ, Matt. 73; contrasted with Elijah, ib. ib.
- ELIZABETH, Luke 15; her relationship to Mary, ib. 20; compared to Sara, ib. 17; her song, ib. 25, 28.
- El Mejdol, Matt. 284.
- ELOHIM, Heb. 38, 49.
- Eloquence, Acts 422, 425.
- ELYMAS, Acts 242 sq., 245.
- Emancipation of slaves, Philom. 24.
- Embalming, spices used in, Luke 383.
- Emerald, Rev. 356.
- Emmaus, Luke 390.
- End, of days, 1 John 72 sq.; of the Lord, Jas. 136 sq.; of the world, see World; enduring to the, Matt. 191.
- Endurance, Christian, Jas. 43, Rev. 269, 287.
- ENEAS, Acts 186.
- Enemies, Christian conduct towards, Matt. 332 sq., Luke 104, 106, 259, 372 sq., Rom. 394 sq., 1 Pet. 58.
- of God, Rom. 165.
- Engedi, wilderness of, Matt. 68.
- Enmity between God and man, Rom. 256, Eph. 95, 100; list of works on the subject, Rom. 295.
- ENOCH, Jude 23 sq.; Book of, ib. 8 sq., 24, Rev. 10.
- EPAPHRAS, Phil. 47, Col. 6, 13, Philom. 23 sq.
- EPAPHRODITUS, Phil. 47, Col. 13, Philom. 24.
- Eparch, see Procurator.
- EPENETUS, Rom. 447.
- Ephesian letters, Acts 354.
- Ephesians, Paul's Epistle to the, analysis of, Rom. 21 sq., Eph. 1 sq.; authorship, Eph. 8; character, ib. 3; compared with Epistle to the Colossians, ib. 4, 5, Col. 3; the most difficult of Paul's writings, Eph. 4; opinions on, ib. 6; its readers, ib. 10 sq., Rev. 132, Note; its significance, Eph. 7 sq.; works on, ib. 16 sq.
- Ephesus, Acts 342, 360, Eph. 12, Note, Rev. 114; temple of Diana at, Acts 353, 360, Eph. 12, Note; John's residence at, John 11, Rev. 69; practice of magic at, Acts 354; Paul's visits to, ib. 342, 348, 352 sq., 1 Cor. 330.
- the church at, Paul's relation to, Eph. 11 sq.; his address to the elders of, Acts 373 sq., 378; appointment of elders in, ib. 377; Apocalyptic message to, Rev. 409.
- Ephphatha, Mark 70.
- Ephraim, city of John 365; desert of, Mark 103.
- Ephraim, Matt. 59.
- Epicurean philosophy, antagonistic to the Gospel, Acts 323, 327.
- EPIMENIDES, quoted by Paul, Tit. 9.
- Epiphany, festival of, Matt. 57; list of sermons on, ib. 62.
- Episcopate, the, Tim. 37, 39.
- Episcopus, Tim. 37.
- Epistles, classification of the, Matt. 27; catholic, Jas. 1, 3 sq., 9; of John, John 14 sq., Jas. 7 sq.; 1st, 1 Cor. 116, 2 Cor. 7; pastoral, Rom. 24 sq., Tim. 1 sq.; of Paul, Rom. 20 sq.
- Epochs of exegesis, Matt. vi. sq.; in revelation, ib. 3, Gal. 77, Heb. 30.
- Equality, Christian, Acts 41, 2 Cor. 147.
- ERASTUS, Acts 360, Rom. 452, Tim. 118.
- Eretria, Acts 322.
- ERNESTI, on John's Gospel, John vii.
- Error, a calamity, Col. 48; duty of Christians toward, Tim. 20; conflict of truth with, 2 Cor. 172, 175.
- Errors of different sects, Eph. 158.
- typographical, in English Bible, Matt. 413.
- ESAU, Matt. 60, Heb. 204.
- Eschatological discourses of Christ, see Discourses.

Eschatology, Mark 133; value of, Luke 326; Jewish, Rom. 287; New Testament, ib. ib.; Old Testament, ib. ib.; Rev. 45; Persian, Rom. 287; prophetic, Rev. 2; of Book of Daniel, ib. 44, 46 sq.; of Ezekiel, ib. 45; in Paul's epistles, Thes. 23, 24, 78, 86; various views of, Rom. 288.

ESDRAS, Books of, Rev. 6, Note, 8 sq.

Essence, Matt. 71.

ESTIENNE HENRY, Acts 164.

Eternal, Matt. 447.

Eternal life, conditions of, John 222; development of the doctrine of, Rom. 352.

Eternity of punishment, see Punishment.

— of the world, Heb. 41.

Ethiopia, Acts 155.

Ethnarch, Matt. 64, 2 Cor. 190.

Ethnology, works on, Matt. 7.

Eucharist, origin of the name, Matt. 470, 475; its relation to the name of the New Testament, ib. 20.

Euergetes, name given to rulers, Luke 340.

Eunuch, conversion of the, Acts 165 sq., 160 sq.

Eunuchs, classes of, Matt. 339 sq.; symbolical import of the term, ib. ib.

EUODIA, Phil. 64.

EUODIAS, see EUODIA.

Euphrates, symbolical significance, Rev. 32, 294, 304.

EURIPIDES, quoted, Rom. 105 sq.

Euroclydon, Acts 457.

Europe, Gospel carried to, Acts 306, 309, 311.

EUTYCHUS, Acts 368, 369.

Evangelists, Eph. 149 sq. See Gospel, writers of the.

EVE, Satan's appearance to, 2 Cor. 178; sin of, Luke 69, Rom. 175, 190, Tim. 34; Mary compared with, John 691, 695.

Evening, Jewish, Matt. 265.

Evilasting, Matt. 447.

Evil, moral, origin of, Jas. 55; natural and moral, their connection, Luke 86 sq., 211, 213; God not the author of, Rom. 315, 323 sq.; permitted by God, Thes. 141; its connection with sin, John 306, 313; progress in, 1 John 66.

Evil-speaking, 1 John 122.

Exaltation of Christ, see Jesus Christ.

Examination, self, 1 Cor. 242, 244, 2 Cor. 218, Heb. 80.

Example, power of, Rom. 110 sq., Phil. 62; of the Apostles, Thes. 19; of Christ, Matt. 127, 2 Cor. 141, 147, Phil. 37, Thes. 19, 1 Pet. 50; of Christians, 1 Cor. 103, Thes. 10.

Excitement, religious, Thes. 132.

Excommunication, Christian, Matt. 329, 330, 1 Cor. 111 sq.; use of in the early church, 1 Cor. 110 sq., Gal. 19, Tim. 26; Jewish, Matt. 329, 330, John 310, Rom. 302, Note, 303 sq.; Roman Cath., Matt. 329, 1 Cor. 110; its nature and end, 1 Cor. 120; right, occasion and grounds of, ib. 111 sq.

Exegesis, epochs of, Matt. vi. sq.; sciences auxiliary to, ib. 7 sq.

Exegetics, definition and principles of, Matt. 9; special, ib. 16.

Exhortation, gift of, Rom. 385; mutual, Thes. 53, Jas. 145; need of, 1 Pet. 35.

Exorcism, rite of, Matt. 165; used by the Pharisees, Matt. 224, Luke 183.

Exorcists, Jewish, Luke 183, Acts 353.

Experience of the Apostles, a source of instruction, Acts 282.

— of the gospel, personal, Gal. 64.

Expiation, in the Mosaic ritual, Heb. 152; of Christ, John 86 sq., 2 Cor. 102, Eph. 36, Heb. 158 sq., 1 Pet. 49.

Exposition of the Scriptures, Matt. 16.

Externalism in religion, Matt. 127, 138, Rom. 126, Rev. 116.

Eye, clay used in diseases of the, John 307; an evil, Matt. 133, 354, Mark 65; used as an illustration, Matt. 132 sq., 134 sq., 324, 326, Mark 90, Luke 187 sq.; lust of the, 1 John 64 sq.

Eyes, Paul's disease of the, Gal. 107; symbolical import, Rev. 23.

EZEKIEL, eschatology of, Rev. 45.

EZRA, Book of, Rev. 6, Note.

Fable, defined, Rev. 12.

Faculties, cognitive and emotional, 1 Cor. 171.

Faith, Matt. 338.

Faith, assurance of, Luke 170, Acts 150, Rom. 161 sq., 261, 264, 282, 291, 1 Cor. 92, 200, Eph. 50, Tim. 89 sq., Heb. 184, John 127 sq., 176; beginnings of, Mark 90, 91; centre of, Rom. 353; Christ a subject of, Heb. 198 sq.; connected with confession, Rom. 347, 352 sq., Heb. 75, 99; and conscience, Tim. 26; defined, Heb. 183 sq.; degrees of, Eph. 67; enthusiasm of, Luke 28; essence of, ib. 284; of fear, Mark 47; fruits of, Luke 287, Thes. 49; its relation to grace, Matt. 176; growth of, Thes. 58; an affair of the heart, Acts 74 sq., Rom. 347, 353 sq.; connected with hope, 1 Cor. 273, 332, Gal. 130, Thes. 16; importance of, Heb. 89; intellectual and moral, John 67; James' view of, Rom. 145, Jas. 28 sq., 39, 82 sq., 87 sq.; justification by, Luke 287, Acts 262, 445, Rom. 76 sq., 96 sq., 100, 103, 130 sq., 136, 139, 147, 148, 154 sq., Gal. 56; its relation to knowledge, Luke 14, 326 sq., John 235, 621, Tim. 76, 2 Pet. 14; its relation to the law, Gal. 127, 135; liberty of, 1 John 165; shown by a holy life, Rom. 136, Note; need of a living, ib. 378; connected with love, Gal. 130, Eph. 47, 128, Col. 14, Thes. 87, Tim. 20, 1 John 164 sq.; measure of, Rom. 383, 385; nature of, Acts 282, 1 Cor. 52, Heb. 185, 1 John 164; need of, Luke 111, Rom. 378, 1 John 165; obedience of, Rom. 63, Heb. 186; offerings of, Heb. 184; how originated, 1 Cor. 50, 52 sq., 1 John 164; of parents blessed, Mark 85; Paul's views of, Rom. 145, Jas. 28 sq., 39, 87 sq.; permanent, 1 Cor. 273, 275; power of, Mark 114, 1 Cor. 332, Heb. 185, 186; exercise in prayer, Luke 261; the result of preaching the gospel, Acts 267, Col. 14; profession of, Tim. 75, 1 Pet. 50, 62; proportion of, Rom. 384, 389; its relation to reason, Acts 318 sq., 1 Cor. 64, Tim. 76; its connection with repentance, Luke 287, Acts 376, 381; righteousness by, Matt. 51, Rom. 341 sq., Phil. 54, 57; its efficiency in salvation, Acts 308 sq., 1 Cor. 48, 1 John 164 sq.; without sight, John 622; steadfastness of, Heb. 199; want of susceptibility for, Thes. 152; system of, Acts 205; temporary, Luke 130; trial of, ib. 142, Heb. 189, 1 Pet. 17; true and apparent, Acts 144; universality of, Rom. 341 sq., 347; victories of, Heb. 196, 1 John 167; virtues of, 1 John 165; walking by, 2 Cor. 84; weakness in, Rom. 415; its relation to works, Luke 130, Rom. 96 sq., 100, 103, 136, 139, Gal. 140 sq., Thes. 49, Jas. 82 sq., 89, 2 Pet. 51; of Abraham, see Abraham; of the Apostles, Rev. 42; of Bathsheba, Matt. 49, 51; of the Gentiles, ib. 60 sq., Luke 111, Rom. 350; of Jairus, Mary, Rahab, Ruth, Thamar, see those words; of Paul, Rom. 155 sq.; of various persons, Matt. 166, 174, 281 sq., Mark 50 sq., Luke 111, 141.

Faith, the, Jude 14.

Faith, confessions of, 1 Cor. 31 sq.

Faithfulness, important in a minister, 1 Cor. 88, 91, 92, Thes. 70; rewards of, Luke 204 sq., 249; in little things, ib. 248.

—, of God, 1 Cor. 25, 26, 1 John 38; of Christ, Rom. 129.

Fall of man, Rom. 177 sq., 187 sq., 1 Cor. 339; an allegory, Tim. 34; Pre-Adamic, Rom. 191 sq.

Falling into sin, Matt. 499 sq.; from grace, Rom. 168, 369, 374, Eph. 172, Note, 174, Heb. 114 sq., 116.

Family, the, Christ's regard for, Matt. 187; of Christ, ib. 231, Mark 38 sq.; relation of the church to, John 102, 104, Rom. 447, Note; a divine institution, Matt. 187, John 103; divisions in, Matt. 191; government in, 1 Pet. 49 sq.; love of related to love of Christ, Matt. 198, Luke 231; of ministers, Tim. 39 sq.; religion in, ib. 83; Scriptural view of, Matt. 557.

Famine, predicted by Agabus, Acts 221; symbolized in Apocalypse, Rev. 165, 173, 174, Note.

Fan, Matt. 72.

Fanaticism, Jewish, John 264, 300; legalistic, Rom. 155; religious, ib. 139, Thes. 132.

FAREL, W., Luke 358.

Farthing, Matt. 114, 195, 196.

Fashion of the world, Rom. 389.

Fasting, benefits of, Acts 240; of Christ, Matt. 81, Luke 66; days of, Matt. 32; Christ in freedom in respect to, Col. 57; Jewish, Matt. 122, 126, Acts 456; of John's disciples, Matt. 170 sq., Mark 30; various kinds of, Mark 30; proper motive for, Matt. 170 sq., Luke 90; Rom. Cath. doctrine of, Luke 90.

Father, the name applied to God, Matt. 213, John 513, Rom. 261, Eph. 27 sq., 128, 134, Jas. 52; applied to a teacher, Matt. 410.

Fathers, see Parents; the church, exegesis of, Matt. vi. sq.; spiritual, 1 Cor. 102 sq.

Faults, of Christians, Acts 213 sq., Jas. 102, 2 Pet. 26; of good men, not covered in the Bible, Acts 296, 297; of others, easily seen, Luke 107, 108.

Fear, faith of, Mark 47; as a motive to repentance, Thes. 66; superstitious, Luke 36; of God, Matt. 195, Luke 198 sq., Rom. 280, 283, 2 Cor. 93, Thes. 66, 1 Pet. 23, 26, 60, 61; of Satan, Luke 198 sq.

Fearful, the, Christ's rebuke of, Matt. 161 sq.

Feast-days, release of prisoners on, Matt. 510 sq.

Feasts of heathen, 1 Cor. 209; Jewish, John 198, 253.

Feet, the, nailing to the cross, Luke 372; kissing, ib. 122; washing, Matt. 463, 633, John 371, 407 sq., 415; symbolical import, Rev. 23.

FELIX, ANTONIUS, Acts 415, 426; Paul's address before, ib. 420, 426 sq.

Fellowship with Christ, Rom. 168, 1 Cor. 26, 84, 2 Cor. 15, Heb. 55, 63; Christian, Acts 58, 470 sq., Rom. 433, 435, 2 Cor. 15, 147, G. J. 14, 152, 154, Eph. 103, Phil. 26, 42, Col. 10, Heb. 72 sq.; with God, 2 Cor. 11, Eph. 136, 1 John 83; with unbelievers, 1 Cor. 213, 215.

Fertility of Galilee and the East, Matt. 239.

- Festival, appointed by state churches, Matt. 32; of the Ascension, ib. 562, Mark 163, Acts 9; of Corpus Christi, John 137, Note; of Easter, Matt. 543, 1 Cor. 119; of Epiphany, Matt. 57; of the three kings, ib., ib.; of martyrs, ib. 65.
- Fidelity, see Faithfulness.
- Field of blood, Matt. 505, 507.
- , the church, ib. 212 sq.
- Fig-tree, Matt. 380; cursing of the, ib., ib., Mark 112 sq.; parables of the, Matt. 429, Luke 212 sq., 324; a type of Israel, ib., ib.
- Fire, baptism of, Matt. 72, 74, Luke 57; furnace of, Matt. 246, 247; lake of, Rev. 347 sq.; punishment by, ib. ib.; salted with, Mark 90; symbolical meaning of, ib. 90 sqq., Rev. 19, 105, 197, 204 sq.; a token of God's manifestation, John 183, Them. 117; tongues of, Acts 27 sq.; work of believers to be tried by, 1 Cor. 76, 78; destruction of the world by, 2 Pet. 42.
- Fire and brimstone, Rev. 286.
- Fire-arms, use of among the Turks, Rev. 210, Note.
- Firmness, Christian, Acts 290, Col. 86.
- First, to be last, Matt. 354 sqq.
- First-born, Matt. 53, Col. 21.
- First day of the week, 1 Cor. 365.
- First-fruits of the Spirit, Rom. 274, 288.
- Fishers of men, Matt. 93, Mark 20 sq., Luke 83.
- Five, symbolism of the number, Matt. 118, Rev. 15.
- Fleecianism, Rom. 104.
- Flame, symbolical import of, Rev. 105.
- Flattery, to be avoided, Matt. 207.
- Flesh, use of the term, Rom. 61, 235, 1 Cor. 43, Gal. 142; contest of with the Spirit, Gal. 142, 144; crucifixion of the, ib. 140, 145; lusts of the, Gal. 138, 143; sin in the, Rom. 253; sins of the, Eph. 179 sqq.; walking in the, Rom. 255, 263; weakness of the, Matt. 480; works of the, Gal. 138.
- Flesh and blood, Matt. 295 sq., John 223, 1 Cor. 341.
- Flesh of Christ, John 223, 227.
- Flight of Christians, when allowable, Matt. 192 sq., Acts 263.
- Flood, the, see Deluge.
- Floods, symbolical meaning of, Rev. 259.
- Floor, threshing, Matt. 72.
- Flowers of Palestine, Matt. 134.
- "Following Christ," Matt. 303.
- Fool, Matt. 114.
- Foolishness of God, 1 Cor. 39.
- Foot, symbolical meaning of the word, Matt. 324, 328, Mark 90.
- Forbearance, Christian, Matt. 117 sq.
- Forbidden things, desire for, Rom. 229, 246.
- Foreknowledge of God, Matt. 387, 415, John 518, Note, Acts 48, Rom. 278 sq., 1 Cor. 44, Gal. 67, 71, 1 Pet. 12.
- Fore-ordination, see Election.
- Forgiveness, human, Matt. 332 sqq., Luke 259, 1 Pet. 58; contrasted with divine, Matt. 334; Christ's example of, Luke 372 sqq.; Jewish ideas of, Matt. 332.
- Forgiveness of sins, assurance of, Acts 150; power of, granted to the church, Matt. 168, 258, 332 sqq., John 617; condition of, Matt. 334, Luke 400, Acts 205, 252 sq., 1 John 40, 62; after death, Matt. 227 sqq.; power of, a proof of Christ's divinity, ib. 168, Luke 86; elements of, 1 John 40; a gift of God, Acts 98, 1 John 67; connected with justification, Rom. 148; besought in the Lord's Prayer, Matt. 126; results of, 1 John 67.
- Form and substance, relation between, Matt. 171 sq.
- Forms, reliance upon, Them. 44; in prayer, Matt. 124 sq.
- Fornication, 1 Cor. 132 sqq., 136; symbolical use of the term, Matt. 340.
- FORTUNATUS, 1 Cor. 369.
- Forty, symbolism of the number, Matt. 87.
- Forty-two, symbolism of the number, Matt. 49.
- Fountain, symbolism of, Rev. 18.
- of the Virgin, John 181.
- Four, symbolism of the number, Matt. 25, 87, 93, 183, 236, Mark 133, Rev. 15.
- Fourteen, symbolism of the number, Matt. 49.
- Fourth Commandment, binding on Christians, Matt. 218 sq.
- Fowls, in Jerusalem, Matt. 478, 498, Luke 354.
- Fractions, symbolism of, Rev. 18.
- France's Orphan House, origin of, 2 Cor. 155.
- Frankincense, Matt. 59.
- FREDERIC II. of Germany, Matt. 515.
- Free agency, see Freedom; of Paul, Acts 166 sq.
- Freedom, in the church, Matt. 366; of God's grace, Acts 252, 253, 401, Rom. 514, 515 sq., 329, 436, Eph. 48, Tim. 86, 69, Tit. 22, 2 John 188; individual, Eph. 147; of the Spirit, 2 Cor. 47, 51, 58, 60.
- Freedom, Christian, see Liberty.
- Freedom of the will, declared and implied, Matt. 387, 415, Note, Acts 87, 268, 445, 2 Cor. 42; its relation to fore-ordination, Matt. 387, 415, Note, Luke 322 sq., John 220 sq., 322, Note, Acts 252, 258, Rom. 118, 278, Note, 328, 329 sqq., 332 sq., Eph. 48; its relation to converting grace, Acts 98.
- French revolution, prefigured, Rev. 296.
- Friday, Good, Matt. 533.
- Friend, use of the word by Christ, John 344.
- Friendship, with Christ, John 66; Christian, Phil. 46, Col. 10; letters of, 3 John 201.
- Fringes of Jewish garments, Matt. 173 sq., 275, 410.
- Frogs, Rev. 22, 295, 301, 304.
- Fruit, different from gift, Phil. 75.
- Fruits, Matt. 144, 146, Luke 107; of faith, Luke 267, Them. 49; of repentance, Acts 429; of righteousness, 2 Cor. 111 sq., Jas. 101 sq.; of the service of sin, Rom. 216; of the Spirit, Rom. 274, 288, Gal. 139, 145.
- Fuller, Mark 81.
- Fulness of the Gentiles, Rom. 369 sq.
- of time, Gal. 99.
- Funerals, ancient, Matt. 174, 208, Luke 141.
- Furnace of fire, Matt. 246, 247.
- Future world, the, its relation to the present, Matt. 306, Luke 155; Jewish faith respecting, Luke 217; secrets not revealed, ib. 257; what we know of, ib. 255, Them. 77 sq.
- Gabbatha, John 569.
- ABRIEL, Matt. 52.
- Adara, Matt. 164, Mark 46, Luke 186.
- Gadarenes, see Gadara.
- GAUUS, Acts 360, 367, Rom. 452, 1 Cor. 30, 3 John 195.
- Galatia, Acts 294, Gal. 1, 1 Pet. 12; churches of, Gal. 2 sq., 4.
- Galatians, Epistle to the, analysis of, Rom. 21, Gal. 6 sqq.; date, Gal. 4; genuineness, ib. 5; Luther's affection for, ib. 9; object, ib. 5 sq.; occasion, ib. 3; place of composition, ib. 4; style, ib. 6; value and significance, ib. 8 sq.; works on, ib. 9 sq.
- Galilean, name applied to Christ, Matt. 497, John 263, Note.
- Galileans, the, character of, Luke 74; their dialect, Matt. 408, Luke 354, Acts 34; despised by the Jews, John 263 sq.; slaughter of, ib. 211; name applied to Christians, Matt. 497, John 263, Note.
- Galilee, meaning of the name, Matt. 64, 90; the three cities of, ib. 210 sq.; description of, ib. 94; divisions of, ib. 64, 90, John 103; extent of, Matt. 94; famous men born in, John 263 sq.; population, Luke 49; beginning of Christ's work in, ib. 72; His residence in, Matt. 91 sq.; His journeys through, ib. 94 sq., 99, 178, Mark 87; driven from, Matt. 288, 290; His appearances in after His resurrection, ib. 546.
- Galilee, Sea of, see Gennesaret.
- Gall, Matt. 522, Acts 148.
- GALLIO, Acts 338 sq., 339 sq.
- GAMALIEL I., Acts 97, 100.
- II., Acts 97.
- Games, Greek and Roman, Paul's illustrations from, 1 Cor. 194 sq., Phil. 56, Tim. 72 sq., 94, 113, Heb. 197 sq., 1 Pet. 87.
- Gangas, Acts 304.
- Garments, festal, Matt. 390 sq.; Jewish, Matt. 173 sq., 275, 410; Oriental, Luke 280; spreading of, Matt. 273; white, use of, Mark 81, Rev. 127; symbolical significance, Rev. 29, 127.
- of Christ, Matt. 523 sq., Mark 151, Luke 374.
- Garner, Matt. 72.
- Gate, use of the word, Acts 195, 229, 266; Beautiful, ib. 62; the strait, Matt. 143, 146; proselytes of the, see Proselytes.
- Gates of Hades, Matt. 293 sq., 298.
- Gaulonites, see Judas.
- Gaulonitis, Matt. 263.
- Gaza, Acts 154.
- Gazelle, Acts 188.
- Gehenna, Matt. 195, 246, 479, Luke 254, Jas. 97, Rev. 35, 347 sq., 370.
- Genealogy of Christ, Matt. 39, 48 sqq., Luke 62 sq.
- Gennesaret, Lake, described, Matt. 93, John 208, Note; its beauty, Luke 77; contrasted with Dead Sea, Matt. 211; various names of, ib. 93, John 208; storms on, Matt. 161.
- Gennesaret, land of, Matt. 276.
- Gentile, Rev. 230.
- Gentile Christians, Them. 44.
- Gentiles, the, their interest in Christ, Matt. 60, John 382, 390 sqq.; conscience a law to, Rom. 101 sq.; conversion of, Acts 195, 208, Rom. 369 sq.; court of, see Temple; faith of, Matt. 90 sq., Rom. 350; fulness of, Rom. 369 sq.; their reception of the gospel, Matt. 281 sqq., 1 Cor. 44, Note; Jewish customs respecting, Acts 201; equality with the Jews, Rom. 114; their knowledge of God, Them. 65; their fulfillment of the law, Rom. 100 sq., 104; compared to the wild olive tree, ib. 387; Paul, as apostle to, Acts 169, 171; salvation of, Rom. 100, 103, 136, 140, 369 sq.
- Gentleness, Christian, Acts 401, Gal. 145, Them. 30, Tim. 101, 102, 114.

Genuineness of certain disputed passages, Mark 158, John 267 sqq., 629, 1 Cor. 13 sq.

Geography, Biblical, works on, Matt. 7.

Geometrical figures, symbolism of, Rev. 18.

Gerasa, Matt. 164, Luke 135.

Ger-sa, Matt. 164, Luke 135.

Gergesenes, Matt. 164, Luke 135.

Gerizim, Mt., Matt. 185, John 100.

German, Christianity, Rom. 374; commentators, Matt. vii.

GERON, C., note c of, Acts v.

GERSON, J. C., his love for children, Matt. 323.

Gethsemane, description of, Matt. 478, John 544, Note; symbolical meaning of the name, Matt. 479, Note; antithesis of Paradise, John 547; Christ in, Matt. 479 sqq., Mark 143, Luke 345 sqq., John 544 sqq.

GIBBON, EDWARD, quoted, Rev. 309, Note, 323, Note.

Gift, different from fruit, Phil. 75; of Holy Spirit, of tongues, see those words.

Gift of God, John 155.

Gifts, of God, Acts 29, Jas. 57.

—, of the mag., Matt. 59.

—, spiritual, to the early Christians, 1 Cor. 247, 249, 260; classification of, ib. 250, 257, 258, Note; abuse of, ib. 247; distribution of, Matt. 443, 445, Tim. 89, H b. 45; diversification of, Acts 225, 1 Cor. 249, 257, 260, 263, Thess. 53; prayer for, Luke 181; how to be used, Rom. 386, Thess. 97; varieties of, Rom. 384 sq.

Glail, see Matt. 185, Eph. 223, Rev. 104.

Giving, blessing of, Acts 377, 381 sq.

"Gloria in excelsis," Luke 39.

Glorification of Christ, see Jesus Christ.

Glorious, of Christ, see Jesus Christ; of Christians, Rom. 272, 1 Cor. 83, 84 sqq.; of vine, Luke 36, 37, John 73 sq., Rom. 161, 306 sq., Thess. 36; future, Rom. 203 sqq., 289; of God, Acts 113, 116, Rom. 130, 161, 300; of Israel, Rom. 340; suffering connected with, Luke 155.

Glory to God, giving, John 311, Rom. 153.

Glorifying of Christians, Rom. 168.

Gnat, straining out a, Matt. 413.

Gnostics, John 23, Tim. 49.

Good, use of the, Acts 422.

Goats, Matt. 448 sq.

GOD, far of, Luke 194 sq.; glory of, Acts 113, 116, Rom. 130, 161, 300; the source of goodness, Matt. 344; in history, Acts 340; image of, 2 Cor. 59, 69, Eph. 166, Col. 20, Jas. 103; manifestations of, John 50; names of, 1 Cor. 21, Rev. 91; personality of, John 59 sq.; preeminent existence of, ib. 33; righteousness of, see Righteousness; see, Rev. 106.

God, the unknown, altar to, at Athens, Acts 321, 327.

"God of this world," 2 Cor. 66 sq.

"God forbid," Rom. 112, Note, Gal. 49, Note.

Godliness, mysteries of, Tim. 45 sqq.; profitable, ib. 54.

God is, hathen, Acts 268 sq.

Goite, Luke 267, 319.

GOTHE, quoted, Matt. 110, Luke 26, 29, 79, 188, 236, 388, John 52, 61, 66, 293, Note, 435, Note, 632, Acts 365, Rom. 290, Note, Rev. 38, 76; religious views of, Acts 365.

GOG, Rev. 34, 355 sqq.

Gold, given to infant Jesus, Matt. 59; symbolical meaning, Rev. 21.

Golden rule, Matt. 143, Luke 104.

Golgotha, Matt. 105, 520 sqq., 529, Mark 151, John 582 sq.

Gomorrhah, judgment of, Luke 167.

Good, the highest, Matt. 344, 346.

Goodness, of Christ, Matt. 381 sq.; God the source of, ib. 344.

Gospel, the, meaning of the word, Matt. 94, Rom. 59; suited to all capacities, 1 Cor. 70 sqq.; its power over the conscience, Acts 427; consolation of, 2 Cor. 11, 15, Thess. 146 sqq.; its doctrines, 1 Cor. 72; not an abstract system of doctrines, Tim. 82; absolute in its effects, Matt. 213; different effects of, 1 Cor. 37 sqq., 41 sq.; carried to Europe, Acts 308 sq.; taken to the Gentiles, Matt. 171 sq.; how to be heard and kept, Acts 311; responsibility of its hearers, Heb. 43; compared with the heathen philosophy, Luke 105; hidden, when, 2 Cor. 70; its historical character, 1 Cor. 322; fosters independence, Thess. 71; first preached to the Jews, Matt. 185; rejected by the Jews, ib. 171; produces joy, Thess. 97; its contrast and relation to the law, Matt. 320, 399, Mark 19, Luke 58, Rom. 346, 2 Cor. 63, Eph. 102, Heb. 147; the law of liberty, Jas. 66, 68; light of, 2 Cor. 67 sq., 71; order of its message, Rom. 353 sq.; compared to milk, 1 Cor. 70, 79; given to the poor, Luke 119; power of, Acts 258, 357, Rom. 73, 77, 1 Cor. 106, 2 Cor. 42; preaching, see Preaching; the perfect revelation of God, Heb. 43; spread of, Matt. 424, Mark 131, 163, Acts 140, 216 sq., 224, 239, Rom. 373 sq., Col. 31, Thess. 152; comprehensive statement of, Rom. 154, 156; testimony of evil spirits to, Acts 308, 309; not a theory, 1 Cor. 50; unity of, Acts 376; universal, Mark 113; wisdom of, 1 Cor. 55 sq., 64; not understood by the wise, Luke 168, 170; its relation to woman, see Woman; God's word, Acts 376, Thess. 43; opposition of the world to, Acts 74.

Gospel according to John, Luke, Mark, Matthew, see those words.

Gospel history, its truth, Matt. 361, Luke 42, 50.

Gospel invitation, Matt. 214.

Gospel messengers, Luke 229, Rom. 348, 353.

Gospels, apocryphal, Luke 26, 50, 377.

Gospels, the four, characteristics of, Matt. 26, John v.; compared with one another, Matt. 209, 213, 431, 454 sqq., 446, Mark 1, 22, Luke 57, 132, 139, 141, 143, 234, 321; compared with the four cherubim, Matt. 25 sqq.; contrasted with the Book of Acts, Matt. 25; their discrepancies, see Discrepancies; their diversities a proof of their truth, John 605; modesty of their writers, John 99; simplicity of the style, Luke 373; symbols assigned to, Matt. 25 sqq.; proofs of their truth, ib. 361, 373, Luke 355; unity of, Matt. 25 sqq.; works on, ib. 18, 19, 26, 36.

Government, civil, its relation to Christianity, see Church and State; obedience to, Rom. 401, 1 Pet. 40, 42.

— church, see Church.

— Gozzo, see Claudia.

Grace, bestowed on the apostles, Rom. 63; blessings to be ascribed to, Acts 346; a feature in the Christian's condition, Rom. 215, Note; essential feature of the new covenant, Acts 376; effects of, Thess. 11; relation of faith to, Matt. 176; falling from, Rom. 168, 369, 374, Eph. 172, Note, 174, Heb. 114 sqq.; and see Perseverance; freedom of, Acts 252, 258, 4, 1, Rom. 314, 329, 436, Eph. 48, Tim. 86, 89, Tit. 22, 2 John 188; its relation to justice, Eph. 48; justification by, Luke 260; distinguished from law, Acts 282; in harmony with nature, 1 Cor. 259, Eph. 101; operations of, Acts 445; its relation to peace, Rom. 64, 1 Cor. 21, Eph. 21, 234, Thess. 11, 2 John 188 sqq.; power of, Matt. 356, Luke 97, Acts 166, 308, Phil. 28, Heb. 116; prevalent, Matt. 60, Luke 130; richness of, Rom. 197, 355; salvation only by, Acts 284 sqq., Eph. 85; saving nature of, Matt. 325; antithesis of sin and, Rom. 300 sqq., 327 sqq.; standing in, 1 Pet. 95; value of, Acts 41; work of, Eph. 234, Heb. 80; its relation to works, Luke 361, John 136, Rom. 361 sq., 373.

Grace, means of, Acts 58, Rom. 125, Eph. 49.

Graces, Christian, 2 Cor. 147.

Graduation of evangelical functions, John 642.

Grass of Palestine, Matt. 134, 236.

Gratia irresistibilis, Acts 166, Eph. 50.

Gratitude, 1 Cor. 26, Col. 72.

Graves, Matt. 536; opening of, at Christ's death, ib. 527.

Graveyards, Christian, Matt. 507.

Gravity, law of counteracted, Matt. 271.

Greek church, doctrines of, John 469, Rom. 195.

Greek language, use of in Palestine, Acts 113; of the New Testament, Rev. 49 sq.

Greek philosophers, Rom. 82, 84.

Greek symbolism, Rev. 106, Note.

Greek Testament, MSS. of the, Matt. xix. sq.

Greeks, use of the name in New Testament, Acts 394, Rom. 70, 74, 1 Cor. 38; contrasted with the Jews, Eph. 104; party spirit among, 1 Cor. 8; philosophy of, Acts 327, Rom. 82, 84; social repeats among, 1 Cor. 232.

Green, symbolism of, Rev. 17.

Greenlander, the first converted, Luke 349.

Greeting, see Salutation.

Grinding, Matt. 430, Luke 268.

Groaning, of believers, Rom. 274, 288; of the Spirit, ib. 275 sq., 288.

GROTIUS, HUGO, quoted, Luke 275.

Growth, Christian, Acts 346, 347, Rom. 274, 298, Thess. 64, 120 sq., Tim. 54, 2 Pet. 50; of the church, Acts 58, 72, 1 Cor. 106; of faith, Thess. 58.

Guard of the temple, Acts 72.

Gunpowder, use of among the Turks, Rev. 210, Note.

Hadec, Matt. 114, 210 sq., 226, 298, Luke 254, 255, Rev. 35, 106, 166; Christ's descent into, Matt. 226, 229, Acts 47, 49, Eph. 146, 1 Peter 63 sq., 66, 67, sq., 74, 75, Rev. 376 sq.; gates of, Matt. 293 sq., 298; symbolical meaning of the term, Rev. 35; Excursus on, ib. 364 sqq.

HAGAR, Gal. 114 sqq., 120 sqq.

Hail, symbolical use of the term, Rev. 197, 204 sq.

Hair, fashion of dressing, 1 Cor. 227; of Persian ladies, ib. 6; of the Sarcena, Rev. 207, Note.

Hair, camel's, Matt. 70.

Half-shekel, Matt. 318.

Hallel, the hymn of praise, Matt. 467, 468, 472.

Hallelujah, Rev. 335, 437 sq.

HALLER, ALBERT, quoted, Luke 170.

Halt, the, Matt. 325.

Handkerchiefs, Acts 353.

Hands, imposition of, Matt. 342, Acts 149, 170 sq., Tim. 53, 65, 89; washing of, Matt. 276, 512, Mark 64 sq.; symbolical use of term, Matt. 324, 326, Mark 80, Rev. 23.

Hanging, among the Jews, Matt. 523.

Haran, Acts 113.

Hardening, of the heart, Matt. 240, Heb. 80; of the Jews, John

- 397, 402, Rom. 313 sqq., 362, 373; of Pharaoh, John 397, Rom. 314 sqq., 331.
- Harmony of the gospels, see Gospels.
- Harp, Jewish, Matt. 437.
- Harvest, symbolical use of the term, Rev. 31.
- Hate, Rom. 312, Note.
- Hatred, when commendable, Luke 231; akin to murder, 1 John 119.
- Hattin, Horns of, Matt. 100.
- Head, anointing the, see Anointing; shaving the, Acts 341 sq.
- Head of the church, Matt. 293 sqq., Acts 166, Eph. 63 sq., of Christ, Rev. 438.
- Heads, symbolical use of the term, Rev. 23; of the dragon, ib. 242, Note, 246, 265.
- Healing virtue of Christ, Luke 140.
- Health, value of, 3 John 199 sq.
- Hearers and teachers, Gal. 108 sq., 120.
- Hearing the word, Jas. 62, 68.
- Heart, meaning of the term, Matt. 225, 404; Christ's knowledge of the, Luke 192, 334; hardening the, Matt. 240, Heb. 80; renewal of the, 2 Cor. 102 sq.; wickedness of, Matt. 278, Luke 304.
- Heart of the earth, Matt. 226.
- Heathen, the, Christ's view of, Matt. 232 sq., 329 sq.; first one of converted, Acts 192, 195 sq.; corruption of, Rom. 89; divinities of, Acts 268, 1 Cor. 212; faith of, Luke 111; final fate of, Matt. 229, 449, John 322 sq., Luke 206, Rom. 99, 100, 103, 1 Pet. 75; fests of, to idols, 1 Cor. 209; not without knowledge of God, Rom. 82, 90, Thess. 65, 122; injudicious method with, Acts 362; missionaries to, ib. 331 sq.; missions among, Matt. 563, Luke 400; estimated number of, Matt. 563; prejudices of the Jews against, ib. 281 sqq., 329 sq.; their repetitions in prayer, ib. 123; ancient sages of, the disciples of Christ, John 62, Note; symbolical use of the term, Rev. 27 sq.
- Heathenism, atheistical, Eph. 91; characteristics of, Gal. 108, Eph. 165, 167; inferior to Christianity, 1 Cor. 259; better than spurious Christianity, Rom. 126; distinguished from Judaism, Eph. 101; works on, Matt. 6.
- Heaven, import of the term, Rev. 413; degrees of bliss in, John 435, 2 Pet. 16; Christ's revelation concerning, John 446; on earth, Rev. 181; employment in, Heb. 88 sq., Rev. 185; contrasted with Hades, Matt. 210 sq.; God's home, ib. 125; compared to a house, John 434, 2 Cor. 80, Note; joy in, Luke 236; joys of, Matt. 449, 2 Cor. 26; kingdom of, see Kingdom; locality of, Luke 403, John 431; Scripture idea of, John 434, 449; tabernacle of, Heb. 141 sq., 144; the first theatre of sin, Eph. 40; swearing by, Matt. 412; symbolical use of the term, Rev. 37; war in, ib. 218, 240 sqq., 248 sqq.
- Heaven, the third, 2 Cor. 197 sq., 205.
- Heavenly places, Eph. 28 sq., 222.
- Heavens, use of the term, Matt. 69, John 137, Rev. 18; new, Rom. 286, 2 Pet. 48, Rev. 363, 442 sq.; opened, Matt. 71, John 97; plurality of, 2 Cor. 198.
- Hebraic forms, Acts 122.
- Hebrew dialect, Acts 393.
- Hebrew, use of the term, 2 Cor. 186, Heb. 10.
- Hebrew symbolism, Rev. 106, Note.
- Hebrews, in the early church, Acts 103; Gospel of the, Luke 279.
- Hebrews, Epistle to the, analysis of, Heb. 20 sqq., Jas. 8; its author, 1 Cor. 28, Heb. 3 sqq.; canonical position and authority, Heb. 1 sqq.; fundamental ideas, ib. 19 sq.; language, ib. 14; its relation to the Old and New Testaments, ib. 80; readers, ib. 10 sq.; how different from Paul's epistles, ib. 7; style, ib. 14 sq.; time and place of composition on, ib. 12 sq.; works on, ib. 16 sqq.
- Hedge, symbolical meaning of, Matt. 387.
- HEGEL quoted, Matt. 83.
- Helldberg Catechism, Rom. 148.
- HELENA, ST., Matt. 521.
- Hell, use of the term, Matt. 114, 210, 211, 246, 247; for the body as for the soul, ib. 196 Note; judgment of, ib. 414; pains of, ib. 449; torments of, Rev. 286.
- Hellenism, Rev. 49 sq.
- Hellenistic view of Apocalypsis, Rev. 51; of Sacred History, ib. 49 sq.
- Hellenists, Acts 103, 216.
- Help, divine, Heb. 62.
- HERBERT, GEORGE, quoted, John 421, 577, 601, Jas. 109.
- Heresies, use of the term, 1 Cor. 233, 2 Pet. 25; in the apostolic age, Tim. 20, 49, 50, 2 Pet. 29, 1 John 13 sq.; seeming advantage of, 1 Cor. 234.
- Heretics, use of the term, Tit. 22; compulsion of, Luke 228; punishment of, Thess. 244 sq., 246 sq.; Simon Magus a type of, Acts 149 sq.
- HERMAS, Rom. 448; quoted, 1 Cor. 13.
- Hermeneutics, Biblical, rules of, Matt. 8 sq., 220, 245; works on, ib. 8.
- HERMES, Acts 265 sq.
- Hermion, Mt., Matt. 306 sq.
- HEROD, family of, procreants, Matt. 412; their cruelty, Acts 233.
- AGRIPPA I., Matt. 262, Acts 227, 232 sq.; his royal apparel, Mark 81, Acts 230; his death, Acts 230, 237.
- AGRIPPA II., Acts 435; Paul's defence before, ib. 440 sqq.
- ANTIPAS, Matt. 64, 203, 262, Luke 54, 57; his alarm at Christ's approach, Matt. 262, Luke 144; his menace, Luke 220 sq.; behaves as John, Matt. 262 sqq., Mark 68 sq., Luke 144 sq.; compared to Pilate, Mark 58; his relation to the Sadducees, Matt. 262, Mark 74; his policy, Matt. 290; his relations with Pilate, Luke 362 sq.; palace of, Matt. 502, 513; Manann's relation to, Acts 239; Paul and Barnabas contrasted with, ib. 267 sq.; his duplicity and want of character, Matt. 263 sq., 338.
- THE GREAT, Matt. 56, 60, 63.
- PHILIPPUS, Matt. 64, 262 sq., 297, Luke 54.
- Herodians, the, Matt. 58, 395 sq., Mark 34, 97, 119 sq., Luke 305 sqq.
- HERODIAS, Matt. 203, 262 sq., Mark 58.
- Hiding of God's will, Luke 168.
- Hierapolis, Col. 85.
- Hierarchism, principles in, Matt. 326.
- High-priest, Christ a, Heb. 97 sqq., 124, 142, 144; a type of Christ and believers, Rom. 163; duties of, John 364, Heb. 139; house of, Matt. 102; prayers of, Heb. 102; quality's requisite in, ib. ib.
- Highway, Matt. 390.
- Hill of Evil Counsel, Matt. 505.
- HILLEL, Rabbi, his views on divorce, Matt. 115, 338.
- Hinnom, valley of, Matt. 114, Mark 91 sq.
- Hirelings, John 322.
- History of the Apostolic Church, Acts viii.
- History, Bible, Matt. 17, Rev. 11, 50.
- Church, works on, Matt. 6.
- God in, Acts 330.
- Holiness, motives for, 1 Pet. 23, 25; perfecting of, 2 Cor. 120; to be sought, ib. ib.; spirit of, Rom. 62; of Christ, Acts 68.
- Holy days, Col. 57.
- HOLY GHOST, see Holy Spirit.
- Holy ground, Acts 123.
- HOLY ONE, the, Rev. 128.
- HOLY SPIRIT, the, baptism of, Matt. 72, 74, Luke 56, Acts 12 sqq., 206; blasphemy against, Matt. 224 sq., 227 sq.; its relation to Christ, Luke 22, 60, 64, John 450, Rom. 257; descent of, at Christ's baptism, Matt. 77 sqq., Mark 17, Luke 58, 59, John 87 sq.; its agency in the birth of Christians, Rom. 168; the Comforter, John 428, 432, 440 sq., 1 Cor. 11; communion of, Philom. 20; controversy respecting, Rom. 250, Note 11; bestowed on the disciples, John 258 sqq., 616, 620; divinity of, Acts 87, 1 Cor. 86; doctrine of, John 258, Acts 9; the earnest of, 2 Cor. 24 sq.; its contest with the flesh, Gal. 142, 144 sq.; foretaste of, John 503; freedom given by, 2 Cor. 47, 51, 58, 80; first-fruits of, Rom. 274, 288; fruit of, Gal. 138, 145; gift of, John 258 sqq., Acts 30, 63, 74, 99, 148 sq., 171, 208, 348 sqq., Rom. 163; grieving, Eph. 171 sq.; groaning of, Rom. 275 sq., 288; indwelling of, Acts 87, 99; influence of, Luke 46, Acts 299, 300, Rom. 235, 2 Cor. 147, 2 Pet. 21, 23; seven-fold influences of, Rev. 153; intercession of, Rom. 276 sq., 289; its intimations to be ascertained, Acts 385; judgment by, John 447; law of, Rom. 231 sq., 262 sq.; life of, ib. 296; ministerial endowments the work of, 1 Cor. 285; office and work of, Luke 257, John 445, 472 sqq., 520, Acts 14, Rom. 108, 1 Cor. 63, 65, 66, 128, 1 Pet. 12; bestowed on Paul, Acts 244; descent of at Pentecost, ib. 27 sqq.; personality of, ib. 87, 290 sq.; place of, John 450; procession of, ib. 450, 469, Rom. 257; promise of, Luke 197, 198, Acts 12, 14, 74; quenching, Thess. 93, 97; reception of, Gal. 64; its representation in the Apocalypse, Rev. 38; the sin against, Matt. 227 sq., Luke 197, 198, Heb. 116, 1 John 171, 178; titles of, John 442; walking in, Rom. 255, 263; compared to the wind, John 129; witness of, Acts 99, Rom. 261, 263 sq., 296, Thess. 70.
- Homage of the apostles to Christ, Luke 403 sq.
- Homiletic, place of, Matt. 28; character and principles of, ib. 29; divisions of, ib. 30, 34 sq.; works on, ib. 35.
- Honey in Palestine, Matt. 70, Luke 397.
- Honor, among Christians, Rom. 443; of God, the end of redemption, Gal. 15; from men, Thess. 71; places of, Matt. 363.
- Hope, an anchor to the soul, Heb. 123 sq.; God as author of, Rom. 435; development of, ib. 162 sq., 168, 435; effect of, 2 Cor. 86; its relation to faith, 1 Cor. 273, 332, Thess. 16, Gal. 130; meanings of, Rom. 275; permanent, 1 Cor. 273, 275.
- Hopkinsianism, Rom. 305, Note.
- HORACE, quoted, 1 Cor. 331, Note.
- Horeb, Mt., Acts 122, 1 Cor. 107.
- Horn, symbolical use of the term, Luke 24, 27, Rev. 23, 158, 199, 210 sq.
- Horse, the, liable to fright, Matt. 186; symbolical significance of, Rev. 22, 164 sqq., 179, 198, 333 sq., 416.

Horse-tails, used by the Turks, Rev. 210, Note.
 Hosanna, Matt. 371, 373, John 377.
 HOSEA, quoted by Christ, Matt. 170 sq.
 Hospitality, Matt. 449, Col. 86, Heb. 213, 1 Pet. 78.
 Hours, Jewish divisions of, Matt. 353 sq.; symbolical meaning of, ib. 354 sq., Mark 138.
 — of prayer, Acts 40, 62, 197.
 House, of David, Acts 282; of God, Heb. 62 sqq.; in the heavens, John 434, 2 Cor. 80, Note.
 Houses, Oriental, Matt. 491, Mark 27, 140, Luke 86, John 552, Note.
 Household piety, Tim. 83.
 House-tops, Matt. 195.
 Huguenots, Matt. 288, Luke 280.
 Human nature, fallen, Rom. 90; ever the same, Luke 209.
 Human race, unity of the, Acts 328, 330.
 Humanity of Christ, see Jesus Christ.
 Humiliation of Christ, see Jesus Christ.
 Humility, commended by Christ, Luke 290 sq.; in Christians, Matt. 323, 326, Luke 158, 277, 1 Cor. 99, 2 Cor. 205, Phil. 36 sq.; Christianity based on, Matt. 65; doubt, not an evidence of, Rom. 154, Note; importance of, Matt. 284, Mark 96, 104, 1 Pet. 90, 92; an essential element of true knowledge, 1 Cor. 176; reward of, Matt. 435; taught, Luke 224, 225; true and false, ib. 111; of the apostles, see Apostles; of Christ, see Jesus Christ.
 Humor in sacred things, Phil. 57.
 Hunger, symbolism of, Rev. 192.
 Husbands and wives, mutual duties of, Eph. 204 sq., 199 sqq., Col. 75, 1 Pet. 54.
 Husks, Luke 239.
 HUSS, JOHN, Matt. 60; prophecy of, ib. 92, Note.
 Husbands, Matt. 268.
 HYMENEUS, Tim. 26, 99.
 Hymn, of Clemens Alexandrinus, Luke 83; of Luther, Matt. 488, Acts 145; of praise, sung at Passover, Matt. 469, 472 sq.
 Hymnology, Church, Eph. 188.
 Hymns, of the early church, Eph. 192; on Christ's birth, Luke 40; on His resurrection, ib. 388; on the symbol of Jacob's ladder, John 101; use of in the church, Eph. 194; on the New Jerusalem, Rev. 391, Note.
 Hyperbole, John 652.
 Hypocrisy, Matt. 122, 137, 140, 279, 289, 306, 417, 435, Luke 191 sqq., 198, 275 sqq.
 HYRCANUS, JOHN, Matt. 56, 185, 412, Mark 34, Luke 15.
 Hyscop, Matt. 527.

Iconium, Acts 258, 262.
 Idealism in Christianity, 1 Cor. 96.
 Idiom of the New Testament, Rom. 18 sq.
 Idleness, Thess. 159.
 Idols, feasts to, 1 Cor. 309; embodied lies, Rom. 96; use of things offered to, 1 Cor. 11, 169 sq.; worship of, Acts 124 sqq., Rom. 84 sqq., 1 John 175, 176; at Athens, Acts 322, 326.
 Idolatry, how not to be attacked, Acts 362, 364; the church an object of, ib. 133; its relation to covetousness, Col. 64, 66; of the Israelites, Acts 124 sqq.; every sin connected with, Eph. 180 sq.; man's tendency to, Acts 133.
 Idumeans, Matt. 56, 60; kindred to the Arabs, ib. 264; conquerors of, Rom. 311 sq.; forced to become Jews, Mark 34.
 IGNATIUS, tradition of, Luke 158; quoted, 1 Cor. 13.
 Ignorance, the sin of, Heb. 178; a ground for pardon, Luke 374; in the worship of God, Acts 333.
 Illumination at feast of tabernacles, John 77.
 Image of God, Christ the, 2 Cor. 69, Phil. 32 sqq., 37, Col. 20, 28, Heb. 26, 31; Christians changed into, 2 Cor. 50; man created in the, Eph. 166, Jas. 90, 103.
 Image-worship, see Idols.
 Imagery of Paul, 2 Cor. 68.
 Imitation of God and Christ, Eph. 178, 189, 1 John 33.
 Immaculate Conception, see Mary.
 IMMANUEL, Matt. 53.
 Immersion as a mode of baptism, see Baptism; three-fold, Matt. 558, Note; works on, ib. 580.
 Immortality of the soul, assurance of, 1 Cor. 322; views of the ancients upon, Thess. 77; not the same as eternal life, Rom. 352; taught in the Old Testament, Luke 310 sq.; proof of, Matt. 196, Mark 131, Luke 380; connected with resurrection of the body, Matt. 401, Luke 198, 1 Cor. 350; views of Sadducees on, Matt. 71, Mark 121; works on, 1 Cor. 350.
 Imprecations in the Psalms, Rom. 363.
 Imputation of Christ's righteousness, Matt. 390 sq., Rom. 187 sq., 191 sq., 254, 2 Cor. 46, 47.
 Inability, human, John 463.
 Incarnation of Christ, John 72 sq., 79, Rom. 61, 2 John 192.
 Incense, symbolism of, Rev. 203.
 Independence of character, Thess. 71.

Independency in churches, Eph. 232, Col. 87.
 Indifferentism in religion, Acts 204.
 Individual, value of the, Thess. 36.
 Individualism of Christianity, Acts 376.
 Indulgences, Rom. Cath. doctrine of, Matt. 129, 300, Col. 24, 37.
 Industry, duty of, Eph. 174, Thess. 70, 159.
 Indwelling, of man in God, Acts 328; of the Holy Spirit, ib. 57, 59.
 Infallibility, papal, Matt. 300.
 Infant baptism, see Baptism, subjects of.
 Infants, Christians compared to, 1 Cor. 70, Heb. 109, 1 Pet. 31; salvation of, Matt. 229.
 Infirmities of the weak to be borne with, Rom. 425, 431; see Paul's.
 Inheritance, of the Christian on earth, 1 Cor. 219; heavenly, Acts 377, 1 Pet. 15.
 Inner man, Rom. 240 sq., Eph. 124, 128.
 Inquiry, spirit of, Acts 319, 320.
 Inquisition, Rom. Cath., Matt. 139, 495; in Spain, John 484; use of crucifixion by, Matt. 523.
 Inscription, over the cross, Matt. 534, Luke 373, John 584; epistolary, Rom. 57.
 Inspiration of the apostles, Acts 262, 273, 290, 2 Cor. 184, Note, Thess. 43.
 Inspiration of the Bible, Rom. 116, 1 Cor. 229, Tim. 107, 109; arguments for, Matt. 190, Rom. 116, Thess. 127; indicated by Christ, John 334; conditions of, Matt. 12; human element in, Luke 13, 2 Cor. 108, 128, 133, Tim. 110; nature and mode of, 1 Pet. 18 sq.; theories of, Matt. 11 sq., Tim. 110; writers unconscious of, 2 Cor. 108; verbal, 1 Cor. 61; works on, Matt. 12, 1 Cor. 143, Note, Tim. 110.
 Instruction in the church, Acts 58.
 Installation sermons, text for, Rom. 442.
 Insurrection, right of, Rom. 400, Note, 401 sq.
 Intemperance, Gal. 144, Col. 56, Eph. 194, 196. See Drunkenness.
 Intercession, of Christ, Luke 344, John 511 sqq., Rom. 291, 1 John 46; of saints, Mark 82, 1 John 46, Rev. 159; of the Spirit, Rom. 276 sq., 289.
 Intercessory prayer, see Prayer; of Christ, John 511 sqq.
 Interim of Charis V., Mark 30.
 Intermediate state, Matt. 401, 1 Cor. 249 sq., Thess. 73.
 Intoxication, forms of, Eph. 194.
 Introduction to the Scriptures, Matt. 1, 13, 17; to the New Testament, ib. 1, 20 sqq., 36.
 Invasion of Pennsylvania, illustrative, Matt. 423, Note.
 Invitations, to a feast, Luke 224 sq.; of the gospel, Matt. 214.
 Iota, Matt. 109.
 Irony, divine, Matt. 209, 480, 538, Mark 65, 143, Rev. 127; legitimate use of, 1 Cor. 99; Paul's use of, ib. 95; in sacred things, Phil. 57.
 Irvingites, Acts 34, Thess. 79.
 ISAAC, a type, Gal. 118, 120 sqq., Heb. 183.
 Isagogics, Matt. 13 sq.
 ISAAIAH, prophecy of, Luke 73; eschatology of, Rev. 45.
 ISCARIOT, Matt. 182. See Judas Iscariot.
 Iscariotic Psalms, Acts 20.
 ISHMAEL, a type, Gal. 119 sqq.
 —, the high-priest, Matt. 385.
 Israel, glory of, Rom. 330. See Jews.
 Israelites, John 95.
 Israelites, their history an example, 1 Cor. 207; period of their stay in Egypt, G. J. 77; their discontent in the wilderness, Acts 124 sq., 1 Cor. 199. See Jews.
 Isthmian games, 1 Cor. 194.
 Italian band, Acts 191.
 "It is written," Paul's use of the formula, 1 Cor. 35, 93.
 IZATES, Acts 221.

Jabes, Acts 97.
 Jacinth, Rev. 387.
 ACOB, his vision of the ladder, John 97.
 Jacob's well, John 153.
 Jailer at Philippi, conversion of the, Acts 307, 309.
 JAIRUS, father of, Matt. 174, Mark 50 sq., Luke 140 sq.; his daughter raised, Matt. 173 sqq., Mark 49 sqq., Luke 139 sqq.
 JAMBRES, Tim. 105.
 JAMES, the son of Alphaeus, his name, Matt. 182; typical character, ib. 183; called "the Less," Mark 154, Acts 227; his identity with "James, the brother of the Lord," discussed, Matt. 255 sqq., Luke 94, John 240, 241, Acts 230, 1 Cor. 182, Gal. 26 sq., 28 sq., Jas. 10 sqq., Jude 5 sq.; his address to the council at Jerusalem, Acts 280; his character, ib. 283; sketch of his life, Jas. 14 sqq.; his ecclesiastical position, ib. 16 sqq.
 —, "the brother of the Lord," see supra.
 —, the son of Zebedee, his name, Matt. 183; call of, ib. 93; typical character, ib. 183; made an apostle, ib. 11, 12, 152, Luke 96; rebuked by Christ, Luke 162; contrasted with John, John 6 sq.; his relationship to Christ, Luke 83; his death, Acts 22 sqq., 232 sq.

JAMES, Epistle of, its author, Jas. 9 sqq.; its relation to the Catholic Epistles, ib. 30; Christology of, ib. 78; contents, ib. 31 sqq.; date of composition, ib. 28; death of the author, ib. 141; its destination, ib. 25 sqq.; view of faith taken in, Rom. 145, Jas. 28 sq., 30, 82 sqq., 87 sq.; genuineness of, James 21 sqq., 78; its relation to Epistle to the Hebrews, ib. 30; New Testament peculiarity of, ib. 25; occasion, ib. 25 sqq.; contrasted with Paul's views, Rom. 145, Jas. 28 sq., 87 sqq.; its relation to the Pauline Epistles, Jas. 28 sq.; its relation to First Epistle of Peter, ib. 30; place of composition, ib. 27 sq., works on, ib. 33 sq.

Jamnia, Acts 97.

JANNES, Tim. 104 sq.

Jansenists, Matt. 172.

JASON, Acts 317, Rom. 452.

Jasper, Rev. 20 sq.; 887.

JEHOVAH, Rom. 314, Rev. 91; representation of in the Apocalypses, Rev. 37 sq.

JEREMIAH, the Book of, its eschatology, Rev. 45.

Jericho, Matt. 368 sq.; curse upon, Luke 287; palace of Archelaus at, ib. 291; abode of priests at, ib. 173.

Jerusalem, its name and location, Matt. 371; abode of the apostles at, Acts 12 sq.; Christ's entry into, Matt. 371 sqq., Luke 293 sqq.; His lamentation over, Luke 221; the metropolis of Christendom, Acts 276; church at, ib. 288, 290, 292 sqq.; later condition of, Matt. 415; destruction of, ib. 146, 422 sqq., 530, Mark 131, 133, Luke 267 sq., 297 sq., 317 sqq., Acts 43; extent of, Matt. 521; keeping of fowls in, ib. 478, Note, 498; the heavenly, Gal. 116, 120 sqq.; called the Holy City, Matt. 84; the world used for Jews, Gal. 115; Paul's visits to, Acts 222, 389 sqq.; Paul's relations to the Christians at, Rom. 442, Note; population of, Luke 49; representative, Matt. 416; compared with Rome, Acts 362; sepulchres around, Matt. 413; symbolic character, Luke 321; works on, Matt. 371.

— the new, Rev. 363, 389 sqq., 442, 444; hymnology of, ib. 391, Note.

Jeshimon, Matt. 68.

Jezebel, Eph. 179.

JESUS, signification of the name, Luke 42, Rom. 62, Eph. 20; name as Joshua, Acts 130; abused, ib. 355; a name of Barabbas, Luke 368.

JESUS CHRIST, life of, works on the, Matt. 6; genealogy of, ib. 39, 48 sqq., Luke 62 sq.; the seed of Abraham, Matt. 51, Gal. 75 sqq.; his descent from David, Matt. 51, Luke 21, Acts 47, Rom. 60, Tim. 94; his Jewish descent, Rom. 307, 308; early histories of, Luke 13; his miraculous conception, ib. 21; his incarnation a miracle, ib. 24, 40, John 72 sq., 79; his birth, Matt. 56, 57, Luke 33 sqq., 55; the era dated from his birth, Gal. 99; called Jesus, Matt. 48, Luke 42; his subjection to law, Matt. 17, Luke 42; circumcision of, Luke 42; his presentation in the temple, ib. 44 sqq.; his stay in Egypt, Matt. 63; his human development, Luke 47, 51 sqq.; his conversation in the temple, ib. 49 sqq.; abode of, at Nazareth, Matt. 64, Luke 51; filial obedience of, Luke 50; boyhood of, Luke 50 sq., Acts 22; his first words, Luke 51; beginning of his ministry, Matt. 67, 91, Mark 19, John 123; his age, Luke 62; baptism of, Matt. 76 sqq., Mark 17 sq., Luke 57, 59 sqq., John 87 sq.; his relation to John the Baptist, Matt. 69, 72 sq., 74, Luke 69; John's testimony to, John 65, 83 sqq., 99, 142 sqq., 146; descent of the Holy Spirit upon, Matt. 79, Luke 58, 59; temptation of, Matt. 80 sqq., Mark 17 sq., Luke 64 sqq., 69; fasting of, Matt. 81, Luke 66; calls first disciples, John 91 sqq., 99; his stay in Galilee, Matt. 91 sq., Luke 72; announces the kingdom of heaven, Mark 19; performs miracle at Cana, John 102 sqq.; his relations to Mary, ib. 104 sq.; brothers of, Matt. 63, 182, 231 sqq., 255 sqq., Luke 34, 128 sqq., John 115, 240 sq., Acts 19, 1 Cor. 162, Gal. 26 sq., 38 sq., James 10 sqq., 18 sqq., Jude 5 sq., 12; his abode at Capernaum, Matt. 90 sq., Luke 77, John 114 sqq.; goes up to the passover, John 115; cleanses the temple, ib. 114, 115 sqq., 119; foretells his resurrection, ib. 118; his interview with Nicodemus, ib. 122 sqq.; did not baptize, ib. 141, 151; journeys from Judea to Galilee, ib. 151 sq., 166, 172 sqq.; his interview with the Samaritan woman, ib. 150 sqq.; heals nobleman's son, ib. 171, 173 sqq.; his visit to Nazareth, Luke 72 sqq.; his abode at Capernaum, Matt. 91 sq., Mark 26 sq., Luke 77; calls four disciples, Matt. 93, Mark 20 sq., Luke 81 sq., 83; heals a demoniac at Capernaum, Mark 21 sq., Luke 77 sq.; heals Peter's mother-in-law, Matt. 158, Mark 23, Luke 78; performs divers miracles, Matt. 158, Mark 23, Luke 79; his first general circuit of Galilee, Matt. 94 sq., Mark 24 sq., Luke 79, John 180; his sermon on the mount, Matt. 97 sqq., Luke 100 sqq.; the draught of fishes, Luke 81 sqq.; heals a leper, Matt. 180 sq., 156, Mark 25 sq., Luke 85 sq.; returns to Capernaum, Mark 26; heals man with palsy, Matt.

166 sq., Mark 26 sqq., Luke 86; accused of blasphemy, Matt. 168, Mark 27, John 187; declares his Messiahship, Matt. 167, Mark 27; calls Matthew, Matt. 170, 171, Mark 29, Luke 88 sq., 90, 91; is entertained by Matthew, Mark 29, Luke 88 sq.; goes to the passover the second time, John 180; heals a lame man, ib. 183 sq., 198; the Jews seek to kill him, ib. 188; his discourse respecting his oneness with the Father, ib. 187 sq., 199; gives proofs of his Messiahship, ib. 193 sqq.; his disciples pluck grain on the Sabbath, Matt. 216 sqq., Mark 31 sq., Luke 93 sq.; heals man with withered hand, Matt. 218, Mark 31, Luke 93 sq.; retires to the sea of Galilee, Matt. 220 sq., Mark 34; chooses twelve apostles, Matt. 180 sqq., Mark 36 sq., 55 sq., Luke 95 sqq.; enters Capernaum, Matt. 150, Luke 110; heals centurion's servant, Matt. 151 sqq., Luke 110 sq.; raises the widow's son, Luke 112 sqq.; visited by Jesus's disciples, Matt. 203 sq., Luke 116 sqq.; speaks concerning John, Matt. 205 sqq., Luke 116 sqq.; denounces cities of Galilee, Matt. 210 sq., Luke 167; dines in house of a Pharisee, Luke 120 sqq.; anointed by a woman, ib. 121 sqq.; his second journey through Galilee, Matt. 178, Luke 125; heals a blind and dumb demoniac, Matt. 223, Luke 183; reproves Pharisees for d'aspheim, Matt. 225 sq., Mark 39, Luke 183 sqq.; teaches by the seaside in parables, Matt. 239 sqq., Mark 42 sq., Luke 127 sq., 216 sqq.; stills the tempest, Matt. 161, Mark 45, Luke 132 sqq.; heals demoniacs of Gadara, Matt. 164 sqq., Mark 46 sq., Luke 135 sqq.; eats with publicans and sinners at Capernaum, Matt. 170 sqq.; heals diseased woman, ib. 174, Mark 49 sqq., Luke 140; raises Jairus' daughter, Matt. 174, Mark 49 sqq., Luke 139 sqq.; heals two blind men, Matt. 176 sq.; heals a dumb demoniac, ib. 176 sq.; his first miracle as the Messiah, ib. 177; revisits Nazareth, ib. 255, 260, Mark 52 sq., Luke 72; his third journey through Galilee, Matt. 178 sq., Mark 52; instructs and sends out the twelve apostles, Matt. 180 sqq., 185 sqq., Mark 55 sq., Luke 143 sqq.; perplexity of Herod respecting, Matt. 261 sqq., Mark 57 sqq., Luke 144 sqq.; feeds five thousand, Matt. 265 sqq., Mark 60, Luke 146 sq., John 207 sqq.; walks upon the sea, Matt. 270 sqq., Mark 62, John 213 sqq.; heals many in Genesareth, Matt. 276, Mark 62; discourses upon the bread of life, John 207 sq., 211, 229; turning point in his life, ib. 226; rebukes the Pharisees, Matt. 277 sq., Mark 64, 74 sq.; goes into the coasts of Tyre and Sidon, Matt. 280, Mark 67 sqq.; heals daughter of Canaanitish woman, Matt. 281 sqq., Mark 67 sqq.; returns near sea of Galilee, Matt. 284, Mark 68; heals deaf man, Mark 69 sqq.; heals many sick, Matt. 285; feeds four thousand, ib. 284 sq., Mark 72; goes to Magdalen, Matt. 286, Mark 72; Pharisees ask a sign of, Matt. 257 sq., Mark 74, 75, Luke 157 sqq.; returns to Bethsaida, Mark 76; heals blind man, ib. 76 sqq.; visits vicinity of Caesarea Philippi, Matt. 284, Mark 78; his divinity confessed by Peter, Matt. 293 sqq., Mark 79, Luke 149; foretells sufferings and death, Matt. 302, 304, Mark 78, Luke 150 sqq.; rebukes Peter, Matt. 303; speaks of his second coming, ib. 301 sq., Luke 150; his transfiguration on, Matt. 271, 306 sqq., Mark 80 sqq., Luke 152 sqq., 155; heals demoniac child, Matt. 314 sq., Mark 83 sqq., Luke 157, 159; returns to Galilee, Matt. 316, Mark 86 sq., John 238 sqq.; foretells sufferings and death, Matt. 316 sq., Mark 87, Luke 158; pays tribute, Matt. 318 sqq.; places a child as an example of greatness, ib. 323 sq., Mark 89, 91; reproves bigotry of the disciples, Mark 89 sqq., Luke 158; discourses on humility and offences, Matt. 323 sqq., Mark 89 sqq.; enjoins forgiveness, Matt. 332; relates parable of unforgiving servant, ib. 38 sqq.; sends out the Seventy, Luke 166 sq., 169 sqq.; sets out for Jerusalem, ib. 161, John 244; heals ten lepers, Luke 263 sqq.; teaches in the temple, John 245; disputes with Jews, ib. 246 sqq.; an adulteress brought to him, ib. 268 sqq.; proclaims himself the light of the world, ib. 277 sqq.; discourses concerning Abraham's seed, ib. 257 sqq.; Jews seek to stone him, ib. 299; heals blind man, ib. 305 sqq.; speaks of himself as the Door, ib. 317 sqq., 325; as the Good Shepherd, ib. 321 sqq., 325; discussions of Jews respecting, ib. 325; re-visits Jerusalem at feast of the dedication, ib. 329 sqq.; disputes with the Jews who seek to stone him, ib. 330 sqq.; withdraws to Perea, ib. 334; raises Lazarus, ib. 339 sqq.; Jews take counsel against him, ib. 362 sqq.; withdraws to Ephraim, ib. 365 sqq.; heals infirm woman, Luke 212 sqq.; journeys toward Jerusalem, ib. 217; dines with a Pharisee, ib. 189, sq.; discourses with disciples, ib. 195 sqq.; heals man with dropsy, ib. 223 sqq.; delivers various parables, ib. 226 sqq.; his precepts respecting divorce, Matt. 338 sqq., Mark 96 sqq.; blesses children, Matt. 342, Mark 98 sqq., Luke 276 sqq.; interview with rich young man, Matt. 344 sqq., Mark 100 sqq., Luke 278 sqq.; his views concerning riches, Matt. 344 sqq., Mark 101, Luke 279 sqq.; delivers parable of laborers, Matt. 352 sqq.; predicts sufferings and death, ib. 300, Mark 103 sq., Luke 281 sq.; answers request of James and John, Matt. 263 sq.; Mark 106; heals blind men near Jerich, Matt. 263, Mark 105, Luke 222 sq.; visits Zaccheus, Luke 225 sq.; his parable of the Ten Pounds, John 370; appointed at Bethany, Mark 110, Luke 293, John 370; John 371 sq.; his entry into Jerusalem, Matt. 371 sq.; Mark 110 sq.; Luke 233 sq.; John 377 sq.; weeps over it, Luke 297 sq.; curses the fig-tree, Matt. 380 sq.; Mark 112 sq.; cleanses the temple, Matt. 373 sq.; Mark 113 sq.; Luke 239 sq.; his controversy with the priests and elders, Matt. 385 sq.; Mark 115 sq.; Luke 301 sq.; relates parable of the two sons, Matt. 386; of the wicked husbandmen, Matt. 387 sq.; Mark 117 sq.; Luke 302 sq.; of the marriage supper, Matt. 389; his controversies with the Pharisees, Herodians, Sadducees and scribes, Matt. 395 sq.; 399 sq.; 402 sq.; Mark 119 sq.; Luke 305 sq.; 312 sq.; denounces scribes and Pharisees, Matt. 408 sq.; Luke 126, Luke 513; discourses concerning last things, Matt. 421 sq.; Mark 129 sq.; Luke 317 sq.; 323 sq.; delivers several parables, Matt. 434 sq.; 437 sq.; 442 sq.; discourses concerning the final judgment, Matt. 447 sq.; history of his Passion, Matt. 458 sq.; Mark 137 sq.; Luke 330, John 541; Jews conspire against, Matt. 461, Mark 138, Luke 339; close of his public ministry, John 389; celebrates the Passover and institutes the Lord's Supper, Matt. 468 sq.; Mark 140 sq.; Luke 332 sq.; 338 sq.; John 401 sq.; 428, 1 Cor. 232 sq.; 213; predicts Peter's denial, Matt. 478, Mark 141, Luke 541, 544, John 427; his farewell discourses, Luke 340 sq.; John 403, 422, 433, 481, 496 sq.; his intercessory prayer, John 511 sq.; in Gethsemane, Matt. 478 sq.; Mark 143 sq.; Luke 345 sq.; John 514, 546, Heb. 102; his arrest, Matt. 485 sq.; Mark 143 sq.; Luke 350 sq.; before Annas, Luke 353; John 52; before Caiaphas, Matt. 491 sq.; Mark 146, Luke 353, John 534; before the Sanhedrin, Matt. 491 sq.; Mark 146 sq.; Luke 356 sq.; his silence, Matt. 492, 494, 514, Luke 358, John 538; accused of blasphemy, Matt. 493; sentenced to death, Luke 493 sq.; Luke 356; denied by Peter, Matt. 497 sq.; Mark 147, Luke 356; John 553 sq.; taken before Pilate, Matt. 502 sq.; 510 sq.; Mark 148 sq.; Luke 359 sq.; John 561 sq.; sent to Herod, Luke 341; scorned, Matt. 512 sq.; Mark 149, John 567; mocked, Matt. 514, Mark 151, Luke 362; his crucifixion, Matt. 519 sq.; Mark 151 sq.; Luke 372 sq.; 378, John 583 sq.; his sufferings on the cross, Matt. 522, 528, 530, Mark 143 sq.; Luke 346 sq.; 372, John 587; his cry on the cross, Matt. 528, 540; his seven words, Luke 527, Luke 372 sq.; his thirst, John 587 sq.; his promise to the thief, Luke 376 sq.; cause of his death, Matt. 523, 537, John 588, 597; effects of his death, Luke 376; death of Christ; his burial, Matt. 535, Mark 154, Luke 343, John 589; his resurrection, Matt. 540 sq.; 561, Mark 156, 159, 166, Luke 385 sq.; John 603 sq.; Acts 233, 436, Rom. 61, 154, 258, 419, 1 Cor. 310 sq.; 322; his appearances after the resurrection, Matt. 540, 545, Mark 159, 161, Luke 390, 396, John 609, 615, 621, 629, 1 Cor. 310; questions Peter, John 638 sq.; his word concerning John, Luke 647; last words to his disciples, Matt. 555 sq.; Mark 161, Luke 400 sq.; his ascension, Matt. 559, 561, Mark 165, Luke 402 sq.; Acts 8.

his relation to Aaron, Heb. 106; abandonment of, Luke 348; his abatement, Matt. 60, 65; compared with Adam, Rom. 173, 178, Note, 181, 196, 1 Cor. 339; adoration of, Phil. 36, 38; second advent of, see Advent; an advocate, 1 John 41, 49; affections of John 357; his age, Luke 62, John 238; contrasted with Alexander, Luke 296; all-sufficiency of, Acts 277; angelic appearances in the history of, Matt. 549, Mark 15, Luke 34 sq.; 69, 380, John 611; anger of, Mark 34, Luke 192, John 333; working through the apostles, Acts 262, 273; sudden appearances of, John 242; his atonement, see Atonement; being of, Col. 48; his union with believers, Acts 166; blood of, see Blood; body of, see Body; the bread of life, John 207 sq.; 211, 229; as bridegroom, Luke 90; brothers of, see Brothers of Christ; calumny of, Matt. 174, 374, 481, Luke 74, 328, 331, John 300; the central point of the word of God, Matt. 30; character of, Luke 218, 334, 338, John 399, 1 John 45; his regard for children, Matt. 323 sq.; Mark 98, Luke 117, 276 sq.; praised by children, Matt. 378 sq.; the centre of Christianity, Acts 220; dependence of Christians upon, John 480, 1 Cor. 228, James 122; the life of Christians, Thess. 12; his relation to Christians, Heb. 74; church of, 1 Cor. 220; the foundation of the church, Acts 166, Eph. 63, 64; his judgment on the church, Matt. 437 sq.; 439; protection of the church, Acts 232; his relation to the church, Matt. 389, Gal. 28; coming to, John 99; compassion of, Matt. 158, Mark 62, 82, Luke 80, 147, Heb. 62, 64 sq.; 93, 99 sq.; conduct of, Matt. 209, Luke 105; confession of, Matt.

197, 299; his consciousness, John 283; his knowledge of contingencies, Matt. 211; contrasted with his adversaries, John 299; contrasts in his life, Matt. 87, 214, 268, 315, 360, 374, 457 sq., 481, Mark 59, 85; his corporeality in heaven, Acts 165 sq.; in what sense a creator, Matt. 267, 288, John 57, 61; cross of, see Cross; made a curse for us, Gal. 60, 71 sq.; prophecy of Daniel respecting, Matt. 161; contrasted with David, Mark 125; his raising of the dead, Luke 113 sq.; his death, Matt. 457, John 132 sq.; 323 sq.; Rom. 134 sq.; 207, 3 Cor. 96 sq.; 1 John 34, Heb. 139, 159; deliverance through, Gal. 15; donal of, Matt. 197; dependence of Christians on, John 480, 1 Cor. 228, Jas. 122; description of, by Lentulus, Luke 170; his dignity, Matt. 214; disclosure of, John 193, 199, 215 sq.; Acts 9; his alleged dissimulation, Luke 392; divinity of, see Divinity; the door, John 317 sq.; education of, John 246, 292; spiritual elevation of, Matt. 214; compared with Elijah, Luke 279, 282, Mark 67; Elisha a type of, Matt. 73; time of the end unknown to, Mark 132, 133; his power over his enemies, Matt. 460; equality with God, 1 Cor. 22; Phil. 33 sq.; 37; eternity of, John 64; exaltation of, Acts 9, 136, 165, Eph. 66, Phil. 34 sq.; 37, Heb. 28, 31; his example, Matt. 127, 2 Cor. 141, 147, Phil. 37, Thess. 19, 1 Pet. 50; explanation of, John 86 sq.; 2 Cor. 102, Eph. 36, Heb. 158 sq.; 1 Pet. 49; faithfulness of, Rom. 129; his relation to the Father, Matt. 268, Luke 169, John 50, 55, 60, 187 sq.; 283, 338, 447; image of the Father, 2 Cor. 69; feast of, John 186; fellowship with, Rom. 168, 1 Cor. 28, 135, 137, Heb. 55, 63; female friends of, Luke 126; flesh of, Luke 223; following, Matt. 303; his foreknowledge, Luke 192, 334; had no need of forgiveness, Matt. 124; friendship with, John 466; addressed God, Acts 110; his government in severity, Matt. 381; his glorification, John 427, 518, 625; glory of, Matt. 349 sq.; John 79, 1 Cor. 68; his descent into Hades, Matt. 223, Acts 27, 49, Eph. 146, 1 Pet. 67 sq.; 74, 75, Rom. 97 sq.; head of, Luke 438; his healing power, Luke 97 sq.; 124, 42, 144; his history valuable, Heb. 55; the contrast of his glory, Acts 328, Rom. 164; his holiness, Acts 68; relation of the Holy Spirit to, Luke 22, 60, 64, John 450, Rom. 257; his custom of teaching in the house, Mark 97; his humanity, Matt. 382; see Nature; his humiliation, Matt. 313, John 79, Phil. 34 sq.; 37; humility of, Matt. 214, Mark 89, 108, Luke 34, 148, 279 sq.; John 379; his incarnation, Luke 72 sq.; 79, Rom. 61, 2 John 192; his intercession, Luke 344, Rom. 291, 1 John 146; iron of, Matt. 490; his lament over Jerusalem, Matt. 415 sq.; Luke 221; Jewish expectations of, John 250; his appearance at Jewish feasts, Luke 252; a savior of the Jews for persecuting, Luke 199; his views of Jewish piety, Mark 127; contrasted with John the Baptist, Matt. 68, 72 sq.; 74, 207 sq.; relation of, John to, Luke 83 sq.; Joseph a type of, Acts 118; joy of, Luke 168; his descent from Judah, Heb. 134; his choice of Judas, see Judas; the Judge, Matt. 447 sq.; 460, John 131, Acts 328, 2 Cor. 65, 127 sq.; 2 Pet. 63; his judgment on the church, Matthew 434 sq.; 437, 439; king, Luke 293, 303, Acts 99, 205; kingdom of, see Kingdom; divine knowledge of, Matthew 161, 166 sq.; 430, Mark 132, John 95, 99, 119, 160; the Lamb of God, John 86 sq.; antitype of the paschal lamb, 1 Cor. 118, 119; his regard for law, Matt. 481, Mark 17, Luke 42, 94; his relation to the law, Matt. 110, 112 sq.; Luke 94, John 273, Rom. 342, 353, Gal. 99 sq.; Eph. 50, 102; letter of Lentulus describing him, Luke 170; liberty in, Gal. 40; the life and light of men, John 68, 61, 69, 198, 277, 283; called Lion of the tribe of Judah, Rev. 157; the look of, Luke 101; the one Lord, Eph. 142; Lordship of, Rom. 419, 427; love for, John 412, 415; love of, Acts 162, Rom. 284, Eph. 129; see Love; lowliness of, John 379; his views of marriage, Matt. 338 sq.; Mark 97, John 167; mediation of, 1 Cor. 323, Eph. 49, Tim. 21 sq.; Heb. 31; meekness of, Matt. 486; a mercy-seat, Rom. 133 sq.; the Messiah, Matt. 145, 177, 207, Matt. 365, Heb. 73; his miracles, see Miracles; his mission, Rom. 253, and see Work of; the model man, John 98 sq.; Moses a type of, Acts 130 sq.; mother of, see Mary; use of his name in baptism, Matt. 656; prayer in the name of, see Name; nativity of, see Nativity; nature of, see Nature; nearness of, Phil. 67; his obedience, Matt. 365; his occupation, Mark 63; his relation to the Old Testament, Luke 75, John 607; his relation to the prophecies of, Matt. 304 sq.; 2 Cor. 61; his regard for the Old Testament, Luke 314; Parables of, see Parables; his paradoxical sayings, Matt. 160, Note; his participation in human sufferings, Heb. 90; Note; his Passion, the paschal a type of, Matt. 459 sq.; patience of, Thess. 151, 153, 1 Pet. 46; the Prince of peace, Matt. 372 sq.; our peace, Eph. 102; peace of, John 803; relation to his people, John 143,

146, Acts 337; his perfection, Acts 277, Heb. 107; person of, Acts 43, Col. 27, Phil. 33 sqq., 37 sqq., 1 John 33 sq.; a physician, Luke 90; his avoidance of political temptations, Matt. 373; portrait of, Luke 140; his poverty, 2 Cor. 141, 147; prayers of, see Prayer; his preaching, Matt. 253 sq., Luke 73 sqq.; his precaution, John 241; pre-existence of, ib. 50, 53, 75, 298, 300, Rom. 232, Gal. 99; his triumph over prejudices, Mark 53; his presence, Heb. 31 sq.; priesthood of, Acts 206, Heb. 142, 144; a prince, Acts 99, Rev. 92; promise of, Matt. 3, 0; a prophet, Luke 75, Acts 206; distinguished from the prophets, Heb. 30 sq.; his use of proverb, Matt. 134, Note, 233, Luke 73; his providence, Matt. 179, Luke 141; putting on of, Gal. 93; his quickening work, John 199; his life a ransom, Matt. 365, 1 Peter 50; his relationships, John 536; no remission without, Rom. 134; requirements of, Luke 164; his retirement, Matt. 106, Note, 221, Mark 24; the embodiment of revelation, Matt. 2 sq., Acts 252, 1 Cor. 202; his views of riches, Matt. 344 sq.; righteousness of, ib. 200 sq., Rom. 254, 263, 1 Cor. 75, 78; at the right hand of God, Heb. 27 sq.; his teachings concerning the Sabbath, Matt. 217 sq., Mark 32, Luke 94, John 185 sq.; salvation through, the main doctrine of Christianity, Rom. 138 sq.; sanctification of, John 521; a living Saviour, Luke 37; Acts 99, 165, Tit. 6; his appeals to Scripture, Luke 94; testimony of Scripture to, John 199; seeking, ib. 251; his self-consciousness, Luke 291, 343; self-denial, ib. 124, 2 Cor. 141, 147; sentence of, Matt. 493, 502, Luke 366; a servant, Matt. 365, Luke 229, Acts 68; service of, Matt. 161, Note, John 166; severity of his language, Matt. 409; sighing of, ib. 288, Mark 70, 74, 75; silence of, Matt. 234, 492, 493, 514; his injunction of silence on those healed, ib. 151, Mark 22, 50, Luke 85, 141; sinlessness of, Luke 68 sq., John 294 sq.; his intercourse with sinners, Mark 28 sq., Luke 235; sisters of, Matt. 256 sq., Mark 53; his social nature, John 104; sonship of, Matt. 319, John 74, Note, 187, Rom. 66; scenes of sorrow in his life, Matt. 214; his final sovereignty, Phil. 38; spirit of, Rom. 257; his subjection to the Father, 1 Cor. 820 sq.; his submission, Matt. 365, 479, 482; his sufferings, John 503, Acts 300, 446, Eph. 178, Col. 37, Heb. 5; compared to the sun, Luke 50; sympathy of, Heb. 98 sqq.; as a teacher, Matt. 233, Luke 107, 218, John 245, Acts 9; temperament of, Luke 163; his relation to the temple, Matt. 877; his frequent temptations, Luke 69; a testator, Heb. 162; skilled in reading the thoughts, Matt. 161, 166; his prohibition of titles, Matt. 410; titles of:

Alpha, Rev. 93;
Beginning of Creation, Rev. 135;
Christ, Matt. 48, Rom. 64, Eph. 20;
The Door, John 317;
First-Born of the Dead, Rev. 92;
Fisher of men, Mark 20;
Galilean, Matt. 497, John 263, Note;
Jesus, Matt. 48, Luke 42, Eph. 20;
Just One, Acts 400;
King of the Jews, Matt. 61;
Lamb of God, John 86;
Lord, Luke 36, 1 Cor. 21, 22;
Lord of the Sabbath, Mark 32;
Nazarene, Matt. 64;
Omega, Rev. 93, 364;
Prince of outcast children, Matt. 61;
Prince of kings, Rev. 92;
Prince of peace, Matt. 372 sq.;
Resurrection and life, John 361, 357;
Root of David, Rev. 157;
Saviour, Luke 37;
Searcher of hearts, Mark 27;
Good Shepherd, John 817 sqq., 821, 831;
Son of David, Matt. 176, Mark 129, John 99;
Son of God, Matt. 492, 494, John 74, 96, 98;
Son of man, Matt. 180 sq., 1 Cor. 71;
The Vine, John 461;
The Way, ib. 437, 419;
The Wisdom of God, Luke 191 sq.;
Faithful Witness, Rev. 91, 135;
The Word, John 54 sqq., Jas. 54, 57 sqq.;

truth and grace of, 1 Cor. 31; the realized essence of types, John 167; ubiquity of, Heb. 99; union with, 1 John 58; his unity with God, John 332, 335, 522, Gal. 81 sqq.; the point of unity, Col. 66; his vicarious sacrifice, Eph. 118, 178, Tim. 29, 31, 1 Pet. 47, 49, 66; views of, 1 Cor. 31, Gal. 180; voluntariness of his acts, John 79; walking after, 1 John 51 sq.; weeping of, Luke 297 sqq., John 334 sq.; his wisdom, Matt. 361, 397, Luke 97, 107 sq., 147; his relations with woman, Luke 128, John 153, 167; his wonder at unbelief and faith, Mark 54, Luke 111; word and deed united in, Luke 79; his work, Luke 155, Acts 205, Eph. 102, Col. 23, 48, 1 John 46, 107; his relation to the world, John 60 sq., Col. 28; his writing, John 272, 274.

Jew, meaning and uses of the name, John 83 sq., Rom. 108, 1 Cor. 38, 2 Cor. 65 sqq., Rev. 182.

Jews, the, descent from Abraham their boast, Luke 56, John 238; number of, at Alexandria, Acts 109; almsgiving a token of piety among, Matt. 122; assumption of, Luke 322; boast of, Matt. 382; bondage of, John 28 sq.; burial customs among, Matt. 160, Mark 50; their censoriousness, Matt. 208; ceremonies of, ib. 105; their hatred of Christ, Luke 331, John 199; their reproaches of Christ, John 232; their rejection of Christ, Matt. 171, Mark 54, Luke 360; judgments of Christians upon, Rom. 374, 377; their religion preparatory to Christianity, John 161; modern, their relation to Christianity, Luke 322; mission of the church to, Thess. 44 sq.; condemnation of, Matt. 382; present condition of, Luke 322; corruption of, Rom. 109 sq.; conversion of, Acts 477, Rom. 373 sq., 2 Cor. 60, 61; crucifixion of, by Titus, Matt. 530; curse invoked on, ib. 512, 515; their law respecting the dead, ib. 413; moral decay of, John 270; dispersion of, Acts 37; division of, Thess. 45; excommunication among, Matt. 329 sq., John 310, Rom. 302, Note, 303; exorcism among, Luke 183, Acts 333; their fanaticism, John 264, 300; fasting among, Matt. 122, 126, Acts 456; fate of, Rom. 374; feasts of, John 198, 252; garments of, Matt. 173, 275, 410; their relation to the Gentiles, Acts 201, Rom. 114; their estimation of the Gentiles, Matt. 281 sqq., 1 Cor. 44, Note; the gospel first preached to, Matt. 186; contrasted with the Greeks, Eph. 104; hardening of, John 397, 402, Rom. 313 sqq., 362, 373; history of, works on, Matt. 6; their idolatry, Acts 124 sq.; number of slain at Jerusalem, Luke 321; their bondage to the letter of the law, 2 Cor. 60; their perversion of the law, Matt. 339, 344; unwise liberality towards, Luke 322; their marriage customs, Matt. 170, 208, 399, 436 sq., John 143; marriage with heathen forbidden to, Acts 298; measures of, Matt. 245, Luke 246; their expectations of the Messiah, see Messiah; missions among, Matt. 411 sqq.; estimated number of, ib. 563, Note; use of parables among, ib. 233; Paul's sorrow over, Rom. 300 sq.; prerogatives of, ib. 306 sq.; punishment of, Luke 303; their laws respecting punishment, Rom. 3; deprived of the right of capital punishment, John 563 sq.; rejection of, Rom. 341 sqq., 373; restoration of, ib. 374, 377; their righteousness a failure, ib. 533; revolt against the Romans, Jas. 25; expulsion of from Rome, Acts 334, Rom. 31 sq., 398, Rev. 59; their exclusion from Christian salvation, Rom. 299 sqq.; their priority in respect to salvation, ib. 74; their hatred of the Samaritans, Luke 161, John 150, 152, 166; schools among, Acts 399; sects of, Matt. 400; the nation a typical servant of God, Rev. 182; symbolic meaning of the name, ib. 27; modes of teaching among, Matt. 233 sq., Mark 53; their mode of reckoning time, Matt. 226, Luke 187; their custom in respect to trades, Acts 335; a type of nations, Rom. 334; unbelief of, Matt. 553, Mark 53 sq., Luke 111, 295, John 258, 390, Rom. 299 sqq., 341 sqq., 350 sqq., 333, 374; weather-signs among, Matt. 287, Luke 208; their places of worship, Acts 304.

JEZEBEL, Rev. 121 sq.

Jezreel, plain of, Matt. 556.

JOANNA, Luke 125 sq.

JOB, book of, Rev. 8.

JOEL, prophecy of, Acts 40 sq.

JOHN, the apostle, his name, Matt. 182, John 2; his parents, John 4 sq.; his relationship to Christ, Luke 82 sq.; called to be an apostle, Matt. 93, Luke 96; his training for his work, Matt. 328; his house, ib. 351; at Christ's tomb, John 604 sq.; Christ's word respecting his death, ib. 647 sqq.; in Ephesus, John 11, Rev. 59; on Patmos, John 11 sq., Rev. 59 sqq., 103; his death, Matt. 364, John 12; legends respecting, John 12; a representative apostle, Rom. 1 sq.; his character, John 2 sq.; Christ's love for, ib. 412, 415; his longing for Christ's second coming, Rev. 4; contrasted with Abraham, John 7; with James, ib. 5; with John the Baptist, ib. 6; with Judas, ib. 7; with Mary, ib. 7; with Paul, ib. 9, 14; with Peter, ib. 4, 8 sq.; his courage, Matt. 363 sqq.; his account of the crucifixion, John 588, 599; his accounts of the miracles, ib. 108 sq.; his modesty, ib. 92, 99; his zeal, Mark 37, Luke 162.

—, the Gospel according to, analysis of, John 16 sqq., 35 sqq.; contrasted with the Apocalypse, John 14 sq., Rev. 56 sqq.; attacks on, John x. sq.; its character and import, ib. 15 sqq.; commentaries on, ib. xii. sqq.; its relation to Ebionism, ib. 23; compared with First Epistle of John, 1 John 8, 16, 20; its genuineness, Matt. 213, John x. sqq., 24 sqq., 31; its relation to Gnosticism, John 23; fundamental idea of, ib. 41; introduction to, ib. v. sqq.; miracles recorded in, ib. 21 sqq.; objections to, ib. 29 sqq.; place of composition, ib. 33 sqq.; prologue to, ib. 49 sqq.; its purpose and tendency, ib. 626; its reality, ib. 20 sqq.; its relation to

- the other Gospels, Matt. 209, 213, 431, 454 sqq., 480, 486, 490 sq., Luke 321, John 22 sq., 40, 46; Roman upon, John 31, Note; its signification and mission, ib. 34 sq.; its sources and design, ib. 32 sq.; its style, ib. xi., Note; its symbolism, ib. 18 sq.; testimonies to, ib. vi. sq.; time of composition, ib. 38 sq.; unity of, ib. 21 sq.; works on, ib. 23, 46 sq.
- , Epistles of, John 14, 15, Jas. 7 sq.
- , First Epistle of, its author, 1 John 6 sqq.; its character, ib. 4 sqq.; compared with John's Gospel, ib. 8, 16, 20; date of composition, ib. 15 sqq.; form of, ib. 11 sqq.; genuineness of, ib. 6 sqq.; place of composition, ib. 17; its readers, ib. 10 sq.; scope of, ib. 14 sq.; works on, ib. 17 sq.
- , Second and Third Epistles of, their author, 2 John 182 sqq.; character, ib. 180; contents, ib. 18; date of composition, ib. 184; occasion, ib. 181; place of composition, ib. 184; readers, ib. 181 sq.; works on, ib. 186.
- JOHN the Baptist, sketch of his life, Matt. 68 sq.; name of, ib. 68, Luke 16, John 83; birth of, Matt. 68, Luke 17, 26 sqq.; his youth, Luke 24; beginning of his mission, Matt. 67 sq.; date of his ministry, Luke 55; in the desert, ib. 24 sq.; preaching of, Matt. 96 sq., Luke 55, 58, Acts 254; his baptism, Matt. 68 sqq., Luke 69, Acts 249 sqq.; embassy of the Sanhedrin to, John 83, 88; his message to Christ, Matt. 69, 203 sq., Luke 116 sq.; imprisonment and death of, Matt. 90, 203, 262 sqq., Mark 67, Luke 144 sq.; last mention of, Acts 249; his character, Matt. 73 sq., Luke 66, 69; Christ's praise of, Luke 116 sqq.; sources of his knowledge of Christ, John 80; contrast with Christ, Matt. 72 sqq., 77 sq., 96, 207; his testimony to Christ, Matt. 366, Mark 116, John 65, 68, 83 sqq., 88, 99; his relation to Christianity, Luke 59, Acts 347; disciples of, Matt. 170 sqq., 203, Luke 89, 116 sqq., John 13, 99, Acts 248 sqq.; his gloomy disposition accounted for, Matt. 171; his dress and food, ib. 70; extent of his labors, Acts 349; compared to Elijah, Matt. 69, 73, 203, 206, 312, Luke 18, John 84; contrasted with the Apostle John, John 6; ultimate object of his mission, Matt. 69 sqq., John 89; a Nazarene, Matt. 73 sq.; a representative of the Old Testament, ib. 68, 72 sq., Rom. 16; spiritual power, Matt. 75; other preachers compared to, Luke 55, Acts 247; wilderness of, Matt. 68.
- JONAH, history of a test of faith, Matt. 230; sign of, ib. 226 sq., Luke 187 sq.; Christ compared to, Matt. 236, Luke 187.
- Jonah, son of, name applied to Peter, Matt. 296.
- Joppa, Acts 186.
- Jordan, the river, Matt. 70.
- JOSEPH, of Arimathea, Matt. 536 sq., Luke 263 sq., John 569, Acts 186.
- , Barnabas, see Barnabas.
- , Barnabas, Acts 21.
- , son of Jacob, a type of Christ, Acts 116.
- , brother of Jesus, Matt. 255 sqq.
- , husband of Mary, Matt. 232, 266 sqq.; his genealogy, ib. 44, 51; dreams of, ib. 63, 64, 66 sqq.; marriage of, ib. 63; his residence, ib. 64 sq.
- JOSEPHUS, his omissions explained, Matt. 63, 69.
- JOSES, Matt. 255 sqq.
- Journey, a Sabbath-day's, Matt. 425, Mark 32, Acts 18, 23.
- Journeys of Christ, Matt. 178, 220, 280, Mark 67, 68.
- Joy, of Christ, Matt. 214, Luke 170, John 466; of Christians, Acts 143, 259, 2 Cor. 26, Gal. 146, Phil. 67 sqq., 68, Thess. 97, Jas. 43, 1 John 26, 27; in heaven, Luke 236.
- Jove of heaven, Matt. 449, 2 Cor. 26.
- JUDAH, descent of Christ from, Heb. 134; wilderness of, Matt. 68.
- JUDAISM, advantage of, Rom. 114, 116; apocalyptic of, Rev. 8; relation of the apostles to, John 11; compared with Chiliasm, Rev. 62, Note; its relation to Christianity, Acts 422, 2 Cor. 61; its relation to heathenism, Eph. 101; contrasted with Hellenism, Rev. 49 sq.; modern, Heb. 147.
- JUDAS BARABAS, Acts 268.
- , the Galilean, see
- , the Gaulonite, Matt. 394, Luke 31, 306 sq., Acts 98.
- , ISCARIOT, Matt. 182, Mark 37, Rev. 256; his apostasy, John 236; his avarice, Luke 200; call of, Matt. 183, 506, Luke 97, John 235 sq.; his character, Matt. 506, Luke 331; Christ's knowledge of, John 410 sq.; why made purse-bearer, ib. 372; his part in the Lord's Supper, Matt. 469 sq., Mark 141, John 413, 416; his betrayal of Christ, Matt. 464 sqq., 488 sqq., Mark 138, Luke 330 sq., 350, John 407, 413 sqq., 744 sq.; his repentance, Matt. 508 sq., 506 sq.; his death, ib. 504 sqq., Acts 23; contrasted with John 7; contrasted with Mary, ib. 371, Note, 372 sq.; contrasted with Peter, Matt. 499, 504, Mark 147; called son of perdition, John 610.
- , brother of James, Matt. 180, 182, 183, 235 sqq., Luke 94, 96, Jude 6 sq.
- , brother of Jesus, see above.
- , LEBZEUS, see above.
- JUDE (JUDAS) Epistle of, analysis of, Jas. 7, Jude 3; its author, Jude 3 sq.; contents, ib. 3; date of composition, ib. 7; compared to second epistle of Peter, 2 Pet. 7, Jude 7 sq.; readers, Jude 6; works on, ib. 7.
- Judge of the world, Christ to be the, Matt. 97, 383, 447, 450, Acts 205, 328, 331, 1 Cor. 91, 2 Cor. 85, 87, 2 Pet. 63.
- Judges, Jewish, Luke 270.
- Judgment, a court, Matt. 113.
- Judgment, of others, Matt. 138, Luke 106, Rom. 94, 103 sqq., 416 sq., 419; divine and human contrasted, Luke 316, John 278, 283, 1 Cor. 91; private, right of, 2 Cor. 26; by the Holy Spirit, John 477.
- Judgment, the final, Matt. 156, 447 sqq., Luke 322, Rev. 276 sqq.; Apocalyptic doctrine of, Rev. 342 sq., 345 sqq., 360 sqq., 363 sq., 403; its relation to Christ's second coming, Heb. 166; of the dead, 1 Pet. 74; events of, 1 Cor. 122 sq., 2 Pet. 52 sq.; revelations of, Rom. 104, 106; part of the saints in, 1 Cor. 122 sq., 127; time of, Matt. 430, Mark 132; according to works, Matt. 229, Rom. 96 sq., 100, Thess. 49, 1 Pet. 22, 25.
- Judgment-seat, Matt. 511.
- Judgment-seat of Christ, Rom. 419, 2 Cor. 85, 87.
- Judgments by the church, 1 Cor. 90.
- Judgments of God, relation of, to His grace, Eph. 48; beginning at the house of God, 1 Pet. 83; illustrated in parables, Matt. 236; prophetic, Luke 322; punitive, 2 Pet. 26; righteous, Thess. 116, 121; on unbelievers, Rom. 378 sq., Rev. 421; unsearchable, ib. 372 sq., 373.
- Jugglers, Jewish, Acts 363.
- JULIA, Rom. 443.
- JULIAN, the apostate, his attempt to rebuild the temple, Matt. 416, Luke 296 sq.; reported saying of, Matt. 497.
- Julias, Matt. 283.
- JULIUS, Acts 454.
- JUNIA (JUNIAS) Rom. 447.
- Jus talionis*, Thess. 121.
- Just man, described, Matt. 511 sq.
- Justice, instinct of, Rev. 166 sq.
- Justice of God, Matt. 866 sq., Acts 127; relation of grace to, Eph. 48; revealed in New Testament, Rom. 133; illustrated in parables, Matt. 236.
- Justice, Roman, Acts 436.
- Justification, defined, Rom. 180 sq., 139; of Abraham, Rom. 145 sqq., Gal. 66 sqq., 70 sqq., Jas. 83; its relation to the atonement, Rom. 135, 138, 139, 156; through faith, Luke 274 sq., 287, Acts 252 sq., 445, Rom. 76 sq., 130 sqq., 140, 141, Gal. 66 sqq., 140, Jas. 70, 82 sqq., 88 sqq.; by grace, Luke 261; hope of, Gal. 130; importance of the doctrine, Rom. 185; by the law, ib. 97, 100, 164 sq., 134, 1 Cor. 122 sqq., Gal. 54 sqq., 140; the law insufficient for, Acts 252 sq.; means of, ib. 445, Rom. 140; Pauline doctrine of, Gal. 54 sqq.; its relation to regeneration, Rom. 139; results of, ib. 168 sqq., 167 sq., 169; its relation to God's righteousness, ib. 74 sqq., 103; its relation to sanctification, ib. 75 sqq., 131, 135, 139, 201, Jas. 68, 1 John 84, 40; and sealing, Rev. 417; tractarian doctrine of, Rom. 139; tridentine doctrine of, ib. 24; its relation to works, ib. 94 sq., 131, 136, 139, 343, Jas. 83 sq., 88 sqq.; works on the subject of, Rom. 73, 74, 139, 142.
- Kane-el-Jelli, John 108.
- Kanite, sect of the, Matt. 403.
- KEBLE, JOHN, quoted, John 650.
- Kedron, brook and vale of, Matt. 478, John 542 sq.
- Keir's Kenna, John 103.
- Kericho, Matt. 182.
- Key, symbolic meaning of the term, Rev. 198.
- Key of David, Rev. 29, 129.
- Keys of Hades, Rev. 106.
- Keys, power of the, Matt. 163, 296 sq., 300, 329, John 417, Acts 150.
- Kidron, see Kedron.
- King, Christ as, Luke 296, 303, Acts 99, 205.
- King of the Jews, import of the title, Matt. 61.
- Kingdom of Christ, not the same as church, Eph. 181; development of, Luke 236; establishment of, Matt. 349 sq.; extension of, by persecution, Acts 144, 216 sq., 224, 229; same as the Kingdom of God, Eph. 200; nature of, Matt. 373, 660, Acts 99, 205, three-fold, 1 Cor. 318 Note; not worldly, Luke 236, John 565, 561.
- Kingdom of darkness, Col. 49.
- Kingdom of God, the call to, Luke 229; characteristics of, Rom. 423, 429, Rev. 97 sqq.; not same as the church, John 126, Acts 273, Eph. 181; coming of, Luke 265 sq., 268; definition of, Matt. 99, 73, Mark 99, John 125, 1 Cor. 108, Rev. 93 sqq.; the theme of Christ and the apostles, Acts 9; eagerness for, Matt. 134, Luke 252; its establishment on earth, Heb. 41 sq.; Excurses on, Rev. 98 sqq.; its futurity, ib. 94 sqq., 224, 226; history

- of Matt. 2 sq.; nearness to, Mark 123; opposition to, Matt. 246, Luke 252; positions in, Matt. 364; a thing of power, 1 Cor. 106; spread of, Luke 215 sq.; compared to a supper, ib. 228 sq.; called a tabernacle, Acts 282, 285; works on, Rom. 430 sq.
- Kingdom of heaven, the, Matt. 4 sq., 103, 125, Rev. 83, Note; Christ's announcement of, Mark 19; the church identified with, Matt. 299; the disciples' idea of, ib. 326; distinguished from the Kingdom of God, ib. 69, 73; progress of, ib. 248; rank in, ib. 206; reward of, ib. 356; compared to a vineyard, ib. 355; suffering violence, ib. 206 sq.
- Kingdom of the Messiah, expectations concerning, Luke 201, Acts 13.
- Kingdom of Satan, Matt. 223 sq., Luke 60, 344, Eph. 73 sq., 227, Heb. 64.
- Kings, birthdays of, Matt. 262; prayer for, Tim. 38, 30; reception of, Matt. 373; divine right of, Rom. 298, Note; the three of the Orient, festival of, Matt. 67.
- Kiss, among the ancients, Matt. 485; brotherly, 1 Pet. 95, 96; in Christian assemblies, Rom. 448; a holy, 1 Cor. 340, 2 Cor. 217; of Judas, Matt. 485, 487, Luke 350 sq.; as salutation, Thess. 102.
- Kissing the feet, Luke 122.
- KLING, F. C., biographical sketch of, 1 Cor. III sq.
- KLOPSTOCK, F. G., quoted, Rom. 96.
- KNAPP, A., quoted, John 157, Note.
- Knowledge, of doctrine, Titus 9; of God's requirements, Jas. 121, 123; of the times, Acts 13; basis, object, and effect of, Col. 27; its relation to faith, Luke 14, 326 sq., John 235, 621, Tim. 76, 2 Pet. 14; growth in, Eph. 67, Jas. 123; humility an element of, 1 Cor. 178; its relation to love, ib. 178, 179, Eph. 128, 131, 1 John 49; its relation to wisdom, Rom. 375, 1 Cor. 251 sq.
- , Christ's divine, Matt. 161, 166 sq., 430, Mark 132, John 119; Christ's miracles of, John 95, 91; God's, Rom. 375, 378.
- , of God, attainable only through Christ, Luke 160, Eph. 67; how far possessed by heathen, Rom. 82, 90, Thess. 65, 122; two kinds of, 1 Cor. 333, 1 John 49; nature of, 1 John 49, 56 sq., 67; joined with obedience, ib. 56 sq.
- Labor, manual, dignity of, Eph. 174; a duty, Thess. 70; necessity of, ib. 169; true object of, Eph. 171, Note; of Paul, Thess. 158.
- , Christian, Heb. 88.
- Laborers, treatment of, Jas. 132; Christian, need of, Matt. 179.
- Lady, the elect, 2 John 186 sq.
- Lalah, Matt. 294.
- Lafy, cup withheld from the, Matt. 472; training of the, Thess. 98.
- Lakes of Palestine, Luke 77.
- Lamb, paschal, typical of Christ, John 599, 1 Cor. 118, 119.
- , symbolical import of the term, Rev. 22, 157 sq., 332, 336 sq., 413.
- Lamb of God, John 86 sq.
- Lambs of Christ, John 639 sq.
- Lame man healed by Peter, Acts 63 sq.
- Lamps, among the ancients, Matt. 437; the seven in the Apocalypse, Rev. 153.
- LANGÉ, J. P., biographical notice of, Matt. x sq.; list of his works, ib. xiii sq.; his hymn on the Sabbath quoted, ib. 219.
- Language, origin of, 1 Cor. 301, Jas. 103; the Lycaonian, Acts 286; spoken in Judea, ib. 396.
- Languages, of Scripture, Matt. 7, 12 sq., 17; used by disciples at Pentecost, Acts 34 sq.
- Laodicea, Col. 5, Rev. 133 sq., 409.
- Laodiceans, epistle to the, Col. 86.
- Last, the, to be first, Matt. 354 sq.
- Last day, the, Rev. 403.
- Last days, Acts 41, Heb. 25, 1 John 72 sq.
- Last hours, 1 John 72 sq.
- Last things, Thess. 78, 86. See Eschatology.
- Last times, 1 Pet. 16.
- Latin church, its controversy with the Greek church, John 469 sq.
- Latin classical, quoted, Rom. 229 sq.
- LAURENTIUS of Rome, 2 Cor. 156, Note.
- Law, the, given through angels, Acts 131, Heb. 44; how far annulled by Christ, Romans 223; Eph. 83, 102, Col. 47 sq., 51; bondage of, 2 Cor. 47, 51, 60; ceremonial, Matt. 219, Heb. 147; character of, Rom. 232, 246; Christ born under, Gal. 99; fulfilled in Christ, Matt. 109, 110, 112, 119, Rom. 342, 350, Col. 49; Christ's regard for, Matt. 481; his relation to, Luke 94; spiritualized by Christ, Matt. 119; his submission to, Mark 17, Luke 42; the Christian's relation to, Rom. 218 sq., Gal. 140 sq.; Christianity the development of, Matt. 119; not the complement of the covenant of promise, Gal. 77; curse of, ib. 68, 71 sq.; development of, Matt. 412; doors of, ib. 110, Rom. 100; dying to, Gal. 50 sq.; relation of faith to, ib. 127, 135; fulfillment of, Rom. 137, 140, Gal. 135 sq., 140; relation of the Gentiles to, Rom. 100 sq.; giving of, ib. 307, Jas. 79; relation of the gospel to, Matt. 320, 399, Mark 19, Luke 58, Rom. 345, Eph. 102, Heb. 147, Jas. 66, 76; its relation to grace, Acts 282; bearers of, Rom. 100; written in the heart, ib. 101; abrogated by the Jews, Matt. 109, 110; justification by, see Justification; letter and spirit of, Matt. 119, Rom. 222 sq., 2 Cor. 47, 51, 60; love the fulfillment of, Matt. 219, Rom. 406 sq., 408, Gal. 135; object of, Gal. 80, 88, 92; its relation to the old covenant, ib. 88, 99; not needed in a perfect world, Luke 252; a living power, Acts 126; not for the righteous, Tim. 19; righteousness by, Rom. 343, Phil. 57; called royal, Jas. 76; insufficient for sanctification, Rom. 122, 124, 244 sq., Heb. 133; its relation to sin, Rom. 196 sq., 215, 224, 226 sq., 245, 1 Cor. 348; its relation to the sinner, Rom. 232 sq.; tables of, Matt. 344, Mark 123; terrors of, Heb. 208; relation of traditionalism to, Matt. 118 sq., 216, 278, Mark 65; transgression of, Jas. 77, 79; unity of, ib. 79; threefold use of, Rom. 124, 104, 196; works of, ib. 121 sq., Gal. 54 sq.; how productive of wrath, Rom. 151; yoke of, Matt. 214.
- Law of liberty, the gospel a, Jas. 60, 68, 76, 77, 79.
- Law of the Spirit, Rom. 251 sq., 262 sq.
- Lawgivers, Jas. 123.
- Lawsuits among Christians, 1 Cor. 121 sq., 127 sq., Jas. 78.
- Lay elders in the early church, Tim. 63.
- Lay preaching, Acts 140 sq., 217.
- Lay workers, Acts 346.
- Lazarus, meaning of the name, Luke 254.
- , the beggar, Luke 253 sq.
- , of Bethany, raising of, Luke 141 sq., John 339 sq., 350 sq.; works on the subject, John 345 sq.
- Leaven, a symbol of evil, Matt. 289 sq., 1 Cor. 114, Gal. 128; parable of the, Matt. 245, 248, 250, Luke 215; of the Pharisees and Sadducees, Matt. 289, Luke 196.
- LEBBÆUS, Matt. 180, 182, 183, 255 sq., Luke 98, Jude 5 sq.
- LECHLER, G. V., notice of, Acts v.
- Legacies to the church, Matt. 411.
- Legion, Matt. 487, Luke 381.
- LENTULUS, P., letter of, Luke 170.
- Leontopolis, Matt. 63.
- Leprosy, Matt. 150 sq., Luke 86, 263 sq.
- Lechem, Matt. 294.
- Leisures for the year, Matt. 31, 37.
- Let, use of the word, Rom. 67.
- Letter, of Christ's precepts, Luke 105; of the law, Rom. 223 sq., 2 Cor. 47, 51, 60; of the Scriptures, John 196.
- Letters, of commendation, 2 Cor. 46; congregational, Acts 288; of friendship, 3 John 20; Paul's practice of writing, 1 Cor. 356. See Epistles.
- LEVI, Luke 88. See Matthew.
- Levites, use of the name, John 84; their right of property, Acts 81.
- Liars, a designation of sinners, Rom. 117.
- Libba, Matt. 182.
- Liberality, to Christian teachers, Gal. 150, 153. See Almsgiving, Beneficence.
- Libertines, synagogue of the, Acts 109.
- Liberty, Christian, not to be abused, Rom. 421, 429, 1 Cor. 131, Gal. 134, 140; derived from Christ, Acts 277; Cowper quoted on, Gal. 131; glorious, Rom. 272; from the Mosaic law, Acts 391, 1 Cor. 131, Gal. 37, 129 sq., 134, 140, Tim. 50; its nature and limitation, 1 Cor. 135, 156, 176 sq.; principle of, Col. 58; when to be renounced, Gal. 40; the gift of the Spirit, 2 Cor. 58; associated with truth, John 287, 299; to be used in search of truth, Acts 319, 320; the gospel the law of, Jas. 68, 69, 76, 77, 79.
- Liberty, fraternity and equality, of Christianity, 2 Cor. 147 sq.
- Licentiousness, Rom. 87, Col. 64, 66, Thess. 65, Heb. 213.
- Lies, see Lying; to children, Eph. 173, Note.
- Life, use of the word in New Testament, Rev. 125; interest of angels in, Acts 94; the book of, Phil. 65 sq., Rev. 28, 127, 360, 362; Christ the, John 198; its relation to death, Rom. 285; eternal, doctrine of, ib. 352; the future, 1 Cor. 349 sq., Col. 61 sq., Thess. 77, Tim. 86; precautions for guarding, John 241; river of, Rev. 383, 387; saving and losing, Matt. 198 sq., when to be sacrificed, 1 John 118.
- Life, the Christian, see Christian Life; true of, Rev. 388.
- Light, armor of, Rom. 407, 410 sq.; Christ the, John 69, 198, 277; an attribute of God, 1 John 29 sq.; a token of his manifestation, John 198; of the gospel, 2 Cor. 67 sq., 71; spiritual, Thess. 86; symbolism of, Luke 188, Acts 443, Rev. 19.
- Lightning, symbolism of, Rev. 152.
- Lights, the father of, Jas. 52.
- LILLIE, JOHN, biographical notice of, Thess. ix.
- Limbus infernalis, John 297.
- Limbus patrum, John 297.
- LINCOLN, ABRAHAM, quoted, Luke 41, B. m. 401, Note.
- Linen, Luke 253, 383.

INUS, Tim. 118.

Ion, a symbol in the Apocalypse, Rev. 217; a title of Christ, ib. 157; the symbol of the Gospel of Mark, Mark 2; Satan represented as a, 1 Pet. 90 sq.; a title of Turkish rulers, Rev. 210, Note.

Liquor-drinking, Tit. 13.

Litral, use of the word, Rev. 98, Note.

Literature, secular, its relation to Christianity, Tit. 11; its use in the pulpit, ib. ib.

Litigation among Christians, 1 Cor. 121 sqq., 127, 128 sq.

Little things, faithfulness in, Luke 248; power of, ib. 316.

Liturgy, derivation of the word, 2 Cor. 157, Note.

Livias, Matt. 263.

Living God, the use of the expression, Matt. 295, 400, Luke 311, Acts 263, 270.

Living to God, Gal. 5:1 sq.

Loaves, Jewish, Matt. 266.

Localities, Scripture, Matt. 521, Luke 368 sq.

Locusta, Matt. 70, Rev. 22, 209.

Logos, doctrine of the, John 49 sqq., 54 sqq., 1 John 24.

Long-suffering of God, Rom. 101, 320, 321.

LOKD, application of the name to Christ, Luke 36, 112, Rom. 62, 1 Cor. 21, 22, 58, Thess. 12 sq.; end of the, Jas. 139 sq.

Lord's Day, see Sunday.

Lord's Prayer, the, Matt. 123 sqq., 128 sqq., Luke 179 sqq.

Lord's Supper, the authenticity of, 1 Cor. 240 sqq.; the body and blood of Christ symbolized in, Matt. 471 sqq.; Luke 337, John 227, 1 Cor. 236 sqq.; first celebration of, Matt. 473, 1 Cor. 243; distinctive character of, 1 Cor. 240 sqq.; reference of Christ's discourse to, John 227 sq.; custom of the primitive church in respect to, 1 Cor. 232, 234; an occasion of controversy, Matt. 475, Luke 338, John 229; exclusion from, Thess. 160; generic idea of, John 227, 1 Cor. 213; institution of, Matt. 469 sqq., Mark 140 sqq., Luke 335 sqq., John 403 sqq.; Judas' participation in, Matt. 469 sqq.; not a mere memorial, ib. 471, 474; proper mode of its observance, 1 Cor. 241; its nature and influence, Acts 69; compared with the Passover, Matt. 472 sq., Mark 141; questions for self-examination before partaking of, 1 Cor. 241, 244; represented by art, Luke 338; a pledge of the resurrection of believers, 1 Cor. 214; rites of, Matt. 475; abuse of, by the Roman Catholic Church, 1 Cor. 245; not a sacrifice, Matt. 475; sickness resulting from, 1 Cor. 241, 242; its significance, Matt. 471, 475, Mark 141, John 227, 1 Cor. 209, sqq., 237, Luke 240 sqq.; theories in reference to, 1 Cor. 213; unworthy partakers of, ib. 238 sq.; works on, Luke 338.

Lordship of Christ, Rom. 419, 427. See Lord.

Lost, relative number of the, Rom. 197.

Lot, use of the, Acts 21 sq., 318.

LOT's wife, Luke 267.

Love of Christ, Christians not to be separated from, Rom. 254; surpasses knowledge, Eph. 128, 131; seen in the Lord's Supper, Luke 338; reciprocal nature of, 2 Cor. 104; victory through, Rom. 284.

Love, Christian, activity of, Col. 72; boldness of, Acts 290; distinctive mark of Christians, John 427; its duty and nature, Phil. 17, 1 John 149 sqq.; excellence of, 1 Cor. 267 sqq.; exhibition of in early churches, Acts 223; distinguished from love to neighbor, Luke 174, John 426; the principle and impulse of Christian life, Eph. 177; shown to the weak, Heb. 119.

Love of God, revealed in Christ, Rom. 163, 166, 168, 284, 286, 1 John 146; an attribute, Luke 43 sqq., 1 John 140 sq., 146; the ground of the believer's love, Rom. 166; its greatness, Eph. 77, 82, 128, 131; related to knowledge, 1 Cor. 176; revealed in New Testament, Rom. 138; related to His wrath, Luke 229.

Love to God, Matt. 404, Mark 123, 1 Cor. 171, 176, 267 sqq.

Love, commandment of, 1 John 53, 67; debt of, Rom. 406, 409 sqq.; to enemies, Luke 104, 105; essential to moral excellence, 1 Cor. 274; excellent quality of, ib. 275; its relation to faith, Gal. 139, Eph. 128, Col. 14, Thess. 87, Tim. 20, 1 John 164 sqq.; to fellow-men, Matt. 404, Mark 123, Luke 174, John 425, Rom. 405 sqq., 408, Gal. 135 sqq., 140 sqq., 143, Jas. 79; identical with knowledge, 1 Cor. 176, 178, Eph. 129, 1 John 49; feast offerings of, Matt. 465; parental, a symbol of God's love, ib. 146; permanent quality of, 1 Cor. 273, 275; self—, Matt. 404; service of, in the church, ib. 366; covering sins, 1 Pet. 77, 79.

Love-feasts of early Christians, John 405, 416.

Lowliness of Christ, John 379.

LUCIUS, Acts 239, Rom. 451 sq.

LUKE, biographical sketch of, Luke 1 sq.; a companion of Paul, Acts 303, 308, 367, 2 Cor. 146, Note; a physician, Luke 110, 116, Col. 85; referred to by Paul, Col. 85, Tim. 116, Phil. m. 24; his favorite appellation of Christ, Luke 383; authorship of Epistle to the Hebrews ascribed to, Heb. 8; inspiration of, Luke 13; works on, ib. 2.

——, Gospel, according to, its connection with the Book of Acts, Acts 1; its aim or purpose, Luke 6; characteristics of, ib. 2 sqq., 52; chronological order in, John 40 sqq.; list of commentaries on, Luke 7; its credibility disputed, ib. 166; date of its composition ib. 6; genuineness, ib. 4 sqq., 18, 34, 52; compared with other Gospels, Matt. 540, Luke 266, 301, 308, 330, 345 sqq., 356, 385 sqq., John 40 sqq.; fundamental ideas and arrangement of, Luke 8 sqq.; Lange's Commentary on, ib. vi. sqq.; parallels peculiar to, ib. 129 sqq.

Lukewarmness, Rev. 131 sqq., 136, 412.

Lunatics, Matt. 96, 314 sqq., Mark 83 sqq., Luke 157 sqq.

Lust, condemned, Matt. 114; related to covetousness, Col. 64, 66, Thess. 65, Heb. 213; dominion of, how escaped, 1 Cor. 130; evil of, 2 Pet. 37; of the eyes, 1 John 64 sq.

Lusts of the flesh, Gal. 138, 143.

Lustrations, see Washings.

LUTHER, MARTIN, hymns of, Matt. 438, Acts 145; on John's Gospel, John v.1; compared with Paul, Acts 177, 411, 417; on Revelation, Rev. 76; watchword of, Rom. 136, 140; at Wittenberg, Matt. 60; at Worms, Acts 77, 386.

Lutheran church, Matt. 128, Note, 474 sq., Mark 166, Luke 338, Rom. 168.

Lutheranism, Rom. 374, Note.

Lycania, Acts 262, 266, 267.

Lydia, Acts 186.

LYDIA, at Philippi, Acts 305.

Lydia, country of, Acts 305.

Lying, sin of, Eph. 169, 183, Col. 65.

LYSANIAS, Luke 54 sq.

Lystra, Acts 262; healing of a cripple at, ib. 265 sqq.

Maccabees, the race of, Matt. 56, 60.

Macedonia, Thess. 18; controversy among the Christians of, Rom. 250; liberality of the Christians in, 2 Cor. 139; its condition in the time of Paul, ib. ib.; Paul's call to, Acts 303.

Macherus, Matt. 263, 262, 263.

Madian, see Midian.

Magadan, and

Magdala, see

Magdalen, Matt. 284.

MAGDALENE, derivation of the name, Matt. 286 sq.; Mary, ib. ib., Luke 121, 125. See Mary Magdalene.

Magi, visit of the, to Infant Jesus, Matt. 56 sqq.

Magic, practice of, at Ephesus, Acts 354.

Magicians, Egyptian, Tim. 101.

Magistrates, duty of, Rom. 403; obedience to, ib. 399 sqq., 408 sqq., 1 Pet. 40, 42 sq.; prayer for, Tim. 28, 30; divine right of, Tit. 22.

Magnificat of Mary, the, Luke 25 sq.

MAGOG, Rev. 34, 355 sqq.

Maimed, Matt. 326.

Majesty of God, Heb. 208.

MALCHUS, Matt. 466, Luke 361.

Malta, Acts 460, 461, 468.

MALTHACE, Matt. 262.

Mammon, Matt. 133.

Man, use of the term, 1 Cor. 70, 71; distinguished from angels, Eph. 83; carnal nature of, 1 Cor. 69 sqq.; depravity of, ib. 128; the creature of God, Eph. 53; his relation to God changed by Christ's death, Heb. 159; tripartite nature of, 1 Cor. 62, 359; natural condition of, ib. 128; relation of to woman, ib. 223, Eph. 206, Note; to have the dominion of the world, Heb. 64; vanity of, 1 Cor. 71.

——, the inward, Rom. 240 sq., Eph. 124, 128.

——, the natural, 1 Cor. 68, 66.

——, the old, Rom. 203, 207, Eph. 163.

——, the spiritual, 1 Cor. 65, 66.

“Man of sin, Rom. 207, Note, Thess. 106, 111, 127, 133 sqq.

MAN, Son of, John 191, 1 Cor. 71.

MANAEN, Acts 236.

Mandean, Acts 350.

Manger, Luke 33.

Manna, description of, John 217 sqq.; a type of Christ, ib. 228, 1 Cor. 197, 203; gathering of, 2 Cor. 144; the hidden, Rev. 29, 120 sq.

Manuscript, Sinaitic, Matt. xx. 565, Acts vii.

Manuscripts of the New Testament, Matt. xix. sqq., Acts vii., 84.

Marsh, wilderness of, Matt. 68.

Marasme, 1 Cor. 361.

MARCELLA, tradition respecting, Luke 184.

MARCION, Gospel of, Luke 5.

MARIAMNE, Matt. 60.

Mariolatry, Luke 10, 185.

MARK, name of, Mark 4; a type of Christ, ib. 228; mother of, ib. 6, Acts 229; accompanies Paul and Barnabas, Acts 229, 242; his departure from them at Perga, ib. 248; their dispute concerning, Mark 4, Acts 205 sqq.; Paul's allusions to, Col. 84, Tim. 116, Philom. 24; Peter's relations to, Mark 6 sqq., 62, 1 Pet. 96.

- , Gospel according to, Aramaic words in, Mark 50; characteristics of, ib. 1 sq.; composition of, ib. 7 sq.; genuineness, ib. 10 sq., 157; fundamental idea and arrangement, ib. 12 sq., 166; compared with Matthew's Gospel, ib. 1; its relation to Peter, ib. 6 sq., 62, 157; vividness of the descriptions in, ib. 44, 46, 49, 64, 83, 110, 117; works on, ib. 12.
- Marriage, use of the word in the New Test., Rev. 336, Note; when to be avoided, Matt. 339 sq.; of believers, 1 Cor. 147 sq., 155 sq., 228, 1 Pet. 78; Bible, history of, Eph. 206; Christ's views of, Matt. 333 sq., Mark 97; recognized by Christianity, John 102, 104, Eph. 206; its relation to the church, Eph. 206, Note; duty of the church in reference to, 1 Cor. 146; of clergymen, not to be hasty, Tim. 39; undervalued by the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 139; mutual duties resulting from, Eph. 198 sq., 208 sq.; an ecclesiastical ceremony, 1 Cor. 166; end of, Eph. 206, Theses 65; proper estimation of, Tim. 51; essentials to happiness in, 1 Cor. 229; holiness of, Rom. 218 sq., 223; of Jews with heathen forbidden, Acts 208; Jewish customs respecting, Matt. 170, 208, 306, 438 sq., John 143; of the Lamb, Rev. 332, 338 sq.; laws relative to, Matt. 339 sq., 390; Mosaic law of, ib. 399; nature and obligations of, 1 Cor. 143 sq., 145 sq., Eph. 206, 208, Note, 1 Pet. 66; offences, Matt. 204; duty of parents to children in respect to, 1 Cor. 165; Paul's views on, ib. 138 sq.; perversion of, Acts 88; how far a hindrance to a religious life, 1 Cor. 168 sq.; of the Rom. Cath. Church respecting, Matt. 115, 119, 339 sq., Eph. 207, Tim. 50; second, Luke 311, 1 Cor. 143, 150, Tim. 38 sq.; Scripture view of, Rev. 277; duty of the State in reference to, 1 Cor. 145; symbolical use of the term, Matt. 389; typical of Christ and the church, John 143, 148, Eph. 198 sq., 206; true view of, Luke 311, 1 Cor. 138.
- Mar's Hill, Paul's address on, Acts 323 sq.
- MARTHA, Luke 176 sq., John 352.
- MARTYR, use of the term, Acts 400.
- Martyrdom, genuine, Matt. 189, 264, Acts 263; different kinds of, Matt. 66, Note 384; of Stephen, Acts 135 sq.; Old Testament and New Testament contrasted, Matt. 488; true value of, Acts 136, Phil. 95.
- Martyrs, proper estimate of, Acts 136; their courage, Luke 349; festivals of, Matt. 66; in the Apocalypse, Rev. 166.
- MARY, mother of Jesus, her descent, Matt. 48, Luke 21, 62, 63; descriptions of, Luke 20; her person and character, ib. 20, 40, 45; her relations to Joseph, Matt. 53; her relation to Elizabeth, Luke 30; immaculate conception of, Matt. 232, Luke 21, 130; song of, Luke 25 sq., 28; her visit to Bethlehem, ib. 33; her grief, ib. 43; Christ's reproof of, John 105; at the cross, Matt. 529, John 585, 591; commended to John, John 103, 596, 594; her views respecting Christ, Matt. 231, Luke 123 sq.; children of, James 12 sq., 20; and see Brothers of Jesus; compared with Eve, John 591, 595; her faith, Matt. 53, 231, 232, John 104, 108; human nature of, Luke 130; her friendship with John, John 7 sq.; not named by John, ib. 103; her obedience to be imitated, Matt. 232; position assigned to by Christ, ib. ib.; her poverty, Luke 44, 48; types of, in history, Matt. 53; perpetual virginity of, ib. 53, Note, 258, 260, Luke 34; worship of, Matt. 232, Luke 19, 183, John 105; last mention of, Acts 19.
- of Bethany, Matt. 463 sq., Mark 138, Luke 176 sq., John 340 sq.
- mother of James and Joseph, Matt. 255 sq., 259, 529, 537, Mark 154, John 585.
- MAGDALENE, Matt. 286 sq., 528 sq., Mark 150, Luke 121, 123, John 340, 604, 606, 609 sq., 623.
- mother of Mark, Mark 5, Acts 229.
- of Rome, Rom. 147, 454.
- MARYS, the three, identity of, John 340, Note.
- of the New Testament, Rom. 434.
- Mass, sacrifice in the, Heb. 169.
- Massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day, Matt. 264, Note, 265.
- Master, a title of a teacher, Matt. 410, Luke 82, 192.
- Masters, their duties to servants, Eph. 217 sq., Col. 78 sq.; impossible to serve two, Matt. 133.
- Matrons, Matt. 63.
- MATTANIAH, Acts 98.
- MATTHEW, biographical sketch of, Matt. 40 sq.; his identity with Levi, ib. 40, 170, Luke 88; his character, Matt. 364, Luke 96.
- Gospel according to, characteristics of, Matt. 39 sq.; Commentaries on, ib. 42 sq.; date of its composition, ib. 42; genuineness of, ib. 42, 45; fundamental idea of, ib. 43; compared with other Gospels, ib. 164, 453, 541, 546; Lange's Commentary on, ib. xviii. sq.; language of, ib. 47 sq.; order and arrangement, ib. 43 sq.; peculiarities of, ib. 454; its connection with the Pentateuch, ib. 46, Note; title of, ib. 42.
- MATTHIAS, Acts 21 sq., 98.
- Meals, of the ancients, Matt. 389, 1 Cor. 232; blessing at, Matt. 266, Tim. 49.
- Measures, Jewish, Matt. 245, Luke 246.
- Meat, the gospel compared to, 1 Cor. 70, 71.
- Mediation of Christ, 1 Cor. 323, Eph. 49, Tim. 29 sq., Heb. 31.
- Mediator, office of a, Gal. 81; need of a, Heb. 208.
- Mekness, Matt. 102, 486.
- Megiddo, Matt. 287, Rev. 295, 302.
- MELCHISEDEK, Heb. 126, 128 sq.
- MELDENIUS RUPERTIUS, maxim of, Acts 286.
- MELITE, Acts 466.
- MENANDER, quoted by Paul, 1 Cor. 331.
- Mendicancy, system of, 2 Cor. 148.
- Mennonites, their error respecting oaths, Matt. 116.
- Mental reservation in oaths, Matt. 412.
- Merciful, the, blessed, Matt. 102.
- Mercy of God, Matt. 235 sq., 334, Eph. 77.
- Mercy and Judgment, Jas. 79, 81.
- Mercy-seat, Rom. 132 sq.; Christ as a, ib. 153.
- Merit, works of, Rom. 269.
- Meritoriousness, Acts 192.
- Meritum ex congruo*, Acts 192.
- Merove, Acts 165.
- Messengers, gospel, Luke 229, Rom. 348, 353.
- MESSIAH, the, Christ's claims as, Matt. 145, Mark 27; Daniel's description of his appearance, Matt. 161; feast of, ib. 152; Gentile expectations of, ib. 57; Jewish expectations of, ib. 48, 69, 86, 287, Luke 46, John 250, 284, 330; Jewish idea of, John 163; kingdom of, Luke 291, Acts 13; prophecies respecting, Matt. 204, 220 sq., Heb. 44, Rev. 48 sq.; Samaritan idea of, John 163; sign of, Matt. 225, 428.
- Messiah*, false, Matt. 422 sq., Luke 267, 319.
- MEYER'S Commentary on the Gospels, Matt. 537.
- MICHAEL the archangel, Theses 75, Jude 19, 25, Rev. 238, 248.
- Midian, land of, Acts 120.
- Midianites, Acts 120.
- Midnights in Christian history, Matt. 439.
- Midwives of Christ, Luke 159, 163.
- Mile, Roman, Acts 194.
- Milk, the gospel compared to, 1 Cor. 70, 71, Heb. 109, 1 Pet. 81, 87.
- Millenarianism, Matt. 447 sq.
- Millennium, the, Apocalyptic doctrine of, Rev. 343, 401, 402, 440; relation of Christ's second coming to, Theses 78; predictions of, Matt. 422, 428, 447, 1 Cor. 122; theory of, Matt. 437, Note; time of, unknown, Acts 13.
- Millstone, Matt. 324.
- MILTON, quoted, Luke 29, 188, 205, John 315, Note, Theses 75, Note, Jas. 51, 1 Pet. 43.
- Mina, Luke 290.
- Mind, the, definition of, Matt. 404; renewing of, Rom. 382; vanity of, Eph. 160, 165.
- Ministers of the gospel, their authority, 1 Cor. 92; attitude of, ib. 53 sq.; call of, Matt. 340, Luke 79 sq.; and see Call; characteristics of, Matt. 326, 2 Cor. 172, Theses 84; children of, Acts 356; Christ a model for, Luke 75; circumspection needful in, Tim. 61; their relation to their congregations, 2 Cor. 26, Gal. 108, 120; how far to engage in controversy, Tim. 102; list of distinguished, Matt. 33; duties of, Luke 261, 2 Cor. 112, Jude 31; education of, Acts 348, Jas. 102; to oppose error, Tim. 26; an example for, Luke 327; their example, 1 Cor. 103 sq., 206, Tim. 14; personal experience necessary to success of, 2 Cor. 69 sq.; families of, Tim. 39 sq.; spiritual fathers, 1 Cor. 102, Theses 35; their duty as correctors of faults, 2 Cor. 36 sq.; fidelity requisite in, 1 Cor. 88, 91, 92; furniture of, Matt. 253 sq.; gentleness requisite in, 2 Cor. 172; their endowments from the Holy Spirit, 1 Cor. 285; instruction for, Luke 229, 2 Cor. 70 sq.; manner and matter of, 1 Cor. 53 sq.; engaging in other occupations, Tim. 93; how they may offend in word, Jas. 102; Paul a model for, Rom. 66, 1 Cor. 63, 191; should use plain language, Acts 401; portrayed, Luke 170; not to preach themselves, but Christ, Acts 144; should make suitable preparation, Jas. 102, 105; qualifications of, 1 Cor. 106, 191 sq., 2 Cor. 70; remission of, Luke 219; salvation of, ib. 108; self-watchfulness necessary in, 1 Cor. 206; servants of Christ, Col. 14; sins of, Tim. 106; stewards of the mysteries of God, 1 Cor. 68, 90 sq., Tim. 11; strength requisite in, 2 Cor. 172; support of, 1 Cor. 185, Gal. 150, 153, 155, Theses 35, 158, Tim. 68; should warn against unfaithfulness, Heb. 118; spiritual warriors, 2 Cor. 172; witnesses to the truth, Theses 44; co-workers with God, 1 Cor. 74, 77; in what their worth consists, ib. 91.
- Ministry, The Christian, its institution by Christ, Matt. 568; accommodation in, 1 Cor. 190; appointment to, John 642; call to, Acts 239 sq., Gal. 13 sq., Eph. 118, Heb. 106; claims of, 1 Cor. 190; division of labor in, Tim. 114; education for, in the primitive church, Acts 346; obligations of, 1 Cor. 290; ordination to, Acts 403, 447, Tim. 89; how far a priesthood, Rom. 440, Note, 442 sq.; pro-

- paration for, Jas. 102; requirements of, Tim. 54; work of, Acts 273, 2 Cor. 69, 70 sqq., 89, Eph. 118 sq., Col. 38, Tit. 6.
- Ministry of angels, Acts 94.
- Ministry of Christ, Matt. 385.
- Minstrels at funerals, Matt. 174, 208, Luke 141.
- Miracles, definitions of, Matt. 153 sq.; terms used in the New Testament for, 164, 210, John 108, 2 Cor. 202 sq.; arguments for, Luke 79; distinguished as difficult or easy, 86; evidence from, 2 Cor. 202, 206; gift of, Luke 168, 170, 261; wrought only by the power of God, Acts 63, 68; their harmony with nature, Mark 77; power to work, why not continued, 163.
- , apocryphal, Matt. 320, Luke 50 sq.; attending Christ's birth, Luke 40; traditional, at His death, 380; false, Thess. 131, 140 sq.; of nature, Luke 133; Old Testament, Matt. 154, 267, Luke 147; works on, Matt. 153.
- , of Christ, John's account of, John 108 sq.; different from apocryphal ones, Matt. 520; central point of, John 110; their resemblance to Christ, Matt. 154 sq.; conditions of, Mark 53; not creative, Matt. 267, 268, John 106, 210; of deed, 163 sqq.; performed at a distance, 152, 155, 282, 283, Luke 110 sq.; proofs of His divine mission, Matt. 155, Luke 118; emblems of spiritual deliverance, Matt. 204; end of, Luke 284, 329; their power in quickening faith, Matt. 211; in Galilee and in Judea distinguished, John 169; internal and external, Mark 27; of knowledge, John 96, 99, 106; order and significance of, Matt. 155 sq.; progression in, 167, 174; punitive, 163, Luke 137; on the Sabbath, Luke 93, 94; stages of, Matt. 163; wrought on women, Mark 50; of word, Matt. 153 sqq.; compared with miracles of the apostles, John 439.
- , of Christ, water made wine, Mark 22, John 102 sqq., 109 sqq.; nobleman's son healed, John 171 sqq.; demoniacs healed at Capernaum, Mark 21 sqq., Luke 77 sqq.; Peter's mother-in-law healed, Matt. 158, Mark 23, Luke 79 sq.; first draught of fishes, Luke 81 sqq.; leper healed, Matt. 150 sqq., 156, Mark 25, Luke 85 sqq.; paralytic healed, Matt. 166 sqq., Mark 26 sqq., Luke 86 sqq.; impotent man healed, John 179, 181 sqq.; man with withered hand healed, Matt. 217 sqq., Mark 23 sqq., Luke 93 sq.; centurion's servant healed, Matt. 165 sqq., 155 sqq., Luke 110 sqq.; son of the widow raised, Luke 112 sqq.; blind and dumb demoniac healed, Matt. 223, Luke 183; tempest stilled, Matt. 161 sqq., Mark 44 sq., Luke 132 sqq.; demoniacs healed at Gadara, Matt. 164 sqq., Mark 48 sqq., Luke 135 sqq.; woman with issue of blood healed, Matt. 174 sq., Mark 49 sqq., Luke 140 sqq.; Jairus's daughter raised, Matt. 173 sqq., Mark 49 sqq., Luke 139 sqq.; two blind men healed, Matt. 176 sqq.; dumb demoniac healed, 177; five thousand fed, Matt. 265 sqq., Mark 60 sq., Luke 146 sqq., John 207 sqq.; walking on the sea, Matt. 270 sqq., Mark 62 sq., John 213 sqq.; daughter of the Canaanitish woman healed, Matt. 281 sqq.; deaf and dumb man healed, Mark 69 sqq.; four thousand fed, Matt. 285, Mark 72 sqq.; blind man healed, Mark 76 sqq.; dumb demoniac healed, Matt. 314 sqq., Mark 83 sqq., Luke 157 sqq.; money in the fish's mouth, Matt. 319 sqq.; ten lepers cleansed, Luke 263 sqq.; blind men at Jericho healed, Matt. 369, Mark 108 sq., Luke 282 sqq.; Lazarus raised, Luke 141 sq., John 339 sqq., 345; infirm woman healed, Luke 212 sqq.; man with the dropsy healed, 223; fig-tree withered, Matt. 380 sqq., Mark 113 sqq.; Malchus healed, Matt. 486, Luke 361; second draught of fishes, John 631 sqq.; various, Matt. 94, 158, 178, 276, 284 sq., Mark 23, 34, Luke 79, 101, 116.
- , of the apostles, Mark 161 sqq., John 439, Acts 63, 68, 187, 188, 262, Phil. 49, Tim. 119, Heb. 45; of Barnabas and Paul, Acts 282; of Paul, 285, 267 sq., 305 sqq., 309, 353 sqq., 368 sq., 467 sq.; of Peter, 163 sqq., 90, 186; of Philip, 163, 143; of Stephen, 163, 111.
- Missionaries among the heathen, Acts 331 sq.; Scriptural mode of sending forth, 240 sqq.; task of, Rom. 443.
- Missionary meeting, the first, Acts 241.
- , ship, the first, Acts 245.
- , spirit, Matt. 412.
- Missions, when most blessed, Acts 58, 241; call for, 310; instituted by Christ, Matt. 563, Luke 400; of the early Christians, Acts 217, 239 sqq.; the work of the church, Matt. 252, Rom. 355, 356, 3 John 199; contributions for, Luke 316; course of, 319; history of, works on, Matt. 6 sq.; reflex influence of, Acts 241; among the Jews, Matt. 411 sq.; value of, Acts 241; woman's work in, 190.
- Mileta, the widow's, Mark 127, Luke 315 sq.
- M Kaur, probable site of Macharua, Matt. 208.
- MNEVIS, the idol, Acts 126.
- M ckery of Christ, Matt. 514, Luke 356 sq., 362, 373, 374.
- Mocking God, Gal. 152.
- Modesty of the gospel writers, John 99.
- MOHAMMED, deistic doctrines of, Matt. 408.
- Mohammedanism, works on, Matt. 6.
- Mohammedans, spread of Christianity among, Matt. 61; estimated number of, 563.
- MOLOCH, Acts 126.
- Monasticism, censured, Matt. 132; its features, Luke 291.
- Money, coinage of, the symbol of authority, Matt. 397, Luke 306; love of, Tim. 70, 71; piece of, Matt. 319; possession of, not sinful, 163.
- Money-changers, Matt. 376.
- MONICA, mother of Augustine, 1 Pet. 54.
- Monkery, Rev. 198.
- Monks, poverty of, Matt. 346.
- Monogamy, the true idea of, Mark 97; arguments for, Matt. 341, Eph. 206.
- Monothelism of the Pharisees, Matt. 403.
- Monothelite controversy, Matt. 479, 482.
- Montanism, Col. 7.
- Monuments to the dead, Matt. 413.
- Moon, symbolism of, Rev. 34, 246.
- Morality, not independent of religion, Rom. 87; not sufficient for salvation, Acts 204; its worth, nature and basis, Eph. 84.
- , Christian, its relation to the Mosaic law, John 273, 275.
- Morals, corruption of, in heathen lands, Rom. 89.
- Moriah, Mt., Matt. 105.
- Morning star, Rev. 124 sq.
- MOSES, Stephen's account of, Acts 119 sqq.; his youthful beauty, 163; burial of, Jude 19, 25; a type of Christ, Acts 120 sq., 126, Heb. 68 sqq., 73; his flight from Egypt, Heb. 192; his fidelity, 163; his learning, Acts 119; contrasted with the Pharisees, Rom. 316, 333; his appearance at the Transfiguration, Matt. 307; veil upon the face of, 2 Cor. 55 sqq., 61 sqq.
- , Book of the Ascension of, Rev. 10.
- , seat of, Matt. 409.
- Mothers, pious, Acts 300 sq., Tim. 83.
- Mountain, meaning of the term in Bible, Matt. 100; figurative use of the term, 163, Rev. 18, 197, 205.
- Mountains, three sacred, Matt. 662; removal of, 315.
- Mount of Beatitudes, Matt. 100, 105.
- , Calvary, Matt. 519 sqq., Luke 372, John 582 sq.
- , Gerizim, Matt. 185, John 180.
- , Hermon, Matt. 306 sq.
- , Horeb, Acts 122, 1 Cor. 197.
- , Moriah, Matt. 105.
- , of Olives, Matt. 105, 422, Acts 18.
- , Panias, Matt. 294, 306.
- , Sinai, 163, Acts 122, Gal. 114 sqq.
- , Tabor, Matt. 105, 306, 311, 558, Luke 152 sq., Acts 22, 2 Pet. 19.
- , of Transfiguration, Matt. 306, Luke 152, Acts 22, 2 Pet. 19.
- , Christ's Sermon on the, Matt. 97 sqq.
- Mourners, proper treatment of, Matt. 161.
- Mourning, Eastern custom of, Matt. 211; in spirit, 163, 103.
- Murmuring of the Israelites, 1 Cor. 199.
- Mustard-seed, Matt. 245.
- Myra, Acts 455.
- Myriads, Heb. 207.
- Myrrh, Matt. 586, 588, Mark 151.
- Myria, Acts 299.
- Mysteries of God, Acts 234, 1 Cor. 87, 90 sq., 283; heathen, Luke 198; of the Kingdom of heaven, Matt. 239 sq.
- Mystery, definition of, 1 Cor. 57, 88, Tim. 45, Rev. 107; of Christ, Eph. 110, 111; of godliness, Tim. 45 sqq.; of the divine will, Eph. 51; of the divine wisdom, 1 Cor. 68, 69; communicated by Paul, Rom. 369, 374.
- Mystical, proper use of the term, Rev. 98, Note.
- Mythology, works on, Matt. 6; symbolism of, Rom. 90.
- NAAMAN, Luke 74.
- , abulus, John 153.
- , ain, Luke 112.
- Name, in the, Matt. 200, 324, Luke 158.
- , of Christ, the abuse of, Acts 355; baptism in, Matt. 558; calling upon, 1 Cor. 21; faith in, Rom. 63; miracles wrought in, Mark 89, Acts 63; prayer in, John 439, Thess. 120; secret, Rev. 25, 333.
- , the new, Rev. 120 sq., 132.
- Names, of Deity, Matt. 125, 557 sq., 560 sq., 1 Cor. 21; double, in Palestine, Matt. 182 sq., John 94, Note; Greek, of Jews, John 94, Note; among Jews and Christians, Rom. 58; Scripture, orthography of, Matt. 48, Luke 15, 61 sqq.; of Scripture localities, Matt. 479, Note; typical meaning, 163, 479, Note.
- Naphtali, Matt. 91.
- NATHANIEL, Matt. 182, Luke 96, John 94 sq. See Bartholomew.
- Nationalities not distinct under the gospel, Thess. 34.
- Nativity of Christ, date of the, Matt. 56 sq., Luke 35 sq., 55.
- Natural man, the, 1 Cor. 62, 66.
- Natural science, works on, Matt. 7.

Nature, Christ's rule over, Matt. 272, Mark 45; Christianity in harmony with, 1 Cor. 229; worship of, Acts 365.

Nature of Christ, divine and human, Mark 60, 81, Luke 47, 111, 117, 209, John 72, 79, Acts 48, 49, Phil. 88, Tim. 31, 1 John 23 sq., 138, 138.

Nature, human, Ellen, Rom. 90; over the same, Luke 269; three-fold, Rom. 231 sq., Thess. 96 sq., Heb. 95.

Nature and grace, 1 Cor. 229, 259, Eph. 101.

Nazarene, Matt. 64.

Nazarenes, sect of, Matt. 497, Note, Acts 420.

Nazareth, Matt. 64 sq., 479, Note, Mark 52, Luke 51, 74, John 95.

Nazarites, Matt. 73 sq., Luke 16, Acts 390.

Neapolis, Acts 303 sq., Philom. 6.

Neatness of Christ, Phil. 67.

Needle, eye of a, Matt. 345 sq.

NEHEMIAH, Book of, Rev. 7, Note.

Neighbor, love for, Luke 174, Gal. 135 sq., 143, Jas. 79; conduct towards, Matt. 138, 143, 146, 384.

Nepin, see Naim.

Nephtulim, see Naphtali.

NEBO, persecutions by, Matt. 523; impostors of the name, Thess. 110.

Neronias, Matt. 204.

Neronianism, Mark 53.

Neutrality in reference to Christ impossible, Luke 184, 185.

New commandment of Christ, John 425 sq.

New covenant and old contrasted, Matt. 171, Luke 89, 90.

New School Calvinists, their theory respecting original sin, Rom. 194.

New Testament, the, arrangement of, Matt. 23 sq.; canon of, 22 sq., Jas. 4; chronological order of books of, Matt. 21 sq.; editions of, Acts vi.; the epistles in, Matt. 27; various readings of Greek text of, 2b. xix. sq.; historical books of, 2b. 24 sq.; idiom of, Rom. 18 sq., Rev. 49 sq.; introduction to, Matt. 1, 20 sq., 36; manuscripts of, 2b. xix. sq., Acts vii., 84; name of, Matt. 20; its relation to the Old Testament, 2b. 13 sq., 39, 73, 78, 101, Mark 16, Luke 58, 118, John 76, 80, 197, 323, Acts 157, Rom. 69 sq., 129, 138, 1 Cor. 229, 2 Cor. 60 sq., Eph. 119, 147, Col. 58, Heb. 40 sq., Jas. 8, 1 Pet. 19, 36, 1 John 56, Rev. 3; its origin, Matt. 20 sq.; prophetic portion of, 2b. 23; writers of, 2b. 20, Note.

New Year's Day, reflections for, Luke 43.

Newspapers, religious, Eph. 232.

NICODEMUS, John 122 sq., 599.

Nicotitales, 2 Pet. 29, Rev. 28, 116.

NICOLAS, Acts 105, Rev. 116, 120.

Nicopolis, Luke 390, Tit. 23.

NIGER, Acts 239.

Night, Roman division of, the, Luke 204; traveling by, Matt. 59; works of the, Rom. 409; figurative use of the term by Christ, John 307, 313, 343; symbolism of, Rev. 19, 33.

Night-watches, Luke 204.

Nine, symbolism of the number, Rev. 15.

Nineveh, ruins of, Luke 298.

NOAH, preaching of, 1 Pet. 67; time of, typical, 2b. 64.

Nobility, Christian, Acts 318 sq., 320.

Normal, proper use of the word, Rev. 98, Note.

NOVALIS, quoted, Matt. 331, John 67, Note.

Novatianism, Matt. 246, 490, Mark 29.

Number of the beast, Rev. 258, 260 sq., 271 sq.

Numbers, symbolism of, Matt. 25, 28, 49, 87, 183, 236, 333, Luke 166, Rev. 14 sq., 29, Note; works on, Matt. 183 sq.

NUMIDIUS, martyr of Carthage, Acts 270.

O Mother dear, Jerusalem! Rev. 391, Note.

Oaths, Christ's opinion of, Matt. 116; duty of Christians respecting, 2b. 116, 144, 145 sq.; divine example in regard to, Heb. 121 sq., 124, Rev. 229; Scripture doctrine concerning, Thess. 35; perversion of, by the Jews, Matt. 116 sq.; Paul's use of, 2 Cor. 25, Gal. 29 sq.; use of among the Pharisees, Matt. 412; error of Quakers and others respecting, 2b. 116; sinful use of, Jas. 137, 144, 145 sq.; ungodly, Mark 59.

Obedience to God, inculcated by Christ, Matt. 397, Luke 307; the only true nobility, Matt. 332; perfect, required, Luke 174.

— to civil authority, Matt. 397, Luke 307, Acts 75, 77, Rom. 398 sq., 401 sq., 1 Pet. 40, 42.

— to parents, Eph. 210, 213 sq., Col. 76.

Obscurity of Scripture, 2 Pet. 51.

ODOACER, reign of, Rev. 206, Note.

Offence, giving of, Matt. 324, Rom. 419 sq., 429, Jas. 102, 107; avoided by Christ, Matt. 319, 320; the cross of Christ as, 1 Cor. 40, 41.

Offences, necessity of, Luke 259, 261; in word, Jas. 102, 107; by hand and foot, Matt. 324, 326, Mark 90.

Office and officer, distinct, Matt. 409, Acts 410.

Office, apostolic, institution of, Matt. 326.

Officers in the primitive church, Phil. 12, Thess. 90, 96.

Officers in the church ordained by Christ, Eph. 156; duties pertaining to, Matt. 326, Eph. 157; their relation to spiritual gifts, 1 Cor. 280; gradation in, John 642; in primitive church, Rom. 384 sq., Eph. 156, Note, Tim. 42, 1 Pet. 87.

Oil, use of among Eastern nations, Mark 56; anointing with, see Anointing; typical meaning of, Matt. 438.

Ointment, Matt. 463, 1 John 77; use of in embalming, Mark 156; as symbol of the Spirit, 1 John 85.

Old man, the, Rom. 203, 207, Eph. 163.

Old Testament, the, connection of Apocrypha with, Matt. 13, 14, 209; canon of, Jas. 4; Christ's regard for, Luke 314; his relation to, 2b. 75, John 607; its types and prophecies of Christ, Matt. 304 sq.; the Christian religion built on, 2b. 253, Jas. 6; commentaries on, Matt. 7, 19; difficulties to be explained, 2b. 230; divisions of, 2b. 14; error respecting, Rom. 155; eschatology of, 2b. 287, Rev. 45; called the religion of the future, Rev. 3; its teachings concerning immortality, Luke 310 sq.; inspiration of, Rom. 114, 1 Cor. 229, Tim. 107, 109; rich in promises for the Jews, Rom. 435; John the Baptist the representative of, Matt. 72 sq., Mark 16; its relation to the law, Gal. 98 sq.; called the old marriage, Eph. 208; its relation to the New Testament, Matt. 13, 21, 73, 78, 101, Mark 16, Luke 58, 118, John 76, 80, 197, 323, Rom. 59 sq., 129, 138, 401 sq., 1 Cor. 229, 2 Cor. 60 sq., 119, Eph. 119, 147, Col. 58, Heb. 40 sq., Jas. 89, 1 John 56, 1 Pet. 19, 36; Paul's treatment of, Gal. 122; symbolism of, Matt. 7, 278, Tim. 23, Heb. 154; undervalued, Tim. 110; unity of, Rev. 8.

Old things passed away, 2 Cor. 98.

Oleaster, see

Olive tree, wild, Rom. 367, 374, Rev. 21, 230.

Olives, Mount of, Matt. 105, 422, Acts 18.

OMEGA, title given to Christ, Rev. 93, 364.

Omission, sins of, Matt. 419, Jas. 121, 123.

Omnia, Matt. 164, Luke 136.

Omnipotence of God, Acts 81, Eph. 133.

Omniscience of Christ, John 160.

One, symbolism of the number, Rev. 14.

ONESIMUS, Col. 82 sq., Philom. 4 sq., 21, 24.

Onesiphorus, Tim. 68.

Opinions, diversity of, how remedied, Rom. 428; of others, regard for, 1 Cor. 189, Thess. 71.

Opposition of the world to the gospel, Acts 74.

Ordeal for the work of believers, 1 Cor. 78, 78.

Order, in the church, Matt. 328; in God's proceedings, Heb. 106; in prayer, Eph. 67, Col. 29; of salvation, Acts 53, 258.

Ordinances, how saving, Rom. 206 sq.; of ceremonial law, Heb. 154; Jewish, relative to meats, Matt. 278; symbolic, 2b. 217.

Ordination to the ministry, Acts 403, 447, Tim. 89; sermons for, Thess. 36.

Ordo salutis, Acts 258.

Organism, proper definition of, 1 Cor. 253, Note.

Oriental, custom of, see Customs; profanity of, Matt. 117.

ORIGEN, quoted, John vi.

Original sin, Matt. 50, 325 sq., Rom. 178, Note, 191 sq., Eph. 70; controversy respecting, Acts 363; theories of, Rom. 191 sq.; works on, 2b. 191.

Ornaments of women, Tim. 33, 1 Pet. 52, 55.

Orphan House at Halle, 2 Cor. 155.

OVID, quoted, 1 Pet. 76.

Paintings, see Art.

Paganism, origin of, Acts 287.

Palace of Herod, Matt. 502, 513.

Palatium, flowers of, Matt. 134, 266; its government, 2b. 508; grass of, 2b. 134, 266; honey of, Luke 397; lakes of, 2b. 77; language spoken in, Acts 396; population of, Luke 49; rain in, Jas. 135; seasons in, Matt. 266, Luke 35 sq., 354; rocky soil of, Matt. 239; waters of, Luke 77.

Palm Sunday, Matt. 533.

Palm-tree, John 377, Rev. 190.

Palsy, derivation of the word, Matt. 153; nature of the disease, 2b. 66.

Pamphylus, Acts 248.

Panacea, Matt. 294, Luke 140.

Panlus, Mt., Matt. 294, 306.

Pantheism, Acts 323.

Pantheistic theory of original sin, Rom. 191.

Papacy, the, see Rom. Cath. Church.

PAPIAS, his testimony to John's Gospel, John 26.

Paphos, Acts 242, 243 sq.

Parables, definitions of the term, Matt. 234, Luke 129, 334, John 317, Rev. 12; constituent elements of, Matt. 234; characteristics of, 2b. 353, John 317; use of among Master-nations, 2b. 234, Luke 129.

Parables of Christ, classified, Matt. 234 sq.; their connection, 2b. 235 sq., Mark 41 sq.; contra exhibited in, Matt. 236; object of, 2b. 234, 235; their prophetic character, Luke 130; list of those only in Luke's Gospel, 2b. 129;

- in the sermon on the Mount, ib. 107 sq.; the seven relating to the kingdom of heaven, Matt. 23, 235 sqq., 251; the two debtors, Luke 12, 124; the rich fool, ib. 199 sq.; the barren fig tree, ib. 212 sq.; the sower, Matt. 239 sqq.; Mark 42 sq.; Luke 127 sqq.; the tares, Matt. 244, 246 sq.; 149; the grain of mustard-seed, ib. 245, 247 sq.; 249 sq.; Luke 215; the leaven, Matt. 245, 248, 250, Luke 215; the hid treasure, Matt. 251 sqq.; the pearl of great price, ib. ib.; the net in the sea, ib. ib.; the king and his two servants, ib. 333 sq.; the good Samaritan, Luke 173 sq.; the great supper, ib. 226 sq.; the lost sheep, Matt. 325, Luke 234 sqq.; the lost piece of money, Luke 235 sq.; the prodigal son, ib. 238 sqq.; the unjust steward, ib. 244 sq.; rich man and Lazarus, ib. 253 sqq.; unjust judge, ib. 270 sqq.; Pharisee and publican, ib. 273 sqq.; laborers in the vineyard, Matt. 352 sqq.; the pounds, Luke 289 sqq.; the two sons, Matt. 386; the wicked husbandmen, ib. 396 sqq.; Mark 117 sq.; Luke 302 sqq.; marriage of the king's son, Matt. 389 sqq.; faithful and unfaithful servants, ib. 435, Luke 213 sqq.; servants waiting, Mark 132 sq.; the virgins, Matt. 437 sqq.; the talents, ib. 442 sqq.
- Parables, John 440 sqq.; 2 Cor. 11, 1 John 44.
- Paradise, Luke 254, 256, 257, 2 Cor. 205, Rev. 23.
- Paradoxical sayings of Christ, key to the, Matt. 160.
- Parallelisms, Matt. 251.
- Paralysis, nature of, Mark 152, Luke 86, 87.
- Parents, duties of, 1 Cor. 165, Eph. 212 sqq., Col. 76; duties of children to, Eph. 210, 212 sqq., Col. 76; faith of, Mark 85.
- PARKER, T., quoted, Luke 40.
- Participation of Christ in human suffering, Heb. 99.
- Participle, Greek Aorist, uses of, Heb. 52 sq.
- Partridges of friends, Acts 385, 386, 387.
- Party spirit, always contentious, Rom. 98, 103; not allowable in the Christian church, 1 Cor. 32, 71, 80 sqq., Phil. 37.
- Passion of Christ, the, various accounts of, compared, Matt. 453 sqq.; peculiarities of Luke's account of, Luke 330 sqq.; peculiarities of Mark's account of, Mark 137 sqq.; predicted by Christ, Matt. 360 sqq., Mark 103 sqq., Luke 221 sqq., 281 sqq.; chronology of, Matt. 464 sqq., Luke 366; chief points in history of, Matt. 529; works on, ib. 458.
- Pastors, evil, Rom. 86 sq., Eph. 172; of sins, Rom. 221, 223.
- Passover, the Jewish, Matt. 459, Heb. 192; ceremonies of, Matt. 468, 469, Luke 335; celebration of at the present day, Matt. 468; celebrated by Christ, ib. 454 sqq., 468, Luke 332 sqq.; Christ's modification of, Matt. 469 sqq., Luke 332 sqq.; its relation to the Lord's Supper, Matt. 472, 473, Mark 141; number present at, Matt. 460; regulations respecting, Luke 48 sqq., John 415; its significance, Matt. 453, 473; its symbolic meaning, ib. 470 sqq., Mark 141, 1 Cor. 115, 118; time of, Matt. 368, 459, 468, John 562.
- Pastoral Epistles, the, analysis of, Rom. 24 sq.; characteristics of, Tim. 1; genuineness of, ib. 2; their importance, ib. 6; works on, ib. 7 sq.
- Pastoral Mirror, Acts 378, Thess. 34.
- Pastoral office, the, Christ's relations to, John 325; instructions for, Acts 378 sqq.; nature and duties of, Matt. 326, Eph. 118 sqq., 150, 1 Pet. 86 sqq.
- Pastoral visits, Acts 209.
- Pastorals, Matt. 32.
- Patara, Acts 383.
- Patience, Rom. 162, 168, Gal. 145, Thess. 16, Rev. 103; God the author of, Rom. 433, 436; of Christ, Thess. 151, 153, 1 Pet. 46.
- Patmos, John 11 sq., Rev. 103.
- Patristicism, Matt. 268.
- PAUL, the Apostle, biographical sketch of, Rom. 3 sqq.; chronology of his life, Acts 178 sqq., Rom. 6, 7; name of, Acts 174, 243, 245, Rom. 8, 57 sqq., Eph. 19; his birth and education, Rom. 4, 6 sqq.; his citizenship, Acts 308, 405; his trade, ib. 334 sqq., 338, Rom. 4; a member of the Cilician synagogue, Acts 109; zealotry of, ib. 106; persecutes the Christians, ib. 140, 161 sqq.; his walk in Judaism, Act. 20; his conversion, Acts 162 sqq., 180, 899, 401, 441 sqq., Rom. 4 sqq., Tim. 22, 23; his baptism, Acts 170, 171, 400, 402; his preparation for the apostleship, Rom. 6, 9, Gal. 27 sqq.; his journey to Arabia, Acts 178 sqq., Rom. 6, 9, Gal. 25 sqq.; escape from Damascus, Acts 179 sqq., 2 Cor. 190; called to be an apostle, Acts 160, 171, 239 sqq., Rom. 7, Gal. 11, 13 sqq., 25, 28 sqq., Tit. 6; his work to be among the Gentiles, Acts 169, 171, Rom. 6, 9; visits Jerusalem, Acts 181 sqq., Gal. 26; goes to Tarsus, Acts 182, Gal. 27; his journeys to Jerusalem, Gal. 33; his missionary tours, Acts 239, 294, 344, Rom. 7 sqq., 440 sqq.; visits Antioch, Acts 218; second visit to Jerusalem, ib. 222, Gal. 33; his first missionary journey, Acts 239 sqq., 242 sqq.; labors in Cyprus, ib. 242 sqq.; rebukes Elymas, ib. 242 sqq.; his address at Antioch of Pisidia, ib. 249 sqq.; driven thence, ib. 258; preaches at Iconium, ib. 262; driven thence, ib. ib.; heals cripple at Lystra, ib. 265 sqq.; is there stoned, ib. 267, 270; preaches in Derbe, ib. 271; returns to
- Antioch, ib. 271 sqq.; third visit to Jerusalem, ib. 275 sqq.; address to the church council, ib. 280; returns to Antioch, ib. 293; controversy with Peter, Gal. 45 sqq., 53 sqq.; second missionary journey begun, Acts 294 sqq.; his dismission with Barnabas, Mark 5 sqq., Acts 295 sqq.; his judgment of Mark, Acts 295 sqq.; goes through Asia Minor, ib. 297 sqq.; associates Timothy with him, ib. ib.; visits Galatia, ib. 298, Gal. 2, 106 sqq.; receives a vision at Troas, Acts 303, 310; visits Philippi, ib. 303 sqq.; his imprisonment and release, ib. 306 sqq., 309; his labors in Thessalonica, ib. 316, 318 sqq.; in Berea, ib. 316 sqq.; visits Athens, ib. 322 sqq.; his address on Mars' Hill, ib. 323 sqq.; visits Corinth, ib. 334 sqq., 1 Cor. 7, 2 Cor. 212; visits Ephesus, Acts 242, 343, 1 Cor. 330; goes to Caesarea, Acts 342; fourth visit to Jerusalem, ib. 342 sqq.; third missionary journey, ib. 344 sqq.; preaches and works miracles at Ephesus, ib. 342 sqq.; second journey to Macedonia and Greece, ib. 359, 367; visits Troas, ib. 367 sqq.; restores Eutychus, ib. 368 sqq.; his farewell address to the Ephesian elders, ib. 373 sqq.; goes from Miletus to Caesarea, ib. 383 sqq.; prophecy of Agabus concerning, ib. 384 sqq.; last visit to Jerusalem, ib. 389 sqq.; takes part in a vow, ib. 390; attacked by Jews, ib. 394; his defence before the people, ib. 398 sqq.; arrested, ib. 404 sqq.; his defence before the Sanhedrin, ib. 407 sqq.; conspiracy against, ib. 414 sqq.; is sent to Caesarea, ib. 415; accused before Felix, ib. 419; his addresses before Felix, ib. 420 sqq., 426 sqq.; imprisoned at Caesarea, ib. 429; accused before Festus, and appeals to Caesar, ib. 430 sqq.; his address before Agrippa, ib. 440 sqq.; journey from Caesarea to Rome, ib. 454 sqq.; shipwrecked at Malta, ib. 466 sqq.; arrival at Rome, ib. 470, 473; conference with Jews there, ib. 473 sqq.; his imprisonment at Rome, ib. 473, Rom. 9 sqq., Tim. III., 5, Phil. 20; his opposers at Rome, Phil. 22, Note; traditional journey to Spain, Rom. 11, Note, 12, 441, Acts 478; later history of, Acts 478; his fate, ib. ib., Rom. 11, Tim. 118 sqq.; perils of, 2 Cor. 13 sqq.
- his brotherly affection, Gal. 14; his regard for Apollos, Acts 347; his relation to the other apostles, Acts 22, 171, Gal. 14, Note, 41, Eph. 23; personal appearance of, 2 Cor. 168; his boasting, ib. 186 sqq.; care of the churches, Col. 49; his character, Rom. 6, 12 sqq., Tim. 83 sqq., Philm. 25 sqq.; his acquaintance with classical literature, Acts 325, Rom. 184, Note, 1 Cor. 331, Tit. 11; his consistency, Acts 369; his relation to the Corinthian church, 1 Cor. 6 sqq., 8, 28; his devotional life, Thess. 18; his holy disposition, Acts 395 sqq.; relation to the Ephesian church, Eph. 11 sqq.; his disease of the eyes, Gal. 107; his conception of God, Col. 27; handwriting of, Gal. 167; contrasted with Herod, Acts 267 sqq.; his Christian hope, Tim. 114; his humility, Thess. 10; imagery of, 2 Cor. 63; alleged inconsistency of, Acts 299 sqq.; inspiration of, 2 Cor. 184, Note; contrasted with James, Rom. 145, Jas. 28 sqq., 87 sqq.; with John, John 9, 14; his labors and sufferings, 2 Cor. 187 sqq.; his practice of writing letters, 1 Cor. 356; his liberty of conscience, Acts 391; compared to Luther, ib. 177, 411, 417; his miracles, ib. 265, 267 sqq., 303, 409, 853 sqq., 368, 369, 467 sqq.; his missionary method, Rom. 9 sqq.; moral greatness, Phil. 26; his oaths, Rom. 68, Gal. 29 sqq.; his treatment of the Old Testament, Gal. 122; perseverance of, Phil. 58; his self-drawn portrait, 1 Cor. 191; his prayers and thanksgivings, Phil. 69; his method of preaching, Acts 318, 319, 1 Cor. 50 sqq.; a model for preachers, Rom. 66, 1 Cor. 53 sqq.; as a prophet, Rom. 370; the prototype of Protestantism, Gal. 14, Note; his prudence and ability, Acts 461; revelation to, Gal. 23 sqq., 27 sqq.; salutations of, Rom. 57, 64, 446, 450, Phil. 76, Philm. 12; self-censur of, 1 Cor. 181; self-support of, Thess. 33; possibly acquainted with Seneca, Phil. 76, Note; his social nature, 2 Cor. 124 sqq.; as a public speaker, ib. 179 sqq.; his sufferings, ib. 187 sqq.; his thorn in the flesh, 1 Cor. 200 sqq.; vindication of himself, 2 Cor. 194; visions of, ib. 196 sqq.; his views respecting woman, Rom. 447; works on, ib. 14, 1 Cor. 19.
- Epistles of, apocryphal, Rom. 16; their authenticity, ib. 16 sqq.; characteristics of, ib. 17 sqq.; contents of, ib. 15 sqq.; hard things in, 2 Pet. 49, 51; lost one, 1 Cor. 7; their historical order, Rom. 14 sqq.; style of, ib. 18 sqq., 25 sqq.; theology of, ib. 27; their organic unity, ib. 19; works on, ib. 14, 27 sqq.
- Peace, God the author of, Rom. 443, 444; Christ the prince of, Matt. 372, 373; not brought by Christ to the old earth, ib. 198; Christ our, Eph. 102; in the church, Thess. 91; when not desirable, Acts 278; with God, Rom. 160, 167 sqq.; its relation to grace, Rom. 64, 1 Cor. 21, Eph. 24, 234, Thess. 11; living in, Rom. 396; Melancthon's maxim respecting, Acts 286; salutation of, ib. 293, Thess. 11, 1 Pet. 13; of Christ, John 502, 503; of God, Phil. 67, 70, Thess. 98; of Christ and of the world contrasted, John 446.

Peacemakers, Matt. 103.
Pearls, Matt. 139; the twelve, Rev. 203; symbolism of, ib. 382.
Pederasty, Rom. 87.
Pedigree, sacred, conferred no personal holiness, Matt. 51.
Pelagianism, Rom. 139, 191.
Pella, locality of, Matt. 338; flight of Christians to, ib. 425; church at, John 10 sq.
Penance not repentance, Matt. 73.
Penny, Matt. 195, 332, 352 sq., 355 sq., 463, Mark 60.
Pentecost, day of, Acts 26, 1 Cor. 302; the birthday of the church, Acts 63; two-fold significance of, ib. 29; descent of the Holy Spirit on, ib. 27 sq.; gift of tongues at, ib. 29, 31 sq., 1 Cor. 302.
People, the, aristocratic contempt for, John 263; fickleness of, Matt. 515, 517; compared to the sea, ib. 93, 272, 324, 410, John 137, Jas. 39, Rev. 17 sq., 33 sq., 197; voice of, not a safe guide, Luke 367.
People of Christ, fed by him, Matt. 268; their number small, ib. 242.
Perraz, Matt. 91, 96, 337 sq., Mark 95.
Perfection of Christ, Acts 277, Heb. 107.
Perfection, Christian, elements of, Heb. 134; erroneous ideas of, Thess. 99, 1 John 41, 108; endurance necessary to, Jas. 43; progress toward, Phil. 17; its attainment, apparently impossible, Heb. 119, 1 John 108 sq.; not to be looked for in this world, 1 John 41; to be striven after, Matt. 118, 119, Heb. 112; only attainable in Christ, Thess. 98 sq.
Perga, Acts 248.
Pergamus, Rev. 118, 409.
Peripatetic, works on the, Matt. 31, 36.
Persecution, anticipated by Christ, Matt. 188, 424, Mark 130 sq.; Christ's sympathy in, Col. 37; present exemption of the church from, Rev. 179, Note; effect and value of, Acts 74, 140, 216 sq., 224, 239, 310, Thess. 54, 1 Pet. 61; flight from, when allowable, Matt. 192 sq., Acts 263; necessity of, Gal. 132; for political reasons, Acts 309, 318; religious bodies always leaders in, Matt. 189; under edict of Caracalla, Rev. 173, Note; under Diocletian, ib. 177, Note; at Jerusalem, Acts 139 sq.; in Middle Ages, Matt. 189; by Rom. Cath. Church, Rev. 228.
Perseverance, in Christian life, Rom. 162, Phil. 68; in prayer, Luke 180 sq., 271 sq.
Perseverance of the saints, Luke 232 sq., John 238, 331, Note, Rom. 168, 275, 389, 374, 1 Cor. 25, 26, 200, 201, Eph. 60, 172, Note, 174, Col. 201, Heb. 114 sq.
Persians, spread of Christianity among the, Matt. 61.
PERSIS, Rom. 448.
Person of Christ, divine and human nature in, Acts 48 sq., 1 John 33 sq.; three-fold relation of, Col. 27 sq.; considerations respecting, Phil. 33 sq., 37 sq.
Personality of God, Luke 380, 2 Pet. 15.
 ——— of the Holy Spirit, Acts 87, 290 sq.
 ——— of Satan; see Satan.
Persons, respect of, Rom. 99, Jas. 74 sq., 78.
Perspective view of prophecy, Matt. 430 sq.
Perversion of religious life, Matt. 127, 138.
Pestilence, Rev. 174, Note.
PETER, SIMON, biographical sketch of, 1 Pet. 3 sq.; his name, Matt. 93, 182, Mark 37, 2 Pet. 10; named by Christ, John 83 sq.; a native of Bethsaida, Matt. 158, 1 Pet. 3; his marriage, Matt. 158, Mark 23 sq.; healing of his wife's mother, Matt. 158, Mark 23, Luke 78; call of, Matt. 93, Mark 20, Luke 81 sq., John 93 sq.; chosen an apostle, Matt. 181 sq., Mark 37, Luke 96 sq.; walks on the water, Matt. 271 sq.; his confession of Christ, Matt. 293 sq., Mark 78 sq., Luke 149; at the transfiguration, Matt. 307, 310, Mark 80 sq., Luke 153, 2 Pet. 19; rebukes and is rebuked, Matt. 302; his denial of Christ, ib. 497 sq., Mark 146 sq., Luke 341 sq., 353 sq., John 553 sq.; wounds Malchus, Matt. 486, 487, John 546 sq.; his repentance, Matt. 499, Mark 147, Luke 355; his visit to Christ's tomb, John 604 sq.; appearances of Christ to, Luke 393, John 630 sq., 1 Cor. 310; questions and commands of Christ to, John 638 sq.; his martyrdom foretold, ib. 640, 642; re-instated in the ministry, ib. 642; his first address to the disciples, Acts 20; his address on the day of Pentecost, ib. 39 sq.; heals a lame man, ib. 62 sq.; second address, ib. 67 sq.; arrest of, ib. 72 sq.; his address before the Sanhedrin, ib. 80; rebukes Ananias and Sapphira, ib. 85 sq.; visits Samaria, ib. 146; rebukes Simon Magus, ib. 147 sq.; visits congregations in Judea, ib. 185 sq.; heals Eneus, ib. 186, 189; raises Tabitha, ib. 187 sq.; his vision at Joppa, ib. 194 sq.; visits Cornelius, ib. 200 sq., 209; address to congregation at Caesarea, ib. 202 sq.; reproved by the church at Jerusalem, ib. 211 sq.; arrested by Herod, ib. 227 sq., 233 sq.; his miraculous deliverance, ib. 228 sq., 232; his address to the church council, ib. 279 sq.; rebuked by Paul, Gal. 45 sq., 63 sq.; visits Rome, Rom. 30, 1 Pet. 4 sq.; legend respecting, John 427, Note.
 ———, sudden changes in, Matt. 302, Gal. 46; his character, ter, Luke 96; Christ's care for, ib. 78 sq.; his confidence, Matt. 272; his party in the Corinthian church, 1 Cor. 8 sq., 28 sq.; apostolic development of, Matt. 307 sq., Luke 79 sq.; humility of, Matt. 364; his infallibility not proven, ib. 300; contrasted with John, John 4, 8 sq.; with Judas, Matt. 499, Mark 147, John 4, 8 sq.; his relation to Mark's gospel, Mark 6 sq., 62, 157; miracles of, Acts 62 sq., 90, 186; primacy of, Matt. 182, 293, 296 sq., 300, 327, 329, 366, Mark 79, Luke 97, 340, John 234, Acts 19, 147, Gal. 41; his rashness, Matt. 319, 320; his conduct under reproaches, Acts 213 sq.; not exempt from reproach, Matt. 329; his self-will, John 408, 416; his truthfulness, Matt. 364; an image of the weak in faith, ib. 273; his zeal, John 546.

———, Epistles of, Rom. 1 sq., Jas. 6 sq.

———, First Epistle of, analysis of, 1 Pet. 5 sq.; its characteristics, ib. 6 sq.; its contents, ib. 5 sq.; date of composition, ib. 9; its genuineness, ib. 8; readers of, ib. 7 sq.; parallels with Ep. to the Romans, ib. 7; its scope, ib. 5; works on, ib. 9 sq.

———, Second Epistle of, analysis of, 2 Pet. 3 sq.; its contents, ib. ib.; date of composition, ib. 8; its genuineness, ib. 4, 22; its relation to Ep. of Jude, ib. 7, Jude 7 sq.; object of, 2 Pet. 3; works on, ib. 8.

PHARAOH, God's dealings with, John 397, Rom. 314 sq., 331 sq.

Phariseism, Luke 275, Rom. 139.

Pharisees, the, description of, Matt. 70 sq.; blasphemy of, ib. 177; their hostility to Christ, Matt. 218, 225, 276, 338, 403 sq., Mark 31, 32, 64, 74 sq.; reproved by Christ, Matt. 225 sq., 408 sq., Mark 128, Luke 190 sq.; exorcism of, Matt. 224; hypocrisy of, ib. 139, 289 sq.; reproved by John, ib. 225; leaven of, Luke 196; their disputes on marriage and divorce, Matt. 338 sq.; compared with Sadducees, ib. 409; schools of, ib. 338; washings of, Mark 64 sq., Luke 190.

PHEBE, Rom. 446 sq.

Phenice, Acts 216.

Philadelphia, Rev. 128, 132, 409.

Philanthropy, Christian, Luke 174, Jas. 67, 68.

PHILEMON, Philem. 4 sq.

———, Paul's epistle to, its aesthetic character, Philem. 7; analysis of, ib. 9, Rom. 25; eulogiums on, Philem. 7 sq.; its genuineness, ib. 1 sq.; contains substance of the gospel, ib. 26; its occasion and object, ib. 6; its position, ib. 1; its relation to slavery, ib. 29 sq.; time and place of composition, ib. 3 sq.; works on, ib. 8 sq.

PHILIP, the apostle, his name, Matt. 182; nativity of, ib. 158; calling of, ib. 182, John 94; his character, Luke 96; traditions respecting, John 94.

———, the evangelist, Acts 105, 142; his daughters, ib. 384, 386; his interview with the eunuch, ib. 155 sq.; miracles of, ib. 143; his preaching, ib. 142; his residence at Caesarea, ib. 384.

———, the tetrarch, Matt. 64, 282, 297, Luke 54.

Philippi, Acts 303 sq., Phil. 6, Philem. 6; conversion of the jailer at, Acts 307, 309; church at, Phil. 7.

Philippians, Paul's epistle to the, analysis of, Rom. 22 sq., Phil. 3 sq.; its author, Phil. 5; character and importance, ib. 4; time and place of composition, ib. 8; its unity, ib. 5; works on, ib. 8 sq.

PHILIPPUS, see Herod.

PHILO JUDEUS, quoted, John 61, 55 sq., Gal. 122, Note, Heb. 93, Note.

Philology, Biblical, works on, Matt. 7, 17.

Philosophers, heathen, sayings of, Matt. 166; their precepts compared with the gospel, Luke 105; knowledge of, Rom. 82, 84.

Philosophy, its relation to Christianity, Acts 337, 1 Cor. 42, 46, Note, Col. 49; of the Epicureans and Stoics, Acts 323, 327; of the Greeks, ib. 327; divine, 1 Cor. 64.

PHOENIX, wife of, 1 Pet. 55.

Phoenicians, Matt. 281.

PHOTINA, John 164.

Phrygia, Acts 298.

Phrygians, Col. 6 sq.

Phylactery, Matt. 410.

Picture of Christ, miraculous, Luke 140.

Piece of money, Matt. 319.

Pieces of silver, thirty, Matt. 464.

Pietism, Mark 29.

Pietz, apostolic, 1 Cor. 103; household, Tim. 83.

PILATE, PONTIUS, reign of, Luke 54; his character, ib. 360; his relations with Herod, ib. 362, 363; Herod compared to, Mark 58; Christ's trial before, Matt. 503, 512 sq., Mark 148 sq., Luke 359 sq., John 663 sq.; guilt of, John 563, 566, 568; his wife, Matt. 511 sq.

Pillar, symbolical meaning of, Rev. 29, 131.

Pinnacle of the temple, see Temple.

Piping at marriage dances, Matt. 208 sq.

Pit, bottomless, Rev. 195.

Place of honor, Matt. 363.

Plague at Carthage, conduct of Christians during, 11 & 40.

Plasma, doctrine of the, Rom. 203, Note, 207.

PLATO, quoted, Matt. 511 sq., Luke 373, Rom. 162, 1 Pet. 48, 55.

Pleading men, Gal. 20.

PLINY, quoted, Philom. 7, 25.

Plucking of grain allowed, Matt. 216.

Plural, used for singular, Matt. 303.

PLUTARCH, quoted, Rom. 101, 1 Pet. 65.

Pods, Luke 289.

Poetry sacred, Luke 39; its relation to Christianity, Matt. xi. sq.

Foots quoted:

Adam of St. Victor, John ix.;

Claudius, ib. 45.;

Cleanthes, Acts 325.;

Coleridge, Gal. 62, Note;

Cowper, Gal. 74, 131.;

Dante, Heb. 89.;

Epimenides, Tit. 9.;

Euripides, Rom. 105 sq.;

Goethe, see Goethe.;

Herbert, John 421, 548, 577, 601, Jas. 109.

Horace, 1 Cor. 331, Note;

Juvenal, John 355, Note;

Kebble, ib. 650.;

Klopstock, Rom. 96.;

Knapp, John 157, Note;

Lange, Matt. 219, Note;

Lenau, John 390, Note;

Milton, see Milton.;

Ovid, 1 Pet. 76.;

Pollock, Rev. 417.;

Rückert, Matt. 60, John 102, Note;

Schiller, Matt. 215, Acts 406, Rom. 90, 321, Note, Rev. 397, Note.

Shakespeare, Matt. 89, Luke 78, Rom. 162, Note;

Thes. 118, Note, Jas. 81.;

Sophocles, Rom. 101, 122.;

Strauss, John 60, Note;

Toplady, ib. 597.;

Venantius, Fortunatus, ib. 584.;

Virgil, Luke 255, Jas. 108.;

Watts, John 597.

Tit. 9.

Polity, church, Rom. 387.

POLLOCK, R., quoted, Rev. 417.

POLYCARP, quoted, Acts 163, 1 Cor. 13, Col. 60.

Polygamy, first instituted, Matt. 339; not approved by God, ib. 341, Eph. 206.

Pontus, 1 Pet. 12.

Pool of Bethesda, see Bethesda.

— of Siloam, see Siloam.

Poor, care for the, Thes. 158 sq., Tim. 61, Jas. 82 sq.; preaching to the, Luke 119; provisions in the early church for, 1 Cor. 354 sq.

Pope, the, claims of, 1 Pet. 87; considered as Antichrist, Thes. 134; secular power of, Rev. 261, Note; his downfall prefigured, ib. 296.

POPPAEA, Matt. 412.

Porch, Solomon's, John 330, Acts 66.

PORCIUS FESTUS, Acts 426, 430.

Pots, Mark 65.

Potters' field, Matt. 505.

Pound, Matt. 463, 536.

Poverty, not essentially evil, or meritorious, Jas. 78, 131; voluntary, Matt. 346; of Christ, 2 Cor. 141, 147; of monks, Matt. 346; of spirit, ib. 102.

Power, an attribute of Deity, Matt. 492; given to the apostles, ib. 181; spiritual, inherent in human nature, ib. 271; woman to have on the head, 1 Cor. 225; of God, 1 Cor. 39, Rev. 236; of the gospel, see Gospel; of the Keys, see Keys; of the Kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 106.

Powers, miraculous, Mark 161 sq., 163; of the air, Eph. 73.

Prætor, Acts 306.

Prætorium, Matt. 513, Phil. 20.

Praise of God, Matt. 379.

Prayer, Eph. 129 sq.; agreement in, Matt. 330; accompanying an accompaniment of, ib. 123; answers to, ib. 142, 146 sq., 232, Luke 181, Acts 82, 2 Cor. 205, Jas. 44, 111, 141 sq., 1 John 175, 177 sq., Rev. 204, Note; benefits of, Phil. 68; lawful to address Christ in, 2 Cor. 206; in the name of Christ, John 439, Thes. 120; inseparable from the Christian, Luke 181; confidence in, Matt. 143, 1 John 128, 170; when evil, Jas. 111; faith in, Matt. 381, Mark 114, Luke 283 sq., Jas. 44 sq.; fasting an accompaniment of, Matt. 123; forms of, ib. 124 sq.; an aid to growth in virtue, Acts 58; hours of, ib. 62, 197; subjective and objective influence of, Luke 180, James 44; need of instruction in, Luke 181, Rom. 276, 298 sq.; kinds of, Tim. 23; nature and qualities of, Matt. 146; need of, ib. 142, 179; order in, Col. 29, Eph. 67; Paul's estimate of, Thes. 18; perseverance in, Luke 180 sq., 271 sq.; all places suited for, Acts 310; posture in, Matt. 122, Acts 375, Eph. 129; power of, Acts 232, 234, Jas. 141 sq.; repetition in, Matt. 123; secret, ib. 45; help of the Spirit in, Rom. 276 sq.; unceasing, Thes. 92, 97; to be combined with watching, Eph. 228; a wrestling and striving, Rom. 443.

—, for those in authority, Tim. 28, 30, 31; for advanced Christians, Thes. 104; for the dead, Tim. 31, 90; for spiritual gifts, Luke 181; int. recovery, ib. 111, Eph. 228, Tim. 28, 30 sq., Jas. 138 sq., 1 John 170, 175 sq.; before meals, Matt. 266, Tim. 49; for ministers, Phil. 26; for the sick, Jas. 138 sq.

—, of the apostles, Acts 79 sq., 188 sq.; of the church, powerful, ib. 82; of Cornelius, ib. 192 sq., 196; of the high-priest, Heb. 102; of husbands and wives, 1 Pet. 54 sq.; of the Jews, Matt. 122; of the Pharisees, ib. 123, Luke 273 sq.; of the publican, Luke 274 sq.; of saints, Rev. 421; of Stephen, Acts 135 sq.; of two or three, Matt. 330.

—, Christ's resort to, Matt. 212, 272, Luke 57, 79, 95, 148, 179, 181, 329, John 525; his high-priestly, intercessory, John 511 sq., 524 sq.; works on, ib. 524; of Christ in the garden, Matt. 462, Mark 143 sq., Luke 346 sq., Heb. 105; on the cross, Luke 372 sq., 378, Heb. 105.

—, The Lord's, Matt. 122 sq., Luke 179 sq.; arrangement of, Matt. 123 sq.; its use as a formula, ib. 124, Luke 180; its resemblance to Jewish prayers, Matt. 125; called the greatest martyr, ib. 125, 128; number of petitions in, ib. 125; compared with the Beatitudes, ib. 124; made the occasion of strife, ib. 128; reference to the Trinity in, ib. 124; twice taught, ib. 45; value of, Luke 180, 181; works on, Matt. 130, Luke 180, 182.

Preachers, see Ministers.

Preaching, apostolic, 1 Cor. 68, Thes. 43 sq.; Christ's method of, Matt. 233 sq., Luke 73 sq.; ordained by Christ, Matt. 567 sq., 582 sq., Luke 400 sq.; Christ crucified the theme of, Gal. 64 sq.; by Christ to spirits in prison, 1 Pet. 63 sq., 66, 67 sq., 75; how the duty of all Christians, 2 Cor. 70; difficulties in, ib. 45; faith the end of, 1 Cor. 50, Col. 14; when acceptable to God, 1 Cor. 66; placed by Christ above healing, Mark 24; its importance, Rom. 349 sq.; of John the Baptist, Matt. 96 sq.; by laymen, Acts 140, 217; modes of, ib. 253 sq., 1 Cor. 43, 48, 156, 302, 2 Cor. 42, 50; motives to be used in, Phil. 36; opposition to, Acts 74; Paul's method of, 1 Cor. 50 sq.; preparation for, James 102, 105; a proof of the truth of the gospel, Gal. 64; compared to sowing, Matt. 241 sq.; women not to engage in, Tim. 35.

Pre-Adamic fall, theory of, Rom. 191 sq.

Precaution of Christ, John 241.

Predestination, see Election.

Pre-existence of souls, John 306.

Preparation, day of, Matt. 455 sq., 537, Luke 333, John 538.

— for an office, Heb. 106; for speaking, Matt. 190.

Presbyterate, institution of the, Acts 222, 1 Pet. 87.

Presbyteresses, Tim. 58 sq.

Presbytery, institution of the office of, Acts 222, 1 Pet. 87; duties of, Thes. 94, 1 Pet. 85; their relation to bishops, Acts 222, Thes. 90, Tim. 37, 1 Pet. 85.

Presently, Phil. 45.

Prevent, Matt. 318, Rom. 67.

Pride, Jas. 122, 1 Pet. 89 sq., 92; spiritual, 1 Cor. 99.

Priesthood, its origin, Heb. 102; nature, ib. 127 sq.; appointment to the, ib. 104.

— of Christ, Acts 206, Heb. 64, 120, 134, 136 sq., 1 John 47.

Priests, age of, Matt. 67, Luke 16, 62; classes of, Luke 15; their hatred of Christ, Matt. 502, Luke 300.

Primacy of Peter, see Peter.

Prince, Christ a, Acts 99.

— of the powers of the air, Eph. 73 sq.

PRISCAR, Rom. 446 sq., Tim. 118.

PRISCILLA, Acts 334, 341, 346, 1 Cor. 7.

Prisoners, released on feast-days, Matt. 610 sq.

Probation after death, Matt. 229.

Procession of the Holy Ghost, John 450, 460, Rom. 257.

Processions, bridal, Matt. 436 sq.

Proconsul, Acts 243.

Procurator, Matt. 603, Acts 243.

Profanity, Matt. 116 sq., Rom. 69, Jas. 137, 144, 145 sq.

Profession of faith, Tim. 75, 1 Pet. 69, 62.

Progress, in Christian life, Phil. 57, 1 Pet. 35, 2 John 193; in good and evil, 1 John 66.

Promise of faith, Rom. 155.

Promises, of Christ, Matt. 350; of God, Acts 29, Heb. 121 sq., 189, 1 John 177 sq.

Property, destruction of, by Christ, Matt. 391; in the church, ib. 345 sq.; held by the priests and Levites, Acts 61; its relation to theft, Eph. 174.

Prophecy, definition of, Rom. 384, Rev. 12, 78; curiosity respecting, Matt. 430; eschatological, Rev. 78 sq.; historical foundations of, Heb. 41; given by inspiration, 1 Pet. 21 sq.; nature of, Luke 253; in the New Testament,

Tim. 60; perspective and cynical views of, Matt. 430 sq., Rev. 47 sq.; probationary use of, 2 Pet. 22; real and verbal, Rev. 13; distinguished from revelation, ib. 5 sq.; should be studied, ib. 90; typical fulfillment of, Matt. 53, 63, 69 sq., 240, 249, 277, 372; unconscious, John 364, Note, 366 sq.; verbal fulfillment of, Matt. 53, 91, 377; works on, Matt. 6, 2 Pet. 23.

Prophecy of Agabus, Acts 384.

Prophecies respecting Christ, Matt. 220 sq., Luke 28, 46, 283, 392, 398, 478, John 118, 396, Acts 47 sq.; interpreted by the Holy Spirit, Matt. 221, Note; respecting John the Baptist, ib. 69 sq., 312; respecting destruction of Jerusalem, Luke 320.

Prophecy, Rev. 221.

Prophecy, gift of, Thess. 93.

Prophet, Christ as a, Acts 205; Paul as a, Rom. 370.

Prophets, compared with apostles, Rev. 42 sq.; of old and new covenant, Acts 222; duties of, ib. ib., 1 Cor. 257, 283, Eph. 149; false, Matt. 143 sq., R. v. 36; inspiration of, 2 Pet. 21 sq., Heb. 24; murderers of, Matt. 413; sepulchres of, ib. ib.; writings of, ib. 109; use of the term in Acts, Acts 221.

Prostitution of Christ, Rom. 252 sq., 263, 1 John 44 sq.; see Atonement.

Proprietor, Acts 243.

Proselytes, Jewish, Matt. 68, 355; of the gate, ib. 151, 156, 376, Mark 113, Luke 1; made by the Pharisees, Matt. 411 sq.; of righteousness, ib. 151, 376, Luke 1.

Proselyting spirit, Matt. 412.

Proselytism, Christian, Rom. 443, 447, Note.

Proseuche, Acts 304.

Protection, divine, Acts 416.

Protestantism, a charge against, Matt. 199.

Proverbs, definition of, Matt. 233 sq.; use of, by Christ, ib. 134, 243, Luke 73; of the Jews, Matt. 134.

Providence, divine, Matt. 65, 268, Luke 141; special, Luke 113 sq., 370.

Proving all things, Thess. 97 sq.

Prudence, Matt. 146, Eph. 37, 193.

Prussia, marriage laws of, Matt. 340, 341.

Psalm, Second, Acts 80, 81, Heb. 35 sq.; Twenty-second, Matt. 530; Sixty-eighth, Eph. 145; Ninetieth, Matt. 404 sq., Mark 125, Luke 313; One Hundred Ninth, Acts 20; One Hundred Tenth, Luke 313; One Hundred Eighteenth, Matt. 388, Luke 303.

Psalm, authorship of the, Matt. 404, Rom. 363; imprecatory, Rom. 363; Messianic, Luke 314; prophetic, Acts 20; their value to suffering Christians, Luke 314.

Pseudo-plasma, doctrine of, Rom. 203, Note, 207.

Psychology, Biblical, Matt. 404, Mark 123.

Psychopneustia, doctrine of, Matt. 401.

Ptolemaia, Acts 383.

Publicans, Matt. 118, 170; Christ's association with, ib. 329, Luke 335 sq.; John's advice to the, Luke 56; their reputation, Matt. 118, 329, 330, Luke 56.

PUBLIUS, Acts 467.

Punishment, capital, Matt. 485, 486, 487, 503, R. m. 400, 402, Rev. 166; Christian idea of, 2 Cor. 37; degrees of, ib. 85 sq.; by fire, Matt. 246, 247; in the future world, ib. 228, 334 sq., Rom. 189; the right of the Jews to inflict, John 563 sq.; Jewish laws of, Rom. 8; modes of among the ancients, Matt. 324, Acts 304; by stripes, Acts 306; future, degrees of, Matt. 211, Luke 205, 206, Rom. 99 sq., 99, 2 Cor. 85 sq.; eternity of, Matt. 228 sq., 334 sq., 450, Mark 91 sq., Rom. 189, Thess. 118, 122 sq.; nature of, Mark 90, 91 sq.; of the heathen, Matt. 229, Luke 206, Rom. 93.

Purgatory, doctrine of, arguments for and against, Matt. 228, 229, 334 sq., Luke 256, 376, 377, 1 John 40.

—, not Hades, 1 Pet. 71.

Purification, of the church, 1 Cor. 118; of the soul, Heb. 27, 1 Pet. 27, 29; Jewish law and rites of, Luke 44, 190, Acts 390, Heb. 27.

Purim, feast of, Mark 31, John 180.

Purity, Christian, Matt. 103, 2 Cor. 120, 1 John 95, 99.

Purple, Luke 253, Acts 305, Rev. 17.

Purposes of God, Matt. 225, 327, Luke 308, Rom. 278. See Election.

Puteoli, Acts 470.

PYRRHUS, anecdote of, 1 John 70.

PYTHON, Acts 805.

Quadragesima, Matt. 533.

Quakers, error of, Matt. 106, 110.

Quarantania, wilderness of, Matt. 81, Luke 65.

Quarrels in the church, Jas. 111.

Quaternion, Acts 228.

Queen of the south, Matt. 226.

Quenching the Spirit, Thess. 93, 97.

Questions, unnecessary, Luke 218; for self-examination, 1 Cor. 241.

QUIRINUS, PUB. SUL., census by, Luke 31 sqq.

Rabbi, Matt. 95, 410.

Rabbins, schools of, Matt. 115, Luke 49.

Raca, Matt. 113.

Race, the Christian, 1 Cor. 194 sq., 202 sqq.

RACHEL, lamentation of, Matt. 63, 65.

RAHAB, Matt. 49, 51, Jas. 87, 89 sq.

Raiment, white, Mark 81, Rev. 127, 167, 190.

Rain, symbolism of, Rev. 19.

Rainbow, symbolism of the, Rev. 16 sq., 19.

Ramah, Matt. 535.

Ramathaim, Luke 383.

Rank, dispute of disciples concerning, Matt. 365 sq., Luke 340, 343; in the church, Matt. 366.

Rationalism, original principles of, Mark 53; a vacuity of ideas, Eph. 53; controversy with, 2 Cor. 166, Note; its view of justification, Rom. 139.

Readings, various, of Greek Testament, Matt. xix. sq. See Textual Notes, passim.

—, of English versions of New Testament, Matt. 90, 92, 112, 121, 159, 170, 176, 184, 205, 208, 210, 212, 221, 241, 255, 261, 275, 298, 293, 301, 317, 318, 322, 332, 342, 352, 378, 385, 408, 420, 442, 447, 467, 477, 484, 485, 490, 501, 509, 510, 519, 535, 544, 551, 552, 555, Luke 11, 24, 30, 38, 44, 48, 61, John 102, 122, 268, 305, 353, 370, 404, 432, Acts 32, 45, 66, 66, 71, 92, 129, 134, 163, 226, 247 sq., 258, 271, 292, 316, 322, 334, 344, 359, 373, 426, 439, 453.

Realism in Christianity, 1 Cor. 98.

Realistic theory of original sin, Rom. 192.

Reason, right use of in religion, Thess. 132, 1 John 148 sq.; its relation to faith, Acts 318 sq., 320, 1 Cor. 64, Tim. 76; its relation to will, Eph. 165.

Rebuke, by ministers, 1 Cor. 102 sq.; public, Gal. 57; value of, 1 Cor. 26, 102 sq.

Reconciliation with God, Rom. 166 sq., 169, 2 Cor. 98 sq., 102, 104 sqq., Eph. 94, 102, Col. 24 sq., 28, 1 John 45.

Records, religious, Matt. 16.

Recreation, need of, Eph. 194, Note.

Red, symbolism of, Rev. 17.

Redemption, Mosaic law of, Luke 44.

Redemption, angels attendant on, Luke 40, Eph. 120, Tim. 66; angels not subjects of, Heb. 60 sq.; benefits of, Rom. 197; the blood of Christ essential to, Heb. 159, 1 Pet. 23, 25; connection with creation, John 59, Eph. 66, 120; elements in the work of, Matt. 366; end and aim of, Gal. 15, Col. 28 sq.; extent of, Gal. 60, 2 Pet. 25; from curse of the law, Gal. 69 sqq.; universal longing for, Rom. 270, 286; nature of, 1 Pet. 23; necessity for, Thess. 121; the eternal purpose of God, Heb. 62; results of, 1 Cor. 46 sq., 48, 118; God's scheme of, ib. 350; various views of, Matt. 366; according to God's will, Gal. 15; of the body, Rom. 274 sq.

Regeneration, relation of baptism to, see Baptism; only the beginning of a Christian life, 1 Pet. 35; distinguished from conversion, John 68, 123, 1 Pet. 29; elements of, John 123, 136; the work of God, Rom. 878 sq., Jas. 57 sq., 2 Pet. 14; gradual, Phil. 43; its relation to justification, Rom. 139; means of, 1 Pet. 28; nature of, John 123, 126; need of, Luke 108; terms for, in the New Testament, John 125; of the world, final, Matt. 349 sq.

Reign of Christ, mediatorial, 1 Cor. 323.

Relationships of Christ, John 586; among the apostles, Matt. 184.

Relatives of Christ, how far unbelieving, Matt. 231; his conduct towards, ib. ib.

Relics, Acts 354, 356.

Religion, Christian, defined, Mark 123, Jas. 67; cost of establishing, 2 Cor. 191, 193; compared with other systems, Matt. 15 sq.; judgment of the world upon, ib. 209; its relation to astronomy, ib. 58; exemplified in Christ, ib. 127; externalism and hypocrisy in, ib. 127, 138; indifference in, Acts 204; in married life, 1 Cor. 156, 166, 162; its relation to morality, Rom. 87; compatible with natural affections, ib. 455; right use of reason in, Thess. 132, 1 John 148 sq.; its relation to science, Rom. 330, Note; tends to secrecy, Matt. 127.

Religions, compared, Matt. 15; not all of equal value, Acts 204; how to be judged by Christianity, Matt. 127; records of, ib. 15.

Religious life, perversion of, Matt. 127.

—, longing of humanity, Rev. 3 sq.

—, newspapers, Eph. 232.

Remembrance of Christ in the Lord's Supper, 1 Cor. 238.

Remission of sins, Christ's death necessary to, Rom. 134, Heb. 159, 1 Pet. 23, 25. See Forgiveness.

REMPHAN, see Rophan.

RENAN, quoted, Luke 51, Note.

Rending the clothes, Matt. 492 sq., Mark 146.

Renewal, of the heart, 2 Cor. 102 sq.; of human nature, Eph. 165.

Renovation of the world, Matt. 349 sq.

Repentance, confession the result of, Acts 355, 357; its connection with faith, Luke 287, Acts 376, 381; false, marks of, Acts 152; fear a motive to, Thess. 66; its

- connection with forgiveness, Luke 400; fruits of, Acts 429; a gift of God, ib. 99; Greek words for, 2 Cor. 129, Note; preached by John, Matt. 69, 73; need of, Luke 218 sq.; not doing penance, Matt. 73; a condition of salvation, Acts 64 sq.; convenient season for, ib. 428; sought in vain, Heb. 205; of Judas, Matt. 503 sq., 506 sq.; of Peter, ib. 499, 504, 506, Mark 147, Luke 355.
- Repetitions in prayer, Matt. 123.
- REPAAN, Acts 124, 126.
- Reproach of Christ, Heb. 192.
- Reproaches, Christian reply to, Acts 403; of Christ, John 252.
- Reproof, Christian, Eph. 187 sq.; friendly, Jas. 145.
- Reservation, mental, John 242.
- Resistance to salvation, Eph. 50.
- Respect of persons, Rom. 99, Jas. 74 sq., 78.
- Responsibility, human, Matt. 357, 415; of gospel hearers, Heb. 45.
- Rest, promised by Christ, Matt. 214; heavenly, Heb. 84 sq., 88 sq.; of the Sabbath, John 185 sq.
- Restoration, of the Jews, Rom. 374, 377; of all things, final, Luke 256, 348, John 387, Note, Acts 69, 1 Cor. 316 sq., 321, Eph. 40 sq., Rev. 339, Note.
- Restriction not to be multiplied, Rom. 427, Note, 429.
- Resurrection of Christ, Matt. 540 sqq., Mark 1:6 sq., 159, 160, Luke 385 sqq., John 603 sqq.; accounts of, not harmonious, John 603; representation of, by art, Luke 388; its relation to the ascension, Mark 166, Luke 402, Acts 8; its agreement with his birth, Luke 387; the central truth of the gospel, Acts 439; historic certainty of, Matt. 546 sqq., 1 Cor. 311, 327; its effect on Christ, Luke 283, 387 sq.; predicted by Christ, Matt. 302, 304, 316 sq., Luke 151; inseparable from his death, Rom. 156, 158; its effect on the faith of the disciples, John 605; the first, Acts 443, 446, Col. 23; a triumph of God's power, Rom. 151; hymnology of, Luke 388; importance and significance of, Matt. 561 sq., Acts 9, 22, Rom. 61, 65, 1 Cor. 314, 322; nature of, Luke 387; Old Testament prophecy of, John 118, Acts 47 sq.; proven by Paul, Acts 253, 1 Cor. 312; Peter's testimony to, Acts 46 sq., 49; possibility of, Luke 387; power of, Phil. 54 sq.; lie of the Sanhedrin respecting, Matt. 552 sq.; its soteriological effect, ib. 548, witnesses to, Acts 8, 1 Cor. 410 sq.
- Resurrection of the dead, analogies to, 1 Cor. 342; assurance of, John 220, Rom. 61, 258; taught by the Bible, Matt. 401, Mark 121, Rev. 351, 352, 392, 433, 441, demonstrated by Christ, Matt. 399 sqq., Luke 309 sq., John 150, 192; Christ the pledge of, John 351, 357; illustrated by the creation of man, 1 Cor. 342; importance of the doctrine, Tim. 98; the Lord's Supper a pledge of, 1 Cor. 214; order of, Matt. 174, Thess. 14 sqq.; demonstrated by Paul, 1 Cor. 308 sqq., Tim. 99, Thess. 72 sqq.; the doctrine denied by Sadducees and others, Matt. 399 sq., Luke 309, Tim. 99, 101; early views of, Thess. 74.
- Resurrection body, the, 1 Cor. 336 sq.
- Resurrection of saints at Christ's death, Matt. 527 sq.
- Retaliation, law of, Thess. 121; divine right of, ib. 46.
- Retirement of Christ, Matt. 106, 221.
- Retribution, future, Matt. 236, Luke 211, Rom. 96 sqq., Thess. 121, Rev. 209.
- REURS, Prof., Acts vi, Note.
- Revelation, its advance gradual, Acts 49; the Apocalypse of John a, Rev. 77 sq.; inward character of, Rom. 352; Christ the central point of, Matt. 3, Acts 252; development of, Matt. 3, Rev. 4; forms of, Thess. 30; historical, ib. 45; history of, Matt. 2 sqq.; by nature, Rom. 63, 90; threefold nature of, ib. 82; need of, 1 Cor. 66, Eph. 119; a new one not to be expected, Thess. 30; objections to, Rom. 352; periods of, Matt. 3, Gal. 77, Heb. 30; distinguished from prophecy, Rev. 5 sq.; the spiritual and corporeal combined in, Acts 29; subjective and objective, Rev. 41 sq.; unity in the history of, Acts 133, Thess. 30.
- Revelation, Book of, Matt. 28, John 14 sq., 30, Rev. 1 sqq.
- Revenge, Rom. 394, 396, Thess. 92, 100, 1 Pet. 58, 60.
- Revision of the English Bible, Matt. xxi, 1 Cor. vi.
- Revival preachers, Eph. 232.
- Revolution, right of, Rom. 402.
- Rewards, of Christ's followers, degrees of, 2 Cor. 85 sq., Tim. 42; not to be demanded, Heb. 119; how far to be desired, Luke 105; consistent with free grace, Matt. 363, 367, Tim. 54; promised, Matt. 350 sq., Luke 204, 205, 279, 280; mentioned by John, John 449.
- of sin, Rom. 216.
- Rhodes, Acts 383.
- Rich, the salvation of, difficult, Matt. 345 sq.
- Rich young man, Matt. 344 sq., Luke 278 sq.
- Richa, site of Jericho, Matt. 369.
- Riches, belong to Christ, Matt. 344; contempt of, Luke 247; danger of, ib. 280; deceitfulness of, Matt. 241; distinctions caused by, Luke 256; loss of, Jas. 44; love of, Luke 249, 278 sqq., Eph. 181; parables concerning, Luke 249; not an absolute obstacle to salvation, Jas. 78, 131 sqq.; trusting in, Mark 101; right use of, Luke 247, 249, 253, 278 sq.
- Riches of God, Rom. 372.
- RIGHTER, J. P. F., quoted, Luke 79.
- RIGGENBACH, C. J., biographical notice of, Thess. viii.
- Right eye and hand, Matt. 115.
- Right hand of God, Christ at the, Rom. 291.
- Right divine of Kings, Rom. 398, Note, Tit. 22.
- Righteous man, Plato's, Matt. 511, Luke 873, Rom. 162, 1 Pet. 48.
- Righteous, the, Matt. 240, 247, Luke 235, Rom. 164 sq.
- Righteousness, armor of, 2 Cor. 110; by faith, Matt. 51, Rom. 341 sqq., Phil. 54, 57; fruits of, 2 Cor. 111 sq., Jas. 161 sq., ideas of, Rom. 333; imputed, Matt. 390 sq., Rom. 187 sq., 191 sq., 254, 2 Cor. 46 sq.; nature of, Matt. 102, 103, 1 John 106; its relation to sanctification, 1 Cor. 46, 47 sq.; self —, Luke 192, Rom. 342, 352; works of, 1 John 107; by works, see Works; of Abraham, Rom. 145 sqq., 156; of the Jews, ib. 353; of the law, ib. 343, Phil. 57; of life, Rom. 258.
- Righteousness of Christ, Matt. 200 sq., 390, John 475, Rom. 187 sq., 191 sq., 254, 2 Cor. 46, 47.
- Righteousness of God, John 524, Rom. 74 sqq., 125, 126, 129, 134, 2 Cor. 101, Thess. 116, 121, 2 Pet. 11, 1 John 34, 99 sq.
- Rings, Jas. 74.
- River of life, Rev. 883, 887.
- Rivers, of Damascus, Acts 170; Ganges and Strymon, ib. 304.
- Robbers, Matt. 524.
- Robe, purple, Matt. 514.
- Robes, white, Rev. 167, 176, 190.
- Rock, building on the, Matt. 145, 147 sqq., Luke 107, 108, 109; Christ the true, Matt. 145, 1 Cor. 197; the church built on a, Matt. 283, 296 sqq.; symbolism of the, Rev. 18, 34.
- Rock of Horeb, tradition respecting, 1 Cor. 197.
- Rock, testimony of the, Luke 256.
- Roman Catholic church, the, viewed as Antichrist, Thess. 134; its doctrine of assurance of salvation, Luke 170, Acts 150, 1 Cor. 82, 200, Tim. 90; its rites of baptism, Mark 70, 1 Cor. 33; massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day the work of, Matt. 284, Note; celibacy of the clergy in Matt. 359, Luke 79 sq., 311, 1 Cor. 144, 166; opinions of its commentators on the disobedience of the blind men, Matt. 177; confession of sins to the priests in, Jas. 141, 146, 1 John 37 sq., 40; corruption of, Luke 314, 2 Pet. 37; prayers for the dead in, Tim. 31, 90; its laws of divorce, Matt. 115, 339, 340, Luke 256; rite of extreme unction in, Mark 68, Jas. 140; its doctrine of Beating, Matt. 122, Luke 90; its doctrine of forgiveness of sins before Christ, Rom. 134, Note; Image-worship in, Acts 126 sq.; its doctrine of indulgences, Col. 34, 37; its interpretation of certain parables, Matt. 391, 392, 438, Note; its abuses of the Lord's Supper, 1 Cor. 245; laws of marriage and divorce in, Matt. 115, 119, 339, 340, Luke 256, Note, 207, Tim. 60; its dogmas respecting Mary, Matt. 523, 258, 259, Luke 21, 34; worship of Mary in, Luke 19, 185, John 108, Rom. 116, Tim. 31; persecutions by, Matt. 246, 264, Note, 498, Luke 344, Rev. 228; founded on Peter, Rom. 1 sq.; its doctrine of the primacy of Peter, Matt. 283, 296 sq., 399; the fall of Peter, type of, Matt. 499; succession of popes in, Matt. 293, Acts 20; its doctrine of voluntary poverty, Matt. 346; its doctrine of purgatory, ib. 228, 229, 334 sq., Luke 254, 376, 377, 1 John 40; worship of relics in, Acts 354, 355; worship of saints in, ib. 203 sq., 304, 368, Tim. 31; its views of the insufficiency of the Scriptures, Acts 157, 2 Pet. 51; its misinterpretation of Scripture, Matt. 119, Luke 344; its doctrine of self-righteousness, Luke 124, 170; appeals to the senses, John 475; service of, Rev. 386; supremacy of, Gal. 41; symbolized in the Apocalypse, Rev. 312, 309, 312; freedom of its clergy from taxation, Matt. 319; its doctrine of good works, ib. 122, 438, Note, Luke 123 sq., Rom. 121, 155.
- Roman citizens, rights of, Acts 307 sq., 405, 431.
- congregation of Christians, Rom. 30 sq.
- empire, Western, Rev. 261, Note.
- justice, Acts 436.
- philosophers, Rom. 82, 84.
- Romans, intolerance of the, Acts 308.
- Romans, Paul's epistle to the, its authenticity, Rom. 35; its characteristic, ib. v.; contents, ib. 39, 41 sq.; integrity, ib. 35 sq.; language, ib. 36; occasion, ib. 36 sq.; pericopes in, ib. 49; place and time of composition, ib. 59 sq.; significance, ib. 40 sq., 65; subject, ib. 77; works on, ib. 48 sqq.; seventh chapter of works on, ib. 224; eighth chapter of works on, ib. 286, 295 sq.; ninth chapter of works on, ib. 300, 334; grandeur of the last chapter, ib. 425, Note.
- Rome, symbolized by Babylon, Rev. 328, Note; its character, Rom. 73; Christians in, ib. 30 sq., 64; compared with Jerusalem, Acts 362; Jews in, Rom. 31 sq.; Paul at Acts 473 sqq., Rom. 9 sqq.; Peter's visit to, Rom. 30: its population, ib. 64.

 Room, upper, Mark 140, Acts 19.
 Root of David, Rev. 157.
 ROUSSEAU, J. J., quoted, Luke 40.
 RUBENKERT, F., quoted, Matt. 60, John 102, Note.
 Rudiments of Christianity, Heb. 113.
 — of the world, Gal. 96, 98, Col. 44.
 RUFUS, Mark 151, Rom. 447, 448.
 Rulers, divine right of, Rom. 398 sq., Tit. 23; obedience to, Acts 75, 77; of the church, their duties, Thesa. 90, 96.
 Rule, the Golden, Matt. 143, 146.
 Rules for right and wrong, Col. 165 sq.
 RUSKIN, J., quoted, John 160, Note.
 RUTH, faith of, Matt. 49, 51.

Sabara, Matt. 226.

Sabbath, the, use of the term in the Bible, Acts 281; Christ the Lord of, Matt. 217 sqq., Mark 32 sq., Luke 93 sq.; Christ charged with breaking, Matt. 216 sqq.; his example in regard to, John 188, 190; change of the day, Matt. 217, 247, Mark 35, John 604, 607, 621, 1 Cor. 355, Col. 53; hymn on, Matt. 219, Note; importance and necessity of, Col. 58; law of, Matt. 219; made for man, ib. 217, Mark 32, John 186; miracles of Christ on, Luke 93, 94; rules for its observance, Matt. 218 sq., Luke 94, John 185, Gal. 103; rest of, John 185; last of the Old Covenant, Luke 384; final, Heb. 89.

—, the Christian, fundamental ideas of, John 185; Jewish Sabbath law a preparation for, Matt. 218; obligation of, Rom. 418, Note.

—, the Jewish, abrogation of, Rom. 123; kept by the early Christians, Col. 53, Rom. 414, Note, 418; customs on, Luke 223; regard of the Jews for, ib. 369; law of, Matt. 218, Mark 32, John 243 sq.; observance of, Matt. 218, Mark 32, John 185, Gal. 106; relation of Sunday to, Matt. 547, Mark 36; travelling on, Matt. 425, Mark 32.

Sabbath-day's journey, Matt. 425, Mark 32, Acts 18, 23.

Sackcloth, Matt. 211, Rev. 230.

Sacraments, duality of, 1 Cor. 107; Paul's treatment of, Gal. 91; seals of faith, Rom. 149, 155, 156.

Sacred history, candor of, Acts 212 sq.

Sacrifice, of Christ, Eph. 178, Heb. 158 sq., 172, 1 John 33; of the godly, Rom. 389; in the mass, Heb. 169.

Sacrifices, disparagement of, Heb. 147; law of, subservient to the law of love, Matt. 219; significance and value of, Mark 92, Rom. 135, Heb. 215 sq.; spiritual, 1 Pet. 33, 36; among the Greeks, 1 Cor. 169, Note.

Sadducees, the, doctrines of, Matt. 71, 399 sq.; relation of Herod to, ib. 262, Mark 74; hypocrisy of, Matt. 239 sq.; their attacks on Christ, ib. 287, 399 sqq., Mark 121, Luke 308 sqq.; their assault on the apostles, Acts 93 sq.

Secularia, 1 Cor. 123.

Sefed, Matt. 104.

St. Bartholomew's Day, massacre of, Matt. 264, Note, 265.

St. Paul's Bay, Acts 480.

Saints, Col. 10; an appellation of Christians, Acts 169, 170, Rom. 64, 66, Eph. 21, Philom. 14; communion of, John 522 sq.; intercession of, Mark 92, 1 John 46, Rev. 159; invocation of, Tim. 31, 2 Pet. 18; to judge the world, 1 Cor. 123 sqq., 127 sq.; perseverance of the, see Perseverance; worship of, Acts 203 sq.; in Caesar's household, Phil. 76.

Salamis, Acts 242.

Salem, John 141, Heb. 126.

Sativa, remedial use of, by the ancients, Mark 70, John 307.

Salmons, Acts 466.

Salmonetta, Acts 480.

SALOME, daughter of Herodias, Matt. 58, 262.

—, wife of Zebedee, Matt. 258, 259, 362 sq., 529, Mark 106, Luke 82 sq., John 4.

Salt, figurative use of the term, Matt. 103 sq., Mark 90 sqq., Luke 231 sq., Col. 81.

Salutation, the angelic, Luke 19 sq.

Salutations, use of, Matt. 118, 147; eastern forms of, Luke 167, Rom. 57, Thesa. 11; of Paul, Rom. 57, 64, 446, 450, Phil. 76, Philom. 12.

Salvation, interest of angels in, Luke 40, Eph. 120, Tim. 66; assurance of, Luke 170, Acts 150, Rom. 161 sq., 261, 264, 282, 291, 1 Cor. 92, 200, Eph. 50, Tim. 90, 1 John 127, 176; not to be bought by beneficence, Luke 249; certainty of, Rom. 168, 277, 281, 299, 291; only through Christ, Matt. 229, Acts 74, 309 sq., Phil. 17; the foundation of the Christian system, Rom. 138 sq.; its conditions, John 137, 222, Acts 68 sq., Eph. 49 sq., 84; course of, Eph. 84; work of, difficult, ib. 123; divine and human agency in, ib. 128, 188, Phil. 16 sq., 43, Thesa. 87, Heb. 80; offered entire, Heb. 88; extent of the offer, Rom. 136, Tim. 28, 30; efficiency of faith in, Acts 309 sq., 1 Cor. 48, 1 John 164 sq.; fidelity in working out, Thesa. 70; of the Gentiles, Rom. 100, 103, 136, 140; by grace, Acts 224, 285, Eph. 80, 84; of unconverted heathen, Matt. 449, John 322 sq., Rom. 99, 103; of the Jews, Rom. 74, 299 sqq.; a new life, Col. 48; of ministers, Luke 108; morality not sufficient for, Acts 204; nature of, Rom. 73, Phil. 16 sq.; order of, Acts 53, 258; a personal matter, Heb. 112; plan of, Rom. 135, 142, 169, 289, 1 Cor. 47 sq., 57, 2 Cor. 108; may be resisted, Eph. 50; of the rich, Matt. 345; false security of, 1 Cor. 200; its proximity to sorrow, Rom. 331; three stages in its attainment, 1 Cor. 350; universal, Rom. 189; way of, Matt. 143, 146, Acts 205, 309 sq.

Salsburg, inscription at, Luke 296.

Salsburgers, Acts 224.

Samaria, John 152.

Samaritan woman, the, John 150 sqq.

Samaritans, Matt. 185; Christ's regard for, Luke 264; their hostility to Christ, ib. 193; reception of the gospel by, Acts 146; their hostility to the Jews, Luke 161, John 166.

Samothrace, Ac s 303.

Sanctification, defined, Thesa. 64, 98; gradual, ib. 94; the work of the Holy Spirit, John 520, 1 Cor. 124, 1 Pet. 12; its relation to justification, see Justification; the necessary result of redemption, 1 Cor. 118; its relation to righteousness, ib. 46 sqq.

Sanctuary, the heavenly, Acts 144.

Sandals, Acts 122.

Sanhedrin, derivation of the word, John 362, Note; sketch of the, ib. 362 sq.; its authority, Matt. 485, John 363, 563, Rom. 3; composition of the, Matt. 58 sq., John 363, Acts 72, 93; its officers, John 130, 363; one in every city, Matt. 95, 113, 188, John 306; its place of meeting, Matt. 502; embassy to John, John 83 sq., 88; proceedings against Christ, Matt. 385 sqq., 491, 502, Mark 115 sq.; bribery used by the, Matt. 55; fanaticism of, John 264; meanness of, Matt. 552; anxiety of, respecting Christ's resurrection, ib. 538; Paul's defence before, Acts 407 sqq.

Sapphire, Rev. 386.

Saraceni, their invasion of Syria, Rev. 207, Note, 214.

SARAH, a type of the church, Gal. 115 sqq., 120 sqq.; Elizabeth compared to, Luke 17.

Sardis, Rev. 125; church at, ib. 128, 409.

Sardius, Rev. 30, 386.

Sardonix, Rev. 386.

Sarepta, widow of, Luke 73 sq.

Saron, see Sharon.

SATAN, use of the word, Matt. 81, 307, 308, 1 Cor. 212, Note; abode of, 2 Pet. 30, Rev. 349; threefold activity of, Thesa. 48 sq.; an accuser, Rev. 249; agency of in Adam's fall, Rom. 175 sq.; an adversary, Matt. 88, Thesa. 48, 50, 1 Pet. 30, 90, 92; prince of powers of the air, Eph. 73 sq.; an angel of light, 2 Cor. 183; Apocalyptic doctrine of, Rev. 403; condemnation of, Tim. 89, 40; delivering unto, 1 Cor. 110 sq., Tim. 26; depth of, Rev. 29; downfall of, Luke 168, Tim. 39 sq., Rev. 238, 248; appearance of to Eve, 2 Cor. 178; head of the Kingdom of Evil, Matt. 226; connection of with moral evil, Acts 86, Rom. 450; fear of, Luke 196 sq.; gradual influence of, Acts 86; Kingdom of, Matt. 223 sq., Luke 69, 344, Eph. 73 sq., 227, Heb. 64, Rev. 426; compared to a lion, 1 Pet. 90, 92; loosing of, Rev. 365, 442; contest of with Michael, Jude 19, 25; names of, Rev. 241, Note; Paul's allusions to, Rom. 454; personality of, Matt. 81, 247, 451, Luke 66, 130, 185, 331, John 292, 299, Acts 86, 1 Cor. 141, 2 Cor. 35, Eph. 86, Heb. 64, 1 Pet. 92, 1 John 106 sq., Rev. 118; power of, 1 Cor. 110 sq.; punished, Rev. 344; references to, Rev. 241, Note; symbolized by a serpent, John 133, 2 Cor. 178; symbolic reference to, Rev. 28, 36; synagogue of, ib. 29, 117; the tempter, 1 Cor. 141; throne of, Rev. 119; work of, 2 Cor. 66 sq., Thesa. 45 sq., 1 John 107; called god of this world, 2 Cor. 60 sq.

SAUL, Rom. 57 sq.

—, King, Acts 249.

Saved, relative number of the, Rom. 197.

SAVIOUR, title of Christ, Luke 37, Acts 99, Tit. 6; title of God, Tit. 6.

Savor, 2 Cor. 40.

SCEVA, see Skevas.

SCHILLER, quoted, Matt. 215, Acts 405, Rom. 90, 321, Note, Rev. 397, Note.

Schisms, 1 Cor. 27, 233.

Schools, Jewish, Acts 399.

Science, authority of, Rev. 179; false, Tim. 75; modesty of true, Rom. 390, Note; its relations to religion, ib. 45; its tendency, Matt. 58.

Scorpions, 2 Pet. 43.

Scourging, mod- s of, Matt. 512 sq., Luke 205, 2 Cor. 187; of Christ, Matt. 512 sq., Mark 149, Luke 366, John 667.

Scribes, age of, Luke 62; duties of, Matt. 58 sq., 251 sq.; characterized by Christ, Luke 313; their hostility to Christ, Matt. 276, 278, 502, Mark 64, 74 sq.

Scriptures, Holy, additions to, Mark 32; allegories of, Rev.

- 11; authenticity of, Thes. 163; authority of, Tim. 108 sq., 110; as canon, Matt. 13 sqq.; their testimony to Christ, John 198; Christ's testimony to, Luke 94, 257, 394; the foundation of the church, Eph. 103; the only instrumentality in the church, Acts 106; duty of the church to circulate, Eph. 119; definition of the term, Matt. 8 sq.; designations of, ib. 10 sq.; difficulties of, ib. 371 sq., 505, 2 Pet. 51, 63; exposition of, Matt. 16, Col. 29; fulfillment of, John 558, Acts 22; the word of God, Matt. 10, 12, Acts 376, Thes. 43, Heb. 93; import of, Matt. 15; importance and value of, Eph. 120 sqq., Tim. 110 sq.; inspiration of, see Inspiration; the letter of esteemed by the Rabbins, John 186; obscurity of, 2 Pet. 51; Paul's use of, Acts 318, 319; portions of rejected by the Sadducees, Matt. 399 sq.; searching, John 195; spiritual meaning of, Heb. 87; sufficiency of, John 478, Acts 157, Tim. 110; symbolism of, Rev. 11 sqq.; typism of, ib. 11; unity of, Gal. 71; use of, Acts 282, Rom. 428, 431 sq., Tim. 109, 110; writers of, Matt. 13 (See Bible).
- Scripture Lessons, ancient, Matt. 37.
- Sea, the symbol of nations, Matt. 93, 272, 324, 410, John 137, Jas. 39, Rev. 17 sq., 33 sq., 197, 361 sqq.; symbol of the soul, Jas. 44; terrors of, removed by Christ, Matt. 272; of glass, in the Apocalypse, Rev. 153 sq., 290.
- Seal, symbolical meaning, Rom. 149, 1 Cor. 181, 2 Cor. 24, Tim. 99.
- Seals, the seven, Rev. 29, 164 sqq., 168, 170 sqq., 201 sq., 212 sqq., 416, 417.
- Sealed, the, Rev. 184, 186, 193.
- Sealing, of believers, Rom. 108, Eph. 44 sq., 50, 172.
- meaning of the term in the Apocalypse, Rev. 183, 185, 186, 417.
- of Christ's tomb, Matt. 537.
- Searching the Scriptures, Jn. 195.
- Seasons, in Palestine, Matt. 206, Luke 35 sq., 354; symbolism of, Rev. 33.
- Seat, chief, Matt. 410; Moses', ib. 409.
- Selazete, Acts 142, 474.
- Secret sins, Eph. 180.
- Sectarianism, Rom. 443, 447, Note, 1 Cor. 31, 2 Cor. 190.
- Sects of Jews, Matt. 400.
- Secular, use of the word, 1 Cor. 123.
- SECUNDUS, Acts 367.
- Security, carnal, 1 Cor. 201; false, ib. 200.
- Seed of Abraham, Gal. 75 sq.
- Seed, the word of God like, Matt. 241 sq., 1 Pet. 29.
- Seeing God, Matt. 103, John 77.
- Seeking Christ, John 251.
- God, Acts 330.
- Scientia, Acts 242.
- Self-abasement of the apostles, Acts 144.
- Self-conditioning of God, Eph. 66.
- Self-consciousness of Christ, Luke 291.
- Self-deception, 1 John 39.
- Self-defence, Luke 344.
- Self-denial, Luke 149 sq., Rom. 427, 1 Cor. 181, 216, 220; of Christ, 2 Cor. 141, 147; of Paul, 1 Cor. 181.
- Self-exaltation, Gal. 152.
- Self-examination, 1 Cor. 241, 242, 244, 2 Cor. 218, 1 John 56.
- Self-praise, Thes. 34.
- Self-righteousness, Luke 118, 241, Rom. 352.
- Self-seeking, Gal. 162.
- Self-will of Peter, John 408.
- Self-humiliation, Luke 272.
- Semi-Pelagianism, Rom. 139, 194 sq.
- SENECA, related to Gallio, Acts 336; Paul's acquaintance with, Phil. 76, Note; quoted, Acts 336, Rom. 89.
- Sensuality, Col. 68, Thes. 65; resulting from apostasy, Rom. 85; hostile to Christian life, Phil. 63.
- Sentence, judicial, Roman and Jewish law concerning, Matt. 493; of Christ, ib. 493, 502, Luke 368.
- Separation, from the church, when allowable, 2 Cor. 120 sq.; of righteous and wicked, Matt. 247.
- Separists, Jude 28.
- Sepulchre, of Christ, its locality, Luke 383; Church of the Holy, Matt. 520 sq.
- Sepulchres, around Jerusalem, Matt. 413; whited, ib. 48.
- Seraphim, the, Rev. 19.
- SERGIVS PAULUS, Acts 243.
- Sermon, the, its purpose and characteristics, Matt. 29 sq.; its theme, ib. 30 sq., 34; division, ib. 34 sq.; execution, ib. 35; delivery, ib. 36.
- Sermon on the mount, the, accounts of, compared, Matt. 99 sqq., Luke 100 sqq.; analysis of, Matt. 97 sqq., 104 sqq., 112 sq., Luke 101; false applications of, Matt. 106; a dedicatory discourse, Luke 96; its relation to heathen precepts, Matt. 106; occasion, ib. 100, Luke 103; time and place of its delivery, Matt. 100, Luke 100; works on, Matt. 98.
- Sermons, collections of, Matt. 33, 35; installation, Rom. 442; long, Acts 370.
- Serpent, the, described, John 132, Note; its symbolical meaning, ib. 133, 2 Cor. 178, Tim. 34, Rev. 22, 246; the apostles to be like, Matt. 188; brassy, John 132.
- Serpents, taking up of, Mark 162.
- Servant, use of the term in the New Testament, Rev. 186, Note; Christ a, Luke 229, Acts 68; of Christ, Rom. 58.
- Servants, their relations and duties to masters, Eph. 216, 218; O.T. 77 sqq.; parable of the, Luke 203 sqq.; of Christ, his representatives, Matt. 200.
- Service of Christ, Matt. 161.
- of God, John 166, Rom. 69.
- of love in the church, Matt. 366.
- Servitude, Hebrew, John 289.
- Servus Servorum, Matt. 91.
- Seven, symbolism of the number, Matt. 28, 49, 125, 183, 236 sq., 332, 334, Rom. 361, 2 Pet. 28, Jude 23 sq., Rev. 15; characteristic number of the Apocalypse, Rev. 81.
- , appointment of the, Acts 104 sqq.
- churches of Asia, Matt. 237, Rev. 28, 90.
- Council of, Matt. 113.
- epochs in church history, Rev. 317, Note.
- seven, parallels of, ib. 86.
- Sev-nty, symbolism of the number, Luke 163, Rev. 14.
- , Council of, see Sanhedrin.
- , seceding out of the, Luke 166 sqq., 169 sq.
- Seventy times seven, Matt. 332 sq., 334.
- SEVERINUS, Matt. 265.
- Sexes, relation of the, Eph. 205, Note.
- Shadow, symbolism of, Rev. 19.
- SHAKESPEARE, quoted, Matt. 89, Luke 78, Rom. 152, Note, Thes. 118, Note, James 81.
- SHAMMAI, Rabbi, Matt. 115, 338.
- Shark, Jonah's whale supposed to be a, Matt. 225.
- Sharon, plain of, Acts 186.
- Sheba, queen of, Matt. 226.
- SHEBA, Acts 21.
- Shechem, John 153.
- Sheep, eastern custom respecting, John 319, Note; used as a figure, Matt. 325, 443 sq., Luke 236, John 639 sq., 1 Pet. 48.
- Shekel, Matt. 517 sq., 462, 464.
- Shekinah, Matt. 287, 308, Luke 153, John 73, Rom. 331.
- Shelah, Luke 212.
- Shel, Matt. 114, 211, 293, 298, Luke 251, Rev. 165.
- Shel, used as a figure, Luke 236, 242; Christ the good, John 317 sqq., 321, 331, 1 Pet. 87; and cardinals, associates of, Col. 30.
- Shew-bread, Matt. 217, Mark 32.
- Shilling, Matt. 332.
- Ships of the ancients, Acts 455, 457, 459, 460.
- Shipwrecks of Paul, Acts 461.
- Shothroth, Luke 316.
- Shrines of Diana, Acts 360.
- Shyl, Rev. 9.
- Sichem, John 153.
- Sick, the, healed by Paul, Acts 353, 354 sq.; prayer for, Jas. 138 sqq.; recovery of, ib. 145; visiting, ib. 144.
- Sidon, Matt. 210.
- Sighing of Christ, Matt. 288, Mark 70, 74, 75.
- Sight, faith without, John 622.
- Sign, demanded by the Jews, Matt. 225, 230, 287 sq., Mark 74, 75, Luke 186 sqq., John 117, 217; of the Messiah, Matt. 225, 428.
- Signs, desire for in the hearts of Christians, Luke 208; sought after by the Jews, 1 Cor. 33; symbolism of, Rev. 35; of Christ's second coming, Luke 323 sqq.; of the sky, uncertain, Matt. 288; of the times, ib. 287 sq., Luke 209; of the weather, among the Jews, Matt. 287, Luke 208.
- SILAS, Acts 238, 295, 296, Thes. 9 sq., 1 Pet. 94.
- Silence, enjoined by Christ on those healed, Matt. 151, 177, 220, 308, Mark 60, 70, Luke 85, 141, 149; enjoined on women in the church, 1 Cor. 280 sq.; expressive, 1 Pet. 62; of Christ, Matt. 234, 492, 494, 510, Luke 358, 363, 367; of Scripture, Heb. 128; in heaven, Rev. 202.
- Siloam, pool of, Luke 212, John 181 sq., 308, 314.
- SILVANUS, Thes. 9 sq., 1 Pet. 94.
- Silver, pieces of, Matt. 464.
- SIMEON, in the temple, Luke 44; song of, ib. 45.
- , a cousin of Christ, Matt. 256, Note.
- SIMON, a name common among the Jews, Matt. 267.
- , bishop of church at Pella, John 10 sq.
- , the Cananite, Matt. 182, 255 sqq., Luke 96.
- , of Cyrene, Matt. 519 sq., 529, Luke 369, 370.
- , brother of Jesus, Matt. 255 sqq.
- , the leper, Matt. 402.
- , Peter, see Peter.
- , the Pharisee, Luke 120 sqq.
- , the high priest, Matt. 385.
- , the scribe, Acts 142, 144, 145, 147 sqq.
- , Zelotes, Matt. 182, 256, Luke 96.
- Simonism, 2 Pet. 29.
- Simony, Acts 149, 151 sq.
- Sin, denied, 1 John 100, 106; of Adam, Rom. 173 sqq., 191 sqq., 1 Cor. 339, Tim. 44; atonement for, Heb. 102; God not the author of, Rom. 90, 125, Jas. 55 sq.; body of,

- Rom. 203 sq., 206 sq.; the body the seat of, ib. 207, 209, 215; the Christian dead to, ib. 199, 201, 204 sq.; climax of, Rom. 91, Thess. 66; confession of, 1 John 37, 40, 62; consciousness of, Eph. 120; corruption of, ib. 82, 1 John 106; darkness of, John 61; dangerous element of, Eph. 165; unto death, 1 John 171, 172, 175 sq., 179; its relation to death, Rom. 176, 180, 196, 257, 263, 1 Cor. 332 sq., Heb. 63; deliverance from the power of, Heb. 63; connection with disease, Jas. 145; essence of, Luke 241, Eph. 82; of Eve, Luke 69, Rom. 175, 190, Tim. 34; excuses for, Jas. 55; falling into, Matt. 499 sq.; its effects on the human features, John 160; its relation to the flesh, Rom. 253, Eph. 179 sq.; forgiveness of, see Forgiveness; fruit of its service, Rom. 216; its antithesis to grace, ib. 300 sq., 327 sq.; heaven the first theatre of, Eph. 40; of ignorance, Heb. 178; its relation to law, Rom. 196 sq., 215, 224, 232 sq., 245, 1 Cor. 348; names of, Rom. 196; nature of, 1 John 106; not to be overcome by nature, Rom. 245; origin of, ib. 196, Eph. 83, Jas. 55 sq.; original, Matt. 50, 325, Rom. 178, Note, 191 sq., Eph. 78; perception of, 1 John 36 sq.; permitted, not ordained, Rom. 330; power of, Col. 4; punishment of, John 306, 313, Rom. 90, 134, 2 Pet. 44; release from, Rom. 204; slavery to, ib. 246; against the Holy Spirit, see Holy Spirit; universality of, Rom. 125, Eph. 62, 174; variety of, Luke 241, Eph. 82; wilful, Heb. 178.
- Sinal, Mt., Matt. 105, Acts 122, Gal. 114 sq.
- Sinaitic MSS. of New Testament, Matt. xx., 565, Acts vii.
- Sincerity, John 137.
- Singing in public worship, Eph. 194; in the Sunday-School, ib. ib.
- Sinlessness of Christ, Luke 68 sq., 360, 367, John 294 sq., 300, 2 Cor. 101, Heb. 98 sq.; of Christians, 105, 108.
- Sinner, use of the term, Matt. 170, Luke 121 sq.
- Sinners, Christ's intercourse with, Mark 28 sq.; proper feeling towards, Rom. 838; sought after by God, Luke 236; relation of the law to, Rom. 232 sq.; called liars, ib. 117; work of, in conversion, 1 Cor. 128.
- Sins, catalogues of, Rom. 88; of Christians, 1 John 101 sq., 105, 108; forgiveness of, see Forgiveness; of omission, Matt. 449, Jas. 121, 123; secret, Eph. 180; small, Jas. 79, 1 John 39.
- Sion, Mt., Rev. 231, Note.
- Sisters of Charity, T. m. 61.
- Sisters of Jesus, Matt. 256 sq., Mark 53.
- Six, symbolism of the number, Matt. 125, John 106, Rev. 15, 31.
- Six hundred sixty-six, Rev. 271 sq.
- Skepticism, John x., 1 Cor. 341.
- SKEUAS, Acts 353; sons of, ib. ib.
- Slavery, American, 1 Cor. 153; ancient, Eph. 218, Philem. 19, Note, 21; Hebrew, John 289; relation of Christianity to, 1 Cor. 155, Eph. 218, Tim. 68, 70, Philem. 29, 1 Pet. 40; relation of Epistle to Philemon to, Philom. 29 sq.; sin of, ib. 30.
- Slaves, their duties to masters, 1 Cor. 153 sq., Tim. 68; Greek and Roman, Philem. 19, Note, 21; emancipation of, ib. 24.
- Sleep, illustrative of neglect, Matt. 244, 246; of disciples in the garden, Matt. 479, Mark 143 sq., Luke 347; in church, Acts 370; death compared to, Matt. 176, Luke 142, John 344, Thess. 77.
- Sleepiness, spiritual, Matt. 438 sq.
- Smoke, symbolism of, Rev. 199, 291.
- Smyrna, Rev. 117.
- Sobriety, Eph. 194.
- Social relations of the Christian life, Acts 369, 376, Eph. 187 sq.
- Social nature of Paul, 2 Cor. 124 sq.
- Socialism, Christian, 2 Cor. 144, 147.
- SOCRATES, anecdote of, 2 Pet. 23; humility of, Matt. 102, Rev. 2; supposition respecting, Acts 332.
- Sodom, Matt. 211, Luke 167, Rev. 225, 231.
- Solafidianism, Rom. 136, Note, 139.
- Soldiers, testimony of to Christ, Matt. 528, Luke 381 sq.; John's advice to, Luke 56; their profession consistent with fear of God, Acts 196; lawfulness of their vocation, Luke 56; mercenary, Matt. 563; religious movement among, ib. 156.
- Solidarity, defined, Jas. 119, Note; of earthly and heavenly interests, Phil. 74.
- Solomon, apparel of, Mark 81; Jewish estimation of, Matt. 134; traditions concerning, Luke 187.
- Solomon's porch, John 330, Acts 66.
- Somnambulists, Matt. 271, Acts 36.
- Son, name applied to Christ, Matt. 77.
- Son of David, Matt. 176, John 99.
- Son of God, Matt. 272, 492, 494, John 96, 98.
- Son of man, Daniel's use of the term, Matt. 161; a title of Christ, Matt. 160, 217, 428, Mark 32, John 97 sq., 383, Acts 135, 1 Cor. 71, Rev. 104.
- Song, Christian, Eph. 192, Col. 72 sq.
- of the angels, Luke 38 sq., 40.
- of Elizabeth, Luke 24, 28.
- of Mary, Luke 25, 28.
- of Moses and the Lamb, Rev. 31.
- the new, Rev. 30, 160, 277 sq., 280, 284, 290.
- of the redeemed in heaven, Rev. 184, 190.
- of Simon, Luke 45, 46.
- Sons of God, Matt. 103, Rom. 259 sq., 263, 272, Heb. 34 sq. See Adoption.
- Sons of thunder, Matt. 182, Mark 37, John 5.
- Sonship with God, John 67. See Adoption.
- of Christ, Matt. 319, John 187, Rom. 56.
- Sop, Matt. 470.
- SOPATER, Acts 367.
- Sophists, Tim. 69.
- SOPHOCLES, quoted, Rom. 101, 122.
- Sorcerer, Elymas the, Acts 242 sq.
- Sorcery, Rev. 212.
- Sorrow, songs of in Christ's life, Matt. 214; for the dead, Thess. 73 sq., 77; godly, 2 Cor. 129, 133 sq.; transitions from joy to, Matt. 374; its proximity to salvation, Rom. 331.
- SOSPATER, Rom. 452.
- SOSTHENES, Acts 336, 1 Cor. 20.
- Soul, the definition of the term, Matt. 404, 479, Rom. 233 sq., 1 Cor. 62, Thess. 95, 98; its relation to the body, Matt. 479, Rom. 232 sq., 1 Cor. 62, 2 Cor. 205; its state after death, Luke 256, Phil. 26, Thess. 78; death of, Rom. 178; immortality of, Matt. 196, Mark 121, Luke 198, 310 sq., Thess. 77; loss of, Matt. 303 sq.; distinguished from the spirit, 1 Cor. 62, Thess. 95, 98; value of, Matt. 306, Rom. 338.
- Souls, care of, the minister's duty, Jude 31; —, transmigration of, Matt. 262, John 304.
- under the altar, Rev. 30, 174 sq.
- Sovereignty of God, Acts 99, Rom. 118, 278, 313, 314, 328 sq., 332, 375.
- of Christ, Sinal, Phil. 38.
- Sowing, spiritual use of the term, Matt. 241 sq., John 164 sq., Gal. 162 sq.
- Spain, Rom. 441, 443; Paul's proposed journey to, ib. 11, Note, 441.
- Speech, faculty of, Acts 36 sq., Jas. 103, 108; an index of character, Matt. 225; to be used in praises of God, ib. 36 sq.; Christian, characteristics of, Eph. 174, Col. 81.
- Spices, used for embalming, Luke 383.
- Spikenard, Matt. 463.
- SPINOZA, quoted, John 339.
- Spirit, use of the term, Matt. 479, John 230, Rom. 232 sq., 1 Cor. 62, 2 Cor. 205, Thess. 95, 98.
- Spirit, of adoption, Rom. 269 sq., 295 sq.
- of bondage, ib. ib.
- of Christ, ib. 257.
- freedom of, 2 Cor. 47, 51, 58, 60.
- of God, Rev. 39.
- of holiness, Rom. 62.
- Holy, see Holy Spirit.
- life of the, Rom. 295 sq.
- willingness of the, Matt. 480.
- witness of the, see Holy Spirit.
- of the world, Matt. 209, 1 Cor. 60.
- Spirit of the law, Matt. 119, Rom. 222 sq., 2 Cor. 47 sq., 51, 60.
- of Christ's precepts, Luke 105.
- Spirits, trying the, 1 John 137 sq.
- fallen, 1 Cor. 128, 212.
- in prison, preaching of Christ to, 1 Pet. 63 sq., 66, 67 sq., 75.
- the seven, Rev. 91, 125.
- Spiritual, proper use of the word, Rev. 98, Note.
- Spiritual and corporeal combined in God's revelations, Acts 29.
- Spiritual body, the, 1 Cor. 336, 338.
- Spiritual man, the, 1 Cor. 65, 66.
- Spiritualism, Luke 257, Rom. 139, Eph. 66, Note.
- Spirituality, Matt. 134, John 161 sq.
- Spring in Palestine, Matt. 266.
- Spitting, Matt. 493.
- "Stabat Mater," John 585.
- Star of the magi, Matt. 67 sq., 59, 60.
- the morning, Rev. 124 sq.
- STARKE, CHRIS., biographical sketch, Matt. viii., Note; Bi-belwerk of, Rev. 405.
- Stars, falling of, Matt. 427 sq.; the seven, Rev. 125; symbolism of the, ib. 34 sq., 197, 205, 208; worship of, Acts 125.
- State, the, relations of the church to, see Church; a divine institution, Rom. 402; its duty in reference to marriage, 1 Cor. 145; submission to its authority, Rom. 401.
- Stater, Matt. 319 sq.
- Stations, spuriousness of, Luke 368.
- Statistics, religious, Matt. 563.
- Steadfastness of Christians, 1 Cor. 25.
- STEPHANAS, 1 Cor. 359.
- STEPHEN, Acts 105, 108 sq., 113 sq., 134 sq.
- Steward, Matt. 354, 1 Cor. 88, 187.
- Stewardship, Christian, 1 Cor. 90 sq., 187, Jas. 132, 1 Pet. 78, 80.

Stocks, Acts 376.
 Stoics, philosophy of the, Acts 323, 327.
 Stone, Christ a living, 1 Pet. 32; corner, Matt. 388, 392, Luke 304, 1 Cor. 75, 78; of stumbling, Rom. 327; the white, Rev. 23, 120 sq.
 Stones, precious, of the Apocalypse, Rev. 20 sq.
 Storm, symbolism of, Rev. 19.
 Storms in the East, Matt. 145, 161.
 Straight, street in Damascus, Acts 163.
 Straining wine, Matt. 413.
 STRAUSS, V., poem of, quoted, John 60, Note.
 Strife, the Christian life a, Rom. 215, Tim. 26; occasioned by the gospel, Luke 209; theological, Matt. 128.
 Striking in the face, 2 Cor. 185.
 Stripes, punishment by, Matt. 512 sq., Luke 206, 2 Cor. 187.
 Strong, the, their conduct toward the weak, Rom. 414 sqq., 426.
 Strymon, river, Acts 304.
 Stumbling, stone of, Rom. 327.
 Subjection of Christ, 1 Cor. 320 sq.
 Submission, Christian, Acts 396 sq., Heb. 202; to rightful authority, Rom. 398 sq., 401.
 Substitution in Christ's death, Eph. 118, 1 Pet. 47.
 Suffering, connected with glory, Luke 155; perfection through, Rom. 162.
 Sufferings of Christ, effect of, Heb. 55, 106; connected with his glory, Luke 358, Heb. 55; compared to birth-pangs, John 497, 503; peculiar, Luke 349; Peter's view of, Acts 48 sq.; physical, Matt. 523; prophesied, Acts 416, 418.
 Sufferings of Christians, blessedness of, Phil. 25, 1 Pet. 81 sqq.; Christ's sympathy in, Col. 37, Heb. 55; a means of furthering the gospel, Tim. 96; purpose of, Heb. 106, 202; value of, Thess. 37.
 Sufficiency of the Scriptures, John 478, Acts 157, Tim. 110.
 Suicide, Matt. 507.
 Sun, the, an emblem of Christ, Luke 50; darkening of, Matt. 427; symbolism of, E. v. 34, 246.
 Sunday, observance of, by the early Christians, Acts 368 sq.; beginning of the history of, John 621; relation of the Jewish Sabbath to, Matt. 547, Mark 35; duty of the Christian state to, Matt. 547; symbolism of, Rev. 28. See Sabbath.
 Sunday, Palm, Matt. 533.
 Sunday-School, the, not to take the place of family training, Eph. 213, Note.
 Sunday-school scholars, Matt. 323, singing, Eph. 194.
 Sunshine, symbolism of, Rev. 19.
 Supererogation, doctrine of, 1 Cor. 187, 191, 196.
 Supremacy of Peter, see Peter, primacy of.
 Swearing, see Oaths, Profanity.
 Sweat, bloody, Luke 347.
 Swine, subject to fright, Matt. 166; destruction of at Gadara, ib. 163 sq., 167, Mark 46 sq., Luke 135 sqq.; Jews forbidden to keep, Matt. 165, Mark 47; unclean by the Mosaic law, Matt. 139.
 Sword, use of the, Ma t. 486 sq., Luke 343, 344, 352.
 Sycamore tree, Luke 200.
 Sycamore tree, Luke 285.
 Sychar, John 153.
 Symbol, a form of revelation, John 508, Rev. 11 sqq.
 Symbolism, of colors, Rev. 16 sq.; of Greek and Hebrew, contrasted, ib. 106, Note; of Jewish law, Matt. 217; of heathen mythology, Rom. 90; of numbers, Matt. 49, 183, Rev. 14 sqq., 29, Note; of the Old Testament, Matt. 7, 278, Tim. 24, Heb. 164; of human relations, Rev. 24; of the Scriptures, ib. 11 sqq.; works on, Matt. 183, Rev. 12, Note, 14.
 Symbols, in the Apocalypse, Rev. 7; used by Christ, John 167, 480; assigned to the four Gospels, Matt. 25 sq.; of Israel, in the Old Testament, John 480.
 SYMEON, Acts 239.
 Sympathy of Christ, Heb. 98 sqq.
 Synagogue, the germ of the church, Matt. 95; ruler of the, ib. 173 sq.; services of the, Luke 72 sq.
 _____ of Satan, Rev. 28.
 _____ of the libertines, Acts 109.
 Synagogues, in Jerusalem, Matt. 96, Acts 109; built by individuals, Luke 110.
 Synod, the first, Acts 290; of Dort, Rom. 329, Note.
 SYNTYCHE, Phil. 64.
 Syria, Acts 383.
 Syrophenician, Mark 67.
 Syrtis, Acts 437.
 SYZYGUS, Phil. 65.

Tabernacle, the Jewish, Acts 129 sq., Heb. 141 sq.; the heavenly, ib. 166 sq.
 Tabernacles, feast of, John 239, 266, 277.
 TABITHA, Acts 186 sq.
 Table, posture of Orientals at, Matt. 170, 410, 467, 469, Luke 335; chief seat at, Matt. 410; symbolical meaning of the word, Rom. 363.

Table of the Lord, 1 Cor. 312.
 Tables, washing of, Mark 65; of the law, Matt. 344.
 Tablet, writing, Luke 26.
 Tabor, Mt., description of, Matt. 556; its connection with the Mount of Beatitudes, ib. 105; traditionally the scene of the Transfiguration, ib. 306, 311, Luke 152 sq., Acts 22.
 Talar, a Jewish garment, Luke 239, 242.
 Talent, value of a, Matt. 333.
 Talmud, origin of the, Matt. 553; quoted, Mark 65.
 Tarsus, Rom. 4, 6.
 Tartarus, 2 Pet. 27, Rev. 349.
 Taught of God, Thess. 70.
 Tax for temple-service, Matt. 318 sq.
 Taxation in Roman empire, Matt. 170.
 Teachers, Christian, see Ministers; should be able and active, Matt. 251 sqq.; proper conduct of, 1 Cor. 32; co-workers with God, ib. 74, 77; their relation to hearers, Gal. 108 sq., 120; qualities of, Acts 223 sq.; rebukes of, Luke 192; in the early church, 1 Cor. 257, Eph. 150.
 Teachers, false, Acts 371, Gal. 20, Tim. 69.
 Teaching, gift of, Rom. 385; God's method of, 1 Cor. 71; Christ's example and modes of, Matt. 233 sq., Luke 107, 218; Jewish modes of, Matt. 2 3 sq.
 Teachings of Christ, Acts 9.
 Tears and groans, Rom. 288.
 Tell Hum, Matt. 91.
 Temperament of Christ, Luke 163.
 Temperance question, John 110, 1 Cor. 196, Gal. 144, Eph. 194, 196, Col. 56, Tim. 65.
 Temple, the Jewish, history of, Matt. 375, 421; guardian angels of, Matt. 415; arrangement in, Heb. 160; children in, Matt. 378; Christ's first and last visits to, Luke 46 sq., 314, Matt. 415 sqq.; cleansing of, Matt. 375, Mark 112 sqq., Luke 298 sqq., 303, John 114 sqq.; courts of, Matt. 376, Mark 113; desecrations of, Matt. 425; destruction of foretold, Matt. 422, Mark 130; gates of, Acts 62; heathen gifts to, Luke 319; guard of, Acts 72; attempt of Julian to rebuild, Matt. 416, Luke 298 sqq.; its magnificence, Matt. 421, Luke 319; measuring of in the Apocalypse, Rev. 223, 227 sqq., 233; pinnacle of, Matt. 84, Luke 67; porch of, John 350, Acts 66; its sacredness, Matt. 492, Mark 113, 1 Cor. 81; sworn by, Matt. 412; its symbolic character, ib. 375, Luke 321, Rev. 26; tax for, Matt. 318 sq.; treasury of, Mark 127, Luke 316 sq.; veil of, Matt. 527, 530, Luke 379; works on, Matt. 375.
 Temple, Christians compared to a, 1 Cor. 80 sq., 84, 85, 134, 186 sq.; Christ's body the real, John 119; the church a, 2 Cor. 118 sq., 123; the heavenly, Rev. 245.
 Tempt, meanings of the word, Jas. 49.
 Temptation of Christ in the wilderness, Matt. 80 sqq., Mark 17 sq., Luke 64 sqq.; in Gethsemane, Luke 348 sq.
 Temptations, origin and purpose of, Thess. 54; Christ's sympathy in, Heb. 98 sqq.; not from God, Jas. 49 sq.; God's help in, Matt. 126, Luke 179 sq., 1 Cor. 202 sq., 208; joy in, Jas. 43; Satan's agency in, 1 Cor. 141, 301, Thess. 54; their recurrence in Christ's life, Luke 60; of Jewish Christians, Jas. 37.
 Tempting God, 1 Cor. 199, Jas. 49, 56.
 Ten, symbolism of the number, Matt. 87, 183, 437, Rev. 18.
 TENNANT, anecdote of, Phil. 27.
 Tent-making, Paul's trade of, Acts 334 sq.
 Terraces, in Palestine, Matt. 239.
 Terrors of the law, Heb. 208.
 TERTIUS, Rom. 452.
 TERTULLUS, Acts 419 sq., 423.
 Testament, see New Testament, Old Testament.
 Testimony, written, value of, Acts 290, 291.
 Tetrarch, Matt. 64, 262.
 Text of the Greek New Testament, Matt. xx., John xiii., Acts vi.
 Texts, list of, Matt. 33.
 Textus Receptus, Acts vi.
 THADDEUS, see Lebbeus.
 THAMAR, faith of, Matt. 49, 51.
 Thankfulness, true, Luke 264.
 Thanks at meals, Rom. 419.
 Thanksgiving in prayer, Thess. 58.
 Thanksgiving days, Matt. 32.
 THEAGENES, narrative of, Luke 236.
 Theatre, Acts 360.
 Theft, Eph. 174.
 Thekoa, wilderness of, Matt. 68.
 Theocracy, origin of the term, Matt. 4; history of, ib., ib.
 THEODOSIUS the Emperor, Rev. 250, Note.
 Theologia Germanica, Rom. 138, Note.
 Theology, analysis and divisions of, Matt. 1; Biblical, ib. 17; Practical, ib. 35; works on, ib. 17, 36.
 THEOPHILUS, Luke 12 13.
 Thessalonians, Paul's First Epistle to the, Thess. 1 sqq.; analysis of, Rom. 23, Thess. 6 sq.; genuineness of, Thess. 4 sqq.; occasion, ib. 3 sqq.; place and time of writing, ib. 3; works on, ib. 7 sq.

- Paul's Second Epistle to the, analysis of, Rom. 23 sq., Thess. 111 sq.; genuineness of, Thess. 107 sqq.; place, time and occasion of writing, ib. 105 sq.
- Thessalonica, Acts 318, Thess. 1; church at, Thess. 1 sq.; Paul's labors at, Acts 316 sqq., Thess. 1 sq., 27 sqq.
- THEUDAS, Acts 98.
- Tuilef, the coming of Christ compared to a, Luke 204.
- the penitent, Luke 375 sqq.
- Thirst, symbolism of, John 237, Rev. 192; of Christ on the cross, John 587 sq.
- Thistles, false prophets compared to, Matt. 144.
- THOMAS, name of, Matt. 182, John 345; sketch of, John 345; his place among the apostles, ib. 621 sq.; his character, Luke 96; his doubt, John 621 sq.; contrasted with Mary, ib. 623; apocryphal gospel of, Matt. 267.
- "Thorn in the flesh," Paul's, 2 Cor. 200 sqq.
- Thorna, false prophets compared to, Matt. 144; crown of, ib. 514.
- Thought, peculiar use of the word, Matt. 133.
- Thoughts, read by Christ, Matt. 161, 166 sq.
- Thousand years, the, Rev. 351 sq.
- Thousands, Matt. 59.
- Three, symbolism of the number, Matt. 49, 183, 236, 245, Mark 133, Rev. 15, 85.
- Threshold-door, Matt. 72.
- Throne of God, Heb. 152.
- of grace, Heb. 98.
- Thunder, symbolism of, Rev. 152 sq., 216.
- Thunder, the seven, Rev. 216 sqq., 220, 422.
- Thursday, Maundy, Matt. 533.
- Thyatira, Acts 305, Rev. 121, 409.
- Tiberias, Matt. 90, 211, John 209; sea of, see Gennesaret, Lake.
- Time, division among Eastern nations, John 93; fulness of, Gal. 99; God's relation to, 2 Pet. 42, 44; improvement of, Eph. 193 sq.; Jewish mode of reckoning, Matt. 226, 268, Luke 187; symbolism of the divisions of, Rev. 33.
- Times, signs of the, Matt. 287 sq., Luke 209; and seasons in the kingdom of God, Acts 300, 301; symbolism of, Rev. 33.
- TIMOTHEUS, Acts 297 sqq. See
- TIMOTHY, sketch of his life, Acts 297 sq., Tim. 9 sq.; his relations with Paul, Acts 297 sqq., Col. 9, Thess. 10; his visit to Corinth, 1 Cor. 101, 357; his mission to Thessalonica, Thess. 51, 53.
- Paul's First Epistle to, analysis of, Rom. 24, Tim. 12; design of, Tim. 11; its genuineness, ib. 2 sqq., 65; time and place of writing, ib. 10 sq.; works on, ib. 13.
- Paul's Second Epistle to, analysis of, Rom. 24, Tim. 78; design of, Tim. 77 sq.; its genuineness, ib. 119; time and place of writing, ib. 77 sq.; works on, ib. 79.
- TISCHENDORF, E. F. O., Biblical labors of, Matt. xx, 565, Note, Acts vii.
- Tithes, Matt. 412, Luke 191.
- Title on the cross, Matt. 524, Luke 373, John 584.
- Titties, prohibition of, Matt. 410, Luke 192.
- of Christ, see Jesus Christ.
- of the Holy Spirit, John 442.
- Tittle, Matt. 109.
- TITUS, biographical sketch of, Tit. 1.
- Paul's Epistle to, analysis of, Rom. 24 sq., Tit. 3; genuineness of, Tim. 2 sqq.; occasion of, Tit. 2; time and place of composition, ib. ib.; works on, ib. 3.
- Toasts at feasts, how originated, 1 Cor. 215.
- To-day, Heb. 81 sqq.
- Tombs, Jewish, Matt. 536, John 355, Note; the abode of demons, Matt. 164.
- Tongue, the, power of, Jas. 94 sqq.; sins of, ib. 96 sqq., 103, 107; untamable, ib. 97 sq.; anecdotes of, ib. 103, 109.
- Tongues, the gift of, Mark 162, Acts 29, 31 sq., 34 sqq., 203, 1 Cor. 252, 260, 267, 286, 292, 299 sqq., 302.
- of fire, Acts 27 sq.
- Topaz, Rev. 386.
- Torches, Matt. 437.
- Tormentors, Matt. 334.
- Torture, judicial, Acts 404.
- Tower, Matt. 387.
- Trades, honorable, Acts 338; Jewish custom of learning, Mark 53; Jewish respect for, Acts 335.
- Tradesmen, sins of, Acts 363.
- Tradition, use of the term in the New Testament, 1 Cor. 223, Gal. 24; errors of, Luke 74; value attached to by the Jews, Matt. 276, Mark 65, Tim. 17 sq.; its relation to Scripture, Thess. 147 sq., Tim. 95 sq.
- Traditionalism, Christ's conduct towards, Matt. 278, 313; its relation to the law, ib. 118 sq., 216, 278, Mark 65.
- Training, of Christians for judging, 1 Cor. 123; of converts, Matt. 328, Mark 91.
- Transfiguration of Christ, the, Matt. 306 sqq., Mark 80 sqq., Luke 152 sqq.; locality of, Matt. 306, Luke 152, Acts 22, 2 Pet. 19; nature and object of, Matt. 310, Luke 153 sqq., 2 Pet. 22; various views of, Matt. 309; Raphael's painting of, ib. 315, Luke 155.
- Translation, Irvingite doctrine of, Thess. 122.
- Translations of the Bible, Matt. 18 sq.
- Transmigration of souls, Matt. 282, John 308.
- Transubstantiation, doctrine of, Matt. 470 sqq., Luke 337 sq., 1 Cor. 213, 236 sq.; feast of, John 137, Note.
- Travail, Rev. 24, Note.
- Traveling by night, an Eastern custom, Matt. 59.
- Treasure in heaven, Matt. 132.
- Treasury of the temple, Mark 127, Luke 315 sq.
- Tree of life, Rev. 21, 28, 388.
- Trees, symbolism of, John 879, Rev. 21.
- Trent, Council of, Acts 355.
- Trees Taberna, Acts 470.
- Treves, the Holy Coat of, Luke 374.
- Trials, see Afflictions.
- Tribes, the twelve, Matt. 349, Rev. 418; enumerated in the Apocalypse, Rev. 183; symbolism of the church, ib. 182 sq., the ten, location of, Matt. 57.
- Tribulation, the great, Rev. 191 sq.
- Tribulations, see Afflictions.
- Tribunals, spiritual, always in the lead of persecutions, Matt. 189.
- Tribute, payment of, Matt. 396, Luke 306 sq., Rom. 405.
- Trichotomy, Rom. 233 sq., Thess. 95 sq., Heb. 95.
- Trinity of Deity, indicated at Christ's baptism, Matt. 78; implied in the baptismal formula, ib. 558, 561; referred to in the Lord's Prayer, ib. 124; proofs of the doctrine, ib. 561, John 283, 469, 479, Eph. 142, Note; relation of persons in, Rom. 373, 1 Cor. 250, 260, 320 sq., Eph. 96 sq., 101; ontological and economical, John 60.
- Trinity Sunday, John 137, Note.
- Triumph of the risen saints, 1 Cor. 350.
- Troas, Acts 204, 300, 2 Cor. 38.
- TROPHIMUS, Acts 367, Tim. 118.
- True One, The, Rev. 128.
- Trumpet, use of the term in the Bible, Matt. 122, 428 sq., Rev. 104; the last, Matt. 428 sq., 1 Cor. 346 sqq.; symbolism of the, Rev. 23, 28.
- Trumpets, the seven, Rev. 181, 197 sqq., 201 sqq., 236 sqq., 420.
- Truth, assurance of, Thess. 97 sq.; communication of, Heb. 109; development of, 1 John 54; conflict of, with error, 2 Cor. 172, 175; a liberator, John 287, 299; Pilate's question respecting, ib. 566; essentials to its perception, 2 Cor. 61; proof of, Thess. 97 sq.
- Töbaryeh, John 209.
- Tunic, John 585.
- Turkish invasion, Rev. 209, Note, 213, 249.
- Twelve, symbolism of the number, Matt. 181, 183, Rev. 15.
- Two, symbolism of the number, Matt. 49, 183, Rev. 15.
- Two or three, prayer of, Matt. 330.
- TYCHICHUS, Acts 367, Eph. 231, Tim. 116.
- Typism of the Scriptures, Rev. 12 sq.
- Typology of the Old Testament services, works on, Matt. 7.
- TYRANNUS, Acts 352 sq.
- Tyre, Matt. 210 sq.
- Ubiquity of Christ, Heb. 99.
- Unbelief, nature of, Heb. 80; sources of, Mark 121; cowardice of, Rev. 362; its relation to disobedience, Rom. 353; forms of, ib. 89; a robbery of God's glory, ib. 153; guilt of, John 135, 474 sq., Thess. 142; a lie, Rom. 117; predestination to, 1 Pet. 34, 36, 38; punishment of, John 399; victory over, Mark 50.
- of the apostles, Mark 62 sqq., 87, 159, 163; of the brothers of Christ, John 239 sqq.; of the Jews, Matt. 553, Mark 53 sq., Luke 111, 295, John 288, 399, Rom. 299 sqq., 341 sqq., 350 sqq., 374.
- Unbelievers, effects of the gospel on, 1 Cor. 37 sqq.; marriage of Christians with, ib. 147 sqq.; union with, 2 Cor. 120.
- Unchangeableness of God, Jas. 56 sq., 60.
- Uncircumcision, Rom. 114, 1 Cor. 152.
- Unclean, Rom. 420.
- Unction, extreme, Mark 56, Jas. 140.
- Unfaithfulness of Christians, Luke 206.
- Ungodly, punishment of the, Thess. 122.
- Unity, Christian, consists in what, Matt. 330, 475, John 522 sq., 541, 1 Cor. 31, Gal. 91, Eph. 142, 157, Phil. 36, Thess. 12; promoted by beneficence, 2 Cor. 159; Christ the centre of, John 522 sq., 1 Cor. 32, 264, Col. 48; in the early church, Acts 24, 187; desirable, 1 Pet. 67; hindrances to, ib. 61; different from latitudinarianism, Gal. 91; consistent with liberty, John 523; works on the subject, 1 Cor. 31.
- of God and Christ, John 332, 335, 522, Gal. 61 sqq.; in the divine economy, 1 Cor. 228; of the human race, Acts 328, 330; of the history of revelation, ib. 328, 380; of religious faith in married life, 1 Cor. 155 sq.
- Universalism, Rom. 186, 189, Tim. 30.
- Universality of Christianity, Acts 14, 277 sq., 446, Gal. 91.
- Unknown God, altar to the, at Athens, Acts 324, 327.

Unleavened bread, first day of, Matt. 468.
 Unrighteousness, not to be predicated of God, Rom. 313; of man, ib. 125, 126.
 Urim and Thummim, John 364, 367.
 Usefulness, preparation for, Luke 29.

Vanity, of man apart from God, 1 Cor. 71; of the mind, Eph. 163; of the world, 1 John 70.
 VAN OOSTERZEE, J. J., sketch of, Luke v. sq.
 Vatican MSs. of the New Testament, Acts vii.
 Veil, use of the, in Eastern countries, 1 Cor. 223; over Moses' face, 2 Cor. 53 sqq.; of the temple, Matt. 527, 530, Luke 579.

VENANTIVS FORTUNATUS, quoted, John 584.

Vengeance, Thess. 122.

Ventriloquists, Acts 305.

Verily, Matt. 169.

VERONICA, ST., Matt. 174, Luke 140, 368.

Versions, see Readings.

Via crucis, Matt. 521.

Via dolorosa, Matt. 521, Luke 368.

Vial, Rev. 159, Note.

Vials in the Apocalypse, symbolism of, Rev. 29, 159, 277; of wrath, the seven, ib. 291, 233 sqq., 296 sqq., 301, 429 sqq.
 Vicarious sacrifice of Christ, Eph. 118, 178, Tim. 29, 31, 1 Pet. 47, 49, 66.

Vices, catalogue of, Rom. 88.

Vigil, Matt. 433.

Vine, cultivation of, John 489; used as a symbol, ib. 401, 430, Rev. 21, 291.

Vinegar, Bible, the, Matt. 413, Note.

Vinegar-wine, Matt. 524, John 587.

Vineyard, value of a, Matt. 37; used as a symbol, ib. 365, 367, Matt. 118, Luke 202.

Violence, used in the spread of Christianity, Luke 344, 352.

Viper, Acts 457; allegorical use of the term, Matt. 226.

VIRGIL, quoted, Luke 255, Jas. 108.

Virgin, the church compared to a, 2 Cor. 178.

Virginity of Mary, perpetual, Matt. 64, 258, 260, Luke 34.

Virgins, symbolism of, Rev. 278, 281.

Virgins, Christian, 2 Cor. 109 sq.; heathen, Rom. 104.

Visions, Acts 40, 43; apocalyptic, Rev. 41; prophetic, ib.; of Constantine, Acts 470; of Paul, 2 Cor. 196 sqq.; of Peter, Acts 194 sqq.

Visits, pastoral, Acts 20.

Voices, heavenly, Matt. 368, Luke 58, 59, 154, John 387 sq., Rev. 40.

Volcanic eruptions, Rev. 323, Note.

Voluntarism in ministerial support, Gal. 155.

Vow, mode of release from a, Acts 414; of the Nazarites, ib. 390; of Paul or Aquila, ib. 342 sq.

Wailing at funerals, Matt. 208.
 Aideness, the, Matt. 298; Noble Lesson of, Rev. 227, Note.

Walking after Christ, 1 John 51 sq.

— in the flesh, Rom. 255, 263.

— in the spirit, Rom. 255, 263.

— on the sea, see Miracles.

War, necessity for, Luke 58; symbolized, Rev. 166; in heaven, ib. 233, 240 sqq., 248 sqq.

Wars, occasioned by Protestantism, Matt. 199; rumors of, ib. 428; religious, Jas. 111, 112.

Warfare, Christian, 1 Cor. 194 sq., 202 sqq., 2 Cor. 172.

Warrior, the Christian, 1 Cor. 201.

Washing, of hands, Matt. 276, 512, Mark 64 sq.; of feet, Matt. 463, 533, John 371, 467 sqq., 415; of tables, Mark 63.

Washings, ceremonial, Mark 64 sq., Luke 190.

Watches of the night, Matt. 270, Mark 133, Luke 204.

Watchfulness, motives to, 2 Pet. 50, Rev. 433 sq. need of, Matt. 430 sq., Thess. 62 sqq., 86 sqq.

Water, symbolism of, John 126 sqq., 156, 256 sq., 260, 1 John 160 sq., Rev. 18 sq., 24 sq., 33 sq.

Waterpots, John 106.

Way, Christ the, John 437, 439; of God, Matt. 306; of salvation, ib. 143, 146, Acts 203, 309 sq.

Ways of God, Acts 401, 403, Rom. 375, 378.

Wayside, Matt. 239.

Weak, treatment of the, Rom. 414 sqq., 426.

Weakness, of God, 1 Cor. 39; human, 2 Cor. 86.

Weather-signs among the Jews, Matt. 257, Luke 208.

Wedding-garment, Matt. 390 sqq.

Week, Rev. 33; the Great, Matt. 533.

Weeks, feast of, Acts 26.

Weeping of Christ, Luke 297 sqq., John 354 sq.

Well, John 149; of Jacob, ib. 153.

Westminster Confession, on baptism, Rom. 306.

Whale of Jonah, Mt. 1, 225.

Wheat, grain of, John 384, 390.

White, in garments, Mark 81, Rev. 137; symbolism of, Rev. 17, 105, 137.

White Horse, the, Rev. 416.

Wicked, the, future state of, 1 Cor. 323.

Widowhood, when praiseworthy, 1 Cor. 144.

Widow's mites, the, Mark 127, Luke 315 sq.

Widows, in the early church, Acts 103, Tim. 4; character, rights and duties of, Tim. 54 sqq., 61; marriage of, 1 Cor. 164.

Wife, use of the term among the Jews, Matt. 53.

— of Peter, Matt. 158, Mark 23; of Pilate, Matt. 511 sq., 514.

Wilderness, Matt. 68, 73, John 305; the habitation of devils, Matt. 228; symbolism of the, Rev. 24, 238, 248, 255, 306 sqq., 313; of Engaddi, Ephraim, Jericho, etc., see these words.

Will of God, the, not always the will of Christians, Acts 385; Christ submissive to, Matt. 479, 482; doing, John 246; in salvation, Eph. 50; submission to, Rom. 389.

Will, freedom of the, see Freedom; its relation to reason, Eph. 165.

Wind, the Holy Spirit compared to the, John 129; symbolism of the, Rev. 18, 167.

Wine, of the Bible, John 102, 110; at Cana, ib. 102, 106, Note, 110; made of myrrh, Mark 151; use of, in the sacrament, 1 Cor. 236, Note, 237; used by the Roman soldiers, Matt. 522, 527; straining of, ib. 413; use of, Eph. 191; symbolical import of, Matt. 473.

Wine-press, Matt. 387, Mark 118, Rev. 31.

Wisdom, Christian, 1 Cor. 47, 55, Eph. 193; of Christ, Matt. 361, Luke 97; divine, Luke 191 sq., Acts 331, Rom. 373, 378, 1 Cor. 29, 56, 66; gospel, 1 Cor. 55 sq., 64; different from knowledge, Rom. 375, 1 Cor. 251, 262 sq.; personified, Matt. 203, Luke 118, John 50; distinguished from prudence, Eph. 37; shown by works, Jas. 108; worldly, Acts 331, 1 Cor. 34 sqq., 38, 41, 43, 66, 82, 86.

Wisdom of speech, Acts 111.

Wise, not many called, 1 Cor. 48, 49; God's will not accepted by the, Luke 168.

Wise men from the East, see Magi.

Wit, not found in Christ's discourses, Matt. 290.

Withdrawal from the church, 2 Cor. 120 sq.

Witness, a name applied to Christ, Rev. 91, 135; God called as a, Thess. 35; of the Holy Spirit, see Holy Spirit.

Witnesses, law in reference to, Matt. 329, 491, Mark 146; of Christ's death, Luke 381; of God among unbelievers, A to 144; to the truth, John 261, Note, 364, Note, Rev. 224 sq., 227 sqq., 232 sq.

Wives, duties of, Eph. 198 sqq., 294 sq., Col. 74 sq., 1 Pet. 54.

Woe, use of the expression by Christ and the apostles, Luke 20; pronounced on Judas, Matt. 470, 473.

Woes, in the Sermon on the Mount, Luke 102, 103; pronounced on the cities of Galilee, Matt. 210 sq., Luke 167; pronounced on the Pharisees, Matt. 408, 416, Luke 191 sq.; contrasted with the Beatitudes, Matt. 411, 416; the three in the Apocalypse, Rev. 30.

Woman, the term used as an address, John 105; adornment of, Tim. 33, 1 Pet. 52, 55; in the Apocalypse, Rev. 237, 240 sqq., 245, 250, 306; Christ's relations with, Luke 126, John 150, 167; benefits of Christianity to, Matt. 341, Mark 51, Acts 41, 308, Tim. 35, Jas. 89; symbolical of the church, Rev. 24, 243; her work in the church, Luke 126, Acts 190, 346, 1 Cor. 224, 296, 302, Tim. 33, 35; emancipation of, Luke 126; evil-speaking of, Tim. 41 sq.; her enmity to goodness, few examples of, Mark 147; lax views of the Herodians respecting, ib. 97; diverse from man, 1 Pet. 53 sq.; her relations to man, 1 Cor. 226 sqq.; man's superiority to, Eph. 205, Note; her work in missions, Acts 190; Pan's views on, Rom. 447, 1 Cor. 224, 296, Tim. 33, 35; public speaking of, 1 Co. 296 sqq., 302; contempt for among the Rabbins, John 163; rights of, Eph. 205, Note; development of spiritual life in, Matt. 465; weakness of, 1 Cor. 228, 1 Pet. 53 sq.; work of, Eph. 205, Note.

Woman of Canaan, Matt. 281 sqq.

— of Samaria, John 150 sq., 154, Note.

— with issue of blood, Matt. 174, Mark 49 sqq., Luke 140 sqq.

— who anointed Christ's feet, Luke 121, 125.

Women, friends of Christ, Luke 126; follow Christ to Calvary, ib. 369 sqq.; at the cross, Matt. 528 sq., Luke 381; at the tomb, Matt. 545, Mark 156 sq., Luke 386, John 613; miracles wrought on, Mark 60; grinding, Matt. 430, Luke 268; influence of pious, Matt. 514; aids to false teachers, Tim. 101 sq.

Wonders, craving for, Luke 188; of creation and providence, Matt. 153; of God's workings, Luke 37; Christ the greatest of, Matt. 153.

Word, Christ the, John 50, 52, 54 sqq., Jas. 54, 57 sq., 2 Pet. 41, 1 John 22, 24.

Word and deed united in Christ, Luke 79.

Word, idle, Matt. 225.

Word of God, power of the, Heb. 93 sqq., 1 Pet. 28, Rev. 105.

Word of God, the, a title of the Holy Scriptures, Matt. 10, 12, A to 376, Thess. 43, Heb. 93; endurance of, 1 Pet. 28, 29; hearing, Jas. 62, 66; power of, 2 Cor. 42; right mode of presenting, ib. ib.; the appointed means of

- salvation, Acts 192, 2 Pet. 43; sowing of, Matt. 241 sq., 1 Pet. 29. See Bible, Scriptures.
- Word of life, 1 John 22, 24.
- Words of Christ, unwritten, Luke 327; on the cross, Matt. 226 sq., 534, Luke 372 sq., 377, 379 sq.
- Work, of believers to be tried, 1 Cor. 76, 78; of Christ, Luke 96 sq., 155, Acts 7 sqq.; of the ministry, Acts 273; necessity of, Thess. 159.
- Working of God, John 186.
- Works, their relation to faith, Luke 130, Rom. 96 sq., 100, 136, 139, Gal. 140 sq., Thess. 49, Jas. 82 sqq., 89, 2 P.t. 51; their relation to grace, Luke 261, John 136, Rom. 261 sq., 373; judgment according to, Rom. 96 sq., 100, Thess. 49, 1 Pet. 22 sq., 25; justification by, Luke 261, Rom. 96, 122, 131, 136, 139, 343, Jas. 82 sqq., 88 sqq.; meritoriousness of, 1 Cor. 191, Tim. 74 sq.; nature of good, Acts 188; Roman Catholic doctrine of, Matt. 438, Note, Luke 123 sq., Rom. 121, Note, 155; salvation not through, Eph. 80 sq., 84 sq.; value of, Luke 249, Acts 192 sq., 196; just view of, Rev. 123; a proof of wisdom, Jas. 103.
- of charity and mercy, Matt. 449.
- of the day, Rom. 403.
- of the flesh, Gal. 138.
- of the law, Rom. 121 sq., Gal. 54 sq.
- of the night, Rom. 409.
- World, the, promised to Abraham, Rom. 149 sq.; creation of, John 61, 63, Acts 327, 329, Heb. 184, 2 Pet. 43; dominion of, Heb. 54 sq.; duration of, 2 Pet. 44; end of, Matt. 422, 427 sqq., Mark 130 sq., Luke 269, 317 sqq., 326, 1 Cor. 318 sq., Thess. 78 sq., 83, 132, Heb. 41, 2 P.t. 42 sqq., 46 sqq., 50, Rev. 2, 167, 403; future, Matt. 227 sq., 309, Luke 155, 217, 256 sq., 1 Cor. 349 sq., Eph. 62; final object of, Heb. 55.
- , the, meaning of the term, John 134, 1 John 63; Apocalyptic view of, Rev. 5; Christ's kingdom not of, Matt. 373; its judgment on Christianity, ib. 209; Christianization of, ib. 447; relation of Christians to, Jas. 122, 1 John 64, 67 sqq.; relation of the church to, 1 Cor. 119; moral and physical decline of, Rom. 286 sq.; present evil, Gal. 15; fashions of, Rom. 389; fellowship with, 1 Cor. 213; god of, 2 Cor. 66 sq.; nature of, 1 John 63 sqq.; Old Testament view of, Rev. 2 sq.; religious view of, ib. 22; rudiments of, Gal. 96, 98, Col. 44; spirit of, Matt. 209, 1 Cor. 60; spiritual and natural, their correspondence, Rom. 286; vanity of, 1 John 70; wisdom of, Acts 331, 1 Cor. 34 sqq., 38, 41, 43, 66, 82, 86.
- Worldliness, Matt. 241.
- Wormwood, Rev. 30, 198.
- Worship, by the early Christians, 1 Cor. 308; essence of, Eph. 133; externalism, Matt. 127, 144; heathen, Acts 268 sq., Rom. 84; ignorance in, Acts 338; Jewish places of, ib. 304; Christian life a, Rom. 395; secret, ib. 373; singing in, Eph. 194; agency of the Spirit in, 1 Cor. 303; of angels, Rom. 286, Col. 54, 58; of art, Acts 266; of the church, ib. 133; of saints, ib. 203 sq., 206, 269, Tim. 31; of stars, Acts 125.
- Worthiness of Christians, Rev. 127.
- Wrath, children of, Eph. 76; vials of, Rev. 291, 293 sq.
- Wrath of God, the, its relation to His love, Luke 229, Eph. 82; use of the expression, Thess. 24; figurative, Rom. 169; justice of, ib. 103, 2 Cor. 98; occasion of, ib. 151, Heb. 80; present and future, Thess. 26; revelation of, Rom. 80 sq., 89; works on the subject, ib. 89.
- Writing, of Christ, John 272, 274; of Paul, Gal. 157.
- Written testimony, value of, Acts 290, 291.
- Year, symbolical meaning, Rev. 33.
- ear, the church, Matt. 31; lessons for, ib. 31, 37.
- ear-day, the, Rev. 260, Note.
- Yellow, symbolism of, Rev. 17.
- YEOMANS, M. D., John xii.
- Yoke, of Christianity, Matt. 214; of the law, ib., ib.
- Zabulon, see Zebulun.
- ZACCHÆUS, Luke 226 sqq.
- ZACHARIAH, meaning of the name, Matt. 415; son of Baruchiah, ib. 414 sq., Luke 191 sq.; father of John, Luke 15 sqq., 27 sq.
- Zeal, errors of, Mark 90, 91; false, Rom. 352, 1 Cor. 71, 78, Gal. 110; holy and unholy, Matt. 412, Acts 382 sq., Rom. 342, 352; true, 1 Cor. 382, Jude 15; of God, 2 Cor. 177.
- Zealotry, right of, John 117.
- Zealots, Matt. 182, Note, Acts 389 sq.
- ZEBEDEE, Mark 20, John 4; sons of, Matt. 93, 182, 363 sq., Mark 37.
- Zebulun, land of, Matt. 91.
- ZECHARIAH, Book of, its similarity to the Apocalypse of John, Rev. 49; eschatology of, ib. 47 sqq.
- ZELOTES, Luke 98.
- Zend Avesta, the Lord's Prayer not derived from, Luke 180.
- ZENO, philosophy of, Acts 327.
- ZERUBBABEL, Matt. 388.
- ZEUS, Acts 265 sq.
- ZINZENDORF, anecdote of, John 577.
- Zion, Mt., Matt. 106, Rev. 277, 283.
- Ziph, wilderness of, Matt. 68.
- Zizith, see Fringes.
- ZWINGLE, last words of, Matt. 196.

Pinceton University Library

32101 063611642